“Squishy?” Harley tried to look offended, but she couldn’t so instead she laughed. He blew between her breasts again enjoying the sound of his wife’s laugh before he started to nibble on her soft skin, working his way over to one of her nipples where he licked her, rolling his tongue over her nipple in a slow, leisurely fashion. Harley moaned softly, a warm tickle rolled over her body as Jack switched breasts, his fingers pressing against her flesh. She rolled her hips against his hard bulge. Jack twitched and groaned at her touch. She pressed her teeth into her bottom lip giving her husband a teasing look as he started to undo his tie, pulling the cloth free to work at the button of his shirt and vest. She didn’t get everything fully undone before Jack yanked her close, a hand sliding up into her hair, grabbing a fistful of her golden mane and forcing her mouth on his while he pressed a hand against her lower back. Harley hissed with pleasure, her rolling movements against his bound shaft were steadily becoming more aggressive. Jack growled and slid his hands to her hips again and forced her down on him while he jerked up against her thrusting movements. The material of his slacks brushed against her sensitive clitoris, making Harley groan loudly. She grabbed his shoulders and started to thrust against him. Jack pulled on one of her nipples with his lips, chuckled as he whispered, his hot breath brushing over her skin, another caress. “I’m going to have to change slacks before we go out you naughty girl.”

Harley giggled around her moan as she kept rolling her hips against his bound erection. “Shut up puddin.”

Jack laughed. “Yes ma’am.”

Jack smiled running his hands up her sides, pressing her breasts together and up where he sucked on her nipples while she rubbed against him. He groaned with frustration, feeling her coming closer and closer to climax as her breathing quickened, her movements becoming more and more aggressive. Her fingers dug into his shoulders, tugged on his clothing as she moaned, panting, and moving quicker and quicker.

He groaned. “Cum for me Harley, let me hear you scream.”

Harley moaned. “Puddin...oh puddin yes!”

Jack gasped, holding her down against him and watching her. Her eyes were closed, her mouth slightly open, her face relaxed and blissful as she orgasmed. Jack just stared at her, his entire body aching for her. She was magnificent, his harlequin...the most beautiful woman in all of Gotham...in all the world as far as he was concerned. And best of all, she was his, his girl, his wife, his partner in crime...his everything. He pressed his lips together watching her rock her hips, her movements slowing, her body shuddering with each stroke. She jerked and hissed with pleasure until she finally groaned and dropped forward, resting her forehead against his, wrapping her arms tight around his neck.

Jack whispered. “You are so beautiful.”

Harley giggled softly. “Flatterer.”

He chuckled then moved suddenly, making her squeal in surprise. Jack hefted her up, wrapping his hands under her rear and started to walk purposefully from the room.

Harley grinned. “Where are we going?”

Jack chuckled. “To the guest bedroom.”

“The guest bedroom? Not our room?” Harley frowned in confusion, but Jack only grinned. He chuckled again, carrying her to the other bedroom. “The guest bedroom has something that our room doesn’t have.”

Harley frowned trying to think of what that might be as Jack carried her down the hall to the back of the house.

The guest bedroom was decorated in shades of blue, mostly baby blue, with hardwood floors, and the sort of country chic bedding that made Harley’s stomach turn. It was the kind of room a grandmother would like. It was the most hideous room in the house as far as Harley was concerned. The two of them hadn’t been in here except for the first day when they went around inspecting every room they could find. Harley frowned, thinking the bed was going to be dusty, but that wasn’t where they went. Instead, Jack set her on her feet and closed the door revealing the full-length mirror on the back. He then walked into the bathroom and came out with a wooden stool, he set it down and proceeded to turn Harley around. “Put your hands on that. And stand on your toes.”

Harley gave him a quizzical look, but she didn’t argue; she did as her puddin requested, but she looked over her shoulder at him with a raised brow.

Jack grinned and started to undo his slacks. Harley watched with hungry eyes as Jack unfastened his pants, sliding them down past his hips and to the floor. He kicked off the slacks until he was wearing just his boxers, his dress shoes with the suspenders around his calves that kept the socks from sliding down his legs, along with his vest and disheveled dress shirt. Jack used his foot to spread her legs wider before he shoved the boxers to his knees.

Jack held his member with one hand and rubbed the head of it against her. Harley made a whimper of want at the feel of his satin warmth against her.

He whispered softly to her. “Watch me Harley.”

Harley looked into the mirror where they were perfectly framed, her bent over with her hands on the stool, golden blonde hair framing her face, standing on her tiptoes with her backside up. She groaned feeling him rubbing against her, teasing her. It was delicious, the slow rubbing, the smooth satin skin that was the head of his erection, teasing as he pressed, starting to push past her labia, teasing that he would press further, but then stopping, which caused the ache in her groin to intensify.

Jack started to push into her again, then stopped, hovering at her entrance watching with amusement at her expression changing from sweet anticipation to cute annoyance.

She could feel the hardness, the warmth of him, hear the wet sound of his teasing as he continued to rub up and down covering the head of his penis in her fluids from her previous orgasm.

Harley looked up at his face, in the reflection of the mirror to see his blue eye watching her, watching for her reactions. Their eyes met, blue to blue which only seemed to make her body want Jack more.

Jack grasped her hip with one hand, guiding himself with the other; she could tell by his expression he was about to take her fully. Her heartbeat increased as her anticipation increased, waiting for the fulfillment of having her puddin inside her. Jack smiled at her in the mirror just as he started to slowly thrust into her. Harley groaned feeling him push into her, his erection slowly filling that void, filling the aching want in her groin. She gasped starting to close her eyes, but Jack hissed. Giving her rear a tiny smack which she found surprisingly erotic.

“Look at me Harley.”

She moaned, a breathy sigh, opening her eyes to see her husband watching her in the mirror. His face slightly contorted with pleasure, his eyes half closed but the blue, the intense blue of his eyes gazed at her through his thick black lashes. Jack grasped her hips and pulled her back. Harley arched her back in response, raising her hips higher. Jack thrust slowly, making each inch count as he buried himself deeply into her, his mouth slightly open, his brows furrowed watching her in the mirror while he fucked her. He ran a hand up her back, feeling the curve of her spine under his fingers, the silk of her skin. He dragged his hand back down to her hips glancing down, enjoying the way his fingers pressed into her soft skin, the way her flesh gave under his touch, the way her body wrapped around his member so perfectly. Jack smiled at her in the mirror. Harley shuddered, her entire body tightening at the pleasurable response that raced up her body from him. She sucked on her lips, squeezing him back, thrusting her backside at him while she watched his expression in the mirror. Jack’s fingers squeezed tighter, pressing into her hips. He yanked her back against him.

Harley moaned, each of his thrusts hitting just the right spots to send her senses into overdrive. She sucked on her bottom lip, squeezing her muscles around him feeling the way he hardened more inside her. She wanted him to pound into her; she wanted him hard, fast. She wanted him to make her cum. “Harder puddin...please!”

Jack grinned at her in the mirror.

He reached around with one hand. “As my pumpkin wishes.”

Jack slid his hand forward to grab her breast, squeezing gently before pinching and twisting his fingertips around her nipple. Harley whimpered at the intensity of the sensation. She thrust back against him again, trying to urge him to move faster, but he ignored her hints for the moment, sliding his hand down her stomach, then further to find her clitoris. With her legs spread wide, she was easily exposed to his fingers and Jack grinned at her in the mirror as he began to rub, stroking his fingers in a circular motion over her highly sensitive clitoris. Harley cried out at his touch and arched her back. Jack grinned squeezing her hip with one hand while he continued to roll her clitoris with the tips of his fingers, alternating between fast circles and slow figure eights.

Harley writhed, her fingers wrapped around the stool tightly, but her movements were causing the wooden stool to clattered against the hardwood floor until she tightened, her entire body going still for a split second, her orgasm building until the burst of release. Harley climaxed with a loud cry.

The instant she came, Jack removed his fingers, grabbed her hips with both hands and proceeded to fuck her hard and fast, just like she wanted. Harley’s cries became higher in pitch as she looked in the mirror, watching Jack fuck her, pounding into her, his expression one of complete abandon to the pleasure of fucking his wife. The room was filled with the sounds of their heavy breathing and Harley’s frantic high-pitched moans woven together with Jack’s grunts and groans of his own. For a moment, she was sure she was going to blackout because he was going to make her cum again and it felt so good to have him inside her that she could do nothing but feel the intensity of having him in her, having her husband pound mercilessly into her, every nerve ending on blissful fire. It was heaven, she thought as her light blue eyes once again met his intense blue ones in the mirror.

Jack’s eyes focused on Harley, watching the way her expression shifted each time he thrust into her, watched the way her breasts bounced each time his hips met her backside, the flow and sway of her hair as he thrust her forward with each of his own thrusts. He released her hip to spread his hand along her skin, stroking her smooth curving back. He pressed his nails into her skin, drawing faint red lines down her back.

Jack groaned loudly. The sound made Harley shudder, feeling the quick approach of another orgasm.

“Puddin…” she moaned.

Jack’s hiss was accompanied by a groan of release with her name on his lips. His climax was sudden; it had built quickly, then burst like a bubble and washed over him. He couldn’t seem to stop himself as he thrust hard, flesh smacking against flesh as he rode out his orgasm.

Harley followed almost immediately, her over stimulated body shuddered, her back arching as she came again with a loud moan.

Jack’s thrusts slowed, easing to a series of lazy, sensual thrusts against her, just for the pleasure of moving inside her. Harley’s arms were shaking, as were her legs. She wanted to collapse in bed and sleep for like...a couple of days she thought with a grin. Jack pulled out of her slowly, reluctantly, but as she stood he grabbed her hand and twirled her around to face him, wrapping his arms lovingly around her. Harley giggled draping her arms across his shoulders. “Mm...now you really need to change clothes.”

Jack chuckled. “Yep, my naughty girl.”

He kissed her, sliding a hand up the back of her neck and into her hair, his fingers spread to hold the back of her skull in his hands, feeling the warm soft silk of her hair, his other hand caressed her spine dragging the sides of his fingers along the curve. They kissed for a long time, just enjoying the sweet aftermath of their lovemaking.

Jack sighed, reluctantly pulling away from her lips. “All right pumpkin, let’s go have some fun.”

Harley grinned. “Whatever we do is fun as long as I’m with you.”

Jack chuckled. “That’s my girl.”

*

Before they left to meet Frost at the docks, Jack decided to do something he was sure he was going to regret.

He called Bruce.

Sitting on the edge of the bed he shared with Harley, Jack wasn’t sure that Bruce would actually pick up since Jack’s number was unlisted, but on the third ring Bruce’s voice came over the phone. “Who is this?” he demanded.

“Bruce? It’s me, Jack,” Jack answered softly. He made a face at himself for sounding so timid. Harley, who was lying on her back on the bed behind him and playing a game on her phone glanced over at Jack, concern written on her face. He turned around, knowing that she would have understood by the tone of his voice, and waved her off letting her know he was all right, but he reached for his cigarettes.

“I heard about what happened,” Jack said, tapping one out and sticking the cigarette between his lips. He lit it waiting to see if Bruce would say anything.

“You mean that I was run off the road. How do you know about that?” Bruce asked, suspicion clear in his voice.

Jack took a long drag on the cigarette before continued. “It wasn’t me, but...I know who it was and why.”

Bruce growled. “Jack, what have you been doing? What is going on with you? Where are you?”

Jack chuckled. “That’s a lot of questions I won’t answer Bruce. I just called to see if you were really all right and to let you know that I’ll be taking care of who did that to you.”

“Who was it Jack, and why? Please Jack, tell me where you are.” Bruce pleaded over the phone. Jack frowned. “Just trust me Bruce. It’s going to be taken care of. I just called to make sure you were really fine.”

Bruce’s voice softened then. “Jack, can’t...can’t we start over? I’m sorry. Come home.”

“Sorry Bruce, I have a new home now with Harley.” Jack blew some smoke out slowly. “How is Alfred doing?”

“He is recovering. He is doing well, tired of resting, in fact,” Bruce answered. “I know he would like to see you.”

Jack smiled sadly. “I would like to see him too--we both would.”

Bruce answered gently. “You could you know, come see him. I won’t stop you...I won’t force you to stay either.”

Jack’s voice broke slightly. “I can’t trust you Bruce. You broke that, you broke my trust in you, big brother.”

Bruce sighed. “Jack, I was only doing what I thought was the best for you...I…”

Jack sighed as well. “I love you Bruce, you’re my brother...I will always love you, but...I can’t...I can’t come back.”

“Jack I…I never meant to hurt you Jack. I…” Bruce started.

Jack hissed back, his voice laced with pain. “I don’t care what you meant to do Bruce. I only care what you did do.”

Then, before his older brother could say anything else, Jack hung up. Harley had stopped playing her game, watching Jack with concern. As soon as he hung up the phone she rolled over, sat up, and wrapped her arms around him from behind. Jack wrapped his arms around her tugging her around until she was straddling his lap, then buried his face against her breasts. He didn’t say a word; he didn’t need to, Harley could feel how much pain he was in. She simply held him and quietly stroked his hair.

They arrived a couple of hours later in front of the Gotham Science Museum. Frost pulled up front turning to look at the front of the building. The front was a large round building that sort of stuck out from the rest of the main building, which was a typical white concrete “museum” that always reminded Jack of white marble. The front entrance, which had been added on in the last decade or two was a large round building of mostly glass windows with a rather modern flair in design that made it stick out like a sore thumb from the rest of the museum that it was attached to, which was traditional Roman style with the arches, Doric pillars and a few freestanding statues of great scientists. Frost turned, draping his right arm over the seat as he glanced out the window.

The rain that had been falling was turning to snow once again. Frost grinned at Jack and Harley who were snuggled together in the back seat wearing matching black wool trench coats, though Harley had her hair down and was wearing a cute red beret. hey were both dressed like a wealthy young couple with Jack dressed in a slim cut three piece suit with a two-tone long jacket with black sleeves and a grey pattern that hung below his hips, paired with grey slacks, a double breasted black vest, white dress shirt, black tie, and a pair of glossy black pointy toed shoes with a polka dot pattern across the black leather. He wore a pair of RayBan aviator shades to cover his blue eyes which were outlined with black eyeliner. Harley looked stunning, Jack thought, wearing a pair of black leggings (his loved her in leggings, they showed off her legs wonderfully he thought) a simple, short scooped neck red sweater with a black and white plaid shirt underneath, and a pair of thick heeled brown leather ankle boots. He particularly liked the boots...Jack grinned, imagining his wife wearing nothing but the boots while he made love to her against a wall...he had almost made Frost turn the car around at one point during the ride to the museum when Harley had crossed her legs, her booted foot stroking his calf.

"Just give me a call when you two are ready to be picked up,” Frost said with a smile.

“Thank you Frost,” Jack replied with a smile of his own.

Frost shrugged. “No need to thank me Boss.”

Jack nodded, then hopped out of the car, hurrying around to open the door for Harley. He leaned into the car after she was out, reaching into the back pocket of his slacks to grab his wallet. He opened it and pulled out several hundred dollar bills which he handed to Frost. “Go have some fun while we’re busy.”

Frost looked at Jack with a frown. “You don’t need to…”

Jack interrupted him with a red lipped grin. “Don’t argue.”

Frost chuckled. “All right Boss. You two have fun.”

Harley waved. “Love ya!! Thanks again Frosty!”

Frost grinned and waved back.

Jack wrapped his arm around Harley’s waist and turned her around. “Please don’t tell him you love him,” Jack muttered.

Harley frowned looking over at her husband. She could see a slight frown on his face. “Why?”
“Because it makes me jealous sweets.” Jack growled softly, but playfully. “I want you to love only me.” Jack grinned and rubbed his nose against hers.

Harley grinned. “Sorry puddin. Never again. Besides, you know I only love you. And I do love you.”

“Good. Now, let's go have fun!” Jack chuckled sliding his sunglasses down to waggle his brows at her, his blue eyes sparkling.

*

It was a weekday and while the museum was still fairly busy, it wasn’t as busy as it could have been. Despite the poor weather, there were tourists wandering around and a few locals as Jack and Harley walked in through the glass doors. The stylish couple garnered a few stares, which Jack and Harley both ignored.

Jack grinned. “I haven’t been here in forever! Come on,” he said with wide eyes and a skip in his step. “I know just the place to start!”

Jack and Harley walked toward the museum planetarium. The entrance was nothing special, Harley thought, but once they bought their tickets, they were treated to long winding tunnels that highlighted the first mission to the moon. Jack led Harley along, holding her hand tightly until they came to a display of the ship, Apollo 11. Jack giggled.

“See here Harls.” Jack pointed and Harley leaned forward. There was a tiny postscript under the photograph of the Apollo 11 lunar module that said that the ship was designed with the help of technicians at Wayne Aerospace.

Jack grinned. “Wayne Aerospace had a hand in designing these lunar modules, though I don’t think that is widely known outside of Gotham. That division of Wayne Enterprises has been working with NASA since the beginning. It also works with the military in designing jets and stealth fighters like the W-4 Wraith and the Kestrel attack helicopter.” He snickered. “And the board of directors didn’t think I knew anything about Wayne Enterprises.” He winked at Harley before he continued. “I used to hope I could get them to design me a spaceship when I was a kid.” Jack grinned at Harley and explained, “I wanted to go explore space when I was thirteen.”

Harley smiled, impressed with Jack’s knowledge of Wayne’s Aerospace division. For some reason she was under the impression that Jack knew little about what went on in the family business too, and that made her angry at herself. She should have known better. Jack was smart, and deceptive. Of course he didn’t want the board knowing exactly how much he knew. She frowned momentarily. It was a shame that all that was lost to Jack now...because of Bruce she thought, Bruce and his stubbornness, his refusal to see that there was nothing truly wrong with Jack. Well, maybe there was something a little wrong with him, but it was part of what made Jack Wayne so vibrant, fun...handsome. Harley smiled. She was just so much in love with Jack. She reached down between them to take his hand. Jack smiled at her and kissed her cheek. They enjoyed the space show, which took them through a tour of the Milky Way galaxy and beyond. Harley had watched the entire thing with her head resting on Jack’s shoulder. He had put his arm around her holding her close as they traveled through outer space together.

Next they headed up to the second floor where there was an entire floor dedicated to hands-on science exhibits. Jack hurried over and the two of them slipped inside the hurricane simulator. The exhibit, about the size of a telephone booth, was almost entirely made of glass so that other guests could watch what happened to anyone inside. Harley squealed when the wind came on, her beret blowing right off her head to where it was being whipped around in the air above her—along with all her hair blowing upwards. Jack had removed his sunglasses before they stepped inside, and their bright blue eyes danced together as he laughed at Harley while she tried to reach her hat, her hair flying wildly around her face. Jack wrapped his arms around her. “Don’t worry, it’ll come back!”

Harley laughed. “Ahh!! It’s so windy!!”

They were both laughing as Jack yelled. “What did the hurricane say to the coconut palm tree?”

Harley snickered just knowing this was going to be bad. “What?”

“Hold onto your nuts! This is no ordinary blowjob!” Jack laughed and Harley smacked him on the shoulder. “JACK!”

Jack laughed and kissed her while the high winds blew around them.

Next they headed to where a highwire bicycle was strung across the open air connecting two balconies. Harley leaned on the rail watching as Jack rode the bike across without the least bit of fear, even stopping in the middle to look down at the two floors below him before he turned and waved at her. They both tried the Aerotrim, the large metal circle that spun them around a full three hundred and sixty degrees, which had them both laughing especially when Harley wobbled off the contraption. They played with a magnet exhibit, enjoyed the flight simulator, wandered through a funhouse mirror maze, and played with building foam skyscrapers, creating their own bridge and walked the clear walkway that extended over one of Gotham’s many busy streets, using radar guns installed on the bridge that clocked the speeds of the cars passing under them.

*

Next they headed to the Ecosystem exhibit.

Together, holding tightly onto each others hand, they walked through a twenty-four foot tunnel that had them surrounded by fish and bat rays swimming all around them. They stopped to watch some of the colorful fish swim past them. Jack smiled watching a few that swam over their heads. “This makes me want to take you on a cruise someday. Go to a tropical island, just the two of us. You in a very tiny bikini.” Jack glanced sideways at Harley.

Harley smiled. “How about one better? A nude beach.”

Jack’s red lipsticked smile spread even further across his face. “I do so like the way your mind works Harley.”

*

Next they headed over to the insect exhibit where they could walk through a large butterfly house. Jack pulled his camera out, taking pictures of Harley as butterflies swarmed around her. Harley laughed holding out her hands and three butterflies landed on her.

Jack smiled at his wife, his heart swelling with love for her. “Even they know you’re sweet, sweets.”

Harley blushed. “Puddin…”

For a moment, everything was perfect in their world, no horrible brothers, no obsessive stalkers, no mob bosses, just the two of them together and surrounded by butterflies.
By the time they left the museum, the snow was falling heavier; large fluffy flakes were littering the sky like fragile glittering diamonds. Jack had decided that walking down to the restaurant for lunch wasn’t a good idea in the current weather, and this close to the museum it would probably be crowded too, so they decided to look for someplace else to eat. Frost, whom Jack had called only moments before, was waiting for them in front of the museum. Jack opened the door to the car for Harley ushering her inside then climbed in after her.

Frost smiled turning around. “Have fun?”

Harley grinned. “Oh, very much!”

Frost grinned. “So where do you guys want to eat?”

Jack was looking at his phone, scrolling through lists of places when he found something that made his smile light up brighter. “Oh I think I just found the perfect place. It’s called “The Classical Fantôme,” located near New Town. It's a musical themed restaurant with...wait for it...haunted tables!” Jack giggled. “And they have live classical music every day. How does that sound, Harley my sweet?”

Harley grinned. “Perfect puddin, just perfect.”

The restaurant was located in a Victorian house that had been converted into a restaurant. The house was painted a burgundy that leaned more toward the purple. Frost dropped them off up front and moments later, Jack led Harley up the stairs to the front door that was decorated with cheerful fairy lights. Jack opened the door and stuck his head inside. The air that came out was warm and smelled of delicious food accompanied by the sounds of live music; from the sounds of it, a violin, cello and flute. Jack turned to look at Harley giving her a smile. “Shall we?”

Harley nodded to her husband with a grin as Jack held the door open for her.

The inside of the restaurant was dimly lit with more fairy lights hung along the wall and ceiling. The walls themselves had a definite 1970’s vibe with the wallpaper being a strange lemon yellow color. There were antique mirrors everywhere that reflected the fairy-lights, bouncing the twinkling lights back into the room. The walls were also lined with shelves containing numerous kitsch knickknacks alongside strange and eccentric pieces of art. There was so much to take in that it was almost too much for the eye to absorb.

They hadn’t been standing in the threshold for long when a woman dressed in a long black skirt that brushed the floor, a long, bell sleeved blouse of lavender and long curling dark hair came up to them with two plastic menus in hand.

“Two?” She asked.

Jack, grinning nodded. “Yes please.”

She smiled back and escorted them into what would have been the living room of the house but had been turned into a dining room with large round tables covered in a variety of table cloths. In the dining area, they could see the musicians in a corner of the room, all wearing skull masks as they played Beethoven.

Harley giggled while Jack helped her off with her coat. “This is definitely different.”
Jack nodded in agreement. “Yes it is!” He hung her coat on the back of her seat and removed his own. “I think I like this place already.”

They were seated at a table out of the way where they had a great deal of privacy. Jack reached across the table taking Harley’s hands. They gazed at each other while Jack stroked his thumbs across her knuckles.

“This is nice.” His tone was soft, betraying no anger, worry, or anxiety.

Harley nodded. “It is Jack. We haven’t done this in a while.”

“No we haven’t, just the two of us.” Jack purred softly, brought her hands up to kiss her knuckles. “I love you my wife.”

Harley blushed. She didn’t know why she was blushing; it wasn’t like they hadn’t been together through so much already, and it wasn’t as if they hadn’t had intense sex just this morning, but hearing Jack say those three little words made every part of her tingle. Her emotions swelled to the surface. She didn’t just love him. That was such a small word to describe what she felt for him. She was more than simply devoted to him; he was part of her, part of her very soul, her very being.

The waitress came over to them smiling. “I’m your waitress, Molly, and can I just say, you are both so lovely! I’m...sorry, but I just never see couples in love like you two. You both just...ooze...I don’t know...like this intensity of emotion and just...you are both so elegant!”

Jack grinned, sparing the waitress a glance, but then brought his gaze back to his wife. “Thank you. I am a very lucky man.” He kissed Harley knuckles.

Molly sighed longingly. “I wish my boyfriend did things like that...I mean...kiss my hand and stuff. Anyway--enough about me. What can I get the two of you?”

Jack kept a hold of one of Harley’s hands while he looked over the menu. “Mm…” He glanced at Harley. “Wanna split a hot fudge sundae and some coffee?”

Harley laughed with a vigorous nod. “That sounds divine puddin.”

Molly’s eyes widened. “Oh gosh! Is that your pet name for him? Puddin?”

Harley giggled. “Yes it is.”

“Oh wow, that is so cute! You guys are the cutest! Well, let me put your order in.” Molly grinned, but Jack stopped her. “Do you allow dancing in your establishment?”

Molly smiled brightly. “If you two want to dance, you go right ahead. The musicians take requests.”

Jack smiled brightly with a slight dip of his head. “Thank you, my dear Molly.”

She giggled and hurried off. Jack stood up and took Harley’s hand. “Will you dance with me, my dear?”

Harley took his hand. “I will dance with you anywhere puddin.”

Jack’s smile was radiant as he took her hand and led her over to the musicians. “Would you mind playing Canon de Pachelbel?”

One of the masked violinists said in a soft, feminine voice. “Of course.”
Jack smiled taking Harley’s hand and walked into the center of the room where there was enough space for them to dance. He pulled her gently against him, his left arm around her waist, his right hand taking her hand in his and he started to waltz with her in a slow circle, both of them moving gracefully in time to the music.

“We never had a first dance at any of our weddings,” he said softly. “That will always be one of my regrets.”

Harley whispered. “As long as I have the rest of my life to dance with you Jack, I will gladly give up our first dance as husband and wife.”

He grinned wider. “You, my little harlequin, are my most precious angel.” He spun her around, then dropped her hand to wrap both arms around her, dipping her slightly and kissed her. Harley wrapped her arms around his neck returning the kiss with every ounce of passion she felt for her husband to the sound of the few patrons clapping.

*

They had a wonderful time together at the restaurant. Their table moved just as promised, which had startled Harley enough that she had yelped and knocked her chair over which had Jack almost in tears with laughter. When she had gone to the restroom to freshen up she had been startled again by a mannequin in one of the stalls and a foot coming out of the ceiling that was painted to look like the bottom of a pond.

After sharing the sundae and some of what Harley called “very excellent coffee,” they made their way outside. The snow, which had been thicker than earlier in the day, but still light, was even heavier now. Frost was waiting, parked out in front of the restaurant with the car idling for them. When the two of them climbed into the back, Frost turned around and smiled. “You two have a nice time here too?”

Harley giggled with a lift of her shoulders. “Oh, it was so much fun!”

Jack wrapped his arm around her shoulders pulling her close after he sat and brought the door closed on the increasing snowflakes. “Yes it was. You should have seen Harley jump when the table moved.” Jack started to laugh at the memory. Harley lightly smacked him on the knee giving him an amused and simultaneously annoyed look. Jack, through his giggles and another smack on his knee, mumbled. “The look on her face was priceless!!” He snickered which earned him an amused, but dirty look from his wife.

Frost chuckled at the two of them. “We are going to have to take a roundabout way back to the docks. There was an accident up that way.” He pointed the way they had originally traveled to find the restaurant.

“Leave it to Gothamites to drive crazy stupid in bad weather. Oh it snowed? Let’s see how fast I can drive in that!” Jack dropped his voice and made himself sound stupid as he imitated some nameless Gothamite. Jack leaned back comfortably in the seat. “That’s fine. We’ll just snuggle back here.”

Jack grinned at Harley, ducking his head to steal a kiss.

Frost smiled as he turned the car around and started to travel down the street toward New Town.

*

They had been driving for about twenty minutes. Jack was idly stroking his hand down Harley’s arm while she was curled against his side, her eyes closed when Jack sat up, knocking Harley from her doze when he leaned to looked more closely out his window. Harley frowned with curiosity. “What is is puddin?”

Jack motioned her closer while he yelled at Frost. “Stop the car!”

Frost jumped a little at the suddenness of Jack’s yell, but still pulled the car over onto the right, slamming the brakes which only caused them to slide a little and parked alongside the old crumbling sidewalk.

He turned in confusion, fearing that something was wrong. “Boss?”

But Jack’s focus was fully on what had grabbed his attention. Across from the car was an abandoned amusement park. It wasn’t very big, especially when compared to the Amusement Mile, but behind the main entrance against the grey sky and falling snow, Harley could see the dark silhouette of a roller coaster along with a ferris wheel and several other rides, ghosts of better days. There was a “for sale” sign in front of the entrance.

Jack’s voice was full of wonder. “What is that? I don’t remember there ever being another amusement park besides The Amusement Mile.”

Frost frowned studying the place in the dim lights from the streetlights, then seemed to brighten. “I remember this place. It was only around for a handful of years. Tried to compete with Amusement Mile...held its own for a while but a couple of kids died on the roller coaster and it was shut down...maybe...ten, fifteen years ago. If I recall, it was called The Kaleidoscope Park. They had a lot of rides and attractions that messed with your senses, like mirror mazes, weird roller coasters, spinning rides...that sort of thing. It was like the poor man’s Amusement Mile with more dangerous rides.” Frost grinned. “When I was a younger cop, this is where you came to bust druggies. They liked to get high and try to get the rides going or just mess around. This is where you came when you wanted to get your arrest record up. Anyway, I don’t think the potheads hang around here anymore because one of them fell from the ferris wheel and died.”

Jack was staring at it like a child, a delighted smile on his face. “Harley...I think I just found our new home.”

Jack nodded. “Just imagine it Harls...our own amusement park!”

He sat back and turned to look at her, his eyes twinkling. “I have the money--it wouldn’t take much, buy the place and choose one of the buildings to refurbish...” Jack chuckled. “It would be fabulous Harley! Besides, we just can’t stay where we are. Ben knows we’re there...Cobb knew...the Owls know and Panessa knows too. I don’t like that...I don’t like it at all.” His voice dropped to a dangerous whisper. “We need a new place, a place all our own. Besides, what’s more fun than an amusement park?” He turned his radiant smile on her.

Harley giggled softly. “If that is what you want puddin, then that is what we’ll do.”

Jack turned back to gaze at the place. “I think it's a terrific idea.”

Harley leaned close to her husband and whispered. “What’s more fun than an amusement park? Sex in an amusement park!”

Jack’s wide eyes and grin matched hers as he said, “Yes, I definitely like the way you think, my harlequin.”
The following night’s weather was quickly turning into a full on blizzard.

Alceu Panessa’s car pulled up in front of the building where the family meeting was taking place. He yawned, reaching over to grab his hat, plopping the fedora on his dair hair before getting out of the car. He was in love with his new car, a brand new pink and grey 2018 Lamborghini Huracan. Alceu ran his hands over the car’s hood as he walked by. He hated driving it out in this weather, but he had driven it in order to show off. Tomaso was the head of the family, but Alceu was the one with the style. He had just started to walk up to the main entrance when he heard an engine being revved up. Alceu turned around, his hand going under his coat for his weapon when he saw a light blue 2018 Bugatti Chiron pull up and park behind his Lamborghini. Alceu narrowed his eyes then chuckled when he saw Liuni Panessa get out of the car. Alceu laughed. Liuni was Tomaso’s younger brother, but he was also the shortest of the male family members. The guy only reached maybe five foot even. Everyone called him Shorty instead of his proper name. Liuni had finally accepted the nickname, but he was still constantly compensating with bigger guns, more expensive suits and in this case, Alceu thought, a better car. Maybe.

“Hey Shorty!” Alceu called waving at the other man.

Liuni grinned. “Hey Alceu, like the car.”

Alceu snorted. “Yeah I like yours too. You compensating for that small dick of yours?”

Liuni laughed. “That’s not what your wife said when I left her.”

Alceu made a face at the bad joke, but didn’t take the bait. “Come on, ya little shit.”

Alceu waited for Liuni to catch up. The shorter man hurried through the snow. “So you know what this is all about?” Liuni asked.

“Fuck if I know. I thought you would since he’s your brother,” Alceu answered pulling open the door and holding it for the other man.

Liuni shrugged. “No idea...I mean he was pissed about some drug deal that went wrong. He said something about the Red Hood gang, but I don’t know.”

Alceu frowned. “I saw them on the news. They hit the fashion week. Some pretty bold shit if you ask me. Whoever the leader of the gang is, the man’s got balls on him.”

“Yeah he does. Plus did you get a look at the footage, see that blonde with him?” Liuni said as the two men headed over to the elevator. The building might not be complete, but the elevator was in good working order as Liuni hit the button and the doors closed and took the two men up to the third floor. Inside the elevator the two of them discussed what the meeting might be about, how their families were doing and any other Gotham mob business as the elevator made its slow ascent to the upper floors. Just as their discussion turned to business, the doors opened onto a stylish office space.

The room was huge, big enough to hold at least a few hundred people. One whole wall of the room was one long window that ran the length of the building and looked out onto Gotham. The lights of the city could be seen in the distance. A large crystal chandelier hung from the center of the ceiling providing a soft white light in the large room. The room was dominated by a long, walnut table that could seat up to sixteen people. Several bottles of wine sat on the table along with glasses, and a few dishes that some of the men had brought themselves: cannoli, some potato zeppoline, and someone had even brought some rice fritters, a specialty of Piu Panessa’s wife. Alceu’s stomach rumbled as soon as the smell of food hit him when the elevator doors opened. As Alceu looked around, many of the seats were already taken by members of the Panessa family.

As soon as Alceu and Liuni stepped off the elevator, they were greeted by the other men already here. Miceli Panessa, another cousin, approached them. “Hey nice to see you two. Where the fuck is Tomaso?”

Both men shrugged. “No idea, thought he would be there by now.” Liuni frowned. “You know how Tomaso is--he likes to make an entrance. Probably running late on purpose.”

*

Several blocks away, Jack stood on the roof of a building, snow falling around him in soft fluffy flakes, his eyes glued to a pair of binoculars. He was smiling brightly. The Red Hood gang had just finished placing dynamite throughout the building, paying special attention to the building’s concrete support columns, with a little extra dynamite placed willy nilly--as Jack had said--just to make the explosion a little more spectacular. Now, standing on the roof of the building they had chosen to watch the show from, the gang had made a little shrine to Dale and Sandra. It wasn’t much, some flowers, a couple of candles, a bottle of wine, but the sentiment made the little shrine that much more meaningful.

Jack was wearing his black trench coat, dressed in a slim cut three-piece dark, almost black purple suit, with a blood red dress shirt, red tie and a pair of pointed toe black and white oxfords. Harley was standing next to him in her matching black trench coat, a red knit cap with a large pom pom on the top, her long blonde hair spilling across and down her shoulders. She was wearing her own three-piece suit, a vermilion with black pinstripes and a pair of black heeled boots and both of them were wearing black leather gloves. Jack grinned, lowering his binoculars and reaching over to pinch Harley’s tush through her coat. She jumped and giggled at him. “Stop!” Jack chuckled. “Sorry sweets, in too good a mood to stop. Besides, you have a pinchable ass even in that coat.”

Harley blushed and went back to watching the building. She murmured softly, her eyes glued to the binoculars. “Think the cars are going to survive the blast?”

Jack frowned as he raised his binoculars again. “Mm...doubt it...too bad too. That Bugatti Chiron is pretty nice.”

Each member of the gang had their own set of binoculars, all of them standing in a row along the top of the building, waiting for the grand finale of the evening. After which Jack was taking everyone to a karaoke bar.

Jason, who was standing on the other side of Jack, wearing black jeans and a red turtleneck under his black leather jacket. (Alex was with Alice, but Trope was recording a live feed for him and Alice to watch together. Jack had already spoken to Alex about purchasing the abandoned amusement park.
Alex was getting the wheels moving on it, working through a third party to keep both his name and Jack’s name out of the purchase, but Alex assured him, the place would be his in no time.)

Jason grinned. “I could go boost the car if you want Boss.”

Jack smiled without looking over at Jason. “That’s sweet, but nah...it's got mobster cooties.”

Jason chuckled before he said. “This is really cool Boss. I always loved explosions when I was a kid.
I bet Dale and Sandra would have liked it too.”

Jack grinned glancing sideways at Jason. “A man after my own heart.”
Jason blushed, clearly pleased with Jack’s praise.

Frank, who was there representing his son, grinned through his own set of binoculars. “This is so fuckingtastic! I always wanted to blow up some of those fucktard mobsters.”

Jack chuckled. “Glad to provide some entertainment.”

Harley frowned, still watching the building. “I still haven’t seen Tomaso enter the building. You think he’ll have Ben with him?” It was clear from her tone that she hoped not.

Jack frowned as Harley lowered her binoculars.

“Maybe he entered the building from another entrance?” Jack said softly. “But I doubt Ben will be with him. Taking your boy toy around with you to illegal fights and such is one thing; taking him with you on family business is another.”

Harley nodded. “You’re probably right puddin.”

Jack frowned at the building. “I don’t want to wait much longer…”

Harley smiled at Jack. “Then don’t. Let’s do it.”

Jack grinned and pulled out the detonator from his pocket. The device that he had put together himself was a wireless long distance remote detonator. Each of the bundles of dynamite had a receiver attached to them so that all Jack had to do was turn the device in his hand on and push the button.

Jack grinned looking down the row of his gang lined up along the building’s edge ready for the fireworks. “Everyone ready?”

Their small group nodded. Jack grinned. “Duela dear, you want to break out the wine?”

She nodded and swiftly ran over to pick up the bottle and, with a little help from Roxy, they popped the bottle open. She hurried over and handed the bottle to Jack.

Jack smiled holding the bottle up. “For Dale and Sandra.”

At the same time that Jack took a swig from the bottle of wine, he hit the button on the detonator and handed the bottle to Harley. She took a sip and passed it along to Frost and so on.

Just as Trope took a drink, they heard the first explosion.

* Inside the building the men were milling about eating, drinking and talking, waiting for the head of their family to show up. Alceu was sitting on the edge of the long table, a cannoli in hand when he felt the vibration in the floor. Everything in the room started to shake. He stood up and turned, his eyes wide as Linui, who was standing near the long window frowned and turned around. Then everyone heard the loud sound of an explosion. Then another explosion and yet another. The entire building was shaking violently as explosions seemed to start from the bottom of the building and work their way up, floor by floor, all of it happening in a matter of seconds. Alceu realized what was happening while the other men seemed momentarily confused.

Alceu yelled. “EVERYONE…” but he didn’t finish as a blast emanated from one corner of the room and engulf the interior in a fireball. Alceu was thrown forward, the explosion tossing him clear across the room. He briefly caught a glimpse of Linui as the windows burst outward in a bright sprinkle of glass, while some of the glass came bursting inward at the same time, shredding Linui, but then Alceu hit the wall, shattering his back. He didn’t have to endure the pain long before the ball of fire rolled over him, killing him instantly. *

Jack whooped, jumping up when the building exploded. First, there had been a series of loud, deep bursts of sounds, bangs that ripped off with one explosion of sound after another which were followed by flashes of light. The building didn’t fall over so much as it seemed to begin shrinking, collapsing in on itself before another explosion ripped through it and generating a burst of flame. As the building came down, a cloud of smoke rolled out from it

Everyone watched in awe as the building then started to lean as more explosions went off. Jack was laughing as he held his binoculars up to watch the show. “This is fantastic!”

Harley giggled. “Wow.”

*

Tomaso was running late to his own fucking meeting. Ben was beginning to get on his nerves to the point that he was considering, very seriously, of contacting the Owls himself to come and take the little bastard away. Tomaso was becoming increasingly annoyed as Ben talked incessantly about Jack Wayne. It wasn’t that he was jealous, he told himself, but one man could only take so much fawning over another man! He pulled up near the building, parking a little ways down the street when the first explosion went off. The shock wave from the explosion hit his car, a Lexus LF-LC, causing the windshield to burst inward flinging glass at Tomaso who barely had time to bring his arms up and protect his face. He raised his eyes from over the top of his arm only to have a wave of smoke and dust roll over him obscuring everything from view. Tomaso stumbled out of his car, unaware of the bloody cuts all over his face and hands as he stood beside his car, which was damaged from the shockwave and the flying debris that had crashed into the front of the vehicle. He watched, his mouth hanging open as his building came down, taking every male leader of the family with it.

*

Harley frowned. She had seen the car drive up near the building from the corner of her binoculars. Harley turned her binoculars toward the car; the explosion threw bricks and other debris at the car, blasting the windows and pretty much crushing the front of the car. Harley chuckled at the damage, but then hissed in surprise when she saw Tomaso Panessa stumble out, from the car, stunned but alive.

“Puddin!!” Harley smacked Jack in the shoulder. “Puddin!”

Jack frowned. “What?”

She pointed. Jack brought up his binoculars and turned toward the direction his wife had indicated only to see a shaken Tomaso Panessa leaning against his car.

Jack snarled. “Fuck.”
Jack snarled as he stared into the distance, his blue eyes flashing with murder as the explosions he had set off continued their chain reaction. The bright flashes that lit up the Gotham night reflected in his eyes, red laced with the blue reflecting Jack’s building rage. More explosions occurred, bright flashes of violence filling the night and then the building to began to lean even more precariously threatening to take the buildings beside it down as well.

His eyes took in the scene of the crumbling building and the object of his current hatred. Jack threw a hand behind him as he snarled. “Does anyone have a rifle?”

He was greeted by silence.

Jack hissed snapping his arm back, at the same time throwing his coat open.

“Fine!” he said as in one smooth movement he yanked the pistol free and started to fire. All the gang members shared a look before each of them pulled out their own pistols and started to fire in Panessa’s general direction. Harley hadn’t pulled out her pistol, but was instead holding her binoculars up to watch as the smoke and debris from the fallen building washed over Panessa hiding him from view before Jack and the others started to fire.

“Jack! Everyone! Stop! We can’t hit him from here and I lost sight of him. We need to go before the cops get here or worse--Batman. Someone is going to report gunfire along with the explosion!”

Harley brought her binoculars down, turning to her husband as she laid her hand on Jack’s shoulder. “Puddin? Jack? We need to go. Now.” Jack snarled again, but lowered his weapon still staring at the spot where he had last seen Tomaso. For a moment Harley wasn’t sure he was going to move before he said.

"Fine...fine, you’re right Harley. Come on everyone, let's get out of here. I need a drink."

Jack, clearly annoyed, holstered his weapon and turned grabbing Harley’s hand in his, motioned for the rest of the gang to follow as he stormed over to the roof entrance. He yanked the door open with enough force that Harley would not have been surprised if the door had come off its hinges and stomped through, practically pulling his wife along with him. He let the door slam shut behind him without looking to see if the gang were following him.

Jason frowned glancing at everyone with him. “I think he’s pissed.”

Frank chuckled. “That was fun. I don’t see so well...I’m guessing we didn’t get him?"

Jason shrugged. “Got everyone else, but yeah, Boss is pissed ‘cause we didn’t get the big guy.”

Frank frowned. “We should go to a strip club.”

Jason laughed. “Dude, you and me later...Boss...nah, he has his girl. He’s too good for a strip club anyway.”

Frank chuckled as he and Jason walked to the door Jason putting an arm across Frank’s shoulders. “Yeah, my son’s too good for a strip club too. Glad we ain’t!”

The two men laughed as the Frost shook his head and the three women groaned. Roxy muttered. “Pigs.”
The karaoke bar, The Gotham Voicebox, was a nice, clean bar located in downtown Gotham just outside the Diamond district. Their group had a private room that was decorated with wallpaper that mimicked the cityscape of Gotham, with three televisions hanging on the walls around the room. A white couch ran the entire length of the room, wrapping around the walls with a couple of black and white stools, and a “U” shaped shiny black table in the middle. There were glasses of alcohol on the table, two pitchers of soda with some snacks, a bowl of hummus, the remains of a caramelized onion, a bowl of popcorn and three pizzas that only had a few slices left. Jack was nursing a glass of whiskey, a cigarette between his lips, with his arm around Harley, who was sipping from a colorful Aqua Blue Cruise drink. Jack was still glaring angrily while Jason and Trope sang “I Got You Babe” together in the middle of the room with the screen behind them showing the words scrolling past when Alex and Alice arrived. Alex grinned, his one arm around Alice’s shoulders and holding a beer.

The others yelled a greeting when the two stepped in. Alex and Alice grinned and waved while Alice nearly swooped down on the pizza. Alex laughed and sat down next to Jack while Alice sat on Harley’s other side so the two women could talk.

Alex leaned back against the seat and took a long swig from his beer, sighing. “So, missed fucking Tomaso, eh?”

Jack hissed low and deadly, still annoyed as he leaned forward and flicked ashes into the ashtray on the table. “Yes. He arrived at the building just as I set off the explosion.”

“Lucky fucking bastard,” Alex muttered. He took another drink before he leaned forward and placed his bottle on the table. Alex reached into the front pocket of the Hawaiian shirt he was wearing, a green, blue, and red monstrosity Jack thought, with parrots flying across it, and pulled out a cigar. Jack grabbed his lighter from his pocket as Alex pulled out the cheap cigar cutter from the same breast pocket and held the cigar, (having turned it around to hold with his teeth), cutting off the tip before turning it back around and leaning forward for Jack to light it. Alex took a couple of quick puffs until the end was burning nicely, the rich smell of the cigar floating through the room. He leaned back and pulled the cigar from his mouth. “Well, at least I come bearing good fucking news.”

Jack turned to face his friend with a brow raised, quizzical. He had just reached over to pick up his drink, and lifted the bottle to refill his glass just as Duela started to sing “Havana” by Camila Cabello. Alex grinned. “That abandoned amusement park you wanted--it’s yours. You and Harley can start the fucking renovations whenever you want.”

Jack sighed with a grin and leaned back to take a sip of his drink. “Well, at least something went right. That didn’t take long.”

Alex shrugged. “They were motivated to sell and a fucking cash offer? They were fucking happy to take your money and unload the place. I know you said Frost told you about a fucking death there, seems there was a lot fucking more than one. I don’t know if you were planning on doing anything with the fucking rides, but those things have caused the fucking death of quite a few park patrons.”

Alex chuckled with a little shrug. “Anyway, a little cash here and there and it fucking closed without issue, papers filed. You, Mr. Joe Kerr, are the proud fucking owner of a defunct amusement park. I can have someone there tomorrow to start making the place--or at least a fucking part of the place--livable.”

Jack grinned. “Let’s go take a look tomorrow.”

Alex nodded. “Cool. You two could move in soon.”
Jack shook his head. “I want us to move in no later than forty eight hours from now. Tomaso knows where we live. Not sure how long it will take him to try something stupid. I want all of Gotham’s seedy underworld to know it was us that blew his little family to kingdom come, but I don’t want Tomaso deciding he can take Harley and me out on his own. I don’t want him coming after Harley.”

Alex nodded. “I don’t know if you could move in that fucking soon Jack. The place has been abandoned for years, but I can set you both up in another one of my fucking places throughout Gotham.”

Jack nodded to Alex and smiled. “You’re a good friend.”

Alex smiled then grimaced as Frank started to sing Katy Perry’s “Roar” completely off key and rather drunkenly. Alex sighed. “Guess Pops is going the fuck home with me.” He took a heavy puff on his cigar before he asked. “So, what now?”

Jack took a heavy drag on his cigarette, leaned back as smoke drifted from his lips and nostrils. “I want Panessa dead and I want everything he has. You think that will be difficult?”

“Depends on the other families. But my opinion from what I know—especially after tonight—I don’t think so. You made a hard move Jack, they are going to respect that. Or at least will think Panessa’s incompetent. You want Panessa’s territory, I think you’re going to get it man.” Alex nodded.

Jack grinned. “Once that is done, I want the Owls.”

Alex choked on his smoke and sat up coughing. “What?”

Jack grinned with no sign of fear. “I’m going to take out the Owls.”

“Jack, I...I don’t think that’s fucking possible man. I mean...I don’t know that much about them—no one does—but I don’t think you can just fucking take them out like Panessa.” Alex looked at Jack like he had lost his head.

Jack chuckled. “Watch me.”

Alex frowned flicking ashes from his cigar into the ashtray on the table. “Jack...I mean, you need to think about this dude. The Owls are old. Fuck, they’ve been part of Gotham from the beginning if the stories are to be believed...I don’t...” He trailed off with a shake of his head.

Jack put out his cigarette and reached for his drink. “Alex, they fucked with me by letting that little fucker Ben loose and Ben has tried twice to hurt Harley. No one touches Harley.” Jack took a drink narrowing his eyes, looking at nothing. “She’s my anchor Alex, my safety...no one tries to take her from me.”

Alex nodded his understanding. “Well, maybe we can come back to this after, you know...taking care of Panessa for good...that fucking Ben character and you know, the fight club shit?”

Jack sighed. “Yeah, fine. You’re right.”

Alex sighed in relief.

*

Panessa made it home. He wasn't sure how. His car’s front was crushed; he was surprised he got it out of there at all. The engine struggled to get him home, but when he arrived he found Ben lying on the couch. The young man looked up, his mouth opened to say something, but stopped dead when he saw Panessa, covered in grey dust, bleeding from several cuts, bruised, and shaking. Ben sat up. “What happened? I thought you were having a meeting with the family.”

Tomaso stumbled the rest of the way in, slamming the door behind him as he made his way over to the kitchen. Ben heard him opening and slamming cabinets before he came stumbling out again drinking straight from a bottle of mirto as he staggered into the living room. Ben was watching him, his eyes narrowed and brow furrowed.

“They’re all gone,” Tomaso said taking a breath before he drank again from the bottle. “Every fucking one of them is dead.” He started to laugh. “The building is fucking gone Ben...gone...all of them, the building…”

Ben stared at him before he grabbed the tv remote and turned on the set. It took him a minute or so to find a news station where the news reporter, a handsome young man, his tone just this side of frantic. “A building in the Upper East Side came down this evening due to a mysterious explosion. At this time it is unknown if there are any casualties The explosion was powerful enough that the entire unfinished building was brought down. We will keep you informed as we receive reports. Again, there was an explosion in the Upper East Side of Gotham…” The scene shifted from the reporter to a helicopter camera that showed the remains of the building. From Ben’s perspective, anyone inside that when it came down would be dead.

Ben blinked. “Wh...who do you think is responsible?”

Tomaso finished off the last of the mirto and stumbled back into the kitchen, coming out again a few seconds later with a bottle of marsala. Like the mirto, he was drinking straight from the bottle. Ben wrinkled his nose at him. “Did you hear me? Who do you think is responsible?”

Tomaso flopped down next to him, remained silent for a few heartbeats as he drank greedily from the bottle. When he had downed half of it he finally turned to Ben. “Who do you fucking think, genius? Your boy Jack Wayne...that fucking Red Hood gang of his.”

“You can’t be serious?!” Ben said, but at the same time he knew Tomaso was right. It had to be Jack. He tried not to smile, he was impressed with Jack’s response to Tomaso’s threats.

Ben took a breath before he spoke again. “So, what are you going to do?”

“I need to speak with The Roman. I need them to help me wipe Jack Wayne out of existence!” Tomaso finished the bottle before he threw it across the room where it shattered against the wall. “I...I’m going to call him…” Tomaso started to drunkenly reached for his cellphone, but Ben stopped him.

“Don’t call him like this Tommy...wait until morning, you’re drunk.” Ben grabbed his hand. Tomaso stared at him then seemed to collapse, his voice taking on a pained and weepy tone. “He killed them all Ben...my family…”

Ben gathered Tomaso into his arms and held him while the other man cried.

*

The next morning Jack and Harley, with Frost driving, met Alex at the abandoned amusement park. It had begun to snow again, tiny flakes falling down swiftly in a slight breeze. Alex was waiting in front of the gates, no car in sight, wearing a black trench coat and a black fedora, his hat and shoulders sprinkled with snow. Frost pulled up in front of the gate. Jack and Harley in the backseat both leaned forward to giggle at Alex.
“Does he think he looks...inconspicuous?” Harley asked with a wide grin and a sideways glance at her husband.

Jack grinned looking sideways at his wife. She looked gorgeous today (she looked gorgeous everyday to him), she had her hair down, thick gold curls cascading down her shoulders from under a white knit cap with white fur trim. Under her red puffy parka that she was wearing today, Harley wore a blue and white checkered collar shirt with a red sweater over the top that hung down almost like a dress with black leggings and some thick white snow boots with little red diamonds on the heels. Jack leaned over and kissed her cheek. “I think he does. He looks like a Humphrey Bogart cosplayer.”

Harley laughed giving him a quick peck on the cheek thinking to herself that her husband looked dashing this morning in a slim-cut navy and green tartan printed suit with a dark brown vest, grey shirt and blue tie under his trench coat with a pair of dark purple oxford style ankle boots. Alex came walking over to the car and knocked on the passenger side window. Frost leaned over and opened the door. Alex slipped inside turning around.

“Hey guys, ready to see the place?”

Jack grinned. “Yep, I’m ready.”

Alex grinned holding a ring of keys up. “I’ll go unlock the gate then Frost can drive on through. See you guys on the other side.”

With that Alex hopped out and hurried over to the gate. After a couple of seconds he pushed the large iron gate open with a little bit of difficulty, then stepped aside. Frost drove on through, turning the car around once he was on the other side of the gate as Alex was pushing the gate closed again and walked over to the car.

Jack slipped out, then reached inside to take his wife’s red gloved hand in his dark purple one and helped her out. Where they stood was an open area that led to a line of gates that patrons would have walked through into the main park grounds. From here Harley could see the roller coaster, the ferris wheel, a pendulum ride called the Ali Baba. In the back there seemed to be a Balloon Race ride; there was what looked like a old fashioned street sign post with colorful arrows pointing in different directions with names painted across them. They saw a tunnel of love, a mini-train ride, a haunted house, a hall of mirrors, a place called a madhouse, a swinging boat, a carousel, bumper cars, flying scooters, a Hurricane, a water ride called a log flume and a wipe-out ride. Harley was impressed with the number of rides the place had. There were other signs that pointed to refreshment stands, animal shows, and a magician. Jack was grinning from ear to ear, his blue eyes dancing.

He grinned at Harley. “This is fantastic!”

Alex called over to them. “There is a fucking two story building over this way that used to be the home for the owner. I think it was a fucking tavern or bar or something before that, then a speakeasy after that...anyway, he lived on the site. The realtor said it was actually really fucking nice at one time. I guess it used to be a tavern, then as some point, during Prohibition, it was a speakeasy and now...well, this fucking mess.”

The three of them followed along behind Alex as he stepped onto an overgrown white stone path that ran around behind the ticket stands and the carnival rides. Jack pulled out his cigarettes while gazing around. Harley reached into his inner coat pocket, startling him slightly as she retrieved his lighter. She grinned at him and flicked the lighter to life. Jack grinned holding his cigarette to his mouth as his wife lit it for him, their eyes glued to each other as they walked.
“This place used to have a lot of fucking old brick buildings along this block, but when the guy who owned this place bought it he had all the fucking buildings torn down, though the one he used as his base of operations.” Alex continued talking as their small group navigated the overgrown path that ran along behind several attractions until they came to another gate.

There were several trees along this part of the park which Harley could guess that in summer, when the trees were covered in leaves, would act as a sort of natural screen to the building that Alex said was back here.

Alex, holding the ring of keys, inserted one into the lock of the gate and flung it open. They walked down the path toward the building.

The building itself was indeed a two story brick building that looked to date back to the turn of the twentieth century. Alex fumbled with the keys for a moment until he found the one he wanted, opened the door, stepped inside, and flipped a switch. He glanced around as the others joined them. “Took the liberty of having the fucking electricity turned back on,” he said as they all stood in the doorway and looked around.

Jack smiled, smoke drifting from between his lips as he flicked his dying cigarette to the ground, putting it out with the toe of his shoe and patted Alex on the shoulder. “Good man.”

Alex grinned leading the way into the house, now dimly lit by a weak cascade of yellow light.

Their small group stepped into the main room of the building which at one time had been the main tap room of the bar, but had been turned into a living room of sorts. As their eyes adjusted to the weak light, they all realized it was much more than simply a living room.

The place was completely furnished, but what had them all looking around in shock, mouths hanging open and eyes wide, was the fact that the place was filled to the brim with stuff. And not just any “stuff” Harley thought, but the damn place reminded her of museum. The placed looked as if a curiosity cabinet and an old lady who collected weird stuff had a baby together...that would be this house, Harley realized. It was freaky, weird and just absolutely amazing she thought with a wide grin spreading across her face.

Alex muttered, his eyes wide in disbelief. “Fuck me.”

Jack muttered in return, but with a wide grin on his face, his eyes dancing with delight. “Exactly.”

Frost frowned wrinkling his nose at the smell of dust and possibly mildew. “This place is a fire hazard and a freak show.”

While Harley giggled and clapped her hands. “Look at all this neat stuff!!”

The room had some your typical thrift store finds in regards to the couch and chairs, each looking as if they may have been fashionable furniture in the 1970’s, but those two pieces were the only “normal” items in the room.

There was one wall, where the remains of the bar counter was located, the surface littered with a wide variety of what looked like wind-up toys, ancient looking automatons, and little dime store slot machines. On the wall behind the counter, where at one time bottles of alcohol had been kept, the shelves were now covered in a collection of specimen cases contains butterflies and other insects, jars with cloudy liquid and things that Harley couldn’t quite see, alongside skeletons and skulls, both human and animal. Not all of these were “normal” either, Harley noted. She saw a Fiji mermaid, a couple of pairs of conjoined twins and other natural occurring (or perhaps unnaturally occurring) abnormalities. Another wall contained dolls, porcelain dolls from the looks of them. They also had the distinction of being mostly creepy looking clown dolls Harley noted.

Tugging Harley along with him, Jack headed over to the shelves of bones and specimen jars in order to get a closer look. They were both standing there grinning at the display before them when Harley glanced down, noticing what looked to be a trap door. She frowned then glanced over her shoulder toward Alex who was holding up one of the porcelain clown dolls.

“Alex, does this place have a basement?” Harley asked.

Jack glanced down after Harley spoke, also noticed the outline of the trap door. Alex didn’t bother looking over as he set the doll down and picked up another. “Yeah it does, a full basement. I think that’s where they kept the beer and shit when this place was a bar.”

Harley let out a sigh of relief. She glanced at her husband and whispered. “No secret Owl stuff.”

*

As their small group made their way through the room and into other parts of the house, they found vintage circus posters on the walls, posters advertising sideshow freaks, girly shows, clowns and acrobats. They discovered rooms filled with shrunken heads and taxidermy animals, and another room that contained an old, small, mule drawn calliope. The kitchen had the typical appliances, all dating from several decades back it seemed, but the collection even spilled into this room with little figures of circus bears balanced on balls, and parades of gaily colored circus elephant salt and pepper shakers and a clown cookie jar.

Jack and Harley strolled hand in hand through the place, their eyes dancing with delight.

Harley giggled. “This place is amazing!”

Jack nodded. “I mean, I know we can’t keep all of this, but...this is perfect sweets! Our own little circus!”

Harley grinned at him when the both heard Alex yell. “Hey guys! I found the fucking stairs.”

Jack grinned at Harley. She giggled and together they dashed off in the direction of Alex’s voice.

Alex was standing by a set of stairs that led upward into darkness. Alex was just leaning over to flip the light switch then Jack and Harley showed up from the kitchen. Frost was standing nearby, holding a figure that looked to Harley like a tiny naked lady with a snake wrapped around her naughty bits. When Harley giggled, Frost’s head snapped up and he nearly dropped the figurine to the floor, but at the last second he caught it out of the air and placed it back on the tiny table beside the stairs where the figure had been sitting, judging by the clear ring surrounded by dust on the table’s surface.

Alex was frowning looking up, one foot on the bottom stair as he flipped the light switch on which brought the stairs into view more clearly.

The stairs were relatively clear of knickknacks though they were painted in a strange combination of greens, purples and reds. Jack chuckled taking Harley’s hand. “Shall we sweets?”

“Oh we shall!” Harley giggled and the two of the danced up the stairs. Jack laughed as they danced up the stairs then back down again, stomping out a rhythm together.

Alex shook his head watching the two of them. Frost clapped to the beat realizing they were stomping out a song together, especially when Harley surprised them as she started to sing while using her natural grace to dance up and down the stairs in a beat to match the song she was singing. Jack stopped dancing with her to press himself against the wall to watch her, a grin on his face, but his eyes were filled with love as Harley, her voice pitched high almost mimicking Betty Boop started to sing while fluttering her eyes at Jack, winking and twisting to dance up the stairs turning around to blow a kiss at him.

“I wanna be loved by you, just you
And nobody else but you
I wanna be loved by you, alone!
Boop-boop-a-doop!
I wanna kissed by you, just you
Nobody else but you
I wanna be kissed by you, alone!”

She giggled and ended her song with a loud playful “Boop-Boop-a-doop!” before she ran up the stairs and disappeared. Jack laughed running after her. “HEY!”

Alex shook his head following up the stairs. “Never a dull moment with those two.”

Frost nodded. “Yep. Best job I ever took deciding to work for Mr. Wayne.”

The two men shared a laugh and headed up the stairs.

* *

The four of them went up to the second floor where they found several bedrooms. Unlike the ground floor, this floor was not crammed with as many knick knacks and collectibles, but there was still a large collection of circus and carnival memorabilia littered through the five rooms and bathroom located on the second floor.

Their small group split up on the landing, moving away from one another as they explored the house. Harley grabbed Jack’s hand when he caught up with her, pressing a quick kiss to his mouth before she hauled him into one of the bedrooms, slamming the door behind her.

The room that Harley dragged Jack into contained an old canopy bed in what once were bright circus colors of blue, red and yellow, now faded and worn and covered in a fine layer of dust. The walls in here, Jack noticed, like some of the walls downstairs, were decorated with old circus posters, mostly from the between the early twentieth century to around the 1950’s judging by the style of the posters.

Harley was wandering around the room picking up objects, mostly strange little figures of clowns and acrobats. Harley giggled holding up a clown figure. “This guy had a clown fetish.”

Jack chuckled. “Sure seems that way.”

He frowned as he walked over to what he thought was a closet door and opened it. His frown changed to a grin in surprise. “Harley, come here!”
Harley, who had been examining a large carousel horse that was actually a hippocampus carved of what felt like wood to her, glanced over her shoulder to see Jack standing in the doorway with stairs leading up. She could feel the cold Gotham air coming through the door. “What’s that?” she asked hurrying over to her husband’s side. Jack put his arm around her waist and the two of them looked up.

“I think it leads to the roof,” Jack said. “Wanna go look?”

Harley giggled. “Sure puddin.”

Jack took her hand and together they raced up the stairs bursting out onto the flat roof of the brick building laughing. Together, the two of them walked to the edge of the building looking out onto the amusement park. The snow was coming down thicker, giving the old abandoned amusement park a fairytale quality as it began to stick to the ground and on the rides like a coating of fairy dust.

Jack pulled Harley into his arms, pressing her back up against his chest as he wrapped his arms around her waist. “So, what do you think? Think this will make a good home for us?”

Harley leaned back against him smiling as she watched the snow falling, coating the rides and turning them into frozen ghosts. “I like it Jack. I think it will be perfect.”

Jack grinned and turned her around in his arms. He looked down at her as the snow stuck to her hat and melted on her cheeks. He smiled as he cupped Harley’s face between his hands and stared down at her, his blue eyes roaming her face while his gloved thumbs caressed her cheeks.

“I love you Harls. You rescued me, you’ve been by my side through so much. I couldn’t survive without you.” He whispered and rubbed his nose against hers. Harley giggled having slid her arms under his coat and around his waist smiling up at him. “I love you too puddin. You are part me Jack...where you go, I go, forever.”

Jack leaned in and kissed her, a soft passionate kiss that quickly and easily turned into something deeper. Harley stood up on her toes kissing him harder, her hands sliding down and inside the back of his slacks. She stopped kissing him when she realized all she was finding was bare skin. Even through her gloves she could feel the heat of his skin and realized that he wasn’t wearing any boxers. Harley giggled mischievously. “Jack Wayne, where are your boxers?”

Jack chuckled in response. “I have no idea Mrs. Wayne.”

Harley laughed as Jack reached up between them grabbing the zipper of her parka and pulled it down until the coat fell open on its own. He pulled her tighter into his embrace, shifting his arms from outside her coat to wrap around her waist under the coat. “You ever have a quickie on a roof Mrs. Wayne? In the snow?”

Harley giggled. “I don’t believe I have Mr. Wayne. Are you going to take advantage of me on a roof?”

Jack laughed. “Oh indeedie I am sweets.”

He kissed her again, his gloved hands sliding up under her sweater and shirt. His hands glided up her back only realizing after a moment that he still hadn’t found her bra strap. Jack pulled back with a grin. “You’re not wearing a bra.”

Harley grinned impishly. “No, I’m not.”

“What else aren't you wearing Mrs. Wayne?” Jack asked with a smirk on his red lips.
“Why don’t you find out?” Harley giggled.

Jack gave her another smirk, moving his hands from her back to the waist of her leggings, ready to pull them down, but Harley grabbed his wrists stopping him. “In a minute puddin.”

She dropped to her knees and looked up at him, her hands momentarily on his hips. Snow decorated the fur trim of her hat and landed lightly on her eyelashes, the grey light catching them and making her lashes sparkle. Harley caught her bottom lip with her teeth as she worked to unfasten the button of his pants while Jack held his coat out of her way. She hissed in annoyance, and Jack laughed lightly at her cute annoyed face. Apparently her gloves were making it slightly difficult, Jack noticed with an amused smirk. Harley snarled and pulled her gloves off with her teeth, spitting them onto the snowy rooftop before reaching back for the button and zipper of his slacks, her nose scrunched up as she worked to get them open.

Jack watched her, unmoving, his eyes glued to his wife. She was so pretty he thought, so dazzlingly gorgeous. She glanced up, her eyes looking like pieces of blue crystal framed by her dark lashes and her stunning smile. Each look, each moment he thought, let him fall more in love with her, more obsessed, more in need of her. She was the only thing in all the world keeping him from losing complete control.

She grinned at him, sharing that beautiful smile he loved so much with him before she directed her attention back to her work of getting his slacks open. Within seconds she had pulled the cloth aside to reveal his erection to the cool Gotham air. And he really wasn’t wearing any boxer she saw with delight.

Harley giggled with pleasure. “Oh puddin!”

Then, before Jack could form a response, Harley looked up at him, playful mischief dancing in her blue eyes before she wrapped her lips around him and sucked him into her mouth, her hands caressing up his thighs and over his hips. Harley ran the pads of her thumbs along the space between his groin and stomach, splaying her fingers wide over his skin, touching as much of his warm flesh that she could.

Jack groaned as the shift from the crisp, cold air, to the warmth of her mouth and tongue caused his knees to wobble for a moment. Jack dropped his hands from his waist to reach out and cradle her head gently in his hands. Harley grabbed his hips, then reached around to cup his ass as she began to press her lips down on him, sliding her lips down his member before pressing her mouth around him, her tongue weaving back and forth along the base of his erection, her fingers pressing into his skin as she took all of him into her mouth. She could feel the cold of the roof transferring up her legs from where her knees were in the accumulating snow, but she didn’t care. Jack’s skin was warm and smooth; she only cared about what she was doing to her puddin, the way he felt in her mouth, the moans and twitches of his body as she sucked and licked, rolling her tongue around his erection in her mouth. When she took him deep into her mouth, her forehead touching his stomach was warm. Her hand squeezed his ass, tugging him closer.

Jack groaned. “Harley...uh...mm...Harls...”

He closed his eyes arching his back giving in to just feeling the wetness of her mouth, the warm press of her lips and the gently brush of her teeth against his sensitive member.

Harley smiled taking him deep into her mouth, feeling him nearly touching the back of her throat. She relaxed, enjoying not just the pleasure she was giving her lover, but the power of it. She loved the power to make him moan, to make her man, her husband, her lover, her puddin, weak. She bobbed her head slowly, her tongue moving over him, feeling the satin of his erection in her mouth.
From his reactions, his moaning and the shuddering she detected in his legs, she was pleasing him as much as she ever had...and that was what made her ecstatic, her ability to fulfill his desire and deepen their connection. She sucked down on him, moving her mouth up and down, coating him in her saliva and enjoying the way his fingers twitched against her head. She could feel him struggling to resist the urge to dig his fingers into her hat and hair.

Harley wrapped her tongue around the head of his erection, flicking her tongue back and forth before rolling it around him once more just before she stood up. She grinned like a cheshire cat when she stood back up.

Jack growled playfully at her. “You are a dirty little minx Harley. I love it.”

Harley giggled. “Mm...that’s one of the things you like about me puddin.”

Jack grinned backing her up against the roof’s brick edge that hit her around the middle of her thighs. She dropped down on her rear as Jack yanked her sweater and shirt up, exposing her bare breasts to the cold. The chill air felt erotic against her bare skin, the pleasure intensifying when Jack leaned in to brush his hot, wet tongue over her erect nipples, flicking over one before switching to the other. The cold, combined with the chilling of his saliva against her nipples made Harley groan. Jack wrapped a hand around her back to keep her balanced on the edge while he leaned down only a little awkwardly where he positioned himself between her legs to grant himself better access to her breasts. Harley moaned, her hands grasping the brick edge behind her, and glanced down at Jack. She couldn’t see him, his face against her breasts was covered by her bunched up sweater and shirt, but she could feel the intense pleasure of his lips and tongue playing slowly across her nipples. His nose pressed against her skin was cold, but his lips, which had started cold were quickly turning warm against her skin, his breath warm, brushing the fine hairs of her skin. The leather of his gloves felt tantalizing as he squeezed and lifted her breast, his other hand beside her, pressing down against the brick as he held himself over her tugging on her nipples with his lips.

Harley whimpered; the pleasure was almost too much. His licks and sucks sent ripples of warmth to her groin that made her squirm.

Jack pulled back, startling her as he lifted her to her feet and spun her around. In the next motion he grabbed the sides of her leggings and pulled them down, exposing her to the brisk air and snow.

Harley let out a startled yelp as Jack bent her over, pushed her down. She grabbed the cold brick with her bare hands while at the same moment that he slid her snow booted feet further apart, placing one hand against her lower back while with the other he guided himself into her.

Harley groaned went he pushed into her. She was so wet and the sensation of Jack thrusting into her was warm and welcome. She groaned when she felt his groin and pelvis against her backside, the press of his skin against hers.

Jack grabbed her hips with both gloved hands, his feet set apart and started to thrust hard and fast, their cool flesh meeting each other as he smacked into her, the sound of their flesh slapping against each other seemed to echo across the abandoned park while they both looked out onto their new home, savoring being one with each other.

Alex frowned. So far he had found a bedroom that had a tiny twin size bed with a balloon theme. The walls had been painted with balloons and clowns...the previous owner really had a fucking clown fetish Alex thought as he walked back out into the hall only to meet Frost.
He grinned at the taller man. “Anything interesting?”

Frost shrugged. “That room back there has a lot of photos of circus sideshow people, and shelves full of fiestaware like my gram used to own.”

Alex frowned. “Fiestaware?”

Frost chuckled. “It’s these dishes that come in bright solid colors like reds, blues, and yellows. Real popular in the late ‘30’s, ‘40’s and ‘50s then saw a resurgence in the late 1980’s.”

Alex stared at the big man who shrugged. “Like I said, my gram use to collect it.”

Alex chuckled. “You are a fucking strange man Frost.”

Frost smiled and shrugged again heading toward the last room, the one in which Jack and Harley had disappeared.

“They’re awful quiet in there,” Frost said with concern.

The two men headed into the room looking around, but they saw no sign of Jack or Harley. Frost pulled his gun, looking around frantically. So much had occurred in the last couple of months, and they had enough enemies, he wasn’t taking any chances.

Alex frowned in confusion. “Now where the hell…”

He opened the closet door and let out a sigh of relief. “Hey Frost, I bet they’re up there on the roof.”

He held the door open showing Frost a set of stairs leading up. Frost started to walk toward the door and stairs when both men heard the sound of Harley, groaning and crying out loudly.

“Uhhh…uhh…puddin…oh!”

Alex paled and took a step back letting the door close. “Ah…you know, I think they’re riding one of the fucking rides. Let’s go look at freaky shit downstairs.”

Frost blinked and holstered his gun. “Yeah, that sounds like a good idea.”

*

Later, the four of them were sitting in the car; Alex was turned around to talk to Jack and Harley.

“I can have some people here tonight to get that house cleaned up for you guys. I can send a few guys out to Catherine House to get whatever you want to take with you to the apartment I picked out for you guys, if you want. How much of that stuff at the clown house you want taken out?” Alex glanced between them two of them with his brows lifted.

Jack and Harley shared a look, both of them smiling at the other and at the same time they both said.

“None of it.”

Alex frowned. “You two fucking serious?”

They both nodded.

Alex rolled his eyes. “You two are a couple of fucking freaks. Okay, well I think my guys can have it livable in a couple of days, maybe four at the most, depends on what they find. That sound good?”
Jack leaned back pulling Harley with him and holding her close. “That sounds fine Alex, just fine.”

Frost started the car, pulling out of the gate that Alex had opened. Alex turned back again once they were outside the gate. “So, you meeting with the mysterious fucking douchebag tonight that’s been fixing fights and messing with my dad?”

Alex frowned. “I don’t feel right about you going alone.”

“I won’t be alone, Harley and Frost will be with me. I would be stupid to walk in there on my own. I’m not stupid Alex.”

“I know man. It’s just...you’re taking a big fucking risk for me and my dad. I...I appreciate it.” Alex’s frown deepened.

Jack reached up and laid a hand on Alex’s shoulder. “I know Alex. It’s just a little payback for all that I owe you. We’re friends right?”

Alex nodded. “Thanks man.”

*

Evening in Gotham brought with it heavier snowfall and bitter winds.

Frost drove the car around the corner and slowed down carefully. Paddy’s Pub was located on the corner inside an old two story brick building. The name of the place was painted across a dark green decorative wood trim over a large glass window which had a large neon shamrock in the window that also carried the pub’s glowing name in the middle of the shamrock. The sound of music could be heard even outside of the building, what sounded like a live band doing a cover of Flogging Molly’s “Drunken Lullabies.” Frost parked the car a little ways down the street, parallel parking along the curb. The tall man got out of the car and walked around to open the door for Jack.

Jack stepped out dressed in his black trench coat, his pair of black and white pointed oxfords hitting the pavement with a sharp sound as he exited the car. Tonight Jack was dressed all in black, a black suit, black dress shirt and black tie; the only color was the purple and black checked waistcoat he wore underneath his jacket with a silver chain hanging across the front.

He turned around and handed Harley out of the car to stand next to him. She was dressed in her own three piece suit, also all in black, no tie, just the first four buttons showing off the simple gold chain around her neck. The waistcoat she wore was red along with a pair of pointed toe red oxfords with a thick two inch heel. She wore her golden blonde hair loose and soft around her shoulders. Jack grinned, taking her arm in his before the three of them crossed the street and headed into the pub.

The inside of Paddy’s Pub was fairly crowded. The warm amber light showed a bar that ran the entire length of the back wall of the room, the wall behind it covered from floor to ceiling with shelves of booze, bottles and bottles of alcohol to cater to as many of the pub’s patrons as possible. On a stage at the far right, a live band was playing with bagpipes, banjo, guitars, violin and drums; small round wooden tables and stools with patrons at them were scattered around the stage. On the left were a few small booths and a large one that circled the wall at the far left.

Jack and Harley stood at the entrance with Frost behind them looking around when a tall, skinny man with a narrow face and large ears hurried over to them.

“You Jack?” the man asked with a smile.
Jack glanced at Harley and nodded. “You who I’m supposed to meet?”

The skinny man laughed. “Oh no. I’m Jay. If you’ll follow me...”

Jay turned and hurried over to the left, moving over to the booth. Jack frowned and followed, keeping Harley on his arm.

Sitting in the middle of the booth was a heavy set man, balding, with a large crooked nose that looked to have been broken more than once, and a pot belly wearing a tailored brown suit. In front of him was a plate and while Jack had never eaten it, he recognized the dish; haggis, clapshot and whiskey sauce with a bottle of irish whiskey and a glass sitting next to the plate. The music had changed to an ear splitting version of “Going Out in Style” by the Dropkick Murphys. Jack frowned, glancing back as the cover band as Jay motioned for them to take the stools that sat across from the table booth. Jack took Harley’s coat for her, sliding it down her shoulders (and stealing a kiss on her ear) before removing his own coat. Jay smiled and offered to take their coats for them.

Jack sat after pulling out the stool for Harley, opening his jacket before taking his seat. Frost stood behind Jack and Harley, a silent shadow. The man in the booth glanced at Frost, but if he found the bodyguard unusual, he said nothing.

Jay grinned. “What can I get you to drink?”

Jack smiled glancing at Harley. “You trust me poo?”

Harley’s smile widened. “With my heart and my life puddin.”

His eyes twinkled at that response and he grabbed her hand kissing her knuckles before he turned to Jay. “Two black velvet.”

Jay nodded, looked at Frost who gave a slight shake of his head, and took off to prepare their drinks. Jack turned his attention to the man eating in front of him. He waited, not asking any questions, not offering any information. The man continued to eat as if they weren't there while Jay returned with the two drinks, both in tall, finely crafted wine glasses.

Finally, after what seemed forever to Harley, the band’s lead singer yelled into the mic the name of the song just finished. “All right everyone!! Ready for another?!” The crowd yelled back. The singer, a young skinny man with a shock of red hair grinned at the crowd. “Time for some Barrels of Whiskey!”

The singer jumped back and launched hard and heavy into the song.

Jack sipped his drink, then set it down on the table across from the man they were here to see. The man glanced up, the fork he was holding, halfway to his mouth, his mud brown eyes watching as Jack calmly crossed his legs and pulled his cigarettes from his inside jacket pocket. He pulled out his lighter and spun the wheel, each movement slow and calculated. Once his cigarette was lit, Jack rested his elbow on his folded knee holding his cigarette between his two fingers, smoke trailing lazily from between his lips, his blue eyes seeming that much brighter between the hazy smoke and the dark amber light.

Harley did her best not the stare longingly at Jack, but she found it difficult to resist looking at her husband; swooning would look pretty silly in front of this man, because Jack was her husband Harley thought...or would it be silly? Swooning over her husband was good! Not many women could say that their significant other made them swoon. Harley smiled and gazed at Jack, her eyes full of love and utter devotion while she sipped her drink with her left hand, she reached over to lay her free hand on Jack’s thigh. She was sitting close enough to Jack that she could easily caress his thigh.

The man across from them finished his meal, wiped his mouth with a paper napkin, and tossed it onto the plate as he pushed it away before he spoke.

“Let me introduce myself. My name is Nardo Galante. I’m here in this...interesting city of yours instead of my hometown of Chicago, doing a little business in Gotham. I like to gamble on the fights. Much like anyone else, I suppose, but unlike some people, I like to win.”

He looked up and studied Jack with his brown eyes narrowing marginally. “I was told you’re the little brother of Bruce Wayne. I know what it’s like to be on the low end of the family. Not as good as your brother, your brother holds all the power, that sort of shit. But I’m here to make you a deal based on your set of skills Mr. Wayne.” Galante picked up his drink, swallowing the contents in one gulp before he filled the glass again, taking another quick swallow before he continued. “You, my friend, beat two of my best fighters. I’m impressed and…” The man paused to belch loudly before he continued. “I don’t impress easily. So, Jack Wayne, I’m here to make you an offer. You’re a good fighter, lots of people are going to start betting on you, especially at tomorrow night’s fight. I want you to be in my pocket...Jack. I’ll pay you and don’t worry; I’ll make it worth your while. You do what I say, throw a fight when I tell you, win a fight when I tell you...then I’ll make sure you’re paid well, very well. Better than you would otherwise make. Understand?”

Jack glanced at Harley. She smiled and shrugged giving his thigh a squeeze at the same time. Jack could tell she was nervous, worried; her anxiety transferred through her touch. He held his cigarette between his lips, covering her hand and squeezing, transferring comfort to her before he spoke.

Jack took his cigarette out, flicking it to the floor of the pub and picked up his drink. “So, how much are we talking about?”

Nardo grinned. “How does fifty thousand sound to you?”

Jack frowned slightly as if he were thinking over the sum. “Do I get that much every time I follow a fight on your instructions, win or lose?”

Nardo nodded. “You follow orders, I make you richer than you already are Mr. Wayne. There is no such thing as too much money. Besides, you do what I want, you won’t have to worry about getting that pretty face of yours too fucked up.” Nardo grinned.

Jack finished off his drink and set his glass down before he spoke. “I think we have a deal Mr. Galante.”

*

Jack pulled out his cell phone as soon as they were back in the car, Frost driving them to the apartment that Alex had arranged for them.

Alex answered on the second ring. “How did it go?”

Jack smiled. “I agreed to help him. His name is Nardo Galante.”

Alex asked quizzically. “Nardo Galante? Seriously?”

Jack nodded. “Balding big guy in a brown suit from Chicago, likes Irish whiskey.”
Alex hissed. “Fuck. Galante...he’s someone’s fucking cousin or some shit. I had heard some of the families up in Chicago were trying to get a fucking foothold in Gotham. Guess they’re fucking tired of the shitshow there and are trying to branch out. Fuck, leave it to my dad to have some big time bozo going after him.”

Jack could hear Alex cursing under his breath before he spoke again. “Just be fucking careful Jack. This guy, Galante, has some mob ties too.”

Jack laughed putting his arm around Harley’s shoulders. “Alex, this is me--careful is my middle name.”

“Ha ha, you’re fucking funny,” Alex muttered.

Jack chuckled. “Look, I pass this information to Penguin. He’s the one who is going to take care of it. Instead of throwing the fight tomorrow like that fat bastard wants, I win. And I win big. After that, my part is done. You tell Frank to bet large on me, I’m going to make it worth his while.” Jack smiled sideways at Harley who had laid her head against his chest, wrapping her arms around his waist. “Besides, I have my own turf war to worry about; Penguin can clean up his own backyard. I agreed to get him the information, that’s as far as I’m going.”

Alex sighed. Jack could almost visualize his friend nodding. “Okay, just...be careful.”

Jack smiled and repeated. “I’m always careful.”

*

Across town in Gotham’s Diamond district, Tomaso Panessa stepped out of the taxi in front of The Gates apartment building. The building seemed to be reaching toward the heavens as Tomaso took a moment to look upward. Ben was standing beside him.

Ben frowned following Tomaso’s gaze. “You really think Falcone will help you?”

Tomaso’s expression turned murderous. “That old bitch better help me. I’m part of the Organization. Wayne’s attack on me is an attack on all of us.”

Ben frowned. He knew in the Court, it might be that way depending on your family’s lineage or your past service to the Court, but he wasn’t so sure that was how the mob worked. He elected to say nothing.

Tomaso turned to Ben. “How to I look?”

Tomaso had a bandage across his forehead, a dark purple bruise under one eye. He was wearing a black pinstripe suit, with white shirt and red tie, his thick hair styled. He looked every inch the crime boss, even with the injury.

Ben smiled. “You look good.”

Tomaso nodded walking to the door. They stopped at the doorman who stepped forward. “Names, who you are here to see?”

Tomaso frowned, but answered. “Tomaso Panessa and Ben Orchard.”

The doorman consulted his cell phone then nodded holding the door open for them. “Enjoy your visit.”
Tomaso sighed walking by the man hurriedly, his stride long and quick. Ben rushed to catch up.
“You still want to go with me to see Jack fight tomorrow?”

Tomaso didn’t spare a glance at Ben. “I want to go shoot him tomorrow.”

Ben pouted. “Tommy you promised. I mean, I know you're pissed, but you said…”

Tomaso waved off his whining. “Yes.”

Ben frowned, his brow furrowed, and then he smiled brightly. “I have an idea.”

As the two men walked onto the elevator, the man inside in uniform pressed a button without asking them which floor. Tomaso frowned looking over at Ben. “Idea?” he asked.

Ben grinned. “I’ll tell you later.”

*

The two men rode the elevator to the penthouse, the doors opening to a private hallway. Here there were two other men, both armed, waiting for them. Tomaso held his arms out, legs spread. Ben followed and the two men were quickly searched before the door to the penthouse was opened.

Walking inside, the men were greeted by white.

The penthouse apartment was huge, taking up the entire upper floor of The Gates apartment building. They were met on the inside by a young blond woman in a tight black pen skirt and white blouse, her hair pulled up into a neat, high ponytail. She smiled pleasantly at the two men.

“If you will follow me.”

Her black heels made a crisp click against the white tiled floor as she led them deeper into the living space. The main room had a window that comprised one entire wall showing Gotham spread out in a beautiful display of multicolored lights. Everything in the room, the couches, the chairs, the lamps, except the floors here and the few tables, were white. The wood was all a light polished shade of blonde. Lounging in one of the chairs sat Carmine “The Roman” Falcone.

Falcone was pushing close to sixty, but his white hair was still thick and wavy as it had been when he was a young man. He was dressed in black slacks, white shirt, the tie hanging loose around his neck, his black dress shoes polished until they reflected the light. He held a champagne glass in one hand, and a Gurkha Black Dragon cigar in the other hand, the rich, sweet smell of the tobacco filled the room as Carmine looked out onto the Gotham night.

The two men were shown to two white chairs across from Falcone. They sat and waited silently until The Roman acknowledge their presence.

Carmine sipped his drink before setting it down on his large, heavy wooden desk and turned to face the two men. He smiled as he took a hard drag on his cigar, blowing the smoke out through his nose and took a seat in his high backed, black leather chair. When he spoke, he had a barely perceptible old world accent, only slightly coloring the sound of his words.

“So, Tomaso, I heard you had a little problem with a building.”

Tomaso leaned forward, his hands clasped between his knees. “Yes, I know who did it too.”

Carmine smiled with a nod. “I heard it was that Red Hood gang.”
Tomaso nodded. “It was, sir. I’m here to ask for your help in taking care of them. They killed all my men, they killed family.”

Carmine leaned back in his chair watching the smoke rise from the lit tip of his cigar. He didn’t say anything for a very long time. Tomaso didn’t move, watching the older man with growing trepidation.

Falcone licked the side of his mouth, studying the cigar in his hand a moment longer before he spoke. He frowned taking another drag on the cigar, slowly blowing the smoke out after a couple of seconds.

“Tomaso…” Carmine chuckled. “You were the head of one of Gotham’s five families. You are the one responsible for their deaths. You want revenge, you are on your own because in the families’ eyes, you are no longer fit to sit at the table.”

Tomaso stood up. “You can’t!! I’ll give you anything you ask! This doesn’t just affect me, he attacked one of the five. You can’t just do nothing!”

Carmine narrowed his eyes. “This is the first time you’ve come to me for help Tomaso. Until now you have never called, never invited me or my wife over even though my wife is the godmother to your children and now, now you want me to fix your problem for you? You have done nothing but take take take from the families Tomaso. You have brought shame…” Here Carmine looked pointedly at Ben with eyes that had seen much. “Your private business has been seen by others. You have tried to take more than what is yours and now...now you want help.” Falcone laughed. “Maybe, just maybe this Red Hood deserves your seat now. He didn’t just hurt you...he took out your entire clan.”

Carmine picked up his empty glass. The young woman who had escorted them into the apartment seemed to appear out of nowhere to fill the glass.

Tomaso snarled. “You know who is leading that fucking Red Hood gang? Do you? Jack fucking Wayne! Jack Wayne!!! Bruce Wayne’s little fucking crazy brother, that’s who!!! I want him dead! Dead! Dead! Dead! I want JUSTICE!”

Ben frowned at Tomaso, his hands balling into fists.

Carmine laughed. “That makes what he did even better Tomaso. A Wayne you say...then perhaps he is the one I should be talking to and not you.” Carmine took a sip of his champagne before leaning back in his seat and putting the cigar back in his mouth.

“Leave Tomaso. You get your house in order, you come back, we’ll talk. You don’t, then I will be talking to Jack Wayne instead of you.” Carmine smiled with a slight lift of his white eyebrows.

Tomaso started to take a step toward the older man, his eyes flashing with hate, but before he could move more than one step, the young woman had a barrel of a Glock 26 against his temple. Falcone smiled.

“Goodbye Tomaso.”

*

Jack flexed his fingers, staring at the man he was to fight. The man was tall, blonde with the kind of look that would place him on a beach in California instead of on the streets of Gotham. Frank had said his name was Michael Valley. Jack was supposed to throw the fight for Galante. Jack glanced over at Penguin sitting on his little throne. He had T trope pass the message to Oswald about who was interfering with the fights. Penguin looked at Jack giving him a slight nod of approval. Jack frowned and turned away to exchange a glance with is wife as she stood on the very edge of the ring. She looked gorgeous tonight wearing a dress that was totally inappropriate for the weather, but that worked well within the confines of the fight club. It was a tight fitting lace, sleeveless mini dress with a high collar, but see-through top. She was wearing a lacy red bra underneath, and Jack knew for a fact she wasn’t wearing any panties and a pair of black over the knee boots. She had promised him sex in the back seat of the car on the way to the apartment. Jack licked his lips, gazing at her hungrily imagining his wife on his lap, the dress pushed up to her hips, wearing those boots while they fucked in the back seat. He wanted to end this fight fast and get to the back seat as quickly as possible. Harley smiled at him and winked. Jack grinned. Yeah, he was going to beat the shit out of this guy and get out of here.

An Elvis Presley song was playing loud enough that it was almost impossible to hear anyone speak when suddenly the music jerked and stopped. A young attractive man stepped out into the middle of the fight club’s ring.

He smiled, holding a bullhorn to his mouth. “Ladies and Gentlemen! Ready for tonight’s first fight?”

The crowd cheered loudly. The young man grinned. “All right! Our first fight tonight features the new favorite, JACK!!”

Jack stepped forward. He was topless, barefoot, wearing a pair of black jeans this evening. Harley had a hold of his dress shirt.

“And his challenger tonight--Michael!”

The crowd cheered again, if not as enthusiastically as they had for Jack.

Jack grinned as much to himself as to the crowd as he sauntered out to out to the middle to meet California as Jack was already mentally calling the other man.

Michael walked out to met him with a cocky grin. “Get ready to eat pavement.”

Michael was only slightly taller than Jack. The blond man tried to use that little bit of height, leaning over Jack and giving him a smug look. Jack smirked. California clearly knew he was going to get to win this fight, so he was deciding to be as big of an ass as possible. Won’t he be surprised, Jack thought.

Jack chuckled then, looking up at Michael. “Why don’t you back off there California? I’m into the ladies.”

Michael narrowed his eyes. “It’s Michael, you dumbass.”

Jack grinned. “Sure, whatever California, whiny little bitch. You know California...it looks like your face caught on fire and someone tried to put it out with a hammer. I bet your poor mother cried when she saw you.” Jack chuckled at his own joke grinning brightly at Michael before giving him a saucy wink.

Michael's eyes bugged, which brought another chuckle to Jack’s lips, getting the result he wanted when the blond swung at him. Jack easily dodged the swing, surprising Michael by simply dropping down and letting the swing fly over his head. Jack popped back up with a grin just before his fist snapped out to hit Michael across the face hard enough that his head snapped to the right; he stumbled backwards. Jack, wanting to end this fight as swiftly as possible, took a step after Michael.

The blond kept his feet under him as Jack came after him.
Michael swung at Jack, again trying to hit Jack in the face, but Jack leaned out of the way, then struck Michael until the chin with a quick jab, snapping the man’s head back. Michael took a handful of stumbling steps backwards, but he still didn’t go down.

He glared at Jack but Jack could see the confusion in the other man’s eyes.

Jack smirked. “Thought this was going to be an easy fight, did you?”

Michael pursed his lips, furrowing his brow; his lips were split and he was dribbling blood as he hissed. “You fucking queer piece of shit!”

He stepped forward and took several hard punches at Jack, who simply danced out of the way grinning the entire time. Jack rolled his eyes. “You know, you’re impossible to underestimate.” Jack shook his head smiling. “I can’t believe Galante wanted me to throw a fight to a whimpering sexist, homophobic baby like you. Killing you would be a mercy, but...lucky for you I have a hot wife waiting to fuck my brains out in the backseat of a car and I really want to get this fight over with, so…”

Michael took another swing, Jack easily blocked the two wild swings with his forearms before he kicked Micheal hard in the stomach, dropping the blond man to the floor.

The crowd was cheering wildly and someone had started to chant. “JACK! JACK!”

Harley was jumping up and down with Frost and Frank beside her yelling. “KICK HIS ASS PUDDIN!”

Jack waltzed over to Michael as he lay on the ground groaning. Jack grinned down at him. “Sorry buddy, you heard the lady, I have to kick your ass. But since you’re facing the wrong way I’ll settle for stomping your balls.”

With that, Jack brought his foot up, then swiftly down, hard on Michael’s crotch. The man screamed, the sound high pitched enough that it could have almost broken glass.

The crowd gave a collective cringe.

Harley squealed and laughed. “That’s my puddin!!!”

Jack, smirking, waltzed over to his wife who was hopping up and down with glee. Jack grabbed her, swinging her into his arms and kissed her. The crowd was going crazy with cheers, while some of Galante’s men who were there to watch the match all looked horrified, no one wanting to tell their boss what had just happened.

Jack pulled away from her mouth and whispered to her in a soft warm voice that Harley could hear over the crowd. “Let’s go home.”

*

Frank had stayed behind to collect his winnings and to see if he could get lucky with the bartender. He had yanked Jack down into a hug with a smile. “Thanks man.”

Jack blushed hugging the much smaller man back. “It’s okay.”

Frank grinned. “You two have a good night. I’ll call Alex in a bit, let him know just how massive your win was...HA!”
Jack laughed. “Night Frank!”

Jack, his arm around Harley, walked out into the crisp Gotham air with a sigh. “Mm...now the ride home I’ve been looking forward to.”

Harley giggled.

Frost frowned then grimaced a little as he walked behind Jack and Harley knowing he was probably going to be having an interesting car trip when a group of six men swarmed out of the shadows like insects. Frost turned, tossing his coat back to pull out his weapon. A shot was fired at the same instant that the men came rushing toward their small group. Jack turned at the sound, the sharp crack of gunfire coming from behind him. Jack thrust Harley protectively behind him as they both turned just as Frost went down, hitting the pavement in a spray of blood.

Jack yelled. “FROST!”

Harley screamed. “FROST!”

Harley started to move toward their downed friend; Jack held a protective arm out to keep her from moving, but one of the attackers grabbed Harley by her hair, ripping her away from Jack. Jack’s reaction was swift as he turned, a snarl on his lips.

The man yanked Harley backwards bringing his gun around to place against her throat while his grip in her hair brought tears to her eyes, though she reacted by dropping her weight to break his hold on her hair.

Jack lunged, ignoring the weapon in the man’s hand as he slammed a fist into the man holding Harley. The vicious strike along with Harley’s simple maneuver caused the man to lose his grip on her.

The four other attackers grabbed Jack, hauling him backward by his arms, all of them struggling to secure him. Jack snarled, fighting with all his might. He freed one arm and slammed his elbow backward and up, breaking the nose of one man. One of them was yelling.

“Get the chloroform GODDAMNIT!! Get it over his face now!!”

Jack twisted, brought a foot up and slammed it down, the heel of his shoe catching one of the men in the arch and breaking his foot. Somehow that man kept a hold of Jack while another stepped back, pulling a bottle from his jacket.

Harley had turned on the man who had yanked her back by her hair; his lip and nose were bleeding from Jack’s assault, but as soon as Harley turned, her fingers bent, ready to claw his eyes out; the man brought his weapon up and shot.

Jack stopped his struggling when he saw Harley jerk backward as a bullet ripped through her in a shower of blood.

Jack stilled in a moment of shock. His heart seemed to stop beating, his eyes widening as he saw Harley go down and hit the snow dusted pavement. Her head bounced, a pool of blood forming under her...and she laid still. For a moment, the world stopped, all color drained away from everything, the only color was Harley and the deep crimson of her blood. Jack felt something slip away from him, the grasp he had on whatever it was, simply let go when he saw her fall, the lights of Gotham shining down on her still, bloody figure.

The world came rushing back, as if the bubble had popped and reality came rushing in to fill the
He screamed as tears sprang to the corners of his eyes as he cried out her name, mixed with an incoherent sound of his soul tearing. “HARLEY!”

It was enough time for the man with the chloroform to race up behind Jack, throwing an arm awkwardly over his fellow kidnappers to grab Jack by the face, covering his mouth and nose forcing him to breathe in the fumes.

Jack blinked in confusion, but he began to struggle too late. Jack fought, but he had breathed the drug in with his sobbing and rage. He stared at his wife’s figure, lying on the pavement, the image swimming for a moment until the red of her blood washed out everything, and within seconds Jack sagged and fell into unconsciousness.

The men quickly lifted him up and carried him to a car they had waiting, stopping to tie his arms behind his back and bind his ankles before putting him in the trunk of their car, a black Mazda Sedan.

In seconds they were gone, leaving two bodies in the alley.
Revenge

Jack stood at the opening to a dark alley. The only illumination was provided by a flickering street lamp near the entrance and behind him, casting his shadow, long and thin before him. The light flashed and winked; a dull electrical sound filled his ears as the light caused the shadow to dance along the pavement. His heart was slamming inside his chest, his palms were sweaty, his stomach turned, and his blood ran like ice through his veins.

He knew this place.

This was the place where his parents died, the alley where everything ended, where everything changed so terribly for him and Bruce. As soon as the memory asserted itself in his mind, Jack saw them, his parents, standing at the other end of the alley smiling at him dressed as they had been the night they died.

Jack’s mother dropped into a crouch. She was dressed liked he remembered her. Her hair done just so, the color of her dress...the red of her lips, everything as he remembered. He could see the light playing off the pearls on her neck...the bloodstained pearls, the pearls he had watched fall and dance over the pavement. She smiled at him, her red lips spreading across her face, but he could see the blood staining her lips even darker. Jack reached up and touched his own mouth remembering Harley, her smile, the press of her lips against his mouth, the way she would delicately spread the red lipstick across his lips...her light blue eyes looking up to meet his gaze and smile...the way she smiled...

“Come here Jackie, come to mama.” His mother’s voice was soft, melodic, she held her arms out to him smiling, inviting. The urge to run into her embrace was strong enough that he took a step forward. He heard the sound of his shoe scraping over the pavement when he moved. He wanted to run to her, to wrap his arms around her neck, to be enveloped in the warmth, the scent of his mother, to feel safe like he had when he was a child. He had never felt safe like that since...until he met Harley. When Harley held him, Jack felt safe...loved. Harley was his safe place...his center...Thinking of Harley hurt more than thinking about his long-dead mother...

“Come on Jackie.”

Jack’s eyes turned to his father who was smiling at him, his held hand out to him while his other hand rested on his wife’s shoulder. “Come on son; don’t keep us waiting.”

Jack took another step forward. He felt pulled toward them, compelled to move, to walk toward that need to have his parents back; to feel that innocence, that safety, that assurance that everything would be all right. But before he moved further than the first step, he heard his brother’s voice.

“Jack. Stop living in a fantasy and look...they are dead. You need to just accept it. Stop being so damn emotional.”

Jack blinked and then he saw two things. First, his brother--not the little boy that Bruce had been when their parents had been murdered--but Bruce as he was now, in an expensive dark suit, his blue eyes hard and cold, dark hair perfectly combed and styled.

He glared at his brother. “You need to toughen up Jack. No one is going to save you. All safety...love, it’s all just some dark, grimy illusion. No one will love you and even if they do...they leave or you drive them away. It’s just part of being a Wayne.”
Jack’s eyes turned from his brother, back to their parents. He saw that the blood he had glimpsed earlier wasn’t just on his mother’s pearls and teeth; her face was covered in it, blood dripping down to drip off her chin, smearing her makeup as it oozed a trail over his mother’s smile. Then Jack saw the bloody hole in her neck...

Jack turned his attention to his father, his eyes wide as the horror and fear of that night came rushing toward him. Thomas Wayne was smiling, but his teeth were covered in blood and there was a bloody, ragged hole that had ripped through his cheek, destroying part of his face. He put his arm out to his youngest son. “Come on Jack.”

“No. You’re dead. You’re both dead.” Jack covered his face with his hands, angry at himself for the hitch of pain in his voice. His parents’ phantoms started to laugh. Tears that Jack couldn’t control started to fall down his cheeks. Jack opened his fingers to stare at his parents just as their images shimmered and melted; soon they were replaced by two new figures.

Harley and Frost.

Frost just smiled. “Hey Boss.”

Harley spoke softly and her smile made his heart beat even faster. Her voice was sweet and soothing as she held out her arms to him.

“Puddin. Jack.”

“Harley!” Jack’s voice finally broke completely as the memory of watching her being shot rushed to the forefront of his mind, the image of her dropping...the blood...Jack ran down the alley to her. She was laughing, her face bloody, her body covered in thick rivulets of red, but he didn’t care. Jack rushed into her arms, but instead of being greeted by the warmth and scent of his lover, he felt a deep chill from her body...the form of deep cold that spoke of the emptiness of the grave...death...loneliness...isolation.

Jack held her tighter, his voice breaking, tears easing down his cheeks.

“Harley.” He said her name with a deep ache in his voice.

She stroked his hair, kissing his cheek. Jack moved his mouth to hers, taking the icy chill of her lips. Harley whispered when their lips parted. “I came to say goodbye.”

Jack whispered. “No...no Harley. Don’t leave me...please...don’t leave me Harley. I love you. I can’t do any of this without you.”

He pulled back to look her in the face at the moment the light drained from her eyes, the blue fading to grey, all the color left her skin leaving only the red of her blood, but it too was quickly drying into black. She stared at him, her body going weak. Jack struggled to hold her up, to keep his grip on her, but she was falling, her weight dragging him down with her.

Jack was sobbing uncontrollably. “Harley...no Harley, not you...please...I can’t do this without you. Harley...oh god Harley I love you, don’t leave me...please...” But he knew it was too late...she was gone. He looked to Frost for help, his blue eyes bloodshot with pain and grief. He opened his mouth to plead for help, something he would never do for anyone but Harley.

“Frost! You have to help me!! We have to save her! I love her...God Frost...I love her...I can’t...” But as he looked to Frost, he saw that Frost was just a rotting corpse leaning against the side of the alley. His rotted body slid down the wall leaving blood and gore in its wake.
Jack’s eyes widened in horror. He turned back to Harley only to see she was gone...dead...

Jack pulled her cold corpse against him sobbing, crying so hard that he couldn’t breathe...just like the night his parents died. No...this was worse...this was his heart he was holding, the only person in all the world who loved him as he was...who needed him just as much as he needed her.

Jack held her body close to his and let his grief consume him until there was nothing left...

*

Panessa grinned viciously as he looked down at Jack Wayne. The man was tied up and laying on his side where Panessa’s men had dropped him when they brought him in. Panessa had them bring Wayne to one of his special “houses,” a place he would usually bring those who had displeased him. It was usually their last stop before Panessa put a bullet in their head. He stared down at Jack, his hands itching to put his hands around the unconscious man’s neck...to choke the life out of him with his bare hands, but he didn’t move. He had promised not to hurt Jack...much. Ben had only asked that Jack be left alive and Panessa had agreed. He had given Ben the requested funds to hire the men, but now that he had Jack Wayne in front of him, the urge to torture and kill him was so strong that he almost gave in...but Jack was off the board, just as Ben had promised. In exchange for that, Tomaso had promised not to kill him. Of course, Ben owed him big for this one, and Panessa had secured Ben’s assurance that he would take Jack out of Gotham.

Panessa smiled, kicked the unconscious man in the back hard enough that Jack rolled onto his face, but Jack didn’t respond. Ben had said keep him alive...he hadn’t requested any other conditions Tomaso told himself with a smile.

Tomaso kicked Jack again, but there was still no response. He frowned. “You didn’t kill him, did you?”

“No sir Mr. Panessa. We just used the chloroform like you said.”

Ben came rushing into the room. He had insisted on stopping at the apartment to change his clothing, dressing himself in his finest pair of navy blue slacks, white dress shirt and brown vest (minus tie). Tomaso could see that Ben had even taken the time to style his hair. Ben gasped when he saw Jack lying on the floor.

“Get him up! Get him in a chair!” Ben yelled frantically, his voice at least an octave higher than usual. The tone grated on Tomaso’s nerves.

The men frowned glancing at Panessa (since he was the one that was paying them). Tomaso gave a slight nod of his head and the men moved to lift up Jack, placing him in a chair that Ben had grabbed from the other side of the room, dragging it over for the men to set Jack’s unconscious body on. The hired men worked quickly to tie the unconscious Wayne up, moving his arms around the back of the chair and securing his ankles to the chair’s legs. Ben leaned over and lifted Jack’s head, examining his face. He smiled; Jack’s face was only mildly bruised.

He grinned as he caressed Jack’s features. “You’re finally mine.”

*

Harley’s eyes fluttered and a groan escaped her lips. She could feel the wound in her shoulder...it felt like a burn, like her skin was on fire, but after a minute or two that pain was replaced with a deep achiness. She started to move, but it was so hard. She felt light headed and it was an effort of will just to shift her body. She rolled onto her side groaning in pain, a pain that shot through her entire body starting at her shoulder, burning intensely. Her eyes started to water, but she kept trying to move. Her vision faltered as she opened her eyes; spots of black appearing in a circle around her eyes. She felt sick. She gasped, the pain taking her breath away and forcing her to lie still. As she tried to catch her breath, she heard Frost’s voice.

“Mrs. Wayne...Harley? That you?”

“Yes...I’m over here. What...what happened?” Harley groaned in pain, still lying on her side unable to move without the blackness threatening to overcome her. She laid there struggling to stay conscious when, in a flood of images, the events came rushing back to her...they took Jack! Harley gasped in pain and shock as she forced herself to her knees. Her right arm didn’t want to obey her, she couldn’t move it, and a sick coldness seemed to be creeping over her, threatening to yank her down into an abyss of black...where all the pain was gone.

“Can you move?” Harley asked. She couldn’t see Frost. She didn’t know if the street was that dark or if she was trying to pass out, but she could hear him.

“No...I...they shot me in the side...I can’t feel my legs.” Frost said softly, his voice eerily calm.

Harley ground her teeth, forcing herself to stay conscious as she struggled with finding her phone. Usually it would be in her purse if she brought one with her, but tonight she had slipped it into the pocket of her pants. She grunted with the effort, but withdrew the phone from her pocket. Every movement was like trying to pull her limb through thick, heavy molasses. Each gesture sent pain rushing through her, the wound in her shoulder seeping blood. She started to shake, tremors rapidly escalating until she was worried she would drop the phone; holding the device took on a whole new meaning as she focused all her will on holding the phone steady.

She dialed the first number she could think of, the first number that would bring them help.

*

Alex was sitting on the edge of the couch wearing a pair of worn jeans, the bottoms frayed, and an old t-shirt that read “I Paused My Game to Be Here” across the chest, his eyes glued to the huge 4k TV he had just purchased, his hand wrapped around a PS3 controller while he played a game of God of War. Alice sat on the couch next to him eating a bowl of ice cream, sitting cross legged in a pair of cupcake printed lounge pants and a pink t-shirt with two large cupcakes over where her breasts were, scooping ice cream into her mouth while she intently watched him play. Alice laughed making a face as Kratos tore the head off of Helios.

Alice winced. “Damn Alex. Tore that fuckers head right off!”

Alex grinned. “Kratos is a fucking angry man.”

That was when Alex's phone rang. Alex was smashing buttons with his one hand when he glanced over at his phone with a deep frown. “Hey hon, you mind?”

Alice smiled, set her bowl on the table next to the phone, and picked up his phone answering it on the fifth ring.

“Alex’s phone,” she answered with a grin.

“Alice?” Harley asked, her voice weak.

Alice frowned. “Harley? What’s wrong?”
“Someone took Jack…” Harley’s voice broke. “They took him…” Alice heard the sob in Harley’s voice. “Frost...Frost and me...we’ve been shot…”

“Oh my God. I’ll call an ambulance….” Alice started, but Harley cut her off. “NO...no...just...tell Alex to get the gang and get to the fight club...we need to go after them now!”

Alice frowned exchanging a glance with Alex and nodded. “All right Harley...All right.”

Alice could hear the continuing weakening of her friend’s voice which had now dropped to a whisper. “Just...make sure someone had...has a...first...first aid kit...okay?”

Harley sounded so weak, as if she were fading by the second.

“I will Harley. I promise,” Alice replied.

Harley nodded on her end and the movement drained her. On her end of the line, Alice heard Harley’s voice as just a breath, not even a whisper as she said softly. “Thank you.”

Then the line went dead.

Alex had stopped playing to stare at Alice the moment he realized something was wrong. He watched her face as she hung up.

“What’s going on?” he asked, but he already knew it was something bad.

All the color had drained from Alice’s face. “Someone took Jack. Harley and Frost have been shot.”

Alex stood. “What?”

“Oh Alex she didn’t sound good at all, but she doesn’t want an ambulance, she just wants you to get the gang and get to the fight club location,” Alice said softly.

Alex dropped his controller and turned to grab up the phone. He turned to Alice as she stood up and he started to tell her no, but she glared at him.

“I’m pregnant, not an invalid Alex. I’m coming to help. Now you go get whatever you need, I’m going to get the first aid kit out of the bathroom and I’m going to grab some of your lidocaine shots for her.” Alice glared daggers at him and Alex threw his hand in the air. “Okay, okay. Yeah, uh grab some of my Vicodin too.”

Alex hurried to the bedroom where he pulled open a drawer of the chest of drawers by the bedroom door. On top of some folded underwear sat a pair of brass knuckles.

Alex’s smile wasn’t humorous as he picked up the knuckles. Alex hadn’t gotten into a lot of fights since losing his arm, but he had gotten into a few...and he never lost a fight even if he was minus one arm. He slipped the brass knuckles into the pocket of his jeans before he dialed a number on his phone.

The phone on the other end picked up on the second ring.

“Jason.”

“Jason, Alex. Get the rest of the gang. We’re going to war.”

*
Jason, wearing a pair of tight black jeans and a red t-shirt—and looking handsome Roxy thought as she watched him—leaned over, lining up his shot on the pool table when his phone started to ring. He frowned, glancing at Roxy before he pulled the phone out of his pocket and saw that it was Alex calling. He frowned deeper still as he answered the phone. “Jason.”

Alex spoke in a grim, low tone. “Get the rest of the gang. We’re going to war.”

Jason went still, glancing across the table at Roxy who was sitting on the side sipping her beer. She was dressed in a pair of tight brown pants, knee-high boots and a top that was open down past her breastbone showing off her cleavage. Jason very much appreciated the look as did the two men they were trying to con. There were two men next to her, a blond and a brunette, both a couple of dirty looking men with too much attitude and not enough skills to backup the bravado.

Roxy hopped down, walking around the two men with a smile dragging a finger along their arms as she headed over to Jason. “What’s going on?”

Alex growled under his breath through the phone line. “Someone kidnapped Jack. Harley and Frost have been shot. I need you to get the gang and meet me on 14th street. We’ll head over to Harley and Frost from there. We need to hurry. Harley called, but Alice said she was fading fast.”

Jason hissed. “I’m on it. I know how to stitch up a bullet wound,” he said as he glanced again at Roxy.

Alex sighed. “Good, good. Get there as fast as you can.”

Jason nodded. “Will do.” He hung up and tossed his pool cue down motioning at Roxy. “Come on—we gotta go.”

The two men that Roxy and Jason had been playing against (Jason and Roxy had already won two hundred dollars off the two men and had been planning on taking the rest of their money) exchanged a look before one of them stepped forward to block them from heading to the bar’s door. “Fuck that, you ain’t going anywhere until we finish our game. We want a chance to win our money back.”

Jason growled. “Get the hell out of my way, ya fucking weak bitch.”

Roxy snorted on a laugh. The blond stepped forward and shoved Jason in the chest. “You wanna say that to my face boy?”

Jason smiled and stepped closer until his chest was touching the other man’s. He leaned in close and whispered. “You fucking weak ass bitch.”

The man snarled and shoved Jason back, cocking his arm back at the same time, clearly thinking he was going to strike Jason in the face. Jason moved swiftly, brought his left hand up to grab the man’s fist in his hand, wrapping his fingers painfully around the other man’s hand, at the same time Jason twisted his body to the side so that he could easily bring his free hand up, grabbing the blond around the back of his neck and shoving the man’s head forward and down. The man’s head slammed into the side of the pool table. Jason let go in the next second before taking a step back and letting the blond man fall to the floor.

The downed man’s friend decided to attack Roxy while his friend was messing with Jason. He rushed around her and wrapped his arms around Roxy, pinning her arms to her sides. Roxy yelled.

“Let go of me, you white trash freak!”
The man laughed and lifted her off her feet, but Roxy threw her head backwards with all her strength, the back of her head connecting with his nose with a sickening sound of crushed bone. The attack threw the man off balance which allowed Roxy to bring her weight forward. When she did, she brought the heel of the boots she was wearing down on the man’s instep with another sickening sound of bone cracking. The man yowled loudly letting her go as he hopped backwards. Roxy turned and shoved him into the pool table. His lower back hit the edge of the table and he went down, landing on the sticky barroom floor with his friend.

Jason walked over to the downed men. Roxy’s was groaning in pain while the one Jason had taken care of was lying on his side unconscious. Jason sniffed and pulled both men’s wallets out of their back pockets, took the rest of their money before throwing the wallets back onto the floor. He walked over to the bartender, tossing down some of the bills onto the counter.

“For our drinks,”

He said before he and Roxy walked out, the entire bar watching them.

*

Harley had no idea how long she and Frost lay in the alley. No one came through there but a couple of people from the fight club, who turned and walked the other way when they saw the two people in the alley, bleeding. Other than those two people, Harley and Frost were left alone in the dark. Frost had passed out at some point, and Harley, her head on his chest, was fading in and out of consciousness. She listened to Frost’s heartbeat which gave her comfort knowing he was still alive. She faded out, unable to remain conscious any longer.

She came to when she heard voices. At first they seemed far away, like they were coming from the far end of a tunnel. She frowned, the voices were pulling her back to consciousness and consciousness was full of pain...physical pain and the pain of loss. Someone had Jack...she had no idea who...but someone had taken him. She fought consciousness as the voices came closer. And then she heard a different voice. Not one of the voices outside of her, but a voice inside...her own voice. “Harley, get up. You are not going to let them win are you?”

Harley peered into the darkness to see herself. She was standing in a pool of light...dressed in her doctor’s uniform, red blouse, black skirt and tie, her white doctor’s coat with her name tag and those terrible black heels she used to wear. Her hair was pulled back in a bun and the fake glasses she liked to wear to make herself look smarter, were perched on the end of her nose.

Dr. Quinzel smiled. “Harley, come on. You’re better than this. You aren’t going to let them take our puddin are you?”

Harley sat up. She was dressed as she had been at the fight club, but her outfit was covered in blood. Harley whimpered softly. “Haven’t spoken to you in a while.”

Dr. Quinzel smiled. “No, you haven’t, but right now I’m here to help.”

“Help?” Harley asked.

“Yes help. Someone took our puddin. They took Jack and we have to get him back.” Dr. Quinzel pulled a chair out of the darkness and sat. “So you need to stop this and get out there and save him.”

Harley frowned. “I don’t know who took him.”

“Don’t you?” Dr. Quinzel asked. “You know exactly who took him.”
“Ben,” Harley said with a snarl. “And Panessa.”

Dr. Quinzel nodded. “See? Told you. Now stop this nonsense and get up. You have to go get him.”

Harley pushed herself up off the ground. “You’re right. I...I can’t live without him.”

Dr. Quinzel smiled softly. “I know. We love him.”

Harley nodded. “More than life itself.”

Dr. Quinzel nodded with her. “More than our own life...you need to find him and you need to kill Ben once and for all Harley. You need to make him suffer.”

Harley narrowed her eyes. “I’ll make him suffer.”

Dr. Quinzel smiled. “Good, now wake up.”

*

“Harley!! Harley come on wake up!”

Harley could feel someone yanking her jacket off and the sound of fabric being ripped followed by pain. Whoever was yelling at her was also being damn rough she thought as her eyes flew open.

“Ow!! Shit!!” Harley yelped, her eyes flying open to see Jason on his knees next to her, his young face etched with concern and focus.

When he saw she was awake he gave her a grin. “Hey,” he said. “Now be still, I’m going to sew this up.”

Harley hissed in pain as Jason yanked a needle through her skin after having wiped something ice cold over it. “How is Frost?” she asked through her teeth trying not to react to the pain, but it was difficult; the wound and the needle pulling through her skin burned.

She heard Frost next to her grumble. “I’m awake--which sucks.”

Harley turned. She could see Frost sitting up against the wall of the building. Someone had bandaged him up, though she could see red seeping through the bandages. His skin looked pale and he was shivering. Alex was on his phone, squatting next to Frost and talking hurriedly with expletives littered even more often through his speech than usual. Harley started to open her mouth, the concern clear on her features, but Frost smiled at her raising a hand to hold off any worry on her part.

“I’m okay. Feeling came back to my legs...sorta wish it hadn’t because it hurts like a sonofabitch.”

Alex hung up, standing up at the same time. “Okay Alice, the doc is expecting you at his house in the next hour with Frost. You two going to be alright?”

Frost nodded. “Yeah, I’m good. Let’s go.”

Alice nodded. “Just help me get him in the car.”

Alex frowned at Harley who was watching them as Jason worked on her bullet wound.

“You should go with him,” Alex muttered.

Harley shook her head. “No. I’m going with you to get Jack back.”
Alex sighed. “I know. I mean, I knew you would say that. Everyone knew you would say that. Duela brought some food and some orange juice, it won’t help much--blood loss and all that--but hopefully it will get you through the night until we get Jack back.”

Frost, who was being helped to his feet by Duela and Roxy turned to Alex. “It was a black Mazda sedan. I know it ain’t much to go on, but I did get the plates…” ACX-7718.”

Alex blinked. “Damn, really?”

Frost grinned weakly. “Was a cop, remember?”

Alex grinned looking over at Trope who was standing near the SUV Alex had picked everyone up in, parked in front of the white Chevy Malibu that Alice drove in.

Alex asked. “You think that will help?”

Trope grinned. “Hell yeah.” She hopped back into the SUV grabbing her laptop and flipped it open, her fingers racing over the keys. Alex turned back to Harley.

“Trope says she can access the traffic cams, with the car’s make and plates, we should be able to find who took him.”

Harley narrowed her eyes. “I know who has him.”

Everyone looked inquisitively at Harley. She hissed, partly in pain, but mostly in mounting anger. “It was Ben.”

Alex frowned. “You sure?”

“Yes. Who else could it have been? Ben’s been after Jack for weeks now…and we know he’s with Panessa.”

Alex frowned and nodded. “Okay, Alice you and Frost get going. I’ll call you later.”

Alice hurried over while Duela and Roxy helped get Frost into the car. She grabbed Alex’s face between her hands and kissed him hard on the mouth. Alex wrapped his arm around her waist.

“You be careful,” she said to him.

She turned and hurried over to Harley, squatting down to put an arm carefully around her and kissed Harley’s cheek. “Be careful and get him back.”

Harley smiled. “I will. Thank you.”

Alice gave her a smile before she hurried over to her car. Frost was leaning back in the front seat, his eyes closed as she climbed into the driver’s seat.

Alice gave everyone a quick wave before she was backing the car out of the alley and heading off into the night to get Frost to the doctor.

Jason had shifted position with Harley leaning forward while he worked to stitch up the exit wound. “Sorry, this isn’t going to be pretty Mrs. Wayne,” Jason said softly. “It’s going to be a pretty nasty looking scar.”

Harley had pulled her knees up, leaning forward with her eyes closed. “It’s all right, Jason. Just…just hurry.”
Jason nodded. “Going as fast as I can.”

Trope leaned her head out from the car. “Hey, I found the car, heading toward the far west side. It looks like they were headed toward the meat-packing district.”

Alex frowned in thought. “Panessa owns a fucking meat packing plant over that way and a butcher shop…”

Jason finished up by using the lidocaine shots that Alice had brought as well, trying to be careful, but Harley was clearly in pain as he gave her several shots around the wound. He then handed her one of Alex’s pain pills before he helped Harley to stand as Alex frowned in thought before asking Trope. “Any idea where in the meatpacking district?”

She frowned, her fingers working over the keys. “I lost them near Washington St.”

Alex stepped over shooing Trope over as he moved to sit down beside her. “Can you look up Weichschel’s Beef Company?”

Jason helped Harley over to the SUV, opening the passenger door and helping her inside. Once she was seated, Duela came over, going around to the other side and opened the door to rummage around until she pulled out a plastic bag. She hurried over to Harley and withdrew a plastic bottle of orange juice and a package of cookies from the bag.

“I also have some bananas, coconut water and some mixed nuts.” Duela smiled.

Harley peeled the banana carefully, wishing the pain medication would hurry up while Duela took the juice and opened it for her. Harley gave her a grateful smile. “Thank you Duela,” she said before she popped the pill in her mouth and downed it with some of the juice.

Duela blushed. “No problem.”

Harley turned, eating her banana and sipping the juice. Turning hurt; heck any movement hurt she thought, but Harley turned around to face Alex and Trope. “Anything?”

Alex grinned. “We can’t be a hundred percent sure, but Panessa owns the Weichschel Beef Company. He also own Paisanos Butcher shop that is right down the street from the fucking company. It’s only a rumor that I’ve never been able to confirm, but supposedly Panessa uses that butcher shop as a place to...talk to people who’ve displeased him. I’m betting that’s where we want to go.”

Harley nodded, her blue eyes like ice. “Let’s go. And did anyone bring me a weapon?”

Duela perked up. “When I stopped at the store I also stopped in the hardware section and grabbed you this…”

Duela went to the back of the SUV, opened the back before hurrying back to the front carrying a long handled, ten pound sledgehammer.

Alex frowned. “You think you should be lifting that?”

Harley grinned with narrowed eyes. “Yeah...I do.” Her eyes danced as she held the hammer and smiled brightly at Duela. “Thank you again.”

Duela grinned pleased with herself.
Alex hopped out, took a deep breath. “All right gang, everyone in. Let’s go take care of fucking Panessa once and for all and get Jack back.”

*

Jack came to slowly. Every part of him ached, but especially his side which, judging from the feel of it, was bruised badly. As consciousness forced him awake, Jack had to fight the urge to scream, to roar in pain...Harley...the image of Harley came rushing back to him. The image of her falling...the blood. He hadn’t been sure, didn’t know if she was dead or not. He had passed out from the drug before he had known, but he would see that image of her falling, the spray of blood as his wife was shot...Jack bit down hard on the inside of his cheek trying to prevent himself from crying out his rage and pain. He forced himself to steady his breath, to breathe. He focused on his situation. His arms were bound behind his back over the top of the wooden chair that hit him around the middle of his back, and with what felt like zip ties around his wrists, and ties around each ankle binding him to the wooden chair. He had tape over his mouth; judging by the feel it was duct tape. The next thing he focused his attention on was where he was...it was cold, but not the cold that came with the outside, there were no open windows because he couldn’t hear traffic or a breeze.

Next he was aware of the smell, blood...the raw, metallic scent (which Jack noted meant that there had to be a lot of blood present for there to even be a scent) of fresh blood combined with the scent of rot, musty old blood scent mixed with a raw meaty smell of...well...raw meat. Jack frowned...he had to been in a butcher’s place. There were other possible explanations of where he could be, but a butcher seemed to be more likely. All of these scents were combined with the scent of cigarette smoke that drifted just on the surface of the other scents. Keeping his eyes closed, Jack listened. He could hear talking...seven, maybe eight men were in the room and they were discussing money. He couldn’t quite pick up what they were saying, his head still felt heavy and his hearing was muffled like he had cotton in his ears. He thought he heard three sets of footsteps leave the room after a few minutes. As he focused on the voices, Jack picked out Panessa, that slight accent the man had that caused his words to have a slight “aw” sound to his “o’s” gave Panessa away, but then he also picked out Ben’s voice. Ben’s voice was pitched higher and there was a quality to it that made Jack’s skin crawl.

Jack ground his teeth, tensing his jaw in anger. He again had to remind himself to breathe normally.

Jack’s nose twitched; he could smell the scent of cigarette smoke becoming stronger and the sound of footsteps coming closer...Dunhill cigarettes, expensive, a luxury cigarette...he could detect the scent of the tobacco, high quality...Jack wanted to smirk, Panessa.

Tomaso smarled. “I know you’re conscious. I can tell by your breathing.”

Jack raised his head, his blue eyes looking straight at Tomaso and while the tape hid Jack’s smirk from view, his eyes were not hidden, the blue clearly communicating Jack’s amusement at Tomaso. (Jack also realized as he raised his head, that he was correct; he was in a butcher shop. There were lines of meat hooks hanging in rows above him and beside him. Most had nothing on them, but some did have sides of raw, bloody beef hanging on them. Jack could see the puffs of breath from his nostrils and there was blood...a lot of blood on the floors.)

Tomaso snarled again. “You killed my family. You killed them all.”

He moved fast, surprising Jack with his speed as he lashed out, backhanding Jack across the face with a hard, sharp smack that whipped Jack’s head to the side. Jack winced. The rings on Tomaso’s hand cut into his cheek, the slap hard enough that Jack’s nose started to bleed.

Ben made a sound of protest and came rushing over. “Tomaso!!”
Tomaso spun to face Ben, his eyes burning with hatred. “Look Ben, I said you could have him, alive and I meant it. But if you think you are going to waltz out of here with your toy without Jack Wayne paying for what he did, then you are fucking wrong. I am going to beat the living shit out of him. Then and only then can you have him.”

Panessa’s smile was vicious. “You’re lucky I’m letting you have him Ben. If he ever comes back to Gotham, he’s dead. If you come back to Gotham, you’re dead. We’re through Ben. I don’t want to see you or hear from you.”

Ben frowned, but nodded his agreement.

Tomaso turned back to Jack. He firmly put his hands on Jack’s shoulders as he leaned close enough that their noses were almost touching. “I’m going to beat you bad Jack. I’m going to hurt you. Then, I’m going to kill that brother of yours...when I’m finished with him, I’m going to hunt down every member of your gang, one by one, and I’m going to kill them. Oh, not slowly. I’m going to take my time with each of them, find something special for each of those lowlife thugs. And you know what? If that bitch wife of yours is still alive. I’m going to find her and then I’m going to have some fun...make her scream in a whole new way before I give her over to the men I hired...let them show her a good time too.” Tomaso looked thoughtful for a moment. “I might actually keep her alive...just keep her in a little room where I can come down and play with her...over and over and over again, fuck her any way I want...give her to anyone I want, until she is begging only me to come fuck her.” Tomaso’s smile widened.

Jack snarled. He jerked and struggled, the rage in his eyes was like a living thing that needed to lash out like a lightning strike, but he couldn’t move, couldn’t break free.

Tomaso laughed before he turned to Ben.

“Go give your toy a kiss Ben, before I start beating on him.”

Ben smiled as he walked over to Jack. Jack glared at him hatefully as Ben straddled Jack’s lap, wrapping his arms around his shoulders. Ben played with the fine hairs on the back of Jack’s neck, his fingers caressing slowly. Jack wanted to thrash, to explode into violence, but he forced himself to remain still. He wasn’t going to give Ben or Tomaso the satisfaction of seeing him struggle.

Ben’s touch made Jack want to break every finger on the other man’s hand, to tear Ben’s lips off with his teeth and slowly push his eyes into his skull with his thumbs until they popped like grapes. Jack’s eyes nearly glazed with the hatred he was feeling, but he smiled behind the tape as he imagined not him doing those things to Ben...but Harley. Jack imagined Harley with flecks of blood on her creamy skin, the image of her stripping out of her clothing, standing naked, waiting for him. Jack closed his eyes against the pain in his chest...maybe she was alive...No...not maybe, she had to be alive.

Ben turned Jack’s face up to his, caressing Jack’s jaw with his fingertips. “When we leave Gotham together, I promise Jack, I’ll make you so very happy. We will go someplace the Owls can’t find us.” Ben sighed happily, his eyes wandering over Jack’s face. He shifted a little, grinding his hips against Jack’s pressing himself closer, his mouth close to Jack’s taped lips.

“I’m sorry that Tomaso has to beat on you, but you have to understand, he is very angry,” Ben cooed softly. He leaned in close, his lips brushing the tape over Jack’s mouth. “But I promise, when we leave Gotham, I’ll take very good care of you. It won’t take you long to forget about that woman. I’ll make sure of it.”
Ben cupped Jack’s face between his hands his thumbs caressing Jack’s cheeks as he stared into Jack’s blue eyes. “Before you know it, you’ll be happy to be with me,” Ben murmured, his eyes wandering lustfully over Jack’s face as he dragged his fingers down Jack’s throat then to the buttons of the shirt that Jack wore. He sat back, unbuttoning a few of the buttons so he could run his fingers along Jack’s chest before he dipped down and licked Jack’s chest. He grinned coming back up to face Jack again with a wide smile.

“You really are gorgeous,” Ben whispered before he pressed his lips against the tape that covered Jack’s mouth.

Jack snarled behind the tape. He didn’t respond in any other way to Ben’s declaration and physical assault. Instead Jack shut himself down, his muscles rigid, turning himself into a marble statue. Jack wouldn’t give Ben the satisfaction of responding to his advances.

Ben frowned when he pulled back from Jack’s mouth, surprised that Jack hadn’t reciprocated his advances at all (despite being tied up). Ben hissed reaching down between them to try something else, his hand caressing Jack’s groin while he continued to press his mouth to Jack’s, his hand between them trying to elicit some sort of response from Jack. Ben started to grow frustrated when nothing happened.

Panessa rolled his eyes walking over and grabbing Ben by the collar of his shirt hauling him off of Jack. “All right Ben, that’s enough. You can play with your toy later, after I’m done beating the shit out of him.”

Ben stumbled off of Jack’s lap when Tomaso yanked him back, glaring at Jack the whole time. Ben hissed in anger. “You will want me you know? You will.”

If Jack could have spat at him...or worse, he would, but he settled for just glaring hatefully at Ben.

Panessa shoved Ben out of the way moving to stand in front of Jack.

“How, let’s get started shall we?”

Jack narrowed his eyes at Tomaso, but even with the tape over his mouth, Tomaso could see the smile on Jack’s lips.

Tomasco hissed. “I’m going to make this hurt.”

He drew his arm back punched Jack in the face.

*

Trope was yelling out directions to Alex as they raced through Gotham’s streets to the meatpacking district. She was doing a little bit of hacking, having insinuated herself into the Gotham traffic system and was doing her best to change all the lights as their SUV came to them.

“Okay, okay, now turn left on 11th avenue!” Trope yelled as her fingers flew over the keys.

Alex swung the wheel with his one hand causing the loaded down SUV to tip slightly as he spun around the corner and yelled. “I see it! Paisanos Butcher shop!! On the left!!”

Alex slowed down, trying to drive nonchalantly. Harley leaned forward to look out the window. There was the Mazda that Frost had described with the matching license plate.

“It’s them,” she hissed.
Alex turned, driving the SUV down the alley of an empty office building next to the butcher. Everyone rolled out of the SUV, each person checking the weapons they brought with them. Alex pulled his brass knuckles out, sliding them over his one hand. Duela had her own clawed hammer which she had grabbed when she bought the sledgehammer for Harley, Jason had a pistol with him, a Glock 17 with a sound suppressor of his own design, and a set of brass knuckles, while Roxy had a taser, but she also grabbed the tire iron from the back of the SUV. Trope, who wasn’t really a fighter, also had taser, but she had also brought along several cans of pepper spray that she always kept in her bag.

Alex looked over their small group and frowned. “Not really well armed for this,” he muttered.

Harley looked better, but Alex was well aware that she was running on pure adrenaline, drugs and rage. She lifted her sledgehammer up, laying it on her undamaged shoulder as she looked at everyone.

She smiled at Jason as he pulled his pistol out. “Put that away, we need to do this quietly. Only use it as a last resort. Even with a suppressor, it makes some noise.”

Jason frowned with a slight nod. “You sure?”

She nodded. “Guns will bring the police and we don’t want the police, or Batman getting involved. Shooting will get both involved.”

Jason seemed to consider this and shrugged, re-holstering his weapon and pulling out a second set of brass knuckles from the front pocket of his jeans. Alex smirked at him and Jason shrugged.

“Always be prepared man.”

Harley took a breath. She felt unsteady, her knees were wobbly and her stomach queasy from the blood loss, the pain, and the drugs, but she was also feeling murderous and that alone was keeping her on her feet. They took her puddin—she was not going to let that stand.

She swallowed, took a breath, and closed her eyes for a moment as she put a hand on the SUV to steady herself. Alex frowned, watching her in worry. “You sure you don’t want to stay here, let us handle this?” he asked.

Harley shook her head. “No. I’m going in there to get my puddin back and nothing is going to stop me,” she said with a growl in her voice. “Just...give me a minute.”

Alex frowned with deep concern, but he nodded. Harley took a steadying breath then snarled.

“All right, let’s go get Jack. Kill everyone, but leave Ben and Panessa for me.”

The gang members nodded and headed down the sidewalk toward the butcher shop.

*

The streets were quiet on this end of town. There was virtually no traffic as the six of them made their way down the street to the butcher shop. Any other time Harley would have found the shop quaint. An old fashioned wooden sign hung out front with the name painted across it in bold green lettering. A picture window allowed passersby and patrons to look inside the shop which had a counter and long rows of cold cases and shelves for displaying their products. The shop had a definite old fashioned “mom and pop” feel to it. A nice place to shop probably, despite its connection to the Panessa family and from there the much larger underworld of Gotham’s mob families.
Harley pressed her back against the wall and leaned over to peer into the shop’s picture window. The front room was dark, but she could see a light was on at the back of the store. She watched for a few moments until she finally saw movement. It looked to be three men there standing guard.

She turned back to the others. “Okay, there are three men just inside the shop.”

Jason frowned. “So, how are we going to do this? I mean, we could go through the front door I suppose. It’s probably got a bell…”

Harley smiled. “We are going to go in and ask politely. Trope, you stay here, I just need Roxy and Duela.”

Trope shrugged. “Sure thing Mrs. Red Hood.”

Harley chuckled and walked to the shop’s door. Duela frowned, moving briskly to catch up with Harley. “How will we know what to do?”

Harley’s smile was bright. “Just follow my lead ladies.”

*

The three hired thugs, Ron, George and Calvin, were all smoking and waiting to be paid. They all knew Tomaso Panessa was good for it, but this job was taking too long…and as Ron had been grumbling all night, stupid.

“We should never take on mob work,” he muttered for the fifth time that night.

George took a long drag on his cigarette, exhaling a breath of smoke. “Will you shut up?”

“I don’t like working mob jobs okay. All that vendetta shit…it’s bad news,” Ron muttered. “I mean…all this just to beat the shit out of one guy…” Ron shook his head.

Calvin grinned. “I heard that guy we took him for though—he killed all of Panessa’s men…like all of them. You guys heard about that building going down the other day?”

George frowned then nodded. “Oh yeah, I heard about that.”

Calvin grinned. “Yeah, well I heard it was that man in there. He is supposedly the leader of that Red Hood gang that held up fashion week on opening night.”

Ron’s eyes grew in size. “Fuck, really?”

Calvin nodded. “Really.”

“Man, no wonder Panessa wants him but what about that other guy…Ben?” George asked.

Calvin shrugged. “No idea, but he was looking at that guy like he wanted to eat him.”

Ron frowned. “Nope. I don’t like any of this. I just want to get our money and get out of here.”

That was the moment that they all heard the small bell at the front of the store chime merrily.

The three men exchanged a look, their hands going to their weapons as they turned to see three pretty women walking down the aisle toward them.

George grinned and whistled. “Wow.”
Harley, her sledgehammer over her uninjured shoulder, had taken off her bloody shirt wearing only her bra and jacket despite the cold, (both were bloody, but she was hoping the dim light of the shop would make the color look black instead of like blood...but she figured breasts out...these bozos wouldn’t notice.) Roxy, holding her pepper spray in one hand and the tire iron in the other, was dressed as she had been at the bar earlier and Duela was wearing a pair of striped leggings in purple and black with a short purple skirt and a grungy black t-shirt with an old bomber style jacket. She had ditched the jacket in the SUV and had rolled and tied her t-shirt off to show her stomach while she was carrying her hammer loosely in her hand at her side.

If the guards noticed the weapons, they didn’t seem to be worried as George and Calvin grinned watching them ladies walk toward them. Only Ron was on alert. He didn’t like anything about this job...anything at all.

Harley stepped forward. “Hey boys. We’re looking for Tomaso, is he here?”

She cocked her hip to the side smiling broadly. George grinned back at her walking closer.

“Hey pretty lady, yeah...he’s here, in the back, but...you know maybe I can help you with something. Pretty thing like you would be a waste on Tomaso...I mean...I don’t think he could appreciate someone as lovely as you.”

Harley giggled putting her fingers up to her lips, the tip of her tongue coming out slowly to lick her finger. She thickened her accent as she murmured. “Well ain’t you just sweet.”

Ron, trying to be the voice of reason stepped forward. “What’s with the hammers...and the tire iron?”

Harley giggled. “Tomaso likes it a little rough...you know.” She waggled her eyebrows suggestively which had George and Calvin chuckling as Harley continued. “You know, he’s one of those guys who likes to be...dominated.” Harley dragged her finger across her bottom lip. “He likes to have someone kick him in the balls...that sort of thing.”

George elbowed Calvin before he said. “So Tomaso likes to be submissive, eh?”

Harley stepped closer dropping her voice to a low seductive whisper. “Don’t all men?”

George and Calvin shared another chuckle. George reached out to place his fingers in the middle of Harley’s chest. “Well, we can let you go back there, but I’m afraid we’re going to have to do a little search before we can let you go on back.”

Ron was shaking his head. With what was going on in the back, he didn’t think the mob boss having his floozies show up seemed square. Then again, what did he know? It was Gotham.

Harley glanced down at George’s fingers. “Okay.”

She moved so fast that none of the men realized what was happening until she had taken a step back, the sledgehammer coming off her shoulder at the same time as she grabbed the handle with her other hand, the pain from her wound only a distant thought as she swung the hammer off her shoulder. Her hand slid up the long handle just before she shoved the metal head into George’s crotch.

The man didn’t have time to let out a cry of pain. The instant she hit him in the groin with the head of her sledgehammer, she brought the heavy weapon up, caught him under the chin with a solid sounding “thunk” accompanied by the crunching sound of breaking bone as her strike shattered George’s jaw. She grabbed the sledgehammer, one hand low on the handle, the other hand holding it just under the metal head and swung; she hit him in the shoulder, shattering the bone. George dropped to his knees in a gurgle of pain. Harley grabbed him, her rage taking over as she yanked him by his hair forward with one hand, letting the weight of the sledgehammer slide through her hand until she was holding it a few inches under the metal head. Maintaining a grip on his hair and holding the hammer with one hand, her anger and adrenaline gave her the strength to slam the hammer’s large head into the middle of his back with three vicious strikes, breaking his spine. Only then did she drop him, releasing his hair and taking a step back. Duela and Roxy moved at the same time that Harley made her first attack, Duela going straight for Ron while Roxy brought her can of pepper spray up and unloaded a stream into Calvin’s eyes.

The man started to yell in surprise and pain, but Roxy did a complete spin (performing a nearly perfect pirouette) which brought the tire iron around, striking Calvin across the face, shattering his nose and breaking off a few of his front teeth with the force of her blow. The man stumbled with a whimpering grunt and fell onto his side. He started to try to yank his gun out, but Roxy was on him before he could move, using her tire iron to break his arm before the next two swings beat the man’s head in.

Duela stopped in front of the man named Ron just as he yanked his pistol out of its holster. She moved faster, swinging her hammer low and to the side to catch Ron in the ribs. She struck him with enough force that three of the man’s ribs broke with the impact. Duela flipped the hammer in her hand, rolling it in her grip so that the claw side was up as she continued her swing. Duela brought the hammer up, embedding the claw part into the soft underside of Ron’s jaw, the hammer ripping through the tender flesh to pop through into his mouth, tearing through his tongue at the same time. Ron dropped his gun, reaching up to his face, his fingers fluttering uselessly. Duela gave a vicious grin before she yanked the hammer down and out, tearing away more of the man’s chin and jaw. Ron dropped to his knees gurgling, blood spilling out of his mouth, his eyes wild and wide as he stared at Duela. She smiled and flipped the hammer around in an overhead strike, slamming the hammer’s head into the top of his head, over and over again until Ron was only a twitching mess.

Harley turned around and smiled brightly when she saw all three guards down. She looked at Duela and Roxy like a proud mother. “Great job girls! I’m so proud of you!”

Roxy and Duela shared a smile. “Thank you Harley,” they said in unison.

Harley giggled with delight. “I feel like a mother hen!” she sighed with a smile. “Okay. Let’s make sure they’re dead. Duela, go get the others. Let’s get Jack back.”

* Jack raised his head up and grinned behind the tape on his mouth, his blue eyes dancing with merriment. That infernal grin hidden behind the duct tape that made Tomaso want to scream. The worst part was that he could tell that Jack Wayne was laughing behind that tape. It was muffled, but clear in his eyes as well as the way his body would shake each time Tomaso struck him, even as one of his eyes was starting to swell. Purple bruises were forming under his eyes, blood ran down his face from a cut to his cheek put there by Tomaso’s rings, another cut bleeding down Jack’s forehead, the blood and sweat slowly running into Jack’s eyes. More blood seeped from under the tape where his lips must have been split from one of the numerous strikes from the frustrated Tomaso. He growled in frustration.

The man had to be hurting! Tomaso had ripped open his shirt and punched him in the gut leaving cuts and bruises to Jack’s torso. The man was slowly turning into a bloody, bruised mess, but still Tomaso could see he was laughing at him! Jack kept grinning! Kept staring at him! Tomaso wanted to rip his eyes out, cut his lips from his face, but he couldn’t, he had promised Ben and he would keep his fucking promise. Or would he? Jack Wayne had caused so much grief to Tomaso.

Ben was sitting on a stool nearby with three of the men they had hired to get Jack Wayne. The other three were out front watching the place, not that Tomaso expected any trouble. Ben had brought a bottle of wine and some glasses with him. He was sitting on a stool by one of the metal cabinets in the freezer, his legs crossed, sipping his drink slowly and watching while Tomaso beat up his toy. Ben wasn’t happy about the beating, but he also saw it as an opportunity. The more damaged Jack Wayne was when they left together, the more he would need Ben...and then slowly Ben would get what he wanted from Jack, his devotion, his dependence and his love...until Ben became bored with him, though Ben swore to himself that this time was different, Jack Wayne was different. Ben shifted in his seat, watching Tomaso beat on Jack. It was exciting too, Ben realized...an added benefit. Ben smiled, with Jack beaten, he also couldn’t put up a fight and Ben could have his way...Jack really would like that, he just knew. Ben smiled, delighted with the path his thoughts had taken.

The other three men that had been hired for this job were watching the beating uncomfortably. The clear sexual tension in the air coming from the man sitting near them and the way the victim kept laughing...that whole situation was making them all uncomfortable. Ted, Butch and Dwayne were all frowning, watching the way that Panessa was laying into the man with a brutal beating that didn’t really seem fair.

Ted, a lean man with thinning hair, leaned over and whispered to Butch. “This job sucks man.”

Butch, who to Ted looked exactly how a man named Butch should look, overly muscled, crew cut and a square face, hissed back, his eyes rolling over to Ben. But the man didn’t seem to hear them, his full attention on the beating, a look of lust mixed with something else that made all three of them shiver uncomfortably.

“Shut the fuck up Ted. This is good money and it ain’t none of our business. Panessa says jump, we ask how high. Now keep your trap shut,” Butch muttered.

Dwayne, a tall slender man of mixed heritage, frowned and winced in sympathy each time Tomaso’s fist connected with the man tied to the chair. “So when we gonna get paid?” he asked wanting to get the hell out of there.

Their attention was on the beating in front of them, and not on the front of the store where their companions were supposedly standing guard, which was why they neither heard anything from the fight up front, nor the movement of the people coming in behind them.

A soft feminine voice whispered seductively behind them. “Hey boys.”

All three men turned just as Harley threw all her strength into her sledgehammer, using her entire body to swing it, striking the man closest to her, Dwayne. The hammer hit Dwayne in the jaw, snapping not just his head to the side, but the swing had enough power the impact twisted his entire body, made him to fall into Butch. Harley and her hammer kept going, the momentum of her swing continued. The three men had been standing too closely together so that as her hammer continued, the head of it nicked Butch across the chest just as the heavy metal head began a downward swing, continuing toward Ted. Harley’s swing brushed hard against Ted, the end of the hammer catching him along his groin as Harley and the sledgehammer were carried downward. Harley dropped the heavy head of the hammer onto the bridge of one of his feet, crushing the foot before the hammer slid off onto the floor with a resounding “thud.”

The wail and shouts that went up from the three men alerted Tomaso and Ben to trouble.

Ben yelped, getting to his feet so quickly that he sent the stool he had been sitting on flying backwards, the bottle of wine that had been sitting at his elbow was sent crashing to the floor taking the extra wine glass with it. As Ben leapt to his feet and dashed across the room toward Tomaso. He dropped his wine glass; it shattered when it hit the floor, tiny pieces burst and flew everywhere.
Harley grunted lifting the sledgehammer. Moving was becoming harder, more painful; the sledgehammer seemed to gain weight as the pain pills and shots began to wear off and the fact that she had been slinging a sledgehammer while wounded had started to take its toll on her physically. But she was angry still and that anger kept her going.

She knew they had to finish this soon, though—she only had so much left in her.

Harley yanked the hammer up, brought it over her head, her arms trembling with the effort, but she barely noticed, her eyes on the man she had first struck when she came into the room. Dwayne had turned onto his belly and was trying to crawl away. He was so consumed with pain he didn’t even think about his weapon which he had dropped to the floor. Harley stepped forward, her eyes almost mad with rage, brought the hammer down on the middle of the man’s back with a thick thud of heavy metal hitting flesh. Dwayne fell with a gasp. He turned, somehow finding the strength to turn to look at her, putting a hand up.

His voice garbled. “NO!”

Harley hissed. “Fuck you.”

She swung the hammer down on his head.

Jason had come in right beside Harley, his bronze knuckles ready as he leaped onto Butch. The man had staggered back when the sledgehammer had struck him, but Jason moved swiftly, not giving the man a chance to recover. Jason’s fist hit the man in the chest where Harley’s hammer had “nicked” him. Where the hammer had cracked the breastbone, Jason finished the job of breaking the bone with his brass knuckled right fist. Jason threw his left fist up, caught Butch under his jaw, snapping his head back. Jason rode the man down when Butch fell backward, sitting on Butch’s chest and started to pound the man’s face, breaking his nose, his teeth, his eye sockets. Jason bared his teeth, snarling as he continued, beating the man’s face it, blood, flesh and bone flying up to decorate Jason’s young face. No one hurt his friends, his family, and got away with it... Alex had come in next going after Ted who was screaming the loudest, his foot broken and Harley’s hammer having smashed his groin. Ted had doubled over which Alex took full advantage of, using his one arm, which was far stronger than one would have thought just by looking at Alex. His metal assisted punch to the back of Ted’s head flattened the man and quieted his screams instantly. Alex walked past the man (Alex had never killed anyone. It wasn’t that he had a code against it, more that he just didn’t see himself as a killer), but Roxy came up after Alex and used her tire iron to bash the man’s head in. Alex turned around, grimacing at the sight, but he didn’t say a word about Roxy killing the man.

As the gang came into the room Tomaso, who was shaking with rage, yelled. “ONE MORE STEP AND I SHOOT HIM IN THE HEAD!” He was standing with a pistol aimed at the side of Jack’s head.

Harley stalked more fully into the freezer, holding her bloody sledgehammer in her hands. “You better not lay another finger on my puddin,” Harley snarled.

Jack’s eyes lit up when he saw Harley. She looked part vengeful goddess wearing only her blood soaked bra and jacket. But Jack could also see underneath the anger, she didn’t look good either, pale, bloody, sweating, looking feverish; he noticed that there was a bandage around her shoulder that was blood soaked, but she was alive! He stared at her with something close to wonderment which quickly dissolved into a swell of pleasure and love. She was alive.

Harley, her face covered in blood, bone and flesh dripping from her sledgehammer, glared at Tomaso.
Ben made a sound. “Tomaso you promised!”

“Fuck that Ben and fuck you. The situation has changed.” Tomaso hissed loudly at Ben.

He turned his attention back to the Red Hood gang. “One more step and he’s dead.”

Jason had come over to stand by Harley, his own gun out and pointed at Tomaso.

Harley narrowed her eyes. “You shoot him, we kill you.”

Tomaso twitched, his eyes darting between all of them, his finger on the trigger was shaking slightly. “You...you are going to let us walk out of here...or I swear...I’ll kill him. We are going to drive away...or you get nothing except his brains splattered across the fucking floor you bitch.”

Ben looked panicked, his eyes darting between all of them, but ultimately landed on Harley.

Jack willed Harley to look at him.

Harley’s eyes darted to her husband. It was hard for her to see him like that, tied up, gagged, bloody and bruised. Her rage threatened to bubble over. Jack focused all his attention at her, their eyes meeting across the freezer. Jack stared hard at her before his eyes darted to the side at Tomaso and the gun. Harley frowned at her husband pressing her lips together in a thin line, adjusting her grip on the sledgehammer, but then she nodded, just the slightest movement of her head.

Tomaso snarled at Ben. “Get this fucker up. We’re leaving.”

Ben started to move, started to walk behind Tomaso toward Jack when Jack threw all his weight to the left, all his weight toward the gun and Tomaso. The chair tipped over to slam into Tomaso. Tomaso fired his weapon, his finger jerking on the gun, startled by Jack’s sudden action. The bullet ripped along skin, burning a line along Jack’s shoulder and across his chest, leaving a bleeding and burning trail behind as Jack fell over and slammed against the cement floor. Tomaso stumbled.

Jason reacted quickly. As soon as Jack moved, Jason fired his weapon, a round from his pistol slamming into the mobster’s knee cap, shattering it. Harley had started to move at the same instant that Jack flung himself sideways, her teeth bared in a semi-crazed grin as she rushed Tomaso. She shoved the head of her sledgehammer forward, catching the mobster high on his thigh with a hard thrust. He let out a yell and tried to bring his weapon around, but Harley, using both hands, thrust the head of the sledgehammer up, catching Tomaso under his jaw. The man stumbled and fell, his weapon falling and skittered across the floor disappearing into the room as he slipped and dropped to his hands and knees, in agony.

Ben yelped and started to run. Harley whipped around and screamed. “STOP HIM! DON’T KILL HIM! He’s mine…” she snarled as she turned back around to glare down at Tomaso. She looked like a vengeful angel, her hair shining in the dim light, blood slowly running in thick rivulets down from her shoulder, the bandaged turned completely red, thick drops of blood rolling down slowly over her pale, blood splattered skin as she held the sledgehammer with both hands, her blue eyes catching what little light there was and sparkling with menace.

“You took my puddin...no one takes my puddin.” Harley stepped closer to Tomaso, loomed over him. He was panting, his mouth dripping blood. He spat out a broken tooth and laughed.

“You think you can take my fucking place?! You’re nothing! Fucking Red Hood is nothing!” Tomaso screamed at her struggling to breathe, blood dripping freely from his mouth.

Roxy and Alex ran over to Jack, lifting him up. Alex removed the tape and Jack gasped for breath.
“Harley wait!” Jack growled.

She looked over at her husband just as Duella and Jason brought back a struggling Ben. “Let me go!! You can’t touch me!! The Owls will swoop down on you…” Ben was shouting as he fought to break free. Whatever training the Owls had given him had flown out the window as panic took over.

Harley hissed. “Shut him up.”

Jason grinned brightly. “Gladly,” he said and sucker punched Ben hard enough that he stunned the other man into silence.

Roxy and Alex worked swiftly to free Jack. He stood, wobbling a little as he got to his feet. Harley, seeing him bloody, beaten, but alive and standing, dropped her sledgehammer with a loud thunk and rushed to Jack.

Jack held his arms out wrapping them tight around her once she was against his chest and held her tightly.

“Harley…” Pain was laced through his whisper of her name. “I thought…” he said softly, unable to finish the statement.

Harley held on tightly, both of them ignoring the pain they were in. Harley leaned back to look into his eyes and smiled. “I love you.”

Jack reached up to gently grasp the sides of her throat before he kissed her.
Corpses and Recovery

On the other side of Gotham.

Alfred made his way to the kitchen dressed in his pajamas, housecoat and slippers—which made him feel ancient. He was moving slowly, using the stupid cane as he went. He knew he was being childish, but he still couldn’t help hating the cane. However, he was recovering quickly and knew the cane would be gone in a matter of weeks.

He slowly made his way to the kitchen thinking to make himself a cup of tea and maybe a sandwich. He should be in the batcave helping Bruce, but Bruce didn’t want the butler to stress himself and had refused to let Alfred help him except with minor things; though he had relented when Alfred had informed him that if he wasn’t given some task to at least challenge him mentally, then he would become a senile old man in a day. Bruce had given Alfred a hard look (clearly fighting with himself) before he had asked for Alfred’s help with the investigation into the destruction of that building a few days earlier, a rather spectacular collapse judging by the news broadcast Alfred had seen. The Gotham PD suspected the explosion to be mob related because the building was found to be owned by Tomaso Panessa, though Bruce was not convinced it was a mob hit. It was too outlandish, too visual, not traditional. The mobsters in Gotham were many things, but one of those was that the mob families of Gotham were a superstitious lot that were bound by tradition. No, Bruce was convinced there was a new player in town and he wanted more information.

Alfred arrived in the kitchen. He flicked on the light switch, his stomach growling loudly as he thought about what sort of sandwich he would make when his eyes landed on a white envelope placed in the middle of the main island counter. Alfred frowned, slightly confused. He reached over and picked up the envelope only to see his name written across the front in beautiful handwriting; neither Bruce’s nor Jack’s.

“Intriguing,” Alfred murmured.

He leaned his cane against the counter and pulled out one of the stools that sat around it, tucked under the metal surface. For a moment Alfred felt a tightening in his chest as his thoughts wandered to Master Jack and Harley. He missed them dearly, the sounds of their laughter, the two of them sharing breakfast at this counter while he cooked.

Alfred sighed. The manor had been so very quiet. Alfred shook himself and opened the envelope.

Inside was a folded piece of paper. He pulled it out and something fell from the inside and fluttered to the floor. Alfred frowned, easing down to pick it up. He turned it over to reveal a photograph. It was a picture of Talia and a little boy of no more than eight years of age. Alfred frowned staring at the image. The little boy had black hair and piercing blue eyes. Alfred frowned opening the note as he set the picture on the counter.

Dear Alfred,

I wanted to speak to Bruce about…the boy in the photograph, but it is clear to me that Bruce isn’t ready to hear what I have to say. I am sharing this with you Alfred because I need to tell someone and because there may come a day that Bruce will have no choice. For now, please do not share this secret with Bruce—he is not ready, nor is my son Damian. I know I ask a great deal of you, but please, hold my secret for now, for Damian’s sake as well as Bruce’s.

Sincerely,
Alfred stared at the note, then reached over and picked up the photograph again. Alfred held it up staring at the image of the young boy. Alfred pressed his lips together, his eyes burning, a single tear falling and slowly sliding down his cheek.

“Oh Master Bruce.”

Tomaso looked up from his position on the floor. He was on his knees with his arms behind his back taped at the wrists. Further binding him was more duct tape at his elbows and his ankles. He was having a difficult time staying on his knees; the leg with the bullet wound had gone numb from blood loss and the cold but a deep icy ache was moving up his torso. Putting pressure on his wounded leg by being forced to stay on his knees was excruciating.

Jack Wayne stood beside him, Tomaso’s own weapon aimed at his head. Jack glanced down at him and gave Tomaso a bloody grin.

“You know, I’ve never seen my wife this angry before...should be interesting.” Jack gave Tomaso a bright smile despite the blood and bruises on his face. It was clear he was enjoying himself.

Tomaso snarled. “You don’t scare me.”

Jack grinned and shrugged. “I’m not the one you should be scared of.”

He motioned with the gun toward Harley.

Ben was dangling from meat hooks in the cold locker. The hook had been jammed into the meat of his back, two hooks, one on each side to hold his weight. He was hanging with his arms duct taped behind him, his legs free, but his pants and underwear were gone.

Ben was shivering with shock, pain, and the cold. The adrenaline from fear wasn’t helping him to remain calm either. He looked down at Harley. She looked like a demoness, her torso covered in blood from her gunshot wound which had only just stopped bleeding freely. She was dressed only in her bra from the waist up, her skin was milk white, which made her blue eyes stand out brightly against her skin. Ben was shocked at just how beautiful she looked at this very moment.

Harley stood before him, calm and smiling. “Jason tells me that the way he hooked you is called a suicide suspension because you look like you hung yourself. Funny, eh?”

She grinned. “Did you know that people suspend themselves with hooks through their skin for fun? Interesting.”

Harley walked over to where she had laid several butcher knives. She had waited until Ben was conscious; he had passed out from being suspended. Fully awake now, Ben knew exactly what she was doing; it was a calculated, cold blooded move to terrify him...

She held up one of the knives. It was a ten inch long carbon steel blade, used for carving large sides of beef. She held the blade up, turing it this way and that, letting the light catch the blade. She glanced from the knife in her hand to Ben and smiled.
Ben glared back at her and echoed Tomaso. “You don’t scare me.”

Harley smiled sweetly. “That’s okay. It’s not like I need any information from you. I’m just going to kill you, but not before I hurt you, really, really bad.” She giggled.

Ben started to shift, glaring at her. “The Owls will kill you all!!”

Harley laughed. “Oh please. The Owls don’t scare me. My puddin…” Harley glanced over her shoulder at Jack. “My puddin is going to make sure the Owls know exactly where they stand in Gotham.” Harley blew Jack a kiss. The look he gave her in return had her blood running hot, her body fully alert despite the fact she was basically running on fumes. Alex had gone back to the SUV and brought her another vicodin. (Jack had refused a pain pill, but rather had insisted that Harley take one).

She smiled turning her full attention back to Ben. “Now…”

Her eyes met Ben’s. He stared back at her unable to look away as she stepped closer. “My puddin told me what you did to him, what you wanted from him. I’m going to show you what happens to anyone that touches him other than me.”

Ben’s eyes widened as Harley pressed to cold metal of the blade against his thigh.

* * *

Most of the Red Hood gang was still in the freezer room with Harley and Jack despite the chill that was settling into everyone’s bones. Alex was leaning against the wall near the entrance wishing he had a stiff drink, his eyebrows raised while he watched Harley talking to Ben, but then his face paled when Harley picked up one of the knives she had found and brought in here. His stomach flipped when Harley placed the knife she had picked up against Ben’s groin. He knew what was coming. He wasn’t really surprised, but the thought still made his stomach turn.

Alex was not squeamish. He had seen a lot of shit, but as the screams started and Harley pressed her knife against and into Ben’s flesh, he had to look away, especially when Ben’s blood curdling screams started to fill the room. The man jerked and thrust against the hooks in his back like a fish on the line, while Harley began to use the knife on him slowly, taking her time to make sure what she was doing was as painful as possible. But even with all his struggles, Ben was defenseless against Harley and she wasn’t being kind—not one bit.

Jason, who was standing nearby, frowned looking slightly...discomforted watching what was happening, but he didn’t look away. He studied Harley’s actions, a slow grin dancing across his lips as if, after the initial realization sunk in about what she was doing, Jason approved.

Roxy and Duela who were both leaning against the wall watching; both gagged, but then giggled. Roxy leaned over to Duela whispering in her ear. “Now that is nasty.”

Duela chuckled. “Yeah, is it me or does she seem to be going slow?”

The two women cringed and laughed.

Roxy giggled. “I was interested in Rocky Mountain oysters, but not any more.”

Both women burst out laughing.

The room continued to be filled with the sound of Ben’s screams, the sound of blood hitting the floor, followed by the juicy, wet sound of something soft falling to the floor with a “splosh” sound that seemed to echo through the room. Ben’s screams were reduced to shuddering, gasping breaths, his skin pale and a fine sweat having broken out over his skin despite the chill in the freezer.

Alex turned around and stepped outside the room thinking he should definitely go check on Trope who was out in the SUV on her computer.

During the entire process, Jack’s face did an almost comical routine of faces. When she was finished, Jack frowned leaning down to hiss conspiratorially to Tomaso. “I guess she was a lot angrier than I thought.”

Tomaso was staring at Ben. His bloodless face couldn’t hide his shock at what Harley had done to the man who had been his lover. It was worse than anything he had ever done in the course of running his section of the Gotham mob. For a moment Tomaso realized that these people, this Red Hood gang, Jack and Harley Wayne, were a whole new breed of bad guy, working within their own set of codes.

Harley, her hands bloody, dropped the knife onto the table with the others creating a loud clatter and turned to Jason. “Jason dear, can you help me with this?”

She stooped to pick up what looked like a handful of limp, pasty colored, bloody flesh from the floor, holding it in the palm of her hand, her lip curled in disgust.

Jason hurriedly came over. “Sure thing Mrs. Wayne.”

Harley smiled glancing up at Ben whose eyes were glazed, though he was amazingly still conscious. Shivering, Ben looked down at her in confusion as shock and a strange otherworldliness was settling in around him.

She sneered. “Put this in his mouth and duct tape it closed.” She smiled at Ben. “No one touches Jack but me. No. One.”

Jason took the mound of bloody flesh. “Should I leave his nose uncovered?”

Harley smiled at the younger man. “Sure thing, let him enjoy this as long as possible.”

Jason still needed a stool, but it was much easier and quicker for him to move a stool over and hop up on it (more so than for Harley who was quite a bit shorter) to stuff the bloody flesh in Ben’s mouth. Ben only half heartedly struggled, the blood loss and pain clearly making him weak as Jason forced his mouth open and shoved the bloody mess between his lips. Ben struggled weakly, making incoherent sounds as Jason shoved the bloody flesh deep into his mouth.

Jason hissed with a grin. “Reap what you sow, asshole.”

Jason wiped his hands on his jeans (thankful that he was wearing gloves even though they were now ruined) then used the duct tape he had tossed over his wrist and started wrapping long lengths of tape over Ben’s mouth and around the back of his head several times before using the knife Harley handed him to cut off the tape and jump down.

*

Jack was grinning watching his wife. He glanced down at Tomaso. “Still not scared?”

Tomaso looked back at him, the terror clear in his eyes.

Jack grinned and shuddered theatrically. “That was visceral wasn’t it? Gave me the willies.”
Jack chuckled and shivered, winking at Panessa.

Then suddenly everyone jumped as a gun shot rang out, the sharp sound echoing off the walls followed by the sharp scent of gunsmoke. Tomaso’s body fell over, a gunshot hole in the back of his head.

Jason blinked. “I thought you were going to...I don’t know...torture him.”

Jack shrugged. “I’m tired.” Jack smiled, handing Jason back his gun and walked over to Harley who was smiling up at Ben.

“You about ready poo?” he asked softly.

Harley didn’t answer him right away as she glared at Ben, but then she nodded. “Yeah. I’m ready.”

She walked close to Ben, picking up a knife off the table once more as she laid a hand on his bloody leg. She looked up and hissed. “You know Ben, you’re lucky. I have some medical training from when I was in school for my psychiatry degree, so I know just where to make you bleed.”

With that, Harley dug the blade along the soft flesh where thigh and groin connected, cutting fast and deep; the well sharpened blade of the knife made the cut easy. There was a spray of dark red blood, almost black as the liquid burst from the artery, spraying Harley in the face before she stepped back.

Ben jerked, then went still as the blood started to run full and quick from the wound, creating a large and ever expanding puddle of blood on the floor below his dangling feet.

Jack lifted his brow in surprise then grinned. “All right kiddies, let's wipe the place down and head home...I wiped. How about you babe?”

Harley nodded watching Ben bleed for a moment longer. The man was still staring at her with a look of befuddlement and bewilderment as if he couldn’t understand what had happened or how he had gotten here. She smiled at him before she nodded and turned to Jack. “Yeah, I’m ready puddin. I need a shower.”

Jack frowned. Harley’s voice sounded weak. He hurried over to her and grabbed her just as she turned and seemed to lose all strength, her body folding as her knees gave out. Jack wrapped his arms around her catching her and holding her close. “Let’s get you home pumpkin.”

Alex hurried over to help. “I’ll have the doctor meet us at the apartment you guys are staying at, all right?”

Jack nodded as he lifted Harley into his arms, his own injuries forgotten. “Good.” He chuckled to himself. “That man is making a mint off of us.”

Alex smirked. “Yes he is.”

*

With everyone working, the clean up didn’t take long until they had wiped the place down for fingerprints and any other evidence that would tie them to the scene, and soon they were on their way back. Alex called the doctor, received an update on Frost, who was doing well. Alice had driven him home. (Henderschott had said he would make a full recovery if given time to heal). Alex had also arranged for Dr. Henderschott to meet them at the apartment, the new place Jack and Harley would be stay for the next day or two until their amusement park was ready to move into for good.
Just before the gang was ready to leave, Jack called them all to him just inside the front of the butcher’s shop.

“I wanted to thank each and every one of you for coming to rescue me.” Jack smiled at each of them. He was holding Harley while he spoke. She was on her feet, but having trouble standing on her own, the rage and adrenaline that had fueled her for the last few hours was quickly ebbing. Her own stubbornness and Jack’s grip on her were the only things keeping her on her feet.

Trope, Roxy and Duela all blushed, but Jason spoke glancing at the women for support. “Thanks Boss. I think I speak for all of us when I say, we’d do anything for you and Mrs. Wayne. We are in this to the bitter end. You’ve done nothing but treat us right, so…” He looked down shyly. “I know for myself, ain’t never had a family, not one I can recall, no education, no friends, no one I could depend on, but being with this gang, you brought me all that...family, friends...so...this is my family and I’ll do whatever it takes to protect it.” Jason looked up at Jack; his blue eyes were intent. Jack felt a welling of protectiveness. Maybe he could be there for Jason like Bruce was never there for him he thought briefly...maybe...

Jack stepped away from Harley long enough to grab Jason by the back of his neck and pull him into an embrace, resting Jason’s forehead against Jack’s shoulder.

He whispered against the younger man’s ear. “I know what it's like to feel lost and alone. Don’t worry Jason, we’re all your family here.”

Roxy spoke up with a smile. “We all agree with Jason. You guys brought us together and well…” She shrugged at a loss for words. “You can count on me, Trope, and Duela to be here whenever you need us Boss.” She nodded, as did the other two women.

Jack grinned with a glance at Harley. Harley was leaning on Alex, but she was smiling. “I feel like a mother with her chicks.” She laughed.

Jack chuckled. “Our deadly chicks.”

Everyone laughed before Jack sighed with fatigue. “Okay, everyone inside--I’m exhausted.”

*

Alex drove, dropping everyone off at their different places, though Roxy, Duela and Jason all went home together. Trope was dropped off at the edges of Gotham University’s student housing, giving Jack and Harley a kiss on their cheeks before she hopped out. She grinned brightly standing by the side of the car just as tiny flakes of snow began to fall.

“You know, you guys are the best.” Trope grinned.

Harley smiled softly. “You are sweet. I’m glad you’re part of the gang.”

Trope smiled. “Me too. Good night!” She waved and hurried off.

Harley sighed pulling the door closed and leaned back. “This whole night sucked.”

Jack chuckled. “Yeah, it did sweets.”

Alex turned the wheel with a snort. “Yeah, but at least we all lived through it...so far.”

Jack nodded pulling Harley close, his arm around her waist. Harley laid her head on his shoulder and closed her eyes.
Jack sighed. “I need a smoke.”

Alex nodded over to the glove compartment. “There is a pack of cigarettes and a fucking Bic lighter.”

Jack untangled himself from Harley, popped open the glove compartment to pull out a package of cigarettes and the lighter. He leaned back to a cigarette and took a deep drag on the cigarette that he slowly exhaled in a heavy cloud.

Alex smiled. “Glad you’re fucking alive.”

Jack grinned. “Me too. Thanks for coming after me.”

“Ah, I didn’t do it for you, you fuck; did it for Harley.” Alex laughed.

Jack snorted. “Jerk.”

“Asshole.” Alex smiled.

The two men laughed while Harley dozed, her head against Jack’s chest. Jack took another drag on the cigarette before he spoke. “I want to arrange a meeting with The Roman.”

Alex cringed. “I thought you might.”

Jack sighed. “Need to do it soon. Panessa’s territory is ours now and I don’t want there to be any misunderstandings on that front.”

Alex nodded. “I have some people…”

Jack closed his eyes taking another drag on the cigarette. “I also want us to start recruiting. We are going to need people…I also want a tech guy…”

Alex frowned. “We have Trope…”

Jack smiled. “No, no…I mean…think about it Alex, where does Batman get all his wonderful toys?”

Jack opened his eyes to look at Alex. “That car of his, the grappling hooks, the armor…where does it all come from? He has to have somebody helping him. And since we are going to take out the Owls, plus make a bigger splash on Gotham, that means another encounter with the Batman isn’t a possibility—it’s a fact. When it happens, I want to be prepared. For the bat or any other costumed party crasher.”

Alex nodded in agreement then shook his head. “Fuck,” he said slowly. “Never thought I would be putting myself in Batman’s spotlight.”

Jack laughed. “You know me Alex; I have to be the center of attention.”

*

Alex drove them to a different apartment that he owned across Gotham, this one located in the Robbinsville area. He pulled up in front of the brownstone, parking illegally, but he wasn’t really worried about the cops driving by and ticketing him. No one liked to be out at night when it was cold and unless someone actually called the cops especially about the SUV, they should be fine. The neighborhood they were in was an up and coming one, trying to change its spots from a rundown, crime laden area into something new and shiny, but that kind of change took time. Right now the neighborhood was in a sort of purgatory, trying to pull itself out of hell and into heaven.
The entire area was quiet; only a few cars passed by in the night and the occasional sound of a wind chime, or the bark of a dog, but other than the sound of the wind picking up and blowing a few flakes of smoke, this side of Gotham was peaceful this early in the morning. The sidewalk was lit with black iron street lamps that were electric, but with the old fashioned feel of gaslight lamps; probably put up in the last decade or so Jack guessed as the three of them slid out of the SUV.

Jack helped Harley ease out of the SUV. She was exhausted and fading quickly. Once on the sidewalk, Jack wrapped his arm around Harley, carefully lifting her up before she could protest, thought she really didn’t have the strength to fight him as he lifted her up into his arms, holding her carefully and followed Alex to the entrance of the brownstone. Through the light and wet snow, the trio walked up a set of steps where Jack could see a side panel with a list of names. He snorted when he saw one name, Rick Allen...the name of the one-armed drummer from Def Leppard...Alex had a sense of humor.

Almost as soon as they hit the first step leading into the brownstone, they heard the sound of a car door slamming shut; the two men turned back around to see where the sound was coming from only to see Dr. Henderschott, carrying a large, old fashioned medical bag making his way hurriedly from across the street, the collar of his coat up against the chill breeze and tiny flakes of snow.

He smiled pleasantly and waved, looking far more awake than any of them as he hurried over to the sidewalk and up the steps while Alex opened the doors to the building’s main hall. The doors were a heavy set of dark wood doors with stained glass window inserts in the middle. The four of them hurried inside. Alex led the way over to an ancient looking metal cage of an elevator, which surprised Jack when the four of them climbed inside and the elevator moved rather quietly up to the fourth floor. From there, Alex led the way down to the very end of a plain, yet clean hall to the last apartment on the left, opening the door and holding it for Jack to walk in carrying Harley in his arms.

The apartment was a small studio apartment with hardwood floors and exposed brick walls. The room was “divided” into the sleeping area where a double size bed with a plain white comforter sat between two small windows. A couch sat on the left from the bed, pressed against the wall, a flat screen TV on the opposite wall from it. A little half wall divided the tiny kitchen from the rest of the room, providing a countertop for eating and was lined with four black stools. A couple of small end tables held a modern looking bedside lamp with a simple white shade, another matching lamp in the “living room” section and a small coffee table in front of the couch littered with outdated magazines and one set of bookshelves on the right side of the couch that contained a few paperback novels. There was nothing on the walls, just the exposed brick to decorate the simple room.

There was the tiniest of halls that led to a small bathroom with a shower, tub, toilet and sink, just barely big enough for two people to stand in. Jack walked over and eased down to the couch, setting Harley down next to him. Harley was awake by now and she yawned, kissed his cheek as Dr. Henderschott dropped down into a couch with his bag in front of her.

The doctor frowned as he peeled off the bandage to examine the bullet wound, taking in the fact that she was dressed only in her blood stained bra and slacks. She was shivering from both shock and the chill, her skin too pale. Henderschott glanced behind him at Alex. “Can you get some hot tea started or some coffee and we need to turn the heat up. She’s chilled.”

Alex nodded. “Sure thing doc.”

Alex puttered around in the kitchen after turning up the thermostat, setting some water to boil for tea and pulling out a small coffee maker.

Turning his attention back to Harley, the physician muttered more to himself than actually speaking to anyone while he frowned and examined her shoulder wound gingerly. “The stitching is crude, but serviceable. You popped several of the stiches.” He twisted his lips poking at the wound before he spoke softly. “All right, I’m going to fix this up, disinfect it and get you on some antibiotics and painkillers. You can bathe, but only a sponge bath and then I want you to rest and eat for the next few days.” He lifted a brow at Harley. She nodded. He then glanced over to Jack. “I want you to keep an eye on her young man.” Henderschott frowned only now getting a good look at Jack’s own bruised and bloody face, catching a hint of the bruises on his torso. “You’re next young man. I’m going to examine you too.”

Jack grinned. “I’m all yours doc.”

*

The doctor worked on the two of them for over an hour, drinking three cups of coffee in the process. By the time he was finished, he had Harley restitched and bandaged up, her arm in a sling. Jack had one cracked rib, stitches on his cheek and forehead and another couple on his chest.

Alex brought them both some more tea and some sandwiches he had made...peanut butter and jelly.

“I expect you both to eat these since I’m using the extent of my fucking culinary expertise on you two. The fridge is fully stocked and so are the fucking cabinets. I can have your bags brought over from the other place in the morning. I’ll get Jason or someone to bring them. Anything else you guys need before I take off?” Alex asked looking between the two of them.

Jack grinned. “About a month’s rest maybe.”

Alex snorted. “Like you would fucking do that anyway. It's gonna take me a few days to set up a meeting with The Roman...gonna have to call in a few favors…but you guys can stay here and rest until the park is ready to move into...”

Jack smiled. “Thanks man.”

Alex grinned. “No fucking problem. Okay I’m off. Talk to you tomorrow.”

Jack stood up and followed him to the door. He grabbed Alex at the last moment and hugged him. Alex smiled, hugged Jack with his one arm.

“I’m really glad you’re okay man,” Alex said softly.

“Thanks for coming to help me Alex. You are my best friend.” Jack’s words were filled with sincerity.

Alex blushed. “Shut the fuck up man. I’ll talk to you tomorrow.”

With that, Jack and Harley were alone.

Jack caressed the side of Harley’s face, his fingertips tracing her jaw, the gesture brushing off flakes of dried blood. “You were amazing tonight.” He studied her face, his blue eyes caressing her features before he spoke. “I never had anyone fight for me before Harley. You have done so on more than one occasion...fought for me…” He teared up.

“You...are amazing Harley. I...”

She stuck her bottom lip out glaring at him though she was sleepy so the effect wasn’t as effective as if might have been. “Jack, I’ll always fight for you. I’ll fight for you, I’ll kill for you. I love you. You...you are everything to me.” She choked on her words. “I love you…” She leaned into him drawn like a moth to a flame. Jack was her flame, the fire that would burn her...she knew it from the moment she had set eyes on him her first day at Wayne Manor until now...Jack would be the death of her someday but until then... “I love you with every fiber of my being Jack,” she whispered, her breath brushing his lips.

He smiled at his wife, his thumb caressing her lips as he gazed into her eyes. “I know…” He brushed his nose against hers. “I don’t know if I will ever become used to you coming to my rescue Harls..my girl...my friend...my everything.”

Harley smiled sleepily, the drugs and just plain exhaustion were beginning to take their toll as she leaned into him reaching up to run her fingers through his hair. “I won’t let anyone take you from me,” she whispered. “I won’t let anyone get away with hurting you Jack...ever. I’ll kill them all.”

Jack grinned. “I’ll kill them all for you too my sweets. No one will come between us…”

Jack smiled drawing her lips to his own. He kissed her tenderly, his lips caressing her mouth. He pulled away from her lips just enough to whisper. “My hero.”

Harley giggled softly, blinking sleepily, but then Jack stood up. “All right, sponge bath, food, then bed. Wait here while I run a bath, and no going to sleep.”

Harley saluted with her good arm. “Yes sir, puddin sir.”

Jack snorted on a laugh and headed to the bathroom to run a bath.

* * *

Jack carried Harley into the bathroom, Harley with her one arm around his neck, her head resting against his shoulder. He had filled the tub enough with warm water that it would hit her waist deep when she sat in it. He gently set Harley on her feet near the tub, kissed her bloody face tenderly while Harley leaned into him.Jack removed her clothing, tossing the blood covered items in a corner before he eased her into the tub. He stripped himself, tossed his clothing into the same pile before joining her in the tub.

Jack sat behind her and drew her back against his chest, careful of her shoulder.

“There, now how is that?” Jack asked, kissing her ear while at the same time wrapping both arms around her.

Harley sighed. “I may not be able to get up.” She giggled closing her eyes and leaned against him. Feeling the warmth of his skin, the beat of his heart against her back was enough to lull her to sleep.

Jack smiled picking up the washrag that hung from the side of the tub. He wet it and ran the soap over it before he began to run the soapy wet rag down her front, washing the blood away from her breasts. Harley closed her eyes and relaxed into his touch.

Jack murmured, his lips brushing softly against her ear as he spoke. “Just think about cuddling in bed with peanut butter and jelly sandwiches.”

Harley made a little groan. “You had me at cuddling.”

Jack laughed softly. “You are so easy to please.”

Harley smiled, her eyes still closed. “You are just charming, that’s all.”
Jack laughed. “Really?”

Harley nodded. “Really. You’ll have The Roman eating out of your hand...or we’ll destroy him like we did Panessa,” Harley said with tired confidence. Jack grinned, kissing her ear.

He carefully washed the blood away, watching the water turn red around them as he worked to clean her off, then himself. Jack gently washed her hair, combing his fingers through her tangled locks until her hair was completely clean before tackling his own. When he was satisfied, Jack toweled his slowly wilting wife and himself before carrying her naked to the small apartment’s bed. After tucking her in, Jack grabbed the sandwiches that Alex had made and crawled--naked--into bed with her, forcing her to sit up.

“I want you to eat before sleeping,” Jack said softly.

“Ahh...puddin…” Harley moaned. “I’m so tired..”

“Not until you’ve eaten Harls. You got to rescue me tonight, but I get to take care of you right now. So eat.” Jack grumped at her until Harley groaned, taking the sandwich.

“Fine, big meanie.”

Jack laughed. “A big meanie that loves you--now eat.”

Harley made a face at him around a large bite of sandwich; the food energized her enough to sit up and finish her sandwich with some vigor. Jack grinned watching her.

“Feel better?”

Harley sighed. “Yeah.”

“Now, come here.” Jack pulled her into his arms and laid back against the pillows. Harley snuggled close against his side, careful of her shoulder, her head resting against his chest and within seconds, they were both fast asleep.

*

Harvey Bullock was standing in the middle of the freezer at Paisanos Butcher shop chewing on the end of an unlit cigar, his nose turned up at the sight around him. Eight dead. One butchered and left to bleed to death, but what had surprised him was that one of the victims was Tomaso Panessa. Scratch that he thought, he wasn’t that surprised. Tomaso was head of one of Gotham’s five families, but he had heard, and seen with his own eyes, Panessa running around Gotham with the man who was currently hanging from a meat hook with his dick and balls in his mouth. It didn’t take a genius to figure out what went down here. The mob wasn’t one of the most “liberal” organizations. Bullock was sure that someone had finally gotten tired of Panessa and his boy toy making a laughing stock of the crime families and decided to send a message. That building that had been blown to fucking hell had been Panessa’s too...so it might be more than simply a bunch of homophobic old mobsters getting angry at Tomaso Panessa, but the man with his junk in his mouth certainly made a graphic statement that someone had hated him...a lot. Harvey reached down and adjusted himself as the uncomfortable thought of having his dick sliced off made him squirm.

He shook himself yelling at the coroner’s people who were still milling about picking up the pieces. “Come on people! Bag it and tag it! Let’s go!”

*
In another part of Gotham, Agatha Wayne was sitting at her vanity putting on the finishing touches to her makeup. It was time to go see her nephew and his wife. She had been in Gotham long enough now that if the Owls didn’t know she was here, they weren’t going to know thanks to Lincoln; and she needed to talk to Jackie. She had been hearing disturbing things about a Red Hood gang through Lincoln’s sources, and what she had seen on the news, the video...that helmet...it was from the house...it had to be Jack and Harley.

She wasn’t sure how she felt about them getting into a life of crime...though considering her own record with the Owls...Her brother would be upset to see that the apple didn’t really fall far from the tree. She frowned, her thoughts drifting to Bruce wondering if there was anything there too...She shook her head, stood up and stepped into the walk in closet to finish dressing. She put on a pair of black slacks, chose a matching pair of black boots, a long asymmetrical black sweater and silver scarf around her neck. She grabbed her leather jacket and her purse, making sure her wallet, gun, pepper spray, taser and knife, as well as her compact, were all inside before she headed out to see her nephew.

*

The boat ride out to Catherine House was chilly, but Agatha could smell the change in the air, that freshness that drifted through the air, the hint of new life...spring was almost here. There had been some light snow last night, but now it was a little warmer and the air was still filled with moisture which meant it would probably rain tonight. When she arrived and made her way up from the dock she was immediately overcome with a feeling of abandonment. She stood looking at the front of the house with a small frown. She could sense that the the place was empty; the house seemed dead as she examined it. She brought her hand up and rapped her knuckles against the door. The sound seemed to echo hollowly. She waited and rapped one more time. With a slight crease between her brows, Agatha reached into her purse pulled out her keys and opened the door to step inside. She gently shut the door and turned around, standing in the doorway. The house had that yawning emptiness of having been once more abandoned, a vastness of unoccupied space; she could just sense no one was living here now. Her nephew and his wife were gone leaving the house hollow, lifeless. Agatha frowned. She needed to go speak with Cobb, to see if he knew where her nephew and his wife had gone.

*

She made her way down the walkway that wrapped around the back of the house leading to the small home where Cobb lived, her boots crunching along the path. The emptiness she had felt at the house followed her as she went giving her a slight chill up her spine. It almost felt as if the entire island was dead, unoccupied, as if something horrible had happened and every living thing had fled. The atmosphere left Agatha feeling slightly on edge.

As she approached Cobb’s house, the feeling changed only slightly to an unease in her stomach, as if there was a strange hollow place in the world. She had felt this way before when she had been around death. Death always felt hollow, as if the space where something had once lived had become a negative space...the life sucked from this bubble that surrounded the living creature…

Agatha shook herself as she stopped in front of Cobb’s door, only then realizing that it was open just a crack. She reached out, setting her gloved fingers against the door and slowly pushed. The door opened wider and she stood still looking inside.

She was immediately assaulted by the smell of death, that sweet scent of decay followed by the chill of death. She had been around death many times...she knew the signs.

She took a deep breath and stepped inside.
She didn’t have to go far before she saw the body of Cobb lying on the floor. By the sight of him, he had been dead several days now. She couldn’t be sure without a closer examination, but just with a cursory look, there were no bullet wounds...stab wounds, but from the heavy discoloration in patches over his pale, gray skin he was probably beaten. Agatha frowned in thought...she turned and quickly left, touching nothing else. She needed to find her nephew. Once the Owls learned of Cobb’s death...she shivered, but walked determinedly down the path.

Jack woke slowly to the feel of fingers caressing his face. He smiled without opening his eyes. One eye was swollen, not swollen shut, but pretty badly bruised and the places where he had received stitches felt tight and sore, though Harley’s gentle caresses seemed to ease most of his discomfort. He could also the warmth of her nude body against his side and that felt wonderful.

He smiled softly without opening his eyes. “Good morning pumpkin.”

Harley smiled. “Good morning puddin.”

Jack opened his eyes. Harley was leaning on her good arm, using her wounded one to caress him. He narrowed his eyes at her. “You’re not suppose to be using that arm Harls.”

“I’m being careful.” she said softly. “What about you and your cracked rib mister?”

Jack sat up suddenly, surprising her as he rolled her onto her back, but while the movement was swift, Jack was careful, gentle with her. He smiled lying on top of her making sure that his weight was on the side away from her damaged shoulder. Jack tenderly brushed her temple with his fingertips.

“My rib is fine.” He grinned kissing her very gently. “How is my Harley-girl this morning?” Jack asked while his blue eyes searched her face. She smiled using her good hand to caress his side. “At this moment? I’m happy. Happy that Ben and Tomaso are dead, happy that you are safe.” She brushed her nose against his while she spoke, her lips barely touching his, teasing softly. He eased back down beside her, careful to lay against her unwounded side.

“I love you baby,” he whispered.

Harley leaned into him, catching his lips with her teeth before flicking her tongue along his mouth. Jack closed his eyes with a soft growl spreading his hand against her stomach, leaning in to kiss her mouth deeply, his tongue diving into her mouth. Harley moaned softly rolling her body toward him. Jack lost himself in the kiss, letting his mind become focused on the feel of her lips, the taste of her tongue, the heat of her breath. The entirety of her body against him, the way their bodies fit together so easily. He caught her bottom lip with his teeth, pulling gently before he released her lip and brushed his teeth along her chin.

He stopped, whispering against her skin. “I want you, but…”

Harley pouted. “I want you too...let’s just...be careful. I need you Jack...my puddin.” She giggled softly. Jack shared a laugh with her rubbing his nose against her throat.

He licked her neck slowly hissing passionately. “I can’t stand a day going by without being inside you…”

Jack’s teeth brushed against her skin, tickling mixed with the harshness of his teeth.
Harley closed her eyes, she groaned as Jack shifted his attentions from her throat to her collar sending chills along her spine. His tongue was hot against her skin as he dragged it along the smoothness of her flesh, the wet trail he left chilling in the cooler air of the room. She reached up with her good hand and started to stroke his back, her fingers caressing the muscles of his shoulders and neck until her fingers found his hair as Jack shifted his position lower, his lips sliding their way along her skin. When he came to her breasts he pressed his lips against hers, sucking on the soft flesh. Harley arched slightly groaning and smiling knowing he was leaving a mark on her.

Jack brushed his nose against her breast, taking in the scent of her clean skin, luxuriating in the soft silk of her flesh against his face.

“I love you Harley. I love you…” he whispered, his warm breath tickling the fine hairs on her skin just before he moved up her breast to tease her nipple, his lips just barely brushing the surface of the hard sensitive bud. While he began to tease her nipple, his hand slid down her stomach. He smiled feeling the muscles shift beneath her skin as she moved her legs, her hips twisting just a little as he started to build that yearning heat between her legs. Jack used the tip of his tongue to circle her nipple, flicking the nipple back and forth.

Harley moaned. “Oh Jack...I love you so much…”

The feel of him against her, the warmth and strength of him but then his hand dipped between her legs, his fingers sliding over her clitoris, then deeper until he was sliding two of his fingers into her. Harley arched her back and groaned with pleasure, but at the same time pain shot through her shoulder when she pressed back against the wound and seemed to spread. “Uh...oh ow!”

Jack stopped touching her immediately. “Harley? Oh god, did I hurt you?”

He sat up on his knees quickly, the color draining from his face as he reached up and cupped her face between his hands. “Harley? Tell me what to do! What do you need?”

Harley laughed through the pain. “I just need one of my pills and for you to keep doing what you’re doing.”

Jack stared at her for a moment then laughed. “I can do that. Wait right here.”

Harley smiled. “I’m not going anywhere puddin.”

Jack hurried naked across the room to the kitchen. Harley watched him, the flash of pain settling into a deep ache, but the sight of his naked, muscled ass helped in easing her pain. He moved into the kitchen and poured her a glass of milk, knowing that water, the pill and an empty stomach might make her sick. He hurried back, the view of his naked body even more pleasing to her on the return trip, her eyes caressing him, especially around his hips. Jack didn’t notice her lust-filled look as he stepped to the side of the bed. Her pills were on the table beside the bed. Jack picked them up and he opened them while Harley struggled to push herself up to a sitting position using only one hand.

“I swear I don’t know how Alex does everything he does with only one hand,” she muttered.

Jack laughed. “Determination, and he is a stubborn motherfucker.” He held the pill out and Harley opened her mouth for it. He smiled lovingly at her as he placed the pill on her tongue before handing her the milk to swallow it down with. He took the glass, setting it beside the bed before he walked back around to climb into bed with her.

“I swear I don’t know how Alex does everything he does with only one hand,” she muttered.

Jack laughed. “Determination, and he is a stubborn motherfucker.” He held the pill out and Harley opened her mouth for it. He smiled lovingly at her as he placed the pill on her tongue before handing her the milk to swallow it down with. He took the glass, setting it beside the bed before he walked back around to climb into bed with her.
“I thought you might want to wait until the pill started to work,” Jack said looking down at her with a raised brow. “I don’t want to hurt you Harley.”

She gave him a playful look. “You can still do that…” she motioned with her eyes down her body. “Then when the pill starts working, we can really get busy.”

Jack snorted on a laugh, his eyes dancing with delight at his wife. “Get busy? Did you say “get busy?”

Jack hurried to cover her mouth with his to stop her listing while laughing at the same time. Harley sank back into the pillows with a happy groan, returning his kiss vigorously. She wanted to eat him up. She was so happy to have him alive, in bed with her...that black fear that she had felt last night when she thought she might lose him...it was still there, like a horrible little black seed in her gut she might never be rid of...but right now she had him to herself and she wanted to feel him, wanted to show him in the most explicit way possible how much she loved him...if only she hadn’t been shot.

Jack eased her back running his hands over her breast. Harley made little soft noises of want as she gazed at Jack though her dark lashes, her blue eyes shimmered with passion as Jack pressed his teeth into his bottom lip, his eyes traveling down from her face to her body, watching the way she struggled not to move too much and hurt herself while he fingered her nipples, rolling one, then the other between his fingers and then, then gently rubbing the pad of his finger over the top of one nipple then the other before pinching them gently.

Harley moaned, her good arm, which was between her and Jack, struggled to grab bunches of the sheet as her body tightened, her breathing became heavy while ripples of pleasure rolled through her, sending spikes of heat to her groin causing her to shift her legs as the tightness grew. The sensitivity of her clitoris became almost unbearable, begging for Jack to touch her again.

Jack scooted lower, catching her nipple in his mouth and sucking, his tongue swirling around her sensitive nub while his hand across her stomach stroked lower to tease, just above her clitoris, but without touching her.

Harley groaned, resisting the urge to arch into his touch, which might put pressure on her shoulder, but she stroked her legs against each other, her body ached while she continued to make little noises that told him clearly that she wanted him.

Jack chuckled and tugged at her nipple with his lips which caused his Harley to groan loudly. “Oh Jack!”

He flicked his tongue over her nipple then hissed. “You like that?”

“Jack you’re driving me crazy!”

He chuckled. “It’s about to it worse.”

He slipped his hand down between her legs, using his fingers to gently tug her labia wide, but still he didn’t touch her--he focused his attentions on her breasts, tugging and sucking at the nipple closest to him. He held her labia wide, then only when Harley was nearly writhing did he finally touch her. His long middle finger flicked against her swollen clitoris, made Harley cry out.

“Uh! Uh Jack!”
He smiled, holding her nipple between his teeth tenderly doing it again while flicking his tongue over her nipple. Harley whimpered, nearly in tears. “Damn it Jack!”

He released her nipple and laughed. “You are so wanton Harley...I love it.”

He shifted again and kissed his way down her body, stopping to grab a bite of flesh between his teeth, or to suck until he had created a small bruise which didn’t take long on her pale skin. He then wrapped himself around her hips, one arm tucking up under her rear as he used his hand to spread one of her legs out just a little before he bent down to flick his tongue over her clitoris. Harley groaned, the fingers of her wounded arm spasming as she struggled not to tighten her grip, though her free hand dug into the sheet as Jack flicked his tongue back and forth over her swollen clitoris.

Harley tossed her head back and forth struggling not to move too much and hurt herself while Jack lowered his mouth on her and sucked on her clitoris, stopping only to roll the tip of his tongue over her or to take a long slowly lick before he would suck on her, alternating between light, tender pulls and hard, forceful sucks until she came. Harley gasped as her orgasm flowed over her, her body turned warm and liquid only a second after the intensity of the orgasm nearly raised her off the bed. Jack brought his head up and turned to grin at her, his lips wet. He licked his lips grinning brightly as he shifted back up her body, wrapping an arm around her waist.

“How was that?” he asked rubbing his nose against her cheek.

Harley moaned. “I want you Jack...I wanna feel you inside me.”

Jack smiled. “Are you sure...I don’t…”

Harley frowned with a slight whine in her voice. “Puddin!”

He chuckled. “Okay, okay...let’s switch sides. I want you to roll onto your good side.”

Harley nodded as Jack crawled carefully over her. She rolled onto her side and Jack cozied up behind her. She grinned feeling the satin heat of his erection against her rear, his chest against her back, then the gentle strokes of his hand on her hip.

“How ready Harls?” Jack whispered against her ear. “Keep your damaged arm along your side. I won’t touch your shoulder.”

Harley nodded with a smile. “All right puddin.”

Jack gently lifted her leg into the air bringing his erection forward as he hooked his legs between her thighs. Harley closed her eyes; the warmth of his body felt good.

Harley arched her back, her brow furrowed with pleasure at having him inside her, having their bodies connected.

Jack wrapped his arm around her waist while Harley arched her leg back to wrap it around Jack’s thigh as he stroked her stomach, and his hand slid down between her legs to caress her clitoris while he thrust gently into her. He kissed her ear, dragging his tongue along the tender area right between her throat and ear while whispering, “I love you my Harley-girl, my angel...my pumpkin pie.” He punctuated each endearment with a thrust of his hips all while stroking her clitoris as he thrust into his wife.

Harley groaned, her eyes closed, as her body arched into his, the two of them fitting together perfectly. She was careful of her wounded arm even though the pills had started to work. Her other hand was flung out across the bed in front of her, holding onto a handful of the sheet, her legs holding Jack’s tightly as he thrust.

“Jack…” she moaned. “I love you… I… I couldn’t live without you puddin…”

Jack answered her, licking her ear. “You are my desire, my violent daydream Harley… only you… against the world Harley… only you.”

His rubbing of her clitoris became more intense and Harley felt that rushing warmth of her orgasm wash over her again. Her body tensed in response and she cried out, arching back against him with a breathy hiss. “Oh Jack… puddin, I love you… I love you so much!” She arched her head back wanting to kiss him. The press of her wounded shoulder back against him caused a rush of pain, but she came again, the pleasure cancelling out the pain with another passionate gasp.

Jack groaned pressing his head against hers, cupping her sex, his fingers pressing against her sensitive clitoris; his lips found hers when he came. “Harley…” he moaned softly. “Harley…” He thrust, pumping into her with each ripple of his orgasm. There was a spike of discomfort from his cracked rib, but it was easy to ignore while he continued to ride his climax until he simply couldn’t move anymore.

They both relaxed into each other, Jack holding on tightly to Harley, kissing her tenderly.

He grinned like a naught child. “I would be happy to spend some time not moving from this bed for a few days.”

Harley giggled and leaned her head back against Jack. He smiled and kissed her lips tenderly. Harley whispered. “That will be nice.”

*

After about a week, the two of them were nearly bouncing off the walls for something to do. Alex was closer to setting up a meeting between Jack and The Roman, but he had heard that the word on the street was that Falcone was making inquiries into Jack Wayne. There had been no peep from the Owls. Jack was taking this to mean that they didn’t care about Ben’s death, but Jack wasn’t fool enough to think that someone else--such as Ben’s family--wouldn’t want retribution.

But with all the machinations on the back burner for now, Jack was searching the internet... for something, he had no idea what. Jack was sitting on the couch with the laptop computer that Alex had brought him on the coffee table, looking through the online version of the local paper when he saw an article in the entertainment section of the Gotham Gazette, “Has Bruce Wayne Found Love… Again?”

Jack couldn’t stop himself from clicking on the article. He scanned the story, which was the usual blather about Bruce: how good looking he was with a minor note about his younger brother having not been seen at any public events... lalalalada... Bruce had been seen around town recently with Janifer St. Cyr, a socialite and model. Of course, Jack thought with a curl of his lip.

“Idiot,” he muttered. Jack glanced over to Harley. She was in the kitchen cutting up slices of cucumber. Her shoulder was still tender, but she was able to use it more, though the doctor wanted her to continue to wear the sling and limit her work with that arm.

Jack smiled while he watched her. She had her blonde hair piled on top of her head, thick curls spiraling down around her face. She wore a pair of sleep shorts and a half shirt and nothing else, showing long expanses of softly, creamy skin, her long smooth legs, her flat stomach, the way the t-shirt clung to her breasts, her nipples hard, showing through the shirt...her lack of a bra. He dragged his teeth over his bottom lip feeling that familiar tug of need in his groin. He grinned lopsidedly. Bruce would never know love or lust for anyone like Jack did with Harley.

She came around the half wall with the plate of cucumber, her bare feet making little sound as she walked over to him.

“Whatcha up to puddin?” Harley asked with a smile as she stepped over to sit on the couch next to him crossing her legs before she set the plate down on her lap, grabbing a slice of cucumber and sticking it in his mouth.

Jack chuckled returning his attention to the computer. “Nothing,” he said as he chewed and swallowed. “I was just looking for something for us…” He frowned leaning closer to the computer. Harley, who had popped a couple of slices into her mouth, frowned watching him.

“Puddin?”

Jack’s smile bloomed across his face. “Harley! The circus is in town!”

Harley, her mouth full of cucumber slices, widened her eyes and grinned, her mouth full she mumbled. “Crus?”

Jack laughed. “Haly’s circus is in town! They are set up at the Gotham Fairgrounds and the opening is tonight!” Jack turned to look at Harley his blue eyes dancing with childish wonder and mischief. “How do you feel about going to the circus?”

*

Jack only had to put in one phone call to the circus to get a pair of tickets, the Wayne name, and the fact that the phone was answered by Haly himself who remembered little Jack Wayne and Bruce made it easy for Jack to have two tickets waiting for them when they arrived.

The evening was crisp and cool, but clear. Jack called them an Uber to take them to the Gotham fairgrounds.

Harley was dressed in a little black pleated mini skirt, black hose with black ankle boots and a red sweater, her arm still in a sling (Jack had made sure her sling at least matched her outfit having made sure it was red), stepped out of the Uber with her mouth hanging open and her eyes wide. The circus looked exactly like the large classical circuses she had seen in movies and TV growing up, with lights everywhere, strung along in loops. She could see the big top in the center, a large two peaked red and white striped tent, surrounded by several smaller striped and colorful tents reminding her of the great pyramid surrounded by smaller temples. A large ferris wheel decorated in twinkling lights was easily visible, along with an array of other lit attractions from rides to rings with animals, games and what looked like hundreds of booths catering to anything you could possibly want to eat. The calliope music danced on the air as Harley took in the sights with wonder. Since the Gotham fairgrounds was located near the train station, she could see a long train parked along the side of the circus, the train cars covered in what looked to be old circus posters...it was all just like stepping into the past when circuses were all the rage.

Jack paid the driver before coming over to stand beside Harley. He was dressed in a pair of black slacks, a white and black checked dress shirt, an evergreen vest and black jacket with a pair of Italian leather evergreen, point toed oxfords and matching leather gloves. He stepped up beside her and put his arm around her waist.
“So what do you think?” he asked with a grin.

“It’s...wow. I mean it looks exactly like a circus should look!” Harley grinned.

Jack laughed. “Yeah it does. Come on, let’s go get our tickets! And, I plan on winning you the biggest stuffed animal possible!”

Jack gave her a loud and enthusiastic kiss on her cheek, causing Harley to giggle and blush with pleasure. When Jack was happy, his joy was like a shining thing...it radiated out from him in the most amazing way Harley thought. Anyone would want to be close to him when he was like this, beautiful, happy...Harley returned his kiss, pressing her lips to his cheek. Jack grinned at her and reached up, turning her face gently to his and kissed her full on the mouth, causing her knees to go weak. He rubbed his nose against hers and whispered. “My girl.”

Harley licked his mouth and hissed. “Puddin.”

Jack grinned. “Come on baby, let’s go have some fun.”

Laughing together, they hurried into the main body of the circus as they headed to the ticket booth.

*

Harley was gaping at everything they passed from the cute games of chance, to the sides shows such as Lila the snake dancer, a mermaid, knife-throwers, and a human blockhead. The circus included a few rides: the ferris wheel, a large, gorgeous merry around, and a giant swing. There were people everywhere, the air was filled with the scents of cotton candy, funnel cake and other unidentifiable smells, but they all combined into a sweet childhood fantasy. The lights were bright and cheerful and the music was loud. Harley thought for a moment, this must be what Christina Rossetti’s Goblin Market must have been like.

Jack led Harley over to one of the booths where a young man with long blonde hair pulled back in a tail, wearing a red and white striped jacket and pants was yelling. “ONLY THE MOST SKILLED CAN WIN AT THIS GAME!! SHOW YOUR MATE WHAT YOU’RE MADE OF!”

As they approached Harley could see that it was a dart throwing game. The booth held an assortment of stuffed animals and other odds and ends one could attempt to win.

The man grinned at them as they came over.

“Want to win the pretty lady a stuff toy?” the circus man asked with a wide grin.

Jack laughed. “Yep, the biggest one you have.”

The guy laughed. “Well to win that...” He pointed at a huge stuffed pink elephant that was easily half as big as Harley. “You need to pop twelve balloons in a row. Miss one and you’re out.”

Jack pulled out his wallet with a grin. “Easy.”

Harley stood back while the man handed Jack twelve darts. He grinned at Jack. “Good luck man, but no one has ever managed to pop twelve balloons in a row.”

Jack picked up the first dart. He balanced it in the palm of his hand. He could feel it was weighted in way that would cause the dart to dip, a relatively typical circus game trick, but it didn’t really matter to him. He glanced at the board of balloons, then at the man. A slow, sexy smile spread across Jack’s face and he winked at the other man, which caused the young man to blush.
Jack turned to Harley. “Kiss for luck pumpkin?”

Harley giggled stepping close and wrapped her good arm around his neck, pressing her body up against his. Jack licked his lips, his eyes gazing at her plump red lips. Jack hissed in a slow seductive whisper. “Tonight, I’m going to lick every inch of you.”

Harley giggled softly, wrapping a leg around his hips as she hissed back. “I’m going to suck on you until you’re begging me to fuck you.”

Jack lifted a brow with a smirk on his lips. “Damn Harley...maybe we should go home now?”

Harley kissed him slowly and sensual, the young man watching had to turn to adjust his pants, especially when Harley slowly tugged Jack’s bottom lip out with her teeth. She let go to whisper. “Good luck puddin.”

Jack reluctantly let her go, his eyes following her for a moment before he turned back to the board of balloons. He held the first dart between his fingers for a split second before he tossed the dart, popping a balloon, then in a quick fashion, so quick that Harley lost count for a moment, Jack picked up and threw the darts, one right after the other hitting a balloon with every toss until, he was done...twelve balloons popped without missing a beat.

The young man blinked, then whistled. “That...was cool.”

He grinned at Jack. “Wanna go again? See if you can do it one more time. I won’t charge you.”

Jack put his gloved hand out with a sexy grin.

The young man quickly grabbed twelve new darts and handed them to Jack.

Jack glanced at Harley. “Another kiss for luck?”

Harley giggled grabbing the back of Jack’s neck and pulling him down for a deep passionate kiss, their tongues playing softly against one another. Jack grabbed her waist, his hands balling up the fabric of her clothing, fighting the urge to toss her down on the game’s counter and...he swallowed and took a breath as she stepped back. Jack let out a breath, glancing at the young man with a grin before he quickly and easily tossed the second set of twelve darts, popping a balloon every time.

The young man shook his head in amazement. “Dude, you got a gift.”

He walked over picking up a hooked stick and used it to take down one of the giant pink elephants, then another handing both to Jack and Harley. “You earned them. You guys have a good time!”

Jack, with an elephant under each arm laughed. “Come on Harls, let's go get seated for the show.”

Harley giggled kissing Jack on the cheek. “You’re amazing puddin.”

Jack shrugged with a grin. “I know.”

*

Jack held both the elephants, but also holding the fingers of Harley’s good hand, led her through the twists and turned toward the big top’s main entrance where a man dressed in a sparkling red coat with a exaggerated black top hat and a handlebar mustache was calling people into the big top for the main attraction.

“COME SEE THE FLYING GRAYSONS!! THE MOST DEATH DEFYING ACROBATIC,
They filed in with the rest of the crowd, Jack being very protective of Harley, making sure no one came close enough to bump into her arm as he guided her through the crowd, finding them a pair of seats on the fourth row benches that circled the large tent creating a circle around the center for the show. The center ring.

Jack set the elephants down, one between his legs, the other between Harley’s and pulled her close keeping a protective arm around her waist as he whispered in her ear over the sounds of the music and the crowd.

“The Flying Graysons have been with the circus forever. I remember seeing them when I was a kid.”

Harley smiled her eyes going to the top of the tent where she could see the trapeze. She could feel Jack’s smile against her ear. She leaned in close to him just as a man with a large popcorn bag filled box held in place with straps over his shoulders came walking up the aisle yelling about his wares. Jack waved the man over, bought them each a bag of popcorn before he settled in next to her again.

“You know, I always dreamed about having someone to take to the circus with me. Someone special who knew the real me.” Jack mused watching the center ring as a trio of clowns came out to perform for the crowd.

Harley leaned her head on his shoulder. “Well, here I am, Jack.”

Jack smiled contently. “I love you Harley...my harlequin.”

That was the moment that the lights began to dim. There was a moment between darkness and light as the light slowly faded that Jack glanced across the center ring and felt his blood go cold. There, almost perfectly parallel to him and Harley sat Bruce and his date, Janifer.

Jack blinked in shock staring at his brother. He was turned, talking to his date when, as if he sensed himself being watched. Bruce lifted his head and turned, his dark blue eyes meeting Jack’s across the center ring.

Time slowed down as Jack and Bruce stared at each other. Bruce started to stand, but that was the moment that the ringmaster stepped out into the middle of the center ring.

“WELCOME EVERYONE TO HALY’S INTERNATIONAL TRAVELING CIRCUS!”
I'm so sorry about this chapter being late!! I've had a very bad week/weekend which threw me off on my writing. I have a big move coming up and I will try not to let it affect my updating again!

The three men came in just as the ringmaster was spouting off about the traveling circus. There was enough noise that someone could fire a weapon and no one would hear them. The three men stood near the entrance; they had followed Jack and Harley Wayne into the main tent after having lost sight of them for nearly an hour once they arrived at the circus. This being the opening night, the fairgrounds was packed with people. This was not the ideal situation, but the Kosov brothers were neither known for their subtlety nor their brains.

Carmine--The Roman--Falcone had put an informal hit on Jack Wayne, giving each of the families a chance to take out the man who had taken out Tomaso Panessa. (Though only he knew that if they failed to take Jack out in forty eight hours, The Roman planned on going ahead with meeting with him...but he didn't see any reason not to make it difficult for him first.) The head of the Odessa family, Alexandra Kosov was happy to try to take out Panessa’s killers, not because she felt any need to seek revenge on Tomaso’s behalf--she hated Tomaso, especially after a failed love affair with him ended up with her being forced to get an abortion...that was all before she became the head of the Odessa family. No, the men she had sent, all three men she trusted with her life, her brothers, Ivan, Bohdan, and Denys, she wanted them to take out Jack Wayne and whoever was with him. Cut off the head of the Red Hood gang, the rest would follow. Expanding her influence and reach in Gotham was always favorable. Someone had to take Panessa’s place and it was time for the Odessa family.

None of the families had heard anything about the Red Hood in the week since Tomaso Panessa’s death. The Odessa’s, who had one of the better information networks, hadn’t heard a peep in the last week either, but then tonight, one of their informants, a little guy named Kevin who worked for Uber in Gotham had called them with some interesting information. He had called saying that someone named Jack Wayne had ordered an Uber to take him and his wife to Haly’s Circus. Kevin had given them the name and license of the Uber; after that tracing the Uber hadn’t taken much. The three Ukrainian men ended up following the Uber to the circus. They had even seen Jack Wayne exit the car with a woman, her arm in a sling, but they had lost sight of the couple for a little bit. Soon after, they caught sight of them again when the crowds had started moving for the big top. The three brothers saw the couple again as the they entered the tent and the three large men had entered the big top after them, though they kept their distance as they tried to decide what to do.

Denys had tried to call their sister, but all three brothers knew she was going to be impossible to get a hold of. She had a date tonight and when Alexandra had a date, she didn’t like to be disturbed unless it was a life or death situation.

Ivan, the tallest of the three and the eldest, smacked Denys hard in the shoulder, hard enough that the younger man nearly dropped his phone.

“Stop it Denys. We don’t need Alexandra telling us what to do every inch of the way! We know what she wants, we just do it.” Ivan grinned showing off his gold front tooth, his accent thick while he utilized English as his sister had demanded of everyone in the family.

Bohdan made a face. “We can handle this without her holding our hands Denys.”

Denys frowned. “I don’t like this. This man, he killed Panessa...he killed them all. I just...there is only three of us.”

Ivan smacked his little brother on the back of his head. “And there are three of us to his one.”

Denys winced. “What about the woman?”

Ivan smiled. “Pretty no? She’ll be no problem. Look, her arm is in a--how do say--sling? Broken wing. Maybe she is ready for a change? Wants a real man instead of that pretty boy?”

Ivan and Bohdan laughed as Bohdan snorted. “You think she want a man who looks like a zalupa?”

Ivan snorted. “Khuy tebe v zhopu!”

Denys frowned glancing over the crowd to where he could see Jack Wayne and his woman. He didn’t feel good about this at all. Something was nagging at him, but he couldn’t figure out why...just a feeling.

“Hey, I know you three blockheads.”

All three of the men turned to see a man they knew; they had had drinks with him a few times, even played a few games of seka with him...he was terrible at the game no matter how many times the brothers taught him, Tony Zucco.

Tony Zucco was an average height man with thick black hair. He might have been attractive except for the pockmarks on his cheeks and the desperation in his eyes. Tony was always indebted to someone, whether is was gambling debts or something more sinister. Tony was always doing grunt work for someone.

Ivan grinned. “Tony, what are you doing here my friend? Come to diddle some clowns?"

The brothers laughed. Tony laughed with them, sort of, completely aware that he was the butt of many jokes.

“No man, I’m on a job. Here to collect some money, but the guy who owns this shit show, Carl Canary Haly...he was suppose to pay some protection money, but he ducked out. I’m here to teach him a lesson, ain’t no one too good to pay their fees to the Maroni family.” Tony grinned pulling out an unlit cigar from the pocket of his jacket and putting it between his lips, though he was smart enough not to light it in here.

Denys frowned. “How are you going to teach him a lesson?”

Tony motioned with his eyes toward the trapeze. “See that little swing up there? Well, when Haly’s top grossing act takes to the air, they’re gonna find that they should have checked their equipment a little better.”

Ivan chuckled. “Guess you should always pay your fees, eh?”

They all laughed except Denys. “You think that’s going to interfere with our job? Maybe we should wait?”
Tony frowned. “You guys here on a job too?”

Ivan nodded. “You hear about the Red Hood?”

Tony nodded. “Fuck. Yeah we all heard. He took out Panessa...like took them all, but the women and children.” He shook his head. “Bad business that.”

“You hear there's a price on their leader’s head?” Ivan asked raising a brow in question.

Tony shrugged. “I might have heard something. The Red Hood is here?”

“Da. We are here to take care of him. Though your little business here might help us. Cause distraction, kill him, leave. No one sees anything,” Ivan smirked.

Denys shook his head. “I’m gonna say it one more time. I don’t like this. I think we should leave.”

Ivan smacked his little brother on the back. “Come on, what do that say in America--nut up?”

Ivan and Bodhan chuckled.

Zucco smiled. “Care if I tag along? Help the Odessa clan out a bit?”

Ivan pulled Tony into a bear hug. “The more the merrier they say, yeah?”

Tony laughed. “I’m all about helping.”

*

Jack hissed. “Bruce.”

Harley frowned following her lover’s gaze to see Jack’s older brother staring at them from across the ring. Bruce started to stand, but that was the moment that the ringmaster yelled.

“AND NOW THE FLYING GRAYSONS!”

The music swelled into an elegant piano and chimes sound, the lights dimmed, turning red and pink mixed with light that began to twirl over the crowd before focusing above the center of the ring. There was a large hoop that almost seemed to float in the air above the crowd, and on the ring were three people dressed in matching outfits. But Jack’s attention wasn’t on the acrobats; it was on Bruce. He had his hands balled into fists waiting to see what his older brother would do.

Bruce had started to stand, but his date, Janifer, reached out and took his arm. She said something to him and pouted—it was hard to tell with the dim lighting—but Bruce glanced across the ring toward Jack and let himself be pulled back down to her.

Jack snorted. He could feel Harley’s lips against his ear. “Just ignore him puddin and let’s enjoy the show.”

Jack turned to look at his wife. She had her good arm wrapped around his, her chin on his shoulder smiling at him. Just looking into her blue eyes eased his anger. He shot a look around the ring at Bruce, who seemed to be staring daggers at him and smiled, then blew his big brother a kiss. Bruce started to get up again, but his date wrapped her arm around his firmly...Jack chuckled. Whoever this Janifer St. Cyr was, she wasn’t putting up with Bruce’s bullshit.

Jack put his arm around Harley and pulled her closer, watching the ring performers. The lights switched off, the music changed and then a spotlight clicked on to focus on four people above them and the trapeze swings between them.

Two people leapt off, two men—or rather a man and a boy Jack and Harley noticed—swinging back and forth. Jack, his arm around Harley, both of them watching the performance, didn’t notice the three men moving down the nearest aisle toward them. The trapeze artists had jumped back to their platforms, now the older man and woman, holding onto the trapeze on either side, leapt off the platform. They passed each other, flipping into the air to catch the trapeze swing that was drifting away from them, then swung back again. The man caught both trapeze and for a moment he held himself suspended in the air.

The three men plus Zucco were coming up on Harley’s right. Their plan was for Denys to grab the woman, yanking her away and slicing her throat just as his older brothers (now with the addition of Zucco) swarmed the man. They eased themselves into position.

The two trapeze artists swung toward each other, the music peaked, the two passed each other, their fingers brushing, sharing an intimate moment between the two of them. The man and woman looked at one another, sharing a look of love and confidence, their eyes on each other, the crowd forgotten for that split second as they passed, smiling. The woman blew a kiss, mouthing “I love you.” The man smiled and mouthed back in that split second, “I love you too,” before they turned away from each other and reached out to grab the trapeze swings, only to have the swing’s ropes, on both trapeze snap the moment each artist grabbed the bar, their weight finally breaking the sabotaged equipment.

*

The lights followed the two artists as they tumbled through the air. A young boy watched as the two people he loved more than anyone else in the world plunged to their deaths. They hit the floor of the center ring with a sound that seemed to him to lack the impact of what had just happened.

Richard Grayson stared at the broken bodies of his parents, unable to comprehend what he had just witnessed.

*

The crowd broke out into screams and shouts as the two artists plummeted to the floor of the center ring below. That was the moment the four men moved in on Jack and Harley.

Denys lunged past the couple sitting next to Harley, their attention on the tragedy before them. He easily pushed past the couple and grabbed Harley by her hair pulling her up to her feet as quickly as he could, yanking the woman up and against him, bringing the blade around to slice open her neck.

Harley cried out in surprise as she was suddenly pulled to her feet by her hair, the pain was intense as several of her hairs were pulled out at the root. She stumbled, her wounded shoulder slamming into the chest of the man who had grabbed her as she tripped over the legs of the couple who had been sitting next to her. The pain of her healing shoulder slamming into the chest of the man who had grabbed her radiated down from her shoulder causing her arm in the sling to go numb, slowing her reactions.

*

Jack turned his head. For a moment his reactions seemed too slow, as if he were moving through molasses. He saw Harley, one moment she was sitting next to him, the next, she was yanked away from him drawing his attention from the scene of the falling trapeze artists to see his wife stumble to her feet, a man with his hand in her hair viciously pulling her backwards down the aisle from him, tripping over the couple that had been sitting next to them.

Harley stumbled, her shoulder slamming into the man who had grabbed her and her face was transformed by pain. Jack felt it, felt his wife’s pain in his very soul and the rush of anger almost blinded him, the rage that someone had hurt her made Jack want to kill anyone and everyone. Jack surged to his feet, at the same time reaching into his jacket for the switchblade he had slipped into the inside pocket. The blade was new; Harley had purchased it for him—through Alex—just in the last few days. It was a gorgeous blade, highly polished, doubled sided purple Damascus five inch blade. He had taken to putting the blade in a pocket even inside the apartment; he loved it that much and he had slipped it into his pocket without thinking about it just before they left. He hadn’t even mentioned having it with him to Harley. But right now, his fingers brushed against the cool metal handle, tugging the blade free and into his hand, his thumb brushing over the button that allowed the blade to spring forth. But at the same time someone behind him threw a punch, hitting Jack in the back of the neck which sent him stumbling forward a couple of steps, almost causing him to fall over the bleacher seat in front of him.

And then time seemed to speed up.

Jack pulled his blade, hitting the switch at the end with his thumb at the same time that he spun around after his shins smacked into the bleachers. With his arm extended, the blade became a part of him as he slashed out at whoever was behind them. Ivan, who had taken the sucker punch to Jack’s head, leaned back, the blade cutting through the air where his neck would have been, but the tip of the blade still sliced through Ivan’s shirt and a few layers of skin leaving a thin line of blood behind.

Tony had circled around to Jack’s left. He came at Jack, pulling his gun at the same time, but Jack saw him from the corner of his eye. Before Tony could shoot, Jack grabbed his wrist with his free hand, forcing the gun upward. Tony’s finger convulsed at the sudden shift, harmlessly shooting up into the tent just before Jack swiftly brought his knife up and under, slicing the blade under the man’s wrist in a deep slice. There was a gush of blood and Tony dropped the weapon. Jack had cut deeply enough, the blade sharp enough, to slice through the man’s tendons making his hand useless. Jack yanked Tony’s body across his torso, blood spraying everywhere and Tony started to scream. Jack brought his knee up at the same time, hitting Tony’s already useless arm in the elbow with his knees, driving his switchblade into the back of Tony’s neck, yanking the weapon out. Drops of blood caught in the dim light as Jack pulled his blade out and kicked Tony’s feet out from under him. Jack dropped Tony; the man hit the bleachers in front of him before he rolled over it to the screams of other circus patrons who were beginning to realize the violence occurring in the darkness near them on the heels of the acrobats’ deaths.

By this time the crowd had started to turn into a mob. Some of the patrons were fleeing, some from seeing the death of the two acrobats, the rest, that surrounded Jack and Harley, seeing the start of a fight, were trying to get away from the fight that had started. Some ran just because others were running.

Bruce had stood when the trapeze artists fell, but as his eyes were naturally drawn to his brother, Bruce saw the men attacking Jack and Harley. He only fought with himself for a second or two before he left his date and was pushing himself through the crowd trying to get to Jack. Whatever was going on, Jack and Harley were outnumbered and Harley looked to already be injured. Bruce needed to help his brother, Janifer should be fine. His eyes wandered over to the bodies of the two trapeze artists, then up where he saw the young man standing there—a boy really—staring unmoving down at the bodies. For a moment Bruce was back in the alley holding his little brother looking down at the bodies of his parents…

Bruce shook off the image and shoved at the panicked people as he tried to get to his brother now.
Harley snarled more than she screamed as Denys yanked her up and back against him knocking the elephants that Jack had won her to the floor. She felt the coolness of the metal as he brought his arm around and pressed the blade to her throat, but he hesitated...slicing the woman’s throat didn’t feel right to Denys, but that moment of hesitation was all that Harley needed.

She threw her head back as hard as she could, the back of her head hitting Denys in the mouth, smashing and cutting his lips against his teeth; the sudden impact also loosened his grip on Harley’s hair. Harley yanked her head free--losing several strands of hair--and threw her head back again as hard as she could before she spun around, her shoulder throbbing, but the pain gave her focus along with her anger. As soon as she spun around Harley kicked out, catching the Ukrainian between the legs. Denys’s eyes bulged for a moment as he stared at her in shock, the pain radiating up from his groin. She had kicked him hard enough that Deny was sure something had burst; he felt like vomiting. Harley grinned and did a half spin with her body bringing her leg around, the kick just missing him as Denys leaned out of his way at the last second feeling the breeze from her foot passing his face. He was impressed that she had kicked that hard, she would have gotten him right in the face if he hadn’t moved in time.

Harley snarled, hopped up onto the bleacher in front of her (now empty of patrons) her little black skirt fluttering cutely for a moment before she leapt off with a quick full body spin, her skirt flaring out in perfect cheerleader-like perfection. Denys panicked and reached out catch her foot and threw her. Harley yelped, fell, and hit her wounded shoulder on the corner of the aluminum bleachers before she rolled off and landed on the aluminum footboard. Pain exploded down her arm, bringing tears to her eyes. Harley hissed, squeezing her eyes shut for a moment against the hot flash of pain. She gasped, but rolled to her back. Denys started to reached down, but Harley arched her back and threw her legs up to strike him squarely in the chest forcing him to take several steps backwards which only barely gave Harley room to arch again and push herself up off the floor to face him.

Jack grinned, now he only had two men to worry about. Out of the corner of his eye, he saw Harley dealing with her opponent; Jack had confidence in his wife’s abilities, wounded though she was. He held his blade in front of him and smiled. “So, may I ask what this is all about?”

Ivan narrowed his eyes exchanging a look with his brother; both men were holding knives as well. “The Roman said whoever takes you out, gets to take over Panessa’s terrority.”

Jack frowned. “He did? Well that just isn't very nice now is it?”

Ivan narrowed his eyes exchanging a look with his brother; both men were holding knives as well. “The Roman said whoever takes you out, gets to take over Panessa’s terrority.”

Jack frowned. “He did? Well that just isn't very nice now is it?”

Bohdan jerked his head at Jack. “Odessa is going to take that piece of the pie pretty boy.”

Jack grinned. “Oh you think I’m pretty? Aren’t you sweet, but I’m afraid my wife won’t like that...she has a tendency to castrate any man who takes a shine to me.”

The two Ukrainians exchanged a look. Jack smiled, clearly judging by their expressions they had heard the gory details of Ben’s body.

“Oh, you thought that was me? Sorry to disappoint boys, that was my wife.” Jack grinned.

Ivan hissed. “Bohdan, let’s kill this piece of korva!”

Bohdan narrowed his eyes at Jack before he rushed him, making several quick stabbing motions with his blade. Jack jumped back, leaping backwards onto the seat behind him, his arms thrown out for balance as he leaned and weaved to avoid the swift, broad strokes coming from Bohdan. Ivan was about to join his brother when he was grabbed from behind and swung around to find himself facing Bruce Wayne.

Wayne smiled. “No one hits my brother while I’m around, unless it's me.”

Ivan snarled swiping his blade at Bruce, who blocked the Ukrainian’s wrist with his forearm, forcing the blade down, then brought the elbow of his other arm across his body and used that to smash Ivan in the side the face. The big Ukranian stumbled back, but he didn’t fall; instead he twisted around. Bruce moved, keeping Ivan in front of him, his shifting of position bringing him alongside his brother.

Bruce glanced at Jack who was breathing hard, but smiling. “What’s going on Jack?”

Jack glanced sideways at Bruce giving his brother another beautiful smile. “You really don’t want to know Brucie.”

Bruce gave Jack a sour look just as Ivan brought his knife forward, under Bruce’s guard to try to stab him quickly in the stomach. Bruce blocked the strike, then punched the man in the chest with enough force that Ivan stumbled back, choking and coughing for breath.

Jack weaved away avoiding a quick stab from Bohdan, but the man brought his other arm around for a tight hard punch to Jack’s side, catching him right in his broken ribs.

Jack hissed as a white flash of pain lanced up his side, slowing his movements. Jack flipped his blade in the air to catch it again in an underhanded hold. He lunged with the blade in front of him, but Bohran avoided Jack’s attack, trying to bring his elbow down on the bend in Jack’s arm. Jack yanked his entire body backwards just as the Ukrainian twisted his body and caught Jack across his chin with his elbow. Jack hissed, his lips cutting across his teeth.

Bruce frowned with concern. “Jack?”

“I’m fine, just...don’t worry.” Jack actually smiled at Bruce, a genuine smile, not one of the smiles that Jack always gave Bruce, half-cocky amusement, half belligerent little brother. Bruce didn’t look convinced by Jack’s smile, but he couldn’t deny that seeing Jack smile like that...like the brother he knew, made that connection with Jack that he knew had slipped away, suddenly feel a little tighter, but he wasn’t able to say or do more before Ivan lunged and grabbed Bruce by the shoulders of his suit. Bruce responded by grabbing Ivan too, both men holding on to each other by the shoulders, the two big men locked in a struggled of almost equal strength.

Jack glanced at his brother, then chuckled grinning at Bohdan. “Shall we dance sweetie?”

*

Harley, using only her left hand, brought her fist up in an underhand swing, her knuckles meeting with Denys’ chin in an impressive hit that sent the large man reeling backwards as the impact knocked the man’s head back. Harley grinned viciously, but the strike cost her, her shoulder wound flared, pain burst like a bright white hot star down the length of her arm and throughout her shoulder.

Harley winced in pain not just from her arm, but also her hand; the impact of her fist on his chin sent a vibration of pain into her bones; the skin of her knuckles tore, burning pain raced down her hand. It was as if she had decided to hit a granite wall instead of a man.

Harley glared at the Ukrainian and his stupid iron jaw as the flare of pain raced up her arm and through her shoulder. Harley shook out her fist with a snarled. “FUCK!”
Denys held his blade up. He glanced once over the blonde woman in front of him, his eyes going over her shoulder to see his brothers, not just fighting with their target, but with another man who looked to be Bruce Wayne, Gotham’s favorite billionaire playboy. For a moment his face twisted up in confusion before his attention was drawn to the floor of the bleachers they were all standing on. It was difficult to see with the weird circus lighting, but Denys caught a glimpse of Tony lying on his side, a pool of blood under him.

Denys cursed. He knew this whole thing was a bad idea. They should never have gotten involved in this...let The Roman and his people take down the Red Hood! Especially not after they had returned home to get Ivan’s blade after they had already left that night, bringing bad luck down on them. You never returned home when you forgot something! It was an old superstition, but superstitions like that were old and known for a reason! He knew that, Ivan knew that! Their mother always told them it was bad luck to return home when you forgot something! She had always said that! But Ivan was stubborn, wouldn’t listen! He had said old superstitions had no place in the United States, in their new adopted home, but Denys had just not been able to shake the feeling that going back to get that knife had doomed them all somehow.

Jack giggled, his grin wide as he lunged forward, flipping his knife to a better grip before he leapt up and stabbed Bohdan in the chest. Bohdan looked up, pain spreading from the wound just beneath his collarbone to look into Jack Wayne’s eyes. For a moment Bohdan would have sworn he was looking into the eyes of a demon, something crazed and without mercy. Jack’s smile, his blue eyes glaring down at him...for a moment he was truly scared.

Bruce snarled at Jack. “Be careful! Don’t kill him! We need to restrain them for the police!”

Jack turned to give Bruce an incredulous look while he dodged the Ukrainian’s attacks. “What? For the police? These guys are trying to kill Harley and me!” Jack gritted out while jumping back, just barely avoiding a knife swipe.

Bruce narrowed his eyes at his brother until Jack groaned with an over the top eye roll. “Fine!” He slipped his blade away into his jacket, returning his full attention to Bohdan.

“Lucky you.” He grinned. “My big brother doesn’t want you dead.”

Jack turned his body just slightly to the side and brought his leg up, bending the knee and snapped his foot out to catch the man square in the crotch. Bohdan’s eyes widened comically as he stared at Jack. He dropped his blade, his hands immediately going to his crotch as he let out a strained, muffled groan of pain. Jack grinned, turning and repeating the kick. His foot snapped out and hit the man in the face, snapping his head back.

Jack chuckled as he walked over and looked down at the now unconscious Bohdan. “You know, one of my favorite Mel Brooks quotes is that tragedy is cutting your finger, but comedy is when you fall into an open sewer and die...I would add, or when an imbecile gets kicked in the crotch.”

Next to Jack, Bruce threw Ivan. Jack caught a glimpse from the side as the man was easily tossed by his brother. Jack smirked, impressed. The man toppled over some of the benches, rolling, his to knees and hit the floor with an impact that made his teeth vibrate before he was able to push himself to his feet. Bruce leapt over the bench just as Ivan, wobbling to his feet, turned at the approaching shadow that was Bruce Wayne and blindly, without truly aiming, took several slashes at him. Bruce threw his arms out, avoiding the attack, just barely, before his foot snapped out to strike Ivan in the chest. Ivan groaned, kept his footing and lunged, the blade aimed for Bruce’s face. Bruce leaned back and grabbed Ivan’s arm, yanking the limb forward while at the same time twisting his body so that his back was to his attacker while hauling the arm over his shoulder. Bruce brought the man’s arm down hard on his shoulder while at the same time struggling to yank the knife out of his hand. He reached up, holding Ivan’s arm with both hands, yanking down with all his strength until Ivan let go of the knife. Bruce grabbed it and turned.

Ivan threw his hand up. Bruce, holding the knife blade outward, unintentionally embedded the blade in Ivan’s palm, the sharp metal slicing through cleanly as if Ivan’s hand was no more solid than melting butter. The two men stared at one another.

Jack, seeing his brother and the man locked as they were, laughed. “Oh, this is funny.”

Bruce let go of the blade and, with just a little hop in his step, he brought his fist down over the man’s outstretched arm and slammed him in the face, right in the middle of his nose with all his considerable strength.

The man’s head didn’t move. His head didn’t twist or jerk, he simply stood still as the punch hit him square in the nose. The sound of crunching bone could be heard, followed by the man collapsing like the building Jack had blown up.

Bruce looked over at his brother as he dropped to secure the man. He started to yell at Jack to do the same, but when he looked over Jack had rushed toward Harley.

*

Denys watched as his brothers were taken down by the two men. His eyes frantically looked around for an escape, but the woman took that moment to charge him. She turned herself to her good side, the side without the sling and rammed her shoulder into him, throwing him off balance. Denys didn’t fall, but he did bring his blade around thinking to stab her in her wounded shoulder. Harley hissed as she did a light jump, her little black skirt fluttering, and put as much power as she could behind her good arm and swung down, ignoring the knife in his hand to slam her fist into Denys’ face, breaking his nose.

The Ukrainian stumbled back with the taste of blood in his mouth, but before he could react to her, their target, Jack Wayne, had approached and put himself between Denys and the woman.

Jack grinned. “Hi!” he said cheerily.

Then Jack’s hand snapped out and hit Denys in the throat with the side of his hand. Denys gasped followed by a strained gurgling sound followed by a strained cough as he dropped his knife and grabbed for his throat.

Jack grinned. “You know, it’s not nice to pick on my wife.”

Jack then reached out swiftly with his left hand, grabbed the man by the back of his neck just as he threw a hard right, his fist meeting Denys’ face with a meaty sounding impact. The Ukrainian fell coughing and gasping. Jack grinned down at him before he turned, gently taking Harley by her shoulders.

“You okay pumpkin?” Jack asked with concern.

Harley nodded. “Yeah puddin, I’m okay.”

Jack reached out to cup her face between his hands, his blue eyes studying her intently while his thumbs stroked her cheeks tenderly.
“You’re sure?”

Harley nodded. “Yes puddin. I’m sure.” She gave him a soft smile. Jack pulled her close and gently kissed her. Harley melted into the kiss, losing herself in the feel of his lips, the taste of his tongue...when the kiss was disturbed by the sound of someone clearing their throat.

Jack pulled back and sighed, rolling his eyes, turning to look behind his wife to see his brother standing there patiently.

“You wanna help me secure these men?” Bruce lifted a brow at his brother. Jack sighed looking back at his wife, his hands still on her throat, his thumbs never stopped in their gentle caress of her cheeks.

“Give me a sec sweets, then we’re going home,” Jack murmured. Harley nodded. Jack eased her down to the bench, sliding his hand along her good arm as he did so, bringing her hand up to his lips and kissed her knuckles before he walked over to his brother. He frowned as he passed the pink elephants, now dirty and stomped on from the fight. Jack pressed his lips together in annoyance and as he stepped pass Ivan, who was still dazed. Jack snarled and kicked the man as he passed.

Bruce was securing Bohdan and looked up. “I think I heard sirens. The police should be here any minute.”

Jack smiled. “Well goodie, you can give them all the details...just leave Harley and me out of it. We’re going home.”

Bruce stood and grabbed Jack by the arm just as his little brother turned to leave. “You can’t just leave! These men attacked you--you have to tell the police.”

Jack yanked his arm out of his brother’s grip. “I don’t have to tell them anything Bruce.”

Bruce stared at his brother in shock seeming to lose his voice for a moment before he hissed. “Jack, where have you been? What have you been doing? These men...they’re mobsters...what is going on with you?” Bruce’s look of concern bordered on anger.

Jack frowned, his eyes narrowed. “You know Bruce, you lost the privilege of asking me my business when you threw me into Arkham. My business is my own and I don’t feel like talking to the police. You can play nice with them if you want.” Jack turned to walk away but Bruce grabbed him by the shoulder and spun Jack around.

“Don’t walk away from me! You can’t walk away from this! You killed someone!” Bruce hissed, his eyes going to the body of Tony Zucco.

Jack’s movements were quick, quicker than Bruce had ever seen before. Jack had pulled his switchblade from his jacket, extended the knife so quickly that Bruce didn’t realize what had happened until Jack had the point of the blade pricking the underside of Bruce’s chin. Bruce’s eyes widened in shock.

“Don’t touch me Bruce. Don’t you dare tell me what I can and can’t do. Don’t get me wrong, I appreciate you rushing over here to help. You have my thanks big brother, but I don’t owe you anything else. And yeah, I killed him, in self-defense...so what? Why don’t you go find that date of yours? Or does she mean as much to you as say, Selina, Talia...me?” Jack sneered and turned away. “Come on Harley.” Jack shot a grin at his brother, pushing a hand through his hair, slicking back the few stray strands that had come loose around his forehead.

Harley stood up glancing over at Bruce as Jack put his arm around her waist and walked her out of the Big Top. Bruce watched them go feeling a cold pit in the middle of his stomach.

*

Jack decided to call a Gotham City cab instead of an Uber. For some reason he didn’t feel comfortable with the car service after the attack tonight. Harley stayed quiet, sensing that her husband wasn’t really in the mood to discuss what had happened yet with the fight or with his brother.

When they arrived back at the little studio apartment, Jack turned and locked the door. He turned around and leaned against the door with a sigh. “Well, that was interesting.” He grinned with a huff.

Harley had flopped onto the end of the bed kicking off her ankle boots before flopping back with a wince of pain, her one arm flung out to the side.

Jack smiled walking over to her. He stopped, reached down to remove his shoes and tossed them to the side before he dropped down to his knees between her legs. He moved his hands over her knees and up her thighs. Harley just smiled relaxing into Jack’s touch. He reached up and grabbed the top of her tights and pulled them down. Harley only moved enough to lift her hips up allowing him to tug the tights down easier.

Jack smirked, tossing them away to run his hands up and down her bare legs. Harley sighed happily, then frowned. She pushed herself up with one hand to look down at Jack.

“You don’t think Bruce would have followed us do you?”

Jack snorted while he rubbed her legs picking up her foot and started to knead his thumbs into her instep. “Nah...he’ll be too busy with the cops. Though I’m curious if he’ll tell them the complete truth or not...” Jack frowned in thought as he switched to her other foot.

“What about The Roman and his hit on you?” Harley asked, her concern apparent in her tone and expression.

Jack shook his head. “I’m not worried. I’ll call Alex later, tell him to put the word out that if The Roman wants to play games with me...I’m more than willing to play…” He shrugged. “I suspect this is more of a test. See how I do under pressure I suppose.” Jack smiled. “I like playing games. You know that sweets.” Jack kissed her knee before he stood up and started to slip out of his jacket, pulling at his tie and undoing the buttons of his dress shirt.

Harley watched him, licking her lips slowly, her desire spiking hot and burning through her. Jack smiled at her as he tossed his clothes onto the floor, undoing the buckle of his pants, stepped out of his slacks leaving him wearing only his boxers, sock garters and socks. Harley pressed her teeth into her bottom lip, her brow furrowed with desire as she made a little growl in the back of her throat.

Jack smiled winking at her as he stepped closer to the bed, put one foot on the edge before he reached down to unlatch one of the garters.

Harley watched intently, heated desire rushing to her groin and breasts. Why boxer shorts, sock garters and socks were so damn sexy, Harley had no idea, but damn if watching Jack undress, his fingers brushing down along his legs to unsnap those garters just made Harley hot all over like it was a hundred degrees in here. Jack slipped the garter off, tossing it toward the rest of his clothing, then he rolled the sock down and slipped it off. He grinned at her and wiggled his toes before putting his other foot up and started to undo the clip of the other garter.

Jack lifted a brow at her. “And why are you still dressed?”
Harley giggled. “Sorry puddin, you were distracting me!”

Jack tossed the other garter and grinned giving her an amused, yet seductive look. “Am I?”

Harley giggled stood up and with her one good hand, reached around to rotate her skirt around until the zipper was in front. She then pulled the zipper down before wiggling out of her skirt leaving her in a pair of black panties.

Jack grinned as he stepped closer, his eyes raking over her legs and the black, laced triangle of fabric between her them. “Would you like some help with that sweater?”

Harley smiled and looked through her lashes at Jack. “I would like that?”

Jack reached forward, tenderly moving her hair to the side and slowly pulled her sling over her head, easing her arm down gently. Harley flexed her fingers carefully as Jack gently turned her around, once more moving her hair out of the way with a sweet caress. There was a small zipper at the neck of the sweater that he slowly pulled down. He reached back up, staring at the back of her neck before he smiled, reaching up to drag his fingertip along the back of her slender neck, caressing her skin. Jack leaned in and pressed his lips to the back of her neck, dragging the tip of his nose against her skin, inhaling her scent. Jack’s eyes fluttered close dragging his lips and nose along her soft skin, feeling the tickle of tiny hairs against his lips.

Harley closed her eyes leaning back into his attentions. Her nipples grew harder when Jack’s hands slid under the sweater and started to ease it up. He carefully helped pull her wounded arm through first. Harley hissed a little, the place where she had been shot was tender, especially after the fight at the circus, but Jack moved slowly, carefully until he had his arm free. He tugged the sweater over her head, then down her opposite arm, dropping it to the floor once he was done.

Harley shivered just slightly; the room’s air was cooler, but Jack brushed his lips along her shoulder instantly heating her skin, her very soul with his touch. His arms wrapped around her waist while he dragged his lips along her neck to her ear, then reached up to brush her hair aside where his tongue tickled the back of her ear. Harley leaned into him, her eyes closed. Jack’s hands slid down over her stomach, stopping at the hem of her panties. He moaned softly against her ear.

“I want to taste you Harley...taste you on my tongue, on my lips when you cum...I want to lick all of you…” his thumbs hooked around the hem of her panties and began a slow descent, pulling the fabric down with his thumbs.

Harley groaned arching back against him while reaching back with her good arm, her fingers brushing through his hair.

Jack’s lips roamed down her neck as Harley tilted her head to expose her throat more fully to him. Jack’s tongue danced along her skin, down to her shoulder. He pressed his lips to her shoulder before he tenderly dragged his teeth along her shoulder. Jack grinned and used the tip of his tongue to caress her shoulder, then along her shoulder blade as he pushed her panties down her thighs. Harley stepped wider to allow the delicate cloth to fall the rest of the way down her calves to the floor.

Jack growled when he brought his lips back up her throat, caress her ear, his hands sliding along her thighs before the tips of his fingers caressed her groin, delicately brushing along the triangle of her sex. He wasn’t’ actually touching her clitoris but Harley groan, it almost felt like it, the way his fingertips just barely caressed over the mound of her sex, then lower, his fingers brushing over her labia without parting them. He sunk his teeth into her shoulder before he finally slipped a finger between her intimate lips, his finger tip brushing her swollen clitoris. Harley groaned, reaching around to grab Jack’s hip with her hands ignoring the pull on her still healing shoulder.

She moaned with need, feeling the bulge of him and the glide of the cotton of his boxers against her backside. He pressed against her, his tongue playing, tickling along her ear just before he pressed his teeth against the tender spot right behind her ear.

Jack pressed her back against him, weaving his hips side to side as if they were dancing to music only they could hear while the fingers of one hand stroked her slowly up and down, teasing her clitoris with a slow back and forth over the sensitive, swollen flesh.

Harley moaned, her head resting back against Jack’s shoulder as he snaked his other hand up the side of her body, his fingertips grazing her skin until he came to her bra and easily, with one hand, unhooked it. He dragged his tongue along the slope of her throat while at the same time dragging the strap down her arm with his free hand and pressing her back against him, his fingers caressing her softly moving up and down. He rocked his hips more, pressed tight against her, his finger pressing and rolling against her clitoris. Harley gasped softly, weaving in sync with him.

Jack purred against her ear, singing:

“Oh girl, the things you make me do!
Genius is the only way to describe you Anything you've ever dreamed of, baby
Just ask me, I'll do, I'll do
I'll do it for you, babying softly…”

Harley giggled softly. “Is that Prince?”

Jack caught her earlobe with his teeth before he answered. “Yes. You like it?”

Harley, her eyes still closed, dragged her teeth over her bottom lip as she whispered. “Oh yes puddin.”

Jack chuckled and the vibration rippled down her throat. Jack switched hands to continue the slow, sensual roll of his fingers on her clitoris while he reached up to tug her other bra strap down.

Harley let the bra slip down her arm to fall to the floor. Jack grasped her breast, squeezed as his hips ground against her backside.

“Harley…” Jack moaned in her ear, his hot breath caressing her skin as his fingers rubbed slowly up and down then started to move in a circle, gradually building speed while he held her breast, his fingertip flicking over the nipple.

“Cum for me Harley…” Jack groaned.

She came quickly with the sweet caress of her puddin’s voice her orgasm bloomed, spreading out to send heated pleasure cascading through her body, to make her weak in the knees and shivering for more. Jack groaned. “Oh yes Harley..” He continued to finger her in swift, yet sensual circles until she didn’t think she could take any more.

“Jack...uh puddin…” Harley pressed herself up against this fingers, feeling as if her whole body were vibrating until Jack finally released her.
He turned her around and Harley threw her arms around his neck to kiss him deeply. Jack smiled against her lips before he reached up, taking her arms in his hands away from his neck and thrust her back against the bed. Harley’s yelp of surprise quickly transformed into a giggle. Jack grinned at her and pushed his boxers down. Harley’s eyes roamed over Jack’s body, taking in his slim muscles, his flat stomach, the hardness of his erection—it all made her mouth water.

“Get on the bed Harley,” her husband cooed softly as he kicked his boxer shorts out of the way and stepped closer to the bed, brushing his fingertips over her knees. She scooted back into the middle of the bed watching while Jack crawled onto the bed after her, stalking her. His blue eyes seemed to glow through his thick, dark lashes, the smile on his face predatory. She grinned, her eyes skating over his lean body again, her body tightening, heating in response to her desire for him, though she lingered on the bruises on his side where his ribs had been broken, the color still harsh on his skin. She hated to see him hurt...but the feeling faded when Jack was hovering over her, his hair falling across his brow, his tongue tracing the bottom of his teeth as he looked at her as if he wanted to devour her.

Jack smiled, his eyes raking over her again, taking in the pink of her nipples, the way her breasts seemed to swell, the flush to her skin, all of her made his body quake for her.

For a moment she thought Jack was going to take her right then, but instead he murmured. “Roll onto your good side…”

Harley frowned, slightly confused, but did as he asked, rolling onto her uninjured arm. Jack then turned around lying sideways next to her, his head facing her groin and then he lifted her leg to position it over his head. Harley let him guide her, careful not to drop her leg on him, pointing her toe to balance against the bed grinning as his erection was now by her face. She leaned closer brushing her cheek, lips and nose against the warmth of his shaft, his thigh, exhaling her hot breath against his skin.

Jack shuddered at her touch while he slowly caressed her side, his fingers gliding along her hip, dancing against the crease in her flesh where her thigh and groin met as he leaned in and pressed a kiss against her swollen clitoris, the tip of his tongue flicking between her folds. Harley sucked in her breath at the warm, wet feel of his tongue.

“Comfortable?” He asked, his breath brushing warm against her wet clitoris, his breath tickling against her overly sensitive sex.

“Yes puddin,” Harley answered, flicking her tongue out as she did. Jack’s hips jerked in response before he answered. “Good baby girl...good.”

Jack wrapped his arm around her, spreading his fingers and pressing his hand into her ass, burying his mouth against her and licked slowly flicking his tongue back and forth. He growled, rubbing his cheek against her thigh opening his mouth wide, kissing her sex passionately.

Harley made a soft gasp before she wrapped her lips around his member, sucking him into her mouth, enjoying the warm feel of him against her lips and tongue, the smooth satin texture of his member in her mouth accompanied by the heat of his flesh. She wrapped her arm around his waist, careful of her healing wound, but she gently guided Jack closer, her hand resting on the smooth, round cheek of his buttock while she took all of him into her mouth, relaxing her throat to press deeper, brushing her nose against his scrotum before pulling back, weaving her tongue as she pulled her lips along his hard member.

Jack had bent his leg up, being careful of her shoulder, but she could still feel his thigh against her cheek, the slick muscle of his legs. She liked the warm feel of his skin, the satin of his flesh against her, having her breasts pressed against his stomach, having her puddin’s body surround her while she licked and sucked on him at her leisure. Harley twirled her tongue around him before dragging her teeth gently over his shaft, grinning brightly when she felt him jerk and moan.

Jack groaned against her clitoris, his lips pressed against her, his tongue twirling softly, teasing the delicate flesh, but the vibration of his pleasure, the feel of his groaning, rippled up her body. He flicked his tongue swiftly over her clitoris before pressing his lips down on her again and sucked, accompanied by his own moaned pleasure. Harley pressed her lips down on him, sucking and bobbing her head slowly, wanting him to feel each press of her lips, each stroke of her tongue. Together she and Jack were pleasuring one another, their mouths working together to bring each other closer to climax. It was supremely intimate, in many ways more intimate than when they were making love...there was so much trust, understanding, dependence on one another...

Harley whimpered with Jack’s shaft in her mouth. She had to release him to breathe and let out a deep pleasure-filled cry. Jack was licking her just right, the warm tickle was building, quickly spreading from her groin, through her torso, spreading into her breasts. Harley groaned, her hips thrusting toward Jack’s mouth, demanding more...she quickly took him back into her mouth with a groan of pleasure.

Jack’s member swelled, her tongue and lips, the warmth and wetness of her mouth...God her tongue! Jack thought, the way she kept twisting her tongue back and forth...

He was going to cum. His hips started to thrust in time to her sucking…

Harley moaned, tasting him on her tongue....her puddin was close and so was she…

Harley gasped around his member, her climax burst spreading warmth and a tickling peak of pleasure.

Jack groaned, tasting her pleasure on his tongue. Her hips continued to thrust lightly toward him and Jack buried his tongue in her, his arm going tight around her waist as he yanked her hips toward him, sliding his hand from her ass to the back of her thigh. He wrapped his arm around her leg, pressing the warm flesh against his cheek, hugging her, holding her close. He moved his lips over her in a slow, tender kiss, rubbing his cheek against her inner thigh.

Harley whimpered, sucking hard on Jack, flicking her tongue over the slit of his erection tasting the sweet saltiness of him before she sucked him, once more, deeply into her mouth. Jack groaned against her intimate lips, jerking his hips. She could taste how close he was...she pressed her lips, moving her mouth up and down, her lips pressed against his sensitive skin, feeling her husband shudder.

Jack pulled back from licking her to cry out with a loud groan. His orgasm ripped from him, pulled from him by her mouth, her lips...his whole body arching toward Harley. Harley tasted him as he filled her mouth with his climax, smiling as his essence rolled along her tongue. She swallowed, then pressed her lips against him and continued to lick, suck and tease him feeling the way Jack’s fingers pressed into skin as he struggled to hold on to her.

Jack grunted and groaned, his hips thrusting toward her gently until he was spent, but Harley pulled out his orgasm, forcing him into spasms of pleasure until Jack wasn’t sure how much more he could take. So for revenge he focused once more on her clitoris, tugging on the overly sensitive nub with his lips, flicking with his tongue until she cried out once more, releasing him in her need to be vocal.

Jack chuckled coming up for air and laying his head against her hip as he grinned down at her, his eyes tracing the outline of her body, his lips wet with her.
“How was that?” He smiled kissing her hips.

Harley giggled rolling onto her back just a little and bending Jack’s leg so she could kiss his calf. “I love you puddin.”

Jack rubbed his cheek against her hips before resting his head against her pelvis and closed his eyes. Her skin was soft, like silk… “My Harley-girl…” He purred wrapping his arms around her leg… Harley reached down to play with his hair, her eyes closed.

Jack smiled, content, before he sighed. “I better call Alex...The Roman needs to know exactly where things stand. Besides, he ruined our circus date.”

Harley grinned. “You’ll teach him the error of his ways puddin.”

Jack kissed her belly button. “You’re absolutely right my pumpkin pie.”

They both drifted to sleep with Harley caressing his scalp and Jack’s head resting on her stomach.

*

The next morning Bruce Wayne sat in his home office staring at his computer letting his cup of coffee get cold. Alfred came in carrying a fresh cup of coffee on a tray, along with a plate of buttered toast since he knew that Bruce hadn’t eaten breakfast yet. He walked over, stopping beside the desk. Bruce didn’t look up as Alfred switched out the cups before setting the plate of toast by Bruce’s elbow. He was slowly returning to his old chores, his strength returning, but Bruce was doing this best to make sure that Alfred stayed on “light” duty for a while yet.

Alfred stood behind Bruce and frowned, his eyes glancing over the news articles on the computer. Bruce was reading about the accident at the circus last night. Bruce had been more than his usual stoic self when he had returned last night. It was clear to Alfred that something more had happened than the accident, but he had been tight lipped about whatever it was that had happened. Alfred had wanted to ask, but he had decided to respect Bruce’s privacy. The younger man would tell him when he was ready.

Alfred glanced over the article before he said softly, “That poor young man.”

“Yes. Orphaned,” Bruce said distractedly. “Both parents, gone, right in front of him.”

“Do you know what will become of him now?” Alfred asked stepping over to catch a glimpse of Bruce’s face in profile.

“I spoke to Gordon this morning, told him how the boy’s story resonated with me, watching his parents die in front of him like that.” Bruce shook his head. “Gordon believes it wasn’t an accidental death either...Tony Zucco...” Bruce’s frown deepened. Alfred could see that there was something more there, something under the skin that the young man before him wasn’t willing to deal with at the moment, but Bruce only said. “He died last night, but Gordon stated that Zucco was an enforcer for the mob, dealt in protection fees, that sort of thing...he thinks that the death of the Graysons is connected to Zucco somehow.” Bruce absently picked up the coffee without really looking at it and took a sip before he continued.

“He also said that the boy will be put in the system unless someone steps forward and claims him. Even though there are several members of the circus who would gladly take the boy in, Gordon doesn’t think any social worker is going to want a child being raised in the circus.” Bruce rubbed his chin.
Alfred tilted his head. “Perhaps, you would consider being the boy’s guardian?”

Bruce frowned, his eyes still focused on the article in front of him. “I...I don’t know Alfred...my work...”

“You said it yourself Master Bruce, you need a partner,” Alfred said softly.

Bruce frowned. His voice was pitched low, but Alfred knew from experience that the tone meant Bruce was thinking. “He’s just a child.”

“Yes, he is a child, lost in the world. Only someone like you may truly understand what he is going through...even if you didn’t make him a partner Master Bruce, perhaps you can give him something that he would otherwise lack...guidance, a helping hand to steer him through the pain he is going through.”

Bruce finally turned to look at Alfred. Alfred smiled at Bruce and said softly. “I won’t always be around Master Bruce and I don’t want you to be alone. Perhaps you should consider what good you could do for another lost young man in need of guidance...”

Bruce frowned glancing away from Alfred before he answered. “Maybe you’re right.”

Alfred blinked in astonishment, but then quickly schooled his features. “Shall I make a phone call, sir?”

Bruce nodded. “Yes. Let’s see about bringing Richard Grayson into the family.”

* *

Wearing only a bathrobe and his briefs, Frost wandered into his kitchen blurry eyed and annoyed. Alex had called him and told him what had happened with the Boss and Miss Harley. Frost was pissed. The Boss should never had gone out without him, definitely not after what had happened with Panessa. Frost wasn’t sure how he was going to go about talking to Jack about not going out without him...he knew his Boss was more than capable of taking care of himself, but he shouldn’t be out without him. It just wasn’t smart...the Boss needed him, needed another set of eyes to watch his back.

Frost pulled out his coffeemaker and fumbled around for the container with the coffee grounds thinking about how he was going to explain to his Boss about not going out anywhere without him when his cellphone rang.

Frost rolled his eyes. He had left the damn thing back in his bedroom. He hurried across his apartment to the bedroom, catching the phone on the fourth ring.

“Frost.”

“Hey sweetheart.”

Frost froze. It was Agatha Wayne. His face transformed into a grin. The night he had spent with her--the several nights actually--were some of the best he had ever had. The woman knew exactly what she was doing and she had the body...Frost pulled his bathrobe over his growing erection...just thinking about the woman...

Frost collected himself. “Agatha...where are you calling from?”

He could hear the smile in her voice. “Gotham.”
Frost grinned. “Gotham...so you’re back.”

“I’m back honey. I need to speak with Jack soon, but...I do have some time before that...can I come over?” Her voice was a rich purr that had Frost’s groin aching. Frost had never been into older women...but Agatha… “Yeah..I would like that.” Two days later…

Jack was barefoot, dressed in a pair of purple boxer shorts decorated with colorful balloons and an unbuttoned midnight blue silk dress shirt, sitting on the couch with Harley’s leg on his lap. Harley was dressed in her own pair of boxers, red and white striped like candy canes with a sleeveless white t-shirt without a bra that read “Bad Bitch” across the front, her hair in pigtails. She was reclined while Jack was carefully painting her toenails, alternating between red and black, his expression quite serious as he worked on her nails and stroking her foot with his free hand while he worked. His own fingernails had already been painted by Harley, a midnight blue to match his shirt. Harley was leaning back with Jack’s phone playing a game of fishdom when the phone started to ring. Harley frowned handing the phone the Jack.

“It’s Alex puddin.”

Jack carefully put the polish down and reached for the phone, pushing the button. “Hey Alex.”

“Okay buddy, I got you your meeting. Called in a lot of favors, but The Roman has agreed to meet with you and Harley, with one bodyguard.”

Jack grinned. “When?”

“Tonight. He wants you to meet him at Kellari Taverna on 44th. Eight pm. He says to dress nice,” Alex said, his voice serious. Alex didn’t say anything for a moment, but Jack could sense he wanted--needed--to say something. Finally he heard his friend take a breath. “This is fucking dangerous Jack. I mean like real fucking dangerous. This is fucking Falcone! The Roman himself, the big guy…”

Jack cut him off. “Alex, you’re going to hyperventilate. This is me, Jack Wayne...I can handle him. You know I can.”

Alex didn’t say anything right away, but Jack could hear him breathing on the other end before he muttered. “I’m a fucking idiot staying with you. I had this nice comfy life ya know…”

Jack chuckled. “You still do. You just have a little side business with me.”

Alex snorted. “Anyone finds out...fuck man, I swear you’re going to get me killed or arrested. Have that fucking Batman swooping in on me…”

Jack laughed. “Hey, all that could happen with or without me. No worries though, buddy; just text me the address and I’ll call Frost. It’ll be fine.”

Alex let out a long sigh. “Just promise me you’ll be careful man.”

“I promise mom. I’ll be careful,” Jack said with a grin.

Alex muttered, “You’re such a fucker,” before he hung up. A moment later, a text with the address came through.

Jack grinned at Harley. “We’re getting dressed up tonight Harley my sweets! Going to go talk some shop with Mr. Carmine Falcone.”

Harley giggled. “Weee!”
Frost sat in the front seat of the car that he had rented (on Jack’s request) for tonight, (a Mercedes Mayback 57S) feeling a bit uncomfortable. When Jack had called him, he had been in the middle of an interesting position with Agatha...but the worst of it was when she had asked him not to say anything about her being there...not yet. She needed to talk to Jack, but not tonight...when he had left his apartment it was leaving a naked Agatha in his bed with the promise she would still be there when he returned. He was happy about that, but he didn’t like keeping things from the Boss. He had eventually decided if Agatha didn’t say anything by the end of the week, he would just tell the Boss about his aunt being back. With that thought, Frost settled in more comfortably with himself...now he just had to hope they got through tonight without any of them getting killed.

The restaurant that Frost pulled up in front of was a typical high-end Gotham eating establishment. He frowned slightly, studying the place. He saw nothing fancier about this one compared to other expensive restaurants in Gotham with a covered walkway that led into the restaurant, fancy lights and a long wall of windows so that you could look in as you walked by. But Kellari Taverna had been around for a long time and it was one of the harder places to reserve a seat as it was always booked solid.

Frost drove the car around to the side, finding a place to park. He was dressed in one of the black Armani suits that Jack provided him, looked every inch the bodyguard. Frost was armed with his customized Glock 17 in a holster under his suit. He knew Jack was armed too, just not with a gun. Jack was carrying that switchblade his wife had bought him, concealed in a pocket in the inner lining of his suit. He had made sure that Frost knew about the concealed weapon; it seemed to make the former cop a little less anxious.

Frost pulled the door open and stepped back for Jack and Harley to exit.

Jack came first. Tonight he wore a white suit, cut for someone with Jack’s physique, highlighting his thin, wiry frame. Jack looked thin, but that hid just how strong Jack Wayne really was, like a secret weapon he held in check until needed. He was wearing a midnight blue silk shirt that matched his fingernails. He wore a matching white vest, but the tie was a shade of purple so dark, and paired against the midnight blue shirt, it looked almost black. His shoes continued the theme, white and blue brogues with blue and white striped socks. He had Harley outline his eyes in black and his lips in red.

He grinned as he unfolded from the car, reaching up to adjust his white trilby hat.

He reached in taking hold of Harley’s hand and lifted her out of the car. She looked devastatingly beautiful Jack thought, in a blue dress only a shade or two lighter than his shirt. The dress hugged her body, with a long pencil skirt that went past her knees, (wearing a pair of silvery white heels), but at the same time showed off her curves. The dress was also sleeveless, with bows on the shoulders, showing off her smooth shoulders (when she removed the wrap) and it had a plunging neckline, well past her breastbone that had Jack hungry to run his tongue over her skin. Harley had scooped her hair up into a loose bun with a few tantalizing curls hanging loose around her shoulders and framing her face.

Frost smiled. They made quite the pair in their matching color outfits. Somehow they both portrayed a sense of power, money and danger...there was definitely an air of danger about the two of them as they walked into the restaurant, Harley’s arm through Jack’s, Frost only a couple of steps behind them.

The inside of the restaurant was warm with the smell of food, mostly fish (which made Harley turn a little pale.) The floor was a soft golden hardwood floor, the lighting a warm buttery color. Tables were everywhere, though most were intimate round and square tables with white tablecloths and candles. There were a few booths and alcoves where someone could have even more intimate dining.

A young woman, with a rather very short, trimmed afro wearing a typical black and white restaurant outfit hurried over to them. “Do you have a reservation?”

Jack smiled. “Falcone, Carmine Falcone is expecting us.”

She blinked, then nodded and snapped her finger. A large caramel-colored man who resembled a walking wall (an opinion that Harley quickly whispered in Jack’s ear and which earned her a giggle from him) walked closer and motioned. “Follow me.”

The three of them followed the big man through the main room of the restaurant, past some stone arches and finally arrived at the back where they were greeted with a scene.

Carmine was sitting at the head of a large curved table. There looked to be enough seating for twelve or more, but the man was by himself with a large red lobster on the plate before him.

When they arrived, the big man who had escorted them stepped aside.

At first Falcone didn't respond; he simply cracked the shell of the lobster.

Jack didn’t say anything, the only indication that he was ready for anything was the way his grip on Harley’s hand— which he had taken while they walked back here, had tightened.

Falcone looked up, taking a bite of the lobster and said around a mouthful of food.

“So, you’re the Red Hood.”
Jack removed his hat handing it to Frost, but a smirk danced across his features as his blue eyes evaluated Falcone. The man was old, powerful and thought highly of himself--with good reason Jack supposed--but Jack had already decided that Falcone was old school, set in his ways and had been in charge for too long. Term limits, he thought. It was time to give Gotham a new sort of criminal he told himself, something new, something fun. But for now, Jack would play his part, “The New Guy.”

Jack gave Falcone his best smile. “Yes. I am The Red Hood.”

Falcone tilted his head, studied Jack for few beats while he chewed on another bite of lobster. It was clear the man was purposely taking his time, making Jack and Harley stand there before him, an exercise in power so transparent that it made Jack want to laugh. After another bite of food Falcone reached for his glass of wine. He took a sip, smiling like a patronizing yet indulgent grandfather. He set the glass down and motioned at the two seats across from him at the table.

“Please, why don’t you and your lady sit, have something to eat, some wine, while we talk business.” Falcone gestured toward the seats in front of him. “I’m assuming your lady friend won’t mind if the boys talk shop?” Falcone grinned at Harley though he did give her a once over with his eyes. Harley’s hand closest to Jack balled into a fist, but Jack wrapped his hand around hers urging her to settle. She did, letting Jack pull her chair out for her while she gave Falcone a big smile as she took her seat.

As if on cue, two young women dressed in black and white seemed to appear out of nowhere, each carrying plates they set down in front of Jack and Harley. Each plate contained a full boiled lobster, the steam rising slowly off of it, already cracked open for them next to a bowl of melted butter; baby glazed carrots, baked potatoes and steamed clams filled out the rest of the plate. Next, one of the waitresses set down two wine glasses, then poured a Chardonnay into each of their glasses.

Harley glanced sideways at Jack with her brow lifted, clearly asking her husband a question without actually speaking. Jack glanced at her, then the food, then Falcone.

Falcone watched their little exchange before he chuckled. “Cautious, I like that.”

He leaned over with his fork and took a bite of everything on Jack’s plate, then did the same to Harley’s before he laughed. “If I were going to kill you, I wouldn't use poison my boy. I would simply shoot you and I sure as hell wouldn’t do it here in my favorite restaurant. Though I suppose I don’t blame you, since I did put out the word that whoever took care of you would get Panessa’s territory...but after last night, I changed my mind. Now please. Eat.”

Jack glanced at Harley again then shrugged as he picked up his fork. Harley followed suit, ignoring the lobster for the vegetables. Falcone frowned noticing her turning her nose up at the lobster, but Jack smiled and took a bite of the shellfish, chewing slowly before he answered.

“My wife isn’t fond of seafood.”

Harley grinned and added. “Nope.”

Falcone shrugged, took a sip of his wine. He closed his eyes savoring the flavor, then spoke softly after a moment. “Domaine Leflaive Batard Montrachet Grand Cru, expensive, but worth it. From my own cellars.” Falcone smiled at Jack. Jack carefully avoided narrowing his eyes. He knew what Falcone was doing; he was playing a game. A game that showed off how wealthy he was, but it was also a game of power. Expensive wine showed that he had money, which always equaled power, but Falcone was also making mistakes. One, that he thought Jack would be impressed with the money...which he wasn’t, and two...the fool was purposely ignoring Harley, relegating her to eyecandy and nothing more...

“Now, here is what I’m willing to do...Jack. May I call you Jack?” Falcone lifted his brow at Jack. Jack picked up his glass of wine, took a sip as he looked across the table at Falcone. He discerned this was not a request. The old mobster would do what he wanted, thinking that he held all the cards. Asking Jack’s permission to call him by his name was just a ploy, a way to try to make Jack think they were “pals,” that this was a meeting of equals before he put Jack in his place. Inside Jack was ready to leap across the table, grab Falcone’s fork and bury it in the man’s throat.

Harley was sipping her wine too as she glanced at her husband. She could tell what was going through Jack’s mind. While his expression was mild, Harley knew that look in his eyes—he was murderously angry, though he was keeping himself in check. Harley glanced at Falcone, but it was clear to her, to Dr. Harleen Quinzel, that this man was blind. He didn’t see Jack for the danger he was. Rather, all he saw was a young man, capable maybe, but with no influence and no “family” to back him up. He may be a Wayne, but Falcone only saw a young upstart. She smiled against her wine glass. Her puddin would put him straight.

Jack pressed his lips together, but nodded. He could play along for a while, until he didn’t want to play anymore. Which would be very soon. He glanced at his wife and reached under the table to squeeze her knee. Harley smiled at him; he had her support. She knew her husband well enough to stay quiet, to play the part that Falcone expected—at least for now. Jack had a plan, though; she could almost see the gears moving in her puddin’s mind. She sucked on her bottom lip to prevent herself from giggling.

Falcone leaned back in his seat. The man had an air about him, a certain level of dignity mixed into the theater he was putting on for their benefit. He smiled, that kindly grandfather type smile before he spoke.

“You can have Panessa’s territory. You showed yourself...capable,” he gestured with one hand in a small sweeping motion, “when you disposed of him and his lieutenants and avoiding the Odessa family...I can respect that. So I’m willing to give you the benefit for the doubt for a price. All business, whether it’s guns, drugs, whores...all of it...I get part of your take--sixty percent. “ Falcone smiled taking another sip of wine. He looked back down at his meal not even bothering to gauge Jack’s expression. “Furthermore, you are to leave the other families alone from this point. Personal issues between individual members, fine, take care of that yourself, but anything bigger? You come to me. I’m allowing you to exist, allowing you control of Panessa’s territory, but I expect you to behave, respect your betters and pay your dues.”

Harley frowned looking between the two men. She knew her husband well enough to know that Falcone’s demands weren’t going to sit well with her puddin. It didn’t sit well with her. Telling them they had to pay him so much? Harley was no financial whiz, but sixty percent?! And then leaving the other families alone? It didn’t take a genius to figure out how that was going to go down. It wouldn’t take long before the other families would find ways to hurt The Red Hood gang in ways that they couldn’t retaliate without bringing Falcone down on them.

Harley looked at her husband, but Jack was only smiling as he spoke. “Of course. I understand completely. We’re a small gang, have to work our way up.” Jack finished his glass of wine.

Falcone smiled. “Good, good. It’s nice to to see that you’re smart as well as attractive Mr. Wayne.
Now, one more thing. I’m assuming your brother has no idea what you’re doing correct?” The man speared a carrot from his plate as he gave Jack a mild questioning look.

Harley sensed her husband stiffen slightly at the mention of his brother.

“You’re correct,” he said cautiously.

“I’m also assuming you don’t want him to know about your...activities?” Falcone asked mildly.

Jack tilted his head. “What are you getting at?”

Falcone smiled. “Nothing, just trying to understand. And your girl…” He looked at Harley.

Jack smiled, but at the mention of Harley a deep coldness settled around him. It was palpable and for a moment Harley noticed that Falcone seemed uncomfortable, noting that he had made a slight miscalculation.

When Jack spoke though, there was a bright smile on his lips. “I didn’t think The Roman had to lower himself to threatening women and families.”

Falcone smiled back at Jack. The tension in the air between them built for a split second before Falcone laughed. “You know, I like you. You follow the rules Red Hood, I think that you will do just fine. You have my blessing. The other families will know that all of Panessa’s territory is yours and no one will mess with you unless that want to take it up with me. Now, how would you both like some dessert? They have a fantastic chocolate mousse cake here!”

* *

Jack was quiet as they left the restaurant, his arm around Harley’s waist. Neither Harley nor Frost questioned him or made a comment, though it was clear from Frost’s expression he had a lot to say. It wasn’t until they had returned to the car and slid inside that Jack spoke. (Frost made Jack and Harley wait a moment, giving the car a quick inspection, inside and out, before he would let them get in.)

Once they were inside the vehicle, Harley asked softly. “So, we going to do what he says?”

Jack snorted. “Please. Me? Stick to the rules?! Harley! I’m insulted!”

Jack laughed and Harley giggled, grabbing his face between her hands and pulling him toward her for a kiss. “I knew you would never do what that old mobster said!”

Harley grinned at him.

Jack wrapped his hands around her waist and lifted Harley onto his lap, shoving her dress up her legs so that she could straddle him. He grinned sliding his hands up her thighs, then around her hips gripping her ass and pulling her close. Harley caressed the sides of his neck, leaning over him before she ran her tongue along his cheek. Jack chuckled, his eyes sliding closed for a moment, sighing happily reaching up to caress her face, tugging playfully on a long strand of blonde hair that curled around her face. “Oh no Harley. I’m going to follow his rules for a while, just until I’m ready to take over, or I get bored. Either way, when I’m ready, I’m--we’re--going to burn Falcone and the others to the ground.” Jack purred, rubbing his nose against hers, his lips brushing lightly along hers.

Frost glanced in the rearview. “We probably should think about expanding the gang Boss. I mean...I was just thinking if you are going to…”
Jack had leaned Harley close, her head to the side so he could nip her neck. He dragged his lips along her throat before he spoke. He was still careful of her healing shoulder. She had stopped wearing her sling (not wanting to show weakness in front of Falcone), but Jack knew it still hurt her.

“Mmm...you’re right, we do. Need some muscle, need to fill in a few more skill sets to...” Jack grabbed Harley’s earlobe with his teeth, his fingers finding a spot of bare skin to caress while he spoke. “Flesh out the gang so that we become more of a force than we are now.” Jack ran his tongue along the slope of Harley’s neck, tugging the shoulder of her dress down to continue his lick along her shoulder. “So Frost, what do you suggest?” He glanced up, but Frost had his eyes on the road. Jack smiled and pulled the zipper on the back of Harley’s dress down. She wasn’t wearing a bra with this particular dress so when he tugged down the zipper, the dress fell loose, dropping off her shoulder. Harley giggled softly running her tongue along his ear.

Jack dragged his teeth along his bottom lip, his eyes traveling the line of her dress where it fell just over her nearly exposed breasts, the cloth of the dress resting just over her nipples. Jack smiled leaning down to press his lips to the tops of her breasts. Harley sucked in a breath.

“Gotham city jail released a flock of minor criminals just the other day because of budget cuts and overcrowding Boss; a whole lot a men and women looking for employment. I know a few of them...” Frost said as he drove, his eyes on the road and not on what was progressing in the back seat. Speaking while he knew what was happening was...odd, but Frost just went with it, continuing the conversation.

“There are several of them that would be good for what you want Boss,” Frost continued.

“Mm...I like it. Frost, arrange for some interviews,” Jack said quietly as he tugged on Harley’s hair, pulling her into a deep, passionate kiss. Jack’s fingers grabbed harder at her hair, his fingers pulling just enough to make her moan softly, her hands sliding down over the front of his silk shirt. He pulled her head back to expose her neck and her breasts, the dress falling to her waist. The streetlights flashed across her skin as Frost drove them home.

Jack licked his lips, holding her head back. Harley didn’t move, waiting. Her breathing was becoming ragged with want, she dug her nails into his shirt, and the slight, sharp feel through the material excited him more.

Jack spoke without looking up, his focus completely on Harley’s exposed breasts, the way the light danced over her skin. “I think tomorrow we need to do an evaluation of our new territory Frost my dear, see what’s what since we have The Roman’s blessing, such as it is...”

With his other hand Jack grabbed one of Harley’s breasts, forcing the soft mound up where he bent down and lavished his tongue over her nipple. Harley groaned, her hands sliding up into his hair, knocking his hat off and completely mussing up his hair. He pulled at her nipple with his lips before bringing her head up to press his mouth hard against hers while keeping his fingers twisted in her locks. Jack’s tongue slipped into her mouth where Harley gently caught his tongue with her teeth.

They kissed long and hard, with Jack being the one to break the kiss, but Harley caught his bottom lip with her teeth. Jack grinned, blue eyes catching the streetlights, glowing from under his furrowed brow. He growled softly. Just the sound of Jack’s want had Harley breathing heavier, her body hot, heavy, ready for anything, but she whispered.

“Whatcha wanna do tomorrow puddin?”

Frost spoke up, squirming a little as he drove. They were very distracting and it was also making him think of Agatha who was back at his apartment. He hated not telling Mr. Wayne that his aunt was back in town, or that she was shacking up with him for the last day or so, but she had asked him not to tell Jack. She needed to speak with him when she was ready. Frost respected her wishes even if it went against his loyalty to Mr. Wayne. He had to tell himself that it was actually in his Boss’s best interest, and he was certain that it was.

He glanced once in the rearview. He couldn’t see most of Mr.Wayne’s head, though it looked like Harley was holding his head to her breasts. Frost swallowed and spoke.

“There’s a nightclub that’s in the middle of Panessa’s territory called “Over the Moon” that might be a good place to start Boss.”

Harley moaned softly, combing her fingers through Jack’s hair while he sucked on her breasts, his teeth pressing into her soft flesh. She shivered, whispering to her husband.

“I think that’s a good idea puddin, starting at the club...nightclubs are where everyone goes and a lot of news circulates. Whoever owns the place would be a good person to talk to...oh!” She giggled as his tongue flicked over her breast while she started to rub herself against him; feeling how hard Jack was only made her want him more. Jack grunted grabbing her hips and pressing her down harder still. They both hissed together.

Frost nodded. “She’s right. Club owners tend to have their ears to the ground wherever their located.
Plus I’ve heard some good things about the owner of “Over the Moon.” They might be helpful in getting the neighborhood in order for you Boss.” He accidentally glanced behind him to see the two of them dry humping, Jack thrusting up while Harley had grabbed the back of the seat and was weaving her hips against Jack’s lap. Their eyes locked on each other.

Jack shoved Harley’s dress up a little further, past her hips, while unzipping his slacks. He dragged his teeth over his bottom lip, his eyes looking down over her breasts. He shifted his position before he spoke, tugging open his slacks and pulling his erection free of his boxers with a groan.

Jack had difficulty speaking, distracted as his eyes roamed over his wife’s body. “Then...uh...that’s what we’re going to do...grr...ah...okay...”Over the Moon.” Tomorrow night...” Jack held his shaft with one hand yanking Harley’s panties aside with the other. Harley groaned rubbing against the head of his erection, feeling the hardness of him, the heat from him. She rolled her body, undulating her hips slowly. Jack growled low in his throat.

“Ooh...that...that sounds fun...uh...” she hissed just before she lowered herself down on him, gasping as she felt that warm push of his member thrusting into her. Harley fingers dug into the leather of the backseat before she wrapped her arms around Jack’s shoulders, leaning into him.

Jack moaned, pressing her down hard on his erection, shivering as the liquid softness of her surrounded him. He dropped his head back, his eyes partly closed for a moment.

Harley began to move, first rising up before sliding down, piercing herself on him. She gave herself over to fucking, moving with the hard bouncing before she ground down on him.

Jack wrapped his arms around her, pulling her close, nibbling her breasts as his panting grew heavier. He arched his body back, stretching his legs with a loud groan. *

Frost reached down and adjusted himself as he drove, his crotch ached listening to them and thinking about Agatha. He jumped a little snatching his hand back and putting it on the wheel when Harley bumped against the passenger seat.

*
Harley arched back until her shoulder arched and head hit the front seat, the whole time thrusting her hips down on Jack. He was panting heavily as he rolled a hand up her body, between her breasts feeling the softness of her skin under his fingers. He caressed her breasts, squeezing one then the other while he held her with his other hand, keeping her firmly pressed on him. He dragged his hand down, pulling the fabric of her dress out of his way. His thumb slid between her legs, finding her swollen clitoris and started to rub in slow wide circles.

Harley responded with a cry, her body banging against the passenger seat and back against Jack until she came with loud cry of his name.

Jack inhaled quickly, following her orgasm with his own. He yanked her close wrapping his arms tight around her, thrusting into her, holding her desperately while riding out the orgasm until he didn’t think he could move again. He held her tightly as if he were afraid she would disappear, kissing her throat, then her cheeks and eyes, and finally her mouth.

“I love you Harley...I love you. You’re my diamond, my everything,” he whispered against her lips. “I don’t...I don’t want to lose you ever. I’m going to bring Gotham under my heel...” He looked into her eyes stroking her hair. “I’m going to take all of them down until we’re the ones on top Harley. We are going to be a curse on Gotham Harley...on the Wayne name...” Jack chuckled. “On all of it.” They would be on top and he would make Gotham safer for his wife. As much as Gotham had hurt them, he would hurt Gotham and bring the city under his control.

Harley cupped his face in her hands, returning his kisses stroking her thumbs along his cheeks. She could feel something. “I love you puddin. I know you will puddin, you’re going to all make them sorry.” She smiled and licked his lips. <>He did make one correction to her statement.

“We are going to make them sorry, sweets. We’re a team, you and I.” Jack grinned and held her tight unwilling to let her go until the arrived back at the apartment.

* *

Early afternoon of the next day, Harley was humming to herself. The humming was gradually turning into her singing along to the song that was playing on her phone she had sitting on the counter while she made some tea in the little kitchen. She was busying herself singing and dancing to her playlist while she waited for their lunch order to arrive.

Jack, who was wearing a pair of black slacks, a dark green dress shirt with a black vest over the top which he hadn’t bothered to button and a pair of black and green vertical striped socks, was sitting on the couch, a cigarette in one hand, glanced up from where he was looking over a map of their new territory on his phone, forwarded to him from Trope who had put it together for them and sent it over. He had immediately noticed that the night club that Frost had mentioned last night “Over the Moon” was practically in the middle of the territory. Jack smirked. Convenient he had thought to himself, but right now his eyes were on his wife.

He grinned distracted by her. Harley was wearing a pair of super short pair of pink athletic shorts, short enough that he could see a hint of her nicely rounded rear, and a white hoodie. Otherwise, she was barefoot, her hair in pigtails as she danced and sang to the song that was playing on her phone. She weaved her hips back and forth, twirled and spun on her toes and sang into her cup of tea. Not only did watching her turn him on, with her nicely muscled legs and tight ass, but just her bright smile, blue eyes...Jack grinned brightly falling in love with her just a little bit more as she sang and danced. (She still wasn’t using her arm completely naturally, he noticed, just as Jack’s ribs still hurt him, but neither of them let their healing injuries slow them down/)

“Something in you lit up heaven in me
The feeling won't let me sleep

'Cause I'm lost in the way you move, the way you feel

One kiss is all it takes

Fallin' in love with me

Possibilities…”

He pressed his teeth into his lips, his blue eyes following the lines of her legs as she moved when there was a knock at the door breaking the spell that Harley had been weaving around Jack.

Harley grinned when she heard the knock and hurried over to pause the song and chiming up happily. “Sandwiches!! I'm starved!”

Jack chuckled watching her as she set her tea down and hurried over to the door. She pulled it open without looking through the peephole (Jack winced. He really needed to talk to her about opening the door like that...without looking. And she should at least have grabbed his switchblade…he loved her to bits, but she was still too trusting despite everything they had been through together. Still, she made him smile...that was just one of the many things that he loved about Harley.) Jack had just put his phone down when Harley squeaked in surprise.

Jack was on his feet in an instant ready to kill when he stopped short and stared. Framed in the open doorway was his Aunt Agatha and Frost.

“Hey Jackie sweetie.” Agatha smiled.

She was looking her usual elegant self, dressed in pair of tight black slacks, knee high black boots, white lace top and a fur trimmed black jacket, her hair swept up in an elegant updo, her arm wrapped around Frost who was standing next to her looking both sheepish, embarrassed and ashamed.

Jack looked stunned. “Auntie?”

She grinned at her nephew, releasing Frost and throwing her arms out. “I’m back!”

Harley squealed and threw herself at the older woman. Agatha laughed, catching Harley in an embrace as the younger woman jumped into her arms.

“Oh Agatha!!! I’m so happy to see you!!” Harley vibrated with excitement, then yelped. “Oh my gosh, come in!! Sorry!! I thought you guys were our lunch! We ordered some sandwiches. Oh maybe I can call them and add an order for you before it’s…”

Agatha laughed squeezing Harley tight before she let the younger woman go. Harley wrapped her good arm around Agatha and led the older woman inside while she spoke, Frost following a step behind. “No worries sweetie. Frost and I already had lunch before coming over.”

Jack hurried over and wrapped his arms around his aunt. “God...the last time I heard from you was...was it when I called about the basement at Catherine House?” Jack grinned. “I’m really happy to see you, but what are you doing back in Gotham so soon? I didn’t expect to see you in...oh, I don’t know...ten years?” He stepped back to look at her.

Agatha’s smile didn’t reach her eyes. “We need to talk Jackie.”

Harley frowned with a glance at Frost, but it was clear whatever it was that Agatha needed to discuss, she hadn’t spoken about it with Frost either.

“Can I get you guys…” Harley started to speak, but that was when there was a knock at the door. Harley blushed. “Oh—probably our lunch.”

She headed to the door while Jack moved motioning for Agatha and Frost to sit while he sat in one of the chairs. Harley came back just seconds later with a bag of food.

She set it down on the coffee table.

“We have a bottle of wine if you guys would like…” Harley asked and Agatha laughed. “Oh honey, you are a lifesaver! Yes! Wine please!”

Jack laughed at his aunt and rose to help Harley. Jack pulled the bottle out of the cabinet looking it over while Harley was pulling down four wine glasses. “It’s Truth & Valor Cabernet Sauvignon Paso Robles—that good auntie?” Jack held the bottle up as he glanced over at her. He noticed that she and Frost were practically sitting shoulder to shoulder.

Agatha laughed. “If it's alcohol, it’s fantastic! But yes sweetie, that’s a great afternoon wine! Black cherry and dark chocolate, just what the doctor ordered.” Agatha smiled as Jack came over with the bottle and Harley with the glasses.

After a few minutes the four of them were sitting, Jack had Harley in his lap, both of them eating their lunch, two “LGBT” sandwiches (Linguica Spread, Goat Cheese, Bacon, Tomato, Sautéed Onions, Seasonal Lettuce, Olive Oil) from the local Gotham City Sandwich shop down the street.

Jack swallowed a bite of sandwich and set it down on the table before chasing it with a sip of red wine before he spoke.

“So, why are you back in Gotham?” he asked, curiosity clear on his features.

Agatha was filling her glass again from the bottle, her third. “I found Cobb,” she said, her voice lacking its usual humor. “Did you kill him?”

Jack frowned. Harley glanced at Jack. Agatha didn’t seem upset about having found a body, nor did she seem especially shocked.

Jack stared at his aunt, clearly looking for something. He frowned. “You didn’t call the police did you?”

She shook her head. “No, I didn’t. I took care of the body Jack...I almost didn’t, but...the Owls will figure it out soon...especially after Ben Orchard’s death.”

Harley piped up, not wanting her husband to be accused of a murder that wasn’t his... “I killed Ben.”

Agatha was about to set her wine glass down when she froze with a glance at Frost. It was clear that while Frost may not have told them about Agatha being in town, he hadn’t told her everything about the death of Ben Orchard or Tomaso Panessa either.

Agatha didn’t react the way that Harley thought she might--instead, the older woman chuckled. “Well, it seems we all have...secrets.” She took a deep breath through her nose and poured enough wine into her glass to have the red liquid dangerously close to spilling over the edge.

“I’ll start first. William Cobb and Ben Orchard were part of the Court of Owls...as was I.”
Harley and Jack both became very still, listening intently as Agatha continued.

“I was a Talon. But first, you must understand, the Court of Owls has been around for a very long time and will probably be around long after the four of us are gone. Each wealthy family of Gotham is part of the Court.”

Jack opened his mouth to protest, but Agatha held her hand up for him to remain silent. “Even the Waynes, though my father refused to join...refused to give them one of his children.” She took a breath. “Each major family is supposed to donate a child to the Court. That child serves the Court however the Court wants...the family remains safe and reaps the profits of being part of the Court. It’s...complicated. My father refused, so I joined willingly.”

Agatha sipped on her wine, her smile a little sad. “I wanted adventure, to be my own person. I didn’t want to marry into another of Gotham’s elite families. I was young, stupid, headstrong...I made a deal with the Court: I would join as long as my family never knew...and they never did... “ She took a long sip of her wine before she spoke again.

“I killed people for them. I was good at it, but...But I never married. Never had children of my own. If I had then…” She shook her head. “I was getting older and slower...the Court wanted fresh blood. They started to look toward you and Bruce...particularly you Jack. So I made another deal. They would leave you boys alone and I would leave Gotham...instead I would become something else for the Court, something more dangerous than an assassin...I became their spy.” She looked between Jack and Harley as she spoke. “I won’t get into all the gory details with you now, but I gave up Gotham, my home to prevent you, Jackie, from being made part of the Court of Owls. But now...you’ve killed Ben Orchard…”

Harley started to reiterate that she had actually done Ben’s murder, but Agatha held up her hand. “It won’t matter Harley dear....you’re his wife...they will consider you both the orchestrators of Ben’s death. The Court may have been after Ben for what he did to you...for going against orders, and for leaving, but Ben’s father is...well the man has clout within the Court...he won’t let Ben’s death go unanswered. And you killed Cobb...they are not going to be happy when they find out. I hid his body, which might buy us a few weeks...months...or only days...who knows?” She frowned. “I’m not sure what’s going to happen, but you needed to know this...I should have told you before I gave you Catherine House.” She lifted her purse up--which she had placed on the floor beside her--and pulled out her package of cigarettes, a package of German made Shepheard’s Hotel cigarettes; she flipped the package open and pulled one out. Before she could search for her lighter, Jack pulled out the special lighter his wife had stolen for him while keeping an arm around Harley so that she wouldn’t tumble from his lap. He leaned over and lit his aunt’s cigarette. She puffed a few times to get it started before breathing in deeply, holding the smoke for a few seconds before releasing it with a sigh. “Thank you darling.”

Jack nodded and sat back, but he blinked a few times then started to giggle. “My aunt...my alcoholic,” (here Agatha frowned. “Hey now! I’m not an alcoholic!...much!”) “Is...sorry…” Jack couldn’t quite control his laughter. “My aunt was an assassin...and now spy? Right?”

She shrugged with a slow blink. “Mostly industrial, but yes.”

“And now the Court of Owls is after me for what? A job? Or punishment? I’ve already said that I plan on wiping them out of Gotham…” Jack smiled at his aunt who lifted a brow at him.

“You do?” She asked, curiosity making her voice slightly harsh.

Jack’s grin spread across his face. “Oh I do...if not completely eliminate, them I’m going to make damn fucking sure they know not to touch me or mine. And that includes my ass of a brother who would be shitting himself if he knew about any of this!” Jack squeezed Harley tight against himself as he started to rock with laughter. Harley wrapped her arms around Jack, giggle with him, but after a moment or two she realized Jack was more than simply laughing, it was almost like he was having a fit. He was laughing so hard that tears had sprung to his eyes.

Frost and Agatha were watching him with wary expressions, but Harley just curled herself around him giggling until she could lift Jack’s face a little. She was suddenly taken by the look in his eyes...his eyes reminded her for a moment of what his eyes had looked like when they had been in the asylum...that edge of madness hovering just out of reach...just a hint of green at the edges of the blue. Harley could see it...almost feel it as she looked at him, but just as soon as she had seen it, Jack took a deep breath, releasing her to wipe his face.

She caressed his face gently. “Puddin, you all right?” she asked in a whisper.

Jack giggled at her. “It’s just so damn funny Harls...so damn funny...Bruce’s picture perfect world...all of it is fake! Phoney!! How funny is that?” He laughed, bending over.

Harley rubbed his back tenderly.

“Puddin?” she asked.

Jack giggled, looking into her face one more time and for a second Harley saw someone else...her puddin was there, but...not. Then Jack grinned at her and blinked.....and just like that, whatever she had seen was no longer there.

Harley started to move off Jack’s lap, but he reached out and snagged her, pulling her back to him. His voice was a whisper only she could hear.

“Stay...please Harley...I need you close.” Jack ducked his head to catch her eyes. He had a little boy smile on his face, slightly lost, slightly amused, but all of it was her puddin, her Jack.

Harley smiled and settled back onto his lap, snuggling close, putting her arm around his waist. The healing gunshot wound pulled, but she ignored it pressing against him.

Jack leaned his head against hers. He seemed to take strength from her before he spoke again.

“How long before you think the Owls will be trouble?” he asked his aunt.

Agatha had finished off the wine, setting the empty bottle down. “Yeah...yes...I mean yes, I think so...not sure how long...but I think you have some time. I just wish you hadn’t put on that red mask...that belongs to the Owls...to me...to Catherine House. It’s good that you two moved, but...”

She shook her head, both amused and impressed...

“Fashion Week Jack? Robbing the rich...I mean...why?”

Jack laughed. “Why not?”

Agatha stared at her nephew for a good few heartbeats before she grinned. “It’s a bit strange to hear my words that I said to your father, throwed back at me. You have another bottle of wine?”

Harley smiled kissing Jack’s forehead. “I’ll get it puddin.”

He reluctantly let her go. “Bruce always thought the worst of me...so I figure, why not be the best of the worst?”
Agatha chuckled. “Oh Jackie, I can’t believe I’m condoning this.”

Harley returned with a new bottle of wine. She handed it to Jack who read the label. “Antinori Tignanello 2014?”

Agatha grinned holding her glass out. “Filler up nephew.”

Jack smiled opening the bottle with the corkscrew that Harley had brought back with her, the wine bottle popping nicely. He filled his aunt’s glass, then everyone else's before setting the bottle down on the table between them.

He gathered Harley onto his lap again, picking up his glass. “To the future Wayne criminal empire.”

Agatha nearly snorted her wine as she was taking a sip, laughing at Jack. “Oh Jackie, this is so much NOT what Thomas wanted for you boys.”

Jack frowned for a moment...Harley could see something in Jack’s eyes, an emotion that she didn’t understand, but he hissed softly. “Should have thought about that before he got himself killed.” He said it only for Harley to hear before he downed his entire glass of wine with one swallow. He leaned forward to set the glass down a little hard before taking a breath.

Jack smiled. “So, you think I have a while before I have to worry about taking care of the Owls. Good. I want to take care of some other business...not sure how long that is going to take…”

*

Frost arrived to pick Jack and Harley up around nine in the evening. It was chilly out, a slight drizzle in the air making everything damp, but Jack and Harley had decided against coats for the night since they were heading to a nightclub which would be packed with people and therefore warm, though Jack did use an umbrella to protect them from the light rain.

Harley, her hair worn loose around her shoulders and showing off her curls, wore a chic little black dress that was form fitting. The dress had a choker-like neckline and long sleeves that ended in ruffles, while at the same time the large cutouts at the shoulder exposed her shoulders and collarbone; she still wore a bandage over her stitched and healing bullet wound, but it somehow didn’t detract from how she looked in the dress.

Harley had done her makeup with a smoky feel that made her light blue eyes stand out more and had paired the little dress with a pair of ankle-strap stiletto sandals; under her dress, barely hidden by the short skirt, Harley had a thigh holster high up on her thigh, where she had a knife, an eight inch knife that her husband had insisted she have on her person. She looked and smelled good enough to eat Jack thought gleefully as he handed her into the back of the car.

Jack wore a black suit tonight, slim cut slacks, vest, with a black and white vertical striped dress shirt sans tie, a few buttons open at the collar to expose his neck and the hollow of his throat...all of which made Harley want to lick her way up his neck before making her way down her husband’s lean form. He wore a pair of black gloves, and a pair of black and white wingtip, brogues oxfords. To complete his look Harley had outlined his eyes in black, making the blue stand out like an electric blue, while his lips were a warm shade of red that matched hers...very kissable Harley thought to herself as she took her seat in the car.

He followed the umbrella and slipped into the car next to Harley, adjusting his jacket slightly, feeling the hard end of the switchblade in his pocket, bumping against his ribs. Jack smoothed his jacket before he pulled Harley closer, leaning down to press a kiss to her bare shoulder. Harley smiled, blushing softly. Jack grinned, dragging his gloved fingers over her smooth shoulder, just before he leaned down to brush his lips across her skin.

“I do like this dress,” he whispered, his breath tickling her shoulder. “Mm...your skin is so soft my sweets.”

Harley giggled, goosebumps racing along her skin from Jack’s lips.

Jack reached down and brushed her thigh where her dress rode up, revealing the blade on her thigh.

“I love that you’re a dangerous woman Harls.” Jack flicked his tongue just barely brushing her lips, though he planned on putting lipstick marks all over her body tonight once their business was concluded...he thought he might spare Frost by waiting until they were back at the apartment later tonight...but it was going to be difficult he thought to himself.

Jack smiled continuing to brush his lips tenderly over Harley’s shoulder as he said, “To the club Frost my dear.”

Frost smiled and saluted Jack in the rearview mirror, pulling out into traffic. Jack continued to caress Harley’s bare shoulder when he asked suddenly.

“So, Frost...you and my aunt...more than just a fling?”

It took an effort of will for Frost not to accidentally step on the gas or slam on the breaks when Jack asked his question. Frost glanced in the rearview. He could see Harley smiling slowly, her head slightly bowed as Jack brushed his lips along her shoulder or lightly pressed his lips to her skin; his arm around her shoulder allowed his gloved fingers to slowly caress her hair or her ear. Jack glanced over, sensing that Frost was watching him.

“Ah...well...No...not really...I...I don’t actually know Boss.” Frost cringed with the realization.

Jack laughed accompanied by Harley’s giggle. “Don’t worry about it. I was just curious.” Jack laid his head against Harley’s shoulder.

Frost still looked slightly pale, but Jack just smiled. “Just don’t let her eat you up Frost.”

“Yes, Boss.”

He glanced back, but it seemed that Jack had moved on, his attention now on kissing his wife. Frost let out a breath of relief.

*

The “Over the Moon” nightclub was located in what had once been a hotel. The building had the art deco feel of the 1920s, a combination of glamour and luxury. The club had played on that design element and feel with a stylized neon logo sign that hung over the front entrance in bright blue and yellow. The sign showed a smiling crescent moon with stars around it and the name of the club as the curved other side of the moon, making a full circle.

There were two large bouncers at the front entrance which had a velvet rope across the front. The two men, one a large black man, the other a large white man, looked like twins in size, both dressed in tuxedos that echoed that 1920’s feel, were checking ID’s and letting people inside slowly. The music could be heard out on the street as Frost drove the car around to the back of the building.

The back of the building was a large parking area where an attendant waited to let cars inside, giving them a ticket. Frost pulled up after only waiting a couple of minutes before getting their ticket and pulling into the parking lot and parking the car.

Jack smiled. “Ready sweets?”

Harley nodded though she was frowning slightly. “I still think you should have worn the helmet...I mean the Red Hood.” She looked slightly uncomfortable.

Jack caressed her chin. “I thought we discussed that sweets? This is business...I want the owner here to know who they are dealing with. Besides...we’re both armed, and we have Frost. It’ll be fine. Promise...pinky promise.” Jack put his hand up in a fist, his pinky out.

Frost had come around and opened the car door, standing to the side for Jack to exit.

Harley glanced over at Frost and the open door, then back at her husband. She looked at his hand then at him and giggled taking his pinky with hers. “Fine.”

Jack laughed. “Good, now come on, let’s get some drinks, dance and meet this Fish Mooney…” Jack frowned as he slipped out of the car and reached in for Harley.

“That’s the name correct?” Jack asked Frost as Harley stepped out of the car. The rain had stopped, leaving everything wet and shiny this evening.

Frost nodded as he closed the door behind Harley. “That’s the name that I was told Boss, Fish Mooney.”

* *

Jack and Harley didn’t have to wait to get into the club. Frost approached the two men on duty, whispering that the Hood had arrived. The black bouncer lifted his brows then leaned toward his partner who turned to stare, clearly they had heard about the change in command of the territory. The black man removed the rope and stepped aside.

“Enjoy your evening sir at “Over the Moon.”

Jack grinned as he walked past with Harley on his arm. “Oh I plan on it!”

* *

The inside of the club was filled with lights and sounds. The middle of the room was dominated by an island bar in a large oval; the entire bar looked as if were made of pale pink and purple lights, the middle of it dominated by a castle of glass liquor bottles while four bartenders worked the bar, one at each of the cardinal directions.

At one end of the club was a stage were a live band was playing, doing a cover of a song by a Russian musician named HOMIE. In front of the stage was a dance floor that was currently occupied by a sea of bodies. Numerous people danced, others were sitting at little round tables that were littered here and there like mushrooms, some making out in booths that ran along one wall. There were some strobing lights, some cool steam that would occasional slowly roll through the room while a few employees would weave their way through the place delivering trays of food to people who were sitting at larger tables near the booths.

Jack looked around impressed as they found a space at the bar. “This place is nice. I like it.”

Harley smiled. “Me too! I love all the mirrors on the walls! Trippy!”
Both Jack and Harley noticed that a few of the dancers on the floor were laughing…a lot at absolutely nothing. It was a bit odd; they were completely in the throes of wild fits of laughter while dancing. It was hard to tell with the lights, but Jack could have sworn that their skin looked almost…white…definitely too pale. He couldn’t see the color of their hair clearly from where they were and the lights, but…Jack narrowed his gaze…it was noticeably odd.

Jack leaned close to Harley and hissed. “If I didn’t know any better, I would think they’d been sucking on some of my gas.”

Harley giggled. “Yeah…it’s like…”

But she didn’t get a chance to finish before Frost created a space for them at the bar. “Here ya go Boss.”

Jack laughed and turned to Frost. “Thank you darling. So…let’s get a drink and see if we can’t let Fish Mooney know we’re here.”

Frost nodded. “Probably asking the bartender would be your best bet Boss.”

Jack nodded and grabbed Harley around the waist and lifted her up onto the stool making her giggle. He sat down next to her with a grin and motioned for the bartender, a short young woman wearing a white half shirt and a pair of green shorts with what looked to be army boots; her hair bright green, was shaved into a mohawk. She came gliding over in time to the music which had changed to a cover of Sevdaliza’s “Human.” She grinned brightly at the two of them.

“What can I get you two fashionably delicious people?”

Jack grinned at Harley. “Oh I like her! What’s your name darling?”

The young woman grinned. “Everyone calls me Kermit.” She pointed at her head.

Jack laughed. “Oh that’s lovely. All right Kermit, what’s the best drink you make?”

Kermit grinned. “I make a mean Moscow Mule.”

Jack glanced at Harley. “My dear?”

Harley grinned. “Never had one, let’s try it puddin!”

Jack took Harley’s hand and kissed her fingertips, his eyes dancing with love for her. Kermit stared. She had seen a lot of couples, a lot of lovers and people just starting to be in love, but there was something electric about these two. The way they looked at each other was something special, she could feel it like a force around them.

Jack turned to Kermit holding up two fingers with his free hand while with his other hand he held onto his wife. “Make that two Moscow Mules and could you let Fish Mooney know that Red Hood is here to see her.”

Kermit had started to turn to grab a bottle of vodka when she heard him say Red Hood. She had heard all about Panessa. Hell, everyone in the Panessa family territory had heard about what had happened to the entire family, the building explosion and collapse. It was all anyone had talked about until…Tomaso had wound up dead. But the talk was especially about Panessa’s boy toy. It hadn’t been pretty from what Fish had told Kermit. Fish was convinced that the Red Hood was a woman simply because of what had been rumored to have been done to Panessa’s paramour.
Kermit didn’t know if Fish was right about the Red Hood, but she was happy about the whole thing; that little freak had come in with Tomaso once when Panessa had come in to give Fish a hard time about...who knew. The man would come in drink without paying and dance with a few of the pretty girls or boys he took a fancy to...Ben would sit at the bar and leer at her or make off color comments, really creepy ass stuff. He had given Kermit the creeps. Fish had told her only today that they were under new “management.” Kermit wondered if that meant someone else would be collecting the protection money...or did it just mean new trouble, who knew? But her first impression if this guy and his girl were the Red Hood...she liked them.

Kermit swiftly made their drinks, setting them down in front of them with a smile. “I’ll go tell Fish you’re here.”

Jack gave her a stunning smile. “Thank you Kermit dear.”

*

Fish was sitting in her regular booth, the lights played off her rich brown skin as she watched the dancers. Her short black hair was highlighted with deep red streaks that matched the red and gold dress she wore, a sleeveless, high collared dress that clung to her body like a second skin. She took a drag off her cigarette, letting the nicotine calm her nerves. She was meeting with the big boss in town, the one who had killed all the high rank members of the Panessa family, both male and female with the explosion of that building. The person who had killed Panessa and tortured Ben Orchard, a man she suspected (but didn’t know for sure) had connections to the Court of Owls (who she wasn’t even sure were real or just a nursery rhyme.) Either way this Red Hood was an up and coming force...now she just needed to know how much of a headache this Red Hood was going to make her life.

She might be able to seduce them...male or female...that would be the easiest route to what she wanted, which was total control of her club without the “protection” fees, but she also had higher goals. She wanted a seat at the table...but that was not something she needed to worry about right now...right now she had to see how much of a headache this Red Hood was going to make her life.

She was watching a particular handsome dancer, a young man with creamy white skin when her vision was suddenly blocked by Kermit.

“Fish...they're here.”

Fish frowned at Kermit. “They?”

Kermit nodded. “The Red Hood...it's a guy and his girl...not sure if it's both of them or him...or her, but my guess--it’s both of them. And they got a bodyguard, big guy too...looks like an ex cop.”

Mooney frowned and put out her cigarette in a heavy black ashtray on the table. “Okay, bring them on over.”

Kermit nodded and hurried away. Fish touched her hair and pressed her lips together before reaching forward to grab her glass of wine.

*

Kermit hurried back to see the two of them flirting with each other, their guard standing with that straight back at attention alert only someone who was trained would have...she motioned at them as soon as she was in front of them. “If you’ll follow me.”

Jack smiled picking up his drink and putting his arm around Harley’s waist as she hopped down from her stool and grabbing her drink as well.
They followed Kermit across the room to where a table sat nearby the dance floor. The back of the table was against a curtained wall. Kermit stopped in front of the table where a trim, attractive black woman sat. She smiled and held up her drink.

“Red Hood?”

Jack grinned. “Fish Mooney?”

She grinned and gestured just as Kermit came back over with two chairs in tow.

Jack set his drink down and took one of the chairs, holding it out for Harley before he took the other.

Fish watched them with interest. Nicely dressed, elegant, especially the man. There was something about him that was familiar though she couldn’t put her finger on what. The eyes...she could swear she had seen him before. The woman was lovely; there was a freshness about her features, her hair, everything about her was open, friendly. Fish let her eyes roam over her body. She was fit...tight muscles, though still feminine...wound on her shoulder...interesting...she had heard that Falcone had allowed some of the other families to try and take Panessa’s property from the Red Hood...heard they ended up in jail too, one dead. But there was also something dark about the woman...Fish had seen it before in the mirror...this woman had killed and would kill again.

Now the man, Fish prided herself on her ability to “sense” people...there was darkness to them both, but the man...there was something lurking in him...something...deadly, incredibly dangerous. But when he sat next to his woman, the smile on his face when he turned to face her, he was fucking charming too. She could see the man oozed charm.

There was something deadly about the two of them and there was no mistake, these two came as a set, a packaged deal, you couldn’t have one without the other; she could tell by their body language, the way the man took the blonde’s hand in his, holding her on his lap, both possessive and...he needed her. Interesting, Fish thought.

She smiled and put her hand across the table. “Fish.”

Jack took her hand. “Jack.”

Then Harley took the offered hand. “Harley.”

Fish settled back in her seat. “Kermit, why don’t you get us some fresh drinks dear?” She smiled at Jack and Harley. “So, you are the Red Hood?”

Jack grinned. “We are.”

He pointed at himself and Harley. “We have a few more members to our gang, but Harley and I lead the troops.” Jack smiled brightly.

Fish tilted her head. “You look familiar.”

Jack grinned. “Jack Wayne. You might have seen my brother on the news a time or two...maybe even me.”

Fish blinked as everything clicked together. “Shit. You’re Bruce Wayne’s brother?!”

Jack laughed. “I am. This is my wife and partner Harley.”

Harley waved. “Hi.”
“So, Fish…” Jack leaned his elbow on his table, his other hand wrapped in Harley’s.” He pointed at Fish from across the table. “Let’s talk about how all this is going to work. I know you and many other businesses around the area pay Panessa or his people money to keep you safe...Now I’m willing to admit I don’t know all the ins and outs and I’m looking for someone willing to work with me...tell me what I need to do to make sure the money you guys are paying is put to good use...to actual protection.” Jack’s smile was radiant. “Tell me what the Red Hood can do to help you.”

Harley piped up with a smile. “See, you can be part of the gang or you can simply be part of the territory, we’re giving you the chance to choose.”

Fish stared at him. She looked over at Harley frowning slightly, but Harley was smiling at her. Fish wasn’t sure if they were serious. They looked serious, but she had been burned in the past. Fish picked up her drink, which Kermit had refreshed just moments ago and took a sip before she answered.

“Can I think about this? I mean, I understand you expect money and a response, but you’ve presented me with an interesting idea. I would like to mull it over.”

Jack grinned. “Of course! Just…” Jack sipped his drink. “We want this to work out well for everyone involved, but I also...I don't take betrayal well. My wife and I killed a lot of people to get to this point. I’m not planning on taking a step backwards.”

Harley smiled with a vigorous nod. “A lot of people.”

Jack grinned at Harley before he tugged her close to steal a kiss.

Fish watched all this was a curious expression. These two were not like any “gangsters” she had ever dealt with in the past. She glanced up at their bodyguard who was standing like a stone statue. The man smiled at her and shrugged. Curious she thought...

Jack stared at Harley for a beat. She smiled back at her husband. Jack brought her hand up and kissed her knuckles before he returned his attention back to Fish. “Well my dear, you think about how you want to play this and we’ll talk again tomorrow night?”

Fish nodded. “Tomorrow night is good.”

Jack stood, with Harley following. Harley giggled smiling at Fish, for a moment her accent thickened as Harley waved. “Nice to meetcha Fish.”

“You too Harley, Jack…” Fish stood and nodded before awkwardly returning Harley’s wave. She watched the two of them go with a slight furrow between her brows before she sank back into her seat. That was the moment that Kermit dropped into the seat beside her.

“They fer real?” Kermit asked watching as Jack grabbed Harley around her waist, yanking her onto the dance floor for a few minutes, their bodyguard standing close, the other dancers on the floor moved around him like he was a rock in a river.

The sounds of Lorn’s “Acid Rain” had started to play and Fish could see the two of them, the leaders of the Red Hood gang, dancing. It was almost as if the crowd around them had melted away, the lights spotlighting just the two of them. Fish found herself unable to look away as Jack grabbed Harley, pressed their pelvises together, his hands starting at her lower back and slowly rolling down over her hips, spreading his fingers as he gripped her ass, pressing her close enough that Fish would have thought they would meld together; the way they flowed together, their bodies moved to the music, neither of them looking anywhere but at each other...they were hypnotic to watch.
Fish smirked watching them as the other dancers melted away, leaving a space where Jack and Harley were dancing, an unconscious circle forming around them. Harley wrapped her arms around his neck, one of her legs pressed between his while he did the same to her and his hands began a slow sensual crawl, exploring her back, then the feel of her hips. While the music slowly flowed into another hypnotic song, Lusine’s “Just a Cloud” began to play, the lights switched to softer colors and the two dancers moved with the sound, their bodies rolling and weaving, their eyes only for each other.

The two of them started to kiss while they moved; a slow and sensual play of tongues, bodies pressed intimately together. The kiss quickly turned into a heated, passionate exchange, the sort of kiss that made Fish jealous. She watched for a few moments, but slowly the crowd began forming back around the two lovers. Soon they were swallowed from her sight; the Waynes had disappeared.

Fish sighed, about to say something to Kermit about the offer from the the new Red Hood gang when she heard a voice that made her skin crawl.

“Well ain’t you two ladies just a picture of beauty.”

Fish looked up to see Salvatore “Sal” Maroni standing by her table. Sal was an average size man who was starting to lean toward the heavy side, but with the beefy build of someone who enjoyed boxing. He had thick black hair, but Fish could tell he was starting to thin on top. He wore an expensive grey suit with a white dress shirt with a red and polka dot tie, but the man had a way of making even a tailored suit look like it couldn’t quite fit him. He was smoking a large Toscano cigar and was surrounded by three of his men who to Fish’s eyes looking like carbon copies of one another; all big, all stupid and all going bald. A bag of assholes she thought to herself.

“What are you doing here Maroni?” Fish hissed reaching for her wine. “Didn’t you hear the news? Panessa’s dead and someone else is in charge and I don’t think he is gonna want to work with you like Panessa did.” She gave him a condescending smile.

Maroni pulled one of the chairs that was still sitting in front of her table. He grinned, sitting with his legs wide apart, taking up as much space as possible.

“Oh Fish, Fish...Babes...you always make me laugh. You really think I care about some overzealous asshole thinking he can step into Panessa shoes?” He grinned at Kermit and snapped his fingers. “Hey, go get me a drink sweetheart, a highball.”

Kermit looked over at Fish who just gave her a slight nod.

Maroni grinned. “That’s how I like to see my girls, obedient. Now, you just keep paying me Babes and I’ll make sure nothing happens to you little club here until I take over all of Panessa’s goods.”

Fish narrowed her eyes. “I heard that The Roman called off the hit and gave his blessing to the new boss.”

“You think I fucking care what the old man did? You keep paying your dues Fish or we are going to have a problem and no fucker in a Red Hood is going to help you.”

*

Jack and Harley were giggling as they fell into the back seat of the car.

Harley squealed and giggled when Jack dropped into the seat beside her and grabbed her, yanking her onto his lap as he closed the door. Frost started the engine and began to pull out of the parking lot.
“So, what did you think of her?” Jack asked while nibbling at her shoulder, his arms tight around her.

Harley giggled. “I like her. I think she is going to be big help. If we play our cards right, she might even become a team player.”

Jack laughed. “Oh God Harley...you’re using management terms! Who are you?”

Harley squealed again when Jack started to tickle her. “I’m sorry puddin!!”

Jack laughed, kissing her gently at the same time one hand slid up her dress. Harley felt him caress her thigh along the edge of the strap she wore on her thigh holding the knife in place.

Jack’s nimble fingers worked quickly and he pulled the knife free of its sheath, holding it up. The streetlights outside zipping past highlighted the blade.

Jack grinned looking at the knife then at Harley. “I just had an idea.”

Harley narrowed her eyes at him with a smirk. “Oh?”

Jack leaned back a bit and slowly used the knife to cut a line up the middle of Harley’s dress.

“JACK! I thought you liked the dress!” Harley giggled.

Jack pressed the tip of his tongue to his upper teeth. “Oh I did...now I’m more interested in what’s underneath.”

He laughed softly as Harley leaned her head back allowing him to finish the long cut of the dress with her knife until the fabric fell open. Underneath she wore a pair of red lace panties and a strapless red bra.

Jack’s smile widened. “Oh! It's like Christmas!!”
Jack heard the sound of music playing softly. He opened one eye only to be greeted by light...bright and invasive sunlight. He groaned and grabbed his pillow, pulled it on top of his head to drown out the music and the light. After a couple of seconds he decided he needed to snuggle, to have the feel of his wife’s warm body pressed up against his. He grinned happily at the thought of her body pressed along his...maybe burying his face between her breasts...a nipple between his lips... Jack reached over blindly only to realize he couldn’t feel her. He spread his hand wide and patted her side of the bed, the mattress making that hollow like thump sound.

Nope, she was definitely not there. Jack grumbled to himself rolling his eyes in annoyance. He pulled the pillow off his head as he turned to her side of the bed. She wasn’t there at all.

Jack sat up with a pout on his lips as he looked into the room.

Harley was in the middle of the room wearing a pair of indecently short baby blue yoga shorts, and a pink sports bra that had a zipper running down between her breasts. Her blonde hair was up in a ponytail, she was barefoot, and she had removed the larger bandage from her shoulder, replacing it with a smaller one that covered up the stitches in her shoulder. Jack could still see the reddish pink around the wound on both sides, now visible under the smaller bandage. It still angered Jack to see that bullet wound...he wanted to slowly take the life of the man who shot her, but that man was dead already, probably one of the men killed the night Harley came to rescue him, and while the idea was fun, Jack couldn’t bring that man back just to kill him again.

Jack let the violent thought go and simply watched Harley. She seemed to be doing Tai Chi...her movements were slow and careful as she stretched her arms over her head, her legs apart. He grinned watching her, especially pleased when she bent over, her ass in the air in his direction. He wasn’t sure if it was on purpose or not, but he definitely appreciated the view.

Harley, bent over and burst into a bright smile, her head hanging between her legs upside down when she saw Jack was awake and sitting up watching her.

“PUDDIN!!!” she squealed when she saw he was awake.

Jack laughed bringing his sheet covered legs up to rest his elbow on them. “Whatcha listening to sweets?”

Harley stood up and turned around. “Oh, Lamb’s “What Makes Us Human.” It’s an old song on my phone, but it has that nice slow, meditative feel to it.”

She straightened up and stepped over to the bed, hopping onto the bed. “So how you feeling puddin?”

“A little sad my girl wasn’t in bed with me when I woke up, but I was made happy again by seeing that perfect ass of yours in the air.” Jack grinned boyishly and Harley giggled smacking him lightly on the shoulder.

“Wanna do some Tai Chi with me? I haven’t done any in a long while so I thought this morning would be perfect since we are going shopping!” Harley giggled jumping to her feet. “We haven’t been shopping in forever!”

Jack smiled watching her. “Fine, I’ll do some with you on one condition.”
Harley had hopped off the bed and did a little spin to look back at him. “Whatever you want puddin.”

Jack grinned. “You stand in front of me.”

Harley frowned slightly, then shrugged. “Okay puddin.”

Jack chuckled sliding out of bed, stretching his arms over his head and cracked his back.

Harley watched him with what she knew must be a slightly goofy, clearly smitten grin on her face. Jack was wearing only his boxers, a pair of light blue and white striped ones that hung low on his hips giving Harley a mouthwatering view of his lower abdomen and hips, the elastic waist hovering just over his groin. Her body reacted immediately to the image of her husband as he dropped down, his legs wide and touched his toes. The long curve of his exposed back made her want to roll her hands along his skin, feel the working of muscle until she arrived at his rear where she could squeeze the...

Harley shook her head and turned her back on him. Gazing at her husband made her want to throw him on the bed and rip those boxers right off...Harley giggled at her wanton thoughts. Jack really did it for her...really pushed her buttons she thought with a smile.

Jack glanced up. Harley had taken the same position in front of him as requested, her legs spread, her rear in the air. He licked his lips.

Harley grinned as she looked between her legs at him. “Ready?”

Jack smirked back. “If you are?”

Harley giggled, stood straight and with a spring in her step walked over to the coffee table where she had set her phone. She picked it up and started to thumb through her music until found what she was looking for...she hit the play button and waltzed back over to stand in front of Jack.

She grinned at Jack from over her shoulder from her position right in front of him. “Ready?”

Jack’s eyes wandered down her backside, over her thighs. “Oh yeah.”

Harley giggled and set her legs apart. She began by slowly stretching her arms over her head, then brought them back in a circle before tucking her arms to her body. She rolled her body, surprising Jack with the move that was more reminiscent of a dancing stripper pose instead of Tai Chi before she slowly put her left foot forward and moved her arms in what Jack recognized was called the white crane pose. Harley moved slowly, carefully. Jack followed her every movement, not that he needed lessons or that he had forgotten how to do Tai Chi; he just enjoyed watching her move, watching the way his wife used her body.

She slowly switched her poses, twisted her body to the side, bringing her right leg forward, her upper body twisting with the shift of her leg. She turned to look over her shoulder at Jack, her blue eyes sparkling as she gave him a slow, sensual smile.

Jack pressed his upper teeth into his lips, watching her. The flow of her body, the control she had...not only did he admire her, but he desired her. Every movement, every twist of her body as she slowly switched poses made Jack crave her more. Harley was his drug, his insanity, and he needed her more than he needed to breathe. He smiled at the thought while he performed the same movement, twisting his body slowly, gradually taking the pose.

Harley swallowed watching him. No matter how many times they made love, she just couldn’t get enough of him; her eyes caressed the side of his torso, the dim sunlight filtering through into the room danced across his skin, the pull of his muscles under his thighs…the strength in him...

Harley took a deep breath and forced herself to look away while she slowly switched poses, stepping forward with her hands out, turning her back toward her husband again. She gradually brought her left leg up, turning her leg to the side, her arms slowly coming out, hands held up with her fingers together thinking to herself she should never have agreed to him doing Tai Chi with her because he was just too damn distracting.

Jack grinned and stepped forward, his body only inches from her. He was careful not to touch her, though he slowly mimicked her next movement. Harley had stepped forward with her right foot, extending the left behind her, right between Jack’s legs when he moved up behind her.

Jack leaned forward, careful not to touch her, but he blew against her ear.

Harley giggled. “Jack, stop that.”

He smiled. “Yes ma’am.”

Harley eased her leg from between his in an attempt to bring it forward, but Jack blew a warm breath along her shoulder. The breath tickled causing goosebumps to race along her skin.

Harley shivered, but her voice was low. “Jack…”

Jack murmured softly, his voice caressing her skin. “My Harley…”

Jack smiled and wrapped one arm around her waist, his grip firm and gentle. Together they brought their left legs forward. Jack’s thigh pressed lightly against the back of hers while with his left arm he reached forward, catching her hand and twisting his fingers with hers. His right hand, which he had spread across her stomach, slowly rose up to caress the delicate skin of her tummy, then up to her bra. His nimble fingers reached upward and snagged the pull of the bra’s zipper.

Harley’s breathing became more ragged, her heartbeat accelerating as Jack pressed her back against his chest. He brought her left arm back, wrapping both their arms around her waist.

Jack pressed his lips to her shoulder, all thought of doing meditation gone from his mind as he slowly pulled down on the zipper while their bodies swayed together.

He tugged until the zipper came free and the fabric sprang apart to release her breasts.

Harley sucked in a breath as the cooler air of the room touched her exposed chest. She could feel the smile on Jack’s lips when he kissed the side of her neck. He brushed his lips up the slope of her neck and whispered against her ear.

“I have a whole different kind of morning exercise in mind Harley.” Jack then growled deep in his throat, a sound that sent heat racing through Harley’s body.

Harley moaned softly as Jack released her hand in favor of cupping her breasts, his quickly hardening erection pressed up against her backside. She arched her hips into him, pressing purposely against him, which earned her another soft growl from Jack as he responded by rubbing his pelvis against her backside with more purpose.

With Jack’s lips against her ear, his tongue traced the soft, sensitive skin of her ear lobe while his hands gently squeezed her breasts and their bodies swayed together to Rynx’s “Want You” playing from Harley’s phone. His hands were warm against her flesh as he squeezed gently.
Jack let go of her breasts, his fingers brushing lightly over her shoulders before he slipped the bra off her shoulders, down her arms, the tips of his fingers dragging along her skin. She moved her arms behind her to let the bra drop to the floor. Harley started to turn around, but Jack put a hand on her shoulder, stopping her. She didn’t say a word, she didn’t move.

Jack next took hold of the sides of her shorts and tugged, pulling them down her legs, grinning when he saw she wasn’t wearing any panties under the very short shorts.

Jack hissed. “Mmm...goodie.”

Harley didn’t turn around; she simply stepped out of the shorts when Jack had dragged them to the floor. She glanced over her shoulder at him as Jack slowly stood back up. He gave her a seductive smile before he reached out to trace the very tips of his fingers down her spine, his touch raising goosebumps that raced across her flesh.

Jack stepped close enough that Harley could feel the heat emanating from his body as he continued to caress her skin, the very tips of his fingers brushing along her shoulders and down her shoulder blades; she could feel the tip of his blunt nails against her skin. He dug his nails gently into her skin, dragging them down and leaving a line of red marks along her pale flesh. Jack’s warm breath brushed against the back of her neck.

He hissed low. “Tell me you want me.”

Harley closed her eyes. “I want you Jack.”

He stepped back from her and for a moment Harley started to frown, thinking she had done something wrong, but a heartbeat later she felt Jack step up behind her again. She felt the warm press of his erection against her rear, pressing between her cheeks, his hips touching her skin. His hands rested on her hips then slowly slid down along the sensitive skin between her thighs and hips, his fingers spreading and easing her legs wider apart. His fingers slid between her legs while his tongue ran along her throat.

Harley groaned as his fingers eased between her lips to finding her clitoris. The soft stroke of his fingers sent a cascade of delightful sensation through her body. She reached back behind her to grip his hips, pulling him closer while Jack held the thigh of her left leg out, the fingers of his right hand stroking tenderly against her clitoris, first moving up and down, then starting a slow circle, rolling and pressing against the sensitive nub, then pressing harder.

She leaned back against him firmly, moaning louder as he rolled the tips of his fingers against her, his lips against her ear and whispered.

“Tell me you like that Harley.” Jack growled against her ear.

Harley caught her bottom lip with her teeth and moaned. “Oh puddin...yes...yes I love it. I love you touching me.”

Jack growled again, sliding his long fingers lower, teasing her entrance before he slid them back up to brush against her clitoris.

Harley started to move her hips in time to his strokes, the warm tickle of sensation rushing up from his touch causing her entire body to arch.

Jack rubbed himself against her in time to his strokes, his left hand snaking back up her torso to her breast. He squeezed her breast once before he caught her nipple between his finger and thumb. He twisted gently, pulling a gasp from his wife. He smiled and held her nipple between his thumb and middle finger allowing him to use his forefinger to stroke against the surface of her nipple.

Harley gasped again; the teasing sensation caused her entire body to jerk, his stroking fingers against her clitoris brushed and twirled until she gasped, her body tightening and aching with her climax.

Jack groaned in response to Harley’s moaning and shaking orgasm, dropping his hand from her breasts to hold her tightly around the waist and continue his strokes while thrusting and rubbing against her, feeling the warm smoothness of her backside against his throbbing erection. He kept circling his fingers against her while Harley cried out and brought her hands around to cover his where he touched her and held her, her head thrown back against his shoulder.

“Uh Jack…” Harley whimpered.

He held her tight, not letting her turn or break free while his fingers continued to stroke and circle her clitoris.

“One more Harley,” Jack moaned against her ear. “One more for me.”

Harley whimpered again, rocking her hips in time to his touch, her body his to do with as he wanted. She needed him to keep touching her.

Jack thrust his hips against her backside, resisting the tempting urge to bend her over. He rolled his finger against her swollen clitoris until her breathing was more ragged, her body tensing as another orgasm rippled up her body.

“Uuhh...Jack!” Harley cried out. He felt her shudder and bit her shoulder as his fingers stroked her wet, slick sex, evoking a fresh groan from his lover.

Jack released her, but only so he could wrap both arms around her and carry her to the bed. He grinned and tossed her onto the mattress, which made Harley squeal, but he was crawling on top of her when she rolled around to face him.

He was about to spread her legs when Harley giggled. “Turn around puddin.”

Jack frowned for a moment as if in his lust addled mind he had forgotten words. Harley motioned with her finger. “Turn around. I want you in my mouth first...I need to feel you on my tongue puddin.”

Jack blinked, then grinned. “Oh!”

Harley laughed. “Oh, is right! Now turn around.”

Jack grinned wickedly as he turned to face her legs. He chuckled and hissed playfully.

“Breakfast! Most important meal of the day!”

Harley laughed. “Jack!”

Jack giggled. “What? It’s true Harley. Are you trying to tell me it’s not important for me to enjoy my breakfast before I start the day??”

Harley was laughing when he grabbed her legs, bending them back and under his arms, completely exposing her, his fingers pressing into her delicate skin before he leaned down to lavish his tongue along her already wet sex.

Harley had just run her hands up the back of Jack’s thighs, the tip of her tongue teasing the tip of his shaft when Jack ran the flat of his tongue against her. He loved the heady taste of her on his tongue, the scent of her excitement, the soft silken feel of her skin under his hands.

She made a moan, her body shuddering, a slight arch to her back with the feel of his warm, wet tongue flicking and slipping against her already stimulated clitoris. She pointed her toes, arching as much as she could in her position and into his tongue’s attentions. Jack chuckled in response brushing his teeth against her which sent another ripple through her body.

She responded by cupping his scrotum with one hand, massaging gently, alternating between her tender massage to brushing the tips of her fingers along the sensitive perineal region, while using her other hand to hold his member, her lips wrapped around the head of his erection, soft lips pressing down on him before she relaxed her throat to take as much of him into her mouth as she could.

Jack groaned against her, every caress, every lap of her tongue made him weak. The feeling of her soft lips, her wet tongue wrapped around him, sent shivers up his spine, especially when she bobbed her head gently up and down before rolling her tongue around the head of his erection in a wet twirl of pleasure.

Jack pressed his lips to her before twirling his tongue in response. He shuddered when Harley’s muffled groans vibrated up his erection. He arched his back, lifting his head to catch a breath before he buried his mouth against her once more, burying himself in her taste and scent.

Harley wrapped her mouth around him fully; his member was at once hard but the skin was soft. The head of his member was like satin, delicate and tender against her tongue. She enjoyed not just the feel of him in her mouth, the soft feel of his skin, the moans, the pleasure she was bringing him...making her husband weak for her, making him feel good...she lived for that...to make her puddin feel good...to make sure he knew how much she loved him...how much she cared. She groaned loudly when Jack’s own moans vibrated up from her clitoris, rippling through her core and made her climax again. Her muscles tightened in response, but she couldn’t exactly move with the way Jack had her legs bent back, leaving her exposed and at his mercy. She trusted him with her body completely, just as Jack trusted her.

She responded to his moans by brushing her teeth against the head of his shaft, feeling him jerk in response.

She moved her hand that gripped him up and down while she gently massaged his scrotum. Jack’s hips thrust just a little, but she could feel that slight tremble; he was reaching the edge of his tolerance.

Jack pulled away, climbing off her, panting. “Damn Harley...uh...” He struggled for breath grinning at the same time. Harley pushed herself up on her elbows smiling ear to ear.

“Hey puddin.” Harley giggled.

Jack grinned, his lips wet, even his chin glistened with her as he sat up completely, shifting his position over to the head board and leaning back before he motioned to her with his hands. “Come here toots.”

Harley giggled happily and sat up. She came over to him, but Jack motioned in a circle with his finger. “Turn around baby.”

Harley frowned slightly, lifting a brow in confusion, but she did as Jack requested, turning her back to him getting on her hands and knees and wiggling backwards.
Jack grinned, pressing his teeth into his bottom lip, his expression both lustful and with a “naughty little boy” look while his eyes caressed her backside. Harley positioned herself over his legs, looking back to make sure this was what Jack wanted. He responded by placing one hand on her hip, tugging her slowly backwards. When he had in her the right position over him, he reached out and grabbed her hips with both hands, squeezing, spreading her for a moment, just to enjoy the feel of her skin, the round softness of her hips, to gaze at her sex, his lips tingling with the thought of how she had tasted on his tongue just moments ago.

Jack murmured. “You are so gorgeous.”

Harley grinned with pleasure. “You're my handsome puddin.”

Jack chuckled, rubbing his hands over her backside, squeezing slowly, gently pressing his fingers into her skin. She was surely the softest, most precious thing he had ever touched in his life.

Harley glanced back over her shoulder, spreading her legs around his as he guided her back against him. She pressed her lips together on a pleased grunted as Jack positioned her over his lap, sliding his hands along her sides, then down her back. He guided her down, holding himself steady, teasing her once by sliding the head of his erection against her, teasing himself with the feel of her warmth, the wetness of her before guiding himself deep into her.

Harley moaned, arching her back as she slid down on him, feeling that wonderful sensation of Jack’s member, stretching, filling her, their two bodies becoming one.

Jack gasped loudly as she settled over and on top of him. “Uh Harley…”

He pulled her back and Harley sat up arching backwards so that her back was pressed against his chest, her head on his shoulder.

Jack wrapped his arms around her holding her close against him, kissing her ear, her shoulder, pressing his teeth into her skin while Harley bounced, thrusting her hips, grinding and rolling.

Together their breaths came in pants. Harley rolled her head to the side to kiss him, her tongue brushing with Jack’s.

He grabbed her breasts, squeezing, stroking her nipples with his fingers, rolling the overly stimulated nipples before giving just enough of a pinch to excite her. Harley grunted and bit her lip as her body tightened around him while she pulled up and bounced down. She reached behind, using her hands to balance herself while she thrust downward and back onto Jack.

Jack snaked one hand down her belly, caressing the soft flesh, feeling her muscles contract with his touch, until his fingers were once more between her legs. With her legs spread as they were, she was more exposed to him and Jack took full advantage of her position to roll his fingers over her clitoris causing his wife to orgasm loudly, nearly shouting his name.

Jack hissed against her ear. “That's my girl...I love to hear you you cum Harley. Mm...You are so, so wet…”

He pinched her nipple, flicking his tongue over her ear, his fingers continuing to circle her clitoris. “Scream for me Harley...let me hear you scream.”

He rubbed up and down on her, twisting and stroking her nipple with his other hand, his breath hot against her ear whispering her name in a chant. “Harley...uh...my Harley. Cum for me baby...my pumpkin...I want you slick...wet…”
Harley’s eyes rolled closed. She was only aware of feeling, her entire body attuned to Jack, his breath, his touch, the swell of him inside her. She felt that delightful wave, a ripple, that gradually grew until it encompassed all of her. She cried out again, arching her body, which held on tightly to Jack’s erection, squeezing him tight as she flooded over him, hot and wet. “Uh...puddin!!”

Jack grunted then hissed through his teeth as Harley’s body pulled against him, squeezed him. She was wet and slick and her cries of pleasure drove him until he could no longer hold back. His orgasm caused his entire body to jerk, arching into her, releasing all of himself in a flood inside his wife.

Jack wrapped his arms tight around Harley, thrusting up into her as he continued to spill everything into her body. He buried his head against her shoulder, groaning with pleasure and release, his voice muffled against her skin.

“I love you...Harley...my Harley.”

Harley was struggling to normalize her breath, leaning heavily against him. “I love you Jack...I love you,” she whispered, her body going limp.

Jack just held her close unwilling to move, or let her go for a long time.

*

Jack was dressed in a bright red suit, black dress shirt--minus tie--black dress shoes and a pair of black leather gloves. He waited by the door tapping his foot. He rubbed his gloved fingers over his smooth chin and looked at the time on his phone then sighed. “Harley--come on, sweets. Frost is waiting!”

“I’m coming!!” He heard her yell back from the bathroom.

Harley came dashing out wearing a sleeveless a-line cut dress that hit just at her knees with a full skirt. The dress was a soft shade of amethyst, but the shoes she was wearing, peep toe ankle boots were a shade of light spring green. Her golden hair was pulled around to the left in a thick long braid tied off with a green ribbon and she wore a simple gold necklace with a small, round emerald in a simple gold setting.

Harley grinned at Jack, her lips a lighter shade of red than his own and grabbed her little green clutch and matching shrug.

“I’m ready!” She grinned brightly racing up beside him.

Jack smiled looking her over. “All right, you were completely worth the wait.”

Harley giggled wrapping her arm around Jack’s after slipping on her shrug. “Ready?”

“Yes I am.” Jack kissed her cheek before opening the door and heading out.

*

The day the was mild so far, though the temperature was climbing into the low eighties while still partly cloudy.

Frost was humming along to the music, his demeanor happy and light. He had spent a wild and fun evening with Agatha who was sitting next to him--looking gorgeous he thought--with her hair swept back from her face. She was wearing a short, knee-length shirt of black with blue trim, showing off her toned legs, a matching top with quarter sleeves, and a pair of light blue kitten heels and a pair of large, round black sunglasses. She had her legs crossed, leaning her elbow out the window with a cigarette between her fingers while her other hand was resting on Frost’s thigh. She glanced over at him and while he couldn’t see her eyes he felt the squeeze of her fingers.

Agatha turned around with a big grin to address Jack and Harley in the back seat. “So, what’s the occasion for a shopping trip? Not that you need one, darlings. There is always a good reason to go shopping.” She chuckled.

Jack laughed crossing his legs, pulling Harley against him, his arm around her shoulders. Harley snuggled close to Jack, her hand resting on his knee.

“Well, we’re meeting, for the second time I might add, with a woman named Fish Mooney who owns the “Over the Moon” nightclub. We’re hoping she is going to join us...the gang that is...maybe help us with getting our new territory under control.” Jack grinned feeling happy, relaxed.

Agatha nodded. “It’s always good to use someone who knows the place to help you.”

He pulled out his cigarettes, but Harley sat up, reached inside his jacket. Jack stopped what he was doing and put his arms out to his sides, watching her with amusement while she pulled out the pack herself, along with his lighter. She smiled while pulling out a cigarette, placed it between her lips then flipped his lighter open. Jack watched her lighting his cigarette, the way she held the cigarette between her lips,

Agatha nodded. “Fish Mooney. What an unusual name! I love it!”

Jack laughed. “She has a bartender named Kermit.”

Agatha chuckled. “Once you have your control more firmly in place, I might have to go down there and meet all these aquatic new friends of yours.”

Jack chuckled watching his wife his cigarette before she placed the filtered burning stick between his lips. He took a long drag on the cigarette winking at Harley before he replied.

“Why not just come with us tonight?” Jack lifted a brow at his aunt. “I’m sure Frost would enjoy having you there.” He grinned as Frost winced almost imperceptibly.

Agatha smiled. “Well, if you don’t mind, I would love to do some dancing.” She grinned at Frost who again blushed.

Jack laughed. “Good. Anyway, Harley and I thought it would be fun to do some shopping for tonight AND we are meeting Jason downtown for more specialized purchases.”

Jack let the smoke burn in his lungs while rolling his window in the backseat down. Once it was down, he blew the smoke out.

Agatha glanced to the side. “Jason...Jason...he’s the dark haired young man, the handsome one with the very serious eyes.”

“One and the same.” Jack smiled. “He had a place for us to go so he will be meeting us later.”

Agatha smiled. “Cute young man.”

Frost frowned, but Agatha squeezed his knee. “Don’t worry big boy, you’re my plaything. I don’t like them too young--then you have to teach them everything.”
Jack and Harley both snickered at the blush that crept across Frost’s face.

*

Rather than going into the main shopping area of downtown Gotham, their small group was heading toward Blüdhaven where they could go shopping for clothing and where they would later meet up with Jason for their more “specialized” shopping needs.

Their first stop was clothing shopping. Their group was heading toward Blüdhaven’s up and coming central business district where there was a revival in the Blüdhaven commercial area with new businesses coming in (not just chain department stores), but local businesses were making a comeback as well.

An entire street in Blüdhaven along the area called The Spine was being populated by trendy coffee shops, bookstores, wine bars and special clothing stores that all catered to shoppers who wanted a trendy Gotham shopping experience without the heavy crowds and expense. For Jack and Harley, the added bonus was that shopping in Blüdhaven made it less likely they would run into Bruce or that Jack would be noticed quite as readily.

The shop they were headed to was one that Jack had found online called “Neutral Territory.” Jack had liked the name, but he had also liked the clothing they had shown online. Neutral Territory dealt in trendy clothing, but also carried an array of offbeat, new designers as well as local designers.

As Frost pulled the car up to the curb, they saw the shop was a small place that occupied the bottom floor of an old brick building that dated back to at least the early 20th century. The front had been trimmed with wood and painted in black and white, with large new windows and a glass door that had the name stenciled across the front. There were large pots outside filled with purple pansies.

Jack grinned. “Oh I like the look of this place.”

Agatha nodded. “Agreed. You always did have good taste...better than Bruce, I must say. He tends to go for the classics granted, but you were never afraid to experiment Jackie. You always had much more of your mother in you than Bruce. Bruce is a great deal like Thomas.”

Jack frowned slightly at the mention of his brother, but he only responded with a low. “Bruce never was one to wear a lot of color.”

Agatha laughed. “No, no he wasn’t, even before your parents were gone...Bruce was always a solemn little boy while you were always the vibrant one.” For a moment Agatha grew quiet, her thoughts drifting into the past, remembering two little boys, always close, like night and day though. Bruce always trying to squash Jack’s much more vibrant nature...as if Bruce were afraid of Jack...of what kind of person Jack was. For a moment she wondered if Bruce was right to be afraid. Look where Jack was now. Working his way through Gotham’s criminal underworld. It made her wonder where Jack would stop, and would he stop? If he managed to put himself at the top, would Jack be content? She had to wonder if deep down, this was Jack’s way of dealing with his parents’ death...if you can’t beat the type of world that took their parents...then join them, crush them and take control of them.

Agatha shook her head slightly, dislodging those thoughts. She had served as part of that underworld Jackie was trying to control. Did she really have any right to question him...maybe she didn’t, not after everything...

“Well kiddies, what are we waiting for?” Agatha asked as she pushed her door open. Frost quickly jumped from the car and hurried around to get her door, causing Agatha to laugh. Jack opened his own door, sliding out and taking Harley’s hand, drawing her from the car and into the circle of his arms.

Harley giggled wrapping her arms around his neck. “Hey puddin.”

Jack grinned rubbing his nose against hers. “Hey sweets.”

They stared into each others eyes, Jack’s arms snug around her, Harley's arms around his neck.

Jack whispered softly so only Harley could hear. “I want to give you the world Harley.”

Harley brushed his lips with hers. “I only want you Jack.”

He smiled tenderly and kissed her, his tongue caressing hers. Harley made a small noise of want, pressing closer when Agatha cleared her throat.

“We’re on a public sidewalk kids. I mean I’m all for public displays of affection and a little public sex can be fun...But...”

Jack chuckled brushing Harley’s nose with his own before turning, making sure to take Harley’s hand in his gloved one. “Sorry Auntie. Let’s go!”

*

The inside of the shop was warmly lit, the ceiling covered in balls that looked like bubbles to Harley. The bubbles were a series of lights ranging in size from a golf ball to as large as a basketball, all hanging from long silver poles and providing a soft white light. The floors were a shade of warm vanilla tile that created a comfortable atmosphere when mixed with the cushioned chairs and couches that were scattered throughout the room. The walls were a soft shade of grey and held a vast assortment of clothing: from a wall that was only shoes, to racks of men’s jackets, dress shirts and slacks, to circular racks of dresses and headless grey mannequins wearing brightly colored spring dresses to darker, more sensual lines of evening dresses. There were even tables loaded with a rainbow of stockings, socks and ties.

There was a single young man working the store. Tell, almost skeletal thin with bleached blonde hair, he wore a white and gold trimmed suit. He approached them with a smile full of bleached white teeth.

“Hello!! My name is Lance! Welcome to Neutral Territory--how can I help you today?”

Agatha spoke up, pulling her sunglasses off at the same time. “Your best bet Lance honey, is to just stay out of our way and let the professional shoppers shop. You can ring us up at the end. I hope you work on commission sweetie because we are about to make your day.”

Lance looked stunned which was swiftly followed by a grin. “Can I offer you all some coffee?”

Agatha laughed. “As long as I can spike it dear, yes you can.”

Jack grinned as he stood in the front of the store holding Harley’s hand. “Now this looks fun.”

Harley giggled. “Well I already see something I want you to wear.”

Jack grinned at his wife with a single lifted brow. “Oh?”

Harley dragged him over to a wall where several men’s jackets hung, but her eyes were on one particular jacket, a slim cut black jacket with eight large ornate silver buttons that ran up the front of the jacket. The shoulders had a point to them and the sleeves would end just above the wrist, so that the cuffs of the dress shirt would show. Harley grabbed the jacket, then hurriedly found a white dress shirt. From the dress shirts, she scampared over to the tie table with an amused Jack following behind her. Here, sucking on her bottom lip in concentration, Harley searched until she found the tie she liked, a white and black diagonally striped tie with thin lines of purple running parallel to the sides of the black lines. She next pulled out a pair of slim cut black slacks from a rack, before hurrying over to the sock table and chose a pair of purple and black striped socks. Jack watched her bustling about the store, her arms full, putting together an outfit for him. It was not only adorable, watching her dash about, the look of concentration on her face, but it made him love her just a little more, if that were even possible he thought, the way she was putting so much effort into dressing him...He couldn’t keep the grin off his face.

*

Agatha glanced over watching the two of them. She smiled, content at the moment. No matter what she might fear for Jack’s future, he had Harley and there was no denying that Harley loved Jack more than anything in the world. She sighed again

Frost frowned as he leaned a little towards her. “You okay Agatha?”

Frost was maintaining a proper distance from Jack and Harley to allow them to have some privacy while at the same time keeping an eye on them while he also moved through the store with Agatha. She enjoyed his company and trusted him with her nephew’s safety.

“Maybe I should put together an outfit for you as well.” She gave Frost a wink which caused the tall man to turn several shades of red while Agatha walked over to Lance. “Sweetie, sugar mama here needs to buy her toy a suit, something that shows off all his assets.”

Lance gave Frost a once over. “Oh, I have just the thing!”

Frost turned even brighter red, the tips of his ears burning, but he was smiling.

*

Harley was standing in front of the wall of shoes, her forefinger pressed to her lips while she examined the shoes, her other arm holding the clothing she had picked out for Jack. She was looking for just the right pair of shoes to go with the outfit she had put together from the vast array of shoes offered by the shop. She hadn’t noticed that Jack had walked over to the women’s clothing and had only just walked back to her, with a dress draped across his arm.

“How’s the shoe hunting going pumpkin?” Jack asked as he stepped up beside her. He glanced sideways at her with a smile, admiring her profile. Her nose was wrinkled in concentration and her blue eyes were slightly narrowed. She looked adorable, which made him want to toss her up against the wall and pull her panties down...lifting that dress up....Jack shook his thoughts clear...plenty of time for that before heading over to the club tonight. He chuckled softly to himself turning his attention back to the wall of shoes. Harley tapped her lips, unaware of Jack’s lustful gaze while she examined the shoes. “Well, I have it narrowed down between these...” she pointed at a pair of silver and black two tone wingtips. “And these...” A pair of purple and black shaded point-toed triple strapped monk shoes.

Jack tilted his head examining the shoes and smiled. “I like them both.”

Harley turned to look at him. “Me too--that’s the problem.”
Jack nodded. “Let’s just get both.” Jack chuckled. “A person can never have too many pairs of shoes.”

Harley giggled turning to reach for the shoes when she noticed the dress across her husband’s arm. “Jack?”

He grinned brightly, clearly pleased with himself as he held up the dress. It was a short, sleeveless dress that was half black, half white and instead of a straight line dividing the two colors, there was a delicate curve that didn’t quite make it to the middle of the dress. The dress also had a thick black belt that would accentuate her waist.

Harley grinned. “Oh Jack, it’s gorgeous.”

Jack’s lips curled into a smile as he tilted his head examining the dress. “No it isn’t, really, but once you are in the dress, it will be absolutely stunning.”

Harley blushed while Jack stepped over to the rows of women’s shoes. He frowned, narrowing his eyes until he saw the pair he liked. He reached forward and grabbed a pair of black suede, ankle-strapped peep toes, with a structured heel cup and little lace ties. He turned, holding the shoes up.

“What do you think pumpkin?”

Harley smiled. “I think you have excellent taste puddin.”

Jack chuckled. “I picked you didn’t I? I have amazing taste.”

Harley blushed, the two of them heading over to where Agatha was holding up a pink tie against Frost’s cheek. Frost glanced over to Jack and Harley with a look that was clearly a plea for help.

Agatha grinned happily. “Ah, perfect! I need your help! I’m trying to convince this young man to wear more color, but he keeps insisting that he is a bodyguard and looking colorful wouldn’t work for him. I said...bullshit. Just look how like this pink looks against his skin!” Agatha held the tie up to Frost’s cheek once more.

Jack lifted a brow. “Well, you know Frost darling, she does have a point. You do look good in pink.”

The look of defeat on Frosts face was funny enough that Jack and Harley started to laugh as Agatha turned to Lance. “Ring us up sweetie!”

* *

They left the store, bags in hand with Jack pulling out his phone as soon as they were settled in the back. Harley laid her head against his shoulder as Jack hit a number on the phone. It only rang twice before it was answered.

“Jason here.”

“Jason! Darling! We’re all done. Now where are you exactly?” Jack put his arm around Harley squeezing her to his side.

“Hey Boss! I’m at Avalon Heights, the store is called “Yesteryear.” It's part of an old apartment building, the outside is trimmed in green and with gold lettering. It's on the corner of Seymour and Temple. Can’t miss it Boss.” Jason sounded excited to be helping Jack and Harley with something, even if it was something as simple as some shopping.
Jack smiled brightly. “Thank you, darling boy. Will you be waiting out front?”

“Sure thing Boss. There’s a coffee shop just down the street--want me to grab everyone some coffee?” Jason asked. Jack liked the fact that Jason was just being nice, that the young man had no alternative motives than to simply be helpful. He had heard Jason say on more than one occasion that this gang was his family and that family was important. Jack understood that completely...because family wasn’t who you were related to by blood--it was who you chose to bind yourself with…

“Sure Jason that sounds great. I’ll pay you back.” Jack began, but Jason cut him off. “No, no, Boss, this is my treat, don’t worry.”

Jack thought about arguing, but decided not to. He would repay Jason in another way, maybe a nice pair of gloves, or boots, or a pistol...

“All right darling, here are the orders…”

*

The antique shop was exactly where Jason has said it would be. It also looked exactly as Jason said it would, but the main reason that they found the place was simply that they all saw Jason sitting outside the little shop. He was sitting at a small wooden table and chair just outside the shop, his legs crossed, dressed all in black except for the blood red jacket he wore. His hair was slicked back except for a lock of dark hair that refused to stay in place. On the table were four large to-go coffee cups. Jason had a cup in his hand, but he looked to be drinking a large purplish pink bubble tea.

Harley leaned over to look more clearly through her passenger window at the store. “You didn’t tell me we were going antique shopping puddin?” Jason saw the car and waved at them. Frost responded with a simple wave of his own.

Jack smiled glancing over as Frost pulled the car around and headed down an alley before he took another turn around to the back of the shop where there were several several parking places lined along the asphalt.

“We aren’t. I said specialized purchases and that is exactly what we are going to do.” Jack grinned mischievously. Harley gave her husband a curious look, but he did not elaborate further.

The four of them exited the vehicle, with Jack taking his wife’s hand in his; the feel of his leather glove sliding between her fingers made Harley smile. She squeezed his hand. Jack’s black outlined eyes rolled sideways to gaze at her and he gave her a soft, tender smile, bringing her hand up to kiss her bare knuckles as their little group walked down the alley and around the corner to the front of the shop where Jason waited. He was standing up and smiled when he saw them.

“Hey guys! Got everyone’s coffee right here!” Jason motioned to the table.

Jack walked over putting an arm across Jason’s shoulders. “Thank you darling!”

Jason looked pleased as he turned and quickly handed out the coffees. “Anderson is inside waiting for us,” he said as he reached for the door and pulled it open.

A soft chime sounded as Jason held the door for everyone.

The inside of the shop was dimly lit, while the voice of Fred Astaire could be heard drifting through the shop as Harley looked around in wonderment. The place looked exactly how an antique store looked in every movie Harley had ever seen where the main characters have to go find some exotic object that can only be purchased by a strange old man. There were ancient clocks, pictures, vases, strange little figurines, plates, dolls—the array of “things” seemed endless. The shelves seemed to stretch the entire length of the store, which also included antique furniture: chairs, tables, sofas, and some pieces of furniture Harley didn’t have names for. But while the shop itself looked exactly what an antique store should look like, the man running the place didn’t look a thing like what Harley thought the owner of such a place would resemble.

While Harley was thinking that the owner had to be an old man, instead she was greeted by a much younger man.

Jason walked to the back where there was a long counter that divided the store from the back of the shop. Standing by the register was a man, tall, maybe around thirty, Harley couldn't be sure, with short, curly red hair and blue eyes. He wore a white short sleeved button down shirt that was snug enough that the garment showed off the fact that Anderson clearly hit the gym more than once, and a pair of khaki slacks. He looked more as if he should be on a California beach than in an antique store in Blüdhaven.

He smiled and extended his hand out to Jack. “So I hear you are friends of Jason?”

Jason smiled. “Anderson and I grew up in the same orphanage and later we were put in the same foster home together, so Anderson is kinda like my big brother.”

Anderson chuckled. “I am your big brother.”

Jack shook Anderson’s hand liking the fact that he had a firm handshake. “Pleasure to meet you Anderson. This beautiful creature is my wife Harley, my Aunt Agatha and my friend and bodyguard Frost.”

Anderson nodded to everyone though he took and kissed both Harley’s and Agatha’s hands. “The pleasure is all mine. So what can I help you find today Mr. Wayne?”

Jack’s grin was wicked and adorable, thought Harley as Jack said softly. “Well, we are interested in some of your more...deadly acquisitions.”

* *

While Jack was speaking with Anderson, Harley’s eyes were drawn to a glass case that stood next to the register against the wall. It was an antique case filled with rings, necklaces and some other pieces of jewelry. Her eyes had found the perfect gift for Jack. Lying on a blanket of black velvet was a pocket watch. The watch was made of some sort of black shiny metal, the cover of which was decorated with laughing skulls and petal shaped openings that allowed one to see the inner workings of the watch, a soft buttery bronze coloring for the gears and springs. The watch had a long chain attached to it. Harley gazed at the watch, her mouth slightly open as she took a breath in thought. It was simply beautiful she decided. Harley could see Jack wearing this, the chain across his stomach when he wore one of his three pieces suits. Just the thought of Jack wearing the watch made her shiver with delight. She smiled brightly; her puddin had to have it.

She had just glanced up when she realized that Anderson was lifting a section of the counter to escort them through when Agatha whispered from beside her. “See something you like?”

Harley hadn’t realize that she had let go of Jack’s hand and stepped closer while the men were talking. She jumped slightly; Agatha could moved extremely quietly.

The older woman smiled. “It’s a gorgeous watch.”

Harley nodded. “It would look fantastic on Jack.”
Agatha smiled. “It would. You should get it for him.”

Harley glanced over to Jack where he, Jason and Frost were talking to Anderson, but they hadn’t actually started to move toward the back. “How am I going to do that without Jack knowing?”

Agatha pressed her lips together in thought, then smiled. “You let me take care of that sweetie.”

The men had started to move to the back of the store when Agatha turned to Harley and gave her a little shove. “You better go. Jackie will be upset if he doesn’t have you beside him.”

Harley giggled and hurried back over to her husband. Jack immediately took her hand, kissed the tips of her fingers.

*

Anderson led their small group through a doorway and to the back room which looked like a typical break room with an old table, a few chairs, a small refrigerator, a microwave, coffee maker, and some cabinets. But instead of stopping here, Anderson led them through yet another doorway.

“Jason tells me that you are...starting a new business venture,” Anderson said to Jack in a conversational tone as he held open the door for them. “He thought that if you like what I have to offer here, that perhaps we could come to a more permanent arrangement. I’m still working my way up the ladder, so to speak. I would like to move my business to Gotham and I need not just financial backing, but I would also like to build a list of clients. To do that I need word of mouth. Jason thought if you like my wares and services, that perhaps you might consider bringing me in as a more permanent supplier.”

Jack glanced at Jason. Jason looked only a little nervous as he murmured. “Anderson is one of the best at what he does Boss. You’ll see.”

Jack grinned and gave a small pat to Jason on the back. “I trust you Jason.”

Jason smiled but he looked unsure, there was something about the way that Jack had said he trusted the younger man that also communicated a...threat...not to disappoint him.

They walked through a short hallway in desperate need of paint to arriving at yet another door. This door had a security pad beside it and, if Jack wasn’t mistaken, a retinal scan. Anderson swiftly punched in a code before he leaned close and sure enough, a red beam of light scanned the man’s right eye before the door made an audible click and a pop of a door unsealing.

Anderson stepped aside once more pushing the door open with a smile.

The room beyond was not at all what Harley was expecting. The room was lit in much the same way as the front of the shop, with a warm and inviting luminosity, but while the front of the shop was filled with the treasures of days gone by, this room had nothing but the most modern of weapons on display.

The room’s walls were lined from floor to ceiling with blue light display cases of weapons. One wall was exclusively handguns, another was rifles, and another wall was strictly knives. There were so many weapons--many Harley had never seen, not even in movies--that it was almost too much to take in. She squeezed Jack’s hand as they both looked around.

Jack giggled. “Oh, this is perfect.”

Anderson walked over to the middle of the room where a long table sat and threw his arms out.
“Welcome to Anderson’s Collectibles.”

Jack’s lips were pursed in awe as he turned around slowly. “I feel like a kid at Christmas.”

Harley whispered. “They’re so beautiful!”

Agatha swallowed with a whispered, “Damn.”

Frost grinned. “Shit.”

Jason smiled.

Anderson grinned clearly pleased with himself. “I’m not sure what weapons you prefer Mr. Wayne, Mrs. Wayne, but I would very much like to recommend a Glock 26 and one of my favorites, a Heckler & Koch P30L. Though the Glock 34 is a very nice weapon too.”

Anderson walked over to the many weapons on display to take down the two pistols from the display of sidearms that spanned across an entire wall. He turned and walked over, handing the Glock to Jack and the Heckler & Koch to Harley.

“Recontoured grips. Flared magwell for easier reloads.” Anderson smiled like a proud father. “It’s a real nice weapon.”

Jack held the weapon up aiming at the wall, his blue eyes looking down the barrel with a wide smile on his lips. He tried a few different positions with the pistol, flowing quickly from one to the other demonstrating that Jack knew his way around a gun. Harley watched him for a moment, licking her lips and dragging her teeth over her bottom lip, shifting her hips and pressing her legs together as a hot spike of lust raced through her while watching Jack with the gun.

Jack grinned as he aimed the weapon at the wall, then pointed its barrel at the floor. “I like it.”

He released the magazine then quickly reloaded it. He performed a fancy twirl with the weapon before he set the gun down. “Yes, definitely want that one. How do you feel about yours Harley? I want you to try the Glock too.”

Harley, who had finally torn her gaze away from lusting after her husband, was holding the H&K up, her elbows slightly bent keeping the weapon close just like Jack had taught her. She was smiling, enjoying the feel of the weapon in her hands as she sighted down the barrel.

“It feels good puddin. I like it.”

Jack turned back to Anderson. “What else do you recommend?”

* * *

While Jack and Harley were working with Anderson, Frost was standing over by the pistols, his eyes on a Salient Arms International Glock 17. Agatha came up beside him and put her arm around his waist.

“That’s a nice weapon. How about I get it for you?” Agatha purred against his ear.

Frost blushed. “I don’t...you just bought me a suit Agatha.”

She grinned. “Sweetie, I like buying you things.”

“I don’t want you to think that’s the only reason I’m with you Agatha.” Frost said with genuine concern, but the older woman simply laughed. “Oh sweetie! I know that! But let a woman indulge herself and buy you a few gifts. Makes me happy.”

Frost turned a little to look at her more fully in the eyes. “Let me ge….”

She didn’t let him finish as she pressed her lips to his mouth. She kissed him softly, but firmly then leaned back enough to grin dragging the tip of her fingernail along the lobe of his ear as she hissed, her breath warm and tickling. “Shh...You can make it up to me when we get home later tonight. I have some vibrating anal beads, bondage restraints as well as a set of very interesting cock rings we can try.”

Frost’s eyes widened, his cheeks flushing a brilliant shade of red that ran all the way to the tips of his ears. Agatha laughed with pleasure. “You didn’t think those things were invented by your generation did you sweetheart?”

*

Jason was standing nearby picking up guns, examining them and putting them back. He stopped at a pair of M1911 pistols. The pair were silver stainless steel with red enameled grips. He picked them up holding them out, twirled them on his fingers, aiming swiftly at different parts of the room. Jason grinned gazing at the weapons in his hands like he had just found a long lost lover. A well-balanced lover capable of unleashing some quick violence.

*

Jack was grinning as he held a larger weapon in his hands while Anderson was explaining. “This is an AR-15, 11.5-inch. Compensated with an ion-bonded bolt carrier. Trijicon accupoint with 1-6 magnification. And that one…” He pointed over to Harley who was holding a large rifle against her shoulder. Her blue eyes were narrowed as she aimed at the wall playing with the loading mechanism at the same time. “That’s a Benelli M4. Custom bolt carrier release and charging handle. Textured grips, should your hands get... wet. An Italian classic.”

Harley giggled. “Oo! Try this one puddin!! It feels so powerful!”

The two of them traded weapons with Jack taking the Benelli cocking a brow in surprise as he held it up. “Oh I do like this one.”

Harley held the AR-15 and Jack’s grin became more seductive as he hissed. “Mm...you, that gun...and nothing else.”

Harley giggled blushing.

Jack set the gun down with a smile. “Now, show me what you have in regards to blades Anderson.”

Anderson grinned. “Allow me show you these.”

The antique and arms dealer walked over to the wall display of blades, but instead of taking one or two down from the display, Anderson crouched down where Harley only now noticed were several long cabinet drawers. He pulled one of the long drawers out where Harley could see several blades resting in pillows of black velvet, but along the center of the cabinet drawer were several long, wooden cases. He pulled one of these out, lifting it and resting it across his arm before he walked with the case over to the table in the middle of the room where Jack and Harley were standing.

He set the case down and opened it, pulled the lid which divided into two; the case unfolded into two side panels that displayed a series of knives on three levels. In the bottom layer, as Harley looked down, she saw were several beautiful bowie knives, the other two display layers held diver’s knives, and a series of switchblades.

“These are all freshly stoned,” Anderson explained with a bright smile.

Jack had a soft grin on his face, his eyes dancing with delight like a child at Christmas as he reached down and picked up one of the knives, a Bowie knife with a 12 inch blade. The long, slightly curved silver blade caught the light, which made the blade glimmer. Jack held it up, admiring not just the shape, but also the color of the blade. He laid the blade across the pads of his fingers, holding it out in front of him, his smile widening as Anderson said softly, in the tones of a man in church being moved by the spirit of God. “She is perfectly balanced.”

Jack just stared at the blade. “I’ll take it.”

Jack turned to Harley with a smile as he easily rolled the blade with his fingers before handing it hilt first back to Anderson. “Now, one for my sweets.”

Jack took her hand and tugged her closer to him, putting his arm around her waist while with his other hand he presented the blades like a game-show host. “All right sweets--which one do you like?”

Harley gazed at all the blades with her teeth tugging at her bottom lip. Each one was beautiful, all elegant and deadly. After a moment or two of contemplation, she reached out for one of the divers knives. She held it up to examine. The blade caught the light much the same way that Jack’s blade had done, but while Jack’s blade had a more powerful feel to it, this blade was shorter, making Harley feel that it was one to be hidden, used in secret...she smiled brightly, like a surprise.

Anderson smiled and gestured at the blade in her hand. “That’s a 420 stainless steel blade with an easy rubber grip and it comes with a red sheath and straps so you can strap it on your arm, leg, or just about anywhere you want to conceal a weapon.”

Jack rested his chin on Harley’s shoulder, both arms wrapped around her waist, his breath warm against her ear. “You like it baby?”

Harley grinned. “Oh, I like it.”

Jack smiled and glanced over at Anderson while keeping his chin on Harley’s shoulder. “Anderson, how would you feel about becoming the Red Hood’s exclusive weapons supplier?”

Anderson glanced at Jason who was nodding his head with enthusiasm, then back at Jack. “I...I would love it Mr. Wayne. I do have a large quantity of product that I would like to move. Are you sure you want to purchase so much?”

Jack stood up and reached across the table, taking Anderson’s hand with a firm nod. “Let’s see about getting you set up in Gotham shall we?”

Anderson shook Jack’s hand excitedly. “Thank you Mr. Wayne.”

Jack’s smile spread across his face. “Call me Jack.”

*

The sun had gone down hours ago and the moon was high in the sky as Jack took a breath through his nose trying to be as still as possible while Harley applied his eyeliner.
Harley frowned narrowing her eyes at him, her breath a whisper as she whispered. “Don’t move.”

Jack chuckled softly. “I have to breathe sweets.”

“Not while I’m doing your eyeliner you don’t,” Harley said with a slight frown as her hand slowly outlined his eye.

Jack grinned. “Okay sorry, no breathing.”

Harley glared at him. “Stop looking cute.”

Jack’s grin expanded. “I can’t.”

Harley pressed her lips together trying not to smirk at her husband while she worked.

He was careful not to move, but he kept glancing down at Harley’s breasts which seemed to be close to bursting out of the top of the dress he had picked for her. He couldn’t wait to get home tonight and unzip her dress just to watch her breasts break free. He licked his lips at the thought of smearing his lipstick across her nipples when Harley hissed.

“Stop licking your lips puddin, you’re going to ruin your lipstick.”

Jack stuck his bottom lip out. “You’re no fun.”

“I’m lots of fun, but I put a lot of work into making you look extra hot, so don’t ruin it.” Harley sat back tilting her head and smiling as she admired her work.

Jack sat back. “How do I look?”

“Good enough that I don’t want to share.” Harley giggled setting aside the eyeliner and taking his hands to inspect his fingernail polish to make sure he hadn’t smeared any of it.

“Ready Harls?” Jack asked.

Harley brought his hand up and kissed his knuckles. “Yep.”

Jack stood tugging her up with him. “I’m going to kiss you, lipstick be damned,” he whispered, his gaze roaming over her face. Jack pulled her close, his lips brushing hers before he flicked his tongue out to kiss her. Harley responded with a soft groan, pressing her body up against his. Jack purred.

“Before we leave tonight, I do have a gift for you.”

Harley blushed. “That’s funny! I have one for you too.”

Jack chuckled. “Okay, you go get yours and I’ll get mine.”

They parted for a moment both returning in moments and each holding a box. Harley handed hers to Jack, a black, square box tied with a red bow and Jack handed his to her, a long, dark blue box tied with a silver bow. They both looked at each and Jack grinned.

“Open at the same time?” he asked.

Harley giggled and nodded. Together they opened their boxes.

Jack let out a soft gasp when he saw the pocket watch nestled in a bed of black velvet. “Oh Harls!” He pulled it out to hold the watch up. “This...this is beautiful Harley. I love it!”
Harley smiled at Jack, then gasped when she opened her box. Resting on a bed of blue velvet was a gold chain. The long, fine gold chain ended with two gold balls and two gold rings. Harley held it up. It was beautiful, certainly, but she was a little confused as to what it was exactly.

Jack, who had just put his watch in his pocket excitedly took the chain from her.

“Now sweets, this is both beautiful and functional. You wrap it around your wrist like this…” Jack wrapped it around her wrist. The chain looked lovely against her skin. Jack brushed his fingers over her skin and across the chain as he whispered. “Beautiful and deadly...like you.”

He demonstrated with nimble fingers how to swiftly unwrap the chain from around her wrist. Then he moved quickly. Before Harley had registered his movement, Jack was behind her and had whipped the chain around her neck, grabbing the other end of the pair of gold beads, his middle fingers slipping through the rings and he pulled. Not tight enough to hurt her, but snug enough that if she moved the chain would press into her throat.

“It's a lovely bracelet that turns into a garrote, my sweets. A little secret weapon. A little extra protection for my pumpkin.” Jack cooed next to her ear.

Harley smiled leaning back into Jack who ran his tongue over her ear. Harley’s breath quickened, her heart hammering in her chest as he pulled back on her just a little, his eyes wandering down from her throat to her breasts, pressing against her dress. Harley made a little moan of want when Jack’s phone rang. For a moment neither one of them moved. But on the third ring Jack slowly eased the garrote away from her throat. He stepped around his wife, taking her wrists and tenderly wrapping the lovely, strong chain back around her slender wrist before he reached over for his phone where it lay on the table without looking and picked it up.

“Jack,”

“Downstairs Boss,” Frost replied.

Jack smiled. “Be right there.”

He hung up the phone. “Our ride is here sweets.”

Harley sighed, but she was grinning. “Let’s go see if Fish has made the right choice.”

Jack laughed. “Yes, let’s.”

*

They headed downstairs and out of the building to where Frost was waiting. Tonight he wasn’t in his car, but in a car that Agatha had recently purchased, a black Porsche Panamera. Frost hopped out wearing a new black suit and a pink tie.

He smiled holding the door open for Jack and Harley. “Hey Boss, looking good.”

Jack chuckled. “I love the tie.”

Frost blushed. “Well...ah...yeah.” Jack held Harley’s hand easing her into the car before he followed. His aunt, sitting in the front seat, turned and grinned. “Hey you two love birds, don’t you both look fantastic!”

Jack and Harley both smiled, but Jack motioned at his aunt. “Looking hot there auntie.”
Agatha was dressed in a long sleeve, snug red dress, the skirt of which hit just above her knees. The dress had a bateau neckline with a silver accent at the shoulder that tugged the dress across her breasts in a rather flattering way, and another silver accent that pulled the dress across her hips, again highlighting the older woman’s hourglass figure, along with a pair of white, strappy peep toe sandals that accentuated the shape of her legs.

Jack gave his aunt a wolf whistle and a chuckle. “Not sure how well Frost is going to perform his job tonight with you looking like that.”

Agatha grinned. “You like the dress? I wasn’t sure about the color, but I thought “fuck it, be bold or go home.””

Harley smiled. “You look beautiful--doesn’t she Frost?”

Frost blushed and nodded. “Yeah, she does.”

* * *

They arrived at the club a little while later to see that just like the night before, the place was busy.
Frost parked the car around back and the four of them headed inside. The music, Janelle Monáe’s “Make Me Feel” was playing loudly with dancers gyrating on the dance floor and the lights flashing back and forth. Their small group headed toward the bar where Kermit, dressed in a little leather black skirt, fishnets, combat boots along with a white dress shirt and a bright neon green tie, waved at them and pointed over to the left over her head. She shouted with a smile. “Fish is over that way.
Hey, I got Cherry Cheesecake shots on special tonight! You guys wanna try them?!”

Jack glanced at Harley who nodded while Agatha grinned cheekily. “Oh shots!”

Jack gave a thumbs up shouting back. “Sounds good!”

Kermit gave a thumbs up in response as the four of them headed over to meet with Fish.

* * *

Fish was sitting at her table which was covered tonight in a deep blood red table cloth. She was nursing a Mai Tai her eyes on a young man, dark skin, bald, shirtless in a pair of tight leather pants who was dancing to the music in a way that was just short of pornographic. The young man had his eye on her too, the two of them flirting across the room. She grinned, the flirtation putting her in a good mood despite the few patrons she could see that were under the influence of that new party drug, “Giggles.”

Giggles had been making the rounds of her club and a few others that she had heard about, for the last few weeks, but she had seen a steady increase in the number of young people showing up to her club under the influence of this new drug. No deaths, yet...at least none that she knew about, but she figured it was only a matter of time. It’s what always happened with new narcotics, even the “best” synthetic drugs. The drug was one of the reasons she had decided that putting her lot in with the Red Hood was a good idea...she hoped that Jack Wayne might not only get her out from under Maroni’s thumb, but he might help her with this problem as well. She was smart enough to know that she needed help in getting rid of the pusher who was bring this new drug not only into her club, but into the neighborhood. Panessa hadn’t taken her request for assistance seriously...hell, he had practically laughed at her.

It wasn’t that Fish had anything against drugs, she didn’t but there was something about this new one that rubbed her wrong...it was dangerous and it was only a matter of time before….Fish shook her head clearing her thought. The fact of the matter was that she needed someone to help stop this drug... not just simply by getting rid of the pushers, but with finding the source of this new drug and maybe stopping it all together.

Fish sighed and reached out for her drink, her eyes momentarily drifted away from the man she had been watching dance when she saw Jack Wayne. She smiled. She had made her decision last night after Maroni showed up and she was feeling good about her choice to side with the Red Hood...she just hoped that decision didn’t come back to haunt her later.

Jack waved. “Good evening Fish.”

Fish smiled and motioned to the seats around her table. “Welcome.”

Jack smiled pulling out a chair for Harley while Frost pulled one out for Agatha, though Frost stepped back placing himself in such a way to cover them all.

“Fish, let me introduce you to my aunt Agatha.”

Agatha leaned over the table to take Fish’s hand. “Nice to meet you.”

Fish smiled and shook her hand. “I see the Red Hood is clearly a family.”

Jack chuckled. “Yes, maybe just a little.”

Fish nodded her understanding, family was always complicated.

Kermit came only a couple of seconds later with a tray of shots. She grinned bright. “Everyone enjoy!”

Jack nodded then turned to look at Fish. “So, have you decided or did we waste our time coming here?”

Fish smiled. “I’ll join and help,” she said. “But I would ask a favor in return.”

Jack lifted a brow in amusement. “A favor? Really…”

Harley laid her hand on Jack’s knee. “Let’s hear her out puddin.”

Jack gazed at Harley then nodded. “Fine,” he said with a nod. He looked back at Fish with a small smile. “What do you need?”

Fish started to speak. “I…”

As the club owner opened her mouth, they all heard shouting loud enough that it was audible over the music; several voices were raised followed by the sound of a louder voice. “Hey!! I’m the Fucking RED HOOD!! You better fucking let me in!”

Jack looked both surprised and amused. “Oh, I have got to go see what that is all about.”

Harley put her hand on his when Jack stood up. “Puddin, you sure about…”

Jack laughed. “I’ll just be a minute pumpkin, you just enjoy your drink with Fish here.”

Jack stood. “Come on Frost, let’s go see what that’s all about.”

Harley watched Jack and Frost head toward the front of the club before she turned back to Fish. Fish smiled. “I wouldn’t worry too much. Probably just some asshole drunk and being stupid. Heard a rumor about the Red Hood taking over and decided to see how far he could push his luck.” She sipped her drink with a smile.

Harley chuckled picking up one of the shots, along with Agatha who held her drink up. “To new and profitable friendships.”

Fish and Harley both brought their drinks ups, clicking the glasses when a rough male voice said loudly.

“Well just look at that boys, a table full of lovely available women. Who knew a guy like me could be so lucky.”

All three women turned, but it was Fish who hissed through her teeth.

“Maroni.”
The music had just changed to Doja Cat’s “Go To Town” the bouncy and bubbly tune at odds with the thick atmosphere that surrounded the table.

Fish glared over the top of her glass with a hissed, “Maroni.”

“Ah, come on now Fish, babe, don’t say my name like that. You’ll give a guy a complex.” Sal grinned at her, his hand to his chest like he had been wounded before he shifted his gaze to Agatha and Harley. He straightened his tie as he leered at the two women. Harley had been with Jack long enough that she could tell Maroni’s suit was expensive, yet, it had not been tailored to the man, making him look rumpled and cheap. She smirked. You could buy the suit, but it didn’t give you class she thought.

“Now how about you introduce me to your two very beautiful friends here Fish.”

Fish glanced at the two women with an apologetic look before she said, “Agatha and Harley, Sal Maroni.”

Maroni reached out toward Agatha. The older woman put her hand out and Sal took Agatha’s hand, kissed the back of her knuckles as he purred. “Delighted. I do like myself an older one...usually know their way around the bedroom.”

Agatha curled her lip in what might have been a smile, but said nothing.

He lingered on her hand a little too long. “Charmed. Mm...I do like myself a little bit of vanilla too. Something young and fresh.”

Harley’s face twisted into an expression of disgust before she snatched her hand back.

Maroni grinned. “So ladies, has Fish here been telling you anything about our charming little set up or has she decided to be foolish and throw her lot in with the Red Hood?”

Maroni ignored her and motioned with his finger; one of his bodyguards pulled out one of the chairs, choosing the one next to Harley. Maroni sat pulling up his slacks and running a hand over his tie before he directed his attention to the three women.

“Where’s that cute little green hair piece of ass you got working the bar? I need a drink.” Maroni turned to look at the bar.

Fish narrowed her eyes, but she made a motion with her hand toward the bar. Harley followed Fish’s line of sight to the bar where she saw Kermit who had been watching.

The young woman made a face, but quickly set to work.

Maroni smiled and crossed his legs. “All right babe, so here’s the deal. I’ve decided since YOU have decided to be a pain in my side, make me wait, play with my affections...that from now on, your protection fees are going to cost you more--double.”

Harley blanched. “Protection fees? What are you talking about?” She looked between Fish and Sal.

Maroni grinned. “Sweetheart, just shut up and let the adults talk, you keep that pretty mouth of yours closed, I might let you put those pretty red lips on something else.”

He winked at her licking his lips.

Harley started to move, her hand going to the bracelet on her wrist when Agatha reached out to put a hand on Harley’s arm, stopping her from moving. Harley shot her a disbelieving look, but it was clear from the expression in Agatha’s eye that she was disgusted with the man too, but there was something calculating about the look she was giving Maroni. Harley frowned, but followed Agatha’s lead and waited.

Maroni continued. “So now I’m gonna need twenty-five hundred every week.”

Fish snarled with a shake of her head. “Sal you can’t do that.”

“Why, you think having some Red Hood in charge of the area really changes our little set up? I don’t care if you do decide to throw your lot in with the Red Hood, I still expect to get paid and if the Red Hood has a problem with that…what’s’ he gonna do about it? Eh? The Roman can say all he wants about who’s who and what’s what, but when it comes right down to it, it’s us, those grunts in the streets, the one’s doing the heavy lifting that should get the pay. The Roman sits on his throne, but I’m the one down on the streets doing the work and I say: you still have to pay Fish.” He grinned nastily. “I mean, I really hate to see anything happen to say…your little green haired friend…or say…” He looked around at the same time pulling out a cigar from the inner pocket of his jacket. He pulled out a cigar cutter, snipped off the end before he pulled out a package of matches. “This is a nice place Fish, real nice. Be a shame if something happened to it.”

Fish hissed. “There’s no smoking in here Sal.”

Sal chuckled while he lit up his cigar. “Is that a fact now?”

Harley leaned forward to pick up her drink. She had only sipped the shot of alcohol before Maroni showed up, but now she downed it before she spoke again. “Fish isn’t going to pay you anything.”

That was the moment that Kermit came over with a tray holding a drink. She set a whiskey mash in front of Sal. The mobster grinned and smacked Kermit on the rear as she turned and left. The young woman jumped giving Sal a dirty look before Maroni turned his attention back to Harley.

“Oh, and why is that sweetcakes?” Sal grinned.

Harley smiled. “Because this is Red Hood territory now.”

Jack laughed from behind Maroni. Harley was fascinated in how Jack could sound so sinister when he usually sounded amused. The leader of the Red Hood had stepped up behind the man without him or his guards being aware of Jack until he was right behind the larger man.

Jack put his hands on the back of Maroni’s chair and leaned forward with a little look sideways at Maroni as he spoke.

“I suppose my wife is pretty confident I wouldn’t be happy about it. And you know, she’s right. My girl knows me better than anyone--ain’t that right pumpkin?”

Harley smiled up at Jack. “That’s right puddin.”

Jack chuckled as he shared a look with his wife. “I love the way she calls me puddin.” He leaned around the chair to smile at Maroni from the other side. The older man had gone very still, like a deer in headlights. It was clear the man didn’t know what to do as Jack purred softly. “By the way, I think you have my seat.”

Sal turned to look at Jack who was leaning around him and smiling brightly. Maroni was surprised at the whiteness and straightness of Jack’s teeth, he realized in the next moment that the man was wearing makeup.

Maroni could just see Frost standing behind him and his own men who looked startled and unsure what to do. They all had their hands on their weapons, but not one of them was drawn. Sal pressed his lips together in annoyance.

One of Maroni’s men started to draw his gun. Frost did the same, but both Jack and Sal motioned their men to stop. Jack walked around Sal with a casual grace, as if he didn’t have a care in the world, to put himself between Harley and Sal.

Jack grinned. “I’m going to say this again, you are in my seat.”

Sal snorted. “Is that a fact? And who the fuck do you think you are? You know, running your mouth like that...gonna get you hurt boy.”

Jack winced. “Ouch...boy? You know Harls?” Jack turned to his wife. “I’m starting to get a little tired of people always trying to take control away from me...first my brother, then school...the asylum...now little punk ass bitches from the mob...you know...it might make a person self-conscious.”

Harley smiled. “That’s true puddin. It could cause someone to have a personality disorder.”

Jack grinned. “See there! And my wife is a doctor! Now...as I was saying...you are in my seat and I really hate bullies. You’re a bully Sal.”

Sal suddenly stood up, standing up fast enough that he knocked his chair back, but Jack, moving like a dancer, easily dodged the chair, keeping his smile on his face the entire time.

Sal hissed. “Who the fuck are you?”

Jack smiled then performed a theatrical bow his feet together and his arms spread out wide as he bowed at the waist. “Why Sal, I’m the Red Hood.”

Sal frowned, then said with a disgusted expression, “Yeah, I’m real scared.”

Jack grinned. “Damn right you’re scared, I can see it in your eyes.”

Sal narrowed his eyes, clearly embarrassed and angry. “All right Red Hood…”

Sal reached for his gun, but Jack laughed stepping close enough that his nose was almost touching Sal’s. “How brave are you Maroni? How sure are you that if we draw our weapons that you are going to walk out of here, eh?”

Sal snarled. “I’m real tired…”

Jack slapped him across the face. Not a punch, but a slap that was filled with enough derision that Harley and the other women at the table winced. Fish blinked and took a drink.

“Draw your gun Sal...go on.” Jack giggled. “Pull it, show everyone what a big man you are...Let’s see if you’re faster than me, eh?” Jack unbuttoned his jacket, flipped its edge back to show the weapon at his hip, the new one he had just purchased. “Come on Sal--how sure are you that you’re going to be the one to walk out of here?"

Sal started to speak, but Jack slapped him across the face again.

"Maybe Sal, you’re just trying to compensate for something? Daddy issues? Daddy didn’t hug you enough? Or is your dick too small? Worried you can’t satisfy the ladies?"

Jack’s smile was wide, but there was just a slightly manic quality in his tone and in his eyes. Harley was tense, her eyes darting back and forth between Jack and Maroni, waiting as Maroni stared back at Jack. She was tense, but she grinned pressing her teeth into her bottom lip. The potential for violence in the air was palpable, but after a few heartbeats Maroni stepped back with a laugh.

“I like you. You got balls.” Maroni, he patted Jack on the shoulders then acted as if he were dusting him off before he turned motioning for his men to follow them. The four of them stepped away from the table, but Maroni turned.

“This…” He motioned with his finger circling the table and everyone around it. “This...this ain’t over just, so’s ya know...we gots a lot to...work out...Red Hood.”

Maroni smiled then motioned for his men to follow him. Jack didn’t move; his blue eyes were like ice as he watched the other man leave. When he was sure Maroni was gone Jack pulled his seat out and sat, scooting closer to Harley.

“Did he hurt you? Touch you?” Jack took her hand, kissing her knuckles and her fingers before he reached forward and caught the back of her neck to pull her close for a kiss. Harley relaxed into Jack’s touch, kissed him slowly as she reached up to caress his cheek with her fingers. She pulled away and leaned her forehead against his… “He just kissed my hand and said some...nasty thing, that was all.”

Jack glanced over at his aunt and Fish, while keeping his forehead against Harley's; his long fingers caressing the back of his neck.

Fish nodded. “He just came to demand money.”

Jack kissed the tip of Harley’s nose before he sat back, though he kept her hand in his lap. “Money? I thought Falcone made it clear this was our territory now.” Jack brought Harley’s hand up to kiss her knuckles, softly brushing his lips again her skin while he listened to Fish. Harley smiled at her husband. The gesture was sweet, tender; he always made her feel so loved.

Fish snorted. “Maroni doesn’t care about that. See...here’s the deal. I want to believe you, I want to think you are going to come in here and do things different than Panessa. Panessa let Maroni run his little blackmail scam...get protection money from us...Panessa gets a cut, then he doesn't have to deal with us except for the additional money we pay him in rent, profits...sacrificing a bit to Maroni was just business...but Maroni isn’t willing to give that up now that you’re here.”

Jack frowned in thought. “You want us to…”

Fish interrupted him. “No...that could make things worse. No...what I want you to do is to help me with a little drug problem first...then we can discuss Maroni, Because taking care of Maroni is going to take more than blowing up a building...he’s Falcone's family.”

Agatha finished her drink and motioned at Kermit who was keeping an eye on their table. The green haired bartender hurried over.

Agatha grinned. “Can you get me a corpse reviver?”
Kermit grinned and nodded. “Sure thing!” She hurried off.

Agatha glanced at Jack and Harley before she spoke. “Maroni is going to force the issue, probably sooner rather than later honey. You made a fool of him—he isn’t going to let that stand...probably because he does have a tiny cock.”

Harley burst out laughing. She turned and pressed her face against Jack’s shoulder. He chuckled and scooped her over onto his lap.

“Come here, you,” he whispered. Harley wrapped her arms around Jack’s neck as she shifted from her chair to his lap still giggling. Jack wrapped his arm tight around her, holding her close, brushing his nose against her hair.

“Sorry Auntie, continue,” Jack said with a grin.

She smiled. “He isn’t going to do anything too soon I would think. He is going to want to wait, see what he can find out about you, the gang, make you think everything is fine. He is going to look for your weaknesses, so I recommend you build the gang up quickly and definitely take care of Fish’s drug problem. The more people we have on our side, the better.”

Jack nodded turning his attention to Fish. “That’s me, the philanthropist. So, what do you need us to do?”

Fish sat up straight. She smiled a little, clearly pleased with how Jack and the rest of the gang he had with him were listening to her, paying attention to a problem she had tried to take care of on her own, then had tried to get Panessa to take seriously. Now maybe someone would listen and actually do something.

“There is this new party drug called Giggles that has been making the rounds. It’s not like anything I’ve ever seen before...I started seeing it months ago, but it was rare...just some sort of drug that made people extremely...happy. But now there is this new form of it that has been hitting the party scene more recently...it’s still Giggles, but it’s different. The effects are more extreme.” Fish frowned in thought. “You know...I heard about the gas your gang used at the Fashion week heist...good work that, by the way. Of course, my information on what happened at the event wasn’t clear, but you used a gas that caused extreme laughing...at least that’s what I heard.”

Jack nodded. “I did.”

Fish nodded. “Giggles is like that. It causes heightened euphoria, extreme laughing, the skin goes pale...no one has died yet, but I know a few kids have ended up in the hospital. This stuff...whoever is making it, is changing it periodically. It's only a matter of time before there’s a death...that always seems to happen with designer drugs.” Jack was nibbling Harley’s ear while they spoke. Harley giggled leaning into Jack’s attentions trying to talk as she asked. “Where would you suggest...hehe...puddin!...we start?”

Fish smiled. “I think I should introduce you to Big Mama. She might have more information on Giggles than me.”

Harley turned. “Big Mama?”

Fish nodded. “Yes. She owns a low end biker bar down near the water. You can’t miss it; the place has a large neon sign that reads “Enjoy the Fucking View.” I’ll give her a call and arrange for a meeting tomorrow night--does that work?”

Jack grinned. “I am at your disposal Fish, and as a sign of trust, I’m giving you my phone number.”
Fish smiled raising her glass at Jack. “Thank you Mr. Wayne.”

Jack grinned brightly. “Call me Jack.”

The lighting changed a little, dim orange light resembling spotlight twisted around and focused on the club’s stage. A young woman with dark auburn hair style into double victory rolls and wearing a long blue dress walked out on stage. There was a small band behind her, drums, guitars, the usual.

Fish smiled. “New singer I hired, Sheila Sorrell.”

The woman began to sing, a soft, jazzy version of The Cure’s “Love Song.” She sang in a slow and sensual melody.

Jack smiled at Harley. “Wanna dance with me before we leave tonight?”

Harley giggled at her husband. “I thought you would never ask.”

The two of them stood up, with a wave to Fish and Agatha, and walked over to where others had started to dance to the music. Agatha smiled at Frost. “Whaddaya say big boy? Give a lady a dance?”

Frost frowned in worry. The bodyguard didn’t think of himself as a dancer. But then put his hand out to her. “Sure thing.”

Agatha laughed taking his hand. “You are such a romantic Frost honey.”

Fish watched them with a smile, feeling pretty good about her decision. She liked how Jack had handled Maroni, calling out the man’s bullshit, though at the same time she found him frightening. He and his wife Harley were both daring, passionate...volcanic. There was something on the very edge of unstable about the two of them, but Fish supposed they were all slightly unstable, including herself. You had to be to move in the circles that they moved in…

She sighed wishing she had a refill about the time the Kermit showed up, setting Agatha’s drink down so that it would be waiting for her. The green haired bartender brought Fish a fresh drink of her own.

“Thank you Kermit.”

The young woman grinned giving her a salute before heading back over to the bar. Fish sipped her fresh drink with a sigh. She would just give Big Mama a call before closing tonight to set up the meeting. She knew Big Mama would appreciate the help too; the drug was slowly making its way into her world too...Fish didn't know what it was about this drug that set her off so much, but she just knew...this was going to be bad news for Gotham.

*

Jack pulled Harley into his arms just as the two of them stepped onto the dance floor. “Do you know how to Bolero dance sweets?”

Harley grimaced. “No I don’t puddin. Never even heard of it.”

He grinned. “Don’t worry, just follow my lead. You are naturally graceful toots, you’ll pick it up no problem. Besides I’m not going to do a strict Bolero, so just dance with me Harls.”

Harley blushed. “I’ll always dance with you puddin. Until the end of the world.”
Jack smiled and gently pulled her close. He leaned his forehead against hers, staring into her eyes for a heartbeat before he began to move with the music. He held his back straight and stepped forward with his right foot, his leg pressed along her left, forcing Harley to step back with her left foot out behind her. Jack dipped her just a little smiling at her before he brought her back up into his arms. He stepped to the left, slowly walking her around in a circle.

Jack smiled at her as he leaned her out from him, holding onto her hand. Harley arched with the move, putting her right foot out, arching her left hand over her head as she held onto Jack’s hand. He gently pulled her back, then spun her in a circle before tugging her back into his arms.

They swayed to the music, Jack staring into her eyes.

Harley smiled back and whispered. “I love you.”

Jack chuckled. “I know pumpkin...I love you too.”

He twisted her around, so that one arm was behind her back, her right hand resting on his chest. Jack held her hand that was twisted slightly behind her back, his right hand holding hers. They strutted in a circle, their eyes only for each other, before he pulled her against his side and leaned, for a moment lifting her just slightly off her feet. He set her back down, standing straight before he spun her out again, releasing her hand to reach for the back of her neck. With a gentle gesture, holding the back of her neck,

Jack pulled her around back toward him before he dipped her back, his arm positioned in such a way that he was balancing her shoulder against his arm. Anybody watching would see the strength and grace of Jack Wayne as he easily held her.

Harley put her right arm around him letting Jack dip her back (her trust that he wouldn’t drop her was complete as he dipped her farther back) moving slowly with the music before he brought her back to her feet and walked her around him, never releasing her hand as he did so.

Harley giggled moving slowly with the music as Jack held her out at arm’s length, his eyes dancing as he gazed at her. Harley rolled her hips back and forth, putting pressure on the balls of her feet, took a few steps back from Jack. She smiled brightly, giving him a seductive look from under her lashes. Jack blew her a kiss with his other hand before he gave her hand a tiny pull and she walked back to him, swaying her hips in time with the music. Jack watched the sway of her hips in the snug fitting dress, the way the cloth tugged at her figure.

The singer switched to another song and the transition between music was flawless. Jack responded to the change in tempo by pulling Harley right up against him, forcing his right leg up between hers which caused her skirt to slide up her legs from where the skirt had been just above her knee to riding now around her upper thighs as Jack shoved his thigh higher giving her a very wicked, not the least-bit-sorry look; his smile was mischievous. He pressed her body close to his and began to roll with the music, his hands resting on her hips. The singer had begun a cover of “Kiss Me” by Lola James; her voice was a soft rolling sound that almost seemed to Harley to take control of her, forcing her to move her hips side to side. Jack moved with her, rolling his pelvis with hers, their bodies pressed together intimately. The words of the song were like a caress that Harley felt as well as hearing them, as they seemed to be speaking about her love for Jack.

“You and I

We're not like anybody else

Hold me tight
Cause you don't want nobody else
I'm lost in you
I'm lost and I can't get away from you
I'm lost in you
Even found I would still find my way to you…”
*
Jack held her tightly, so close that their bodies were almost melded. The feel of his leg between hers was erotic. Harley giggled softly, enjoying the way his leg felt between hers. It was exciting and made her way to purr and rub against his leg to increase the heat that was building there.

She licked her lips, glancing down at where Jack’s leg was between hers, then back up at Jack’s mischievous blue eyes. “You’re going to rip my dress.”

Jack purred in response. “I'm planning on ripping it off of you.”

Harley giggled. “You like destroying my dresses?”

He laughed. “I like getting you out of them--I’m just impatient sometimes.”

He stepped out, holding onto her hand, both of them rolling their hips to the music.

“You know what a bachata dance is?” he asked while they continued to let the music move them.

Harley giggled. “I don’t know any dances except the ones you teach me puddin.”

Jack grinned at her and said, “Just follow me Harley.”

“To the ends of the earth puddin,” Harley replied with the same intensity as before.

Jack gazed intently at her. “You and me against the world.”

Harley took a few steps out before Jack pulled her back toward him, his leg taking up the same position between hers again. They shifted side to side, Jack lifting her leg slightly with each aggressive side move. They slowed their movements to just having their bodies pressed together, weaving aggressively side to side.

Jack slid his hand down her back to her hips, his eyes caressing her face. “You are the most beautiful woman in Gotham Harley...in the world…”

Harley giggled, felt her cheeks warm. “Puddin…”

Jack hissed, leaning closer, his hips a breath away from hers. “I want you Harley.”

Harley took in a breath, a combination of a sigh and a moan. “I want you too puddin. I always want you.”

Jack stepped away from her, holding both her hands, the two of them moving their hips with the music, stepping lightly on the balls of their feet and smiled at each other. Jack pulled her close utilizing one hand to spin her around several times before he yanked her toward him, wrapping his arms tight around her. He pressed his hands to her lower back, their pelvises tight together while they moved to the music. Harley wrapped her arms around his shoulders, her hands caressing his hair, over his ears, staring into the depths of his blue eyes.

*

I'm lost in you
I'm lost and I can't get away from you
I'm lost in you
Even found I would still find my way to you
So kiss me like you never have before
Who cares if anyone's here
Kiss me like we own this floor
Kiss me while my body moves with yours
Tonight's ending is no where near You're my desire give me more

*

Jack brushed his lips against hers, his tongue caressing the outside of her lips. Harley gently grabbed Jack’s hair in her hands, pulling him down to her mouth more firmly. Her tongue met his in a smooth lick that quickly turned into a deep, passionate kiss. Jack pressed her body up firmly against his, deepening the kiss, all thoughts of dancing gone. Harley moaned softly against his mouth as her right leg traveled up his thigh. He grabbed her leg under the knee, lifting it higher, his body leaning into hers.

The song had stopped and Jack eased back from her with a wide smile.

“Ready to go home sweets?” Jack asked softly.

Harley smiled with a firm nod. “Yes.”

*

They four of them walked outside to discover that it was raining.

Agatha laughed. “Oh course none of us have umbrellas.”

Jack chuckled pulling his jacket off and draping it over Harley’s head. “Don’t worry auntie, I don’t think you are bad enough to melt.”

Agatha grinned. “Oh don’t be too sure about that Jackie.”

Agatha gave a raucous cackle as Frost covered her with his jacket. She laughed and wrapped an arm around his waist.

*

Jack and Harley spent the ride home kissing. Jack had pulled her onto his lap, resting a hand against her breast while they kissed trying to control themselves (since Aunt Agatha was in the car and Jack wasn’t quite ready to fuck in front of his aunt yet.). Harley reached down between them, gently massaging the hard mound of his erection, making it very difficult for Jack not to throw her down onto the back seat and yank her dress up.

Jack purred against her mouth. “You’re very naughty Harley.”

She giggled softly. “So are you!”

Jack growled softly, deep in his throat. “I don’t know how much longer I can wait.”

He brushed his nose against her, squeezing her breast. Harley replied by squeezing him in return. Jack grunted, catching her mouth again and kissing her deeply.

*

He wanted her so badly by the time they arrived at the apartment building that he wasn’t sure how much longer he could wait for her. She had teased him mercilessly the entire ride home.

When they arrived back at the apartment building, the rain was coming down much heavier than earlier. Frost parked and started to get out, but Jack reached over and squeezed his shoulder.

“It’s fine. We’ll be fine Frost darling. I’m armed and I doubt Maroni will try anything tonight. You just take my auntie here home. I can tell she is wanting to get you home,” he added with a smirk.

Agatha laughed. “Whoa, dear, I’m I that obvious?”

Jack laughed. “You keep looking at him like you want to eat him.”

“I thought you two were too busy trying not to go at it in the back seat to notice what I was doing.” His aunt laughed reaching over to squeeze Frost’s knee. “Well, I do have some new flavored lube to try.” Agatha waggled her eyebrows at the ex-cop which had Frost blushing and Jack groaning. “Too much information!!! My ears are bleeding!”

Agatha laughed. “Oh Jackie really!”

Jack opened the door. “See you both tomorrow. Have a good night.”

Harley waved as Jack pulled her from the car. “Night you guys!”

Agatha waved then grinned at Frost. “Ready for some exercise sweetie?”

Frost grinned. “Oh yeah.”

*

The rain was coming down steady as Jack, holding Harley’s hand, led her toward the building. They had just started up the stairs when Jack stopped, yanked Harley into his arms and kissed her on the rain soaked stairs. The rain had soaked them both to the skin as Jack turned her around to press her against the stone railing that ran alongside the steps.

He groaned at his lover, “I want you.”

Harley giggled and softly bit his bottom lip. “Right now?”

Jack smiled against her mouth. “Mmm...right now. I can’t wait anymore.”
Harley brushed her wet lips against his. “It’s raining and we’re outside for anyone to see.”

Jack growled. “Good.”

He reached behind her, grabbing the zipper of her dress and dragged it down. Harley giggled, but once he had the zipper pulled down the entire back of the dress, Jack yanked the dress down until it fell to the wet stone steps at her feet. She stepped out of the dress, her arms around his shoulders kissing him hard. Jack ran his hands up her sides; the only thing she was wearing was a black lace thong.

“Harley…” Jack purred tugging at the thong while kissing her.

Harley giggled and arched her head back, the rain running down her skin. Jack hissed with need watching the way the water mixed with the white light from the streetlamps to caress her skin, highlighting the soft curves and strong muscles of his wife. Her nibbles were hard and there were goosebumps racing along her skin. He dropped down into a crouch on the steps, yanking her thong down with him. He glanced up at her and gently lifted her leg to help her step out of the little piece of cloth, running a hand along the back of each leg as he helped her before tossing the thong over his shoulder where the little piece of lace caught on a corner of brick and hung there in the rain. Harley reached back, balancing herself against the stone railing of the steps smiling down at Jack. He grinned watching the way the rain ran down her naked body. He slowly caressed her legs with the tips of his fingers.

Jack pushed one of Harley’s legs up one step, giving her a moment to balance her heel against the stair, exposing her sex to him. The rain ran down her body, dripping off her as she stood there in nothing but her heels now, making him want to drink from her. He glanced up once at her. Harley was watching him, her teeth pressed against her bottom lip, the rain causing some of her hair to stick to her face while other strands fell forward, drops of water running down the long damp locks. She looked so completely beautiful he thought, like a goddess, naked, exposed to the elements...part of the rain, the air...He smiled leaning in to her and pressed his mouth against her exposed sex. Harley let out a loud moan when the warmth of Jack’s mouth covered her. His tongue flicked out against her clitoris, the warmth of his breath, the heat of his tongue in contrast to the cool rain water that was running down her naked body. He slid his hands up her torso, fingertips dancing across a breast, his tongue coiling against her passionately, brushing against her, flicking back and forth across her clitoris until Harley cried out, reaching down with one hand to grab Jack’s hair, her other hand balancing her against the stone behind her.

Jack moaned against her, grabbing her hips with both hands and sucked on her as she came. Harley cried out with a gasp and threw her head back; the sound of her climax mixed with the sound of the rain hitting the steps and the ground.

Jack released her reluctantly, but he needed to be inside her, to feel her warmth surrounding him. He stood up, unbuttoning his slacks at the same time. Harley grabbed at him, ripping at his tie before she grabbed his damp shirt and ripped the shirt open, sending buttons flying and dancing into the night. She ran her hands down his wet chest, attacking his mouth with hers.

Her hands skated down, pushing Jack’s slacks and boxers down, out of her way so she could massage him, feeling the heat from his shaft in her hands.

Jack groaned at her touch. Though her hands were cool from the rain, they were a welcome touch. She squeezed him and Jack sucked in a breath.

“Harley...uh...” Jack groaned. “I need you pumpkin...I need you now.”
Harley reached up to grabbed the back of his neck and pulled him toward her for a passionate kiss.

Jack lifted her up slightly as Harley released him. He took a moment to position himself before he slid into her; both of them groaned against each others lips as their bodies became one.

Harley whimpered feeling him fill her, stretching her. He was warm, hard, everything she wanted. He lifted her up and turned to sit down on the stairs with Harley in his lap (the whole movement a little awkward with his slacks around his ankles while trying not to trip over them which caused them both to laugh). Harley grabbed his shoulders and put her heels against one of the steps behind him to brace herself while Jack held her hips. Jack smiled brightly at her, despite the rain in his face (it had slowed to a drizzle) while the light danced off her skin from the streetlight made her glow.

“You are so gorgeous,” Jack said with a smile, running his hands up under her arms.

Harley smiled back at him and whispered. “Oh puddin.” She caressed the sides of his neck with her thumbs. “You are my one and only, my love Jack.”

Jack leaned into her touch his eyes sliding close. “I love you Harls...I love you.”

They kissed again, their tongues slowly caressing, sharing soft moans and heated breath.

She started to ride him, slowly moving up and down, using the stairs to give herself more control over her movements, her fingers digging into his shoulders.

She arched her back and slid back and forth crying out as she did so, feeling him going deep inside her with each downward slide.

Jack groaned, his fingers gripping her wet skin as he held onto her. Harley moved harder, quicker as her climax came rushing up from her core. She cried out, arching back.

Jack held her down on him, thrusting up into her, arching off the stairs. Jack cried out with her as he climaxed with his wife.

They continued to move together, riding out their orgasms until Harley fell forward and wrapped her arms around him. Jack held her tightly.

The rain eased to a light misting.

Jack kissed her shoulder, her neck, brushing his lips along her cheek to her mouth.

“You’s go inside,” he said with a soft chuckle. “These steps are surprisingly uncomfortable.”

Harley blushed nuzzling him. “Probably should have gone inside first.”

Jack laughed. “Okay, next time, no sex on stairs.”

Harley purred. “Well...never say never puddin.”

*

It was still raining the next morning as Jack laid on his stomach, spread across the bed naked, the sheet only barely across his backside. Harley was lying with her head on his back, one arm wrapped tightly around him, her hair covering her face and spread across his back.

He was snoozing, caught between drifting back to sleep and being partly aware of the sounds around him. He could hear Harley and feel the steady softness of her breathing. She was still asleep. He was thinking about moving, getting up and making coffee, but he didn’t want to disturb her when his phone started to ring.

Jack groaned reaching over blindly for his phone, which he had left on the table beside the bed. His long fingers groped around until he touched it. He grabbed it and answered without looking.

“Jack.”

“Hey sleepy head, it's like fucking afternoon.” Alex’s voice came over the phone cheerful and way too awake for Jack.

“How do you know I haven’t been awake for hours?” Jack muttered. Harley stirred and rolled off of him. Jack shifted pushing himself up to a sitting position and moved the pillows so he could lean back against the headboard. Once he was settled, Harley moved to lay her head against his chest, wrapping her arm around his stomach and closed her eyes again.

“I can tell by your fucking voice. You always sound like your fucking brother when you’re just waking up,” Alex explained.

Jack groaned. “That was fucking rude.”

Alex laughed. “Not sorry man, it’s the fucking truth. Hey--I called with some good news. Your new fucking hideout is ready to move into!”

Jack perked up. “Really?”

Alex laughed. “Yeah really, so get dressed and get your ass down here. I got the fucking keys for you.”

Jack grinned. “Be right there!”

Jack tossed the phone down and slid out of the bed. Harley yelped as his moving dumped her on the bed.

“Puddin?”

Jack turned, the little bit of light coming through the curtains danced over his naked body. He was grinning from ear to ear. “Harls my sweets, our home is ready!”

*

Instead of calling Frost today, deciding to let his friend have a rest, Jack decided to simply rent a car for the day.

The car was delivered to the apartment building a few hours later. A light rain was falling, just enough to keep everything wet.

Jack, his hand in Harley’s, hopped down the stairs of the apartment building in his excitement. Harley smiled with pleasure at how dashing and happy her puddin looked with a wide smile on his face handsome face. He was dressed in a black three piece suit with red roses embroidered on it, (a set of three roses on the left breast of the jacket and one on each sleeve), along with a white shirt and black tie held in place with a gold tie pin. The chain of the pocket watch that Harley had given him was draped across his stomach, the watch in a vest pocket, and he opted to wear a pair of black leather driving gloves. Harley was dressed in her own three-piece suit, a black pinstripe suit and vest with a blood red blouse underneath with no tie and a pair of red and white leather driving gloves of her own. She had her hair brushed and pinned to the side, falling over her left shoulder in soft waves. When the two of them made their way outside, they were armed with an large umbrella. (Jack had already been down earlier to load up the car with a couple of suitcases with the clothing and other essentials they had gathered during their stay here.)

Harley stopped on the sidewalk and grinned when she saw the car. “Woozers puddin, it’s pretty!”

Jack laughed. “Yes it is! The car is a Mercedes-Benz AMG GT, black, with a nearly solid black interior.”

Jack hopped down the last steps, holding the umbrella for Harley as they stepped over to the vehicle and he opened the door for her. She slipped inside grinning. The vehicle had that “new” car smell.

She watched as he husband nearly danced around the front of the car to the driver’s side, closing the umbrella before he opened his door and slipped inside the vehicle, tossing the umbrella into the back.

Jack inserted the key, started the engine which gave a low, warm rumble that spoke of power as the car sprang to life. Jack grinned wide, wrapping his hands around the wheel, the leather of the gloves creaking as he adjusted his hold.

He glanced sideways at his wife. “You know, it’s been a little while since I’ve been behind the wheel of a good car in...hell it feels like forever.” Jack grinned wider wiggling slightly in his seat, flexing his fingers. “This feels really good.”

Harley smiled reaching over to squeeze her husband’s knee. “Ready?”

Jack’s grin spread across his face. “Oh, I’m ready.”

With that Jack, turned the key, hit the gas, and the car shot forward accompanied by the soft rumble of the engine.

*

The shadow that had been watching the buildings for the last several nights broke away from the darkness of the alley across the street from where the Wayne’s had been staying. The shadow stepped onto the sidewalk taking on a more human shape, but their appearance was difficult to decipher since their body was covered in black clothing. They could be either male or female; the clothing they wore made any attempt at determining whether they were male or female difficult. Their hair was worn short, almost shaved, and what skin was visible was dark, but their eyes were a startling shade of grey so light that their eyes almost seemed white.

The shadow watched the car leave, but made no move to follow; they simply turned and walked away in the opposite direction.

*

That same morning across town, Alfred held the door open for the young man who had just arrived. Richard Grayson was not quite six feet in height, though at age sixteen Alfred wouldn’t be surprised if the young man had another growth spurt in the next year. Alfred cringed inwardly. He had heard from Bruce that Grayson had only just turned sixteen, the day before his parents’ death. The poor boy, he thought.

The young man was dressed in a pair of jeans with the knees missing, a pair of worn sneakers, and a plain blue t-shirt under a black jacket. He was pale, his eyes bloodshot. Alfred’s heart went out to the young man. He had seen that haunted look before, of someone lost and alone...Alfred vividly remembered the sight of Bruce and Jack, both boys pale, both boys suffering, both feeling lost and alone in the unfair world. Alfred sighed softly. So much pain and now to see another young man going through a similar loss. It almost made one feel as if Gotham were cursed.

The only luggage the boy had with him was a simple black backpack slung over one shoulder and a dull gray duffel bag.

“Welcome master Richard Grayson, to Wayne Manor.” Alfred stepped forward picking up the boy’s duffel bag.

Dick looked at the doorway with a slight frown before he brought his attention to Alfred. “You can call me Dick, everyone does.”

Alfred smiled and stepped inside motioning for the young man to follow. “Master Bruce should be here at any minute, young sir. He was caught up with something at work and could not make it here in time to greet you himself.”

Dick walked in his eyes going wide as he looked around, walking in a complete circle before stopping to look at Alfred. “So, ah...why?”

Alfred frowned in confusion. “Why?”

“Yeah, why does a big shot like Bruce Wayne want to...I don’t know...become my guardian? I mean, I’m not anything to him...I don’t understand. Besides...I’m planning on seeing if I can become emancipated, you know so...I don’t need some rich guy trying to be my parent.”

Alfred frowned then nodded. “I’m sure Master Bruce would be happy to help you Master Dick...but until then, how would you like some tea and scones?”

Dick stared at him a few seconds, then broke into a smile. “Sure, that sounds great.”

Alfred smiled. “Well, let me show you to your room, then I can show you the kitchen.”

Alfred set off for the stairs with Dick following right along beside him with a big smile. “I’m starved.”

Alfred chuckled. “It's nice to know that young men never change when it comes to their stomachs.”

*

Jack and Harley arrived at the abandoned amusement park to see Alex and Alice parked by the gates in a brand new baby blue Ford Focus. There was a pause in the rain as Jack pulled the rented car up next to the Ford.

Alex and Alice stepped out of the Ford just as Jack and Harley parked. Alice came rushing over and threw her arms around Harley’s neck as soon as Harley had exited the vehicle.

“Hey!!” she squealed at Harley.

Harley squealed back hugging Alice tightly to her. “Hey!! How are you??”

Alice laughed stepping back and placed her hands on her stomach. She only had a very slight bulge--no one would know she was pregnant unless she told them, but Harley could see that blossoming around Alice’s cheeks, the beginning of that “glow.”

Harley felt a stab of pain in her chest. It wasn’t jealousy, just...the pain of loss...of what might have been.

Alice grinned. “I’m having my first ultrasound in a couple of weeks. I know it doesn’t really ‘look’ like a baby yet, but I’m—we’re excited,” she said with a glance at Alex.

Harley smiled. She did her best not to let the pain show. It still hurt her though, to know that she had lost a baby that was hers and Jack’s. She touched her stomach unconsciously, but smiled as Alice continued.

“So are you excited about your new place?” Alice asked turning her attention to the amusement park. “This place looks massive. All those abandoned rides, and it’s somehow a little creepy too.”

Harley grinned. “Yes! We haven’t had our own place before. We’ve been in Bruce’s place, Aunt Agatha’s or well...Alex’s...this will be the first time we’ve had our own place.”

Harley said softly as she stared at the amusement park. “A place all our own.”

Alice put her arm around Harley’s shoulders. “Think you guys will be happy here?”

Harley leaned into Alice. “Wherever Jack is, that’s where I’m happy.”

Alice giggled softly. “You two are just so romantic. I love it.”

Alex held the keys up. “Here the fuck ya go Jack, one giant fucking creepy ass amusement park with one livable building, all yours.”

Jack caught the keys with a smile. “Thanks Alex.”

Alex shrugged. “Hey man, that’s what friends are for...by the way, I heard you talked to Fish Mooney--how’d that go?”

Jack shrugged. “Pretty good. She basically gave me a job to prove that the gang is gonna do what we said we are going to do. She’s lucky I like her or I would be annoyed by this whole thing.” He smiled putting his hands in his pockets as he glanced up at the grey sky. “There is some drug called Giggles that is making its way into the club scene.”

Jack frowned. “The odd thing is...sounds a lot like my gas...but...” He trailed off in thought before he continued. “Anyway, she wants our help in getting rid of the dealers working in the neighborhood. Do that and she is on board willing to help with organizing and getting Panessa’s territory under control. Though I think at this point the drug issue is academic, after Maroni showed up and tried to bully her.”

Alex frowned. “Maroni? What the fuck does that reject from the ‘40’s want?”

Jack smirked. “Money. Apparently Panessa was letting him collect protection money. He had some sort of deal going with Panessa...and doesn’t feel the need to stop just because the territory has changed hands. Seems to think that the Red Hood isn’t really strong enough to stop him.” Jack sighed. “The man’s going to be a problem. Especially after what I did to him last night.” Jack grinned.

Alex shook his head. “Fuck, I don’t even want to know.”

Jack laughed. “Don’t worry about him Alex. I know Maroni’s type...a bully. But, just to be safe, I want to do some recruiting for the gang this week. Find us some people...flesh out our ranks because we need numbers. Frost has a few people he wants me to meet and I thought perhaps...” He glanced “I might know a handful of people looking for work…” Alex shrugged before he continued. “So, drugs, eh? You know I had heard something about a new party drug. Bunch of fucking party kids always looking for the new fucking high.”

Jack pulled out his package of cigarettes from his inner coat pocket and his lighter. He lit one up, offering one to Alex who shook his head. Jack took a hard drag on the cigarette, holding the smoke for a couple of seconds before he spoke, the smoke slowly billowing from between his lips like dragon fire. “This drug interests me. Fish said it causes uncontrollable laughter...some sort of strange high and it can cause the skin to lose color. Sounds so much like my gas...just...I want to know more about it...I want to find the source, not just get rid of these dealers.” Jack took another drag before he spoke. “Anyway, meeting with someone called Big Mama tonight to learn more.”

Alex blinked. “Big Mama...now that’s an interesting name.”

Jack laughed. “Yeah, she runs a biker bar along the river.”

“Look at you, having all the fucking fun.” Alex laughed. “Well, you guys enjoy your new digs. Had a new fucking bed brought in, probably should have got you guys a trampoline knowing the two of you…” Alex grinned at Jack before he continued. “New living room set, the one you sent me online. Let’s see: all new dishes, bathroom shit, everything should be exactly what you fucking sent me. Let me know if anything is fucking wrong Jack and I’ll make sure I get it fixed.” Alex frowned in thought. “I had all clothes you ordered for you and Harley brought over. All the electric is up and fucking running, the plumbing, everything has been fucking updated, even the fucking alarm system is all brand new. OH, speaking of…” Alex dug into the pocket of his jeans and pulled out a piece of paper to hand to his friend. “Alarm code for the house.” Alex tapped his chin with his forefinger. “Oh yeah, a couple of the rides still fucking work! Fucking believe that? The ferris wheel, the bumper cars, the haunted house and the tilt-a-whirl. The guy I had working here, Arthur Brown, says he can have the rest of the rides up and running in no time, if you want, which I figured you fucking do.”

Jack laughed. “What’s an amusement park without the rides?” The two men embraced before Alex called out to Alice. “Alice, you ready?”

“Sure thing!” She turned and hugged Harley. “You guys have fun!” she called as she hurried over to the car. Alex held the door open for her, closing it and giving Jack and Harley a wave before he slipped into the driver's seat.

Jack put an arm around Harley tugging her close against him. He leaned in to brush his nose against her ear, smelling her hair, his lips just tracing her ear as they watched Alex and Alice pull away before turning back to the park.

Jack grinned from ear to ear. “We have our own place now Harls.”

Harley giggled. “An entire park that’s all ours. What are we going to call it?”

Jack tilted his head in thought starting at the gate and the park beyond. “What do you think of the Ha Ha Hacienda?”

Harley snorted as they walked to the gate for Jack to unlock it, and together the two of them pushed the gates open.
“That’s awful puddin,” Harley replied with a giggle.

Jack grinned. “It is isn’t it?”

He grabbed her just as they approached the car, leaning her against the hood to kiss her deeply. Harley smiled into the kiss, wrapping her arms tight around his shoulder.

She lifted one leg to wrap around his hips, her tongue caressing his in a deep kiss.

Jack pulled away just enough to rub his nose against hers. “Our own home, finally.”

Harley brushed her nails through the short hairs at the back of his neck. “Forever puddin.”

Jack caught her bottom lip with his teeth tugging playfully before he stood up straight tugging her with him. “Well, let’s go check it out shall we?”

“Let’s!” Harley giggled.

*

The people that Alex had hired on Jack’s behalf had cleaned up the place. The grounds were cleared of trash, some of the trees and bushes trimmed back, but not so much that the casual eye would think the place was being lived in. Someone like Batman might have been able to determine that someone lived here, but the casual observer would still see an abandoned park, just a much tidier one.

After driving the car inside and locking the gates again, Jack drove them along the main thoroughfare and soon parked the car close to the house. They parked and got out walking the rest of the way to their new home.

Jack unlocked the door, flipped on the light switch, and held the door open, but just before Harley was about to walk through, Jack grabbed her causing her to squeal as he lifted her up into his arm bridal style.

Harley giggled. “What are you doing?”

Jack grinned. “I’m carrying the bride over the threshold my sweets. Into our new home as a married couple.”

Harley stared at him for a moment. Jack smiled tenderly at her.

“Harley?” he asked softly when she didn’t say anything.

Harley kissed him, a tiny tear rolling down her cheek. She held his face with one hand, her thumb sliding softly over his cheek. Jack adjusted his hold on her, returning the kiss with a tender passion that had Harley burning for him. She pulled away pressing her forehead to his and whispered. “Oh Jack, puddin...I love you so much.”

Jack growled softly in return. “I love you sweets. My Harley...my harlequin.”

He kissed her nose and then her lips and carried her into their new home.

The inside of the house had been thoroughly cleaned, the floors had been repaired, and the walls repainted a fresh, soft grey. The vast array of knick knacks had been cleaned and placed around the house on shelves and in curio cabinets with glass doors making the display of items less...strange. There were new curtains and several pieces of new furniture, (all picked by Jack and Harley online) the living room was furnished with a “u”-shaped five-seat couch, high back plush armchairs and a chaise lounge in a soft purple tinged shade of grey along with a long black and glass coffee table and matching side tables. The circus posters that could be saved had been framed behind glass and now decorated the walls with more attention to style than before. A thick throw rug lay on the floor in here in several shades of blue-grey in a wavy pattern, that, as Jack jokingly quoted: “Really brought the room together.”

As the two of them walked hand in hand from the living room to the kitchen they could see that the kitchen had been cleaned up, the cabinets had been replaced with new charcoal grey ones, and the counters with white marble. There were new dishes and silverware in the cabinets and the clown figures were placed on shelves and along the counters in here giving the room a strange mix of the modern and the creepy.

The Waynes were giggling, pleased with how the house looked, but the real question they both knew without voicing it out loud, was the bedroom. Jack grabbed Harley’s hand and with a shared smile the two of them rushed up the stairs together hurrying to the bedroom. The other rooms up here they would look at later, but for them, the master bedroom was, really, the most important room in the house.

Jack flung open the door when they arrived upstairs and yanked Harley into the room with him in his excitement. She stumbled through the doorway as Jack flipped on the lights and stopped, her mouth hanging open when she saw how the room had been transformed. For a heartbeat they just stood there and looked around.

The walls had been painted a dark grey with an accent wall in dark mulberry color. The large queen sized bed had thick heavy looking pillows and comforter of off-white with a thick purple throw across the foot of the bed. The ceiling had been draped in fairy lights, strung back and forth to cover the entire ceiling. There were two large rectangular mirrors on the wall on either side of the bed behind the bedside tables which reflected the light from the fairy lights back into the room, creating an ethereal look.

“Oh Jack,” Harley gasped looking around the room.

Jack grinned. “Wow. Alex’s guys did a fantastic job!”

Harley nodded in response. She started to open her mouth to say something about how the colors looked, when she was suddenly yanked forward. Harley yelped as Jack tossed her forward, causing her to stumble onto the bed. Jack followed, tossing himself on top of her, grabbing her arms by her wrists and yanked her arms up to pin them over her head.

“This is a good mattress, firm, but with enough bounce to make it fun,” Jack purred as rubbed his nose against hers.

Harley giggled grinning up at him. “Yes, yes it is...very important part of a new home...a nice...firm...mattress.”

Harley emphasized each word by thrusting her hips up to meet his. She could feel he was hard as he sat across her hips and smiling brightly down at her. She gazed at him, her eyes hot with desire. A lock of his hair had fallen forward when he leaned down...for some reason that one lock of hair loose across his brow made her want him even more now than she already had moments earlier.

Jack dragged his fingers down her arms before he balanced himself on his elbows above her. His breath was warm against her lips when he spoke softly to her. “You know what we should do sweets?”
Harley giggled playing innocent. “I have no idea. What should we do puddin?’”

Jack gently caught her chin with his teeth, just barely pressing into her skin as he dragged his teeth along her chin, gradually shifting to his tongue as he moved along her jaw. Harley moaned softly in response to his touch. Jack licked up her jaw to her ear, balancing himself over her. He caught her ear lobe with his teeth with just enough pressure to make her wince slightly before he whispered.

“I think we need to break in the bed sweets...make sure we like it.”

They both giggled as Jack sat up, shifting his weight on her hips and started to undo the buttons of her blouse. Harley reached up, working at the buckle of his belt, then the button of his slacks, peeling back the material and sliding her hands into his pants to massage him. Jack grunted at her touch. He closed his eyes for a moment, enjoying the warmth of her hand as it transferred through the fabric of his boxers. Harley licked her lips watching his expression as she squeezed gently, feeling the outline of his erection through the boxers teasing both him and herself...she wanted nothing more than to feel the soft satin heat of his flesh in her hand, but caressing him through the boxers delayed her gratification and his for just a little extra fun.

He smirked down at her, knowing exactly what she was doing as he pulled her shirt out of her slacks to finish with the buttons before he tossed the cloth aside like removing the layers of paper to reveal his gift underneath the wrappings. He reached up and laid his hands against her throat, not choking her, but just holding his hands there for a moment as they stared at each other, their gazes filled with lust and love. He caressed her neck, teasing the tender skin, his gaze wandering down to where he saw the red lace bra, the red bright against her pale skin.

Harley took in a deep breath as Jack’s fingertips dragged down her neck to her chest, slowly dragging his hands further down until he touched the lace of the red bra she was wearing, then the smoothness of her skin. He dragged his hands back up, caressing the lace of the bra, his grin widening when he saw she was wearing a bra with a front snap.

“Now when did you get that?” Jack asked.

Harley giggled. “Mm...surprise.”

Jack gently pulled the snap, unhooked it and grinned wider as the lacy material sprang away from her breasts. “I need to pay a little closer attention to your bras I see…”

Jack purred scooting down to run his tongue between her breasts. Harley moaned softly as Jack laid on top of her, cupping one breast while he ran his tongue over the other. Harley pressed her teeth into her lip with a whimper as Jack’s tongue rolled tenderly over her nipple, circling her other nipple with his finger before sliding his hand down her body.

One handedly, he loosened her slacks, sliding his hand under her panties, and between her legs. Harley’s breath came out in a soft gasp, her body arching into his touch as Jack’s fingers slid against her, pressing down and easing up, caressing her gently.

He chuckled against her breast as he whispered. “Mm...Harley...you are so wet…”

Harley’s only answer was to moan loudly as Jack’s fingers dipped into her.

He purred. “Now, let’s see how bouncy this mattress is shall we pumpkin?”

Harley’s giggle soon morphed into a heated groan. “Oh yes puddin…”
Harley pulled her hair back into a loose ponytail at the nape of her neck. She had a few loose strands around either side of her face that framed her features perfectly. She grinned leaning in toward the mirror to finish her look tonight with a dark lipstick to compliment the dark smokey eye makeup that made her blue eyes stand out. She was wearing a pair of black trouser cut shorts, a white dress shirt with a black tie, a black and white striped vest and a short black blazer cut jacket that hit just at the bottom of her shorts. She also wore a pair of black knee socks with some black heels, giving her a sort of business/schoolgirl look.

She had just finished with her makeup when Jack walked back into the bathroom adjusting his watch chain across his vest. She grinned in the mirror at him. He looked every inch the very sexy crime boss she thought, in his dark blue textured suit (there were very subtle embroidered patterns in the slacks, vest and jacket. One would have to step close to see the slight flower stitching in the material.) His wore a slightly brighter blue shirt underneath with a tie that matched the shirt so well in color it was hard to see it except for the gold tie pin. The Italian leather wingtip shoes he wore were two-tone, brown and blue. Harley had done his makeup for him around his eyes, the blue of his eyes against the blue of the suit and the dark smoky eyeliner made him look extra sexy she thought.

Jack finally had his watch situated how he wanted it when he looked up with a smile. “Ready toots? Have your bracelets and your knife?”

Harley nodded. “Yep, ready.” She held up her wrist to show the bracelet and lifted her vest to show the knife at her waist.

He grinned as he took her arm, his eyes wandering down her figure as he whispered. “I like the shorts...lots of leg...”

She giggled. “I hoped you would.”

Jack pulled her against him, his arms wrapping around her, his hands grabbing her rear as he pulled her against him. “Mm...screw Big Mama, let's stay home.”

“Jack!” Harley laughed pushing on his chest. “Stop.”

“Okay fine...but when we get home...leave the socks and heels on,” he whispered.

Harley purred reaching up to brush the tip of his nose with her finger. “You got it puddin.”

“Mmm...goodie.” Jack grinned taking her hand as they walked out of the bathroom. He stopped by the bedside table to grab a pair of blue leather gloves and a walking stick for tonight.

*

It was drizzling when Jack and Harley made it outside to where Frost and Agatha were waiting for them in the car when they arrived at the gate. Agatha tonight was dressed all in black. She was wearing a snug fitting black dress over which she had a black leather biker jacket and thigh high black suede boots.

“Hey kiddies! Thanks for letting me tag along again.” Agatha grinned brightly, her eyes nearly twinkling.

Jack leaned over the back seat giving his aunt a kiss on the cheek. “Of course auntie, you make us look respectable.”
She laughed. “We are going to a biker bar in Gotham, and you’re worried about looking respectable?”

Jack grinned. “I feel like we are all a little overdressed for this meeting, but isn’t it fun?”

Agatha nodded. “Oh very. It's always fun to make a scene.”

*

Fish had texted them the meeting time and directions earlier that day, letting them also know that Big Mama was expecting them. Despite the directions and Fish’s assurances of its obvious location, Frost still had a little difficulty finding the place as it was stuck in an out-of-the-way corner surrounded by several empty and condemned buildings. The bar indeed had a large neon sign on the outside that read “Enjoy the Fucking View” shining dully on it, but that was the only indication that there was anything there. There was no actual bar name, or sign stating that this place was a bar, and if not for the bikes and cars parked nearby and the sign, they would never have found it even with Fish’s directions.

Frost held the door open for them as the other three people filed inside.

The bar had a typical “biker” bar feel with a dart board, a pool table, and the lighting was dim enough that the floor looked black. Embedded stools lined the bar, and a few tables with chairs all of which looked battered and old. The cigarette smoke was a thick cloud in the bar, making everything indistinct and murky.

Everyone in the bar, maybe twenty or so men and women, turned to look at the newcomers.

Jack, a bright smile on his face, waved and swung his cane, bringing it down with a loud thunk. “Hello!!! Where can we find Big Mama? She’s expecting us.”

An extremely deep, gruff voice answered. “Over here handsome.”

Their little group stepped further into the bar, heading toward the sound of the voice that came from the end of the bar. Everyone watched their group, all eyes following the four of them as they arrived at the end of the bar to see a man...or a woman...standing there waiting for them.

She was at least six feet five inches, with a hairy barrel chest that was easily seen over the top of the pink, spaghetti strapped dress s/he was wearing along with a white feather boa. Her hair, which looked to be all hers, was cut in a sharp, short bob with long, straight bangs and dyed a dark pink. She had on fake lashes with deep blue eyeshadow and dark red lipstick. She smiled when they were close.

“Hello boys and girls. I’m Big Mama.”

Big Mama put her large hand out to Jack. Her nails were long and painted a soft bubblegum pink with rhinestones on every other nail. Jack didn’t miss a beat, took her hand and kissed her knuckles.

“A pleasure Big Mama. I’m the Red Hood, this is my wife Harley and these are other members of the gang, Agatha and Frost.”

Big Mama smiled at each of them in turn. “A pleasure!”

Big Mama leaned over to take Harley’s hand. “Oh, I do love a couple that works together.” She grinned, then turned her attention to Frost and Agatha. “Oh my, are you two together too? I know you are--Big Mama can always tell these things. OH! I love your organization already! It's like a couples gang!” Mama giggled and gestured. “Why don’t you all follow me to the back room here.” She turned and yelled. “HEY MORTY! You’re up honey! Keep everyone in line, you got it?” Morty, a younger man with wildly curling hair that was dyed red on the ends waved back. “Sure thing Mama! I got it.”

She grinned lifting up the bar counter at the end for them before leading them to the back room.

The room here looked a great deal like a 1950’s kitchen with everything from the appliances to the cabinets all in pale, bubblegum pink. The table and chairs were white, but the table cloth was pink. It was a shocking contrast from the front of the bar to the back. Mama motioned at the kitchen table and chairs.

“Can I get you all anything to drink? Beer, coffee, tea--I make a mean momosa.” Mama smiled.

Jack pulled out his cigarette holding them up with a questioning look. Big Mama smiled. “Of course.”

Jack nodded, but Harley took the pack from with a smile, and pulled out a cigarette for her husband, took his lighter from him as well, when he offered it to her. She lit the cigarette and handed it to Jack as Big Mama stepped over and pulled a chair out, then sat smiling at all of them. Jack reached out caressing Harley’s cheek with his thumb.

Mama watch the two of them with a soft, yet slightly sad smile before she spoke.

“So, Fish tells me you are going to take care of dealers in Giggles, eh?”

Jack took a drag and nodded. “Yup. Since Panessa’s territory is now…” He looked at Harley, Frost and Agatha. “...ours, and Fish has asked for this favor before she will put her full support behind me. Yes, we are going to take care of the dealer--or dealers--whatever the case may be. Fish said you would have more information?” Jack pulled Harley’s chair a little closer and laid his hand on her thigh while he spoke.

Mama frowned. “Well, I don’t have a great deal more on any of it, but I do know one of the dealer’s names. He’s call Manuel. He works with a partner, Griselda. They sell all sorts of drugs, but just recently, in the last few weeks, they started to sell Giggles. They would be a good place for you to start. I have no idea who is supplying them...I mean the other drugs, sure, some of those filter out from the Gotham PD, other's from Panessa’s crew...or did...I suppose you took care of that didn’t you?” She smiled at him.

Jack shrugged with a grin, but Harley spoke. “The cops are in on this too?”

Mama continued, picking at a loose thread on the table cloth. “Yeah...I mean they’ve always gotten a cut on the drug business in Gotham whether through the mob families or through their own dealers...cutting deals with smugglers, the mob...it’s all pretty messy. You should be careful...that Giggles? I think someone big is dealing in that shit.”

Jack blew out some smoke as he asked. “So where can we find Manuel and Griselda?”

Big Mama frowned in thought. “Next week is Fleet Week. There are tons of parties, alcohol themed events...there’s a booze cruise, a disco party and a huge drinks event at Robinson Park. They are probably going to be going to at least one of those events, maybe all of them. The problem will be finding them...any of those places would be a good place for you to run into them. They usually hit all the big events in Gotham. I can give you a physical description. That would probably be your best bet. Find the drug and follow the trail.”

Jack smiled sharing a glance with Harley. “I do love big events, don’t you sweets?”

Harley giggled. “I always love a reason to dress up and go out with you puddin.”

*

They only stayed for a little while longer, before heading out of the bar.

Jack had his arms around Harly’s waist smiling. He felt pretty good about the meeting with Big Mama.

Agatha was grinning too as they walked out into the damp night. “How would you two like to go to dinner with Frost and me? I have a standing reservation at the Gotham Steakhouse and Grill for whenever I want...private table away from the main body of the place. The owner, Joe Humboldt and I use to date back in the day, but he has always held a table for me. It will be fun!”

They had just stepped outside when a man’s voice greeted them. “So you’re the Red Hood, eh?”

The four of them turned to see a man leaning against the wall holding a gun on them. He was around Jack’s age, with hair cut down to stubble, his face unshaven and while his clothing, dark slacks, white dress shirt and dark blazer looked like they may have been nice, they had the wrinkled, unkempt look of someone who had slept in their clothing.

As the man spoke and Jack’s group had turned, four more men walked out of the shadows behind him all of them armed.

Harley felt Jack’s fingers around her waist tighten. “What do you want?”

The man smiled.

“The name is Giacomo, but everyone calls me Gia...Gia Maroni. I think you know my brother.”
Carousels and Kerfuffles

Gia laughed, pushing himself off the wall, his gun held on Jack in the lazily confident manner of someone sure of himself, though he would occasionally tilt the barrel in Frost’s direction. It was clear to Jack the man was a fool since he didn’t see Harley or Agatha as threats—a fool and a chauvinist. Jack grinned to himself, thank goodness for chauvinists like him, because Harley would kick his ass and it would be a joy to watch.

Gia licked his lips, pressed the tip of his tongue to his upper lip while he continued to study Jack, his eyes roaming up and down Jack with a slight sneer. It was clear the man wasn’t impressed as he moved with that cocky selfassurance of one who thinks he has the situation well under control.

“You don’t look at all like I was thinking you would. I mean I saw you at Fish’s place, and I thought: that has to be an act, but no. You look like one of those soft guys who likes to look good, smell good. Pretty boy type. Fuck, you don’t even look like a man with the shit on your face.” He motioned at Jack with the barrel of his weapon. “Make-up? What the fuck? What are you? A fag?”

Gia glanced at his fellows who laughed along with him. All of the men with Gia were the typical mob “types,” men who were followers rather than leaders. Jack surmised they were so desperate to be told what to do, that they would follow an idiot like Gia into a stupid situation, which they had just done Jack thought as he looked the men over with a curl of distaste to his lips. He could feel the shift in Harley next to him. A quick glance showed him that his wife was angry. He could also feel where her nails dug into his arm just slightly before she shifted her hand. There was a small glint caught by the streetlamp as his wife adjusted her bracelet with her fingers.

Jack smiled broadly. God he loved her.

Gia, who was clearly the type who liked to hear himself talk, continued speaking, using his gun to gesture at them—another big mistake Jack thought. If he knew the type of person Gia was and he was pretty sure he did...that gun was going to end up too close to Jack...idiot, Jack thought as he just gazed mildly at Gia.

“Why don’t you ah...let me have the girl there…” Gia looked Harley up and down, his eyes lingering at her breasts in an over the top show of interest. Gia smirked at Harley even as she narrowed her eyes at him as he continued.

“...I’ll show her a good time. Let her see what fucking a real man is like instead of a girl like you? You two do fuck right? Or do you just do each other's makeup?” Gia laughed before he glanced at Agatha and snickered. “Fuck, give me the old bitch there too. She’s pretty damn put together for an old woman, might be fun for a fuck too. Then, I might just think about letting you go.”

Gia laughed again. He clearly thought of himself not just as a ladies man, but also as a comedian Jack thought. Part of him knew he shouldn’t let the little punk get under his skin, that they should try to settle this or simply beat the shit out of Gia and his men and walk away, but Jack knew deep down, he couldn’t do that...couldn’t walk away and leave this man and his goons alive, not after what he had just said, just implied about his wife and aunt. No. This was going to end only one way.

Jack narrowed his eyes ever so slowly.

Jack became very still. Harley felt her husband’s subtle change, a predator readying himself. She grinned. She knew Jack was armed with his gun (she could feel it against his side), but she also knew her husband had one of his knives with him and Jack always preferred knives. It allowed you... to really get close and personal he said.

Gia stepped closer, holding the gun out. Harley knew exactly what was going to happen, she could almost see it as Gia stepped in front of Jack and held the weapon to his forehead.

“Give me the girl,” Gia said.

Harley took a step away from Jack. Gia paid no attention to her, thinking she was getting to safety rather than leaving her lover room to move. Gia made the mistake of stepping closer, holding the gun to the side and up at Jack’s forehead.

“I said, give me the girl.” Gia grinned at him.

Jack smiled lifting a brow and glanced at Harley. “Give you the girl? What era do you think this is?” Jack chuckled. “Sorry buddy, she isn’t mine to give. Harley does whatever Harley wants and Harley does whoever she wants, when she wants.” He glanced at his wife with a wide smile giving her a wink as he continued. “Besides, Gia you said? She is just too much woman for a cullion like you.”

Gia frowned in confusion. “What the fuck did you just call me?”

Jack smiled. “A cullion. In Arabic it means you’re base, like an animal. In middle-English and Anglo-French it means you’re a fucking, shriveled up testicle Gia. And you know what a shriveled up scrotum is Gia? Useless and disgusting.”

Gia looked more confused, glancing toward his men who frowned and shrugged back.

Jack chuckled. “How about this Gia? Thou globby bottle of cheap stinking chip-oil? Come to get on in the yarbles? If you have any yarbles you eunuch jelly thou.”

Gia looked slightly panicked and clearly more confused.

Jack smiled. “That’s a quote from The Clockwork Orange.” He sighed. “Ugly and an idiot.”

Gia snarled holding the gun up at Jack’s head again. “Take that back you asshole.”

Jack grinned as he leaned in toward Gia, pressing his forehead against the weapon’s barrel as he hissed with a widening smile.

“Make me.”

Jack grabbed the barrel of the pistol with his left hand, wrapping his fingers around the barrel and forced Gia’s arm to the side and down, while at the same time Jack’s right hand shot over their currently joined hands, his fist connecting with Gia’s cheek. The moment that Jack’s fist met the other man’s face, Jack yanked the pistol out of Gia’s hand and tossed it into the darkness. The gun could be heard landing on the pavement and the sound of metal spinning away and disappearing.

Jack grinned with mischief as he hissed. “Oops.”

There was a moment, just a heartbeat where everything was still. Harley always thought about it as the calm before the storm, the perfect moment of stillness just before violence broke out. She grinned brightly. She loved these moments, she realized, as Jack’s blue eyes turned toward her and he winked, a cocky grin on his lips. Harley grinned back. God she loved him so much.

The moment the sound of the gun being tossed away echoed and faded, Gia’s pals attacked.

*
One man, short, red haired and built like a pitbull (at least to Frost’s mind) came charging at Frost. Frost didn’t know what the man thought he was doing with this attack, but the bodyguard was ready for it. If the man was carrying a gun or knife, Frost didn’t see it and he would have pulled his own gun, but this close he had just as much of a chance of hitting Jack, Harley or Agatha as he did the man charging him. He also hoped, by not using his gun, no one would call the cops...that would definitely make the situation more complicated if the cops were involved.

The pitbull was going for a head butt, aiming for Frost’s chest. It was a reckless maneuver, but men like these were seldom professionals and usually not as good at an actual fight as they were at brawls.

Frost sidestepped the man at the last moment. He had been headbutted before by criminals when he worked as a cop. It wasn’t the smartest way to fight, but still, it always amazed him how many criminals tried it. The sidestep caused the ginger-haired man to dash by Frost in almost comical fashion. Frost had his fists up, turned to the side as the man caught himself and spun around.

The shorter man took a swing, Frost ducked, his training kicking in. Frost dove under the man’s wild swing and hit the ginger in the gut with his shoulder. Frost twisted his upper body to the side, bring the elbow of his opposite arm up and used that to hit the man in the face, cracking the ginger gangster’s nose.

The man stumbled forward, surprising Frost when he didn’t fall right away. The man turned with a hiss and pulled out a long, thin bladed dagger.

“All right, you wanna play, let’s play.” The man sneered at Frost.

*

Agatha’s opponent was one of those type of men, she decided, that spent a lot of time in the gym focused on size and look rather than actual strength, though strength didn’t matter when your opponent was swift and experienced--like herself.

She smiled at the man who grinned at her and made an obscene gesture with his tongue.

“You know, you look pretty damn hot for an old broad. There are a lot of things I would rather do with you than fight sugar.” The man gave her a long up and down look.

“The name’s Marco...I wouldn’t mind beating you then...you know...having some fun honey.” Marco flicked his tongue at her.

Agatha smiled. “Well, Marco, you are a bit...too...Hmm...stupid for me. I like my men, tall, lean, smart and respectful. I’m afraid dear, you are none of those things. And taking care of you is going to force me to rip my dress and I hate that. I really like this dress.”

Marco was about to form a response, but Agatha didn’t wait. She moved swiftly, her years as a Talon guiding her movements; it was always like riding a bike she thought. Marco, who was a fool not to draw any of the weapons he had on him, instead thinking he would simply knock her out...maybe, if time allowed, have his way with her before killing her, used his fists, thinking his size and strength were all he needed against a woman.

Agatha rushed forward and dropped to her knees at the last moment, just as she came up on Marco (she was thankful that the suede boots she was wearing came up just over her knees, which didn’t prevent her from scraping her knees up completely, but they did help. And her dress did rip up the side just like she knew it would...damn she thought.) She brought her arms up at the same time that she let herself slide on the damp pavement, balling her hands into fists. Agatha snapped her right fist out at the last second, her knuckles connecting with Marco’s groin.

Agatha popped to her feet in the next beat, never once wobbling on her heeled boots. The moment she sprang back to her feet, Marco was dropping forward, covering his groin at the same time. Agatha lashed out, her fist connecting with his throat; Marco gasped and choked. She was fairly confident she had just broken his adam’s apple. Agatha then grabbed Marco by the back of his coat once she was on her feet again and threw him into the wall of the bar.

The man hit hard, leaving a smear of blood on the wall as he fell to the pavement. Agatha, angry and unwilling to leave a witness or a possible complication later, walked over to the now unconscious Marco and kicked him over onto his back.

The man was just passed out for a few seconds and blinked, trying to reorient when Agatha lifted one of her heeled boots over him.

“Sorry sugar…” Agatha’s voice dripped with sarcasm. “But I like gentlemen instead of crass little boys.”

With that Agatha brought the heel of her boot down, piercing Marco’s throat. She moved swiftly, her heel coming down in a quick series of four puncture wounds to his neck, insuring he would bleed out and quickly.

Agatha smiled. “Nothing like a little lesson in manners.”

*

Harley took a step back when one of the men came toward her. He was tall, slender with hair so dark that it almost looked oily.

He grinned at her. “Gia wants you, but I bet he won’t mind if I have myself a little taste, since we’re cousins and all. The names Luca…so feel free to call it out for me.” He chuckled, pleased with himself.

Harley had her bracelet wrapped loosely around her hand, she could feel the weight of the gold spheres on the ends of the chain resting, one between her thumb and forefinger, the other loose in her palm, she only had to get herself into the right position to use it. She glanced over once at Jack—he was in the middle of fighting both Gia and another man, large, blonde guy…Gia, Luca and the third man all shared a similarity in appearance…Harley wouldn’t be surprised to find out they were all cousins.

Luca smiled and motioned his fingers at her in a come hither motion. “Whatcha gonna do? Fight me bambina? Come on bella, show Luca whatcha got.”

Harley grinned and giggled. “Oh, I’ll show you all right.”

She surprised him as she took a tiny hop and twisted her body, her foot coming up and around toward his head. He just barely was able to knock her heeled foot out of the way, his expression clearly showing he had not been expecting her to really fight back.

He knocked her foot out of the way with one fist while with the other he snapped out, catching Harley in the chin with a sideways punch that was hard enough to knock her off her feet. She landed hard, her back hitting the pavement with enough force to knock the air from her and just barely avoiding hitting her head on the pavement. Luca rushed over dropping to his knees thinking he was going to pin her to the ground, have a little fun, but Harley rolled away, gaining her feet in a smooth movement. She came up and swung at him with her fists, getting two strikes in while Luca was still on his knees, but he swung up and hit her, knocking her back a step or two.

Harley winced as Luca laughed. ‘Come on bambina! Let’s just stop this, I don’t want to hurt that pretty face if I don’t have to.’

Harley spit some blood. Her bottom lip was cut and bleeding a trail of blood down her chin, the coppery taste of blood on her tongue, but she smiled. “Don’t you know buddy? I like it rough.”

The man grinned, but Harley started to swing her left arm. Luca started to weave to his left--falling for her feint--and Harley swung her foot out again. Her kick caught him across the face, her heel cutting a nasty, deep line across his cheek.

Luca hissed in surprise, jumping back from her and grabbing his face, looking down at his hand in disbelief as it came back bloody.

“You fucking bitch!” he snarled.

Harley only grinned.

He rushed her, taking several quick swings with his fists. Harley leaned back avoiding them at the same time kicking out at Luca, but he was prepared for her and took the kicks to his thighs or arms, preventing any real damage to his torso.

Harley hissed, taking a couple of swings at him with her fists, missing both times. Luca laughed at her and responded with a few punches in return. Harley barely had enough time to bring her forearms up, his fists hitting her arms. The impact sent a vibration of pain up her forearms and forced her back a step or two. Luca grabbed Harley’s right wrist; she leaned back, but he yanked her forward to hit her in the face. The impact bloodied her nose in a sharp spike of pain. Instead of trying to pull herself free, Harley twisted around to Luca’s left and punched him as hard as she could in his side, close to his kidney.

Luca cried out releasing Harley’s wrist, the impact of her punch caused him to bend forward. Harley yanked herself free, slammed her foot onto his thigh while at the same time putting her hands on his shoulders and lifting herself up onto the man’s shoulders. She grabbed his head with her hands and twisted her body as she tried to use her weigh and the strength of her thighs to throw him down.

Luca snarled in pain, but twisted along with Harley, reaching up to grab her knees, the entire action caused Harley to fall. She hit the pavement with her shoulder, but still was able to roll with the impact and continue the roll to her feet, thanking her years of gymnastics training--and her training with Jack--from preventing her from falling badly and hurting herself.

Luca somehow kept his feet, turning toward her. “I’m going to kill you, you fucking cunt!”

Harley grinned, her fists up. “You can try.”

Luca rushed her. Harley swung at his head, but missed. He grabbed her, spun her around, and slammed her up against the outside wall of the bar. Harley gasped in pain, the brick scraping her forehead.

Luca leaned in close. “First I’m going to fuck you, then I’m going to kill you,” he hissed before licking her cheek.

Harley snarled throwing her head back, the back of her skull slamming against his eye. Luca cursed loudly, his hold on her loosening as she slammed her head back a second time to connect with his Harley twisted around and punched him in his nose, then dropped to her hands as he stumbled back. She brought her leg up and around, the sharp black heel catching him once more in the face as she came back up to a standing position. As he staggered back a step, she kicked him in the knee causing the man to scream as the front point of her shoe hit him right in the soft part of his knee under the kneecap. Luca cried out again, dropping to that knee, Harley grabbed his arm by the wrist when he struggled to swing at her from his awkward half-kneeling position, her fist connecting with the soft part of his elbow; he cried out again. Harley grinned viciously as she took a step back, flung out her right hand, the gold chain dropping down, the gold ball at the end catching the street lamps light for a moment as she whipped the chain around. She snapped the chain out, the sphere striking him in the face. Harley danced around the man until she was behind him, using the chain with the grace and skill of a ribbon dance as she moved behind him, wrapping the chain around his neck and caught the end of the chain at the same time.

Harley wrapped the chain twice around her left hand and once more around her right and she yanked back in the next instant, putting all her weight into leaning backwards.

Luca started to gasp and choke, his fingers reaching up to struggle at the chain, but it was thin and well-crafted, cutting into the flesh of his neck; he couldn’t get a hold of it as Harley snarled and pulled it tighter.

She yanked harder as Luca’s eyes bulged and he gurgled incoherently. His grunting and choking sounds faded, but she kept pulling, the chain demonstrating its worth by not breaking. Harley held it a few moments longer even after his hands dropped, and his weight started to pull her down before she stepped back and with a flourish, unwrapped the chain from around his neck.

Harley smiled and blew a stray lock of hair from out of her face.

*

Frost’s head snapped back, causing the big man to stumble. The ginger then grabbed him by the throat and drove Frost to the pavement. Frost hit hard, his head bouncing, momentarily causing a wave of dizziness and confusion as pain radiated from the impact.

The ginger grinned, his lips busted, his teeth bloody and his nose bleeding from the beating that Frost had given him. He laughed as he held the point of his knife over Frost’s eye.

“I wonder how long it will take me to dig your eye out.” The ginger sneered.

Frost grabbed the man by the shoulders, but both men turned when Agatha snarled.

“Get your hands off my man.”

Suddenly Agatha was on top of the ginger. She wrapped her arms under his and hauled back, yanking the man off of Frost. Once Frost was free, he twisted onto his side, swinging his leg around and knocking the ginger’s legs out from under him. Both the ginger and Agatha fell to the pavement. The ginger struggled and rolled back using his elbow to smack Agatha in the face before he was on his feet again and going for Frost.

Frost got to his feet and rushed the other man, but the ginger pulled out his gun. Frost didn’t wait or stop, he just reacted and kicked the man’s hand, who got off a shot, but it went wild when Frost’s foot connected, the kick hard enough that the ginger lost hold of his gun.

(The sound of the shot had a couple of people inside the bar looking outside, one of them hurriedly went to grab Big Mama, though no one called the police.)

Agatha rushed over and grabbed the man’s arm and pulled it out. She straddled his arm, twisting the limb around as she rolled forcing the ginger to the pavement the two of them twisting about until Agatha was on her back, her legs around the ginger’s neck, his one arm stretched out across her chest. She rolled until she was sitting up, her legs still locked around his neck. She snarled and slammed her elbow into his stomach.

Frost rushed over and kicked the ginger in the face, smashing the man’s nose further. Agatha yanked back and squeezed her legs tighter as Frost moved from kicking him in the face to kicking the man in the stomach until he felt a rib break.

Agatha squeezed, pulling on his arm until it snapped. The man would have cried out but her thighs were choking off his air until she hauled back one more time which was accompanied by the loud sound of something snapping and the man stopped moving.

Agatha exhaled heavily as she released the man’s now still body.

Frost hurried over to her putting his hand out to her. Agatha took it, hopping to her feet as Frost hauled her up.

He blushed, but he was smiling as he said softly. “Your man?”

Agatha chuckled. “Don’t let it go to your head or anything.”

*

Jack grinned and took several steps back from Gia just as another man came up beside him after Jack had tossed Gia’s gun away. He glanced once toward his wife, he could see her facing off against another one of Gia’s men. He felt a momentary twinge, wanting to go to her side and help, but he also trusted Harley to take care of herself. He had seen her in action enough to know that his wife could deal with one thug. So instead he focused on the two men in front of him. Gia Maroni and his “bodyguard” he assumed.

Jack smiled. “Two against one? Either you’re more scared of me than you’re acting or you’re just an asshole...I’m voting for the asshole, though I suspect that you’re an asshole regardless...I would tell you to go fuck yourself, but I’m pretty sure you’d be disappointed.”

Gia stared at Jack confused. “What?”

Jack groaned. “I don’t know why I tell jokes to the ignorant.”

Gia hissed. “Shut up! Mattia--kill him!!”

Mattia was a sandy haired blond, tall with a nose far too big for his face, who--when he smiled--displayed a mouth full of yellowed and crooked teeth. “You got it Gia.”

Jack made a face. “I’m guessing the mob doesn’t offer dental. Yikes!”

Mattia pulled a knife out that was strapped at his hip. The knife, Jack noted, was an automatic spring locking folding knife with a four inch blade.

Jack laughed flipping his jacket out of his way and pulling the Bowie knife he had bought not that long ago and held up up in front of him with a grin. “Oh look, you brought an idiot to a knife fight.”
Mattia frowned looking as confused as Gia which caused Jack to moan loudly and roll his eyes. “I’m surrounded by idiots,” he lamented.

Mattia hissed. “Shut up asshole.”

“Ouch. Now that just really hurt,” Jack said with a grin.

Mattia lunged at Jack, twisting his entire body as he swung the blade around. Jack was momentarily caught off guard by the man’s speed and didn’t quite move out of the way in time. Mattia’s blade caught Jack in the face, the blade cutting a shallow two inch line across Jack’s cheek.

Jack took several steps back, reaching up to touch his cheek looking down at the sight of blood on the tips of his fingers with a smile.

“Well done.” He nodded with a smirk. “Now it’s my turn.”

Jack moved swiftly, doing a complete spin that resembled a dancer’s spin using the entire length of his arm as part of the blade he held. He caught Mattia across the chest, his blade cutting easily through the man’s shirt, leaving a thin line of blood when the tip of his blade pierced skin. Jack twirled again, caused Mattia to stumble as the blond tried to avoid the next swing of the blade, but Jack’s knife caught the man in the shoulder, cutting deep. Mattia yelled in surprise as blood blossomed on his shoulder.

Gia, seeing his cousin hurt, yelled. “You mother fucker!”

He yanked out his own knife, a stiletto switchblade, performing the entire complicated flip of his wrist to snap the blade out as he smiled.

Jack laughed. “You really are a sort of mobster stereotype aren’t you Gia?”

“Okay ya pillow biter, I’m gonna cut your face off and slice your dick off.” Gia snarled.

Jack chuckled. “You really are hung up on being a homophobe aren’t you Gia? Is there something you want to tell the rest of us? I really can’t stand people who are so narrow-minded.”

Jack laughed as Gia slashed at him wildly, his attack lacking the focus of his cousin Mattia. Jack easily dodged Gia’s blade. The man’s anger-filled hack and slash attack lacked any sort of coordination, but while Jack’s attention was focused on Gia, Mattia had recovered from the initial shock of being cut and was trying to attack Jack from his left, doing his best to force Jack into a wedge so that he and Gia could flank Jack.

Jack, his arm working back and forth as he blocked the blades, tried to keep enough space for him to maneuver, but the two men were slowly working him around so that his back was to the wall. The sound of metal clinking against metal filled the space in which Jack was fighting. Despite the pain he was feeling from the cuts and nicks Jack was receiving on his fingers and hands, Jack was keeping both opponents at bay.

Jack and Gia slashed at each other, blocking with their arms. Jack went in low and cut Gia across his thigh, while Gia lunged past Jack, slicing deeply along Jack’s hip. There was another wild flurrying of slashes, each man blocking again, Jack getting a few under arm cuts on Gia’s arm, the other man slicing Jack along his forearm and once along his biceps before they pushed away from each other again.

Gia, clearly frustrated, came at Jack with another wild slashing attack, his anger making each of his attacks brutal, though without real focus. Jack surprised him by reaching out just as Gia decided to lunge instead of slashing. Gia led with his hand holding the knife, but Jack reached out and startled the man by grabbing Gia’s wrist with his left hand. Jack’s fingers were like a vice around Gia’s wrist, digging painfully into the mobster’s flesh. Gia’s knife was pointed at Jack’s thigh, and the two men, for a heartbeat, were caught in a moment of intense staring at each other. Gia looked both confused and angry while Jack simply smiled.

Gia snarled, sweat pouring down the sides of his face as he pushed against Jack, but he wasn’t able to move. Jack was perspiring, but his expression remained calm, with just a hint of amusement.

Gia and Jack just looked at each other, Jack smiled while Gia was hissing with the effort of trying to break Jack’s hold.

Jack leaned in closer to Gia, whispered.

“You are not going to make it out of this Gia. I’m going to kill you.”

Gia sneered and hissed back, spittle flying from between his lips. “You think my brother is going to let you take Panessa’s territory? He is going to drive you into the ground, you pussy.”

The two men were shaking with tension while Jack laughed at Gia. “You really should work on your insults, but I suppose you’ll never get the chance since you’ll be dead.”

Jack sensed movement from his side, his eyes sliding toward Mattia who chose that moment to swing his blade at Jack. Jack glanced back at Gia.

Jack snarled and released his hold on Gia. He twisted his body in an attempt to block Mattia’s attack which left him open to Gia.

Gia grinned viciously. Jack’s movement didn’t allow Gia to hit where he had hoped, but his knife did cut deeply along the side of Jack’s thigh; the sharp blade sliced through the fabric of Jack’s suit as Jack was forced to turn and block Mattia’s assault.

Jack snarled in pain as the burn of the knife parted flesh. He hissed through his teeth at the same time he was finishing the twist he had started. He blocked Mattia’s knife, forcing the man’s arm down and used his now damaged and bleeding leg. Jack used his whole body for the twisting kick, lifting it up his leg, his knee connected with Gia’s hip.

The impact carried enough force to knock the man sideways and almost off his feet while at the same time Jack finished the spin, bringing his leg around and kicking out to catch Mattia in his knee.

Jack completed the spin low and sloppily, coming down wrong on his leg which, as pain spiked hot and white through him, made Jack lose his balance.

Both men let out their own shared gasps of pain from Jack’s assault. The two men staggered back from Jack while Jack moved away from them, each trying to provide enough of a space to fight again.

Gia surprised Jack by lunging in to throw a punch at Jack’s face, while at the same time trying to slash at Jack’s stomach.

Jack grabbed Gia’s left wrist with his off hand, crouched and spun on the balls of his feet to throw Gia over his shoulder. Gia landed on the pavement in a painful heap. Gia gasped for breath and did not getting up.

Mattia growled. “Motherfucker!”
He lunged and slashed at Jack. Jack leapt back, the knife slashing the air in front of him, though the blade’s tip nearly sliced into Jack’s stomach. Jack threw a punch, but Mattia slapped his hand away. The two men slashed at each other, their blades clinking together once, twice. The tip of Jack’s blade cut across Mattia’s arms while Mattia’s knife opened several wounds across Jack’s fingers. The two men circled each other, both bleeding from multiple small wounds.

Jack was grinning. “I have to say, you’re better than I thought.”

Mattia smiled just a little. “So are you. Wouldn’t have pegged you as good in a fight pretty boy.”

Jack smiled wide. “Why thank you dickless.”

Mattia’s eyes widened and he took several quick slashes at Jack.

Jack blocked, catching Mattia under his arm with his own and forcing the knife up. Mattia moved in closer, but Jack once more forced his knife arm up, ducked under Mattia’s arm, which forced the blade upward while Jack moved in closer trying to stab the other man in the stomach. But Mattia grabbed Jack’s hand with the blade around the wrist. For several intense seconds the two men struggled, pitting strength against strength. Jack struggled, hissing, but was able for force Mattia’s arm down and bring his knee up at the same time, giving Mattia two quick thrusts in the stomach with his knee which forced the other man to let go of Jack’s wrist.

Jack grabbed the man by the back of his jacket, pinned Mattia’s knife holding arm up and behind him. Jack kicked the man a couple of more times with his knees while Mattia struggled and shoved the both of them around while Jack tried to stab him.

Together both men spun around and broke apart. Mattia lunged forward at his opponent, but Jack’s left hand snapped out to hit Mattia in the throat. The man choked and stumbled backwards a few steps, but he quickly recovered once more lunging at Jack. Jack grabbed at Mattia, wrapping his fingers around the man’s jacket, with Mattia doing to the same to Jack. The two men struggled, holding onto each other, neither one able to get their blades down to stab the other. They moved back and forth like they were riding the waves on a boat, each struggled to get enough space to stab while holding the other man back. Jack kicked at Mattia’s knees, hitting him, but not with enough strength to knock the man down. Mattia did the same, kicking at Jack’s shins or knees, but neither man could get enough power into their kicks to put the other man down. They struggled intensely for a few moments, trying to use their blades or feet. They were both bleeding, sweating, hissing and grunting with effort of trying to kill each other.

Jack broke his hold on Mattia. For a moment the gangster thought Jack was going to step back. For whatever reason he didn’t react in time before Jack kicked the man in the stomach, forcing Mattia to stumble backwards and against the wall. Jack didn’t hesitate; he rushed in and thrust his knife straight at Mattia’s chest, the blade sliding in easily right under Mattia’s breastbone.

* Gia groaned, his chest and back hurting, the forced exhale of air made it hard for him to catch his breath. He could see Mattia and Jack fighting. He began to push himself up, slowly standing, before leaning over and searching around for his blade which he had dropped, when something slammed into his back nearly knocking him forward. He didn’t react at first; confusion, his wounds, and the lack of breath made him slow as a weight hit his back, followed by something thin wrapped around his neck, and a pair of legs locking around his middle.

A feminine voice next to his ear hissed. “You hurt my puddin. I’m going to send you to a deep, dark place.” The statement was followed by a giggle.
Harley wrapped her garrotte several times around Gia’s neck and pulled backwards. She held onto him, her feet locked around each other, her thighs squeezing tightly as she dug the chain into his throat. Gia struggled, staggered to his feet. At first he reached for the garrotte, but his fingers couldn’t catch onto anything. Just as Luca had discovered, the chain was thin but stronger than flesh. His fingers scratched at his own throat trying to get a hold of something, but unable to feel the chain. Next Gia reached behind him as the pain intensified. Harley was forced to thrash her head from side to side as Gian’s nails scratched at her face. Gia continued to try and grab a hold of Harley, but he finally reached back enough that he was able to grab handfuls of her hair. She snarled in pain as the mobster pulled on her hair trying to yank her over his shoulder. Harley held on tightly squeezing the chain as hard as she could. She gritted her teeth against the pain of her hair being pulled, but she would endure it...she was going to kill this guy for hurting her husband. She took a deep breath and tightened her grip with a cry of effort.

Gia dropped down to his knees. Spittle was flying from his mouth as he struggled for breath making strange wheezing and sputtering sounds, his face turning red and his eyes bulging. Harley pulled back harder and screamed as she struggled while he yanked at her hair.

“JUST DIE ALREADY!!!”

Gia struggled, but his arms suddenly dropped to his sides releasing her hair and he fell forward taking her with him his face smashing into the pavement. Harley’s knees struck the pavement too, the entire action nearly dislodging her. Harley went with him, but she held onto the garrotte snarling.

“GAAAAAH!!!”

She continued to strain, sitting up on her knees, continuing to pull back, the chain now slowly slicing into the man’s neck. She didn’t even notice the blood forming as she continue to strangle him until a hand brushed back her hair and she heard Jack’s voice, soft, soothing.

“You can let go now Harley.”

Harley gasped letting go of her garrotte and looking up to see Jack smiling down at her. Harley made a small squeak before jumping up and throwing herself into his arms.

Jack caught her. He was bleeding from multiple cuts and nicks, but he looked relatively unharmed.

Agatha came over, her arm around Frost’s waist looking around at the dead men. “Well that just went to fucking hell fast. Maroni is going to want to kill you now for sure Jackie.”

Jack sighed. He started to open his mouth to reply when a deep voice answered.

“I know a way we can get rid of the bodies. Sal Maroni won’t know what happened to his brother and cousins…”

They all turned to see Big Mama standing in the doorway of her bar. They could see a few people behind her. She motioned at the bodies looking back over her shoulder.

“All right boys, let’s clean this up before the Gotham PD decides to show up. I doubt that fight went totally without any notice. And you four--get in here and let Mama patch you up.”

*

Jack winced. He was sitting in the back in Big Mama’s “kitchen” with his boxers pulled down a few inches, exposing his hips as he sat on a stool nursing a strawberry rose sangria (with strawberries floating in the pink drink) while Big Mama stitched up the wound on his hip. She was humming “No Tears Left to Cry” by Ariana Grande, which was playing on the old CD player behind her while she worked. She tapped her foot in time to her humming while she worked, a pair of sparkling pink cat rimmed glasses perched on the end of her nose as she carefully pulled the thread through the wound. Jack made a face and took a sip of his pink drink.

Harley was sitting on Jack’s other side and held his hand (which had several bandaidps on it as well as more on his wrist, arm…) while eating the strawberries from her own rose sangria. Jack took a breath and laid his head against Harley’s shoulder while Big Mama finished up. He had a bandaid on his cheek covering the wound, another scar to go with his collection Jack had mused. Harley reached up and gently stroked her fingertips along his jaw. Jack closed his eyes relaxing into her touch.

Agatha was curled against Frost, her eyes closed. She looked a little worn in her torn dress, her scraped up knees bandaged along with a bandaid or two on her knuckles.

Frost had his arm around her shoulders holding her snuggly against his side. He was sipping from a soda watching while Big Mama work.

Big Mama had just tied off the stitch and sat back, examining her work before laying a clean white bandage over the wound when a young man stepped into the back. He was dressed in jeans, biker boots and a t-shirt that read “Relax the guitar player is here” across the chest. His hair, like Big Mama’s, was dyed pink.

“We took the bodies to that old opening into the sewer Mama. Doubt anyone will ever find them down there,” the young man said while glancing around at the group of them.

Jack chuckled. “Too bad there are no crocodiles down there…at least not anymore.”

He smirked glancing at Harley. She knew exactly to who he was referring and giggled softly.

Mama nodded. “Good, thank you Robin dear. You guys get the bleach out front?”

Robin nodded. “Sure did. Saw the cops drive by…they didn’t see us…not sure if they were called or just on routine patrol.”

Mama nodded. “Don’t worry about it sweetie. Thank you.”

Robin nodded, smiled at everyone before he disappeared back out front. Mama turned and started to gather up her first aid kit. “There you go. Whew….” Mama smiled. “I think that is some of my best stitch work there. Still gonna scar, but it will be a nice even, thin scar.”

Harley giggled leaning up to kiss Jack’s cheek. “Don’t worry puddin, I like scars.”

She placed her fingers on Jack’s chin, turning him toward her to kiss him on the lips. Jack smiled kissing her softly, turning his body toward her like a moth attracted to a flame. For a moment the world around them was forgotten as their kiss deepened, Jack reaching out to caress her throat.

Mama smiled standing up and clipping her kit shut, then walked over to one of the kitchen cabinets. “Well, Maroni is gonna be pissed that Gia has gone missing with his crew…I can’t believe that little shit jumped you guys like that without Sal…” She started to shake her head in disbelief then stopped and muttered. “What I am saying? No…I can believe it. Gia was always trying to prove himself to Sal. If he thought he could earn points by offing you, yeah, he would have been stupid enough to try.” She walked over to the sink and washed her hands. “Good riddance to bad fish. That little shit was always hanging around here, harassing my customers, trying to squeeze more money out of me.”
Mama walked over and picked up her drink that she had left on the cabinet, took a long drink of the pink liquid before she spoke again.

“If Sal ever finds out...this is gonna be bad,” she said with a shake of her head glancing at Jack. “I just met you and your girl sweetie, but I can tell you, I already like you better. I would hate to see that two of you end up dead over this.”

Jack had stood up and was trying to ease back into his ripped and bloody slacks with a slight wince. Big Mama set her drink down and came over nearly snatching the pants from him. “Leave those, I’ll burn them. I’ll get Robin to grab you something clean. You’re about his size.” She gave him a wink before she walked over to the doorway that led out front to the bar.

“Robin honey! I need some pants pronto.”

Jack smiled gratefully. “Thank you for your help Big Mama, on both fronts.”

She waved him off. “It’s fine. You take care of the drugs and Maroni...we’re square.”

Harley kissed Jack on the nose and stood up, walking over to Big Mama and throwing her arms around the muscular woman. “Thank you Big Mama.”

She looked shocked, then smiled reaching down to hug Harley.

“Yeah, I’m definitely rooting for you guys,” Mama said with a blush.

*

Two Days Later.

Bruce sighed as he finished dressing, frowning in the bathroom mirror as he adjusted the tie. It was his third tie this morning. He was trying to look like the perfect authoritative figure, while at the same time wanting to look approachable. It had been two days since he had invited Richard Grayson into his home and in those two days, Bruce had yet to spend any time with the young man. If he were honest with himself it was because, while he wanted to help the young man, he didn’t know how...he wasn’t sure what to say or do for him. He was beginning to wonder if he had made a bad decision.

That was when there was a light knock at his bedroom door.

“Come in,” Bruce called out from the bathroom. Bruce glared at his tie and sighed quickly walking out of the bathroom and into the bedroom.

The door opened slowly and Alfred slipped inside. He smiled when he saw that Bruce was up and dressed. Today Bruce had chosen a light grey suit for spring with a crisp white shirt and a slightly darker grey tie. Bruce smiled at Alfred as he walked past him.

“Morning Alfred.”

“Ah, good Master Bruce. Master Dick is downstairs waiting for you at the dining room table. He is nibbling on some toast while he waits for breakfast sir...”

Bruce sighed walking over to sit down on the side of the bed, reaching down to pick up one of his black dress shoes and slid it on before lacing it.

“I’m not sure what to say to him,” Bruce admitted.
Alfred frowned. “Sir, if I may…”

Bruce nodded for him to continue while picking up his other shoe.

Alfred nodded. “Just be genuine with him sir. You have both experienced a similar loss; use that as your common ground to communicate with each other. He needs a mentor, someone to guide him along the path that he now must take on his own.”

Bruce stood up after tying his shoes. “I’m not sure I know how to be a mentor.”

Alfred smiled. “Sir, just...be yourself...he isn’t looking for a father--he is looking for a friend, a port in the storm...be that for him Master Bruce. Be his friend first, someone he can come to…”

Bruce nodded then frowned. “I should have been that for Jack,” he said softly, so softly that Alfred almost didn’t hear him.

“Sir…”

“I screwed up so badly with Jack, Alfred...he...he fucking hates me now.” Bruce sighed running a hand over the back of his neck. “I should have been there for him after our parents died. Instead, when Jack needed a big brother, I was so focused on my crusade, my feelings, my wants...I never considered Jack’s.” Bruce ran a hand through his hair. “I just...that night at the circus...for a moment…” Bruce sighed. “For a moment we were brothers again...then just like that...gone again. I know he’s in trouble Alfred...I just...I don’t know if I should try finding him or let him come to me or what. Now I took on this kid...I don’t know what I was thinking…” Bruce muttered.

Alfred stepped closer and laid a hand on the younger man’s shoulder.

“Sir, you saw yourself in this boy. The criminals of Gotham took his parents from him and you saw a chance to help. Just...be yourself…”

Bruce sighed. “That’s just it Alfred. How do I be myself?”

Alfred smiled. “How about we start with breakfast.”

Dick looked up as Bruce walked into the dining room. He had seen Bruce Wayne a couple of times as the man was coming and going, but this was going to be their first time really speaking. Dick hadn't decided yet what he was going to do...stay or go. He still wanted to be emancipated, but after that...where would he go? In two days, however, he had grown to really like Alfred. It was like having a grandfather, something Dick had never had and he found himself reluctant to give that up. He had also been allowed to start school yesterday at Gotham Academy, something he had never done before...he had been homeschooled all his life. And, he had enjoyed it. Granted, he wasn’t so naive to think that one day at the school, which had been great, was always going to be great, but he found that he liked the atmosphere of a real school. He also liked having his own room...an actual room.

Though he thought guiltily, he would give all of it up to have his parents back…

But as the dining room door opened and Bruce Wayne stepped through, Dick couldn’t help but be impressed. The dude, Dick thought, had a presence about him.

Bruce walked over and put his hand out to Dick. “Richard.”
Dick took the offered hand. “Bruce.”

Bruce smiled at the use of his first name as he sat down at the table across from Dick.

Alfred came in a few moments later with a tray carrying eggs, bacon, muffins and juice.

Bruce waited until breakfast was set out before he turned to Dick.

“So, let’s talk.”

*
Harley stretched her arms over her head with a smile, her blonde curling waves were a mess, some across her face obscuring her view, the rest spread out over the pillows. She giggled happily rolling over only to realize that Jack wasn’t in bed with her. She frowned and sat up to look around. Jack was nowhere to be seen in their new bedroom. Harley made a face. Where was he? she asked herself silently. She threw her legs over the side of the bed. She was naked as she walked across the room grabbing up her pink terry cloth bathrobe and slipped it on. She walked around the bedroom, but there was no sign of her husband. She did find his lighter and pack of cigarettes sitting on the bedside table. Harley frowned picking them up. He didn’t usually go anywhere without them. She slipped both into the pockets of her robe and set off to look for her husband.

She hurried down the stairs and into the kitchen where the smell of smoke lingered like a ghost. She walked into the living room, but she still didn’t see Jack anywhere. Harley stood with her brow knitting and twisted her lips to the side in thought. Where could he be, she wondered. They weren’t holding “interviews” for gang membership until this evening…

She chewed her bottom lip before finally deciding to go out into the park. She walked over to the front door where she had stashed some tennis shoes, slipped them on and went out in her robe to find her husband.

*
She walked down one of the paths into the heart of the amusement park. The air was still nippy, but she could tell it would warm up into a pleasant day, one of the few that Gotham had in the early spring. She was just starting to become worried when she heard the sound of calliope music playing softly, almost creepily in the distance. Harley caught her bottom lip between her teeth turning around as she tried to figure out where the sound was coming from. It was hard to determine since the music seemed to echo. As Harley turned in a circle, she happened to notice one of the little quaint street signs that had once decorated the park, giving the guests directions to different rides.

The paint on the wooden signs was peeling away and only a few of them still had their names visible, but one of them pointed down the remains of a path indicating that the carousel was down that path.

Harley stood there listening. She couldn't be sure, but that might be carousel music. She shrugged and hurried down the path.

*
When Harley arrived at the end of the path, she could see that the carousel was indeed active, the ride slowly spinning in a circle while the happy (and slightly creepy) calliope/organ music drifted through the air. The carousel was large, with garish colors, was brightly lit even in the early morning light. She was impressed that Alex’s workers had not only gotten the ride working, but they had also taken the time to clean it. The colors were bright and cheerful, the gold trim glittered from the glow of the large light bulbs that surrounded the carousel along with the glint of sunlight in the Gotham sky.

She could see bright, cheerful colors of the animals: tigers, peacocks, bison and other animals with colorful and intricately designed saddles moved up and down as they sailed by, mixed in with more mystical creatures such as dragons, unicorns and hippocampus.

As Harley watched the animals go by, she saw Jack. He was riding on the back of a dragon; the carousel creature was a brilliant greenish yellow with a curving two prong tail and a set of tiny wings just behind the painted saddle. The cat like mouth was open in a roar and there was gold trim throughout the figure.

Jack was holding onto the gold pole that ran through the animal, his cheek leaning against the pole as he stared off into space. She could see that his hair was flopping down over his forehead, he was wearing a pair of evergreen colored slacks, a pair of dress shoes without socks and a white and brown checked dress shirt, untucked and unbuttoned. The carousel moved in a circle, the animal going up and down in a slow rhythm. To Harley it almost looked as if Jack had started to get dressed, then in a daze had simply walked out here to ride the carousel. She frowned watching him disappear as the carousel circled around, then reappear a few seconds later.

Harley moved closer. She waited a couple of beats, until Jack came around again before she leapt onto the carousel, just barely grabbing onto one of the unicorns to prevent herself from falling off when her sneaker slipped on the metal floor.

She pulled herself up and used the animals and their moving poles to make her way over to Jack who hadn’t reacted at all to her presence.

Jack was still staring off. His blue eyes looked far away, unfocused. Harley frowned. It was a little frightening the way he looked so removed.

“Puddin?” Harley tried again, but with no response. She put her hand on his leg, squeezing softly. “Puddin?”

Jack blinked then smiled when he saw her. “Hey pumpkin.”

“Why are you out here puddin?” Harley took hold of the pole of Jack’s animal and turned herself so that she was facing him. She held onto the pole loosely as the animals moved up and down.

Jack shrugged. “Bad dream...I was getting dressed, then just decided to come out here.”

Harley frowned. “Puddin, you should have woke me up.”

Jack smiled reaching out to caress her cheek. “You looked so pretty sleeping sweets, I couldn’t wake you up.”

Harley leaned into his touch, closing her eyes. “What was the bad dream about?”

Jack frowned dragging his fingertips along her jaw to her chin before he took hold of the pole again. “It was odd pumpkin...like really strange. Batman was in my dream.”

He smiled oddly at Harley. “It was so...weird. Batman...he killed me in the dream Harley.”

Harley frowned reaching over to caress his thigh. “But Batman doesn’t kill people, Puddin.”
“I know that...but...it was like I knew him Harley...like…” Jack shook his head. “The even weirder thing was that Batman turned into Bruce just before he did it too. And it seemed so natural that Batman would turn into my brother.” Jack smiled. “Think I’m crazy sweets?”

Harley giggled softly and squeezed his knee. “Maybe just a little puddin, but that’s one of the things I like about you.” She didn’t say anything but she wondered if Jack was telling her all of the dream, there seemed to be more, but he said nothing.

Jack grinned and leaned against the pole, his cheek pressed against the metal as he whispered playfully. “Flirt.”

Harley grinned wider. “Oh I haven’t even begun to flirt.”

She pulled the tie on her robe and let it fall so that her robe gradually slipped apart. Jack watched as little bits of smooth flesh were shown, the terry cloth robe hinted at the fact that Harley was wearing nothing underneath.

Jack reached forward and eased the robe wider with the tips of his fingers. “Well, well, look at you running out here to find me while wearing nothing but a robe and some tennis shoes…”

Harley giggled and stepped over to the horse next to Jack’s dragon and swung herself onto it. She yelped once she was on it squeezing her legs together for a moment.

“Oh that’s cold!!”

Jack laughed. “Well, that’s what you get for getting up on that thing naked.”

Jack jumped down and walked over lifting Harley up and off the horse. Harley squealed and threw her legs around him. He laughed wrapping his arms around her, his hands under her rear and lifted her up as Harley draped her arms over his shoulders. He pulled her closer, laying his chin between her breasts as he held her up.

“I don’t know how I can ever have a bad dream with you around Harls,” he said softly, his warm breath tickling the fine hairs on her skin, his fingers squeezing into her rear before one hand slid up her back, caressing her spine. She smiled down at him, brushing her hands through his hair.

“I love you puddin…” She leaned in and kissed him deeply, her tongue moving in a soft caress against his. Jack walked with her, at the same time Harley slid down his body just a little, adjusting the grip of her legs around his waist. Jack purred as he walked with her, the sensation of his movement along with the turning of the carousel was strange. Jack settled her up against the middle wall of the carousel. He kissed her hard, his mouth demanding as he used the wall behind her to hold her up, sliding his hands along her hips, then across her thighs.

Harley groaned against his mouth, reaching down to grab his dress shirt and force it down off his shoulders, her robe doing to the same, falling off her shoulders. Jack pressed his body against hers, holding her up while he let the dress shirt fall down his arms, shaking it free with Harley helping to shove it the rest of the way. Jack dropped one of Harley’s legs, reached down between them to unfasten his slacks, pushing both them and his boxers down to his thighs. He lift her up and slammed her back up against the middle of the carousel, his mouth attacking hers just as Harley let out a surprised, but pleased gasp.

Harley moaned, grabbing fistfuls of his hair as she licked his mouth, running her tongue up along his cheek before returning to his mouth once more.

Jack growled, positioning her, hauling one of her legs up over his arm, allowing her other leg to drop, while he grabbed her throat with his other hand, pressing her back against the wall just after he shoved himself deep inside her, letting out a deep moan of pleasure as he buried his erection deep into her wet warmth, feeling her body close around him. The calliope music from the carousel nearly drowned out their mutual moans.

The groan she elicited from Jack came from deep in his chest. His fingers squeezed just enough to make Harley groan in delight. He rolled his hand over her jaw, his fingers pressing into her cheek before brushing her lips. Harley snapped her teeth, catching one of his fingers. She sucked on his forefinger, making Jack hiss as he watched her face and thrust upward into his wife.

Harley’s groan of pleasure mixed with Jack’s as her fingers dug into his shoulders, arching back against the wall behind her, her eyes squeezing close for a moment as she felt him deep inside her making her body slide against the back wall that housed the intricate machinery that ran the carousel.

Jack adjusted his hold on her, thrusting his hips upward, pressing deeply into her, his hips moving in an undulating wave. He pulled his fingers away from her mouth, traveling up her face. She could feel the cool dampness of her saliva on her cheek as Jack slid his hand along her cheek before he moved up her face until he could grab a fist full of her hair.

Jack grabbed her hair just firmly enough to limit the way she could move her head, but not to pull her hair.

Harley gasped and whimpered as Jack slid into her and nearly all the way out, her fingers brushing his hair. “Oh Jack...uh...”

She came, nearly losing her balance when the erotic wave of pleasure rolled over her body. She held onto Jack riding out her climax while Jack continued his firm, deliberate thrusts. When he felt her starting to slide down, Jack lifted her up a bit.

Jack growled, thrusting hard before he grabbed her off the wall, dropping to his knees, careful to remain inside his wife. He licked her chin at the same that he grabbed the back of her head and laid her back careful not to bunch the bathrobe under her. Once he had her down, Jack reached back and lifted her legs under his arms and settled them on to his shoulders.

He chuckled, kissing her calf as he whispered. “I love the tennis shoes baby.”

Harley moaned on a giggle, throwing her arms over her head, reaching behind her to wrap her hands around the pole of one of the carousel animals while Jack leaned into her.

She groaned. “I’m so glad puddin.”

Jack licked her mouth as he leaned forward, his hands on either side of her head as he forced her legs to her shoulders, growling playfully. “This may be my new favorite outfit of yours.”

Harley held onto the pole and Jack started to move with more purpose, growling and grunting as he fucked harder while the carousel slowly began to run down, the calliope music starting to play with that strange lulling drag which only made their sounds of love-making that much louder.

Harley cried out, arching her body with another climax her fingers turning white while she held onto the pole behind her. “Puddin!”

Jack grinned purring. “Mm...yes...baby...”

He liked to watch when she came. It wasn’t just a power trip knowing he could make her orgasm, no--he liked to watch her because she was beautiful and somehow she was his lover and no one else’s.

He thrust so hard that the sound of his pelvis slapping against hers while hissing and grunting her name drowned out the last of the music. “Uh…Harley…”

He came hard, leaning into her, his forehead pressed against hers. Harley released the pole to hold him, watching his face. She liked to watch him orgasm just as much as he liked to watch her. Harley liked that moment of shared intimacy between them, but watching him brought with it a kind of peace, knowing she had and could bring him back from whatever dark place into which he would sometimes wander.

Jack eased her legs back slowly, though he didn’t pull out. He remained embedded inside her, but he wrapped his hands under her head.

He grinned. “That metal floor has got to be uncomfortable.”

Harley giggled. “A little, but I didn’t notice until now. Glad I had the robe on, that helped cushion me a bit.”

Jack chuckled. “I’m glad you had the robe on too. If anyone saw you wandering about this place naked, I would have to gouge their eyes out.”

Harley giggled gripping the sides of his face and tugging him down for a deep kiss. Jack made a soft moan of pleasure. When he pulled away from her, he murmured.

“Let’s go get dressed before Alex and the others show up.”

“Mm…good idea.” Harley giggled.

*

Jack, dressed in a slimcut burgundy suit (which he had told Harley was a good color to wear to do interviews in, just in case he had to kill anyone, the blood was less likely to show up as clearly) with a white dress shirt and brown tie to match the brown wingtips he was wearing, sat next to Harley. She was dressed in a short red and white gingham dress, with flowy three-quarter sleeves along with a pair of red and white gingham t-strapped heels, her long blonde hair parted down the middle and worn loose. They were in one of the bumper cars, grinning as he spun the steering wheel and sent the car ramming into his aunt and Trope, the two women squealing accompanied by his aunt standing up in the car and throwing colorful insults his way.

Jack just laughed and gave his aunt the finger as he spun the car around.

The entire bumper car “room” had roughly fifteen cars, but only seven of them were occupied with Red Hood members (and Alex’s Dad). In attendance were Jason, Roxy, Duela, Alex and Alice, Alex’s father (who was still in town). Frost was standing near the entrance with a handful of people, roughly eleven, that had been “found” or “gathered” for Jack and Harley to “interview.”

Jack spun the car around when the alarm went off sounding that the cars were about to stop. He parked right in front of the entrance to the bumper cars and hopped out, jumping onto the platform next to Frost before turning on his toe and taking Harley’s hand, lifting her out of the car and into his arms before he turned to the men and women waiting anxiously to see what would happen next.

Jack grinned from ear to ear.

“Well now, let’s start the interviews, shall we?”
The sounds of Le Castle Vania “Awake” played over the bumper car area speakers as Jack, with his arm around Harley, walked over to where the gang had set up a long fold out picnic table. The table had a cloth over it and two folding chairs behind it. On the table were several plates of desserts such as lemon scones, lemon raspberry coffee cake, raspberry cheesecake puffs, and lavender shortbread cookies. There were also plates of food: bourbon cocktail meatballs, herbed cucumber bites, and several other tasty bite-size food.

A large punch bowl filled with raspberry lemonade had actual raspberries floating in it, as well as several bottles of wine such as Mulderbosch 2014 Cabernet Sauvignon Rosé Coastal Region and La Follette 2013 Pinot Noir North Coast. The entire thing looked like a setup for a garden party rather than a gang “interview” process taking place in an abandoned amusement park in front of a bumper car ride.

With Harley close by his side, Jack walked briskly over to the two chairs, pulled one out for Harley before taking the other one and sitting down. Frost’s gun was clearly visible where he stood to one side, while Agatha had pulled herself up on the edge of the railing that ran around the bumper car rink. She smiled as Frost handed her a glass of wine he had been holding for her. The rest of the gang lined up behind Jack and Harley in a half-moon circle, each eating and drinking, but each one was armed and ready to jump to defend Jack and Harley if needed.

Jack’s cigarettes and lighter had been sitting on the table in front of his seat. When he sat down, he picked the cigarettes up, drew one from the pack. Harley picked up his lighter and leaned over to light the cigarette for him. The people waiting to be interviewed just watched, all of them uncomfortable with the strange setup and the way Jack calmly continued to stare at them with his startling blue eyes. The bandage on his face was gone, showing the wounds on his cheek, that as far as Harley was concerned, the additional scar made her want to lick his face, his neck...and every other part of him she could get her hands on.

Jack took a long, deep drag on the cigarette, reached over to play with a lock of Harley’s hair while he stared at the gang potentials, his blue eyes moving slowly over the group of people.

Jack blew out a long line of smoke. “All right. Let’s start with the ones you recommended Frost, shall we?”

Frost nodded and walked over to the small group. Harley reached over to pick up a bottle of wine and two of several glasses sitting on the table. The wine had been opened earlier so she simply filled the two glasses, setting one near Jack while he spoke.

Frost motioned to five people who stepped forward. Frost introduced them. “This is Gus Floyd. He used to be part of the Gotham police force. He was busted several times for excessive force and stealing evidence to sell on the black market.”
Gus smiled. “I got sticky fingers and I don’t like stalkers. The kid was threatening some poor girl, but because his daddy was a member of the Gotham elite, he got off and I got thrown in jail. Screw Gotham for jailing me for actually trying to help someone.” Gus finished by shoving his hands into his front pockets.

Jack tapped a finger against his chin in thought. “The excessive force is fine...it’s the sticky fingers that worry me…”

Frost spoke up. “It was drugs Boss. But Gus here knows his way around drug dealers and the blackmarket and just as importantly, he ain’t a user. I thought he might be a big help with trying to track down that Giggles.”

Jack blew out a trail of smoke. “So you vouch for him?”

Frost glanced at Gus. “Yeah. We were beat cops together. We trusted each other to have each others backs...so yeah Boss, I vouch for him.”

Jack smiled, took another drag from his cigarette and a sip of wine before he spoke. “Good enough for me. Pumpkin?”

He turned to Harley who narrowed her eyes studying Gus. Gus smiled in greeting, but he didn’t stare overly long at her. Gus was short, maybe five feet four inches with short brown hair and a forgettable face, but he seemed genuine she thought. Time and actions would tell.

Harley smiled. “I’m good puddin.”

Jack beamed setting his elbows on the table taking a drag from his cigarette and blowing out a long trail of smoke while Harley reached under the table to squeeze his leg. “Okay--next?”

Frost smiled. “This is Clyde Destro and his girlfriend Angora Lapin. They both worked in the underworld in Metropolis. Clyde dealt with car thieves in Metropolis, Angora in arms dealing. They both came to Gotham to try and cut a niche out for themselves without luck. They both ran afoul of Cosa Nostra and ended up in jail. It's a long story Boss, but I got to know them both pretty good. They're good people with some skills we could use.”

Jack nodded sipping his wine doing his best not to jump as Harley’s hand traveled up his inner thigh. She dragged the tips of her nails along the inseam of his slacks until she reached his groin. Jack grinned as he spoke. “Mm...How would you like to work with a new up and coming arms dealer, Angora?”

Angora was petite, shorter than Gus, very slim, with short white hair and large grey eyes. She looked odd next to Clyde who was a big guy, around six feet tall, with long curly hair, an easy smile that made him look younger than what he probably was, and a large belly. They seemed like an odd couple.

She grinned in response. “I would totally love it. Though I tend to like to deal in heavier ordinance.”

Jack turned his attention to Clyde studying the man. He didn’t look like the sort of guy who would be quick and agile when stealing a car, but Jack admitted to himself, he wasn’t an expert...yet. At the same time that he was assessing Clyde, Harley’s hand cupped him, squeezing gently. Jack blinked several times as he controlled his expression before he spoke. “Cars, eh?”

Clyde grinned. “I can boost a car and be gone in sixty seconds, guaranteed.”

Jack looked at Frost who nodded. “That’s what his record claimed too.”
Clyde chuckled. “No one expects the fat guy to steal your lambo­rghini.”

Jack tossed his cigarette to the ground by his chair, smudging it out with the toe of his shoe grinning from ear to ear while Harley squeezed again. He was hard, almost painfully so as she squeezed and leaned her chin on his shoulder smiling as she watched Clyde and Angora. Jack leaned more heavily toward Harley as he giggled. “Oooh I have plans for you my friend!!”

Harley giggled along with him, taking a sip of her wine and massaging Jack. She could feel how hard he was. It made her groin ache.

Clyde walked closer to the table and put his hand out and Jack took it shaking his hand vigorously.

“Oh we are going to have some fun,” Jack said with a grin. After shaking his hand Jack turned to Frost. “Okay, who else you got?”

Frost motioned to the last two people in the small group he had separated from the rest of the “interviewees.” The two men were tall and lean with shaggy red-blonde hair and ready smiles. Frost introduced them. “These two are the Phelp twins, Sean and Connor. Sean is a grifter and Connor a fence. Met them in lock-up. Both are pretty damn good at what they do.”

Jack looked them up and down then laughed struggling to control his jump when Harley scraped her fingernails across the cloth over his bound erection. “You know, every circus needs a set of twins.”

The two men smiled at the same time. “Does that mean we’re hired?”

Jack glanced over at his wife who gave him a thumbs up.

Jack grinned. “That means you’re hired.”

*

Agatha was watching the proceedings with a slight smile. She couldn’t help but think about how upset her brother would have been by all of this—not just Jack pursuing his criminal lifestyle, but the fact that his sons weren’t close. She knew that was something Thomas had wanted for his children since he and Agatha had never been close. She sighed to herself. She missed her brother and sister-in-law even if Thomas had been so tight laced she was surprised he had been able to breathe. Her mind wandered a bit, thinking about their murder. She remembered that time being so chaotic, the boys alone and her unable to return to Gotham for any length of time to take care of them, having to trust them to Alfred...

She had always been curious about the details of their deaths, but had never pursued an investigation after the cops arrested Joe Chill, though that had never set well with her.

Agatha sipped her wine, glanced up once at the same group of hopefuls and went still. There was a young man in a blue jacket, just to the back of the group here to interview for Jack’s gang. She saw nothing particularly special about him; he was youngish, maybe around thirty with short black hair, slim build, big nose, but other than that there was really nothing at all special about him, nothing that made him stand out from the crowd. He had the type of face and build that would simply vanish in a crowd. It wasn’t his looks that drew her attention at all. There was something about the way he was holding himself, the way his eyes followed the rest of the people here, a sort of quiet intensity that she somehow felt she knew, understood…

*

Jack reached over picked up a scone and took a bite, giving Harley a playful wink, her hands still cupping him, when Alex grabbed a young woman from the small group. She had a slight Korean look to her features, appeared to be in her twenties with her hair shaved bald on one side, the rest of her hair dyed lavender, wearing ripped up black leggings, combat boots and a deadmau5 t-shirt.
(Harley had noticed that Trope had been staring at the young woman all evening with a look of clear interest. Harley smirked, thought it was cute. She recognized a blossoming crush when she saw one).
Alex grinned as he shoved the young woman forward.

“Okay Jack, this is Thea--Thea Volt. She used to work for Cobblepot doing his computers and shit...I don’t fucking know, BUT I do know she did used to work for fucking Apple before she was fired for some high tech fucking espionage. She almost got herself arrested, but managed to fucking disappear before she could be caught. I was thinking that Trope could use some fucking help and who knows? Batman and other costumed yo yo’s like their fucking toys, maybe we should start thinking about adding some fucking toys too?”

Harley elbowed Jack leaning close to whisper in his ear. “I say we take her. Look at the way Trope is looking at her!”

Jack glanced over at Trope, then at Thea who seemed to have just noticed Trope. The two young women were both blushing and exchanging glances. Jack chuckled smiling at his wife.

“You are so adorable wanting to play matchmaker sweets,” Jack cooed giving Harley a kiss on the cheek.

Harley giggled, but murmured back. “I also think Alex has a point. Who knows, maybe we could use some high tech toys in the future? It might be fun to see what she comes up with.”

Jack smiled and touched the tip of her nose with a whisper. “Boop.”

Harley giggled as Jack nodded to Alex and Thea. “Okay, you’re in. Besides, I like your hair color.
Purple is one of my...Wait a minute!”

Alex and Thea frowned as Jack stood up, his chair scraping across the concrete floor, the music had changed to La Roux’s “In for the Kill” (Le Castle Vania remix version), at the same time he yanked his jacket quickly closed to hide his front, and walked over to them, but continued to walk past them.
Harley was watching her husband with a slight frown as he pulled a tall, slim, bald man from the back and threw his arms around him.

*

Agatha had returned her attention to Jack, frowning slightly when he got up to go and throw his arms around some bald man, she glanced over at the man she had picked out and frowned. He was watching Jack, nothing out of the ordinary--except to Agatha. She narrowed her eyes. The man was watching Jack with a quiet intensity that she didn’t like.

*

Jack laughed as he zeroed in on a bald man standing a little to the back, reaching out to grab Victor Zsasz’s hand. “Zsasz! I didn't think I would see you again!”

Zsasz grinned at Jack. Zsasz was dressed in an all black suit, black shirt, black tie. He looked good, had better color to his skin, his smile bright and ready as he answered Jack. “Well you know how it is--you can take the boy out of Gotham, but this bitch of a city sucks you back in.”

Jack grinned still holding his hand. “So how did you end up here?”
Jack tugged Victor a little forward, dropping his hand and putting his arm around Zsasz’s shoulders and started to walk him over to the table where Harley was sitting at the table still.

Zsasz shrugged. “Just had my ear to the pavement.”

Jack laughed. “Well you are definitely part of the gang. You ever hear what happened to Jervis?”

Zsasz shrugged. “No. We parted ways not too long after escaping Arkham. Last I heard he was looking for Alice.”

Jack chuckled. “Ah yes...Alice.”

* Agatha frowned. She watched as the young, plain man moved forward. There was something about the way he held himself, the way he moved. And she knew exactly what he was if not who....

She hopped down and walked over to where Jack was standing by the table talking to the man he had embraced and Harley.

“Jackie,” she whispered, covering herself by picking up a bottle of wine, at the same time turning her back to the man she had been watching. Harley frowned looking up at Agatha; she could tell by her expression that something was bothering Jack’s aunt.

Jack grinned. “Auntie, let me introduce Victor Zsasz. He was a friend I made while I was still in Arkham. Victor, this is my Aunt Agatha.”

Agatha smiled with a nod to the bald man. “Nice to meet you Victor. Jackie...I need to talk to you for a moment alone.”

Jack frowned, but Victor smiled. “No problem.”

Jack pointed at the table. “Grab some wine and go introduce yourself to everyone else.”

Victor patted Jack’s back before walking away, picking up a glass of wine from the table as he did so.

Jack turned to his Aunt who held out her empty glass to Harley. “Just act naturally.”

Jack nodded as he reached for his wine glass. Harley picked up the bottle of wine that was between them on the table, stood, and started to pour as Agatha said quietly over the rim of her glass. “That man in the back, he’s an Owl. I’m sure of it. I’ve been watching him; something about him seemed...familiar. The way he is holding himself, the way he moves. I don’t know him, but I recognize the training, the movements, the attitude--I know he’s an Owl.”

Jack frowned as he spared a glance toward the small group of people, then back to his aunt. “Which one?”

Agatha stepped a little closer to her nephew and murmured before taking a sip of her wine. “The man wearing the blue jacket.”

Harley saw him first and traded a look with Jack.

Jack turned slightly and followed his wife’s gaze, saw the man. He was turned to the side so that Jack could see his profile, the long nose, black hair. Now that Jack had seen him, he could tell what it was that tipped Agatha off. There was a stillness about him that wasn’t...natural, not like the others here. He was trained, probably an experienced killer. Not that that would bother Jack or Harley, but who had trained the man and what his motives were interested Jack. Jack watched as the man milled around the group, keeping himself slightly separate, but actually still part of the main body, hovering on the edges. He was hanging to the side, talking to a young woman, but it was clear to Jack that the man’s attention wasn’t on the conversation he was having...

“An Owl? Here? Why?” Harley asked as she picked up a cheesecake puff and took a bite. She stuck the food into her cheek as she asked in a colder tone. “What do they want with Jack?”

Agatha frowned in thought. “Probably just here to infiltrate the gang. I told you before Jackie, they’ve had an interest in you for a long time, before all of this…” She indicated the gang with her eyes. “He may simply be here to become part of the gang to keep an eye on you. I doubt the Owls have sent him for anything more...violent. I have a source on the inside, I like to think he would have told me if they had decided to eliminate you, which I doubt they would. The Owls are not known to either squander talent or of being stupid.”

Jack snarled low. “Spy on me?”

Agatha nodded.

Jack growled again, his hands balled into fists until his knuckles turned white. “I don’t think I appreciate that. I don’t care how they see me, no one comes into my home without my permission.”

He spun around on the ball of his foot and stomped toward the man, pushing people out of his way. Everyone to turn toward him while at the same time parting for Jack like the Red Sea. Frost started to go after him, but Agatha quickly raced to his side and grabbed Frost by the arm shaking her head.

“Jack needs to take care of this,” she said in a low tone. “Himself.”

Harley stood smiling as she watched her husband. She knew exactly what was about to happen.

The man saw Jack coming at him and took a hesitant step back just as Jack stopped right in front of him. Jack gave the man a vicious grin. The look in his eyes was a cross between mirth and murderous rage.

“So, what’s your name?”

The man glanced around, all eyes were on him, yet no one was “looking” at him. It was clear that while the new recruits were curious about what was about to happen, none of them felt safe enough in their new positions to do anything other than step aside and watch. The man singled out by Jack licked his lips either nervously or trying to act nervous as he shoved his hands into the pockets of the jacket he wore.

“Evan,” he mumbled.

Jack smiled. “Evan.”

Jack’s fist struck the other man across the face so fast that even Harley blinked in surprise. Evan’s head snapped to the side; he stumbled a few steps back until he hit the wall, his hands coming out of his pockets. Jack, his fists still up, took a step back giving Evan a chance to recover. He wanted to beat the shit out of the Owl, not just because the Owls had sent someone into his gang, but because he was furious. Jack was itching for this fight. He could have simply pulled out his gun, or his knife and ended this quickly, but Jack was pissed. He wanted to take his anger out on this man, this representative of the Court of Owls, he wanted them to know he wasn’t going to let them infiltrate... his gang or his home.

Evan turned back to face Jack, his lip and nose now bleeding. He slowly reached up wiping the blood dripping from his nose off his lips with the back of his hand.

“What was that for?” Evan sounded surprised.

Jack sneered. “The Owls are not welcome here. You’re not welcome in my gang and you are not welcome in my home.”

Evan was momentarily shocked that he had been made. He knew he had been careful. There was no way they could know!

Jack saw it in the subtle shift of the man’s features. It was quick, but Jack saw it. Evan was surprised he had been discovered, but at the same time quickly accepted the fact that Jack knew what he was. And as that realization washed over the man his entire being shifted. Instead of hiding or trying to blend in, Evan switched his stance, brought his hands up, a coolness settling over the other man’s features.

That only made Jack angrier,

Jack took a step closer hissing through his teeth with anger. “I’m going to give you a message to send to the Owls...trying to slither into my gang, trying to get close to me again...getting close to my WIFE...I don’t appreciate it.”

Jack stepped forward to hit Evan again, but the man brought his arms up blocking. He weaved to his right a little and threw his own punch catching Jack in the jaw. Jack took the punch with a smile and slowly ran his hand over his bloody lip.

“Oh good one.” Jack purred.

Jack swung low and to the side, to slam Evan in the kidney then followed the punch with a hit to Evan’s face. He followed that punch with another right, swinging his fist down to catch Evan in the cheek. Jack threw his left, but Evan ducked under Jack’s arm and rose with a solid punch to the face. Jack stumbled to the right before standing up straight, but Evan was ready to hit Jack again, knocking his head to the left. Jack could taste blood in his mouth.

But the blood only made him smile more.

*

Harley had moved to stand beside Agatha, her arms wrapped around herself as she watched her husband.

Agatha glanced at Harley before putting her arm around the younger woman’s shoulders.

“Don’t worry hun, Jack will win.”

Harley smiled. “Oh I’m not worried. Just wondering how much of a mess Jack is going to make of that suit.”

Agatha looked at Harley askew before she burst out laughing.

*

Evan grabbed Jack around the head, forcing him down. Jack struggled, against the hold, but Evan wrapped his arm around Jack’s throat before thrusting his knee up into his diaphragm.

Jack grunted when his opponent’s knee mashed into Jack’s gut, knocking the air from him, but thrust his entire body upright breaking Evan’s hold on him. Jack sucked in air and laughed. “That the best you have? Or are you one of the lesser Owls? Maybe they sent you here for me to kill...thin the flocks so to speak?”

Evan snarled, his composure breaking. “I don’t know why the Court is interested in you! You’re are nothing, the Waynes are nothing. They are not even part of the Court any longer!! My family holds your chair!”

“Your family?” Jack was genuinely interested, especially if he was gathering enemies he didn’t know about. “Who is your family?”

Evan hissed again spittle flying from his lips. “Galavan!!”

*

Harley frowned “Why do I know that name?”

Agatha turned to Harley. “What?”

“Galavan...I know that name...Just can’t think of how or where…”

Agatha frowned slightly in thought. “I’ve heard of the Galavans, used to be part of the Court years ago, way before my time...I didn’t know there were any members of the family left.” She tilted her head. “If the Galavans used to have a seat and want it back...and they blame the Waynes...why send a Galavan to watch Jack?”

Harley turned to her. “What’s he talking about, holding a chair?”

Agatha murmured. “That main table of the Court, the ones who make the decisions, the ones who supposedly rule Gotham. The Waynes held a seat, but that was before my time...I am clearly more out of the information loop than I realized.”

Harley chewed her bottom lip turning her attention back to the fight.

*

Jack laughed licking blood from the corner of his mouth. “Okay...really I’m sorry, but who? I have no idea who that is or why I should care.”

Evan snarled and charged at Jack to smash his shoulder into Jack’s stomach, picking the taller man up off his feet, following with a slam to the floor. The man dropped on top of Jack and threw several punches at Jack’s face, but Jack snapped his arms up to take the majority of the strikes to his forearms; only a couple of the punches broke past his defense, one to catch him in the cheek. The knife wound on his face reopened under the assault; blood ran down Jack’s cheek. Evan’s other successful punch caught Jack on the chin, a small pressure wound opening to leave more blood dripping down onto Jack suit.

Jack brought his knee up to catch Evan in the hip, knocking him off balance. Jack threw his arms over his head and leapt to his feet. (Which Harley found incredibly hot, especially with Jack in a suit.)

Evan kept his feet under him and kept his assault up, leading with a few punches at Jack, scraping his knuckles against the other man’s jaw. Jack only took the one hit before he snapped an open hand up to snag Evan’s wrist and twist the Owl’s arm away from his face. Keeping a tight grip on Evan’s right wrist, Jack twisted his arm around and lashed out with a punch that impacted with Evan’s face.

(The sounds of Blue Fountain’s “Eyes on Fire” (Zeds Dead remix) began playing, the music accentuated by the two men’s heavy breathing and the dull sounds of their punches against flesh and bone.)

Evan yanked his arm out of Jack’s grip at the same time the punch split his lip and loosened a tooth. Jack threw a second punch, but Evan leaned out of the way. Jack’s overreached by only a couple of inches, but it was enough for Evan to reach up and grab Jack’s wrist, his other hand reaching out to grip Jack’s shoulder and yank Jack forward.

The Owl threw him against the wall, then pulled Jack back and shoved him against the railing to the bumper cards. He began to throw Jack back against the wall again, but Jack kicked out behind him, his dress shoe hitting Evan in the ankle forcing his legs wide. Evan lost his hold on Jack as he struggled for a second to keep his balance.

Jack turned in the same motion, taking a swipe with his fist at Evan, the backhand strike so fast and vicious that Harley thought for a second she heard a “whoosh” of air. Evan ducked, felt his opponent’s fist brush a few of his hairs, then responded with a right handed punch intended to take Jack in the throat, but Jack caught Evan’s wrist in his hand again, yanked Evan’s arm out, gave him a quick, painful hit in the soft joint of his arm before he ducked under the other man’s outstretched arm, his hand rolling over Evan’s wrist in a firm grip. As he pulled on the Owl’s arm, Jack bent his knees and came in close enough that he could come up and hit Evan under the chin with the flat of his palm.

Jack, his hair falling across his brow, grabbed Evan’s left hand, twisting and yanking his arm up between them while Jack tried to break his wrist, but Evan surprised him by pushing up off the ground and doing a sideways flip to break Jack’s hold.

*

The small group of people had quickly rushed to one end of the bumper car area trying to stay out of the way of the fight. Harley glanced between the two men and the table they had set up and wondered if she should go make sure to save the wine and food...Jack was going to be hungry after this fight...

She cocked her lips to one side. He would probably want to spend some quality time with his wife, too, she thought as her lips twisted into a grin. Too bad all these people still had to be interviewed...

*

Jack dropped as soon as Evan landed on is feet swiping out with his left left and spun, knocking Evan’s feet out from under him to drop the other man to the floor.

Evan hit on his side and Jack tried to kick him a few times quickly, catching him once in the stomach, but Evan, his nose bleeding freely, grabbed Jack’s leg with both hands while climbing to his feet and forcing Jack backwards just before Evan surged upwards and twisted Jack’s leg to send him flying before his opponent could land a kick with his other leg.

Jack crashed to the floor, the impact nearly knocking the breath from him. He rolled as Evan came at him trying to kick him, their positions reversed from just a couple of heartbeats before. Jack kicked out too, the toe of his shoe catching the other man in the left knee. Evan grunted in pain taking a couple of staggering steps back. Jack got to one knee at the same time that Evan stepped close again, but Jack hit Evan in the side of the knee with his fist hard enough that Evan let out a cry of pain.

Jack snapped up to his feet and backhanded Evan before grabbing the other man by the shoulders and rushing him backwards until they hit a wall again. Evan grabbed Jack by the shoulders too and the two men struggled for an intense couple of seconds. Jack tried to kick Evan in the knee, but the position was awkward. Jack snarled and released one of Evan’s shoulders to strike the man in the throat followed by three hard strikes to the face.

Evan surged forward, utilizing the wall to give him leverage, wrapped his arms around Jack’s waist and tried to shove him back. Jack wrapped his arms around Evan, the two men caught in a deadly embrace struggling against each other. Jack punched Evan in the side a couple of times despite the awkward locking embrace. Evan broke Jack’s hold on him, grabbing him around the back of his neck and threw Jack past him.

Jack stumbled with the throw hitting the half-wall barrier that separated the waiting area from the bumper cars, before going over the railing.

Evan raced after Jack, jumping the barrier. Everyone else raced over to the rail too. Harley grabbed hold of the railing leaning over far almost ready to go over to help Jack, but Agatha grabbed her upper arm, her grip like iron as she spoke against her ear. “Sweetie, he has to do this himself. He is the leader of a gang; he has to show them why they should follow his orders.”

Harley turned to Agatha, snarled in return. “But we are in this together!”

Agatha smiled. “I know honey and it’s misogynist but everyone is going to see Jack as the head of this gang. Jack is the leader to these people, they have to know their leader can kick some ass. You’ll get your turn don’t worry.”

Harley pressed her lips together in frustration and turned her attention back to the fight.

Jack surged to his feet just as Evan came at him, but this time Evan flipped open a straight razor. Jack blocked a slash aimed at his neck, the razor slicing through the arms of his suit jacket, cutting skin, though not deeply enough to do more than leave a thin bloodied line on the sleeve.

They continued like that for a few intense seconds, Jack slapping the hand that held the razor out of the way, taking a nick or two on his hand until Jack got in a hard enough hit to Evan’s wrist that he was able to follow it with a fist to Evan’s nose.

The strike to his already damaged nose momentarily stunned Evan. Jack grabbed the hand holding the straight razor and brought his knee up, slamming Evan’s forearm against his knee with three hard, rapid strikes that forced open Evan’s hand, dropping the razor. Jack then grabbed Evan by the head and slammed his head against the nearest bumper car. Evan tried to grab at Jack, but Jack still had a hold of his head and spun Evan around, slamming his forehead into another bumper car.

Evan pushed himself back up and spun around. He grabbed Jack by the shoulders, while Jack grabbed him as well, the two men again in another false embrace, struggled against each other, both of them trying to dominate the other. They both slammed into one of the bumper cars and slid to the floor. They struggled and Evan snaked his hands around Jack’s neck, but Jack snapped his hands up to break the Owl’s hold. They rolled on the floor, each man trying to get the upper hand on the other.

Evan finally grabbed Jack by the arm and flipped him into one of the bumper cars. Jack let out a gasp of pain when his back bounced off the car, but he rolled to his feet and spun around. His hair fell across his forehead as he grinned at Evan and made a kiss at him.
Evan snarled rushing at Jack, who swung, but Evan grabbed his arm, turning slightly and put Jack’s arm under his, Jack twisted and shoved Evan backwards with his body. They hit a bumper car again and rolled to the floor. Evan had Jack on his side, Jack’s arm pulled behind his back. Jack hissed in pain, struggled to sit up; Evan slipped his arm around Jack’s neck. Jack pushed to his feet carrying the other man with him. The both rolled on the floor in a strange two person somersault coming up with Evan on Jack’s back still struggling to strangple Jack.

Jack struggled, gasping for air, his face turning red, but he struggled to his feet taking Evan with him. He clawed at the man’s arms. After a few intense moments of the two men struggling, Jack stumbling and weaving, bumping into bumper cars as he struggled to get Evan off of his back, he finally just threw his entire body backwards, letting himself fall to the floor to on top of Evan. The Owl’s head struck the hard edge of a bumper car, dazing him. Evan gasped, his hold weakening enough for Jack to break free after a couple of elbow slams to Evan’s torso.

Jack rolled around and came up to straddle the other man, one hand going around Evan’s neck. Evan reached up, fighting to grab Jack’s throat, to claw at his face, but Jack smacked his hands away, keeping his hold on Evan’s throat pressing his fingers hard into the man’s throat.

Jack, locks of his hair sticking to his forehead, panting, flipped his now blood splattered jacket back with his left hand and pulled his gun. He smiled as he held the weapon and pressed the barrel to Evan’s forehead at the same time squeezing the man’s throat. Both men were bloody, sweaty and disheveled. Jack was smiling, his teeth stained with blood, fresh blood running down his cheek, sweat mixed with the blood caused drops to fall, dripping on his suit and onto Evan.

Evan spat as he tried to push Jack’s gun arm away. “Kill me and the Owls will come for you!! And it won’t be to recruit you! They’ll be coming for blood!”

Jack smiled. “Then let them come.”

The gunshot was loud, echoing off the walls as Jack shot the man in the forehead.

Jack slowly released Evan’s throat and stood.

Harley made a small squeak and rushed around to the entrance that led to the bumper cars and threw herself into Jack’s arms. He caught her at the last second wrapping his arms tight around his wife and resting his cheek against her hair. He took a deep, calming breath, holding her tight, his gun still in his hand.

Harley moved slightly forcing Jack’s head up as she looked at him. “Are you all right?”

Jack grinned. “Never better sweets.”

Harley kissed him tasting blood, sweat and the sweet taste of his mouth.

Jack held her tight returning her kiss passionately. When he finally broke the kiss, he gently transferred her to his side smiling at everyone who was watching.

“All right let’s see a show of hands, who wants to be in the gang!” Jack yelled with a big smile.

Everyone raised their hands.

Jack chuckled. “Okay then, welcome to the Red Hood!”

*
Outside the amusement park, a figure in black was watching. There wasn’t much to see, but that was fine. She was patient, which was why the Court had given her the job to observe….

*

Jack groaned letting the hot water run down over his body, his face turned toward the shower head as he rubbed his hands over his hair. Harley stood behind him rubbing soap along his back gently, working her way down to his hips and back again. She had cleaned and rebandaged the reopened wound on his face, but they didn’t have the supplies for her to restitch the cut along his cheek. Luckily it had done enough healing that it wasn’t too bad, but the scar was going to be more noticeable now. All his other injuries were minor, though Harley frowned at the amount of bruises added to the ones from the fight with Gia Maroni; Jack was looking like a damn overly ripe fruit with the number of bruises. It made her want to keep him home, protect him, keep her puddin safe from another other conflicts until he healed, but she knew she couldn’t, especially with the start to Fleet Week and their need to take care of those dealers.

She sighed and gently turned him around.

Jack turned to face her and rested his hands on her shoulders, his wrists balanced against her collarbone, his fingers dangling as she started to soap his chest and stomach. There were bruises along his ribs, arms, a dark one under his eye and another running along his cheekbone. Harley frowned to see her handsome husband so beat up--again.

She kissed his chin before she continued to wash him.

“You know sweets, the next thing I want to do is set up a lab here. A private little chemistry lab so I can go back to experimenting,” Jack said softly, his eyes closed, the water hitting the top of his head and running down his face. “Have some fun...maybe get my wife to wearing a lab coat and heels and nothing else…” Jack grinned without opening his eyes.

Harley smiled running her soapy fingers along his hips before she began to wash his groin. Jack grunted, jumping slightly, but grinned as she murmured. “I think that is a great idea puddin. You can get back to making your gases and some new stuff.”

Jack smiled. “Mm...yeah that would be fun. I always wanted to to see what other properties I could bring out in my serum. I always felt I was just scratching the surface. A real permanent lab would be fun...talk about toys! Who knows what I could come up with.” Jack grinned, but then yelped as Harley tugged on his hair forcing him to lean down and squeeze shampoo in his hair.

“Ow! Harley! Why’d you have to be so rough there!” Jack pouted.

Harley giggled. “Cry baby.”

Jack stuck his tongue out at her grinning as she started to rub shampoo through his hair. He was quiet while she worked, enjoying the feel of her fingers massaging his scalp. She smiled working the shampoo through his hair then rinsed it out before applying the conditioner.

Jack groaned as he brought his head back up, arching a bit to crack his back.

She didn’t need to, but Harley ran her soapy hands over his stomach. Jack smiled.

“Mm...that feels nice sweets,” Jack purred.

Harley giggled. “Good. Now let’s get you in bed with some hot tea.”
“And some snuggling.” Jack opened his eyes to look down at her. Harley sucked in a breath looking up at him. His eyes sometimes glowed, she was sure of it as she stared up at him. Jack grinned, leaning in to rub his nose playfully against hers.

*

They finished showering and stepped out. Harley got out last, taking a few minutes in the shower alone to wash her hair and shave her legs, and under her arms before she stepped out. Jack was in front of the mirror, towel wrapped around his waist, combing his hair and frowning at the couple of bruises on his face, rubbing the tip of his tongue over the cut in his bottom lip. He followed Harley’s movements in the mirror, watching her towel off, gently squeezing her hair with the towel, dropping the damp towel across the closed toilet lid as she walked over to the double sink that had been installed in their bathroom and picked up her comb to begin working it through her tangles. His eyes roamed over her body, here and there a drop of water from her hair would run down her skin teasingly. There was something exquisitely beautiful about watching her do a simple task such as combing her wet hair, naked, next to him. He wasn’t sure if it was the domesticity of the situation, the fact that he simply found her incredibly hot, or just that he loved her; but watching her standing next to him casually naked and working on her hair turned him on. His erection was almost immediate, the aching need for her tightened his groin, seemed to consume him. He wanted her badly.

Harley started to hum softly to herself while she braided her damp hair, leaning to the side so that the cooling drops of water wouldn’t hit her skin. She glanced at herself in the mirror before her eyes met Jack’s to see him watching her. She gave him a cute smile before she tied off her braid and turned around to bend over, but instead of picking up the towel she touched her toes and stretched, a smile on her face that Jack couldn’t quite see. Jack, his eyes having followed her reflection, watched her bend over, her ass in the air. He traced the lean lines of her legs, back up to the soft roundness of her rear before he hissed.

“You are doing that on purpose.”

Harley glanced over her shoulder at him without standing up, her blue eyes wide with innocence. She even went one step further and fluttered her eyelashes. “Doing what on purpose puddin?”

Jack smirked, tossed his comb onto the counter and turned, taking a step toward her. He reached out to caress her backside, stepping closer still to run his fingertips down the back of her thighs. He loved the way her skin felt, the incredible softness of her skin.

“You know exactly what you are doing sweets,” Jack purred against her before he gripped her hips. Harley wiggled her hips back and forth slowly. She could feel his erection behind her, the slightly rougher texture of the towel instead of his skin; he wasn’t quite close enough for her to rub against him, just enough to brush, a soft tease against the towel which his erection was currently fighting against. She felt her husband jerk, his fingers spasm.

Jack groaned. “That...you are doing that on purpose.”

Harley giggled feeling her husband’s hands tighten on her hips as she purred back at him, moving her hips slowly. “I have no idea what you are talking about.” She arched her back, raised her hips, stood on the balls of her feet. Jack hissed as her cool skin brushed against his erection which felt hot, on fire. The towel around his waist like a prison. Jack tugged her hips toward him and press against her backside. He growled while sliding his hands up her torso. Harley stood up and leaned back against him, reaching behind her to caress his cheek. Jack wrapped his arms around her, spreading his fingers against her flat stomach, then his fingers slid down to her groin. Harley arched her back again, pressing her hips firmly against him and earned another growl. Harley grabbed her bottom lip with her teeth, grinning at the sound her husband made. She loved hearing his growl, that deep throated rumble sent chills of pleasure along her skin.

“Mm…puddin…why would I ever do such a thing?” She mock pouted before she dropped back down, her hands flat against the toilet lid.

Jack released her hips with one hand and tugged on the towel, letting it fall to the floor. He grabbed her once more and pulled her back against him.

“Because you’re a bad girl Harley, a very bad girl.” He chuckled softly, the sound mixed and enhanced with his growl of need.

His skin had felt cool from the recent shower, but his erection, now pressed between her ass cheeks was hot. Pressing against the smooth, chilled back side of his wife only inflamed him further. He groaned, thrusting his hips just a smidge against her while at the same time sliding his hands down her sides, then up along her spine, his thumbs pressing into her skin as he dragged his hands back to her perfectly round and soft rear. Jack grinned thinking to himself that he was the luckiest man on earth. His eyes raked over her at the same time that he dragged his blunt fingernails down her back watching the way the marks turned red, showing up against her pale skin. It only made him want to fuck her harder, to bruise her, to bite her…

He grabbed one side of her ass with his hand and squeezed.

Harley moaned softly, arching her back and swaying her hips back and slowly slowly, feeling the heat from his erection transfer to her, but it was his slightly painful caresses that were really turning her on. Her core ached, her muscles pleaded to hold him inside her, to feel the delectable bounce of him thrusting into her. He squeezed her ass before opening his hand wide and sliding that same hand down the back of her thigh, digging in his nails when he dragged his hand back up.

“Jack…” Harley moaned, her eyes rolling close.

She pushed herself up to lean against him again. Jack responded by reaching around to cup her breasts, his hot breath caressing her ear. He grabbed her ear with his teeth pinched her nipples, rolling the tips of his fingers over them before pinching them again. Harley made a grunt, arching her breasts into his touch. Jack released her breasts, spread his fingers and glided both hands along her sides to her hips.

Jack held her hips, his fingers pressing into the soft creamy flesh while as the same time he rubbed himself against her, the roundness of her backside, pressing deeper.

He growled against her ear. “Harley…”

He force her back down, bending her over and sliding his shaft between her legs until he felt that warm, wet heat coming from her. Jack reached back and grabbed himself before he started to rub back and forth slowly, teasing them both while as the same time he used his foot to push her legs wider apart.

Harley groaned, adjusting her stance feeling the teasing head of Jack’s shaft against her opening. She rose up on her toes, arching her back, thrusting backwards just a little. She ached for him, ached to have him fill her, to feel him inside her slamming into her, his hips hitting her ass until Jack pressed harder, the head of his erection pressing into her slowly. She closed her eyes in anticipation.

Jack slid into her and they both gasped.
Harley pressed her hands down more firmly on the towel covered seat, arching her head back with a long groan. “Uh puddin…harder…ummm, please puddin…”

Jack slid one hand down her spine then back to her rear, his thumb caressing her tailbone before he rubbed both hands along her ass, squeezing, grinning with pleasure at the red marks he was leaving in her flesh.

“Mm…my pumpkin…my baby…” Jack groaned. “You feel so damn good…so wet…” Jack seized her hips and yanked her back against him.

Harley gasped as he penetrated her deeper, just as she was adjusting.

He reached around, slid his fingers between her legs, parting her to rub his fingers against her clitoris. Harley groaned arching back against him tighter as he rubbed just a little harder, circling his fingers, listening for the catch in her breath, the one that let him know he was pleasing her.

Harley closed her eyes, reaching back with one hand to grasp his hip.

Jack smiled, stroking her, feeling the shiver run up her body as she moaned.

“Oh Jack!!” She arched her back and threw her head back as she came. Jack smiled sliding his damp fingers along her groin to her hip again.

Jack squeezed her hips and started to pound into her harder and faster. She gasped in happy surprise as he rammed into her, the bathroom filled with the sounds of their flesh smacking together mixed with their panting, gasping cries.

Harley’s second orgasm came on like an explosion, ripping through her, causing every muscle to tense in response. She rose up higher on her toes, squeezing him and arching back, her fingers gripping the towel into a knot across the top of the toilet lid as she brought her hands into fists.

“Puddin!” Harley groaned and sharply drew in a breath.

Jack groaned in response, arching his back, feeling her body clamp down on him, squeezing him tighter. He bit down on his bottom lip trying to prevent himself from cumming, but she felt so good that he couldn’t stop himself; with a few more hard quick thrusts Jack cried out, spilling into her.

Harley squeezed him tight, the sounds of his cries sending ripples over her causing her to cum again when she felt her husband orgasm. He continued to thrust into her with eager, hard thrusts that slowly eased back into gentle gliding until he stopped completely, both of them panting.

Jack caressed her sides with feather light touches of his fingertips. His legs felt a little shaky so he simply stayed inside her, caressing her skin, giving himself a chance to catch his breath.

Harley wanted to drop; her legs were shaking a little bit, as were her arms. Jack finally took a step back from his wife and pulled out of her. Harley made a little groan at the separation before she slowly straightened, but Jack wrapped his arms around her waist and pulled her back against him. He laid his head against hers, kissing her ear, then her shoulders.

“You know I love you Harley?” he whispered to her, his voice tight with emotion. “I love you more than anything in this world.” He tightened his grip around her. “I couldn’t…” He swallowed before he continued. “I can’t be without you.”

Harley leaned fully against him. “I love you Jack. I love you…you’re my puddin…always.” she smiled closing her eyes. “You are everything to me too Jack…everything.”
She rolled her head to the side, kissing him over her shoulder. “We will always be together.”

Jack chuckled. “King and Queen of Gotham...you and me…”

Harley smiled and whispered in response. “You and me puddin.”

He was quiet for a few moments, just held her with her back pressed against his chest, his arms around her waist, content to hold her. He smiled then, brushing his nose against her ear. He planted soft butterfly kisses against her ear, her shoulders.

“Jack? Are you all right?” Harley asked softly, but Jack only laughed. “Yes I’m fine. Let’s clean up and get into bed. I want to snuggle,” he said with a smile, kissing her ear one more time before he let her go.

*

Later, in the wee hours of the morning, Jack woke from another odd dream. This one was plagued with owls and Batman. Jack woke with a frown already creasing his brow, lying on his back with Harley against his side, her head against his chest.

In this dream, Batman had turned into an owl and then into an Owl. It was all very strange, he thought. He turned the dream over in his head, but after a few minutes he decided it was simply a strange dream and nothing more.

He closed his eyes, pulled Harley closer and easily drifted back to sleep.

*

The opening day of Fleet Week began with the parade of ships sailing through Gotham harbor. The day was sunny and warm, but a light breeze off the water made the slowly climbing heat of the day bearable. Jack, with a pair of dark aviator sunglasses on, was wearing a slim-cut fern green suit with a white shirt, black tie and black wingtip oxfords stood next to Harley, who was dressed in a light weight, red floral pattern sleeveless maxi dress, with a deep v-neck. Her blonde hair was styled in a soft French braid with large round white framed sunglasses, and a pair of high heels with ankle strapped sandals. They were leaning on the railing along the sides of Brown Bridge watching the ships come in. The breeze off the water, plus the extra breeze generated by the ships passing, made Harley’s dress whip around her legs and a few times actually fly up. (She was glad she had worn a pair of little black dress shorts under her dress.)

Jack had his arm around her waist as one of the ships moved under the bridge, Harley’s skirt flying up. (Harley was not the only woman who had chosen to wear a dress or skirt.) A few of the servicemen waved at the bridge bystanders with a couple letting out hollers or whistles that might get them in trouble. Harley giggled.

Jack muttered. “Good thing they are down there and not up here.”

Harley laughed, but she snuggled close, bumping him playfully with her hip. Jack gave her a side glance along with a huge smile before he glanced the other way along the bridge. Mixed in with the rest of the crowd were members of the Red Hood. Jack could see Jason and Roxy, Duela along with Gus, a little further down. On Harley’s side Frost and Agatha stood watching the ships, while the twins Connor and Sean were talking to a couple of young women, and a little further off Trope and Thea stood filming the ships. Zsasz was somewhere in the crowd along with other members of the gang, all with the same assignment...find the dealers.

Jack didn’t expect too much from them right now. Any dealers working the crowd would likely be working with known customers instead of trying to find new ones during broad daylight. They would be waiting for the partiers, the drinking and the streets filled with young men and women looking for a good time in Gotham. No, right now Jack had them all out here as a way to build more unity between everyone, a little bit of enjoyment together before this evening. That was when the real work would begin.

A disco would be put on at one of the larger clubs in Gotham; Jack planned to send Jason, Roxy, Angora and Clyde to scope out that place for dealers in drugs, looking for any trace of this drug Giggles in the fashion district. Trope, Thea, Duela and Gus would be participating in a pub hop/scavenger hunt looking for dealers in The Bowery, everyone else was basically on stand-by, a call away in case another gang member needed help.

Jack, Harley, Frost and Agatha were heading to the Fleet Week Booze Cruise tonight that was leaving Port Adams for a two and a half hour tour through Gotham along the Sprang River, with a premium open bar, appetizers, and a live DJ. Supposedly the tour went all the way to Arkham Asylum and back. (Discovering where the boat would be going had upset Jack slightly, but only Harley had seen the twitch under his left eye, the vein popping at the mention of the asylum. She had taken his hand and held it with Jack sharing a glance with her, neither of them saying a word.)

*

The evening air was cool, but not so cool that Harley wasn’t comfortable in her rodeo front tie, sleeveless, red linen mini dress and the flat lace-up sandals she wore, the laces of which ran all the way up her calves to just below her knees. Her long blonde hair was still in its soft French braid, with little wisps of gold hair floating around her face. She was holding a drink called a Tropical Painkiller. Jack was leaning on the rail next to her, dressed casually in a pair of white slim cut slacks, a dark blue dress shirt, no tie and a black blazer, along with a pair of black booker oxford shoes and holding his own drink, called a Twisted Mermaid. The two of them were leaning on the railing of the ship which faced The Bowery. They ship itself was made up of three levels with a bar on each level and holding around at least 450 guests. The outside of the boat was decorated in an array of fairy lights in multiple colors as well as flashing “disco” lights. The people here were dancing, talking and eating everywhere, and the music playing loudly was Night Club’s “Show it 2 Me.”

Jack sighed taking a drag on his cigarette as he watched the crowd. He could see Frost, sticking out like a sore thumb in his black suit and tie while his aunt was looking far too sexy for a woman her age wearing a white dress with a daringly deep v-neckline, and slits up the side of the dress that ran all the way to her hips. Jack smirked as he watched Frost for a moment; the poor man was having a hard time keeping his eyes on anything but Jack’s aunt. She was dancing in the middle of the dance floor with some young man who couldn’t be more than twenty-five. The man was clearly smitten and Frost was just as clearly jealous. Jack’s Aunt had her arms over her head, weaving her hips back and forth, moving to the music better than many of the dancers around her who were half her age.

Jack chuckled, tendrils of smoke curling from his lips and nose. Harley, who had been leaning on her elbows watching the lights dance on the surface of the water glanced over at her husband. “What’s so funny?”

Jack motioned with his chin. “Frost is going to shoot someone soon.”

Harley turned and grinned when she caught sight of Frost and the deadly look on his face. She followed his gaze to Agatha and the young man she was dancing with.

“Frost better get out there and dance with her,” Harley murmured.

Jack laughed. “He won’t...duty and all that, but it’s cute to see him so jealous.”
Harley giggled. “I think Agatha is doing it on purpose.”

Jack nodded taking another drag before he spoke. “Oh, she is.”

He released the smoke from between his lips slowly, tossing the butt over the rail with a sigh. “I’ve seen neither hide nor hair of those drug dealers.”

Harley reached out and stroked Jack’s wrist. “It’s a big ship. At least we know they are on here.” She motioned with her head at the a couple of people they could see from their current position. They had seen at least a handful of people on the ship, clearly on Giggles, their skin pale and the laughter...Jack wrinkled his nose. “This Griselda and Manuel are doing a good job staying out of sight. I haven’t seen them yet...and everytime we ask, we get the run around,” He muttered.

They had tried to ask a couple of the people they were sure were using, but all they had gotten in response was a lot of giggling and incoherent gibberish.

Right now the DJ had chosen something a bit slower to play than what he had been focusing on. The sounds of “Silent Killer” by Alexina drifted out of the sound system.

Jack took a large sip of his drink turning to his wife.

“Wanna dance?” He smiled tossing the entire drink--glass and all--over the rail.

Harley giggled. “Sure thing puddin.”

She took an equally large sip from her own drink and did the same, tossing the entire thing over the ship’s side as her husband yanked her into his arms. Harley laughed as Jack twirled them both in a quick circle before he stopped to stare down at her.

Together they moved slowly, Jack wrapping one arm around her, spreading his fingers wide as he pressed his hand against her lower back taking her other hand in his, but kissing her knuckles first. Harley smiled at him, her hand resting on his shoulder, sliding across to caressing the side of his neck while they weaved back and forth together to the music, their pelvises pressed together. Harley stared into his blue eyes leaning up to brush her lips against his while they moved in sync in place. Jack smiled down at her, his smile stretched across his face, his blue eyes intense as he stared at his wife, weaving in time to the music with her.

He surprised her when he suddenly rolled her out from him, keeping a hold of her hand then pulled her back, spinning them both in a circle until she laughed. Jack grinned. He loved the sound of her laughter. As the song came to an end he dipped her, holding her for a heartbeat before he lifted her back up and into his arms. He held her close, his face buried against her neck.

“Mm...I love you Harls,” he whispered.

Harley had her arms wrapped tightly around him. “I love you too puddin.”

He sighed brushing his nose against hers, then murmured. “How about I get you another drink and maybe grab some of those lobster and bacon sandwiches I’ve been seeing. How does that sound?”

Harley grinned. “That sounds fantastic puddin.”

Jack kissed the tip of her nose. “Be right back. Don’t move.”

Harley smiled. “I’ll be right here.”
She watched as Jack wended his way through the crowd heading to the bar. She smiled turning back around to lean on the rail listening and tapping her foot in time to Sia’s “Beautiful People” and watching the way the lights from the ship and the city danced on the water when she felt someone run their fingers up the back of her thigh. Harley turned with a smile thinking it was Jack already, surprised he was back so quickly, when she saw a man she didn’t know, blonde, grey eyes dressed in the white sailor’s uniform of the navy. Behind him were several other young men, all dressed the same way.

He grinned at her and waggled his eyebrows at her. He had the cocky self-assurance of a man who had no problem getting the ladies and was used to having women pretty much fall at his feet. Harley had seen the type before in high school and college. This jerk clearly thought he had a chance with her. The young man winked at her before he spoke.

“Hey gorgeous. Whatcha doing here by yourself?” he asked trying to put his arm around her waist.

Harley shoved him in the chest, at the same time moving sideways away from him. “What the hell?! How dare you touch me! Go away.”

The man laughed and glanced back over his shoulder. “Oh this one wants to play hard to get!”

Harley glared at him, then at his friends who were snickering and giggling like a bunch of school kids.

Their ring leader continued reaching out to try to touch her chin, but Harley yanked her face away as the man pouted. “Come on sweetie. You don’t want to be standing out here by yourself...Let me get you a drink, warm you up a bit. I’ll let you sit on my lap.” He grinned trying to put his arm around her.

Harley snarled yanking herself out of his reach again. “Touch me one more time and you’re gonna lose that hand.”

The man laughed. “Wow, you are feisty. I like feisty girls. A lot more fun in bed.”

Harley spat. “Go away.”

The blonde purred. “Oh come on sweetie. My name is Jake, what’s yours?”

Harley hissed. “I’m married so go away.”

Jake reached out and ran his fingers down her upper arm.. “Come on baby…you’re just saying that...you don’t have ring on...you don’t have to play games with me. I know what girls like you are looking for and I promise I got it.”

Harley yanked her arm away wrinkling her nose like she had smelled something bad. “Look, I’d tell you to go fuck yourself, but that would be cruel and unusual punishment and I’m not that cruel.”

Jake’s friends started to laugh and snort.

Jake frowned looking between her and his buddies, clearly pissed off that she had gotten a laugh from his friends. He reached forward and grabbed her upper arm hard, pressing his fingers painfully into Harley’s skin, trying to intentionally hurt her as he yanked Harley toward him, causing her to stumble. Harley let out a yelp which swiftly turned into a snarl; she swung her entire body, wrapping her hand into a fist and bringing her left fist around, ready to hit Jake in the face and--she hoped--to break the asshole’s nose. The next few seconds were chaotic as one of Jake’s friends realized what was about to happen and had rushed around Harley in order to grab her arm. Harley cried out as her left arm was grabbed and she was yanked backwards falling against another man, who held her left hand by her wrist and wrapped his other arm around her waist. Jake still had a hold of her and was pulling her forward, their little tussle starting to draw attention.

Jack, who was at the bar, turned when he thought he heard Harley over the music. He was so attuned to his wife that he picked up her sound of distress. He turned around to glance over to where he had left her just in time to see her struggling with several young men around her. Jack’s eyes flashed dangerously. With his teeth bared in rising fury, he immediately started to rush toward his wife, pushing people out of his way with enough force that he was knocking people down without realizing it and yelling.

“HARLEY!”

Frost turned when he heard Jack shout, his hand immediately going to the gun he had concealed under his jacket.

That was the same moment that a large man who happened to be closer to the action, separated himself from the crowd before Jack or Frost could arrive at Harley’s side. The man was dark skinned, bald except for a short trimmed goatee, at least six feet tall and dressed in sailor’s whites just like the men he currently towered over, the men currently surrounding Harley.

He grabbed the one who had grabbed Harley’s arm from behind, lifting the man up by his wrist.

“You all wanna tell me why the fuck a bunch of daddy kissing punks are picking on this nice woman?”
There was a moment of calm. No sound; at least Harley didn’t hear any sound, nothing, no voices, no music, just that perfect moment of stillness.

Harley smiled, allowed the moment wash over her, and closed her eyes for just a second.

She could taste it in the air, a sweet tension, that second before the intake of breath...when the exhale would announce the vicious violence that would follow.

It was delicious. These moments turned her on, especially when she was getting to see Jack in action. Watching the way he moved, the way his eyes would sparkle, that smile...the drops of blood that would stain Jack’s face, the taste of blood on his lips when she kissed him after the violence. He was at his most alluring when he was at his most violent. Harley licked her lips at the mere thought of her husband.

The doctor part of her knew that she had a “problem.” Both she and Jack had a problem; her love of violence was unhealthy, an aspect of herself she didn’t realize until she met the man who would become her husband...but was it really an issue when they both enjoyed it so much, she asked herself?

Her smile extended just a little more, her body twisting, her fingers rolling into a fist as she turned toward one of the sailors who had been bothering her. She could see her husband just behind the man, and he was smiling too. He was reaching out his fingers about to grab the shoulder of the man who had said his name was Jake. The big man who had come to her defense was lifting the little shit who had grabbed her from behind off his feet while the rest of Jake’s friends tried to surround them.

For a moment Harley wondered, did they have a “jail” on a booze cruise? But then she was giggling as the bubble of calm burst and the violence began.

*

Harley spun around, the skirt of her little dress fluttering, but instead of hitting the sailor in the face as she had intended, she snapped her leg up to hit him right smack between the legs. The impact of her leg meeting with his groin caused the man to produce a yell so high-pitched that Harley was sure only dogs could hear it. Harley giggled with delight. The impact forced him forward, though he tried to swing at her with his right fist, a sloppy swing that Harley easily ducked and answered with her own right hook to his cheek. She quickly followed that strike by pivoting on her left foot, bringing her right leg around for another hard kick to his side. She let out a yelp when her foot connected with his side, pain radiating up her leg for a moment. (She had forgotten she was wearing flat sandals and not heels which she knew made a better weapon.) Harley jumped back grabbing a hold of the ship’s guard rail just as her attacker fell over with a cry, squeezing himself into a fetal position. Harley giggled again as she shook out her foot. He was clearly out of the tussle and it didn’t matter her shoewear; getting hit in the balls hurt regardless.

*

Jack grabbed Jake by the shoulder and spun the man around with a grin that didn’t reach his eyes. “You touched my wife.”

Jake opened his mouth to reply, but Jack took a step back and kicked the man in the chest. The kick sent him stumbling back into the remainder of his friends who had been too stupid to take off as soon as they realized a fight was about to start. The men scattered like pins in a game of bowling. Jack laughed at the image of the men as bowling pins.

One of the sailors, a big man who stood an inch or two taller than Jack, took a step toward Jack.

“All right buddy, you just step away and I won’t hit you.”

Jack smiled. “Oh...you’re that cocksure of yourself that you think you are going to actually hit me?”

The man grinned. “All right--don’t say I didn’t warn you.”

Jack shrugged. “I’ll remember that.”

The sailor took a swing at him. Jack brought his arms up, tucking his head, blocking the man’s two quick swings, which fell against Jack’s forearms, sending a ripple of pain up Jack’s arms to his shoulders. It wasn’t much, nothing Jack hadn’t experienced several times before, just enough to make Jack smirk.

Jack scrunched himself to protect his face and chest, bent to the side making himself harder to hit. He kept the sailor’s fist from landing a kidney shot, but it was also allowing the sailor to think he had Jack on the defense. At any moment, Jack was certain the overconfident man would leave himself open.

Jack laughed, edged back just enough to create space between him and this sailor so that he could swing as he exclaimed brightly. “My turn.”

He slugged the man with a hard right to the cheek. The sailor’s expression twisted as pain blossomed in his face. Jack giggled with delight and shook out his fist; he had hit enough people in the past to know when he had cracked a cheekbone.

Another one of Jake’s friends came at Jack with a high swing from the left. Jack ducked and kicked in one easy movement, caught the man in the groin. Jack winced in false sympathy as the man dropped to his knees and fell over with a groan.

“Ouch,” Jack muttered with a laugh.

*

Frost had joined the fight with two options: he could end the fight right now by drawing his weapon, or he could simply handle it as a drunken brawl, which seemed to be best option even if the weapon would end the fight faster. Nobody liked to fight more than drunken (or not drunken) sailors needing to burn off some steam and Frost could tell this fight wasn’t going to end until every one of these sailors were down.

Frost started to go for the initial grouping of young sailors who had started the fight, but their little tussle was beginning to draw more attention from around the ship; even if no one knew what was going on, some men in uniform were fighting. It didn’t matter what the fight was about, their fellows would be coming to their aid regardless. Frost understood--it was pretty much the same with the cops. You pick on one GCPD officer, you were attacking them all. Frost smirked and pulled his hand back, ready to punch the kid in front of him and take him out quickly, but as Frost turned to look, that only left maybe another ten. Frost sighed. He really couldn’t take Jack and Harley anywhere without them getting into trouble. He smiled at the thought. That was what made them so much fun.

*
Agatha stopped at the edge of the fight with a wide grin. “Mm...boys in uniform.”

She tapped her bottom lip as she took the time to imagine Frost in a uniform, her grin widening. “Oh yes,” she whispered to herself.

She waited another beat to decide if she was going to get involved in the fight, but then decided that nope, she was going to let the younger ones handle it...and besides, they might need her to bail them out. She smiled and turned around heading back over to the now deserted bar (everyone having crowded around for the fight.) She smiled at the bartender.

“Hey handsome, can you make me a sunrise cocktail?” Agatha hopped up onto a stool glancing over at the fight. The young man, Latino, with dark eyes and thick black hair grinned. “For you, I can make anything.”

Agatha chuckled. “How about just the drink sweetheart.”

The man shrugged and set to work while Agatha turned to watch some of the fight over the heads of the other patrons.

*

Harley was grabbed and tossed toward another set of sailors who had joined the little rumble, a set of three very tall women.

Harley grinned. “Hey!”

The three women, all brunettes smiled back replying in unison. “Hi!”

Harley frowned. “There a reason you three lovely ladies are involved in our little fight?”

The biggest of the three had her brown hair pulled up into a bun and who had tossed Harley into the arms of of slimmest one with a pixie haircut grinned. “The boys looked like they were having too much fun without us.”

“Oh, okay just wondering.” Harley grinned. “You know that one…” Harley searched her mind quickly. “Jake...yeah...he was being grabby you know.”

The woman facing Harley frowned. “Yeah, sounds like Jake. Don’t worry honey. He isn’t going to get away with it. By the way, love the dress.”

The sailor winked at Harley with a jovial grin before she threw a punch that clipped Harley on her chin just as Harley tried to move her head out of the way, but the woman who Harley had been shoved against had Harley’s arms pinned against her chest. The big woman grinned and threw another punch, but Harley was ready and this time tossed all her weight to the right. She and the woman holding her started to fall toward the rail with the sudden shift in weight, while the female sailor who took a swing at Harley missed altogether and instead punched her friend who had been holding Harley. The taller woman’s fist connected squarely in her friend’s face; the impact of knuckles to nose was audible to Harley.

Harley winced in sympathy. “Ouch!”

*

The large man who had tried to come to Harley’s aid had his back up against Jack’s back, both of them with their fists up. He glanced over his shoulder as he punched another sailor in the face.
“I should introduce myself—the name is Santiago Clark, though everyone calls me Bane. That’s the name I wrestled under before I enlisted.” Clark turned his attention back to another sailor trying to sucker punch him. He kicked the man in the stomach before he turned around a bit and put his hand out to Jack. Jack took the man’s hand, which enveloped his own.

Jack grinned wide. “Name’s Jack, Jack Wayne. I don’t suppose you would be looking to get out of the military would you Bane?” Jack asked as he ducked a swing and delivered his own in return to the man who had attacked him.

Bane grinned and turned his attention to three men trying to surround him on three sides. Jack glanced behind him for a moment; the man was attractive with a ready smile, clearly enjoying a good tussle.

One of the sailors stepped too close and Bane grabbed him, lifted the man over his head and threw the man at his friends, sending all three back onto the dancefloor as the fight gradually was shifting from the railing to the “safer” area around the dance floor.

Bane grunted. “Well Mr. Wayne, I suppose that depends on what it is you need me to do.” Bane picked up another sailor and tossed him onto the dance floor to the drunken cheers of several women.

Jack laughed. “How would you feel about something less than legal?”

Bane smiled. “Well, I suppose it all depends on how much I like you.”

Jack grinned over his shoulder. “I’m a really likeable guy.”

Bane laughed along with Jack when at the same time they both saw two very tall, very muscular men coming toward them from the other side of the ship. Shinedown’s “Sound of Madness” had started to play over the speakers. Jack shook his head, one of the DJs thought they were funny.

Bane hissed. “Aw fuck.”

“Friends of yours?” Jack asked.

Bane shook his head. “Nah, couple of fucking Marines is all.”

Jack snorted. “Ah...gang rivalry?”

Bane grinned. “Something like that.”

The two men stopped to size up their opponents. One of them, a black man with a buzz cut, cupped his hands on either side of his mouth. “Hey squid heads! Why don’t you lot step out of the way and let some real men and women do the fighting instead of playing with a bunch of salt-encrusted milk drinkers.”

Jack blinked. “Milk drinkers?”

Bane grinned. “Yeah...I like milk, so what?”

“A agreed Bane my friend.” Jack chuckled, clearly enjoying himself. “Means we need to show them what drinking milk does.” Jack flexed an arm and Bane started to laugh.

*

Over at the bar Agatha muttered. “Lovely, of course there are marines on this boat.”
She sighed, turning around to face the bartender. The young man grinned back. “Ready to dump that one…” He indicated Frost with his brow; he had clearly noticed the way Agatha had been watching Frost. “…And run away with me?”

Agatha laughed. “You are funny Kenny.”

A man, older than most of the people here and probably closer to her age, was making his way across the dance floor to the fight. She made a face, leaning toward Kenny. The man was white headed wearing the all white uniform of a ship’s captain along with the officers hat and the shoulder epaulets.

“Is that who I think it is?” Agatha asked with a tilt of her head.

Kenny nodded. “Yep, that’s the captain, Captain Stubing. He won’t be…”

But when Kenny looked around, Agatha was gone.

*

One of the marines hit Jack in the chest. “Well, well look at you. Looks like the old squid lover got himself a new boyfriend.”

Bane rolled his eyes. “Rome, Morgan--why don’t you two dicks go find some nice girls to kick your asses for you. I know you both like that sort of thing.”

The one man who had spoken, Rome--from his name tag that Jack just briefly caught a glimpse of--snorted. “Oh haha, looked like you squids need a couple of real men to come in and finish this fight for you.”

Jake, his buddies and the three women twisting and fighting with Harley all stopped to glare at the two marines.

The woman with the pixie cut hissed. “What did they just say?”

Harley, who was being held by her neck, her feet up and, at the moment, resting against the chest of the navy woman across from her, blinked in surprise as she looked up, her hands around the arm of her captor.

Harley looked up at the woman holding her. “I think he said you guys were a bunch of weenies.” She giggled.

The pixie cut sailor snarled. “Yeah, I thought he said something like that.” She released Harley with a growled, “Stupid jarheads only good for one thing, destroying stuff, bunch of…”

*

Jack slipped his jacket off just as the ladies whom Harley had been fighting with walked over and started to create, almost unconsciously, a ring around Bane, Jack and the two marines. The ladies were followed by Jake and the others creating an impromptu boxing ring for Bane, Jack, Rome and Morgan to fight. When Jack saw his wife, he tossed her the jacket with a big grin. Bane glanced over at Harley then Jack with a chuckle just as Jack tossed his jacket to her and began to roll up his sleeves. Harley wrinkled her nose in delight, seeing her husband with his sleeves rolled up was sexy as hell she thought. She blew him a kiss.

“Punch their lights out puddin!” she yelled.
“So that cute little blonde is all yours, eh?” Bane asked while keeping his eyes on the two marines who were splitting off, Rome for Jack, Morgan for him.

Jack chuckled. “She’s not mine, but yeah...My wife Harley.”

Bane nodded smiling. “I do like women who can take care of themselves. I only stopped her hitting that sailor to save him. Idiots forgot we were supposed to be getting a little drunk and having some fun, not acting like a bunch a kids whose balls haven't even dropped yet.”

Jack laughed. “I like you Bane.”

Bane grinned. “I'm a likeable kind of guy.”

The man facing Jack snorted. “A civilian like you think you can take on a marine? You know we are the best right? I'm willing to let you just walk away, tail between your legs if you give me a kiss, right here sweetheart.” Rome used his forefinger to lightly tap himself on the cheek.

Jack smiled. “Sure thing darling.”

Jack’s hands shot out, grabbing the marine by his uniform and yanked him forward, at the same time ramming his forehead into the man’s nose and mouth.

Jack winced and shook his head, reaching up to rub his forehead after shoving the man away from him. “Ouch...damn--no one wins in a headbutt.” Jack brought his hand down to see blood on his fingertips.

Bane laughed. “Unless you are me little man! Bane always wins.”

Bane reached out and grabbed Morgan who had thrown his hands up.

“Hey now Bane, we’re cool right? Remember I made some money for us both when they were playing that...” Morgan put forward his hand, as if for a handshake, but Bane interrupted him and laughed.

“Yeah, we’re cool.”

Morgan smiled and made the mistake of balling his hand into a fist, which he attempted to throw at Bane, thinking he had surprise on his side. Bane caught Morgan’s arm by the wrist, gave Morgan a grin and a wink before he yanked himself closer and with a swift side look at Morgan that was followed by another, even brighter grin, Bane smashed the ball of his hand against Morgan’s elbow joint, giving the man named Morgan three hard, quick strikes before he released Morgan’s wrist, spun around and used his elbow to break the man’s nose hard enough to send the Marine stumbling back from him with a cry of pain and a flood of blood from his nose.

“Just because we’re good, don’t mean I ain’t gonna hit you Morgan. Really thought you would have figured that out about me.” Bane grinned with a shake of his head.

Morgan snarled looking up, his fingers covered in blood from his nose. “You fucking dick!”

Jack’s marine came at him again, grabbed Jack by the shoulders, but Jack brought his foot up and slammed his heel against the man’s knee with a sickening crush, snapping the bone out of place and letting him drop.

Both men heard a “war cry.” There were at least four more marines on the ship.
Bane chuckled. “Well shit.”

Jack rolled his shoulders with a wide smile. “Marines are clearly stupid.”

Bane let out a loud belly laugh.

*

“Captain Stubing!! May I talk to you?”

The captain sighed turning at the same time as he began to speak. “Miss, I really can’t…” but then he realized this wasn’t one of the newly minted “of age” people on the ship drinking for the first time, nor was it one of the millions of Gothamites of legal drinking age wandering the city or in particular, his ship, looking for a sailor and getting drunk. The voice was attached to a beautiful woman.

Stubing stopped moving, forgetting the fight he was heading over to stop, a little stunned when he saw the woman.

“Ah...yes I’m Captain Stubing ma’am. I was just going to stop…”

The woman stepped up beside him, put her arm around his shoulders and pressed her hips up against him. She was shapely and this close, the captain could smell her fantastic fragrance too. His entire body relaxed.

“How can I help you ma’am?” he asked with a smile.

Agatha smiled back. “My name is Agatha, Captain...hmm...you know I just live for men in uniform, one of the reasons I booked myself onto this ship…” She grinned as she whispered into his ear. Agatha knew exactly how to charm a man like this; it didn’t take much, show a little interest, coo a little and… “They are just boys blowing off steam captain, why don’t you let me help you with this, eh?” Agatha brushed her fingertips along his chin.

The captain smiled, but then frowned again glancing toward the fight. “I don’t know…”

She turned him, her arm moving from around his shoulders to his waist.

“You know Stubing...okay, first: what’s your first name?” Agatha asked with a slow easy smile.

“Uh...it’s Merrill.” The man stuttered a little.

Agatha purred. “Merrill. You know, how about I help you with something….you ever hear about the happiness ceiling?” As she spoke, Agatha steered him toward the bar.

“What?” Merrill frowned glancing over at the fight.

“Happiness ceiling. You see Merrill honey, we all have happiness ceilings, you think you have reached yours and that you cannot be any happier than you are right now. Well sweetie, I’m going to show you that you have the potential to be much happier.” Agatha smiled at him and Merrill grinned stupidly in response.

*

Frost sighed, one of the men, another sailor, had thought he would throw a kick at him, a drunken, completely off-balance kick, but Frost had simply grabbed the man’s leg, wrapped his arm around it and lifted the man’s limb up so that the sailor was forced to keep his balance on the one foot. He looked pretty ridiculous hopping up and down, his arms windmilling. Frost grinned. A couple of other sailors had tried to come to their buddy’s aid, but Frost has simply pushed the drunkards out of the way.

Frost was standing there holding the man, wondering what he should do next, when he noticed movement to his left and turned to see the captain (he just assumed by the man’s uniform and the wrinkle between his brow, the intense, and the annoyed glare he was giving the fighters as he made a beeline right to their group), when Agatha seemed to form out of the crowd around the man.

Frost’s eyes were immediately drawn to Agatha, the tight dress she was wearing showed off every curve she had and the lights from the dance floor made her movements sensual, serpentine, sexy. Frost stood still, holding the flailing sailor and watching her as she spoke to the captain. Jealousy burned white and hot in his chest, but just as Agatha turned the man around, heading back toward the bar, she shot a wink over her shoulder at Frost.

He grinned at her and dropped the sailor. He sighed. He wasn’t used to being the jealous type. What he and Agatha had was supposed to be...open...easy, but he knew he was starting to step over that line from friends with benefits into something else...Idiot he thought to himself but for now he wasn’t going to dwell on it. Because he was confident that tonight, she would be in his bed doing something interesting and very intense.

That was when he and the others heard a shout and looked over to see Agatha standing on the bar. She was wiggling a little as she kept her balance on the counter. (Frost knew for a fact that she had excellent balance so that wiggle was for show.) She held a bottle of booze in one hand and a glass in the other.

“Okay boys and girls! Free drinks for everyone!! My treat!”

There was a moment of silence that was swiftly followed by a nearly deafening cheer.

Frost’s eyes met Agatha’s across the heads of the people moving toward the bar and she winked at him. Frost chuckled turning to the sailor he had been holding by the leg just moments ago.

“Let’s go get a beer.” Frost put his hand out. The sailor took his hand and grinned, patting Frost on the back. “Sure thing buddy.”

*

Jack and Bane watched as the crowd around them immediately started to melt, the music pumping up just a little louder as the sounds of some Japanese pop music started to play, sweet, bouncy and bubbly. Jack blinked for a moment at the way the fight suddenly stopped only to be followed by laughter, drinking and dancing.

Jack glanced over to Bane who had stepped up beside Jack.

Jack grinned. “So, wanna have a drink?”

Bane laughed and smacked Jack hard enough on the back that he stumbled forward a few steps. “Sure thing buddy.”

Harley came racing over to Jack, looking confused. “What just happened?”

Jack motioned with his chin as he took his jacket from Harley. “Aunt Agatha happened. What else?”
He gently grabbed Harley’s chin and examined the bruise on her lip and chin. “My poor girl.”

Harley smiled. “I gave as good as I got puddin.”

He grinned and wrinkled his nose at her. “That’s my pumpkin pie.”

Jack put his arm around her shoulders and pulled Harley close, kissing her on the forehead. Harley smiled happily and draped her arms around Jack’s waist.

Jack murmured. “Let’s get a drink and I’ll introduce you to my new friend.”

*

Soon they were sitting at the bar, Harley and Jack on one side of Bane while Agatha and Frost were on the other side.

Jack held a glass of whiskey—a double shot—with ice. He had laid his jacket across his lap while he eased a piece of ice across the bruise forming at the corner of Harley’s mouth. She winced, but smiled and licked the ice. Jack chuckled softly as she reached over and picked up her drink, a tropical wine slushie, while tapping her foot to the music playing, Dua Lipa’s “One Kiss”. She smiled at her husband, pulled out the little cherry, holding it by the stem for a moment. She licked her lips biting off the cherry and chewed it slowly.

Jack watched her, enchanted, riveted to the movement of her lips, the twinkle in her eyes, feeling the warmth of her hand when she reached over and laid her hand on his knee. Harley swallowed before holding up the stem. He knew what she was going to do, but he still twitched in his seat watching as Harley placed the stem in her mouth. He watched her lips move slightly, her blue eyes dance before she reached in and pulled out the stem, took her husband’s hand, palm up and laid the now neatly tied stem in the palm of his hand.

Jack’s smiled widened. “Mm...you are talented pumpkin.”

Harley grinned taking a sip of her drink. “Just figure you need reminding once in a while.”

Jack shivered with delight before he turned to Bane who had been watching the two of them, amusement in his eyes.

“Bane, I would like to introduce you to my wife, Harley, Harley Quinn. Harley, this is Santiago Clark.”

Santiago put his hand out to her. Harley gave him her hand across Jack and the big man kissed her knuckles. “Everyone calls me Bane.”

She grinned. “Everyone calls me Harley.”

Jack grinned. “Bane, huh? You said that was your wrestling name?”

He picked up his whiskey and took a long sip turned in such a way that he could easily gather Harley onto his lap. She giggled, shifting from the stool to her husband’s lap easily while tossing his suit jacket onto the counter. Jack ran his hand down her bare legs, enjoying the feel of her bare skin against his hand.

Bane smiled holding his own drink, a glass of rum, rolling the glass between his large hands. “My father was a black man who worked his way through the navy to become an officer. Met my mother while in Colombia; they fell in love for a short time, long enough to marry and have me. Then my father left. My mother raised me. Bane was my grandfather’s name, Bane Rojas, famous wrestler. I wanted to be just like him, wrestled in school under the name Bane and it stuck.” He smiled as he finished off his drink. “The navy, not so much. My father wanted me to stay in, be an officer like him, but...I had already decided to get out. Your little tussle with those snot-nose sailors is one reason. Too many assholes in the navy.” Bane shook his glass and the bartender turned and nodded, grabbed a bottle of rum and moving over to fill it.

“So, Jack Wayne, Harley Quinn...what is it that you two have in mind?” Bane grinned and picked up his fresh drink.

Jack shared a looked with his wife, smiling before he spoke. “How would you feel about helping me and our little gang take care of a few things here in Gotham? My plan: to be on top of the Gotham underworld food chain.” Jack turned while holding onto Harley and picked up his drink. “I can promise good money, and a lot of killing.”

Bane frowned in thought, staring down into the depths of his drink. “Killing, eh?”

Jack took another sip before his set his whiskey down. “Yup.”

“You know…” Bane grinned. “I don’t think I will have a problem with that.” He held his glass up. “What did you say you gang was called again?”

Jack held up his glass, Harley snatched hers up to do the same thing.

Bane grinned wide. “To the Red Hood Gang.”

The three of them clinked their glasses together.

Someone had switched the music; the smooth, sensual voice of Calum Scott started to sing “If Our Love is Wrong.” Jack smiled and nuzzled his wife’s neck pulling her hair back to give himself better access to the soft spot behind her ear. Jack ran the tip of his tongue along that spot, his hand at her waist squeezing just a little, tugging her back against him. There was a buzz and then the voice of the ship’s captain Stubing announced loudly over the speakers.

“We’ll be heading back to dock now. This is your last chance for drinks which are still free for the next half hour, being paid for by the very generous and very becoming Miss Agatha Wayne, and this will be the last dance of the night as well. Thank you everyone for joining our tenth annual Gotham Fleet Week Booze Cruise.”

“I think my wife needs to dance with me now,” Jack said, downing the rest of his drink in one hard swallow before slamming the glass down on the counter and hopping off the stool, taking Harley with him. She laughed, dropped her drink on the counter as he swung her into his arms, sliding his fingers along her arm as he brought her right hand to his shoulder. He smiled at her, his left hand wrapped around her waist as he began to dance, a slow weave that took them in a circle.

He leaned close to her, his breath russtling the hair near her ear, his hand gently holding hers.

“Mmm...Harley...I live for nights like this, with you in my arms.” Jack purred softly, “All's right with the world.”

Harley smiled in response, squeezing his shoulder. “Us against the world.”

Jack chuckled. “Mm...yes.”
The song continued, the two of them weaving with the music. Jack spun her out then back into his arms wrapping his arm tight around her as he sang the lyrics with the song.

“Throw out the inhibition
You make me feel a feeling that I've never felt before
I don't know if they're gonna like it
But that only makes me want it more 'Cause I'm nobody's but yours…”

He grinned and waggled his eyebrows up and down causing his wife to smirk.

*

Bane leaned his back against the bar watching the two of them dancing when he felt the person on his left shift. He glanced over at the one Jack had called Frost and nodded. Frost smiled and held up his beer.

Bane nodded toward Jack and Harley. “They seem fun.”

Frost chuckled. “They are more fun usually. This was a quiet night...usually, it’s more violent and a lot bloodier.”

Bane frowned slightly watching the couple dance. “Huh.”

Frost nodded and bumped Bane’s shoulder. “Stick around. I have a feeling things are about to get even more interesting.” Frost sipped his beer and grinned. “Boss has big plans.”

Bane chuckled taking a sip from his rum. “I’ve been looking for interesting. Sounds fun.”

They were both quiet for a moment when Bane hissed. “You guys got any more like...Agatha or Harley?”

Frost chuckled. “Not yet.”

Bane nodded. “You and Jack-- lucky men.”

Frost grinned sipping his beer just as Agatha snuggled in close to his side, her arm around his waist.

*

Jack dropped Harley’s hand, wrapped his arms around her waist, holding her tightly. He spread his hands, let them flow up her back while he moved with her. He liked that he could feel no bra, knowing she wore only the little dress and a pair of panties made him ache all over for her. They were barely moving now, mostly swaying in one place. Harley brought her arms up to wrap around his neck, her fingers caressing his shoulder. She continued to stroke his hair, her eyes closed, just taking in the scent of him surrounding her, the press of his body against hers, the fabric of his clothing...every little detail of her husband, his very being. Harley tightened her grip on Jack for a moment.

Jack purred softly with the music, his voice caressing her ear while his breath stroked her cheek.

They held each other tighter, her hands feather touching the back of his neck while Jack spread his hands across her back, slowly caressing her spine.

Jack’s voice oozed over her like warm chocolate while he sang softly to her, a few more words, his lips moving slowly over her skin.

“If it’s me
And if it’s you
And if our love is wrong
Then I don’t ever wanna be right
I don’t ever wanna be right
If it’s real
And if it’s true
And if our love is wrong
Then I don’t ever wanna be right
I don’t ever wanna be right…”

Jack pressed his lips to the corner of her mouth. “I want you Harley. I want you always...hmm....would you marry me again?”

Harley giggled softly. “Oh puddin. I’ll always marry you.”

Jack grinned and spun around before he tugged her close, brushing his lips against hers. He held her, in that moment, a breath between the kiss, his blue eyes staring down into her blue eyes. His gaze was intense; Harley could see dark depths in his eyes that she couldn’t quite reach, pain that lived there in his gaze, but she could see them, waiting for her.

Jack reached a hand around to stroke her jaw and chin lightly.

“I still haven’t gotten to take you on a honeymoon Harley...I still need to take you away somewhere…” he licked her mouth slowly, his tongue traveling along her full lips before he kissed her, a deep passionate kiss that continued for a few seconds more even after the music had stopped.

*

Their small group had just exited the ship and were standing off to the side talking while Frost went to fetch the car when Jack saw movement. It was nothing strange, just the way a light caught a color that drew his attention, but he saw two people, two people that fit the descriptions that Big Mama had given them for Griselda and Manuel. Of course, it might not be them, but they looked to have left the ship with everyone else and were now getting into a taxi.

Jack snarled. “Fuck!”

His suddenly exclamation startled Harley. “Puddin?”

She turned and Jack pointed across the way to the two drug dealers. “We’re never going to fucking….” But Jack’s words trailed off as Zsasz materialized out of the crowd next to them, dressed all in black. He exchanged a few words with the couple, then leaned in and said something to the driver of the taxi. He stood up and looked around, as if he knew Jack was nearby, catching Jack’s eye and winked before he slipped into the cab that pulled away from the curb taking their targets with them. Harley frowned watching the taxi and turned to Jack.

“Puddin?”

Jack smiled. “No worries Harls. I think we will be seeing them tomorrow.”

Harley frowned seeing Zsasz getting into the taxi too. “He does know we need them alive right? We need information…”

Jack laughed. “It’s fine sweets. I trust Zsasz to bring them tomorrow...and able to talk...at least one of them…” He sighed and shrugged before he put his arm around her shoulders with a smile turning back to Frost. “Well, I’m ready to call it a night.”

Bane yawned. “It was nice to meet you folks and I’ve decided to take your job offer.”

Jack beamed. “Perfect! Here…” He patted his hands around his jacket which he had slipped back on when his Aunt handed him a pen. “Here ya go Jackie.’

He smiled. “Thank you, my dear aunt.” Jack reached out and grab Bane’s hand and quickly wrote down the address. “Be here tomorrow night around nine.”

Bane looked at the address and nodded. He gave them all a salute before he drifted away into the crowd. Jack draped his arm over Harley’s shoulders, pulling her close against him as he started to walk through the crowd with Frost and Agatha behind them. He was smiling ear to ear.

“I do like how our little gang is slowly fleshing out my sweets.”

Harley grinned putting her arm around Jack’s waist. “Me too puddin, me too.”

*

The shadow that had lost them for the last several hours frowned in frustration when she finally spotted them again. She had seen one of the group, the one who guarded them, but they were too far away and the crowd was too thick for her to easily catch back up. She was still on her mission, track, observe, be ready. The Owls were concerned...

*

Harley yawned again giggling softly as Jack grabbed her up and started to carry her to the main house of their amusement park home. She had her arms wrapped around his shoulders, her head leaning against him as he pushed the door open with his hip, having only put her down long enough to unlock the door.

“You are not going to have to carry me in like this every time puddin.” Harley giggled as he started for the stairs and she wiggled to get free. Jack put her down reluctantly.

“Why not?” Jack slipped out of his jacket after setting her down, tossed it over the back of the couch. Harley flopped down and began to untie her sandals.

“Well I’m sure I’m heavy after a while and besides, maybe I want to carry you?” She grinned.

Jack was leaning with his hand against the rail of the stairs as he kicked his shoes off.

“You couldn't carry me,” he mumbled.
Harley sat up straight with a hard gleam in her eyes. “What did you say?”

“I said you couldn’t carry me.” Jack turned to grin at her while undoing the buckle on his belt.

Harley stood and walked barefoot over to her husband and looked him up and down. “What do I get if I win?”

Jack looked startled. “What?”

“If I carry you up the stairs, what do I get?” Harley put her hands on her hips.

Jack chuckled. “You’re serious?”

“Very.” Harley smirked.

Jack chewed his lip. “What would you like?”

Harley giggled. “Ah...a favor to be turned in at a time of my choosing...you got it.”

Jack grinned. “All right, deal--let’s see you carry me to our room.”

Harley grabbed his left arm, bent down and hefted Jack over her back in a fireman’s carry. Jack was giggling the entire time as Harley then, a little shakily at first, stood up with Jack across her shoulders, holding one of his arms, her right arm between his legs and wrapped around one thigh. With a large grin, Harley then proceeded to slowly take the stairs, one at a time.

Jack was laughing hard enough he was almost in tears.

Harley hissed. “Stop wiggling so much!!”

Jack snorted. “I can’t help it!!”

They were both laughing as Harley carefully arrived at the top of the stairs and walked into their room where she deposited Jack onto the bed with an unceremonious flop.

Jack rolled onto his back laughing hard. “Oh my GOD Harley, you are incredible!!”

Harley giggled. “Yes I am.”

Jack reached out and snagged her wrist, yanking her onto the bed and on top of him. He settled back with a smile putting one hand behind his head, and with the other hand he reached up and brushed his fingertips along her cleavage.

Harley smiled and easily grabbed the dress pulling it over her head and depositing it over the side of the bed. Jack purred deep in his chest. She was topess, the little bit of ambient light coming in from the outside caressed her skin as she leaned forward and started to work the buttons of his dress shirt.

“Yeah know what puddin?”

Jack relaxed watching her face while she pulled the shirt out of his slacks and worked the buttons one by one. He smiled studying the little wrinkle between her eyes as she focused her attention on the buttons, the way her bottom lip protruded slightly, the pink flush on her cheeks. The loose, blonde curls that framed her face softened her appearance even more. He felt that ache in his chest again. He loved her so completely.

“What my peach?” Jack asked softly, his fingertips very gentle as he brushed her thighs reaching up Harley peeled his shirt back and slowly ran her hand up his chest from his stomach. She could still see the fading bruises on his skin, the healing scars, his tattoos. She brushed her fingers tenderly over him; every inch of him brought her pleasure. She didn't just ache for him physically, she needed him on so many levels. She smiled and traced the lines of his long face, brushing the tip of her fingers along the bridge of his nose. He didn’t share much with Bruce in terms of their looks; Bruce was all hard squares, a wall she had once determined, while her lean and trim Jack, there was something dark in him, darker than she had yet to see, she was sure of it. But unlike his brother, Jack had a depth of feeling, a vibrance to his very being—charisma.

She smiled softly continuing to caress his chest. “I love you,” she said simply.

Jack’s smile brightened. He reached up, slipping his fingers under the hem of her panties. “I love you too pumpkin...always Harley.”

Harley stood up on the bed, and with a little wiggle, pushed her panties down, kicking them off with a laugh. Jack was grinning, watching her as he arched his hips off the bed, shoving his slacks and boxers down, struggling to get them off his feet at the same time as his socks. When he was completely naked, Harley dropped down on top of him. They both laughed as the bed jumped, the springs squeaking and squealing in protest. Jack wrapped both his arms and legs around her, squeezing her tightly and rolling her onto her back, he blew loudly on the ticklish space between her shoulder and ear, pressing his lips against her skin and making rude noises until Harley was screaming with laughter.

“JACK!! Stop!!” She tried to wiggle and kick her legs to get away from him, but he scooted up onto his knees continuing to hold her tightly and hissed.

“Never pumpkin!! You’re my girl!! I’ll never stop!” He blew again making terrible raspberries against her neck.

Jack finally pulled away grinning down at her. He moved his arms up so he could cradle her head, stroking his thumbs along her forehead. “You are a pretty swell girl,” he whispered.

Harley giggled. “Swell?”

Harley laughed her arms tight around him. “Promise me something Jack.”

He brushed his nose against hers. “Anything Harls, anything at all.”

“No matter what happens...we’ll always be together,” Harley said softly brushing her mouth against his before gently pressing her lips to his.

Jack purred, his breath brushing her lips when he spoke. “Never fear Harls, I’ll never go anywhere without you.”

He kissed her hard and sweet, sliding down her body to press kisses to her breasts. He cupped one breast, rolling his tongue along her nipple before sucking the sensitive nub into his mouth, releasing her with a pop of his lips. Harley groaned loudly arching her back, the fingers of one hand sliding into his hair, her nails scraping lightly against his scalp as Jack moved his attentions to her other breast. He licked and sucked on her tenderly, his breath warm, caressing and tickling as he murmured softly. “You are my first...” He kissed one breast. “My last...” Then he kissed her other breast before sliding down and pressing a kiss to her belly. “There shall never be another you...”
Jack moved to position himself between her legs, with a kiss to each hip bone. He blew gently against her clitoris before easing his tongue between her lips, finding the sensitive bundle of nerves. Harley’s breath hitched. She reached down to grab his hair in one hand while with the other she grasped the top of the comforter.

“You are a lifetime Harley, you are my life,” he purred before slowly dragging his tongue over her. Harley moaned loudly, arching her hips into his attentions.

Jack kissed her deeply, his tongue finding all the places that he knew would make Harley cry out, smiling when her fingers tightened in his hair. He leaned into her more fully, his tongue licking and swirling. He wrapped his left arm around her leg, lifting her leg over his shoulder and kissed her even deeper while he slid two fingers into her.

Harley groaned, her bottom lip trembling. “Oh Jack…puddin…”

She felt the smile on his lips while sucked on her, alternating the sweet sucking sensation with a long, slow lick. His fingers moved tenderly, pressing deep into her then slowly pulling out. He kissed her again, using all of his mouth on her, licking slowly, but at the same time increasing the rate of his fingers moving into her, thrusting harder, faster.

Harley’s breathing became pants and her fingers dug painfully into his scalp, her hips thrusting in time to the thrusts of his fingers.

“Oh Jack...yes…”

He grinned, licking her from the point his fingers entered her all the way to her clitoris that he began sucking on. Her cries became higher pitched as Jack worked to bring her to climax again, kissing her passionately, his tongue hot and wet against her. Harley cried out when Jack flicked his tongue in a particular twist. Her fingers tightened in his hair and around the comforter as she came, arching and tensing, her toes pointing as she nearly lifted off the bed.

Jack grinned, moving his mouth over her, feeling the rush of wetness against his fingers when she orgasmed. He didn’t stop, wanting to communicate fully how much she meant to him. He slowly pulled his fingers away from her, made Harley gasp.

Jack crawled on top of her, forcing her to release her hold on his hair. She wrapped her arm around him to pull him close, wrapping one leg around his hip as Jack settled between her legs. He brushed his nose against hers and murmured. “You are the world to me Harley…my entire world.”

Harley blinked, tears gathered in her eyes. “Puddin…”

Jack grinned. “Shh…” He kissed her tenderly.

Jack shifted to enter her at the same time he pressed his mouth to hers in a sweet kiss. Harley groaned softly against his lips, feeling him thrust inside her, completing her, the connection of their bodies sent shivers up her spine. Jack kissed her passionately, his tongue finding hers at the same time he was thrusting up, leaning in to penetrate her slowly, deeply. He made a small grunt of pleasure, his eyes fluttering for a moment. Harley slid her foot down his thigh, slid her hands up his sides and grabbed his shoulders rolling her hips in response to him. She moved her mouth over Jack’s licking in a tantalizing caress along his bottom lip, flicking his bottom lip before catching his lip with the edge of her teeth and tugging playfully.

“Puddin….” Harley growled louder, digging her fingers into his flesh. She closed her eyes for a moment with a deep groan. “Jack…”
Jack lifted up on his elbows catching her bottom lip with his teeth in response, leaning into his thrust, and pressing his forehead against hers. He groaned and pressed deeper, thrust in a smooth rhythm, his movements picking up speed, his hips rolling as he thrust in and out. Harley whimpered, her fingers digging into his muscles, wrapping her legs around him, the wet sounds of their bodies coming together mixed with their heated breaths and the squeak of the bed filled the room. He arched his back, pressing his hips into her caressing her face as he stared into her light blue eyes.

Harley stroked his cheeks, dragging her fingers down to his lips.

They smiled at each other, she cupped his face, he held her head, staring into the endless blue of each other’s eyes as their ecstasy peaked as one.
Harley hummed softly to herself as she cleaned the kitchen. She bopped her hips in time to a song in her head as she ran a damp rag over the countertop. She had her blonde hair up in victory rolls and had chosen another sun dress for today, this one with a vintage style halter top that had a square neckline and rhinestone buttons. She was wearing a pair of vintage t-bar heels with teardrop cutouts in the front that showed off her red painted toenails. Jack was busy putting his lab together over in the haunted house ride when Harley heard a knock at the door.

Harley frowned and looked toward the door. She walked over to the wall where she had her baseball bat and picked it up before she made her way over to the front door. The only people who should know of this place were the gang members, so it should be one of them, but it paid to play it safe Harley told herself. She walked over to the door and opened it just a bit to look outside and smiled.

On the other side of the door, in another black on black suit stood Zsasz with a bouquet of pink roses. Next to him, tied up as if they had been hogtied were the two drug dealers.

Zsasz grinned. “Good afternoon Mrs. Harley; is your husband around?”

Harley giggled and opened the door fully. Zsasz held out the flowers to her. Harley gathered them into her arms burying her face in them and took a deep breath.

“Oh Victor, may I call you Victor? These smell wonderful!”

Zsasz grinned. “Of course you may call me Victor and I am so glad you like them.”

Harley glanced at the drug dealers, who each had a bag on their head so she couldn’t quite tell the amount of damage they had both suffered, but a glance told her one of them at least was missing a finger or two.

“Why don’t you bring them into the kitchen. I’ll go get Jack and we can get started. Would you like coffee, tea, water? I have some lemonade.”

“Tea would be perfect, thank you Mrs. Harley.” Victor smiled picking up one of the drug dealers as if they weighed nothing at all.

“Let me fix your tea then I’ll get my husband and please, just call me Harley; everyone does.” Harley smiled stepping out of the way and left the door open as she walked into the kitchen.

*

Jack had his phone set in a speaker set to play Metallica’s “Sanitarium.” He had his suit jacket off and hanging on a hook on the wall that had held a plastic skeleton before. He had the sleeves of his white dress shirt rolled up, though his green tie and light silver grey and white plaid vest (along with the matching slacks) were still in place. As he moved about the room, the bright green socks with large purple and gold paisley would occasionally be exposed over the top of his light brown wingtip oxfords while he danced a little to the music. Over his clothing Jack wore a leather apron and currently resting on his forehead were a pair of dark lensed goggles.

He sang along to the music while he measured some dark liquid into a beaker.

“They think our heads are in their hands
But violent use brings violent plans

Keep him tied, it makes him well

He's getting better, can't you tell?”

Occasionally Jack would stop what he was doing as the lyrics of the song sank in and his mind drifted to thoughts of Arkham, of Crane, how close he had come to losing Harley. His mind...or did he lose his mind? Jack grinned at that thought. He knew there was something different about him, not wrong, just...different. He grinned, maybe it was because he didn’t feel a thing about killing other people, or maybe it was because he saw that life was like a hamster’s wheel, a lot of spinning and going nowhere. Pretty damn pointless, which was funny. All that striving to be good, to be orderly...and one thing could change all of that...one little thing. Jack thought about his brother, always striving to live up to the standards that he thought their dead parents would want, two people who were beyond caring. Jack sighed. The only person in the world he really cared about now was Harley. She was everything to him, which went against his philosophy, but she was like a drug—she couldn’t deny her, couldn’t be without her, couldn’t face the world without her by his side. She was his one weakness.

Jack shook himself out of his thoughts and focused on his lab work. It had taken him a while to get the lab set up the way he liked it and now he was getting to play with a few of the chemicals that Alex had brought over for him. Jack felt like a child in toyland, so many things for him to create, so many ways to focus his attentions...

Jack grinned brightly when he heard a knock at the door. He turned with a lifted eyebrow to see Harley poke her head in. He grinned broader when he saw her, his angel in the darkness.

“Hey puddin.” Harley grinned showing off her pretty smile; he always loved her smile.

Jack’s smile in response was brilliant. “Harley! Come in Baby.”

“I just came by to let you know that Zsasz is here with a delivery.” She giggled softly and walked over to Jack as he pulled the apron off, then dropped it and the goggles on a table. She walked into his arms which he held open as soon as he had removed his equipment.

Jack folded Harley against him and kissed the top of her head. Her scent, the feel of her body against his washed away his more morbid thoughts. “Mmm...well I suppose I should go check out the goods. Did he break them too much?”

Harley giggled softly. “I couldn’t tell, he had them tied up and bagged up, but they seemed intact.”

Jack smiled. “Goodie. It’s no fun playing with broken toys.”

The three of them sat around the small kitchen table, Victor with his tea, Jack and Harley with their coffee. In the center of the table was a vase the held the roses that Victor had brought. The fresh flowers filled the kitchen with their scent. The two drug dealers were tied up in another set of chairs, these with hard backs and arms Jack had brought out to make tying them up easier. Both the dealers had a ball gag in their mouth, hands duct taped to the arms of the chairs, with their ankles duct taped to the legs of the chair.

Jack leaned his elbows on the table and sipped his coffee with a smile.

“So, get anything useful out of them?” he asked before he took another sip. “They looked relatively
“A little bit.” Victor grinned. “And what I damaged, I did just under the clothing.” He sipped his tea and continued. “They know exactly who is making and distributing Giggles, but they also know who is making all the money off the drug too. Though they were reluctant to give me a name, even though I can be very persuasive.” Zsasz smiled and shrugged. “I’m afraid Arkham may have dulled my abilities.”

Harley glanced over at the two dealers. Griselda was a short woman with thick, frizzy hair that was clearly dyed red. She might have been pretty at one time, but drugs had taken their toll on her skin and right now she had a black eye. Her partner, Manuel had thick curling black hair, with a thick mustache that immediately made Harley think of the term, “pornstache.” He was also sporting a black eye, along with a bloody lip as well as missing a couple of fingers on his left hand; in contrast to Victor’s claim a moment earlier.

Jack smiled and stood up from the table. “Harley dear, would you go get your makeup and the nail kit, along with the hair cutting scissors.”

Harley jumped up with a bounce to her hair. “Of course puddin.”

Victor watched her leave followed by the sound of her footsteps heading up the stairs and glanced at Jack with a lifted brow.

Jack smiled. “Just going to prepare them. You know Victor, like a mortician.”

Jack glanced at the two captives. “They have to know there is only one way this is going to end. Live fast, die young, and leave a pretty corpse behind.” Jack chuckled. “Or not so much…”

Victor chuckled along with him just as Harley descended the stairs carrying a large box and a little zipper bag. She set everything on the table as Jack stood up and walked over to their “guests.”

Jack stood in front of them with a smile, while at the same time he pulled out a pair of leather gloves from the inside pocket of his jacket, a pair of green latex gloves that matched his tie. He slipped his fingers into each glove as he spoke. “Now, I want to know who is giving you Giggles, where it’s made, who gets the money...that sort of thing. I want to know everything you know.”

Jack stretched his fingers, flexing them a few times in the gloves. “Oh--I’m being rude. My name is Jack.”

Jack gave them a winning smile. “This…” He pointed at Harley. “Is my beautiful wife Harley.”

Harley waved at them. “Hi!” she said in a pleasant tone before she went back to setting up the makeup.

Jack turned and walked back over to the table where Harley had everything, a nail kit with clippers, file, their shared makeup, along with combs, brushes, hair trimming scissors. Jack picked up one of the brushes and the scissors before he walked over to Manuel.

Jack started to brush the man’s hair. He glanced up at Harley. “Sweetheart, where is the water bottle?”

Harley smiled. “Oh, in the upstairs bathroom. Just a minute puddin.”

Jack hummed softly while he brushed his captive’s hair and waited for Harley. Manuel kept very still looking over at Griselda then up at Jack, his expression clearly confused. Victor sipped his tea as Jack’s hummed turned and shifted to a low murmuring of the lyrics.

“I started a joke which started the whole world crying

But I didn’t see that the joke was on me oh no

I started to cry which started the whole world laughing

Oh If I’d only seen that the joke was on me…”

Harley came back with the bottle of water, a bottle with a spray top. Jack leaned over and kissed her gently before he started to spritz Manuel’s hair. Jack reached over to pick up the scissors and began to trim the man’s hair. Harley seemed to sense what her husband was up to without them sharing a word between them, picked up the nail kit and pulled her chair over closer, until she was positioned in front of Griselda. She hummed along with her husband’s low singing and started to trim the nails of the woman in front of her.

Jack stepped around in front of Manuel and set the scissors down on the kitchen table. “Now, I’m going to remove your gag so we can speak. Please, don’t bother screaming; no one is going to hear you. But, if you insist on screaming, I will have to cut your tongue out and focus all my attentions on your partner Griselda here and you will get to watch. Now, I’m sure you are thinking to yourself...he’s bluffing. Well, you can’t be sure one way or the other now can you? I guess it all comes down to how much of a gambler you are.” Jack grinned. “But, to help you out, I’m going to be perfectly honest with you Manuel. You and your friend here--are not going to leave here alive. It simply isn’t going to happen. Now, you may be thinking to yourself, well, if I’m going to die anyway, then I won’t tell him anything.” Jack frowned and nodded. “Which you could do, of course. But ask yourself, the person you’re working for, do you really think they care what happens to you? Do you really think, whoever they are, is going to spare one thought about what happens to you? And let’s just say I let you go...do you really think they are going to believe you didn’t give me anything after what I’m going to do to you if you don’t talk?”

Jack smiled pleasantly before he stood up again and walked behind Manuel. Harley hummed softly, she glanced up at her husband. Jack gave her a wink. Jack returned his attention to Manuel. He took a moment to remove the gag, setting it on the counter behind him before he picked up the scissors again along with the water bottle, he sprayed the man’s hair as Manuel visibly tensed up. Jack trimmed and hummed, glanced over at Harley. Harley smiled at him as she filed Griselda’s nails.

“Now Manuel--Giggles. Is the same man that gives it to you to sell the one who is making the drug?” Jack expertly trimmed the man’s hair, brushing his fingers through the black locks as he worked. “I know you’ve been through this with my friend, Victor, but indulge me.”

Manuel swallowed then opened his mouth and yelled, “HELP!!” as loudly as he could and began to struggle in his seat, twisting and heaving enough that the chair shook and jiggled an inch or two off the floor. Griselda and Harley both jumped. Victor didn’t move, but Jack stepped around the seated drug dealer as he dropped the scissors and water bottle. One of his green gloved hands shot out to grab Manuel by the cheeks. His fingers squeezed tightly while in one fluid movement Jack flipped his jacket back to pull his knife that rode at his hip.

Jack’s face contorted into a scowl as he held the knife’s in his left hand, squeezed Manuel’s cheeks painfully until the man opened his mouth in pain and was forced to stick his tongue out. Jack placed the tip of his blade against Manuel’s tongue. He pressed down slowly into the wet flesh; the sharp blade cut into the man’s tongue. Manuel started to make noises of protest as his eyes rolled in panic. Jack smiled easily as he watched the blood well up under his blade from the other man’s tongue. “So “…my friend…” Jack spoke calmly. “This is going to go one of two ways. One, I cut your tongue out and turn my attentions to your girlfriend here. OR, you start telling me what I want to hear. Like I said, either way you and your friend are dying. How painfully and in how many parts you end up in before you die will be entirely up to you.” Jack smiled displaying his perfect white teeth. “How agonizing do you want your death to be?”

Manuel stopped struggling and stopped trying to yell. He glanced sideways at Griselda who looked terrified, but also resigned.

The man nodded as best he could with how Jack was holding his face. Jack very slowly removed his knife tip and released the man’s face. He smiled and put the blade away just as quickly as he had drawn it; the blade disappeared in the blink of an eye.

“Harley my sweet, ready to trade?” Jack picked up the water bottle and scissors.

Harley grinned and set the nail kit down. “Sure thing puddin’.”

Harley picked up the water bottle and scissors. She also picked up where Jack left off with the song, and began to spritz and trim Griselda’s hair while Jack sat down in front of Manuel. He picked up the nail clippers and the file and began to trim the drug dealer’s nails.

Harley sang softly, almost chanting in a sing-song voice more than actual singing while Jack picked up one of Manuel’s fingers and began to trim and file his nails as if nothing had happened... Jack thought that Harley’s voice was soft and sweet.

“I looked at the skies running my hands over my eyes
And I fell out of bed hurting my head from things that I said
’Till I finally died which started the whole world living Oh if I’d only seen that the joke was on me…”

*

“So tell me Manuel, from whom do you acquire the Giggles?” Jack’s full attention seemed to be on the drug dealer’s nails. He trimmed them neatly, and filed them carefully. Manuel licked his dry lip and glanced at Griselda before he spoke. “I...I get the drug from Sal Maroni or one of his men. They bring me the goods and I pay him or his people 90% of what we make. I don’t know how much The Roman gets.”

Jack went very still, his voice a whisper. “The Roman?”

Manuel nodded vigorously. “All I know man, is that The Roman is the head guy, the one who gets all the money; he has the people that make the drugs. Griselda and me, we just sell it.”

Jack’s face twitched slightly, the vein under his eye throbbed for a moment, but he continued to work on Manuel’s nails. Manuel glanced over at Griselda as Harley finished with her hair and had moved around to once more sit in front of the wild haired drug dealer. Harley had moved her make-up case closer and was going through it while she hummed holding up different colors of eyeshadow, considering them and putting them back.

Jack pressed his lips together for a moment; he breathed through his nose before he spoke. “So--The Roman, interesting. How does he have the drug made, do you know?” Jack asked calmly. “I mean, who is making it and where?” Jack examined the nail he had been working too. Satisfied he moved Victor stood up walking over to the stove and glanced at Harley. “Do you mind if I make another cup of tea?” he asked.

Harley glanced up having decided against doing makeup first and was instead going through her nail polish. She had decided on a shade of red called “exotic liras.” She shook the bottle as she glanced up at Victor.

“Oh sure thing! The tea bags are in the cabinet right there.” She pointed out the cabinet with a smile at Victor.

Harley smiled. “Sure thing.”

Jack, who was very slowly filing one of Manuel’s nails said without looking up. “No thank you. Though I think I will have a cigarette, if you wouldn’t mind grabbing the ashtray. It should be next to the coffee maker.”

“Oh, two creams and three sugars, thank you.” Harley had opened the bottle of polish and was carefully painting the other woman’s nails as Griselda stared at her, only occasionally making a sound around her ball gag that Harley completely ignored.

Harley had switched songs, her voice low and soft as she started on the new song, her focus on the task of painting Griselda’s nails. She slowly and carefully dragged the brush over the nail. She glanced up at the woman tied to the chair and gave her a bright smile.

“Young stare makes me freeze but I can't stay still Those eyes keep me up longer than any other pill
And I know, being together
We feel like forever
And now, more than ever I feel everything…”

Manuel felt sick as he watched the interaction between these people with their casual conversation, the soft singing of the woman, all of them acted as if everything that was going on was so normal, which included the fact that they planned on killing both him and Griselda. There was something so spooky, creepy about the way they didn’t scream, didn’t beat them, didn’t demand answers by physically attacking them...the only violence when the man named Jack had done was when he grabbed his face and cut his tongue a couple of minutes ago. Otherwise it was soft, quiet, friendly. The woman painting Griselda's nails continued to sing, tapping her foot in time to the song she was singing while she worked.

“I'm scared that I'm falling
I'm blind and I'm falling
My love is calling
You can't stop me roaring, I'm soaring
Manuel shuddered as Jack finished with Manuel’s nails and glanced over at his woman at the same time that Victor brought over the ashtray for Jack.

“How about this one puddin? It’s called Licorice.” She handed over the bottle for Jack to inspect. Jack slowly blew out the smoke from the side of his mouth and grinned as he reached over to cup the back of Harley’s neck, tugging her closer to kiss her.

“Perfect sweets.”

Jack turned his attention back to Manual, holding his cigarette between his teeth. The drug dealer could see the coldness in Jack’s eyes, the way Jack smiled at him, sent a shiver down his spine. Jack turned, blowing out another line of smoke, set his legs wide apart and leaned back against his chair as he murmured. “Now…” He shook the bottle, rolling the cigarette to the side of his mouth. “What do you know about Giggles?”

Manuel stuttered. “It-it makes you crazy, euphoric. There’s this rush, and it uh, it ain’t like anything I ever felt before.”

Jack opened the bottle, withdrew the brush slowly. He took a drag on his cigarette again, blew the smoke out through his nostrils as he leaned forward and carefully began to paint the other man’s nails.

“You’ve used it?” Jack asked without looking up.

Manuel nodded. “Yeah, both me and Griselda tried it. It’s like...like meth, but better. That rush, where your heart beats like crazy can last for hours man--like...hours. And the high, man, it’s amazing. It makes you feel on top of the world man, like you can do anything, but at the same time why do anything at all!? You just fucking float and everything...you see the funny side of everything man...and you know that high you get when someone chokes you during sex? It’s like that too man...it’s amazing. Like all the best highs rolled into one! It makes you feel...weightless and it bleaches the skin, like a lot of the ladies like that, but that’s just a side effect that usually fades after like forty eight hours.”

Jack’s entire body had tensed. He had painted two of Manuel’s nails, but he stopped, going very still. He sat back a little, holding the nail brush between two fingers while he pulled out his cigarette from his mouth.

“Makes you laugh, eh? Pale skin...really? Do you know how or where Falcone got this new drug?” Jack asked softly before taking another drag.

Manuel swallowed. “I mean, I don’t know much--Maroni would know more--but I heard Maroni say something about Falcone had a factory, some chemical plant he's using as a front to make drugs. I heard that he stole this formula from that Red Hood gang, he somehow got some samples from when they robbed that fashion week shit and something about that Red Hood gang using it on Panessa…I don’t know man, Maroni likes to talk when he’s drunk or high…” Manuel closed his mouth then, watching Jack intently. The man had gone deathly still. There was something about him, like a caged animal…something unhinged…Maroni, Falcone scared him, for sure. But this man, Jack, terrified Manuel.

Jack had stopped moving, his hand holding the nail polish brush poised over one of Manuel’s fingernails. Smoke was slowly gliding from the end of the cigarette. Manuel could see a hint of the vein under Jack’s eyes throb again.

Jack hissed softly. “He got samples. From the Red Hood gang? Did someone give him those samples?”

Manuel shrugged. “I don’t know…I mean, that’s what Maroni said…I don’t think so. He ain’t ever said anything about a snitch…just got samples man…that’s all I know.” Jack sat up straight and smiled, putting the nail brush back in the bottle. He took a drag on his cigarette, held it for a couple of seconds, then let the smoke slowly flow from his mouth and nose as he spoke. “Really? Maroni said that did he? I guess that means I need to talk to Maroni. Thank you Manuel.”

Jack’s movements were so swift that even Harley didn’t see him pull his knife. One moment Jack was holding his cigarette, the next, he was holding his knife. The knife was in Jack’s hand, and before Harley or Victor could blink, Jack’s arm shot out, slicing the drug dealer’s throat in one swift, fluid movement. For a heart beat, here was nothing, just the surprised look in Manuel’s eyes, then the blood, bright red, blossomed from the wound which seemed to split open wider, spilling bright red blood down the man’s front in a steady stream as his head fell back.

Jack, his face contorted with rage, watched, his eyes cold as Manuel choked and gurgled a bit before he ultimately went quiet as he died, his front soaked in blood. Griselda began to thrash around, while Harley, who had been intent on painting the woman’s nails, looked up startled.

Harley didn’t move at first. She wasn’t sure what it was that caused her to hesitate, but when she didn’t move fast enough, Jack stepped over to the gagged and bound woman and swiftly, elegantly, slashed open her throat.

Harley winced and yanked herself out of the way as the woman’s neck gushed blood and she began to silently bleed to death, her cries muffled by the ball gag in her mouth and the fact that Jack’s cut was even deeper than the one he had given Manuel. Harley knew with a cut that deep, her husband had severed the woman’s vocal cords. Jack, his eyes stormy with rage while still retaining a coldness to them, cleaned his knife on Manuel’s pants legs before sliding the blade back into the sheath at his waist. He put out the cigarette he had dropped to the floor with the toe of his shoe. Without a word, he grabbed up his cigarettes and lighter, and quickly lit another. Jack took a long drag on the cigarette. He held the smoke for a moment as he closed his eyes before he slowly released the smoke in a long, slow stream.

“I’m guessing I’m going to have to have a talk with both Maroni and Falcone.” Jack’s eyes narrowed dangerously as he held his cigarette between his fingers, a hand on his hip as he glared at the bodies. “I don’t appreciate someone taking something that is mine. I don’t appreciate it at all.”

Harley wrinkled her nose at the two bodies in her kitchen. She started to pick up the polish, makeup and other accessories.

“Puddin, what are we going to do with the bodies?” she asked as she put things back in the makeup case. The blood running down from the bodies was beginning to pool on the floor.
Jack took another long drag on his cigarette before smashing the butt into the ashtray. “I’ll call Alex Baby, get those cleaners--Hook and sons--over here to clean this mess up. And we are going to have a quick gang meeting,” Jack hissed before he turned and stalked from the kitchen.

Harley sighed, looking at the mess. “I just cleaned this.”

Victor smiled. “I’ll take the roses into the next room for you.”

Harley smiled as she gathered up the make-up. “Thank you Victor.”

*
A couple of hours later, the Hook family had cleaned up the bodies and the kitchen, leaving the room looking spotless. Jack had called a meeting, so the living room of their home was currently filled with who Jack considered the “main” members of his gang: Harley, Jason, Roxy, Duela, Frost, his aunt, Trope, Alex (who showed up without Alice who wasn’t feeling well, but instead had his dad Frank tagging along which had surprised everyone, but Jack seemed genuinely pleased to see the older man) Zsasz, Gus, Clyde, Angora, the twins, Bane, Trope and Thea.

The room was crowded, with a few people standing, others sitting on a couple of chairs, such as the twins who were sitting on the back of the couch, while Thea sat in a chair with Trope on her lap. Jack sat on the loveseat with his arm around Harley and smoking a cigarette, a bottle of whiskey with a glass of ice on the coffee table in front of them, along with an ashtray surrounded by a few candles. Jack had his pointed wingtips resting on the table. Everyone else was either drinking beer, grape soda, water or kool-aid.

Harley had decorated the room with a few lit candles; the warm scent of vanilla filled the air around them, the flickering candlelight mixed with the low lamplight made the meeting more intimate and personal.

Jack took a drag on his cigarette, (Harley noted that Jack had been smoking more than usual today) his agitation and growing anger still just barely in check.

“It has come to my attention that the drug that we were looking into for Fish Mooney and Big Mama--Giggles--is actually something that Falcone found someone to make for him based on my gas.” Jack’s eyelid twitched. Harley frowned sipping her grape soda. She had never seen him this upset, this murderous; not since Arkham.

“I really, really don’t appreciate my things being taken without my permission. I don’t like money being made off my work and I really, really will not be made a fool of. I want to know where Falcone is making this drug and I want it stopped. Which means, my friends, that I am going to take our little gang to the next level. We are going to war with Falcone, now rather than later, and I’m going to be starting with his little enforcer, Maroni.” Jack looked at everyone in the room. “Does anyone have any objections?” No one in the room spoke.

Jack smiled, dropped his feet to the floor and leaned over to put his cigarette out in the ashtray. “Then we are all in agreement?”

Frost glanced at everyone then spoke. “I think I can speak for everyone here Boss--we got your back.”

Jack smiled. “Thank you Frost.”

The gang members all gave murmurs of agreement, which had Jack grinning ear to ear. Never in his life had he encountered this much devotion, or people who trusted him to look out for them. Before-- before Harley, before all of this, his life had been the other way around mostly...being the baby brother of Bruce Wayne, the fragile one, the one who needed looking after, the one who was on the verge of insanity and who couldn’t be trusted. He had always felt that Bruce either treated him with kid gloves, or tried to control every aspect of Jack’s life that he could, but now...Jack was the one in charge. He had Harley by his side, his friend, his partner and his lover. Not only did she make him feel powerful, but she also made him feel protected, sheltered in her love while at the same time able to control his world.

*

The gang discussed a few things, other matters such as Trope and Thea who both had come up with an idea on how to make the amusement park more secure. Jack discussed converting another part of the park into “apartments” for the gang, so that everyone had a place to stay if they needed it, and other minor details. Eventually, Agatha came over and sat down next to Harley.

She smiled. “I brought you and Jack a gift, sort of a house warming present I suppose, though I had really meant to give these to you for your wedding.”

Harley frowned. “Agatha you don’t…”

Agatha smiled. “Shh...I wanted to.”

She handed Harley a small box. Harley glanced at her, her blue eyes tearing up. Agatha smiled, reaching up to brush her thumb under Harley’s eye catching the tears.

“Sweetie, you are like the daughter I never had and you make Jack so happy. Granted I didn’t see much of the boys growing up, but Jack was always such a sad, quiet boy. You’ve made him so much happier, so much more himself than he has ever been. His father and mother might not like what Jack has become...and he might not have become a criminal if they had lived, but…” She cupped Harley’s chin. “He knows himself better than he ever did Harley and that’s because of you honey.”

Harley smiled. “Thank you Auntie.”

Agatha grinned getting teary eyed too. “Okay, enough tears, just open the box.”

Harley opened the long, slender box to find a gold necklace with her name in thin, elegant script, a tiny cross of four diamonds hanging off the “y” in her name.

“Oh Agatha!” Harley squealed with delight. Agatha smiled. “I’m glad you like it dear.”

“Oh, I love it! Jack look!” Harley held the box out to her husband.

Jack, who had been deep in conversation with Bane and Frost, turned to look over at his wife and smiled. “Auntie, that’s beautiful!”

“Oh I have something for you too Jackie.” Agatha leaned around Harley as she handed a second box to Jack.

Jack chuckled. “And it’s not even my birthday.”

Agatha laughed. “Shut up and open it.”

Jack smirked and opened the box. Inside was a gold chain. Just by looking at it Jack could tell it wasn’t cheap; she had spent a lot on it, he could tell. The chain was a finely made Cuban link 20 inch chain in 14k gold. Jack looked over at her in shock.

“Auntie I…”

Agatha held up her hand. “There are many birthdays and holidays wrapped up in that gift, so don’t you dare tell me you can’t take it. You will take it and you will like it.”

Agatha gave Jack a firm hard stare.

He smiled and leaned around his wife to kiss his aunt’s hand. “Thank you Auntie. I love it.”

She grinned. “Good.”

She stood up and ran her hands down her very tight, very low cut pink dress. “I’m going to take Frost home and teach him all about the art of Kinbaku.” She waggled her eyebrows at the two of them.

Jack chuckled with a shake of his head while grinning at Frost. “I would say I’m sorry, but I don’t think it’s necessary.”

Frost blushed as Harley leaned over and whispered to Jack. “What is Kinbaku?”

Jack smiled. “Mm…I will have to teach you sometime Harley, it will be a lot of fun,” he said seductively. Harley blushed bright red.

He turned to his aunt. “You two have fun. See you both tomorrow night.”

Frost nodded. “See ya Boss.”

Agatha smiled taking Frost’s hand. “Night my dears. Now, Frost, Kinbaku is all about sensuality…”

*

Later that evening Jack and Harley were alone after the gang members had all headed home for the night. Harley had insisted Jack take off his jacket, vest and tie. She unbuttoned few of the buttons on his dress shirt before she made him turn around, his back to her, so that she could rub his shoulders. Harley frowned. Jack’s shoulders and neck were tight, almost like stone when she tried to massage the muscles.

“Puddin, you all right?” Harley asked softly as she began to knead his shoulders.

Jack had his eyes closed as he leaned into her touch. “Yeah, just...still angry,” he said softly.

“That gas, the other venom I was working on before I met you--all of it--it was all I had for a long time, my work. It’s where I focused all of my energy, my skills…and to know that some fucking mobster took it and is making money off my creation, it just burns my ass Harley.” Jack snarled and his hands formed into fists.

Harley rubbed his shoulders before she slid her hands down his arms. “Puddin, relax. I know you’re angry, but you need to relax.” She put both hands on one arm and kneaded down to his forearm. She made Jack turn slightly in order to take one of his hands. She eased his fist open, removed his glove, and started to massage his hand. She dug her thumbs into his palm slowly as she rubbed the tension out of his hand. “Puddin, you know, we’ll find out where they’re making this Giggles, all the places they are making it--if there is more than one--and we’ll burn them to the ground.” She spoke softly as she brought his hand up to kiss his palm. “We burn the plant or store or whatever racket they are using as a front, kill all of them and simply take everything that’s left.”

Jack turned to look at her. She kissed his hand again with a smile, her blue eyes twinkled at him. Jack chuckled softly before he reached around with his other hand to caress the side of her face with his fingertips. “I love the way your mind works Harley.”

Harley grinned and placed his hand down, then returned to rubbing his shoulders. “Thank you puddin.”

Jack took a deep breath and let it out again slowly. Harley could feel his muscles begin to relax a small fraction. Jack moaned when Harley found a particularly sore spot and rubbed harder. “You’re right Baby, we’ll destroy everything they’ve made off my work...all of it.” Jack smiled, his eyes closed as he spoke. “I want to see Falcone’s face when I kill him too...I want to watch him bleed slowly, realizing that he fucked up. I was going to do it anyway, but now...it’ll be extra sweet.”

Harley kissed the back of Jack’s neck. Her lips brushed against the small hairs on the back of his neck, her eyes closed as she took in the scent of his skin, the feel of his flesh against her lips.

Jack smiled closing his eyes and murmured. “Harls, I was thinking, maybe you should go back to the roller derby.”

Harley frowned as she peered at the side of Jack’s head. The thought seemed random and out of nowhere. She had just moved her kisses to his ear. “You do?”

Jack smiled without turning. “I do. I really would like to watch you skate and it would be a nice distraction. I have my lab, but I want you to have something that is more than simply waiting on me. You enjoyed it so I think you should go back to it.”

“You think they would still want me after all this time?” Harley asked reaching her arms under his and blindly worked on the buttons of his dress shirt.

Jack nodded. “Good. I would like to see you skate. I never got to see you in one of those outfits, slamming your body into other women, beating them up in a real game…”

He chuckled.

Harley tugged his shirt out of his pants before she removed her arms from under his arms. She reached up and over Jack’s shoulders, taking hold of the shirt and peeled the fabric back over Jack’s shoulders. He made a soft sound in his throat, a soft growl. Harley leaned forward and brushed her lips along his shoulders while she slowly moved her mouth over his skin, her tongue rolling out to lick a trail across his shoulders then back at his neck. She opened her mouth wide, gently pressing her teeth into his skin.

Jack groaned and leaned back into her while her hands stroked his chest and stomach.

She glided her hand down to his slacks. Blindingly she worked at the belt, the button and zipper until she had everything undone which allowed her hands to slip into his slacks and squeeze.

Jack moaned softly as he leaned his full weight back against her.

Harley licked the back of his ear. One of her hands slid up the flat muscled planes of his stomach, her other hand massaged his quickly hardening erection. She caught his ear in her teeth, sucked a little, just enough to cause him to hiss as her teeth pressed down. She opened her hand wide, gathering his erection and balls, all of him still held by his boxers and squeezed while she dragged the nails of her other hand across his stomach.

Harley hissed against his ear. “Just picture it puddin, everything burning, we could let it all burn.”

She squeezed him followed by pressing her nails into his stomach. Jack groaned with pleasure, his body arched with her touch. Harley pulled her hand away only to slide her fingers under the band of his boxers until she felt the hot, hard satin flesh of her husband’s erection. She squeezed him and began to stroke him up and down; her hand alternated between tight squeezes and strokes.

Jack, his eyes still closed, caught his bottom lip with his teeth. He groaned as Harley dragged her nails over his skin with one hand, the other hand squeezed and stroked until Jack was thrusting into her hand. He hissed with each stroke of her hand or squeeze of her fingers.

“Do you want me Jack?” Harley purred. “Do you want me?”

Jack groaned low and deep. “Yes, I want you Harley.”

She smiled, released him, and stood up, she moved around a little so that Jack could see her.

Jack didn’t move, he simply watched her as she reached under her dress and slid her panties down her legs, leaving her heeled red shoes on as she stepped out of them. She smiled as she put her hands on Jack’s shoulders and shoved him back against the couch. She reached for his slacks, which forced Jack to raise his hips as his wife yanked his slacks and boxers to his knees. She stepped over him, standing over his lap. She didn’t say a word, but she smiled pressing the tip of her tongue to her upper lip as she gazed at him before lifting her dress and sitting down on Jack’s lap. She giggled reaching down over her dress to press his erection against her, rubbing him against her as she rolled her pelvis and made her husband gasp.

Jack began to reach for her, but Harley grabbed the wrist of one hand. “Just a minute puddin.”

Jack quirked a brow as Harley placed his hand on her hip. She turned and leaned over backwards, snapping up one of the candles on the living room table. She turned back around and held the candle with a grin.

“What are you going to do with that Harley?” Jack asked, but he smiled as she held the candle up above his chest then slowly tipped it, allowing a couple of small drops of hot wax to dribble onto his chest.

Jack took a hard breath as the hot wax hit his chest. Harley moved the candle, watching as the wax ran down from his lean, muscled chest. The wax quickly cooled as it rolled down to his stomach leaving molded lines of wax behind. She held the candle up high and moved it over his nipples where she let a couple of drops of hot wax fall; Jack hissed with pleasure.

Harley leaned back to set the candle down before she reached for Jack’s glass of whiskey. It was mostly empty, only a sip or two of the amber liquid still in the glass. She held it over him, ook out one of the ice cubes, and held it over her mouth letting the ice drip on her.
Jack watched, a drop of cool water hit her lips, then dribbled down her chin. Intrigued, he watched the drop of water race down her throat, where it disappeared under her dress to travel between her breasts. He groaned, his groin tightening with need that she had already built in him and was now simply torturing him.

Harley grinned and took the ice cube, following the heat of the wax with the chill of the ice.

Jack groaned, his fingers on her hips squeezed. “Harley…”

She giggled softly and put the ice back into the glass before she drank the last of the whiskey in the glass and turned to set it on the table. She turned back to him, laid her hands on his chest and used her nails to scrape the little drops of wax off his chest.

Jack groaned again. He arched into the slight pain of her nails, inhaled sharply when she clawed over his nipples.

She reached up and untied her dress, letting the halter fall.

Jack caught his bottom lip with his teeth and reached up for her breasts. He cupped her breasts, squeezing softly. His touch made Harley moan and arch her back into his touch. She shifted her position lifting up, reached under her skirt to hold him while she lowered herself down. Together they both groaned when their bodies came together. Jack reached up and cupped the side of her neck. He pulled her down for a kiss while Harley rolled her hips, grinding down on him as she reached behind Jack and grabbed the cushions of the loveseat.

Jack put one hand on her hips, sliding his other hand around, he grabbed the back of her neck. He held her down to him so he could kiss her hard against her lips while she bounced up and down. Harley started to move faster, Jack groaned. He released her throat and reached down with both hands to grab her waist, both of them moaned together as she bounced on his erection. He watched her breasts jiggle, his fingers tightened his hold on her as he thrust up to meet her, a happy grin on his face as he gazed up at her. He loved to watch the way her face change, the way her pleasure rolled over her features, or when he looked in her eyes, the way the blue of her eyes darkened with passion. Harley whimpered as Jack’s thrusts penetrated deeply into her. She held the back of the loveseat cushions tight enough that she was surprised she hadn’t ripped the fabric. He felt so good, stretching her, filling her, she simply couldn’t get enough. She rolled her body like a cat, nearly purring too as she ducked down to grab his mouth with her own, her tongue playing with his before she leaned back again for air.

Jack reached under her dress, quickly finding her clitoris with one hand while he held onto her with the other, his thumb rubbed over her in a circle, made Harley gasp. She threw her head back as she continued to bounce, squeezing the back of the couch cushions until she felt the warm rush of her orgasm roll up her body.

Harley cried out, her back arched, her entire body going tight, tension building, then she was flooded with pleasure as she peaked and burst. Harley let out a long drawn out cry of Jack’s name while she continued to ride her climax, her body moved quicker, her hips rolled with her pleasure.

Jack cried out, his head fell back against the loveseat as he felt the warm, wetness envelop him when his wife came. The sensation washed over him and he followed suit, climaxing with a cry. He arched his body back against the love seat, using his entire body to thrust up into his wife, lifting them both off the sofa for a split second before crashing back down to earth together, flooding her with himself.

Harley continued to ride him, her own pleasure rising and ebbing as she caused her husband to jerk and hiss, his whole body almost too sensitive to her movements.
Jack finally needed her to stop; he wrapped his arms tight around her and pulled her close, burying his face against her shoulder.

Harley released the cushions to wrap her arms around Jack’s neck holding him close. They were both quiet except for their attempts to catch their breath together.

Jack sighed his whole body going limp as he relaxed, though he kept his arms around Harley.

“I don’t know if I could do any of this without you Harls.” Jack whispered, his eyes closed. He laughed lightly. “And I don’t mean the sex...I mean all of this, the gang, killing Maroni, Falcone, the Owls...I couldn’t do any of it without you.”

Harley smiled, kissing his ear with a whispered. “You’ll never have to puddin. I’ll always be here.”

Jack’s grip tightened. “Swear?”

For a moment he sounded like a little boy, lost and alone. Harley sat back and cupped her husband’s face in her hands. “I will never go anywhere without you Jack. I go where you go, always.”

Jack smiled and tugged her down kissing her softly.

*

Dick Grayson was bored. Bored was putting it mildly he thought; he was about to lose his mind. He and Bruce were actually getting along better, which was great! He liked Bruce Wayne more than he imagined he would, but Bruce would still disappear for long periods of time, especially at night and without a word. Alfred always had some excuse and at first Dick bought them, but something just didn’t feel right. Plus, there was only so much Netflix and video games that Dick could stand. He was accustomed to working out a lot, practicing the act with his parents. Bruce had given him full use of the gym and the pool...also great, but after a while it was lonely. No matter how loud he blared the music with working out or swimming, he was still mostly alone.

Alfred tried. He really did and the old man was great. He had taught Dick how to play chess, gin rummy and even poker.

So Dick was doing tonight what he thought any bored teenager would do in a huge manor house...he was snooping.

Dick sighed as he wandered along the portrait hall. He would stop and gaze at pictures of the Wayne family and count how many generations there were, which were a lot.

Dick couldn’t trace his own family back before his great-great grandparents. Bruce Wayne could trace his family all the way back to the beginnings of the country!

Dick stopped at the family picture of Bruce and his brother, taken when the two men were in their late teens. Dick frowned, studying Jack. Unlike Bruce, Jack was much slimmer with light brown hair compared to Bruce’s black. His features were sharper too. Bruce was very square, heavy looking, while Jack Wayne was all sharp angles. Dick tilted his head sideways. At first he had thought that Jack Wayne was dead because Bruce refused to talk about his younger brother, but Dick had learned from Alfred that the brothers had a falling out and that Jack Wayne was still alive, somewhere in Gotham.

Dick was studying a few other pictures of the brothers when he heard footsteps. He frowned. Dick was sure that Alfred had gone to bed. He moved swiftly and silently as he made his way out of the hall, following the sound of footsteps. He didn’t have far to go, only to the hall that ran alongside the library. He had just stepped into the hall when he saw Alfred disappear...behind a grandfather clock.

Dick raced silently down the hall barely making it past the clock as it slid close with a light click behind him. Dick had been moving so fast that he didn't have time to stop himself or adjust his speed before he was falling head over heels down a flight of stairs. The young man tucked and wrapped his hands around his head, years of being trained how to fall by his father came instinctively to him so that when he hit the bottom of the stairs he only had a few bumps and bruises.

Dick slowly sat up and looked around his eyes going round with astonishment as he saw that not only were there more stairs leading deeper, but from where he was he could see the beginnings of a high tech cave and Alfred, standing halfway down another set of stairs.

Alfred frowned when he saw Dick.

“Oh dear,” the old butler muttered.

*

The following afternoon Jack drove Harley to the Speed Queen Roller Rink located in Gotham’s Upper East Side. The roller rink was large and the outside of the rink had a stadium fee. There was a huge sign that held the name with a late 1970’s feel to it that read “Speed Queen” over the doors in bright purples and yellows. It was the Gotham City Sirens’ third game of the season today against the Metro City Dazzlers. Harley had call Pamela/Ivy that morning and Ivy had been ecstatic to hear from her. She had proceeded to tell Harley how they had lost one of their girls in their last game when she had fallen and broken her elbow; another was gone because she was pregnant; and one more had left to get married. Ivy had been desperate and pleased to hear from Harley asking her to join their game that day. She didn’t care where Harley had been, only happy that she was here now when they needed her!

Jack, driving a dark purple, Ford Bullitt that Frost and Agatha had dropped off for them (they were going out to lunch but would be coming to the game as soon as they were done), pulled into a parking space in front of the rink. Harley frowned and nervously looked out the front windshield.

“I don’t know about this puddin.” Harley worried at her bottom lip.

Jack laid a hand on her back and rubbed between her shoulder blades slowly. “It’s like riding a bike Harls, you’ll be fine. Besides, you’ve killed people, this will be easy.” Harley frowned slightly. She wasn’t dressed up, wearing a pair of leggings and an oversized purple t-shirt that hung off her shoulder, and a pair of white canvas tennis shoes. She had a duffle bag with some shower supplies, a pair of white skates hung her around her neck (skates they had purchased on the way to the rink.) Ivy had said that she would have a uniform waiting for Harley when she arrived. Where Harley looked completely casual, Jack was dressed in his usual three-piece suit, this time a burgundy and white pinstripe suit, with matching vest, white shirt and no tie. Instead he had the top four buttons of his dress shirt open and wore the gold chain around his neck from his aunt.

“Harley, you are going to be fine.” Jack smiled, leaning over to kiss her cheek.

Harley turned and kissed him, reaching across to cup the side of his face. They took a few moment to kiss, a soft, yet intensely passionate kiss before Harley pulled away with a sigh.

“Oh, okay, let’s go.”

*

The inside of the rink, which had stadium seating, was crowded with cheering fans nearly drowning out the sounds of the Scorpions “Rock Me like a Hurricane” that was playing in the background. There were people dressed in the Gotham City Siren colors of red and black in the stands, some with painted faces, some with clown wigs of the team colors, others holding signs, pom poms, et cetera; while several others were dressed in the white and diamond of the Metropolis Dazzlers. The game hadn’t started yet, but it was clear by the excitement in the air it was nearly time.

Jack and Harley were making their way to the locker rooms when Harley saw Ivy. Ivy’s red hair was pulled back in a braid at the nape of her neck and she was wearing a red and black crop top, short shorts, knee high red and black socks along with elbow and knees pads, and her skates were black with lime green stripes. She was talking to another young woman in the same colors, though her outfit was slightly different.

Ivy turned just as Harley and Jack stepped up.

Ivy gasped. “Oh thank God!” She threw her arms around Harley and hugged her tight. “If you didn’t show up, we were going to have to step out of the game!! I got the other two slots filled, but you were my Hail Mary! I’m so glad you could make it!”

Harley hugged her back. “Me too! Glad I could help. Sorry about…”

Ivy held her hand up. “It’s okay. Shit happens, life happens. Don’t worry about it, you’re here now. Okay, now kiss your boyfriend because you’re mine for the next hour.”

Harley laughed turning and grabbing Jack by the lapels of his jacket and hauling him forward. Jack laughed, but Harley smothered the chuckles with her lips. Jack made a little happy moan, wrapping his arms around her until Ivy laughed.

“Okay, okay, come on Harley. I got your uniform in the locker room.” Ivy grabbed Harley and tugged her gently off of Jack. She gave her husband a little finger wave and Jack waved back yelling. “Kick their asses Baby!”

Jack grinned and went to find himself a seat for the game.

*

Ivy pulled out a uniform from a large duffel bag she had in the locker room and handed it to Harley.

“It might be a little tight, but the more breasts and ass you show the happier the audience is.” Ivy smiled. “And here is your helmet.”

The outfit was in the red and black of the Gotham City Sirens, a pair of knee high, black and red striped socks, along with a pair of fishnet stockings, a pair of shorts so short they might as well be panties, and the crop top would fit snugly showing off her breasts. The helmet was black and red with a massive amount of stickers over it.

Ivy motioned at the helmet with her chin. “Used to be Daisy’s, but it should fit you fine.”

Harley chuckled holding up the shorts. “Jack is going to love this.”

Ivy smiled. “Your boyfriend?”

“My husband.” Harley giggled and started to undress.

Ivy shook her head. “Lucky. I haven’t had time for relationships at all, not with work...this is my only outlet right now.”

Harley pulled her tennis shoes off and then her leggings. “Work?”

“Yeah, I just recently got this job at Wayne Botanical. I have this new formula that I’m working on to help not just grow more food, but to produce stronger plants. I’ve been working too on some conservation plans to help save more plant-life, prevent deforestation...Anyway...I just got this grant from Wayne Enterprises, but the other scientist I’m working with, this guy Dr. Marc Legrand...total asshole...sorry.” Ivy shook her head. “I didn’t mean to bore you…”

Harley pulled her top over her head. “You’re not boring me. I’m sorry, work sucks.”

“The work itself, no--him, yes.” Ivy laughed.

Harley yanked her skates on. “Well you know, if you ever want to try something new, let me know. I might know of a job…” Harley started to say something else as she was putting on her skates when they both heard the announcer over the loudspeaker call out.

“And now ladies and gentlemen! It’s time to meet your teams!”

Ivy gasped. “Oh hurry!”

Harley nodded quickly lacing up her skates. “Almost done!”

*

Jack was grinning from ear to ear when he saw his wife skate out into the rink with the other women. He wasn’t listening to the announcer, rather only focusing his attention on his wife. He vaguely heard some noise of people moving to his right when he heard his name called.

“Hey Jackie.”

He turned to see his aunt and Frost, but he was surprised to see Jason, Roxy and Bane.

Jack chuckled. “Where did you all come from?”

Agatha grinned. “Ran into the three of them when we were at lunch. They wanted to come watch Harley play when I told them about the game. Hope you don’t mind sweetie.”

Jack grinned. “Not at all.”

Bane leaned over. “I bought this at the entrance.”

The big man was holding up a giant red and black foam finger that read Gotham City Sirens on it.

Jack laughed. “Damn, I should have gotten one too!”

The announcer loudly called over the speaker system. “And now for your local team…”

The women, fourteen of them, skated onto the floor and lined up facing the Gotham side of the crowd. Jack grinned when he saw Harley, taking in the skimpy outfit, her long hair in braided twin tails that hung below her helmet as she skated out with the other women. She looked so damn adorable it took every ounce of his self control not to jog out there and kiss her.

Agatha pointed excitedly. “There she is!!”
Their little group cheered with the rest of the crowd as the announcer basically yelled their names. When he came to Harley the man called out.

“And number 52! In her first game of the season HARLEY BRINGS HELL QUINN!”

Jack jumped to his feet and threw his arms in the air cheering and whooping loudly. The parts of the gang that were there did the same.

Harley looked up at the surge of yelling to see her husband jumping up and down and waving at her. Harley laughed and waved back, laughing harder when she saw Agatha and Frost but then to see Bane with the foam finger she was nearly in tears as the big, bald man waved the finger around while jumping in place.

The girls, after all their names had been announced, jumped and cheered back at the crowd. Harley blew a kiss to her husband before the girls gathered in a tight formation to go around the rink once.

*

The game was intense.

Harley surprised herself by being good—not perfect, she was knocked down more than once, got an elbow to the lip, but she made some good scores. She had found herself falling into an easy camaraderie with the other women of the team, a few of them she remembered from her try-outs, all of them happy and eager to have her there to play that day.

Jack was nearly hoarse with cheering and yelling. He hadn’t enjoyed himself this much in a long time. Watching his wife on the rink was exciting, fun, and arousing. It was nearing the end of the game, Harley was moving back and forth playing one of the three blockers. Ivy was next to her along with a woman name Mary. They were moving back and forth trying to block three Dazzlers. There was a hard knock from one of the Dazzler’s that sent Mary flying off to the side and into the side of the rink.

Ivy hissed. “You bitches never do play fair!”

One of the Dazzlers grinned. “Oh whatssa matter Ivy, gettin’ soft?”

Ivy smiled. “You wish. Besides you guys know you aren’t going to win, we’re ahead by three points, next round Harley here is playing jammer and she’s already showed your weak team up twice. So no Emma, not getting soft at all.” There was a sound of a whistle, the next jam was up. Emma gave Ivy the finger as she skated off.

Ivy muttered. “I hate her--always has to have such a mouth.”

She shook her head glancing at Harley. “You ready? We got four minutes left, we keep our heads we can win this.”

Harley stretched her arms over her head with a grin. “Oh, I’m ready.”

“This is for the win.” Ivy and Harley grinned, and gave each other a quick pound on the shoulders. The other girls of the team circled around them, everyone giving each other a quick smack on the shoulder as the girls took up their positions.

Harley got into position and grinned at her Dazzler counterpart who was next to her.

“Good Luck,” Harley said with a grin.
The other woman, a thin brunette stuck her tongue out at her.

Harley gave a little “humpf.” “Fine, be that way.”

The buzzer sounded for the round to start and Harley, without another look at her opponent, took off skating as fast as she could.

The positions were tight for about a minute, the blockers giving Harley a hard time, but she swooped and rolled through without being stopped, missing the opposing team’s pivot by barely an inch until she was free. The crowd was cheering as Harley started to skate faster.

One of the Dazzlers hit a Siren hard enough that she knocked the woman off her skates and into Harley’s path, Harley missing her just barely as she twisted, skated backwards for a second or two before she twisted herself back around.

The Dazzlers decided to gang up on Harley when it was clear she was going to be scoring, at least four of them skating to block her in. Ivy signaled at the other girls and the Sirens swooped in. What had started out as a clean win for the Sirens quickly was turning into a brawl as someone on the Dazzlers used an elbow to hit a Siren in the face. A Siren tripped a Dazzler and another Dazzler spun around and slugged a Siren in the stomach.

While all the craziness was going on behind Harley, she pulled away from the others, going for the win when one of the Dazzlers, their leader, Alison, was skating right alongside Harley. The young blonde woman narrowed her eyes at Harley as she came up alongside her.

Harley grinned and winked at Alison before skating in close and elbowed her in the breast.

Alison yelped, falling back and screaming. “You bitch!!!”

Harley laughed turning around and skating backwards while giving Alison the finger before she turned back around, putting some speed into her skating. Alison snarled and hurried to catch up until she was almost alongside Harley. She grabbed Harley by the back of her shorts and yanked. The maneuver almost pulled Harley off her feet, but she kept her skates under her.

Alison zipped up beside her, but Harley was ready for her. She swing her whole body to the right, her shoulder smashing into Alison’s shoulder and hit the other woman with enough power that she came up off her skates completely to crash into the guard rail.

The crowd went wild.

Jack was on his feet with a yell. “YES!! THAT’S MY WIFE!!”

The announcer yelled into the microphone. “That’s the game folks!! Gotham City Sirens 143-141 against the Metro City Dazzlers!”

*

Harley yelped in surprise when her new teammates rushed her, wrapping sweaty arms around each other as the women screamed and cheered. Harley grinned from ear to ear.

An hour later she was finished showering. She was dressing when Ivy walked up to her.

“I can’t thank you enough for coming in today. Ah...think you’ll be around for our next game, it’s the following weekend…”
Harley pulled her shirt over her head. “I would love to.”

Ivy sighed in relief. “I’m so glad to hear you say that.” She gave Harley a quick hug. “The girls and I are going out dancing, you and your husband want to come?”

Harley frowned. “Can’t,” she said. “We already have plans.”

Ivy waved. “No problem. Maybe next time.” She gave Harley a hug. “That was some great skating. See you this weekend.”

Harley waved as Ivy left.

* *

Harley was just leaving the locker room when a young man rushed up to her, stepping so close that he was almost in her face. Harley yelped and jumped back a step as the young man (who had clearly been waiting right outside the locker rooms) approached. He was about the same height as Jack, but with a bigger build, bulging eyes, a receding hairline and a thin lipped mouth. He grabbed her hand and vigorously shook her entire arm with excitement.

“Oh my God!!! Miss Quinn, can I just say you were amazing out there!” The young man grinned squeezing her hand.

Harley smiled back, letting him shake her hand for a few seconds before she tugged her hand back and quickly put it behind her back. “Uh...thank you.”

He grinned. The man reminded Harley of some old time actor...like if Peter Lorre had a baby with Rami Malek, there was the potential to be a good looking guy, but something about his demeanor was ruining it. The man grinned at her, and his smile, like the rest of the face, could have been nice, but there was something...wrong about it.

“My name is Wayne Wilkins and I have been following the Gotham City Sirens from the beginning and I have to say you are the best new player they have ever had! I mean wowsers!!” Wayne threw his hands up with a wide smile. “You were amazing! I thought Ivy was hot, but you...wow you were the hottest girl out there from either team!”

Harley smiled starting to ease around him. “Thank you. I really appreciate that.”

Wayne grinned. “You can count on me to be your biggest fan Miss Quinn! I come to every game, but now I will be here just to cheer for you!”

Harley smiled nervously. “Wow...eh...thanks.”

Wayne grinned as Harley walked around him. “You are even prettier up close Miss Quinn...like wow pretty.”

Harley smiled and waved. “Thanks Wayne, ah, I gotta go! Bye!”

Wayne waved watching her leave. “I’m going to be your biggest fan,” he murmured to himself.

Harley immediately forgot all about Wayne when she saw Jack and the others waiting for her near where they had been seated. She rushed over to her husband and threw herself into Jack’s waiting arms. Jack lifted her off her feet and swung her around.

“You were amazing!! And hot! Let’s not forget hot!” Jack laughed placing her back on her feet only to dip her back and kiss her.

Harley giggled around his kiss as Jack lifted her back up and hugged her close.

Bane chuckled. “Man I can’t believe I didn’t know about roller derby.” He shook his head. “Hot women on skates. Can’t believe I’ve been missing this.”

Roxy clapped. “That was so much fun to watch! When’s the next game?”

“Oh, this weekend,” Harley said, looking at everyone.

Agatha grinned. “That was great stuff Harley. You looked great out there. I might have to try that myself.”

Harley, her arm around Jack and leaning against him, smiled. “You should come try out Agatha!”

Frost leaned down and kissed Agatha’s ear. “You would look great in those shorts. Give the other women something to think about.”

Agatha laughed. “Hmm...I’ll have to think about it.”

That evening Jack was smoking a cigarette, lying across their bed already dressed. He was wearing a three piece beige and white plaid suit with notched lapels, a white dress shirt and a tie the almost exact shade of blue turquoise to match his eyes. He had on a pair of dark brown, pointed toe oxfords, with a pair of bright blue socks, which were showing since his pant legs were lifted up a little, his ankles crossed as he watched Harley putting on the finishing touches to her makeup.

She was sitting in front of the mirror finishing her mascara before she applied her finishing spray, wearing only her red lace panties, and nothing else. The light of the room made her skin glow while his blue eyes caressed her skin, skimming over the curve of her back, the flair of her hips. Jack grinned blowing smoke rings while she leaned toward the mirror after she picked up her lipstick. He pressed his own red painted lips together, watching the way she gently dragged the tube over her lips. He grinned, thinking about those red lips wrapped around his erection.

The dress she was wearing tonight was a sleeveless, little black dress with a deep “V” neckline and though the hemline was just above her knees, the dress had a slit up the side that reached almost to her hip. She was going to be wearing a pair of strappy high heel stiletto sandals and the necklace that Agatha had given her.

Jack watched her intently as he blew smoke slowly from his nostrils, and thought about his wife wearing nothing but the heels and the necklace when his phone rang. He frowned looking behind him where the phone lay on the bedside table. He picked it up frowning deeper. The number was to Fish Mooney’s place.

Jack glanced at Harley who had stood up and was slipping her dress over her head. He watched the silky fabric fall into place over her body. The dress seemed to hug her curves, settling over her body like a second skin. The fact that she was wearing nothing but a pair of red, lace panties underneath had his blood boiling with want.

“Jack,” he answered.

“Jack, this is Fish. I have a problem. Maroni is here and he is causing all kinds of trouble. I need your help.” Fish sounded both parts angry and scared.
Jack sat up. “We’re on our way.”

“Thank you.” Fish quickly hung up.

Jack snarled. “Apparently Maroni is already at Fish’s place and he is causing enough trouble she called.”

Harley grabbed her shoes. “Let’s go puddin.”

Jack grinned. “Get your bracelet, the one I got you, and your knife. I have a feeling tonight is about to get a little more fun than we planned.”

Harley giggled.
A handful of the Red Hood gang, consisting of Bane, dressed in a blue suit with a dark blue tie; Frost wearing a black suit and red tie; Agatha wearing a black mini skirt, fishnet stockings, black stilettos with a killer heel and a white blouse open down to her breastbone; Zsasz wearing his trademark black on black suit; Jason wore a pair of tight jeans and a red dress shirt open over a black t-shirt; and Roxy, who was wearing a pair of burgundy slim cut slacks and a black t-shirt and biker boots, all walked behind Jack and Harley, fanning out behind the couple as they entered the night club.

Jack gazed around, watching as the crowd reacted to their entrance. He was both pleased and jealous by the way people stared at Harley in the little black dress she was wearing, paired with the smile on her face, the sparkle in her blue eyes. She was stunning. He knew exactly how beautiful she was...just gazing at her tonight had made Jack’s groin tighten with need. He wanted her--he always wanted her. Jack smiled as he walked beside her, his arm loosely around her waist. Jack caressed her hip with his fingertips as they walked, moving with purpose toward the center of the club. Their group was drawing a lot of attention; Bane was a huge man, and Agatha could draw attention all on her own, but Jack could see that many of the eyes were drawn to the very hot blonde at his side.

Harley, on the other hand, saw everyone looking at her husband. Jack stood out, not just because of his immaculate three-piece suit, but also because the man was simply, deliciously handsome. Jack had an air about him that was palpable, a magnetism that drew nearly everyone toward him. She had been drawn to him from the moment she laid eyes on him in Wayne Manor. She had noticed the way people looked at him every time they were out--men, women, it didn’t matter--everyone was pulled toward Jack. Jack was beautiful, charismatic...Harley grinned. And he was deadly. They could look all they wanted, she thought, Jack was hers, her husband, her lover, and most importantly, her partner, the only person in the world who understood her...and besides, anyone who tried to get too close, like Ben...she would deal with appropriately.

Under his jacket Jack was armed with his bowie knife and two pistols. Jack carried two automatic converted Glock 17’s, a couple of brand new toys. Frost had brought the weapons with him when he and Agatha arrived at the amusement park along with everyone else who was participating tonight. The guns were thank you gifts from Angora and Gus, to illustrate that not only that Angora was a top-notch gun dealer, but the gun’s fancy outward casing had been designed and craved by Gus. The guns, unlike Jack’s other weapons, were black and gold plated, each with an intricate filigree design that covered both weapons which made them each deadly works of art. Jack had been delighted. Like Jack, Harley was also armed. On her right thigh, Harley carried the knife Jack had recently purchased for her from Jason’s friend Anderson, but on her left thigh was another gun from Angora and Gus, a gold and ivory Glock 17, engraved with little detailed leaves and vines. The two newest editions to the gang had made her a set too, a set that complimented Jack’s weapons, but Harley was only carrying one tonight, since trying to conceal a second gun would have been awkward with what she was wearing.

The rest of the gang were armed with their own guns and knives hidden under their clothing. Jack expected a bloodbath and had everyone prepare accordingly. He grinned to himself thinking that a lot of people were going to end up dead, but as long as one of them wasn’t Maroni, he was fine with that. Jack had some things to talk to Maroni about. A slow and painful conversation.

The night club was busy, crowded, and the sounds of Madison Mars’ “Back the Funk” played loudly throughout Fish’s establishment as their group walked into the club. Muted red, blue and purple lighting cascaded over the scene. A few people glanced toward them, but no one seemed to care. Jack frowned. It was obvious that something was definitely off about the crowd here. As he looked around, he realized that he didn’t see as many people as he thought should be here at this time. There were a lot of people here, certainly, but not like there should be and there was something about the way the people were dressed...he couldn’t quite put his finger on what it was that was bothering him…

Oh, something was definitely up, Jack thought with a grin.

Harley moved to the music beside Jack with a smile, her hip occasionally bumped against his as they made their way into the interior of the club. Jack smirked and squeezed her hip. It was too bad they were here to work; he would love to have Harley on the dance floor again. Dancing with her was one of his great joys, Jack mused to himself. He enjoyed feeling her body move against his, his hands roaming down her back, the music moving the two of them...he sighed. Maybe later he thought.

As their group walked toward the bar, Jack caught sight of Kermit. Her hair was styled in her bright green faux mohawk and she was dressed in a lime green and black vinyl sleeveless mini dress. She was dancing to the music as she worked, but when she caught sight of Jack and his gang, she waved. Even with the colorful lights and relative darkness of the club, Jack caught something in her expression that said everything wasn’t well. She made a grimace and pointed with her thumb. Jack and Harley followed with their eyes to see Fish at her usual table, but she wasn’t seated and drinking. The club owner was standing, her arms being held behind her back by two of Maroni’s thugs. There were several other men all around the table, a couple sitting by Maroni, but most were standing, their hands folded in front of them. Jack counted nine. It was a good bet that they were all armed.

Jack glanced around at the club again. He saw people eating, dancing, and the music was loud. Jack frowned as he realized that a party was being held...but no one was reacting to the fact that Fish was being held against her will. He could see that a few people were drunk, there was a couple on the dance floor who seemed to be more pawing at each other than dancing. There was a group of people laughing...someone had a cake...Jack’s eyes narrowed. These people were far too accepting with what was going on with Fish, as if they didn’t care--or they were used to the behavior and events? He frowned.

Maroni sat comfortably at Fish’s table smoking a cigar, with a bottle of whiskey nearby--which was nearly gone--and a half-filled glass on the table in front of him. Maroni was laughing, a little too much. It was clear that Fish was yelling at Maroni who leaned back in his chair, chuckling with that contented smile of someone who really didn’t care what was being said. The man simply blew out a line of smoke at Fish, followed by a laugh, which was shared by all his men.

As Jack and his gang walked closer, a young woman rushed over behind Maroni and wrapped one arm around his neck. She said something that made Maroni laugh as he pulled her close and kissed her, a sloppy, passionate kiss. The woman laughed and stood up, rubbed his head before she took off to the other side of the room where the party seemed to be taking place.

Jack spoke just loud enough that his people around him could hear.

“I don’t care about any of the guests here. They’re all dead--kill every last one of them, but Maroni? I want him alive. Any of them try to stop us from taking Maroni, get in your way, or look at you funny, kill them.”

Jack heard a murmur behind him before Frost answered. “You got it Boss.”

Jack put on a smile and walked over to Maroni’s table as if he didn't have a care in the world, though his arm around Harley’s waist tightened and his fingers pressed into her skin through the fabric of her dress. Harley smiled too, putting her arm around Jack, presenting their united front to the enemy.

Maroni looked up as they approached the table. He reached for his glass and grinned at them.

“Well lookie, lookie here, it’s Jack Wayne, the supposed head of the Red Hood gang, the new man in town! How ya doing Jack?” Maroni grinned and sipped his whiskey. “You come to join the party? That’s pretty ballsy to walk into a party you ain’t invited to. But you know what? I’m feeling generous, it’s my cousin Stefano’s birthday!! He is a giovanotto now! You are all invited.” Maroni threw his arms out with a laugh.

Jack barely nodded. It was clear from the man’s speech and overly jolly attitude he was tipsy, and probably already well on his way to being drunk. “Maroni.” Jack turned to glance at Fish who was still being held by two of Maroni’s men before glancing back at Maroni. “Fish, you said there was a problem when you called?” Jack didn’t look at her when he spoke, his eyes on Maroni, two predators eyeing one another, assessing.

“This fuck face decided to take my delivery of whiskey and tequila. He decided to take all my deliveries today and hold them hostage until I pay him and now he has taken over my club for his stupid cousin Stefano’s birthday!!! He isn’t paying me a cent. I’m losing all kinds of money tonight!! He and his men are keeping out all my customers for his private little party! He is trying to put me out of business!” Fish snarled and yanked against the two men holding her.

Maroni laughed. “Oh, come on Fish. Don’t be that way babe! If you would just sit down and have a drink with me…we can be friends can’t we babe?”

Fish snarled. “Don’t call me babe, you fat prick!”

Maroni’s left eye twitched, but he didn’t respond to her except to smile.

Jack motioned with his fingers. Jason and Roxy hurried off and came back with two chairs. Jack held a chair out for Harley before taking his. He watched his wife sit and cross her shapely legs; the black dress rode up on her right leg, revealing the knife held there by the garter, black against her creamy, pale skin. Jack also noted that Harley’s legs did not go unnoticed by Maroni or his men. Jack thought about how fun it would have been to fly across the table and slash Maroni’s throat, but his thought was interrupted as Kermit seemed to materialize out of the crowd beside him. She glanced worriedly toward Fish then back to Jack.

“What can I get you guys to drink?”

Jack smiled. “Do you know how to make a Flirty Lady cocktail?”

Kermit smiled. “You mean with the floating pearls of Chambord? Sure do.”

Jack glanced at his wife. “Does that sound good to you sweets?”

Harley chuckled. “I have no idea what a Flirty Lady is, but sure thing puddin.”

Jack nodded. “Two of those and whatever my gang would like.”

Kermit nodded and hurriedly went around to each member and took their drink orders.

Maroni smirked. “Allowing your people to drink, a little unprofessional there, but it is a party so I suppose why the fuck not? Though I would have pictured you having more of a “manly” drink, like gin or whiskey.”
Jack smiled. “Unlike you Maroni, my people are family, not hired goons whose loyalty is only measured in money. And it’s not up to you whether they drink or not, that’s up to me. As for my drink, a good drink is a good drink, there is nothing masculine or feminine about it. Now, why don’t you tell those two goons to let the lady go? Or are you too scared she might hurt you?”

Maroni frowned with a sideways glance over at Fish. There was a light twitch to his upper lip as he motioned at the two men who held her. They both released Fish, who turned so quickly that neither man had time to react before Fish had slapped both men, hard, across their faces.

One of the men snarled grabbing his cheek. “You fucking cunt!”

He started to raise his hand, but Maroni put a hand out, palm up and hissed right back. “Piero, enough. Let the lady sit.”

Piero glared at Maroni as if he were about to talk back to his boss, but at the last second the man thought better of it and took a step back with nothing but a heavy exhale through flared nostrils. Maroni motioned with his head at the other man. “Carl, go get the lady a drink. Whatcha want Fish honey?”

It was clear to Jack that Fish wanted to snap back at Maroni, to give the mobster a good hard slap too, but she kept her lips sealed.

Instead she muttered, glaring at Maroni. “Tell Kermit to make me a purple cow.”

Carl nodded and walked quickly off. Maroni smiled. “Well, now that we’re all here, let’s talk a little business, then maybe you would all like to join the fun? Have some cake, do a little dancing? I mean, if I had a woman like yours Jack, I would be on that dance or in bed with her all the time.” Maroni winked at Harley giving her a grin that made her skin crawl. Harley didn’t answer the mobster; she just curled her lip in disgust and reached over for her husband’s hand. Jack took her hand, caressing her fingers with the back of his thumb. He could feel that she was tensed, ready to strike, but she relaxed as he stroked her fingers.

A young woman dressed in a black vinyl dress with a spiked dog collar and a pair of black leather platform boots came over with a tray and handed out drinks. Everyone was quiet until the young woman stepped away. She set Fish’s drink down last, with Carl right behind her.

Fish smiled. “Thank you Cher.”

The young woman smiled. “No problem Fish.”

As the young woman was walking away, Piero smacked her hard enough on the ass that everyone heard it. The young woman yelped in surprise and nearly fell over. Fish snarled as she rose to her feet, but Maroni was laughing.

“Oh come on Fish, babe, just boys being boys--you know how it is.”

Jack could hear his aunt cursing under her breath behind him.

Jack took a sip of his drink, his movements slow and measured. The drink was white with pink pearls floating in it. He took a sip, deliberately slow before he spoke.

“I don’t see that we have much business to discuss Maroni. I’m here for two reasons: one, to stop you and your men from messing with Fish and her business. She is part of my family now. And, second; I’m here to find out everything you know about the making and selling of Giggles, then, I’m going to kill you and send your body back to Falcone as a message.”
Jack took another sip of his drink then sat it down carefully on the table between him and Maroni before he reached out and placed his hand on Harley’s knee. He looked up and smiled as he met Maroni’s eyes across the table.

When Jack had mentioned killing Maroni, all of Maroni’s men had shifted, tensed, hands going for weapons though no one drew; all the men looked to Maroni. Jack smiled as his eyes wandered around the table taking note of how many guns were involved before he turned his attention back to Maroni. Maroni didn’t react at first. Then the mobster’s eyes narrowed and he stared hard at Jack before he laughed. “You’re a funny guy. I like that.”

Jack smiled wider. “I’ve been told that.”

Maroni picked up his drink and took a sip. “Giggles, eh? You didn’t strike me as a man who takes drugs.”

Jack squeezed Harley’s knee delicately. “I’m not, but it has come to my attention that Falcone is making this drug off of something that is mine. I want it back and I want it stopped and I will stop it.”

Maroni took a deep drag on his cigar before he spoke, smoke slowly flowing from his nostrils. “Falcone is making a lot of money off that drug and when Falcone makes a lot of money, I make a lot of money. Now, if you are wanting to work for Falcone, we might be able to talk, but you gotta work for me first. I’ll decide whether to bump up your request. Think of me as middle management.”

The music in the club had changed to the more techno/bouncy beat of “Turn Me On” as Maroni smiled. He leaned back in his seat and took another drag on his cigar, blowing out a long stream of smoke. Jack and Harley could see some of the party guests move out onto the dance floor again and start to dance to the music. None of them were aware of the powder keg about to explode.

Jack smiled, took another sip of his drink before he set it down on the table again. Harley uncrossed her legs and crossed them again, her dress falling away to reveal the hint of her gun. Jack smiled at Maroni, but he was speaking to his people positioned behind him. “Remember boys and girls--I want Maroni alive.”

Harley moved swiftly. Without a word from Jack she was on her feet as she yanked her gun free. She aimed with both hands on it and fired, three times in quick succession. Her shots hit Piero; two in the chest, one in the throat, sent the man toppling backwards into the crowd of dancers.

Everyone began to move, shots being fired. The party became chaos in seconds.

Jack grinned as he stood and flipped the table at the same time that his wife was putting Piero down. One of the men on Jack’s left--a tall, thin man with slightly curling hair--lunged at Jack while trying to pull his gun at the same time. Jack grinned. He loved it when he was able to use his knife instead of a gun. So much more personal he thought. Jack twisted to face the man, grabbed his opponent’s hand as he reached for the gun at his waist. At the same time, Jack drew his blade free with his left hand. Jack’s grip slipped and the man yanked his gun free, nearly hitting Jack in the chin as he pulled his weapon, but Jack leaned out of the way, taking a graceful step backwards as the man brought his weapon out. Just as the mobster extended his arm to fire, Jack grabbed the man’s wrist with his right hand and tugged the gunman forward, throwing the man’s balance off just enough that he stumbled, leaning toward Jack.

Jack slammed his knife hand down on the bend in the man’s outstretched arm, but Maroni’s man yanked his arm nearly free and Jack’s blade only sliced a shallow cut into the man’s limb. The gunman yanked against Jack’s hold and freed his arm. He took a step backwards nearly falling backwards, but he righted himself and decided to rush Jack. Jack wasn’t able to move quickly enough to get himself out of the way before his opponent's shoulder blasted Jack in the diaphragm. The impact lifted him off his feet as the mobster raced forward, took two steps past Harley and slammed Jack into one of the privacy walls that surrounded some of the nearby booths. The two men crashed completely through the wall which caused the couple on the other side, who had been making out (and seemed unaware of the gunshots that had been fired) to scream.

Jack hit the floor first, just missing the table. The impact knocked the air from his lungs in a hoarse cough. The two men struggled, neither able to create enough space to shoot or stab the other, but Jack pulled free of the man’s hold, but the slick floor caused Jack’s opponent to slip. Jack stumbled to his feet, the floor slick with alcohol almost causing him to fall as well. Jack kept his balance, turning to face his opponent fully just as the man got to his feet.

*

Harley giggled when she shot Piero, watching the man’s body flop into the dancers; they scattered like ducks on a pond. She almost didn’t react in time to Carl trying to slip around to her back or the other four men who were trying to surround her, two of whom had raced from the party to join Maroni’s men. The group of mobsters converged on her.

Harley just smiled wider.

*

Although Agatha wasn’t armed with a gun, she did have a long, thin, deadly blade she liked to keep strapped to her thigh; generally, she preferred to rely on herself than any weapon. She had told Frost that at her age, her sight with a gun wasn’t as good as it used to be.

Frost has been a little upset with her for refusing a gun, which had been so adorable she thought. She really did love how sweet the man was, which was probably part of the reason they were still together. Usually by this amount of time in a relationship she had moved on to another fellow, but Frost was turning out to be far more open and fun than she had anticipated...which was probably half the reason she was still in Gotham, the other half being Jackie and Harley and her need to protect her nephew from the Owls’ clutches.

It all made her feel more alive than she had felt in years.

She set aside her thoughts as one of Maroni’s men decided that she would be an easy target. The man was big, giving Bane a run for his money in the size department, but when this man smiled he showed a mouth full of gold teeth.

He grinned, putting up his fists. “I’ll go easy on you lady, but I ain’t got a problem hitting a woman.”

Agatha grinned. “Well then, it's a good thing I don’t have a problem hitting back sugar.”

The man took a few swings that Agatha dodged easily before she leapt up and twisted, twisting her whole body to kick the man in the face, snapping his large head to the side. She had kicked him hard enough that she was satisfied to see blood and a gold tooth caught in the cascading purple and red lights of the club as it flew onto the dance floor.

She chuckled. “The bigger they are…”

*

Bane, who had taken a bullet across the arm, and another in the upper chest roared with rage more than pain. The wounds didn’t seem to stop him, but instead the wounds had turned the large man into a raging beast. He charged one of Maroni’s men, grabbed and lifted his attacker over his head and threw the man across the room with a loud roar. When he turned his attention to his other assailant, the man had the smarts to turn and run...though Bane charged after him.

Jason and Roxy were both engaged with two more of Maroni’s men. Jason had upended another table that he and Roxy were using as a shield in a mini shoot out with their two mobsters.

On the other end of the room, Cecco, the youngest mobster at the table, as well as Maroni’s nephew, stayed close to his uncle. Maroni hissed. “Get me the fuck out of here Cecco.”

As the fighting broke out in force, some of the people attending the party pulled weapons; the fight now involved everyone in the club. Cecco started to move Maroni toward the exit, but Fish had stood up and pulled her own gun from seemingly out of thin air. She held the weapon on Maroni. His nephew pointed his gun at her and Maroni pulled his own gun.

Maroni sneered. “Don’t be a fool Fish.”

“I’m not being a fool Sal honey. I’m picking a side.” Fish smiled.

“I will kill you,” Maroni snarled.

Fish smiled. “Your nephew could shoot me and you could shoot me...but I will definitely fucking kill you.”

Maroni paled.

*

Zsasz pulled a Beretta 92FS from the holster under his arm. He smiled as he proceeded to shoot into party crowd while singing softly to himself as his bullets tore through flesh.

"Gotta make a move to a town that's right for me

Town to keep me movin'

Keep me groovin' with some energy..."

He would hum a bit, shoot a couple in the kneecaps before shooting them in the head while he sang to himself.

"Won't you take me to Funkytown

Won't you take me to Funkytown..."

He moved his shoulders in time to the song playing in his head just before he was forced to duck behind a table, crab walk to the side and fire off a few more shots continuing to sing "Funkytown" to himself.

*

Jack rolled onto his hands and knees, his knife had gone flying when he and the other man had fallen through the flimsy wall. He could taste blood in his mouth and there was a nasty cut along his shoulder, his suit torn, probably from falling through the wall.

Jack snarled and hissed. “Fuck it!”

He got to his feet just as the other man did too. The two men quickly exchanged a set of blows, fists blocked by arms, the muffled sounds of impacts against clothing and flesh followed the quick succession of blows between the two men. Jack reached out and blocked one strike by grabbing the man’s wrist with his left hand, twisting inward slightly before he slammed his right fist against the man’s side with a quick one-two strike to the ribs.

The mobster grunted in pain. They could both hear screaming around them mixed with the sounds of music and gunfire. A few people ran out of their way, while others didn’t move at all, whether out of shock or perverse fascination, they stayed glued to their spots and watched the fight. The party was made of mostly twenty-somethings and while a few of them had pulled guns, it was clear to Jack that most of them didn’t know what they were doing with their weapons if the way most of them were holding them was any indication. A couple looked as if they might know how to shoot, but most of them were using the weapons as a shields to keep the fight away from them. Jack smirked. He knew it was only a matter of time before an itchy trigger finger or pure drunkenness had one or more of them shooting regardless of friend or foe.

Jack tried to yank the arm of his opponent over his shoulder and throw the man, but his opponent was surprisingly resistant, skilled. The mobster dropped his weight, sent them both to the floor, pulled his arm free from Jack’s grasp.

Jack grunted when he hit the floor, but scrambled quickly out of the way and rolled back to his feet. He grabbed the man—who was still trying to get to his feet. Jack straddled the man’s back, wrapped a hand around the back of his opponent’s neck, and with his left hand pulled his gun. The club lights caught the gold on the gun and made it glimmer prettily as Jack held the gun to the back of the man’s head and swiftly pulled the trigger twice.

Jack dropped the man and sprang to his feet as he ran a sleeve over his blood misted face. He narrowed his eyes, he could see Fish, Maroni and another man at a standoff, guns on each other. He quickly searched the club for Harley and spotted her on the dance floor.

“Harley!” Jack started to go to his wife when another group of men came at him, some members of the party, mixed with more of Maroni’s men which Jack hadn’t seen.

Jack cursed. “Well, isn’t this some bullshit?”

*

Harley stood still, smiling at the men surrounding her. She looked gorgeous, her hair framed her face, the sexy black dress, her gun in one hand, her blade in the other.

She giggled. “Oh, you guys want to play?”

One of the men, big nose, ruddy complexion smiled. “Look sweetheart, put the weapons down and I promise, we won’t hurt you.”

Harley smiled. “Oh, I’m sure you won’t.”

Harley spun, shooting the man who had spoken in the chest. She continued the spin, shooting another from under her arm, dropping to one knee to shoot another in the knee and when that man dropped to his good knee, she shot him in the face, cursing to herself.
“Shoot...why can’t I ever get a headshot?” she murmured then squeaked as several shots were fired from the crowd. She put on a burst of speed and slid across the dance floor as people scattered and some shot at her as she sailed by, knocking over a table as she did so and rolled behind it for protection at the same time she lost her hold on her knife, the small blade spinning off into the club somewhere.

Harley gasped. “No!”

She started to move to go after her blade, reaching out with her left hand, but several shots were fired at her. Harley yelped then hissed in pain looking down. She had a bloody burn from a bullet graze across her forearm. She winced and pressed her arm up against her torso.

*

Jason grabbed Roxy around the waist. He lifted her off her feet, surprised his friend; she cried out in surprise while at the same time shooting as Jason ran for the closest cover available to them, a booth. He was bleeding from a slash across his face and a few other nicks along his torso as he dropped at the last moment. The slick floor allowed him to slide under the booth table as several shots were fired at them. It seemed that now the mobster’s cousin and his friends were getting in on the fighting.

Roxy yelped and cursed. “I’m hit!”

Jason turned to see that Roxy was holding her leg out, a dark stain of blood ballooning in the front of her jeans where she had been shot in the thigh.

“Shit Roxy!” Jason reached out to touch her face, but she grabbed his hand.

“Just tied it off and keep shooting Jason.” Roxy smiled and Jason, on impulse grabbed her face in one hand and kissed her.

Roxy kissed him back with a smile.

*

Jack ended up on the dance floor as he tried to get to his wife, but Maroni’s people were trying to herd him away from her. Jack had pulled his other gun just as another man was foolish enough to come rushing up toward him. Jack surprised the man as he performed a fancy flip around his fingers with one pistol and re-holstered it and then in the next breath, his now free hand snapped out and grabbed the man by the back of his neck, hauled him close and shot him twice in the stomach with his other gun before letting the man drop to the floor, bleeding and twitching in shock.

Jack sneered. “Yahtzee.”

A woman with short hair and wearing a black suit with a red tie tried to get close. Her smaller size and quick movements had her up beside Jack in an instant, but Jack simply shot her in the head while he tried to move closer to his wife with a hissed:

“Happy Birthday.” Harley made a little yelp as several of the bullets being shot at her made it through the table, blasting holes and wood splinters through the table, missing her by inches. She scooted to the end of the table and threw herself to the floor. Harley leaned around the table and shot her weapon. She hit one man in the leg, the bullet ripping through his slacks in a spray of blood; then as that man fell but before he hit the floor, she shot him again. This time her bullet caught the man in the cheek ripping through the cheek and removing his ear.

She frowned before making a face. “Ew!”
Harley frowned as she ducked back, trying to listen for the other men, but the music was too loud to hear much; even determining the direction of the sharp crack of gunfire was distorted and muffled by the sounds of Sia and some idiots who were still screaming every time a weapon was fired. Harley made a face; all of the noise made it difficult for her to hear anything!

She caught sight of another man and shot, her bullet caught that one in the chest. He shot at her, missed, but the bullet hit the dance floor in front of her. Harley yelped as bits of the floor shattered; tiny pieces exploded in front of her and cut fine lines along her cheeks, arms and shoulders. Harley scrunched into a fetal position when the bullets hit the flooring, but it still hurt when she was showered with sharp debris from the floor.

She heard one of the men yell.

“KILL THE BLONDE!”

Harley scrambled to her feet just as another man (this one was very young) dressed in tight jeans and a loose silk shirt, his chest exposed, dressed more for a party than for a gun fight rushed toward her pulling out a weapon at the same time. He had his gun out, aimed at her, and raced up to her just as she got to her feet. Harley reacted by reaching out with her free hand. She took a step to the side and slammed her hand against his chest to stop him. He fired his gun, but Harley had shifted, moving out of the way and fired her own weapon into the man’s chest. Two quick shots dropped him to the floor.

Harley giggled. “Happy Birthday!”

She spun around. Her turn had her hair flaring out, catching the light as she shot another person, this time a tall, muscular woman; the bullet ripped through the side of the woman’s throat.

By now, most of the “civilians” had exited the nightclub leaving only a few people to fight. Harley could see a couple of dead members of the birthday party, bodies lying in pools of blood. She frowned slightly for some reason wondering how much it would cost to have the Hook family clean this place up. Eight, maybe ten (Harley couldn’t be sure, the lights were creating several shadows) moved onto the dancefloor. Harley bit her bottom lip, she maybe had six rounds left and that was if she had kept count correctly—and her blasted knife was gone.

Harley muttered to herself. “Shoot!”

*

Agatha gasped as a shot struck her in the hip. It wasn’t deep, more of a nick, but it hurt like a son-of-a-bitch and the blood ruined her dress. She had stumbled backward only to slam into someone. She looked up, ready to pummel whoever it was only to see Frost looking down at her. He grinned at her and put his arm around her waist.

“Mind if I help you out?” Frost asked with a hint of worry in his face.

Agatha chuckled. “Sure thing big guy.”

Frost grinned, but immediately had to take his attention off of Agatha to fire his gun.

*

Bane was using a table as both shield and weapon. He had struck several of the party-goers and two of Maroni’s men, but he was slowly being backed up against the bar. Kermit and Cher were hiding behind the bar, both young women crouched down along with two other bartenders, a young man named Lance who was wearing a tight body suit, and Cherry, a pink-haired waitress. The tiny group had, up to this point, stayed out of the fighting. Fish had always told them if a fight broke out, leave it to her. They were to keep their heads down and not get involved. But this was more than a simple spat between a couple of customers, a handsy guest or a drunk.

Kermit could see Bane from her position.

She frowned, then scrambled down the bar. Cher hissed loudly. “Kermit what’re you doing?”

“I’m getting Betty!” Kermit made it to the end of the bar and started to pull out bottles of liquor.

“What? Betty? But Fish will kill us if she knows about Betty, and besides it's just for show!” Cher hurried after her, crab walking her way to the other end of the bar where Kermit pulled out a box.

“Cher, shut up. This is an emergency! Besides, I’m not going to shoot it, he is.” Kermit pointed at Bane who was not at the far end of the bar.

Kermit yanked the box out, flipping the lid open and pulled out a Smith and Wesson 29 classic along with a handful of bullets. She quickly loaded the weapon and with a wink at Cher, hurried over to the other end of the bar where Bane had just picked up someone and thrown them.

Kermit stood up. “Hey big guy!”

Bane’s head whipped around, his eyes were just a little crazed Kermit noted, but she held her hands up, the weapon in one though not aimed at him.

“Hey, just wanna help, thought you might like this?” She held the gun out handle first.

Bane had just enough time to take in the girl and the gun before he grabbed the weapon with a grin and added. “You free this weekend?”

Kermit grinned back. “I might be.”

Harley stood up, her gun arm extended hoping that bravado bought her a few good shots before she was surrounded. The lights of the club were flashing in time to the new song that was playing, some sort of techno beat that Harley didn’t know. One of Maroni’s en came rushing at her from one side and another from the opposite side. She figure they had decided she was an easy target and not to waste ammo on her. One attacker was a dark haired woman, her thick black hair done up in a complicated set of braids; she had a square chin, masculine features. Harley wasn’t sure she could take the woman in a one on one fight. As the woman rushed her, Harley noted she was wearing a deep red dress shirt, silver dress slacks, probably one of the members here for the party Harley thought. The woman reached for Harley’s arm, wrapping a thick hand around her wrist, squeezing and attempting to yank Harley off her feet.

Harley, instead, yanked the woman toward her and snapped her gun hand up to shoot the bigger woman in the stomach. She heaved with the effort to shove the woman toward a man, bald with long, thick sideburns, who was attempting to grab Harley from the other side. The two people collided, both hitting the floor and sliding. Harley spun around, expending two more shots. She grimaced; she might have three left...not enough to take care of the people attempting to surround her.

She was going to use her last three bullets, then hope that these jerks wanted to fight hand-to-hand when she saw movement to her left. Harley turned and saw the lights dancing across her husband as he stalked across the dance floor. He was quickly shooting guests and whoever tried to get in his way as he hurried toward her. Several men rushed up to stop Jack. He shot one, but only hit the man in the shoulder. The man, big and with a pronounced belly, shrugged off the wound and tried to hit Jack in the face. Her husband hit the man in the opposite shoulder with his arm, knocked the man back a step or two allowing Jack to shoot him again. Two more men, both dressed for the party, rushed Jack. He shot one man in the foot, with a quick laugh. The man stumbled and Jack grabbed him by his shirt, put a bullet in his opponent’s head, spun the now dead body around and into his friend before he shot that man in the face, both bodies hitting the floor at once. Several more men oozed out of the darkness of the club trying to get to Jack, but he was moving and shooting with both guns taking several well aimed shots, dropping anyone too close to him until he was able to jog up to Harley.

Harley grinned. “Puddin!!”

Jack grinned. “Hey sweets, ready to finish this?”

Harley giggled. “You betcha!”

Jack stepped up close to her, the light danced across his blue eyes as Jack placed his arms over her shoulders, aiming his guns at the additional people stepping out to stop them, while Harley wrapped her left arm around his waist. She pulled him closer, her gun arm going around him and under his arm. She grinned biting her bottom lip. Jack smiled down at her.

For a heartbeat, time slowed down. Jack kissed her as Harley yanked him up against her. She felt the jerk of Jack’s arms on her shoulders as he fired his weapons. Harley knew she only had three bullets left, and she had seen at least five men behind Jack, maybe more, she couldn’t be sure, but she fired her weapon counting on them still being in the same location.

Jack had taken note of the other mobsters’ positions, and while he couldn’t be sure he hit them with his eyes closed as he kissed his wife, he was fairly confident in his aim as he leaned in and kissed his wife deeply, five bullets finding five targets, while Harley’s aim hit three.

Harley pulled away from Jack when she felt her gun click, empty in her hand.

“Jack, I’m out!”

Jack started to say something when they both heard Fish scream.

That was when a shot hit Jack in the shoulder. The bullet ripped through his suit jacket and shirt, burning a hole just under the skin and out again. The impact knocked him back and the slickness of the floor made him lose his balance. Jack fell backwards, dropped one of his guns and grabbed Harley by the front of her dress, yanked her down as he fell. As they fell, Jack leaned to the right and fired his weapon.

*

Maroni scowled at Fish. “You’re gonna die for this bitch.”

Fish smiled “You first.”

Cecco looked between his uncle and Fish, the young man was shaking slightly as he held his gun on Fish.

Maroni hissed. “Kill her.”
It was clear that Cecco had never killed anyone and his hesitated.

Fish smiled. “Cecco, come on sweetie, you don’t want to kill me. Who was it gave you free drinks before you were of age honey? Who talked to you about girls, eh?”

Cecco looked at Maroni who hissed. “I don’t care what she did for you Cecco, she ain’t fucking family. Now kill her!!”

Cecco aimed his weapon at her, his arm shaking. Maroni snarled. “Don’t make me tell your father that you’re a cazzo di vigliacco Cecco.”

Fish started to speak again. “Come on sweetie you know…”

But Cecco fired. His aim wasn’t good and the shot hit Fish, burning across her cheek, breaking bone, bursting the eyeball. Fish stared in shock with her one eye at the young man before she dropped onto the floor.

Maroni grinned, patting Cecco on the back. “Good boy, come on!”

Maroni started to move, just assuming that Cecco was following him. After a second or two he realized Cecco wasn’t with him. Maroni turned only to see Jack holding his nephew from behind, a chef’s blade at the younger man’s throat. Beside Jack stood Harley and behind them both were their gang, bloody, hurt, but relatively intact, along with the bartenders from the bar and few club employees. Kermit cried out and raced over to Fish, dropping down beside her crying.

“Fish? Fish?!?”

Jack frowned as he glanced at Fish then back at Maroni, but Kermit yelped. “She’s alive!”

Jack hissed at Frost. “Call our doctor friend and tell him to get down here.”

Frost nodded, drew out his phone. Jack turned his attention fully back to Maroni.

He laughed. “Did you know they kept knives at the bar?” He shrugged. “I didn’t realize that, which now seems silly to me. Kermit set me straight. They use knives like this one for cutting up lemons, grapefruit…at least that’s what Kermit told me. But I bet this knife would be great for cutting throats, don’t you think Maroni?”

Maroni narrowed his eyes. “You think I’m stupid enough to give myself over for the kid?”

Jack glanced at Harley. “What do you think baby?”

Harley shrugged. “I think he’s right puddin, he wouldn’t.”

Cecco started to shake. “Uncle Sal?”

Jack yanked the boy close and kissed his ear. “Shh…the big boys are talking.”

Jack returned his attention to Sal. “So, you are going to let me kill this kid…your nephew I’m guessing since he called you uncle. Wow…” Jack shook his head before he glanced over his shoulder at his aunt. “Gee Auntie, I’m not sure how I feel about that?”

Agatha was leaning into Frost who was holding her. “It’s a shame. I guess blood is only thicker than water when it comes to Sal…and not the other way around.”

Jack nodded. “I guess so.”
Jack sliced the knife deep into the young man’s throat. There was a spurt of blood that burst across Jack’s hands and down the young man’s suit. Jack had sliced deeply, stepping back and dropping Sal Maroni’s nephew onto the floor. The young man couldn’t make a sound. He grabbed at his neck, flopped onto his side with blood flowing fast and free from the wound, the color leaving his face swiftly. Jack smiled and stepped over the young man, who jerked a few times as his blood continued to flow, creating a puddle around him. Maroni whipped his weapon up, holding the barrel of the gun on Jack.

“Don’t take another step. I’m leaving and I’m going to come back and burn this motherfucking place to the ground!!!” Maroni snarled. “And I’m going to find every one of your motherfucking gang and I’m going to kill them. I’m going to kill every motherfucking one of them!!!” Maroni spit his words at Jack, spittle flying from his mouth. He had started to sweat, a small tremor in his hands as Jack, holding the bloody knife in one hand, slowly walked toward him.

“Oh Sal, Sal, Sal…” Jack said softly, almost too softly for anyone to hear. Then Jack was moving. He raced up to Maroni.

Maroni shot at Jack, but Jack weaved to the side so quickly that Harley didn’t have time to make a sound before her husband had actually dodged the bullet, grabbed Maroni’s gun hand, wrapping his free hand around Maroni’s, flipped the knife in his other hand and jammed the blade down, straight through Maroni’s wrist. Maroni screamed, dropped the gun, but Jack held Maroni’s hand so tightly that the gun stayed trapped between the two men’s hands.

Jack sneered at Maroni, his teeth bloody, his hair falling around his face, his blue eyes slightly crazed as he hissed.

“Now--you are going to tell me everything I want to know.”

*

Hours later Harley yawned as she made her way across the park. Her wounds were all bandaged and she was Showered as she walked carrying a duffel bag over her shoulder. She frowned. It was going to be a hot one today she thought as she glanced up at the bright summer sunlight and the slightly smog tinged blue sky. She was wearing a pair of large white frame sunglasses, wore her hair--still slightly damp--in pigtails, a pair of very short purple and white athletic shorts, a purple sports bra with a loose fitting purple tank top along with a pair of pink fuzzy slippers.

Harley sang to herself as she made her way across the park to the haunted house exhibit where her puddin and their guest currently were set up. She had tried to convince Jack to shower, get some sleep and eat something before he started to interrogate Maroni, but Jack had been furious and hadn’t wanted to wait. Harley had been lucky to get him bathed and bandaged up by the doctor before he was back at work, which was why she had a bag filled with bagels and cream cheese, and some scones and muffins that Alex and Alice had been kind enough to drop off for her. She had moved the coffee maker to the lab and had started the coffee before she had met Bane at the gate to get the food. Now she was on her way to Jack to make sure her husband ate.

*

The lab that Jack had set up was much like the one he had in Calliope house except that the walls had been painted to look like stone and the lighting was a strange purple that Jack had kept instead of switching the lights out for something brighter. As Harley made her way through the haunted house, she kept jumping and stifling squeaks of surprise. The attraction didn’t actually work; Jack had turned off all the jump scare devices, the fog machines, and the creepy music that played when they had first gotten the electricity back up, but he hadn’t changed anything else. There were still the fake tombstones, fake monsters, ghosts, skeletons, a piano that played by itself, plastic knives, cleavers-- everything a haunted house needed and Jack had left it all. Even his lab still had some of the fake lab equipment, large plastic tubes with weird green goo and floating fake heads. There was even a examination table with wires that had a mannequin hooked up like Frankenstein's monster.

Harley giggled as she made her way down the tracks where the cars would have driven the customers through the ride and made her way to Jack’s lab. She could hear the sound of music playing through the walls. She knew Jack had recently hooked up the attraction’s speakers so he could use his phone, play music and have it broadcast through the entire haunted house attraction, or just in his lab. From the sound of it, he was focusing his music in the lab and it was pretty loud at the moment.

She saw Frost and Bane were standing just outside the lab when Harley arrived.

“Morning boys--hungry? Alex and Alice dropped off all sorts of goodies!” Harley held up the duffel bag she was carrying.

Bane’s stomach immediately responded with a growl. Harley laughed as Bane blushed. “Sorry about that.”

Harley made a noise. “Ppffft, don’t worry about it. Okay, I have blueberry muffins, banana nut muffins...No one has nut allergies, right?”

Both men shook their heads in the negative. Harley smiled and continued. “I have cinnamon scones, orange scones and bear claws. They brought over plenty, so what’ll ya have?”

Bane grinned. “One of everything.”

Frost chuckled. “I’ll have an orange scone and a blueberry muffin.”

Harley pulled out the items for them then glanced at the coffee mugs they each had sitting at their feet. “You guys need refills since I'm here?”

Frost frowned. “I don’t…”

Harley gave him a stern look. “It’s fine Frost, I don’t mind.”

Frost exchanged a look with Bane then nodded. “Yeah, that would be nice.”

The men picked up their mugs and handed them to Harley. Harley took them, hooking them over her fingers.

“You guys hear anything new on Fish?” she asked, her voice laced with concern.

Frost nodded. “Yeah, Kermit texted not long ago that she is stable. Though the doc wasn’t able to save her eye.”

Harley frowned. “That’s too bad.”

Frost smiled. “I’m sure she’ll be fine. Fish seems like a fighter and she won’t give Maroni the satisfaction of killing her, even if he ain’t going to live appreciate it.”

“Speaking of our guest--how are things going?” Harley indicated Jack's lab with her head.

Bane, chewing on a large bit of muffin, muttered, “Oh, the bastard is tough. Boss even had us come in there and take a few swipes at him, he didn’t say a thing...or at least he didn’t say anything polite.”
Harley nodded. “Okay, well I’m going to go get Jack to eat and I’ll grab you guys your coffee.”

Both men at the same time responded with a thank you.

Harley stepped into the room, but stopped to lean against the doorway for a moment to watch her husband.

Jack was dressed a pair of black pinstripe slacks with a pair of black suspenders that she knew had little green diamond print and a pair of black wingtip dress shoes. She could see a hint of purple socks, and a pair of purple rubber gloves, and nothing else. He had Maroni stripped down to just his slacks, shoes missing, shirt, jacket, everything else gone. The man was duct taped to a chair in the center of Jack’s lab.

Jack was humming along to the music that was playing (she couldn’t be sure but she thought it might be Tool’s “Sober” that Jack was playing) while he did something she couldn’t quite see over at one of the lab tables which was littered with all sorts of equipment, beakers and any number of things that Harley had no idea what they were used for. The purple lighting of the room was made more strange and eerie by the soft, green glow of the liquid that pumped through the many tubes and containers that continued Jack’s gas. As Harley walked further into the room, she could see the halo of cigarette smoke forming around Jack, his cigarette hanging from his lips as he wrote something down on a slip of paper. As she stepped closer she could see flecks of blood across his chest and arms, one or two drops on his cheeks.

Harley walked past Maroni who had a ball gag in his mouth at the moment. It was clear Jack had beaten on the man as there were angry bruises on his torso, his nose was bleeding and his lips around the ball were split and bloody. There were even a few deep slashes from an extremely sharp blade across Maroni’s torso; but the older man glared daggers at her as she walked by. Harley stuck her tongue out at him with a smile.

“Hey puddin,” Harley said loud enough to be heard over the music as she set the empty coffee mugs from Bane and Frost over by the coffee machine.

Jack turned, pulling the cigarette from his mouth and reached forward to turn the music down on his phone when he saw her. “Pumpkin!”

He opened his arms wide to hug her then stopped himself. “Nope, sorry sweets--don’t want to get blood on you, you look too cute.”

Harley pouted. “A kiss at least?”

Jack chuckled and took the cigarette out, smashing it into the ashtray before leaning forward, his lips puckered. Harley giggled and leaned over to meet his lips with hers. They lingered and smiled, brushed their noses against each other before they sat up.

Harley glanced at Maroni with distaste. “Anything yet puddin?”

Jack frowned. “He’s being stubborn. I guess I’m going to have to get a little more inventive.”

“Anything I can help with puddin?” Harley asked turning away from Maroni.

Jack shook his head. “No pumpkin. Actually, I think it would be best if you weren’t here when I get started again. There are some things, my peach, you don’t need to see.” Harley frowned pressing her lips together into a thin line. She wasn’t sure what to say so she focused on the reason she had come over to the lab.
“Alex and Alice dropped off some treats for breakfast. I have muffins, scones...I want you to eat something and not exist on just coffee and cigarettes.” Harley set her bag up on one of the cleaner spots on the table pulling the bag open.

“And I brought some coffee to make a fresh pot for you and the boys,” Harley said as she pulled out the pastry bags she had been carrying as well as a bag of coffee. She began making a fresh pot, thankful that the lab had running water in the huge, industrial size sinks that were installed against one wall.

Jack chuckled watching her. “I love it when you’re all domestic.”

Harley giggled and turned to stick her tongue out at him over her shoulder as she scooped in the coffee. Jack chuckled, pulling off one of his purple gloves to dig into one of the bags and pull out a muffin before he leaned on the table, examining the blueberry muffin in his hand.

Jack took a bite of the muffin while he watched his wife’s ass as she worked. His eyes traveled down her legs then back up again and grinned as he chewed. He heard a muffled noise from Maroni and turned to see the man looking at Harley too. Jack’s gaze narrowed. A few minutes later the lab was filled with the scent of office.

“Oh Bane said Kermit texted a while ago. Fish will recover, minus an eye.” Harley frowned picking up a bag and digging herself out a scone.

Jack frowned. Harley could see the anger boiling under the surface. He felt responsible. He glanced at Maroni who was clearly grinning at the news of Fish losing her eye. He said something that was muffled behind the gag, but both Harley and Jack knew whatever the man was saying couldn’t be nice.

Jack glared at Maroni while Harley filled three cups of coffee (having snagged Jack’s empty cup as she walked passed it on her way to the coffee machine.)

Harley nodded as she prepared the coffees. She walked over to give Jack his cup as he set the now half eaten muffin down. “I’m glad she is going to be all right.”

Jack took the mug with a nod. “Me too.”

He took a sip and smiled, the fresh coffee tasted good and invigorating. Harley frowned at the half eat muffin.

“You better finish that,” she said with raised eyebrows. “Before I leave,” she added.

Jack glanced at the muffin and picked it up. “Sorry sweets.”

Harley smiled. “So, should I still do the roller derby this weekend?”

Jack grinned. “Of course sweets! We’re settled, you just got started again. I love watching…” He sipped his coffee and waggled his eyebrows at her. Harley giggled.

“Just thought I would check. I wasn’t sure how busy we were going to be.” She glanced meaningfully at Maroni.

“Oh, I think we’ll be able to take a night off. I’ll see if we can get everyone to come and cheer you on.”

Harley made a small squeak. “Everyone?”
Jack laughed. “Why not? The whole gang there would be fun.”

“Oh god, that makes me so nervous!” Harley shook her head with a grin.

Jack laughed. “You will be magnificent sweets.”

Jack finished off his muffin and took a large swallow of coffee. “Okay pumpkin, why don’t you head back to the main house? Daddy has some--work to do.”

Harley nodded and gathered her things before picking up to the coffee mugs for Bane and Frost. She made a kiss face at Jack. “I love you puddin, have fun.”

Jack grinned. “Love you too pumpkin pie, and I will.”

As soon as Harley was gone, Jack picked up his glove and slipped it back on. He flexed his fingers. He reached over and turned the music back up, the sounds of Opeth’s “Death Whispered a Lullaby” not too loud so that he and Maroni could talk, then he stepped over to Maroni.

Jack smiled. “I love this song,” he said softly. He sighed and removed the gag.

Maroni started to laugh. “You got yourself a hot piece of ass there, I’ll admit that. Wouldn’t mind have her ride my lap. Wonder how much she would take, eh? Expensive whore or a cheap whore?”

The hit came so swiftly that Maroni didn’t have time to prepare himself before Jack’s knuckles struck him in the face, made Maroni’s head bounce back to smack against the chair. Maroni cried out as his nose exploded in blood and pain.

“YOU FUCKING BROKE MY NOSE!!” Maroni screamed as blood ran freely down his face.

Jack smiled and cracked his knuckles. “I’m going to break a lot more than that Sal, my friend. You just keep talking about my wife, we’ll see exactly how much pain you can stand, BUT I’m going to be nice. You tell me what I want to know, I’m going to make your death nice and quick.”

“What kind of fucking incentive is that to tell you anything?” Maroni spat, but only ended up dribbling blood and saliva down his chin.

Jack smiled. “Well, how about we get started again and you’ll see just how generous I’m being to you.”

* *

Bane and Frost were talking when the first screams started. Up until now, Maroni’s sounds of pain had been punctuated with angry cursing, defiance and a lot of shit talk. But now the screams were filled with agony.

Bane and Frost looked at one another and both of them paled. Frost turned and glanced into the room. He swiftly turned away putting his back to the lab. Bane frowned and opened his mouth, ready to ask what was happening, but Frost, who now looked slightly green around the edges held up a hand.

“Don’t look, don’t ask.”

Bane swallowed and turned, making sure his back was to the lab.
Harley was lying on the couch, her fuzzy slippered feet up against the arm of the couch as she played a game of puzzle boggle on her phone when the front door opened. She looked up over her phone to see Jack standing in the doorway.

He was covered in blood, nearly every inch of his torso, arms, face, pants, drops of blood decorated his shoes and there was blood in his hair, causing the thick locks to stick to his forehead. He still wore the purple rubber gloves, which were still dripping slow, thick drops of blood onto the floor as Jack stood in the doorway. He didn’t move; he just stood there, though a smile was firmly affixed to his lips. Harley pushed herself up, dropping her phone as she did so. Jack’s smile looked manic. There was an edge to his expression that made goosebumps rush over her skin. His blue eyes seem unfocused as he stared into the room.

“Jack?” she said his name softly.

Jack looked over to his wife. When his eyes caught sight of her, it was as if something in him washed way and she saw her husband though the slight mania she sensed was still there, even if now it seemed to ease into the background.

“Harley.” Jack giggled slightly. “I got the information we wanted: I know where the drugs are being made; I know everything about Maroni’s business...I know where every drug house is, where every member of his gang is; I know where they live, where they work. I know every dealer in Giggles and I know where most of Maroni’s businesses are too…” Jack giggled again, higher pitched this time. “I’m gonna burn it all down Harley. I’m going to go in there and burn everything, then I’m going to walk into Ace Chemicals and blow that fucking place off the map!”

Jack started to laugh loudly dropping his bloody hand onto his knees. Harley quickly got to her feet and walked over to reach for her husband’s hands.

“Puddin? Why don’t we go get you cleaned up, okay?” Jack’s gloved hands were sticky with blood, but Harley held them tightly. “Just kick your shoes off there puddin--okay?” She started to peel his gloves off, dropping them by the door to worry about later.

Jack nodded. “You know Harley...what I did? Might give me nightmares.”

Harley frowned squeezing his hands. “Come on Jack, let’s go upstairs.”

Jack kicked his shoes off, leaving them in front of the door. Harley reached around him and pulled it close.

“Where are Bane and Frost?” she asked as she led him up the stairs in his stocking feet.

Jack smiled. “Oh they are waiting for the Hook family. We’ve certainly been giving them a lot of business lately, haven’t we pumpkin?”

Harley laughed. “We sure have puddin.”

Jack took a breath as they came to the landing. His eyes, which had shone with that maniacal gleam seemed to soften back to his normal sparkling blue as they entered the bedroom.

Harley led him into the bathroom.

She stopped once Jack was in the middle of the bathroom and without a word she reached up and slowly slide the sticky suspenders off his shoulders. Jack stood still, watching her every movement as she guided his arms out of the suspenders, then proceeded to unbutton his slacks. She peeled them back, slid them down his legs to his ankles. She then helped him step out of the slacks, which she kicked to the side. She squatted, giving Jack a tender smile as she lifted his legs, one at a time and tugged off this socks before reaching up to grab the sides of his boxers and slide them down his legs. He was erect when she pulled the boxers down, his blood soaked face watching her intently as she worked to undress him.

Once Jack was naked, the bloody clothes pushed to the side, Harley pulled the shower curtain aside to start the water. When it was the correct temperature, Harley turned on the shower. She turned back to Jack and began to undress.

“Let’s see if we can make sure you don’t have any nightmares puddin,” Harley said softly as she pulled her top off, then her bra.

Jack smiled watching her before he whispered. “What would I do without you Harls?”

Harley smiled as she finished stripping and pulling her hair out of its ponytails. “Good thing you will never have to find out,” she said softly as she took his hand and tugged him into the shower with her.

The water was warm, maybe a little hot as she turned Jack around so he was standing under the shower head.

Jack closed his eyes arching his head back to let the water run over him. He groaned. “God that feels good.”

Harley picked up the soap and lathered up her hands before she stepped closer to Jack. She ran the bar of soap along his pecs, her soap covered hand sliding down his stomach then against his groin while Jack arched his head back, letting the water run over his face and through his hair. She began to rub the soap slowly over Jack’s chest, then around his waist, watching as the dried blood, turned liquid again, rolled down his skin, mixing with the water and soap.

Harley wrapped her arms around her, caressing his ass before she slid the soap and her hands up his back.

Jack, who had been running his hands through his bloody hair, dropped his arms gently on top of her shoulders, keeping his eyes closed against the onslaught of the warm water running over his sharp features, just letting himself feel the gentle caress of her hands as they moved over him, reveling in the slick slide of her body against his as she stepped closer, her hands on his back and his rear, moving, squeezing, gliding over his soap slick skin to remove all the blood. She moved her hands up his side only to run once more along his chest and groin. Jack moaned low and deep when Harley’s soapy hands caressed his erection, inviting him to thrust into her touch as the soap made her hands deliciously slick.

Harley squeezed, her body aching for him feeling him hard, thick in her hands as she reached down to grab his balls as the same time, squeezing more as her other hand slid up and down quickly, Jack’s breath coming in pants with each slippery jerk of her hands.

Harley smiled and kissed his chin, squeezing him hard one more time before releasing his erection. Jack groaned with displeasure as she put the soap aside to reach for the shampoo. She poured a generous amount into her palm before she stood on her tiptoes and started to rub it through his hair.

Jack laughed, reaching down to grab her waist and hold her steady while she massaged the shampoo through his hair, her fingers working across his scalp. She washed his hair three times to get every drop of blood out of his hair before she was satisfied enough to condition his hair.

“Turn around puddin. I’m going to rub your shoulders while the conditioner is in your hair;” she said while at the same time forcing him to turn.

“Harley you don’t…” Jack started to say, but Harley forced him to turn away from the shower head. “Shush,” she hissed. “Put your hands on the wall there.” She pointed under his arm and Jack did as he was told. He leaned his hands against the wall as Harley started to rub his back, working out the knots she could feel along his spine and across his shoulders.

Jack groaned, relaxing under his wife’s touch as she dragged her thumbs up and down his spine, her fingers kneading his muscles.

“Oh, now you can rinse,” Harley said as she turned him again.

Jack laughed. “Yes mom.”

“Hey!” Harley gasped and smacked him on the ass.

Jack yelped. “Hey, that hurt!”

Harley made a face as Jack started to rinse the conditioner out of his hair. “Bullshit,” she said.

Jack laughed pulling her close against him kissing her mouth, her cheeks and along her chin. “Hmmm…my sweet, sweet girl,” he whispered as he reached down and tugged one of her legs up, sliding his fingers along the back of her thigh. “My sweet, sweet, Harley,” he groaned softly.

Harley smiled sliding her arms around his waist. “My puddin,” she whispered, almost inaudible above the sound of the shower.

Jack reached up to caress the side of her throat, kissing her deeply, his hand working around to the back of her head where he grabbed a fistful of wet hair, his tongue slowly caressing her tongue, before plunging deep into her mouth, his teeth dragging across her tongue, her lips, when suddenly Jack lifted her up and walked her back against the wall, slamming her back against the solid surface.

Harley gasped when she hit the back of the shoulder and Jack’s mouth attacked her breasts at the same time she wrapped her legs around him. Jack groaned, biting her tongue, sucking on her lips, and pulling at her skin. He lowered his head, his lips and tongue caught her nipples, sucking. He forced a hand between them, his fingers sliding between her legs, finding her exposed clitoris and rubbing her. Harley gasped, arched back against the wall, her fingers digging into Jack’s shoulders.

“Uh...Jack...!” Harley cried.

Jack forced her down the wall yanking her against him at the same time he removed his fingers from her and had Harley whimpering with need. He dropped them both down to the tub of the shower, the warm water hitting them both. Jack laid back, tossing one of his legs over the edge of the tub, just as Harley mounted him, sliding down on him as she pressed her teeth into her bottom lip, her hands pressing into his stomach and her whole body arching with pleasure as she took him into her.

Jack arched up to watch as she slid down on him, watching his shaft disappear into her. He grabbed her thighs, his leg hanging out of the tub pressed against the side as his hips raised up to meet her.

Harley began to move, rolling her body against him, her head thrown back, the warm water washing over her as she fucked her husband. Jack reached up, pressing his fingers into her skin, dragging them down over her breasts watching the way the water rolled down her body. He thrust to meet her rolling grinds, gasping. He grabbed her hips as she pressed down harder.

Harley dug her nails into Jack’s chest, their bodies sliding against the slick tub making loud squeaking noises against the porcelain surface. She raised her legs up so she was squatting over Jack, and started to thrust harder. The back of Jack’s head hit the tub, his fingers squeezed into her hips as he struggled not to orgasm, waiting to feel her release before he gave in.

Harley’s panting became louder, her thrusts became harder as she came closer, closer, her fingers pressing into Jack’s chest while the wet sounds of their bodies slapping together mixed with the sound of the showers running water which was now quickly cooling down. She groaned and grunted, the pleasure building, and building until she came with a loud cry.

Jack groaned, sitting up as best he could, his arms tight around her yanking her as close as he could with her legs bent between them. Harley cupped the back of Jack’s head, holding him as he pressed his face between her breasts. He thrust up as hard and fast as he could, the pleasure building until he couldn’t stand it any longer. Jack came with a long drawn out cry, collapsing back into the tub and taking Harley with him.

They both laid in the bottom of the tub, panting together until Harley murmured. “The water is getting cold.”

Jack started to laugh. “Yeah it is.”

Harley grabbed his face between her hands, staring hard into his eyes. “Puddin...you all right now?”

Jack smiled reaching up to caress her face, pushing back wet locks of her hair that were sticking to her cheeks, sliding them behind her ear.

“Yeah sweets, I’m better.” He kissed the tip of her nose. “You chased all the possible nightmares away,” he murmured as he ran his fingertips along her face. “I don’t know what I would do without you baby,” he whispered softly before kissing her.

*

Later that evening, they were both in bed naked, a large bowl of popcorn between them. Jack was sitting up with a pad and pencil, the sheets over his waist while he worked. Harley was sitting cross-legged next to him, tossing bites of popcorn into her mouth as she watched him, the sheet in her lap. She leaned against his shoulder, feeding him bites of popcorn as he drew out a simple map of Gotham.

“According to Maroni, Falcone is having the drug Giggles--as well as several others--made here at Ace Chemicals Processing plant, though the place is very heavily guarded. So, in order to get to it, I want to throw Falcone’s businesses into chaos--everything, from the smallest to the largest.” Jack chuckled. “Our first night will be a night of complete chaos, bringing down mayhem on Maroni’s businesses. Everything that man had, I want destroyed: businesses, family, property, cars...everything. While Falcone is dealing with that, I want to systematically destroy everything of his, so that when we attack the factory, there is no one to stop us.”

Jack grinned.
Harley giggled. “It’s genius puddin!”

Jack put his arm around Harley’s shoulders.

“It is, isn’t it?”

They both laughed falling back on the pillows with Jack pulling Harley into his arms, spilling the popcorn all over the bed.
Bruce closed his eyes and collected himself as he stood in the middle of the “Batcave” surrounded by his obsession. The wall of computers and monitors to his left, his car and other vehicles in various states of assembly, repair, or upgrade on his right. He thought about wearing his batsuit, but that felt wrong somehow. He also thought about wearing a suit, which seemed too formal, so Bruce began to pace, dressed in black slacks and a simple white dress shirt, the sleeves of which were rolled up to his elbows. He worried at his bottom lip with his teeth, a bad habit he had picked up as a kid which he only reverted to now when he was nervous. He had never meant to share this side of his life with anyone except Alfred and even though Alfred had been gently pushing for years for Bruce to tell Jack...Alfred had most recently been urging Bruce to consider a partner. (For Alfred, that partner would preferably be Jack...Bruce knew that Alfred had very strong opinions about Bruce keeping Batman from Jack.) Bruce had told Alfred after his heart attack that he would consider the idea of a partner, but now that the decision had been taken away from him, Bruce realized he had been lying to Alfred; he had no intention of having a partner.

But now…

Bruce still had not really considered a partner an option, yet now the choice was no longer his, taken from him by an overly curious young man.

Bruce had just stopped to face the dozen or more computer screens when he heard movement behind him. He turned to see Alfred and Dick descending the stairs.

The young man looked nervous, but Bruce could see the curiosity in the young man’s eyes as he gazed around the room. Bruce wasn’t sure what was about to happen...make the kid a partner, or be forced to find a way to convince him to keep his secret...

Bruce smiled and greeted his young ward. “Dick.”

Dick hopped down the last couple of steps and hurried over to Bruce. He didn’t wait--he simply barreled ahead.

“You’re Batman.”

Dick didn’t pose it as a question, he just stated it as fact.

Bruce nodded. “Yes, yes I am. We need to talk. I’m…”

Dick interrupted him. “I want in.”

Alfred made a noise behind the young man and Bruce’s eyes shot up to the old butler to see that Alfred was trying not to laugh. Bruce wrinkled his nose at Alfred before turning his attention back to Dick.

“You want in?”

Dick nodded. “I want in. I want to fight crime too. I want revenge…”

Bruce put his hand up to halt the boy mid-sentence. “This isn’t about revenge, Dick. This is about being there to help Gotham...about preventing what happened to me…” Bruce stopped and rephrased what he was going to say. “To us, from happening to anyone else. Revenge...revenge will lead you down a dark path Dick...a path that could easily turn you into someone you don’t want to be. To quote Marcus Aurelius, “The best revenge is to be unlike him who performed the injury.” That is what I... ” Bruce stopped and took a deep breath before he continued. “That is what we must be Dick... better than those who hurt us. I am working to make Batman both a symbol of hope to Gotham, and something to fear by its dark underbelly. I want to bring justice to those who cannot find justice and I want to let Gotham’s darker side know someone is working outside the law in order to bring that law down on them. I want those who commit evil to know the Batman will bring them into the light, and they will pay for their crimes.” Bruce walked over to Dick and placed his hands on the young man’s shoulders. “We must be better than those we fight. Do you understand?”

Dick, who was gazing at Bruce with what might be hero worship nodded. “I understand. We have to be the good guys.”

Bruce smiled before stepping away from Dick and began to pace as he spoke. “If I agree to let you help me, there are a few rules.” Bruce did not miss the eager gleam in his ward’s eyes at the mention of possible acceptance into being a crime fighter. “One, you must train. You can’t go out onto the streets of Gotham with me unless you train and train hard. You will use your skills as an acrobat and combine those skills with new ones. You will learn to fight, but…” Bruce turned to look at the boy. “We do not kill. I don’t use a gun and neither will you. You will learn to take down an opponent, how to think smarter, be smarter. Two, I make the rules. If I say no, it’s no. If I say you are not going with me, you will obey and you will train. I didn’t just decide to be Batman one day Dick and then race out onto the streets. This was a decision I made when I was younger than you. I trained for years until I felt I was ready…”

Dick started to protest, but Bruce held up a hand to stop him. “I’m not saying you will have to train for years before you can go out with me. You have already started that training with the circus, but I am saying that I will decide when you are ready Dick. Doing what I do, it takes more than simple physical prowess. You show me you can follow rules, keep our secret and dedicate yourself to your training, then you will be working beside me in no time.”

Bruce smiled to ease his words a bit before he continued. “Rule three, you will go to school, and you will keep your grades up...a grade falls below a “C” and you will not be going out with me...and that doesn’t mean you can keep a “C” average...I expect the best from myself and from you.”

Dick made a face, but he didn’t really seem all that upset. Bruce smiled and continued.

“And last...always listen to Alfred.”

Alfred grinned at Bruce who smiled back.

Bruce looked at Dick. “Any questions?”

Dick grinned. “Will I get to learn to drive the Batmobile?”

“No.” Bruce laughed.

*

The Dollyrots cover of “Brand New Key” was playing loudly along with part of the crowd who were laughing and singing along as Harley, dressed in a pair of white and red striped leggings, a red strappy tank top and tennis shoes, came through the door. She was grinned from ear to ear as she flipped her her hair—which she had worn in two long braids that framed her face—over her shoulder as came rushing into the roller derby rink through the metal double doors with her bag that held her uniform over one shoulder and her skates, now adorned with a pair of red and black pompoms, draped around her neck. Harley turned around as her husband came in after her looking dashing as always, dressed in slim cut black slacks that highlighted his slender legs and (to Harley’s delight) his tight ass. He also wore a black dress shirt, minus tie, though instead he wore the necklace his aunt had given him and a black blazer decorated with dark purple flowers. He looked far too classy to be attending a roller derby game, Harley thought. Jack laughed to see how excited she was as he hurried up to her and put his hands on her waist before he pulled her close to give her a soft kiss, careful not to mess up his lipstick or hers...that would be for later he thought to himself.

“We’ll all be in the front row Baby...you go change and have a good game.” Jack spoke loudly to be heard over the music playing and the low rumble of the crowd.

Harley rubbed her nose against his and pressed her lips to his mouth. “That was real nice of Ivy to have those tickets waiting for us.”

Jack nodded. “Yes, having a front row seat to see my girl play will be a pleasure. Now, you get going and I’ll cheer the loudest of anyone here.”

She flicked just the tip of her tongue against his lips. “Will do puddin.” She flicked her tongue along his mouth, lingering for a few seconds. “Mmm...I love you,” she whispered.

Jack brushed his nose against her pressing his teeth into his bottom lip as he stared into her blue eyes. “And I love you Harls. Now go.”

He turned her around and smacked her on the ass, sending her off in the direction of the locker rooms. Harley squealed and laughed, waving at Jack as she hurried off. Jack grinned and watched her a moment longer before he turned around. Behind him were some of the members of their gang who had come to watch Harley skate. Alex and Alice had come for the game; Alice was wearing a pair of denim overalls and a green t-shirt looking very domestic as she had her hands resting against her belly. She wasn’t huge, but she was definitely showing her pregnancy. (Jack was happy for Alex while at the same time he felt this small pain in the center of his chest at the thought of what might have been for him and Harley. No use worrying about it, though, he thought.) Alex, wearing a pair of jeans with holes in the knees big enough to be shorts rather than pants, a white t-shirt under a very loud orange and green Hawaiian shirt, had his one arm around Alice’s shoulders, smiling proudly. (Alex had told Jack that he had asked Alice to quit her job and come work for him.) Frank was still in Gotham and had come along too.

Bane and Kermit were here on a first date, and Zsasz had come as well, looking like an undertaker in his black on black suit. The only concession he had made to looking more casual was that he didn’t have a tie on and the top button of his dress shirt was open. Trope and Thea had also come along too. Thea had changed her hair color to half blue, half purple while Trope had gone for a more neon purple. The two technogeeks held hands, whispering and sharing kisses like a couple of newlyweds.

Jack threw his arms out. “You guys ready to cheer our Harley on?”

The little group cheered in response. Jack laughed, turning at the same time and motioned everyone to follow him. “Come along, my dears! Soft pretzels and cotton candy, my treat!”

Frank, who was carrying a plastic diet coke bottle that he had been sipping out of since they arrived, hissed as he walked next to Jack. “You think they serve beer or maybe cheap wine?”

Jack shook his head. “No, they don’t serve any alcohol at these places. Not sure why since beer seems to be a staple of all sporting events.” He chuckled.

Frank laughed. “Well fuck, good thing I brought my own.” He held up the soda bottle with a sneaky grin. He leaned close to Jack, who ducked down to hear Frank better and was immediately greeted by the smell of alcohol as Frank giggled. “I got wine in here.”

Jack shook his head and laughed in response only to hear Alex shout. “Don’t fucking encourage him Jack! He’s fucking crazy!”

Frank laughed. “Hey, just seeing how far I can go!” Frank’s attention was suddenly pulled away from discussions of his sanity when he saw a few of the roller derby girls on the rink doing a few rounds. “Shabooya! Look at that!! Graw! Think I could get one of these roller derby babes to go out with the old Frank here?”

Alex groaned. “Dad...fuck…”

Jack patted Frank on the back with a laugh. “Being perfectly sane is boring my friend and I’m sure you can find one of these fine ladies to go out with you.”

Frank took a long swig of his wine. “Mm...hot girls in shorts on skates...this is gonna be a great day!”

Together the group made their way to the front seats area that had been blocked off for family and friends of the players. There were several people in the seating area which consisted of an entire set of bleachers. Jack and the others gave their tickets to a young woman with neon pink hair dressed in a Gotham City Sirens uniform and who wore a pair of skates.

The young woman glanced over at Jack and his gang with a smile that quickly transformed into an appreciative grin as she gave Jack a once over. “You’re Harley’s guy ain’t you?”

Jack smiled and nodded. “I am.” He quirked his brow at her. “How did you know?”

The young woman grinned, her hands on her hips. “She said you would be the best looking man around and boy, she was right!” Her grin widened. “The name’s Vanessa, but on the team I’m called Shrike—nice to meet you.” She stuck her hand out to him. She was wearing a pair of black fingerless gloves as well as more than a dozen thin plastic and hemp bracelets.

Jack took her offered hand. “Nice to meet you too. I’m Jack, these are my family here.” He gestured at everyone behind him. Frank, who was standing next to Jack smiled.

“Hey!” He waggled his eyebrows at her until Vanessa laughed. “You’re cute,” she said to Frank as she took the tickets from Jack. She started to say something when she glanced up and snarled. “You get your ass right back out of there, you fucking asshole!!”

Another young woman with black hair wearing the Gotham City Sirens team uniform who was on the skating rink but who had stopped to speak to someone in the seating area turned and snapped at Vanessa. “Shrike! Language! We got kids here!”

Vanessa ignored the woman as she pushed her way through Jack’s group on her skates, only to grab a young man (who had been trying to slip into the special seating area by mixing with Jack’s group) by the upper arm and yank him with her out of their small crowd. She shook the young man with another hissed. “Wayne Wilkins! What have I told you about trying to sneak into the private seating?”

The young man cringed. “Sorry Shrike.”

She shook him again. “What have I told you?”

The young man, Wayne, frowned then sighed. “That I’m not related or dating any members of the team and I am not allowed into the family and friends seating area.”

Vanessa nodded. “And what did I tell you was gonna happen if I caught you again?”

The young man glanced at Jack then back at Vanessa. “That you were gonna kick my ass.”

“That’s right.” Vanessa snarled. “Now I’m gonna have to kick your ass, but lucky for you it's gonna have to wait until after the match.”

Wayne whined a little. “But Shrike...I’m the team's biggest fan! Doesn’t that count for something?”

Shrike narrowed her eyes. “Wayne, if you weren’t such a perv maybe...now go.”

She gave him a shove. Bane, Kermit and the rest moved out of the way as the young man quickly left. They had all turned away so none of them saw the dirty look he gave Jack...rather than Vanessa. He muttered to himself. “So Harley has a boyfriend? Gonna have to do something about that...but what…” He frowned to himself and made his way up into the stands looking for a good place to watch the game.

Jack frowned, lifting a brow in question. Vanessa shrugged. “He is like our own little super fan, but the guy can be a bit creepy about it. He lurks around all the time, following the team from game to game and even creeps around our practices. I mean, he’s harmless really, but he’s a bit annoying. Well, anyway--you guys enjoy the game!”

Jack turned glancing over his shoulder finding Wayne as he moved up a few of the bleachers. Jack’s eyes narrowed slightly at he watched the younger man.

*

Harley dropped down onto one of the benches in the locker room and started to take off her tennis shoes when she noticed Pamela at the end of the bench. She was mostly dressed; her shorts were on, socks, skates, but she was holding her shirt in her hands and staring at the floor. Harley frowned standing up and pulling off her leggings before slipping into her fishnets and pulling on her shorts. She pulled her shirt off and had just replaced it with her team shirt when she saw that Pamela hadn’t moved a muscle.

Harley reached out to lay a comforting hand on Pamela’s knee. “What’s wrong with the experiments?”

Pamela sighed. “Just...we’ve been using these herbs to try to create a cancer cure, but a side effect from our experiments is that we created a toxin from the same plant...both of which need further testing. Neither the cure that we’ve developed, nor the toxins have been fully tested, but Legrand wants to jump straight to animal trials...he submitted a request to take the next step, against my better judgment. When I found out…” Pamela rubbed her hands together clearly worried. “I went over his head to stop him. I went straight to Bruce Wayne and explained that we weren’t ready for that next step. It’s too early, too dangerous. Besides…” Pamela shook her head. “Animal trials are not what we should be doing. I believe in testing, but not on innocent animals…” Pamela shook her head. “Well, anyway, everything sorta of blew up. Wayne fired Legrand after Legrand said Mr. Wayne was a know-nothing rich boy, along with some other less flattering commentary. Then Wayne put me in charge instead…” Pamela looked at Harley.

“Marc wasn’t happy to say the least and he didn’t leave on the best of terms.”

Harley put her arm around Pamela’s shoulders. “Hey, you did the right thing. It’s not your fault your colleague didn’t see it that way. Don’t let it get you down in the dumps. Just funnel that pain and anger into the game…Ivy.” Harley grinned at her.

Pamela glanced sideways at Harley and grinned. “You’re right. I’m Poison Ivy damn it.”

Harley smiled. “That’s the spirit! Let’s go kick some ass!”

Ivy laughed and high fived Harley before the two women finished dressing and headed out onto the rink.

*

Jack was at the railing that ran around the outside of the rink, his hands wrapped around the rail, knuckles white as he watched his wife. She was skating along the edge, catching up with another blonde from the opposing team. The two women, Harley in her red and black with her blonde braids trailing in the air behind her, the other woman dressed in red and gold, her long hair worn loose, were now shoulder to shoulder. Jack grinned when Harley skated by, taking the time to give her husband a saucy wink as she zipped pass. Jack grinned happily, a warm ripple of pleasure cascaded through his body in reaction to his wife’s wink. It was little gestures like her wink that made him fall in love with her all over again, every day he thought.

Jack laughed in delight at his wife’s antics as he watched with satisfaction to see Harley slam her shoulder into the skater from the “enemy” team. The team they were playing against today was the Central City Rollergirls and it was a very close race. The Rollergirls at the moment were winning by only a few points, but the Sirens were quickly gaining ground. It was still anyone’s game.

Harley’s opponent didn’t fall, but instead zipped further out of her reach. Harley snarled and put on some speed. Her arms were pumping as she twisted at the last moment and rolled swiftly in front of the other woman, her shoulder nicking her opponent when Harley leaned in toward the other woman, which sent the Rollergirl scrambling, her arms pinwheeling as she tried to keep her balance. Harley was grinning viciously as she skated around in a circle only to knock the other woman in the shoulder on the other side which sent that woman sprawling, unable to keep her balance from another impact. When she wiped out, she rolled, catching one of her teammates who tripped over her, and caught another member of the Rollergirls, resulting in a Rollergirl pile up.

Jack pumped his fists in the air jumping up and down yelling at the top of his lungs. “THAT’S MY GIRL!!”

Frank was standing beside Jack hooting and pumping his fist in the air for Harley, his bottle of wine nearly gone, but he was having a grand time ogling the girls. “Come on Sirens!! I gotta get me a poster of these girls!”

Alex was relaxing on one of the bleachers next to Alice, his hand resting on her knee. “You know what’s fucking weird? My Dad will end up on a fucking date with one of those girls. I’m betting Vanessa.”

Alice giggled. “Oh no! What if Shrike ends up being your step-mother?”

Alex groaned. “God Alice, fuck!! You trying to give me fucking nightmares?”

Alice just laughed.

On the seat just above them, Bane, who looked as if he were being forced to sit scrunched up sat with Kermit, who was dressed in black athletic shorts, a white dress shirt with a thin black tie, the sleeves rolled up and a pair of platform, black ankle boots that still only barely brought her on level with Bane’s chest. Her green hair was stuck up high in the air and she wore a pair of large black, cross earrings. They were sharing a box of popcorn together, though Bane looked slightly timid as he glanced at Kermit who was completely absorbed with the game. She pounded her knee when Harley and Ivy worked together to block one of the Rollergirls from getting past them. The two Sirens skated to the side, and back again, continuing to block the Rollergirl. Their opponent twisted around and began to go around them when Ivy grabbed Harley’s hips and swung her forward and out to the side. Harley bent over and used her ass to hit their opponent in the hip hard enough that it knocked the Rollergirl right off her feet and sent her sliding into the rails that ran along the rink.

Kermit leapt to her feet and yelled. “GO SIRENS!!”

She sat back down with a grin that was all teeth. “Man, I gotta find out if I can try out for the team! This is great and those girls are so hot!” Kermit grinned looking up at Bane.

Bane blushed a little and nodded. “Though you would be the hottest one out there,”

Kermit, who had been in the middle of stuffing popcorn in her mouth stopped to look up at Bane. She chewed and wrapped her arms around his big, muscular biceps and leaned against him. “You really think so?” she asked.

Bane grinned. “Yep. Definitely.”

Kermit giggled.

One step down from them sat Thea and Trope. Both young women were sitting hip to hip, with Trope having crossed one leg over Thea’s thigh, while Thea rested her hands on Trope’s leg, occasionally stroked Trope’s thigh in a familiar, intimate gesture.

Zsasz sat next to them with a frown on his features as the watched the game. He leaned close to Trope. “I’m not sure I understand what’s going on.”

Trope smiled. “Me either. I don’t know a thing about derby...or any sports really, but it does look a little fun.”

Thea nodded as she leaned over to talk to Zsasz. “It’s pretty badass!”

Zsasz nodded his agreement though he muttered quietly to himself. “I still have no idea what’s going on.”

On the last bench before the girls and Zsasz, Frost sat holding a large wand of pink cotton candy while Agatha sat next to him pulling off pieces of cotton candy from her own blue wand of sugar fluff. Frost was trying to watch the game, but he was far too distracted by Agatha’s crossed legs; the skirt she was wearing had a slit in the front that fell away to reveal her knees, and a good portion of her thigh.
Agatha reached over after pulling a piece of the stick candy off and fed it to Frost. “Mm...I might have to get a pair of roller skates. What do you think?”

Frost smiled. “I think you would look good in skates, tight top and some very short, shorts.”

Agatha chuckled, her eyes glittering as she looked at Frost.

*

Over in the stands, Wayne Wilkins, who had been cheering for the Sirens, but particularly for Harley stopped to frown and watch that man who claimed to be Harley’s boyfriend. Something about the man looked familiar, like he had seen his image before, Wayne just couldn’t place where…but he had to admit, the guy was hot. He was well dressed, handsome, looked to be well built and Wayne had even seen a hint of a tattoo on the man’s neck, the gold chain. Fuck, Wayne thought...he would be attracted to him too! But Wayne had his eyes on Harley. He just had to figure out a way to get her to really notice him...then maybe he might stand a chance of convincing her that she was the man for him. Granted, he had tried the same thing with nearly every single member of the Gotham City Sirens team, steadily working his way from Poison Ivy to Bette “Plastique” Souci but none of the girls had even given him a first date. The closet he had even gotten was with “FireBird” Beatriz Bonilla da Costa, who actually gave him a kiss on the cheek when he bought her roses. But up until now, he had struck out with the entire team.

Harley Quinn was his chance to change all of that. He could tell that she was different than the other girls. There was something more dynamic about her.

He sighed in frustration. There had to be a way to get her attention.

*

They were in the final minutes of the game, and both teams were now tied. Harley skated along, her eyes darting to the other team’s players looking for a break. She was sweaty and she could feel that she was going to have a nasty bruise on her hip. She saw a small opening and put on speed, leaning forward, her hands balled into fists. She glanced to the side where she could see Ivy. There were a few opponents between her and her teammate, and a set of blockers in front of them. If she could make a space, then Ivy would be clear to get around the rink and score for the win.

Harley put on some speed and was about to push her away into the blockers, gathering their attention so that Ivy could break free when someone behind her fell. The other skater hit the floor and slid into Harley almost knocking her on her ass, but Harley leaned back some and pinwheeled her arms, just barely keeping her skates under her. The blockers moved, getting into position to block Ivy thinking that Harley was out, that she was either going to fall or loose speed. Harley ground her teeth, coming forward again, and dropped to one knee. She slid across the floor, but she didn’t completely fall over before she was able to push herself up again and started to skate with as much power as she could muster and threw her entire body into the side of one of the blockers.

Harley hit the Rollergirls’ blocker, a brunette with an upturned nose, slammed her shoulder against the other woman’s so hard that the Rollergirl was forced into her teammate’s side. Harley pushed her way in front as Ivy jumped over the downed Rollergirls blockers.

Harley was picking up speed as she turned and yelled at Ivy. “Whip!”

Ivy nodded her understanding.

Harley was moving just ahead of Ivy while the track ahead was clear.
Harley grinned and stuck her right leg back behind her lifting it up enough, her foot held flat, her arms extended in front of her for balance, so that Ivy could grab her.

Ivy smiled glancing back once at the other players before she grabbed Harley’s skate with both hands, one hand grabbing Harley’s ankle, her other hand grabbing the top half of Harley’s foot.

When Harley was sure Ivy was going to have a clear shot, she kicked her leg in, brought her knee toward her chest just as Ivy pulled in towards herself as Harley’s leg brought her around Ivy released. The whole motion propelled Ivy forward.

The crowd burst into a roar of yells and hoots as Ivy skated toward the end making the point they needed to just barely take home the win.

*

Jack and the rest of the gang all leapt to their feet screaming and cheering. Harley, who was with her team, who were all hugging each other and cheering, broke away and skated across the rink to Jack. She leaned over the rail and threw her arms around him. He kissed her, nearly pulling her over the rail as he kissed her hard, sliding his tongue into her mouth. Harley growled happily, returning his kiss with vigor which had the people around them who could see the two of them cheering, along with catcalls and wolf whistles.

Jack laughed. “You’re all sweaty.” He dropped his voice to a whisper. “I love it.” He licked her cheek causing Harley to squeal. “Jack!”

Jack laughed rubbing his nose against hers. “How would you feel about going out after you shower and we all get tattoos together? Just something fun to remember the day...hmm...?”

Harley purred. “I think that sounds fun puddin.”

Jack grinned flicking his tongue over her lips. “Think I can sneak into the showers with you?”

Harley giggled and turned her head to look sideways at him. “You’re just gonna have to wait puddin.”

She stepped back with a wide smile and waved. “Be right out puddin!”

She skated off to join the other girls. Jack watched her, his eyes raked down over her hips and legs. He licked his lips feeling the warm, tight pleasure in his groin that he only felt when looking at her. He grinned and turned to the others.

“All right boys and girls, Harley and I are getting tattoos today--who’s with us? My treat!” Jack looked around at everyone.

Frank raised his hand. “Count me in. I’ve never gotten ink before!”

Alex groaned. “Fuck...fine, I’m in.”

Alice giggled. “Only if I get to pick for you. I won’t be getting one for obvious reasons, but if they do henna I could do that.” She smiled at Jack.

Jack nodded. “Then we’ll make sure they do henna.”

Bane grinned. “I’m in. I haven’t gotten new ink in a while.”

Kermit grinned. “Me too!”
Everyone, including Zsasz agreed. Jack laughed. “Oh this is gonna be fun!”

Harley closed her eyes and put her head under the shower head’s spray of water. After the game, the warm water felt good. It also felt good to wash off the blood and sweat. Next to her Ivy was washing her hair. Harley watched her for a moment. She got the impression that Pamela didn’t have a lot of friends, that she was a little lonely even though everyone on the team seemed to like her.

Harley waited until Pamela didn’t have her head under the water before she asked. “Hey ah, my husband and I and some friends are going to get tattoos, you’re welcome if you wanna come?”

Pamela blinked, clearly shocked by the idea—or was it that she was being asked Harley wondered. Pamela smiled. “That’s really nice of you to ask, but I need to get home. I have some work I want to do, but...thank you Harley. No one has ever asked me to…” She giggled. “Go get a tattoo...or well, do anything after a game. I appreciate it.”

Harley grinned. “I mean it though, if you would like to come…”

Pamela stepped closer and gave Harley a quick hug. “Thanks, but I really do have some work I need to look over. Maybe next time?”

Harley smiled. “Sure thing Red.”

Pamela grinned blushing a little at the nickname.

Harley had brought a change of clothes with her. She had chosen cut-off shorts, a red and white striped off the shoulder tank top, and a pair of white gladiator sandals that wrapped all the way to her knees. Her damp hair was wrapped up into two twin balls, one on either side of her head and she quickly did her makeup, light pink lip gloss, subtle cat-eye eyeliner and a soft bronze eyeshadow. She looked in the mirror of the locker, giving herself a big smile and blowing herself a kiss before she grabbed her bag and skates and hurried out of the locker room.

She had just come through the doors when she ran smack dab into Wayne Wilkins.

“Oh sorry!” Harley started to take a step back, but Wayne, who had grabbed her hips, pulled her close and kissed her. Harley’s eyes widened in horror. She shoved back, breaking Wayne’s hold on her and slapped him hard enough across the face that everyone coming out of the locker room or just in the vicinity heard the sound of Harley’s hand smacking the young man across the face.

Wayne yelped in surprise.

Harley snarled. “You touch me again and a slap will be the least of your problems!”

Wayne frowned. “I’m sorry Harley, just...you surprised me when you bumped into me and I just…”

“You just took advantage is what you did!” Harley grabbed Wayne by the front of his shirt with both hands, yanking him close so that only the two of them could hear what Harley said.

“You try anything like that again, you’ll be lucky if I’m the one that kills you and not my husband. You got it?” Harley hissed.

Wayne was distracted. This close to her, he could smell her scent...vanilla...warm vanilla, he thought, and her lips were almost perfect, the shape, the fullness...he wanted to try to kiss her again because her lips had been so soft. He was abruptly brought back from his thoughts as Harley shook him.

“Are you listening to me?” she hissed.

Wayne looked up from her mouth only to be struck by how blue her eyes were… “Yeah...yeah I’m listening.” Wayne said with a dopey smile. Harley didn’t notice the smitten look on his face as she snarled. “Don’t ever touch me again.”

She pushed the obsessed fan away before walking around him and heading off to find Jack. Wayne watched her go, his heart hammering hard inside his chest and his breathing fast and shallow. He just had to find a way to show her how much he loved her...she was different than the other girls on the team...she was just…

“Wow…” he murmured and leaned against the wall beside the locker rooms.

Another member of the Sirens came out, Courtney “Stargirl” Whitmore, one of the younger girls, a bubbly blonde (whom Wayne had asked out every day for nearly two months before he finally stopped), frowned when she saw Wayne.

“Hey, I thought you weren’t allowed around the locker rooms Wayne!” She frowned looking around for a security guard or Ivy.

“Nah, the restraining order expired two weeks ago,” Wayne said as he pushed himself away from the wall.

Courtney narrowed her eyes at him, but Wayne just smiled. “I’m leaving. I already saw who I wanted to see.” He swooned and walked away with a little hop in his step.

Courtney made a face as she headed out, moving in the opposite direction.

“Such a freak,” she muttered.

*

It didn’t take Jack long to find a tattoo parlor in Gotham that would accommodate all of them and provided henna tattoos. The place, called The Jade Mermaid, ended up not being far away from the roller rink. The parlor was much larger than the place where he and Harley had received their first tattoos Jack noted. This parlor was large, with high, arched red painted ceilings that were covered in pictures of classic tattoo art. The floors were shiny hardwood, and there were two reception desks that were smooth half circles of polished wood, holding large binders filled with plastic covered images of tattoos. The walls of the place continued the theme of tattoo art, with more pictures of classic tattoos covering not just all periods of history, but cultures as well. The place reminded Jack of a museum.

As their small crowd filled the front of the tattoo parlour, they could hear the sounds of Florence and the Machine’s “What the Water Gave Me” playing lightly in the background as Jack, holding his wife’s hand, walked up to one of the desks where a young woman sat. She had just taken a drink of coffee and was dressed in a blue halter dress with white polka dots. She had long, light, lavender hair with blue highlights styled with 1940’s bumper bangs. Her arms were covered in tattoos from her shoulders to her wrists.

“Hey guys! You must be the Red family? I’m Lucy! You guys caught us on a good day. We can work on three of you at a time! So, who wants to go first?” The young woman smiled as she stood up.
Jack glanced at their group.

Frost looked at everyone and nodded without anyone exchanging a word. “You and Harley should go first Boss.”

Jack laughed. “All right, so who wants to go with us?”

Alex spoke up. “I think my Dad should go first. Age before fucking beauty.”

Frank gave his son the finger, which made everyone laugh (Alex responded with his own middle finger). “Fine, I’ll go first--buncha cowards.” Frank chuckled, scrunching his nose up.

Lucy led the three of them between the counters while everyone else found seats and started to look through books of tattoo designs.

*

Jack slipped out of his jacket, folded it over his arm, then began to unbutton his shirt as he sat down in the chair that Lucy guided him to. The tattoo chair sat in front of a mirrored station that was decorated with photos of tattoos, feathers, ink pens, and a multitude of other artists utensil, paint brushes, paper, et cetera. Standing by the “booth” was a bald man with a long, braided brown beard wearing a sleeveless t-shirt, jeans and biker boots. Every inch of the man’s skin that was exposed was covered in tattoos, even his head.

The man grinned at Jack with a nod. “I’m Kevin.”

“Jack.” Jack put his hand out. The two men shook and Kevin grinned. “So, what you have in mind? I like the cards, by the way.”

Jack grinned. “Thanks. I know exactly what I want...a skull with a jester's hat right here.” Jack pointed to his left pec and shoulder. “I want it to cover this whole area.”

“An old fashioned jester's hat, with the bells...like the kind you see on some old playing cards?” Kevin asked as he picked up a large, spiral notebook.

Jack nodded. “Yes, exactly like that.”

Kevin smiled. “Man, I drew this ages ago. Been wanting someone to request it, but I haven’t had one person...you’ll be the first man...if you like it that is.” Kevin flipped through the plastic pages until he found what he was looking for. He turned the notebook and handed it to Jack. On the left side page was a black and white drawing of a realistic looking laughing skull face wearing the traditional “Fool’s hat.” Jack grinned at the picture. It was almost exactly like he had imagined. He’d thought of the tattoo a while ago, an image of death and humor mixed together...to laugh at death or maybe to laugh at the inevitability of death...you couldn’t stop it, or slow it--you could only laugh at it. Jack had been quickly following that path until Harley slowed him down, laughed at death with him. Harley gave life the only meaning it had really ever had for him and if he thought about it too much, it scared him...scared him that he felt that deeply for her. He was incomplete without Harley. Had always been incomplete until Harley had become part of his life, meshed with his soul.

Jack frowned as he touched the picture with the tips of his fingers. “This is perfect.”

*

Harley was taken to a chair in the booth next to where Jack sat. This one also had a mirror, tattoo photos, but there were posters from broadway shows decorating the wall around the mirror.
Lucy smiled as Harley sat, her hands on her hips. “So, what are you wanting to get?”

Harley grinned. “I wanted a set of four Harlequin diamonds, arranged in a diamond shape right under my left breast.”

Jack, who was lying back in the tattoo chair while Kevin worked on the transfer of the image, sat up turning to look over at Harley, his expression a cross between surprise and a flash of jealous concern that someone was going to be that close to Harley’s breasts, touching them, her…but Lucy smiled. “Oh that’s cool, I like it. My boyfriend plays a lot of cards too.”

“Oh i don’t play cards, but my husband does. He’s very good with a deck of cards. He is actually fantastic at poker and card tricks. The Harlequin originates from a French word, hellquin that means mischievous devil…and that is my husband…a very mischievous devil.” Harley leaned around Lucy to wink at Jack. Jack chuckled and settled back down. He still felt that spike of jealous anger that someone other than him was going to be touching Harley that intimately, but she was his wife now, his mate, his partner…he trusted her even if he trusted no one else. He heard his wife say to Lucy.

“He is the most amazing man.”

Jack grinned from ear to ear. Kevin walked over with the transfer, speaking softly. “That’s your girl?”

“Yes she is...my wife,” Jack said softly.

Kevin smiled. “There’s nothing like finding that one person who completes you. My husband is more than my lover, he’s my best friend.”

Jack smiled. “Yes,” he agreed. “Harley...is everything.”

*

The third tattooist was a young black woman whose hair was styled in thick braids that she had wrapped around her head in three buns. She wore a tank top that showed off the beautiful, colorful tattoo across her chest, a winged dragon in rainbow colors.

She motioned Frank over who took the seat pulling his shirt off at the same time. He grinned. “Give me the biggest, most colorful tattoo ya got!”

The young woman laughed. “I’m Mary and you are?”

“Frank.” Frank grinned. “So, whatcha got?”

Mary smiled studying him for a moment before she said. “How about a winged hourglass with a skull in the middle that has a ribbon around it that reads “Time Flies Live it Up”? She quirked a brow at him and Frank grinned. “Do it.”

Alex, on the other side of the room groaned and laughed. “Fuck.”

*

The tattoos took the entire group a few hours, with a break where Jack ordered food for everyone, including the tattoo artists. He ordered some huge sandwiches from a gourmet sandwich shop located in the Diamond district and paid to have them delivered to the tattoo parlour.

It was quite late by the time they all left. Everyone had gotten some sort of tattoo:
Zsasz had a skull tattooed behind his ear, Thea and Trope had matching, rainbow colored, steampunk inspired skull tattoos, Alex had a skull with one crossed bone on the shoulder of his missing arm, Alice had a henna tattoo matching Alex’s though with stylized flowers, Frost had a similar tattoo to Zsasz, but of a Celtic design, and also behind his ear while Agatha had a death head moth tattoo between her breasts. Bane had a tolima black tattoo done on the underside of his left forearm and Kermit left with a tiny green frog tattooed on her hip.

As their group stood outside the tattoo parlor Jack, his arm around Harley’s shoulders, grinned looking over everyone.

“All right, go home, change—we meet back at the amusement park with the rest of the gang in two hours. Tonight is our first night of unleashing hell. We are bringing down everything that Maroni owned—and I mean everything. Every business, every private residence, every drug dealer, pimp, strip club...if Maroni’s name is on it or attached to it, we are going to burn it. After tonight, everything for us will be different. Tonight the Red Hood gang will be different. We are stepping up and showing that this town deserves a better class of criminal, and we are going to give it to them. We are going to let Gotham, let the mob know...that this…” Jack put his arms out as if he would encompass all of Gotham. “That Gotham belongs to us, to the Red Hood. We are going to let Falcone know that it is time to step aside and let a younger man take over.” Jack laughed. “Oh...this is gonna be fun!”

*

A couple of hours later, Jack was in his lab working swiftly, wearing only a pair of black slacks, no shoes or socks, purple rubber gloves, the necklace from his aunt and his suspenders. He had a pair of goggles over his eyes, and a wide smile as he carefully poured liquid—the color of which was hard to see in the dim colored lights of the lab—into the empty beer bottles he was using. After pouring in the liquid, Jack would carefully add tar into the mix to make the molotov’s contents sticky, allowing them to not just to stick to what he wanted to burn, but to create a thick, black smoke. The obscuring smoke would make putting the fire out more difficult, as well as making escape from any buildings more difficult for anyone trapped inside. The sound of Aurora was playing through the speakers of the lab singing “Life On Mars” while he worked. Bane, Zsasz, Jason, and Frost were also in the lab, all of them carefully putting the lighter fluid soaked rags into the tops of the bottles as Jack handed them off—using hair dryers on low setting to quickly dry the rags once they were secure in the bottles—before placing the explosives into plastic crates. Frank, Roxy, and Duela came in to collect the filled crates, carefully carrying them off to load into the vehicles that were now parked around the haunted house attraction.

Inside the main house, the warm smell of coffee filled the lower levels as Harley along with Agatha, were sitting at the kitchen table with at least three dozen guns of various sizes and shapes spread out before the two women. Harley had some music playing on her phone while she and Agatha worked on loading all of the weapons. Angora was sitting nearby, a blanket laid out on the floor as she worked to sharpen knives.

In the living room Thea and Trope were busy on their computers, the two women sitting hip to hip. They were working on hacking into some of the Gotham City traffic cams while also booting up their viruses to let loose on Maroni’s computers, building alarms, and power systems.

The ladies had spent over a hour working when the front door burst open with a loud BANG! against the wall.

Harley yelped, nearly dropping the last gun she was loading as she heard her husband yell from the next room over the startled squeals of Thea and Trope.
“I’m done woman!! Time to take a shower!” His exclamation was followed by Jack’s laughter.

Harley giggled and rolled her eyes finishing with the gun just as Jack came into the kitchen. He pouted a little as he stopped in the doorway and murmured. “Thea and Trope just cursed me out for scaring them.”

Agatha laughed. “You deserved it! You could have gotten one of us shot in here!”

Jack’s lips protruded just a hint further, which had Agatha laughing. “Fine, I forgive you. What about you Harley?”

Harley grinned, distracted by how adorable her husband looked wearing nothing but slacks and suspenders, his goggles, which he had clearly forgotten to take off, still sitting on his forehead.

“I always forgive you puddin.”

Jack beamed. “Come shower with me?”

Harley glanced at Agatha who laughed. “Go on. I can finish up here.”

Harley grinned. “Thank you!”

She hopped up and grabbed Jack by the hand and hurried toward the stairs.

*

Harley closed her eyes letting the water run over her face. Jack had been rubbing her back with soap. She felt Jack wrap his arms behind her, pressing his lips to her shoulder. She smiled and leaned back against him.

Jack whispered against her ear. “I’m excited about tonight, what about you pumpkin?”

Harley giggled enjoying the feel of Jack’s chest against her back, the hint of an erection between her cheeks as she let the warm water roll down her breasts.

“Very! I’ve never thrown a molotov before! It’ll be fun,” she replied with enthusiasm.

Jack laughed and squeezed her tightly, catching the lobe of her ear with his teeth. Harley squealed and giggled, wrapping her arms around him and leaned her head toward his lips as Jack tickled her ear with his tongue. Harley wiggled in response to the tickle of his tongue which only made Jack chuckle.

“I thought we might hit some of Maroni’s favorite and most profitable places first tonight. I basically saved the best for us--everyone else has their own assignments, but only the best for the Red Hood and his gal.” Jack licked her ear to emphasize that she was his girl before he continued.

“Maroni owns a strip club called “The Hairless Cat” and a credit union that he uses as a cover for money laundering, The Gotham Credit Union. We are going to hit the main branch. I figure after Thea and Trope hack their systems and transfer all the money we can burn it to the ground along with two of his bigger meth labs. Oh, and a restaurant that serves as a front for weapons dealing.” Jack chuckled. “I also thought we might have some fun, you and I go shoot some of his drug dealers…” Harley squealed with delight.

“That sounds fun puddin!!”

Jack laughed. “So a little drive by shooting, just you and me toots. If we shoot the wrong people...oh well!” Jack moved his hands over her slick body to cup her breasts. “There are going to be so many fireworks tonight sweets!” He laughed as he squeezed her breasts.

He kissed her neck keeping one hand on her breasts, the other sliding down her stomach, his long, graceful fingers finding their way between her legs. Harley moaned softly, rubbing herself against his seeking fingers.

“Mm...puddin...ah...we don’t...oh!...hehe...we don’t have time…” Harley groaned thrusting her hips as he rubbed just a little harder.

Jack purred. “Just a quicky Harley...help me focus for tonight. Hmm...don’t you want your puddin to be relaxed?”

Harley laughed. “You don’t need help focusing. But I suppose if you need help relaxing...”

Jack grinned rubbing himself against her wet backside. “Yes I do.”

Harley giggled her body shivering with pleasure. “Oh Jack…”

He pressed his fingers against hers, cupping her sex with his hand. “Harley...my Harley…” He cooed, his voice low and seductive. He groaned as he rubbed himself against her backside.

Harley felt that hot pull in her groin, her nipples hard with the need of his touch.

Jack released her only to turn her around in order to kiss her. He walked her back against the shower wall so he could press his body against hers, feeling the soft, slick give of her body against his.

Jack reached up to brush her wet hair from her face before kissing her with a desperation that she felt too. Harley grabbed his wet hair, forcing his mouth to hers, their tongues teasing each other, exploring the depths of their mouths.

Jack reached around and grabbed her rear, pressing his fingers almost painfully into her skin as he pressed himself against her, kissing his wife passionately. Harley reached down and grabbed his wet member in her hand, stroking until Jack groaned with an almost painful need against her lips. He thrust into her grip, feeling the grasp of her hand around him, needing her, needing to feel her surrounding him. She squeezed, then stroked her thumb over the head of his erection before concentrating her strokes around the head of his shaft smiling when Jack jerked, releasing his hold on her ass to slam his hands against the wall on either side of her head. He groaned, his nose alongside hers, his lips brushing her mouth. “Harley,” he hissed as she continued to rub her hand up and down, reaching down with her other hand to grab his balls and hold him gently while massaging. Jack groaned, his eyes open only to slits. She could see the blue of his eyes through his thick lashes as he gazed at her. Harley felt her body burn in response to Jack’s pleasure. All she wanted to do was pleasure him, let him know how much she loved him, needed him, how much he meant to her.

Jack kissed her while sliding one hand down between them, his fingers slipping between her legs.

Harley gasped softly when he touched her, arching toward the back of the shower, his fingers sliding into her at the same time pressing against her clitoris. Harley groaned, her eyes fluttering as Jack curled his fingers, found her g-spot and pressed with just the right amount of pressure that she slid up on her toes for a moment with a deep moan. She licked his lips while she kept stroking him at the same time Jack fingered her. Both their bodies moved with the motions of their hands, the two of them stared at each other, savagely kissing or licking each other.

Jack rubbed the pad of his thumb against her clitoris, three fingers thrusting, curving into her, speeding her closer to climax. Harley squeezed, stroked Jack at the same time until Jack laid his forehead against hers, his voice catching as he moaned.

Harley came then, thrusting her pelvis into his hands with a moaning shudder.

Jack, his forehead against her pleaded. “Harls…I need you baby…”

She smiled watching his face contorted with pleasure as she squeezed just a little harder while the warmth of her orgasm settled through her.

“Take me Jack,” she whispered before catching his mouth in a kiss.

Jack eased his fingers out of her, kissed her tenderly. Harley released him, and was about to wrap her arms around him when Jack spun her around and pushed her up against the shower wall, at the same time kicking her feet further apart into a wider stance.

He laid one hand against her hip while grabbing himself and guiding his erection to her. Harley lifted up on her toes and arched her back to push her rear towards Jack in response as her husband eased into her.

They both groaned together, both of them ached for each other--their need to share in each other was overpowering.

Jack wrapped his hands around her hips, his fingers pressing into her flesh. Harley shuddered. She loved the way it felt when Jack grabbed her hips and held on to her, thrusting hard and fast into her. She cried out with pleasure squeezing her eyes close as she thrust back.

Jack shoved against her hard enough that Harley’s entire body bounced as she pushed back against the wall meeting his thrusts.

Harley arched her back more, groaning. “Oh puddin…”

She gasped feeling that wonderful, warm buildup as pleasure, burning in her core and rolling up her body. Her fingers struggled against the wet tile as her orgasm rippled through her. “Jack!!”

Jack groaned loudly, reaching around to wrap his arms around his wife and pull her back against him. He wrapped one arm around her breasts, his left hand cupping and squeezing one breast, his lips against her ear. “Uh...Harley...I love you...my girl...uh...my everything…”

Harley leaned back with a moan. She tossed one arm behind her to grab Jack’s neck. He ran his free hand up her side, along her arm to grasp her elbow continuing to fuck her hard and fast, his quickly approaching orgasm prompted his movements to speed up as his need to climax raced closer.

Harley turned enough that she could see Jack’s face. He smiled at her, his blue eyes framed by his thick lashes which made the blue even brighter in the dimly lit shower.

“Jack...my Jack…” she purred softly jerking with each thrust, squeezing him tight. She moaned, laying her head against his forehead. “I love you Jack...I love you.”

Jack came at her words,groaning loudly and making several more hard thrusts into Harley, slapping into her as he let out a loud groan of release.

Harley squeezed him tight, her fingers caressing the back of his neck.

Jack held Harley tightly as if he were afraid to let her go. They both took several minutes to catch their breath until finally Harley dropped slowly down on the flat of her feet. Jack pulled out, but he held her close swaying slightly, kissing her ear, down her neck and her shoulder.

“My pumpkin pie,” he whispered accompanied by a soft giggle. “My girl.”

Harley closed her eyes leaning heavily against him. “Mmm...my puddin.”

Jack finally turned her completely around to kiss her. “All right, now I’m ready to go cause some mayhem.”

Harley giggled caressing his face. “Let’s go have some fun puddin!”

*

Jack came down stairs first. He was dressed in a three piece suit of deep, dark burgundy with a dark purple dress shirt and light purple, almost lavender tie with a pair of two-tone, burgundy and brown wingtips; he also wore a pair of purple gloves that matched the shirt he wore. His hair was slicked back and Harley had done his makeup, dark eyeliner that brought out his blue eyes, some dark blue and silver eyeshadow with a maroon lipstick. Right behind him, her makeup the same colors as Jack, though her eyeliner was much more “cateye” than Jack came Harley. She wore her hair loose and wavy and she wore a suit similar in color to Jack’s though the upper lapels of her shorter jacket were black and the sleeves were pushed up to her elbows, her gold garotte bracelet wrapped around her wrist. She wore a simple black dress shirt underneath and a pair of white and black, pointy-toed, black ankle boots. They both wore shoulder holsters under their jackets for their guns, and they each had a knife at their hips. Agatha, who had been sitting on the couch with Thea and Trope drinking coffee and discussing computer hacking with the two young women, turned when she heard Jack and Harley coming down the stairs. She squealed with delight when she saw them.

“You two look fabulous!! I need a picture!” Agatha jumped up reaching for her phone that sat on the coffee table.

Jack laughed hopping down the last two steps before he turned around and took Harley’s hand. “It’s like prom!” he said with a grin as he guided her down the last two steps. “You know, I never went to prom.”

Harley laughed as Jack pulled her against him before he turned to smile at Agatha. Jack licked Harley’s ear playfully, made Harley giggle. “Too bad I didn’t buy you a corsage,” he murmured against her ear.

Harley squirmed and laughed. “Oh puddin!”

Agatha laughed. “Look at my babies getting ready to go declare war on Falcone! Okay you two, smile.”

Jack and Harley pressed their cheeks together and smiled. Agatha took several pictures before she was willing to let them go.

“There--perfect!” She grinned. “I need to get these made into a portrait.”

Jack laughed sliding his hand down Harley’s back to take her hand. “All right, everyone ready, cars loaded, everyone has their targets?”

There was a round of confirmations. Jack grinned. “All right, then. Let’s go paint the town boys and girls!”

Everyone headed out.
Frost hung back. Jack saw the man standing by the wall near the front door. It was clear something was bothering him by the way he twisted a ring he wore on his middle finger. Agatha was cleaning up a little, picking up the cups and glasses left behind and carrying them into the kitchen. Jack glanced at Harley, then back at Frost. She nodded reaching out with her fingertip to catch Jack’s chin, leaning in to kiss him before she smiled and picked up a few cups, following Agatha into the kitchen.

Jack slid his hands into the pockets of his slacks and waltzed over to First.

“Something on your mind?” he asked leaning on the wall beside Frost. Frost frowned looking down at his shoes.

Jack frowned. “You upset about the plan?”

Frost shook his head. “No Boss, it’s just…I…” He sighed. “I don’t like you and Harley going out without me. I know you want to destroy everything of Maroni’s in one night, but what if something goes wrong Boss and I ain’t there to protect you and Harley? I just…I feel like I need to be with you both, like I’m letting you down…”

Jack reached up and put his hand on Frost’s shoulder. “You could never let me down Frost. I promise, it’s going to be fine. These guys will never know what hit them.”

Frost still didn’t looked convinced.

Jack chuckled. “How about you and my aunt follow us? That make you feel better? We’ll just add your destinations to ours and attack together.”

Frost smiled. “Thanks Boss,” he said with a nod. “That would make me feel better.”

Jack grinned hopping up on his toes to kiss Frost on the cheek before he laughed. “No problem Frost darling, no problem at all. Harley!! Auntie!! Time to go, ladies!”

Jack laughed. “Time to show Gotham a good time!”

*

The Hairless Cat was packed tonight. Alvar Maroni was here with his cousin Dino and a few friends to celebrate Alvar’s divorce from his witch of a wife, Norah. Alvar grinned as he sat near the stage, a large wad of bills in his front jacket pocket. He liked the stage shape, a long, narrow dick shaped stage with lights that ran along it as it spearred itself into the middle of the room. There were four poles that ran along the stage, and on each was a gorgeous woman dancing to the sounds of Portishead’s “Glory Box.” He grinned watching the girls. Sal was supposed to come by, but no one had seen him in the last couple of days. Alvar didn’t think too much about it. Sal was known to disappear and go see his mistress, some girl named Cinnamon or something. When he did, he usually didn’t tell anyone where he was or even when he was going. Alvar shrugged to himself dismissing his thoughts as he shipped his whiskey sour and grinned as the stripper in front of him, wearing nothing but a g-string, performed a very interesting move with her legs spread wide.

He was completely unaware of four people who stepped into the club, his attention fully on the woman in front of him.

*

Jack frowned as he stood in the doorway, his free arm around Harley’s waist, as he took a drag on the cigarette in his other gloved hand.
“This place smells like cheap booze and stale sweat.” He made a face, wrinkled his nose. He frowned at the patrons, then frowned more at the strippers letting the smoke from his cigarette slowly drift from between his lips.

Frost stood behind him, carrying a wooden beer crate filled with molotovs. (The bouncer at the door was gone, his body currently in the dumpster around the back of the club). Agatha stood beside Frost, her hand on her hip and as she looked around with a narrowed eyes.

Jack glanced to his wife as he tossed his cigarette onto the floor.

“Harley, do you mind?”

Harley kissed him on the cheek. Jack leaned toward her, his red painted lips formed a bright smile.

“Sure thing puddin.”

Harley took a step away from Jack. She walked through the crowd, pushing men and some of the strippers out of her way as she made her way to the stage. She was causing a little bit of a stir as she took the stage.

Harley giggled as she hopped onto the stage. The music had changed to Lana del Rey’s “Burning Desire.” Harley glanced across the club at her husband. She knew this wasn’t part of the plan and that she was playing with fire, but she grabbed the pole and arched back, her legs spread as she held onto the pole with one hand, her blonde hair falling back into a waterfall of gold, her eyes on her husband as she arched her entire body.

She slowly pulled herself back up and hooked her leg around the pole with a wink at her husband. Harley spun slowly before she dropped to her feet again. She bit her bottom lip, rolling her hips to the music, smiling as she slipped out of her jacket, letting it fall to the stage. If anyone noticed her guns, they paid no attention or thought it was part of her costume as Harley started to unbutton her shirt, strutting around the pole as she did, her eyes on Jack.

She licked her lips, stopping for a moment to lick her finger which she then dragged slowly down her chin, her throat and lingered between her breasts.

Jack hadn’t moved far from where they had initially stopped as his attention was drawn to his wife. He watched her intently. For a moment everything around him receded to the background, only Harley stood out, her shirt unbuttoned to her navel, her body undulated to the music as he gazed at the dark lace of her bra against her pale flesh, the lights dancing across her skin, the twist of her hips…

Then she grabbed the pole, pulled herself up and rolled back, lifting her legs and slowly spun to the music, demonstrating her gymnastic skills, the flexibility and strength of her body…

Jack felt that pull in his groin, that need only Harley could awaken in him, but mixed with that need was a flash of hot rage that there were others here, staring at his wife...

Alvar, who had a lovely raven haired stripper sitting on his lap looked up as the blonde climbed onto the stage. She was gorgeous he thought, even with all that clothing on. The young woman moved sensually to the music. Her body had a tight control that was punctuated with easy sensuality. When she stripped off her jacket showing a gun harness, he grinned. Women with weapons was something he always found sexy. Even as the brunette ground on his lap, Alvar found his attention focused on the blonde as she unbuttoned her blouse to her navel before she continued to dance to the music.

*

Jack narrowed his eyes, glancing around at the other men watching his wife. He hadn’t expected her to get on stage and start dancing. Well, he had expected her to get on stage, she was supposed to just announce that they were looking for anyone named Maroni, a little distraction, a little bit of theater for fun, just so they would make more of an impression on any of those lucky to escape. He wanted to make sure Falcone knew exactly who was doing all of this...but damn it, he thought. If she wasn’t so distracting...dancing like that...unbuttoning her blouse, exuding sex appeal, her body, that smile...he was at once angry with her for drawing the attention of every man in a place like this, while at the same time he was pleased with her, proud that she was his girl, knowing that no matter what happened, Harley was his wife, his lover...no one else's...and he...he was hers.

But even though he knew that, a hot spike of jealousy drove through the middle of his heart at everyone who watched her. It was a jealousy so strong that burning this strip club to the ground was going to be even more of a pleasure.

*

Harley did a spin, arching her body in a beautiful curve before she dropped herself back to her feet and shook out her long, blonde hair. She could tell by Jack’s expression from across the room, that her little dance needed to end. But she did have the attention of everyone in the club, which had been the reason for her to jump up here. Her lips tightened in a broad grin.

“Anyone named Maroni here?” she yelled into the strip club.

Alvar grinned and raised his hand. “Right here sweetheart.”

They both heard someone at the bar yell something at her, but Harley’s attention was on the “Maroni” in front of her.

Harley smiled slowly and seductively as she walked closer pulling her weapons at the same time. She squatted down, her legs wide, resting her elbows on her thighs as she held one of her guns close and slowly ran her tongue up the barrel before she asked.

“Are you really?”

Alvar grinned. “Sure am honey. Alvar Maroni and I’m all yours.”

He shoved the brunette off his lap--who grunted with a sour look at both him and the blonde on stage--and patted his thighs. “Wanna have a sit?”

Harley giggled sliding seductively off the stage. Alvar’s attention was on Harley so he didn’t noticed the man who walked up behind him. Alvar grinned as Harley stopped to stand between his legs.

Alvar licked his lips looking her up and down. “So--what’s your name?”

“Oh sugar, you can call me Harley, everyone does.”

That was the moment that Alvar felt a hand grab his hair and painfully yank his head back, a large knife appearing under his chin at the same time. A few of the people close by screamed. Jack grinned knowing they might run for the front door of this place but Frost was there waiting, and his aunt was prowling the establishment to make sure no one thought they would be funny and call the cops. Harley, with a giggle, had jumped back onto the stage. One of the strippers had screamed, trying to run off the stage but Harley shot her in the thigh, causing everyone in the strip club to stop moving as Harley yelled out.

“Next one who decides to run for it is going to get a big headache!”

Jack, his fingers painfully tight in the man’s hair, leaned close to Alvar’s ear, his red painted lips brushed Alvar’s ear. “That’s my wife you were ogling there, trying to get to sit on your lap...Alvar you said.” Jack laughed. “I’m a very jealous man. My plan had been just to shoot you...well...not you specifically...anyone related to Maroni...you know...just to show that everything the Red Hood gang is doing this evening, is Maroni specific. But...” Jack chuckled. “You were lucky enough to annoy me specifically this evening, so you are going to get special treatment.”

Jack slid the knife’s edge carefully up from Alvar’s throat and along his cheek up to the man’s forehead. Everyone in the club seemed to be holding their breath…

Jack giggled. “Now bear with me Alvar honey, I’ve never done this before….”

Jack pulled up on Alvar’s head his fingers using the man’s hair to pull the skin tight, at the same time that his knife cut through the flesh along Alvar’s forehead.

Alvar screamed.
Burning Down the House

Frost grimaced. From where he stood at the corner of the bar with the crate of molotovs at his elbow he had a pretty good view of Jack and Harley. He glanced over to Agatha who was sitting at the bar, sipping a lavender lemonade cocktail. Her long legs were crossed and her gun rested on the bar in front of her, her fingers lying across it casually. If Jack’s actions disturbed her, she gave no indication. Frost knew Agatha well enough by now to recognize that she wasn’t as relaxed as she looked; she was poised to spring into action at a moment’s notice, not that anyone else would recognize that but him. Even so, it still amazed him how the woman had convinced the bartender to make her a drink while Jack was scalping a man. Frost knew Agatha was charming, but he didn’t really understand exactly how charming the older woman was until he saw her sitting at the bar sipping that drink. Agatha definitely had a way of getting what she wanted, no matter the situation.

Alvar was screaming, his face covered in blood. The noise had been transformed from a human cry into something more primal, piercing. When Alvar had tried to reach up and grab at Jack, Harley had yanked her knife off her hip and swiftly used it to pin one of Alvar’s hands to his thigh.

There were a few of the strippers and a couple of the patrons who had looked away, who had reacted to Jack scalping Alvar with gasps, cries, some retching, but mostly everyone was frozen, shocked. No one had made a move for the door, no one picked up their phones. Most just waited to see what would happen next. Frost didn’t know what that said about the people in this joint, or maybe the patrons and employees’ reactions said more about Gotham than anything else.

Not everyone had remained still, Frost noted. One patron, some balding Gotham businessman here to take a load off and stare at some pretty naked women, had tried to make a dash for the door. The bald little businessman had reacted to the first slice of Jack’s knife across Alvar Maroni’s forehead by bolting up from his chair and making a run for it. Harley had reacted swiftly, swinging her gun around and pulled the trigger without hesitation. The man dropped, a bullet in his back.

Harley was the only one of the four of them to shoot her gun (not including the stripper she had shot in the beginning after Harley’s dance on the pole). After that, no one had tried to take a chance for the door, or to call the cops. (Frost attributed that more to the amount of other illegal activities that went on in here and the fact that several of these men did not want certain “significant others” to know of their extracurricular activities, while a few more well-known Gothamites didn’t want it known by the public that they frequented strip clubs. Frost didn’t know names necessarily, but there were a few faces here he recognized from the local news, a politician, a police captain...) Frost shook his head. All of these idiots probably figured if they kept quiet, did nothing, then they would walk out of here alive, thinking this little incident had more to do with the mob and the man that was being scalped than it did with them.

Frost sighed. They were all so wrong.

A few of them would make it out of here alive, but Frost was pretty confident a lot more of them were going to die. He wasn’t certain if he ought to be bothered by the fact that he wasn’t bothered with that realization.

*

Jack finished with Alvar, wrinkling his nose in disgust and pulled his gun; he shot the man in the head to stop his screaming. Harley pulled her knife out of Alvar’s thigh, wiping it on the dead man’s knee as Jack shook his head.
“Okay, Harls--remind me to never to that again all right?” Jack shuddered, but then chuckled.

Harley made a face. “Agreed puddin.”

Jack wiped his knife on Alvar’s shoulder, slipped it back on his belt before he walked over to Harley and wrapped a hand around her waist to pull her against him. The crowd of people watched the two in stunned silence as the music continued to play through its loop of songs; Lana del Rey began to croon low and soft.

“I’ve been out on that open road
You can be my full time daddy, white and gold
Singing blues has been getting old
But you can be my full time baby, hot or cold…”

Jack, his eyes slightly hooded, his gazed filled with lust, brushed his nose against Harley’s with a bright smile before he caressed her lips with his. He swung her around, dancing with her for a moment to the smooth, creamy sounds of del Rey’s voice before he jogged over and hopped up on the stripper stage, his gun in one hand, reached down with his free hand to tug Harley onto the stage with him. He grinned wrapping his arm around her waist once more, gazing at her, moving slowly back and forth to the rhythm of the music, each of them holding their guns at their sides. Harley gazed up at Jack, her smile soft as she whispered.

“I love you.”

Jack swayed to the music and leaned down to kiss her cheek, his red lips brushing along her cheek to her ear. “I love you too pumpkin.”

He turned her around, held her back against his chest and wrapped his free arm around her while he pointed his gun out to the audience, Harley pointed her gun in the opposite direction, the two of them swaying to the song.

Agatha finished her drink and jumped off the stool, held her gun up as she swept the club, a small smile on her lips.

Agatha grinned. She really hadn’t had this much fun since she had been a Talon. (That had been such a strange time in her life, one that she had both hated and enjoyed.) Frost stayed where he was, his hand on the crate of molotovs; no one had yet to register what they were, their attention completely on the couple on the stage.

At the other end of the bar, Alvar’s cousin Dino had slowly walked himself backwards into the shadows of the club. He was heading toward the dressing rooms backstage. He had surreptitiously tried calling Sal, but had been met with silence; Sal’s message box was filled. Dino wasn’t sure who else to call. He had thought about Falcone, but Sal had told mentioned often enough that he didn’t want Falcone in his business. They may work for the old man, but that didn’t mean he needed The Roman to come rescue him. Sal had said the less he owed The Roman, the better. Dino figured his only recourse was to get the fuck out of here because he just had a gut feeling, this wasn’t going to end with just Alvar’s death. While all the attention was on the two nut jobs on the stage, Dino slipped into the dressing rooms and out the back.

“All right boys and girls!! Now that the floor show is over, I’m here to let you know that as leader of the Red Hood, I’ve declared everything owned by Sal Maroni to now belong to me. AND since I’m new to the mob business, I’ve decided to make a few…downgrades…close a few shops…downsize “Harley, pumpkin, I could use a cigarette,” Jack murmured to his wife.

Harley giggled and spun around in his arms. She pulled open Jack’s jacket, caressed his chest, drew Jack’s attention for a moment as she pressed her hips close and pulled the package of cigarettes out of his inner coat pocket. The lighter was with the pack of cigarettes; she slipped it out, licking Jack’s chin as she did so.

Jack grinned while glancing once more at her. She pulled out a cigarette, placed it between her lips before she flicked the lighter’s flame to life. Jack licked his lips watching her and for a moment the people around him—his victims—were forgotten as he gazed lustfully at his wife while she cupped the lighter flame with one hand and held it to the cigarette. Harley took a couple of puffs. She finally took a deep drag on the cigarette before taking it out, the cigarette stained red with her lipstick, and placed it between Jack’s lips. She smiled at him before leaning close to him, blowing a stream of white smoke out with a slow breath. The smoke flowed sensually from her mouth, drifting over Jack’s lips and chin.

Jack grinned at her as he took a drag on his cigarette. He reached up to take it out from between his lips, flicked a few ashes onto the stage floor before he leaned down to kiss Harley. He kissed her hard, his tongue sliding into her mouth at the same time as the smoke drifted from between his lips.

Harley made a soft sound of want as she reached up with her free hand, grabbed the back of his neck. She pressed her fingers into his thick hair and stood on her tiptoes as she kissed him hungrily.

Harley bit at his lips and tongue, flicking the tip of her tongue over his lips before she took a step back, dragging her hand from the back of his neck, down over his front with a brief caress over his crotch.

Jack grinned at her taking another drag on his cigarette; his gun hand never once wavered from its aim into the club. He smiled wide, smoke flowing from between his teeth as he turned back to the patrons.

“As I was saying: I’m closing The Hairless Cat down.”

A few of the strippers made noises of protest, and there was also a low muttering among the patrons (which Jack found utterly hilarious that despite him scalping a man, a few had enough balls to be upset at him for closing a strip club!) Finally one man stood up. He was at least six feet four, wearing jeans, a t-shirt, and despite the humid Gotham summer weather, he wore a leather jacket and a bandana wrapped around his head; a few greasy locks of blonde hair hung from underneath the bandana.

“Who the fuck do you think you are, ya little fruit, coming in here killing that shit,” (here he pointed at Alvar’s body) “and messing up the show? I paid to see some girls strip, not to get caught up in some Gotham mob shitshow! Take your bitch and let some of the girls get back to stripping!!”

The man turned around to the club, clearly hoping for some support, but the club patrons remained quiet, leaving only the sounds of del Rey to fill the silence. Jack grinned as the man turned back to face Jack clearly thinking his much larger size would be enough to intimidate Jack, despite Jack being armed. Jack sighed with annoyance. “I just told you sweetheart–Red Hood and don’t ever call my wife a bitch.” The jovial tone to Jack’s voice dropped to a gravelly snarl on the last words of his sentence.
The biker sneered. “You look like some piece of fruit cake. That chick can’t be your wife.”

The man laughed. “Toss her down here, I’ll show her what a real man is like in the sack.” He turned to look around at the club goers again, but was again met with silence instead of the laughter he had hoped.

Jack frowned. Harley turned to look at him and Jack shook his head sadly. “I really can’t stand homophobes or idiots. This man is clearly both.”

Jack smiled back at the man below, showing all of his teeth. For the first time since he spoke up, the biker paled, looking unsure of himself. Jack’s eyebrows rose a millimeter, barely noticeable, but in the next second real fear flashed through the man’s eyes.

Jack chuckled. “Oh, I guess you just now realized that you fucked up.”

Jack raised his hand and pulled the trigger on his weapon, shot the man in the face. The smile on the Red Hood leader’s lips widened slightly. A few of the women (and men) screamed until Jack snarled and fired another round into the ceiling.

“All right, enough!” He rolled his eyes. “Does anyone else wish to file a complaint?” Jack looked around. “No? Well, then, that’s the big business announcement. I have a few other places to visit tonight so...ciao sweetlings! Oh and can I get someone to ah...I don’t know...cover up these boys and take that young woman into the back and patch her up?” Jack smiled. One of the waitresses hurried over with a tablecloth, staring at Jack as she tossed it over Alvar. Another young woman did the same to the biker, both of them staring at Jack and Harley with clear fear.

Jack spun Harley around and took her hand before the two of them walked off the stage. “You might as well finish up for the evening,” Jack called out motioning to the strippers at the far end of the stage.

*

Agatha walked over to Frost and pulled out one of the molotovs from the small crate.

“You ready big boy?”

Frost nodded with a smile at her.

*

Jack and Harley approached Frost and Agatha as they both slid their weapons back into holsters. Jack walked over to the bar and slipped onto one of the stools, tugging Harley onto his lap. The music had changed to Sky Ferreira “Red Lips.” The music played for a bit until one of the dancers slowed returned to the stage, followed by a couple more as it became clear that neither Jack nor Harley were going to shoot everyone else.

At the bar Jack motioned at the bartender. “Can you make me two black russians?”

The man nodded mutely. It only took him a minute to mix the drinks. Agatha and Frost moved closer.

Agatha frowned. “Jackie dear, what are you doing?”

Jack grinned. “Element of surprise.”
He sipped his drink, kept his arms around Harley who giggled. “Jack you’re terrible!”

Jack smiled. “It’s all a power move my sweet, all a power move.”

Jack took another couple of sips of his drink, kissing Harley behind the ear before he stood up. “All right Auntie, Frost--we have other places to be tonight!”

Jack walked to the door with Harley, Frost, and Agatha following. He turned pulled out his lighter, slipped one of the molotovs out of the crate that Frost had picked up and carried over, pulled out one for Harley and another for his aunt, handing them out like party favors.

He smiled brightly. “All right ladies, ready?”

Harley giggled. “Sure thing puddin.”

Agatha shook her head with a smirk. “Always have to make a production out of something simple don’t you Jackie?”

Jack laughed. “What fun is life without a little theater?”

Jack pulled out his lighter and swiftly lit the rags hanging out of each molotov. The fire burst to life in an instant before Jack turned in one graceful move and tossed the bottle into the room toward the stage. Harley did the same, aiming for the chairs around the stage while Agatha aimed for the bar.

The results were instantaneous. The bottles hit the floor, one hit the stage and Agatha’s shattered a couple of open bottles of liquor along the bar counter. The molotovs shattered before anyone realized what was happening, the fire burst to life and almost immediately began to burn bright and viciously. Jack, Harley and Agatha each grabbed more molotovs, Jack ready to light the rags of the bottle, which came alight in seconds, the three of them throwing their bottles at the same time in three different locations to the sound of screams as the fire, thanks to the liquid contents and the tar inside, stuck and burned, engulfing everything around the shattered bottles and spreading quickly.

Jack started laughing as the placed burned. He lit the last two bottles in the case that Frost was carrying. “Just throw the whole thing in Frost.”

Frost shrugged and tossed the crate with the last two molotovs into the club. Already there were several people on fire, the flames licking up the walls and along the floor.

Jack was pleased to note that the fire alarms didn’t go off and if there was a sprinkler system in the place, it didn’t seem to work.

The alcohol behind the bar caught when Agatha’s second throw had hit several other bottles along the back wall, shattering them along with the molotov. The bartender screamed as the flaming liquid hit him. Jack grabbed Harley by her upper arm.

“Oh well! Those molotovs were stronger than I thought they would be! Come on!”

The four of them hurried out of the strip club with Jack turning around and yanking the door closed, already hearing the sounds of fists against the door.

Jack laughed and grabbed Harley. “Wonder if they’ll figure out the door isn’t locked in time?”

The four of them ran for the car with Jack and Harley chuckling.
Frost turned left, watching as Jack and Harley drove in the opposite direction. He frowned slightly.
Agatha smiled reaching over to lay her hand on his thigh. “They’ll be fine.”

Frost nodded. “Yeah, I know.”

Frost glanced sideways at Agatha as he drove. “I keep meaning to ask you Aggie.”

Frost was the only one in the world who could get away with calling her Aggie, Agatha thought with a smile...except maybe Jack who had called her Aunt Aggie a few times.

She smiled squeezing his leg. “What is it honey?”

Frost frowned. “I know part of why you came back was to protect Jack from the Owls but...this…”
Frost indicated with his head, his eyes, all of Gotham. “What he’s doing...the crime...the murder, arson…”

Agatha smiled with a lifted, perfectly arched eyebrow. “Why do I not stop him?”

Frost nodded. “I mean, I have my own reasons, but...I was just curious…”

Agatha leaned back in the seat, took a deep breath. “My being part of the Owls...it wasn’t my choice really. I...didn’t see another way for myself. I just didn’t want that for Bruce and Jack...especially Jack. He has always been delicate. I knew that from the start, and he seemed more so after his parents’ death. If I could have, I would have been there for him, but…” Agatha shook her head. “But I can now. This...what he is doing...it’s his choice Jonny…” She stretched her legs out. “Good. Bad. Right. Wrong. It makes it all sound so black and white when in reality, everything is in shades of murky grey. Jack is doing what he feels is right. Right for him and Harley...Bruce is doing what he sees is right. I guess I’m supporting Jack over Bruce simply because I understand Jack better.”

Frost nodded. “Yeah...I can get that.”

Agatha smiled and rubbed his thigh.

*

Across town Jason slipped off his motorcycle carefully. His bike, a black Kawasaki Ninja ZX-10R, was his pride and joy, the first thing he bought himself after the gang's first successful job. It was his baby and it was damn fast. With some of his tweaking, he had improved both its acceleration and top speed.

As Jason stepped off the bike, he moved carefully. He wore a backpack that contained half a dozen molotovs in it and the constant jingle in the backpack was making him nervous. Roxy pulled up beside him on her own bike, a MV Agusta F4 1000 R, red and green; was a beaut he thought, as he watched her ease off her bike. They had gone shopping together, purchased their bikes on the same day. She moved carefully, also wearing a backpack, also filled with molotovs. Jason carefully pulled out a folded up piece of paper from the front pocket of his jeans and looked at the addresses he had written there.

Roxy walked over slowly to stand beside Jason, her hands in the pockets of her jacket. She looked around the area. It was quiet, only one car having driven by in the last minute or so. This area was mostly businesses now closed and this late at night (or early in the morning) there was no traffic to speak of except the two of them. She returned her attention to the building in front of her. The building was an old brick building from around the 19th century, the home to a large pawn shop owned by Sal Maroni called: “Gotham Cash House.”
Roxy frowned at the sign. “Yep, this is the place. Maroni owned the two adjacent buildings too right?”

Jason nodded. “Yeah…” He looked at the paper. “That drug store…” He pointed at the building across the street. “And that dry cleaner.” He grinned glancing sideways at Roxy. “You ready?”

Roxy nodded. “I’ll be glad to get some of these off my back.”

Jason laughed. “Me too.” He turned around and opened up one of the bags on the back of his bike and pulled out a hammer. Roxy gave him a curious look as Jason smiled crookedly. “Just in case we can’t pick the locks.”

Roxy laughed.

*

In another part of Gotham, Victor Zsasz straightened up his tie as he eyed the place in front of him. He wrinkled his nose with a glance at Duela who looked as if she had smelled something sour.

“You smell it too?” Zsasz asked her.

She nodded. “Yeah, smells like rotten eggs.”

Zsasz sighed. “Guess that means we’re in the right place.”

Duela nodded. “So what do we do?”

Zsasz smiled. “You light ’em, I’ll toss them through the door. Simple as that.”

Duela shrugged with a smile. “Simple as that.”

Zsasz nodded. “It’s a meth lab, should light up nice and quick.”

“Like explode?” Duela asked. Zsasz shrugged and said, “Maybe--we should move after the first couple of molotovs.”

Duela chuckled. “Hey, you wanna get coffee after this?”

Zsasz frowned. “I really…”

Duela made a face at him. “Friends...friends getting coffee.”

“Oh.” Zsasz blushed. “Yes, coffee sounds nice.”

*

In the Fashion district, Alex, who was parked a little ways down the street from the credit union owned by Maroni, turned to look in the backseat of the SUV at Thea and Trope. The street was mostly quiet since it was after one a.m. on a weekday. Alex had parked by a couple of other cars before he shut the SUV down. The tinted windows made the interior of the vehicle even darker, but there was a dim glow coming from the back seat.

The two women were sitting close together, both with laptops on their laps, both dressed in black, one with pink hair, one with purple. They worked together efficiently, their eyes moving at the same speed back and forth as they read something on their computers, their fingers moved at equal speed on their keyboards. Alex had no idea what they were doing, only that they were transferring every Alex turned back around, picked up his phone. “You ladies mind if I turn on some fucking music?”

Together in unison they both said with a soft murmur. “Sure, go ahead.”

Alex glanced at the girls in the rearview one more time; their eyes had never left their computers. He shook his head gliding through his music library until he found something he liked and turned the volume on his phone up.

The sounds of Daft Punk “Human After All” filled the SUV as Alex watched the street, tapping his foot in time to the music and hoping Alice was sleeping peacefully.

Trope suddenly spoke up. “Hey...what is this?”

Alex turned around. “What?”

Trope looked up meeting Alex’s eyes. “I just found something interesting in one of the traffic light computer systems.”

Alex frowned. “Define interesting?”

Trope glanced at Thea and grinned. “Apparently someone has been hacking into the system too, but they left a little monitoring device there for using the traffic cams.”

Alex frowned. “Really? Who on earth would do that?”

Trope grinned. “I’m not a hundred percent sure yet, but my guess? Batman. I mean, from all the footage and the news, his stuff is pretty high tech and I can’t be sure, but it looks newly installed. I’m guessing it's just a camera, sorta like the ones that take your picture if you run a light, but this one looks like it just turns on and sends images...but I can’t…” Trope was suddenly distracted.

“Batman?” Alex frowned, skeptical.

Trope suddenly snarled. “Fuck! Damn thing was boobie trapped!”

Alex looked confused. “What?”

“I tried to hack into it, but as soon as I did the damn thing did some sort of feedback loop and burned itself out!” Trope growled.

Thea put her hand on her partner’s arm. “Hey, it's okay.” She leaned in and gave Trope a kiss at her corner of her mouth. Trope smiled at Thea then sighed. “I should’ve known something like that might happen.”

Thea tsked. “Honey, you couldn’t have known about that.”

Trope made a face.

Alex muttered again. “Batman?”

Trope glanced up again. “I thought of him because he has all those gadgets...at least that's what they say on the news about him...and if I was a vigilante I might try to hack the traffic cams. Certainly would help if you’re chasing someone and you lose them. Except that means Batman has to have a partner...someone to feed him the info...I don’t think he could hack into the cams and drive at the same time...”
Thea laughed, put her arm around her partner’s shoulders and yanked her close for a hug and another kiss. “Trope, you sound like one of those Batman conspiracy theorists.”

Trope giggled rubbing her nose against Thea’s. “Yeah, guess I do.”

Alex looked between the two of them. “So…are you fucking done with the transfer or what?”

The two women beamed at Alex. “All done.”

Alex grinned with a slow nod. “Great, let’s burn this fucker down.”

*

Roxy let out a half-laugh, half-exclamation of surprise at how swiftly the bottles burst into flames. It only took the two of them less than fifteen minutes to have all three buildings fully engulfed in flames.

Jason laughed. “Okay, that was cool.”

Roxy grabbed his arm. “You know, I didn’t think I cared much about fire, but I think I might have a little arsonist in my soul.”

Jason pulled his arm away from her only to put it back around her shoulders and give her a squeeze. “Yeah, I think I might have a little arsonist in my soul too Rox.” He kissed her on top of her head giving her one more squeeze. “We better get going before someone calls the fire department. Though…” He squinted in thought. “Maybe toss one more molotov…” Jason chuckled.

Roxy turned to walk back to her motorcycle. “Hold on, let me get my phone--I want a picture of your throwing the molotov.”

Jason grinned. “I knew you wanted me.”

Roxy made a rude noise that devolved into a laugh. She crouched down by her bike, pulled her phone out of side bag and hurried back over just as Jason lit another molotov.

He glanced sideways at Roxy. “Ready?”

She nodded and he threw just as Roxy snapped his picture. The bottle hit the side of the already burning building, smashing against the old brick. The weathered wood trim around the window caught fire, along with large patches where the tar had stuck to the brick to burn. Roxy laughed with a glance down at her phone. “That was perfect…” She looked up again about to say something to Jason when movement out of the corner of her eye caught her attention. She saw a long, black car whip around the corner of the building a few blocks up the street.

“SHIT! Jason!!” Roxy pointed before she took off at a run for her bike.

Jason, who had been watching the fire for a few more seconds, turned, saw the car; a long, dark shape barreling down the street. He cursed. “Fuck!”

He turned to race toward his bike as the Batmobile picked up speed, racing down the street toward them, a dark shadow bearing down like a demonic presence.

*

Batman had been driving along lost in thought. Dick had taken to his training with a dedication that impressed him. The young man had been asking about going out with him, but he had to give the young man credit; he wasn’t pushing, just inquiring and when Bruce put him off, Dick would simply train harder. Batman was thinking perhaps it was time to let the boy go with him when he heard the first reports over the radio about a fire. He had decided to check it out since he was in the neighborhood.

The Batmobile’s sensitive equipment had detected the smoke, but when Batman had turned the corner he had seen three buildings ablaze. But what had really drawn his attention were the two people silhouetted in the fire’s glow. He had clearly seen one of them throwing something at one of the already burning buildings.

Batman snarled. “Arsonists.”

For a moment he wondered if it was Garfield Lynns, but that was unlikely; there were two of them here, and they were on motorcycles. Just plain, ordinary arsonists.

Batman grinned with a hard set to his jaw.

As he raced down the street, Batman realized he had a choice. He could remain to do what he could with the buildings, or catch those two arsonists. He frowned for only a moment before he hit the gas, making the vehicle to jump forward, picking up speed.

*

Roxy’s motorcycle roared to life, Jason’s doing the same a second later beside her. She glanced at Jason with a grin. “Meet back at the park?”

Jason winked at her as he yanked his red helmet over his head. “I have one of the apartments in the back of the ‘Whip-It’ ride, wanna watch a movie and...who knows?”

Roxy grinned. “You’re on, Hellspawn.”

Roxy hit the gas, her bike rocketing forward. Jason watched her go for a moment with a grin before he turned to see the Batmobile closing quickly. He hit the gas and his motorcycle lunged forward like a caged animal let free. Jason yelled with excitement. “FUCK YEAH!!”

*

Batman hissed when he saw the bikes take off. They accelerated rapidly. He wasn't sure that his vehicle could keep up with the smaller, faster, more maneuverable vehicles, but he was going to try.

“Note to self...” he said out loud. “Work on making the Batmobile faster.”

*

Jason caught up to Roxy, maneuvered alongside her. They both looked back to see the Batmobile in pursuit. Jason grinned, wishing Jack was here; their leader would have loved this Jason thought, but at least he was going to have a story to tell the gang: getting chased by Batman. He grinned brightly as he motioned at Roxy. A two-way coming up. He motioned at her for them to split up. She nodded giving him a quick thumbs up. Batman couldn’t follow them both.

The two of them increased their speed more, rpm’s moving into the yellow as they split at the two-way, Roxy heading left, Jason right.

*
Batman snarled, they were splitting up and moving faster! He took a breath, counted to three and turned the wheel to the left.

*

Jason looked over his shoulder and hissed. The Bat was following Roxy. The ninja’s tires screeched as he pulled on the break lever, spun around and headed back in that direction. There was no way he was going to let the Bat catch Roxy. Just as he was trying to think what he should do, he realized…

...he still had one molotov in his backpack!

Jason hit the gas and the bike leapt to his call, the front wheel coming up off the pavement for a moment as Jason sped to help Roxy.

*

Roxy looked behind her and cursed. Batman was behind her and gaining speed. Her bike was fast and she thought it would be faster than a car, but clearly the Batmobile was something special and she had never actually tried to outrun a determined pursuer while she drove a motorcycle before; all of her experience had been a little less tense. She pushed her bike as hard as she could when she glanced in her mirror, her eyes widening as she saw Jason racing up behind the Batmobile, but remained on the car’s far right.

Jason grinned as he jerked his bike out on the side of the road so he could drive alongside the vigilante’s vehicle.

Jason slipped one arm out of the backpack’s strap, then the other, kept himself steady with experienced balance as he pulled his hands from the handlebars to whip the backpack around and yank out his last molotov. He dropped his backpack, letting it get yanked away from him by the wind as he pulled his lighter out from his front pants pocket to light the rag on the bottle. His motorcycle had slipped back without him actively giving the vehicle fuel; his right hand slammed down on the right handlebar. He twisted, gave the bike fuel, and forced the bike forward, almost even with the vigilante, barely visible through the tinted windows of his unique car. Jason let out a barking laugh as he threw the lit molotov at the Batmobile.

As soon as the bottle crashed against the car’s windshield, Jason leaned forward, grabbed the handles of his bike and twisted on the gas to its fullest.

Roxy grinned when she saw the flames explode across the front of the car. She hit the gas just as Jason came up alongside her. She gave him a thumbs up and Jason laughed returning the gesture, the two of them zipping off into the Gotham night.

*

Batman cursed as the glass exploded into fire, sticking to the car and blinding him as the fire covered the entirety of his windshield. He was forced to pull over; the fire sticking to the windshield made it impossible for him to see and the speed was just adding to the flames as he yanked the car to the side of the road, slamming on the brakes with a loud squeal. He got out of the car watching as the two bikers sped off and cursed silently to himself.

“Another note to self...add some sort of fire extinguisher to the outside of the Batmobile.” He muttered. “And find a way to add a flipping motorcycle.”

*
It was nearly three in the morning as Jack drove the Audi R7 along the back road while Marilyn Manson sang “Cry Little Sister.” Harley leaned back in her seat smiling in contentment as Jack drove with his left hand on the wheel and his right hand resting on her knee. Jack finally pulled the car to a stop, driving up along a guard rail following it to a round clear area big enough for a car to park. He turned off the engine, but left the car’s electric systems on, the music playing softly letting Manson continue his song. Jack had driven them outside the city, along a road with no streetlights and virtually no traffic. They were actually fairly close to the Wayne estates, having driven up to a little used road that had run past the house. Jack had only glanced at the manor once, but never said a word.

Harley had frowned when she saw the manor, but said nothing as they quickly drove by.

Jack had sent Frost and Agatha home after they had finished up at the docks, leaving several warehouses that belonged to Maroni burning. It had been quite beautiful he thought, watching all the destruction up close, but that had given him an idea, which was why Jack had driven them here.

Harley leaned forward to look out the windshield. “Where are we puddin’?”

Jack smiled. “Come on, I’ll show you.”

He turned the stereo up a pip or two before he stepped out of the car, leaving his door open. Harley watched him for a moment as he walked to the front of the car and leaned back against the hood. The night air was cool, a nice reprieve before the hot, humid summer day that would be coming.

Harley frowned staring at him for a few seconds before opening her door to follow. Though few lights were up here, the car’s pearlescent blue caught what little light there was and reflected it back in an almost eerie shine.

“So what are we…” she started to ask as she came around the front of the car, but Jack only pointed. Harley turned. They were parked at an elevated point above Gotham. The view was spectacular with the entire city laid out before them. But now she saw what Jack had wanted to show her. From where they were standing, not only could they see all of Gotham, but they could see the fires burning everywhere, every place a member of the Red Hood gang had hit was burning in bright reds and oranges, black smoke blending into the evening sky accompanied by the lights of a few fire trucks and police cars.

Harley leaned against the hood next to Jack.

“Wow,” she said softly. “It’s beautiful.”

Jack chuckled. “Wow indeed. After this baby, I’m going after Falcone...starting with that damned Ace Chemicals front of his...show him what happens to someone who takes what belongs to me.”

Harley smiled. “Bet that will be an even bigger fire.”

Jack glanced sideways at her with a grin.

They were both quiet for a few moments, watched the burning.

Jack laughed softly. “You know what’s funny Harley?”

Harley turned to look at her husband with a gentle smile. “What’s funny puddin’?”

“Bruce. This would anger him, what I’m doing, even though--in my own way--I’m doing good.”
Jack smiled as he reached into his jacket to pull out his cigarettes. Harley waited while Jack pulled out the cigarette from the pack, placing it between his lips. She watched intently, the way Jack’s red lips looked around the cigarette, the way he flicked the lighter to lift, holding the flame to the cigarette, his other hand cupped around the flame as he lit it, taking a deep drag once he had the cigarette burning. He leaned back as he held the smoke in his lungs for a few seconds before letting it go. Harley felt a warm ripple rush through her body. He looked so sexy she thought, smoking, the way his lips wrapped around the cigarette, his sharp profile, the way he held the cigarette between his gloved fingers. She smiled. She loved him so much.

“Bruce has always been about law, order, goodness, doing the right thing, but you know, like he can somehow make up for what happened to our parents with good deeds. And you know Harls? Sometimes that just isn’t enough. What I’m doing right now? Going after Falcone, burning away any and all traces of Maroni’s greasy fingerprints on Gotham...ultimately destroying all of it and putting myself in their place...it’s a good thing. Hell, I’ll be doing more good than Bruce ever will. You and I will be better criminals than any of them. We’ll bring a kind of control to the criminal elements of Gotham...We can make sure there is a different sort of control in Gotham.” Jack took another drag letting the smoke slowly ease from his lips and nostrils. “We’ll give Gotham something new, something it really needs.” Jack hissed. “Something Bruce in all his good works will never be able to do, bring a sort of order to Gotham...a level of control that the mob never had or even tried to impose.”

Jack took a hard, aggravated drag on his cigarette. “Never could make Bruce see things the way I do. He was always so sure he was right and I was just fucking crazy.”

Jack’s voice dropped to a whisper. “Guess we’ll see who’s the crazy one.”

Harley laid her hand on Jack’s thigh. Neither of them said anything for a while, just watched the fires burn in Gotham.

Harley watched her husband as he stared out at Gotham and at the fires they had started, his expression both angry and with an undercurrent of sadness. She could see it around his mouth, and his eyes, the hurt he was still carrying because of his brother. She wondered briefly if Jack would ever be able to fully separate himself from Bruce. He was desperate (even if he would never admit it aloud) for his brother’s love and approval. That was all he wanted and when he couldn’t have it, when he knew he would never be able to see the world like Bruce, never fit into Bruce’s worldview, Jack pushed him out, away as far as he could from his brother and his ideals.

Harley pushed herself up from the hood and walked back around to the car’s interior. Jack frowned watching her then jumped slightly when Harley turned the headlights on. He turned round to look through the windshield, but he could only vaguely make out her moving shadow. He heard her flipping through music until she found one she liked. She came back around, the music playing again and smiling at Jack. He heard the beginnings of Lana del Rey’s “Burning Desire” begin to play.

“Harls, what are you doing?” Jack asked watching her with a slight frown as she stepped in front of him.

“I’m going to put you in a better mood.” Harley purred as she walked just a short distance in front of the car so that she was illuminated by the headlights. She smiled at Jack as she ran her hands up her sides and into her hair, threading her fingers through her blond hair as she lifted it up and let it go while doing a slowly spin, her hips weaving back and forth as she danced to the music. She closed her eyes, pressed her teeth into her bottom lip as she moved opening her eyes to slits to watch her husband.

Jack scooted over so he leaned between the headlights and grinned as he brought his cigarette to his mouth. His wife was fully clothed, but his eyes traveled down her body as if she was naked. He smirked and took a drag on his cigarette as Harley stopped her spin to face him.

Harley pointed a toe to the ground, bending her leg slightly as she turned again, weaving her hips while she let her jacket slip down her arms. She caught it with one hand and spun the jacket over her head with a giggle.

Jack laughed happily watching her, smoke slowly flowing from between his lips and out of his nostrils as he chuckled.

Harley wrinkled her nose at him with a wide smile and tossed her jacket at him. Jack snatched it out of the air before laying it over the car’s hood behind him with a chuckle. He turned back to watching her and gave her a wolf whistle.

Harley winked at him as she tugged her shirt out from her slacks before she ran her fingers up the middle of her torso, slowly swayed her hips back and forth. She kept her eyes on Jack as she gradually unbuttoned each button of her blouse, making the slow reveal of her skin tantalizing, until the silk top hung open showing off the red lace bra she was wearing underneath.

Jack crossed an arm over his chest, tucking his hand under his arm and rested his elbow on his upper arm holding his cigarette to his lips while he watched her intently. He loved watching the sway of her hips, the silky fabric falling open to reveal her pale skin, the red cloth bright against her flesh. His blue eyes were intense as his gazed at each movement of her body, each sway of her hips, each turn, and her skin as it was exposed to the night air. Her skin was almost incandescent in the headlights.

Harley rolled her shoulders, sliding both hands down her hips, swaying to the side so Jack could watch while she slowly pulled the side zipper down over the roll of her hip. Harley pulled her slacks wide, but didn’t pull them down as she mouthed the words to the song rolling her back so that the thrust of her chest caused the sides of the blouse to fall away. She used just the tips of her fingers, gliding over the tops of her breasts to her shoulders. She gradually pulled the fabric of the blouse off her shoulders swaying her arms in a way to let the cloth fall down her arms.

Jack pressed his lips together watching her, smoke rolling gently from his nostrils as his groin tightened; he shifted his hips. He was hard and the slacks he wore felt suddenly too confining as he gazed at his wife while she stripped. He took another drag on his cigarette, his gaze almost frighteningly intense.

Harley tossed the blouse to him (Jack grabbed it out of the air, his gaze never leaving her) before she grabbed her breasts, closing her eyes and rolling her head, shoving her breasts up as she arched her neck. Harley moaned softly before she mouthed the words to the song, her hands snaking down her torso to slowly rub between her legs.

“I drive fast, radio blares, have to touch myself to pretend you’re there
Your hands were on my hips, your name is on my lips
Over over again, like my only prayer…”

Jack worried at the side of his mouth with his teeth while watching her. His gaze was heated and intense, watching each move she made like a predator.

Harley moved in a slow spin until her back was to Jack. She grabbed the sides of her slacks with her thumbs and slowly, arching her hips, pulled them down her legs. She stepped out of the slacks, kicking them backwards toward Jack.

Jack swallowed. She was wearing a pair of black panties. He breathed a little heavier, and corrected himself--she wore a black thong with little red hearts on the barely-there cloth. He took a deep drag on his cigarette as his eyes traveled down her legs. Harley, with her back still to him, stuck one leg out to the side, reached down to pull down the zipper of her boot before stepping out of it and then doing the same with the other leg.

She turned to face Jack, reaching behind her to unhook her bra, rolling her shoulders as she pulled the bra straps down her arms before tossing her bra to him.

Jack flicked the remains of his cigarette into the darkness at the same time he grabbed her bra out of the air.

Harley giggled doing a slow spin, swaying her hands in the air, her mouth slightly open, her tongue between her teeth.

Jack’s breathing was deep, his eyes roaming over his wife with clear lust as she stepped closer. He grinned at the tattoo under her breast, the others he could see now, dark against her pale skin, the flow of her hips, the hardness of her nipples. Harley licked her finger and reached out to trace her fingertip along Jack’s lips. She smiled at him, flipping her hair over her shoulder as she rolled her head, sliding her hands down over her bare breasts, then along her stomach to catch her panties with her thumbs and slowly glide them down her hips, past her thighs before she let them drop below her calves. She stepped out of them, at the same time dropping her arms onto Jack’s shoulders. Harley smiled, her eyes traveling from his face where she could see the glow of want in his eyes, the way his lips were slightly parted, his breathing heavy...he wanted her. That feeling of knowing how much he wanted her, how much she could make him need her...a need and lust that equaled her own...inspired her. Even in the dark, the lights showed her the shadow of his trapped erection...Harley squirmed, feeling that swelling heat between her legs…

“Jack…” she hissed.

She dragged her hands along his chest before stepping back, rolling her now completely naked body to the music, dropping into a squat, her legs wide. Jack sucked in his breath before she rolled to a stand again, did another spin; the lights from headlights danced across her bare skin as she stepped back and leaned against Jack. She took his hands, which had been on the hood of the car and ran them up her torso to her breasts, her hands over his and pressed his fingers into her breasts.

Jack groaned softly, pressing his cheek to her face, the smell of her hair against his nose, his hands tight on her breasts. Jack pressed a kiss to her temple as Harley dragged his hands down from her breasts to her stomach. She slid his hands down between her leg, then rolled her hips as she pressed her fingers against Jack’s.

Jack licked her cheek with a smile, feeling the how wet she was between her legs. He had just begun to press harder, rubbing slowly when Harley broke away from his grip to spin around to face him. She purred, tugging his tie loose. “My puddin.”

Once she had the tie loose Harley worked at the buttons of his vest, then his dress shirt, tugging the shirt free of his slacks. She swung her hips side to side in a gentle sway to the music while working her way down his shirt, slipping the buttons through the holes until she was able to push the cloth aside and run her hands up the smooth planes of his muscled stomach and up over his chest (careful of his healing tattoo.)

She grinned and reached down to unbuckle his belt.

She leaned forward as the belt came loose, working the button and zipper of his slacks. She leaned close and licked his lips with a whispered, “Puddin.”
Jack smiled in response, felt a shudder of pleasure just hearing her utter her name for him. He grabbed her hips and pressing his fingers into her soft skin.

“Sweets,” he growled back at her.

Harley giggled, yanking his slacks open wide and slid her hand against his erection, made Jack groan while he squeezed her hips and dropped his head back. He squeezed his eyes shut as she grasped him perfectly. “Uhh...Harls...uh baby…”

Harley squeezed again before rubbing her hand up and down against his boxers, the heat of his erection transferring through the cloth as she squeezed again hissing. “Do you want me Jack?”

He thrust his hips just a little. “Yes baby...I want you.”

Harley grinned looking mischievous as she let go of him, grabbed his slacks and boxers and yanked them down, made Jack yelp in surprise.

Harley dropped to a squat, balanced herself easily on the balls of her feet as she ran her hands up his thighs to his hips. Her hands surrounded his erection as she looked up at her husband.

Jack leaned back on his hands against the car, pressed against the smooth hood of the car as he looked down at her.

She wrinkled her nose playfully at him before she flicked her tongue over the head of his erection.

Jack hissed with pleasure; that brief encounter with her tongue sent pleasant ripples running through his body.

Jack groaned. “Harley.”

Harley smiled leaning forward, her breath hot against his sensitive skin as she hissed. “I love you Jack. I love you…”

Slowly she wrapped her mouth around him, slid her tongue along the sensitive underside of his erection, reached up with one hand to wrap around his shaft, and pressed her other hand against his bare thigh to balance herself as she slowly sucked him into her mouth.

Jack gasped, his fingers squeaking against the car’s hood. Her mouth was warm, liquid and slippery as she rolled her tongue over him and slowly, gradually pulled her lips against his tender flesh. Her touch sent ripples and tantalizing shudders of pleasure to radiate through his body.

Jack panted as he looked down at his wife, watching her. Her eyes were closed as she rolled her tongue over the satin surface at the head of his erection, squeezing his thigh when she slowly sucked him into her mouth until her nose was pressing against his skin, her forehead touching his stomach.

Jack shuddered, groaning again. “Harley...uh...my Harley.”

Harley smiled around him in her mouth, slathering her tongue back and forth feeling the goosebumps race over his skin.

Jack groaned reaching down with one hand to stroke her face, dragged his fingers along her cheek, felt the way she hollowed her cheeks when she sucked, before he caressed his fingers into her hair. Harley moaned softly, the sound slightly muffled by having him in her mouth. Jack inhaled with a shudder, the warmth of her breath against his skin had Jack arching, cupping the side of her head as he leaned back against the car, the sound of gravel shifting under his shoes as he pressed up on the balls of his feet. He let out a breath, panting, and his fingers twitching as Harley bobbed her head up and down over him slowly. She pressed her lips up the length of him. She stopped to suck, her tongue moving back and forth until she arrived at the head of his erection. She opened her eyes to smile at her husband as her tongue rolled slowly around the satin head.

Jack’s breathing was heavy as he looked down at her and said in a thick tone, heavy with want. “Come here baby.”

Harley flicked her tongue against him once more before standing up. Jack grabbed her around the waist, twisting around and lifting her up at the same time before he set her on the hood of the car. The car protested with a miniscule shift of tires and a groan from the hood, but Jack ignored all that as he positioned her on the hood. He grabbed one of her legs, holding the limb up, his hand on the underside of her knee. Harley set the heel of her other foot against the grill as Jack slid into her.

They both moaned as their bodies came together.

Jack gently laid her leg over his shoulder, placing his hands on either side of her head.

Harley giggled as the slope of the hood caused her to slip down a bit, meeting Jack, her breath coming in pants.

Jack grinned with a murmured, “I love you pumpkin.”

Harley reached up to run her hands down his front. “I love you puddin.”

Jack adjusted his hold before he started to move. He thrust into her slowly at first, moving with a steady rhythm, wanting to last as long as he could, enjoy her and her to enjoy him as long as possible. He wrapped his left arm around her leg, kissed the side of her knee. Slowly he dragged his other hand over her breasts, squeezed gently, pinched her nipple between his thumb and forefinger before he rolled the tips of his fingers over the sensitive surface of his nipple. Harley moaned, her eyes fluttered partly close. She reached up and dragged her nails along his stomach. Jack groaned and thrust a little harder, forced himself deeper into her.

Jack continued to drag his hand down along her stomach, felt her soft skin goosebump, and her muscles to contract at his touch as he made his way down to her sex. He cupped the mound of her sex, squeezed her soft skin while he continued to slowly thrust into her. His pelvis slapped against her in what Jack thought of as the most pleasant little smacking noise, then holding his position a moment, he collected himself before he thrust again.

Panting heavily Jack pressed the pad of his thumb between her intimate lips, immediately finding the swollen nub of her clitoris, wet, pulsing with the need of his touch. Harley jerked and hissed softly when he brushed his thumb over her. She wanted his touch so strongly, wanted to feel him stroke her while at the same time she wanted him to pound into her hard and fast.

Jack started to rub her clitoris with his thumb at the same time he was thrusting; the car shifted beneath them slightly causing Harley to giggle. She reached up to rub her hands over his stomach and chest again, then thrust her hips each time he rubbed his thumb against her, each time he thrust into her. Harley groaned. “Mm...my puddin…”

Jack groaned in response. He thrust harder, leaned forward he pushed back Harley’s leg to her shoulder. She gasped and wrapped one arm around his shoulders, then pulled him down to kiss her.
Her other hand smacked loudly against the car’s hood, spreading her fingers as she thrust up with her hips just as his rubbing sent her spiraling over the edge into a thrilling climax.

Her cries were muffled against Jack’s mouth as she slapped the hood of the car again with one hand, digging the fingers of her other hand into his shoulder and grabbed a handful of his jacket when she came.

Jack kissed her hard, pulled his hand away from her clitoris to reach up and grab a fistful of her hair, bit her bottom lip, her chin, then down to her throat. He thrust hard and fast until he groaned loudly, his body bending around hers as his climax rushed quickly through him. He cried out loudly and slammed into his wife, made the car bounce once or twice, but he didn’t stop; Jack needed to follow the rush of his orgasm to the end.

Harley whimpered, another ripple of orgasmic pleasure rolled over her body as she reached up and wrapped her arms tight around Jack, holding him to her, kissing him passionately as she rocked against him, her bare skin against the hood of the car squeaked when she moved. Jack continued to thrust into her, shuddering as his climax slowly ebbed, but his body felt keenly sensitive.

Jack pulled away to rub his nose against hers grinning. “You always know how to brighten my mood, pumpkin.”

Harley giggled, nudging his nose with hers. “I love you puddin, from now and forever.”

Jack smiled closing his eyes for a moment as he brushed his lips against her, enjoying the feel of her mouth against his, the warm, loose-limbed feeling after having sex, basking in the warmth of wanting to cuddle Harley close to him. “You and me against the world pumpkin.”

Harley smiled then shivered. Jack chuckled releasing her leg before he lifted her up. Harley wrapped her arms and legs around Jack as he lifted her carefully. He didn’t want to pull out of her; he wanted to stay buried in her forever. He held her, staring into her eyes and whispered.

“Never leave me Harley.”

She smiled gently, stroked his hair back, caressed his face, and let her fingers drop to trace his jaw. “I’ll never leave you Jack. You and me against the world, remember?” She ran her fingers along his jaw, dipping down to kiss her husband passionately, pulling away just enough to whisper. “You and me puddin, always.”

Jack smiled, searching her face. He never thought he would be the one, between him and Bruce, to to find someone, his partner, his best friend, the one person in all the world who truly loved him and who he truly loved in return. Someone who would follow him into the darkness without ever once doubting him. Just as importantly, he knew he would follow her wherever Harley went.

Jack reluctantly parted from her. He kissed her again, slowly, taking intense pleasure in the feel of her lips and tongue, wanting to bury himself in her, wrap himself in her arms, her fragrance, to feel that warmth, the safety of being with her. Jack bit her chin teasingly before he placed her gently on her feet. “Let’s go home, curl up in bed and watch the news reports sweets. Maybe have some ice cream?”

Harley smiled kissing Jack on the chin before she started to gather up her clothing. “That sounds nice puddin. Maybe we can take a bath together?”

Jack chuckled. “With lots of bubbles--sounds perfect.”

Jack’s smile was wide and gorgeous as he glanced one more time out at the fires in Gotham that belonged to them.

*

The following afternoon Falcone was having lunch on the balcony of his apartment. The afternoon was nice, not too hot, not too humid...yet. He had a wonderful view of Gotham and a very attractive companion, a young dancer named Gigi (though he was fairly sure that wasn’t her real name). She was a beautiful young woman with black hair so glossy that her hair almost shimmered. She was wearing a very tight, very short blue dress and a pair of heels that made her look as if she had legs for days.

Falcone smiled at her as he picked up the bottle of wine that sat on the table between them, a lovely Opus One Napa Valley Red Wine 2012, nearly two grand a pop.

Gigi twittered. “Oh Mr. Falcone, are you trying to get me drunk?”

Falcone smiled. “Maybe I am.”

Gigi began to laugh again, uncrossing and crossing her legs, which drew Falcone’s complete attention when he noticed movement inside his apartment. One of his bodyguards, a man named Austin with a build like a linebacker, had walked toward the door and answered it by pulling his gun. Falcone frowned. He couldn’t be sure with the sun reflecting off the glass, but it looked to be Pius, his capo. The two men spoke at the door for a moment before Austin motioned Pius inside the apartment directing Roger to stand with him as Austin made his way over to the balcony.

Austin slid the glass door to the side and stuck his head out.

“Sir, Pius is here. He says he has some news that you need to hear.” Austin looked uncomfortable to Falcone, which meant that Pius had already spilled whatever news it was that he had come all the way here to give him.

Falcone sighed and stood, buttoned his jacket as he did. “I shall be right back Gigi. Enjoy the wine while I’m gone all right?”

Gigi smiled at him with a nod as Falcone stepped through the door following his bodyguard.

*

Pius stood in the middle of the living room pacing. The man was at least six feet tall, balding with the build that would make one think he was going to fat, but Falcone knew for a fact that the man was made of entirely muscle.

“All right Pius--what is it?” Falcone slid his hands into the pockets of his slacks and pulled out his lighter. Austin appeared at his side with a wood case, opened the lid to reveal the case was filled with Toscanello cigars. They weren’t expensive cigars, but they were the first he had started smoking when he was poor and working his way up the mob ranks. Their oaky flavor had always been his favorite, even when he had earned enough money to spend on more expensive smokes. Falcone pulled one out. Austin took the cigar after placing the box on the living room table and produced a cigar cutter seemingly out of thin air. He cut the end and handed the cigar back to Falcone who flicked open his lighter and took a few seconds to get the cigar burning.

Pius waited until his Boss was ready before he spoke. Once Falcone had the cigar burning nicely, the older man turned his attention to Pius.

“Did you hear about the fires last night in Gotham?” Pius asked.
Falcone nodded. “I didn’t pay much attention, but yes, yes I did see it on the morning news.”

Falcone blew out a long line of smoke.

Pius nodded before he continued. “Those fires were all Maroni properties—every last one of them.”

Falcone frowned. “What?”

“Someone purposely went through Gotham last night and burned every property owned by Sal Maroni. And I mean every property! I don’t know how they knew or who they are, but they didn’t leave anything! If Maroni was even associated with the property, whoever these people were, they destroyed it.”

Falcone snarled. “Where’s Sal?”

“No one can find him Boss. Apparently he’s been missing for a few days,” Pius murmured.

Falcone narrowed his eyes in thought. “Do we have any idea who did this?”

Pius looked down then muttered. “One of the dancers that was at the Hairless Cat said it was some man claiming to be the Red Hood. She said he was dressed in a suit with make up and had some blonde with him. She said he was good looking too and the girl was pretty...hot.” Pius swallowed.

Falcone stared at Pius, his cigar firmly held in his mouth, smoke slowly flowing from his lips and nostrils as he muttered around the cigar:

“Wayne.”

*

Two days later.

Jack, dressed only in his silk evergreen boxers, a pair of green and purple striped socks with the garters, and nothing else, sat at an old piano that the construction team Alex had brought in had found in some old storage building on the amusement park grounds. Jack had immediately had the piano installed in their bedroom where he had personally worked to clean it and tune it. Next to the piano on the floor was a set of tuning forks he had used to tune the piano himself.

He smiled, his fingers moving across the keys with elegance, his eyes closed as he played. His body moved slightly to the music, Rachmaninoff’s Concerto no. 3.

Harley was lying on the bed in a pair of pink panties with a matching pink sports bra, her hair loose around her shoulders as she colored in a coloring book, smiling as she listened to her puddin play the piano. She loved when Jack played; he was so talented. She set her crayon down, folding her arms over the coloring book and laid her head on her hands to watch Jack. The afternoon light, filtered by the curtain, made his skin glow softly. He was like a demonic angel she thought. Her demonic angel.

She sighed softly and admired how handsome her husband looked when his cell phone on the bedside table rang.

Harley pushed herself up and crawled on her knees, reaching for Jack’s phone while Jack continued to play. She hit the button answering with a smile. “Jack’s phone.”

“Hey Harley, how the fuck you doing?” Alex said with a smile in his voice.

Harley laughed, flopping back on her rear. “Hey Alex! What’s up?”
“I got a couple of fucking tickets here I thought you and Jack might get a fucking kick out of. I don’t know if Jack remembered that the Gotham International Car show is this weekend…”

Harley squealed. “YES!!”

Alex laughed on the other end. “I thought you guys might like these fucking tickets. I’ll bring them over to you guys in a few minutes then.”

“Thanks Alex! Jack will be so excited!” Harley squealed.

Alex chuckled. “You’re welcome. I thought he might be. See ya in a fucking minute or two.”

Harley laughed. “See you in a bit Alex.”

She hung up, hopped off the bed and walked over to Jack, wrapping her arms around his shoulders, pressing her lips to his ear while he played. He leaned back against her with a smile and arched his neck to gaze up at her.

“So what did Alex want that has you all excited sweets?”

“Alex got us some tickets to the international car show!” Harley said softly, but with excitement.

Jack stopped playing and turned around to face her. “Seriously?”

Harley grinned. “Yep! He’s going to be bringing them over in a little bit.”

Jack pulled Harley down onto his lap. “Oh, this will be fun. Just what we need, a date night!”

Harley smiled and kissed the tip of his nose. “Just what I was thinking puddin.”

Jack kissed one corner of her mouth, then the other corner. “And what’s even more fun pumpkin? We get to dress up!”

*

Later that evening.

Bruce was dressed in a black Armani suit, his hands in the pockets of his slacks, and smiled as he stood by the Alfa Romeo 4C Coupe watching as Dick, dressed in his own Armani suit, raced around the car in his excitement. This was their first outing as father and son…no, Bruce corrected himself. As teacher and student, friends, partners in crime fighting (eventually) and Dick was having a great time.

Bruce had to admit, he was having fun watching Dick race around inspecting the cars. For a moment Bruce was reminded of a time that he and Jack had come to the car show together, after their parents’ deaths.

They had been in their late teens. Bruce remembered Jack with his long hair pulled back in a messy bun, wearing a silver grey Armani suit with an obnoxious purple and red tie along with a matching vest, a dark purple shirt and a pair of black and white oxfords. Jack’s outfit had stuck out next to Bruce’s more traditional black suit, white shirt combo, but Jack had made the look work for him, drawing the attentions of both men and women.

Jack had been so excited, and not just to go to the car show. Jack, like Bruce had a “thing” about fast cars. It was one of the few topics Bruce and Jack could discuss together without the conversation devolving into a fight. Bruce frowned slightly. He missed those times, the two of them sitting on the floor in the living room on the computer together, discussing cars...Going to the car show was one of the few times that he and Jack had gone out together without fighting, one of those rare shared interests that brought the brothers together. They had a good time that night, talking about cars...just hanging out, like brothers, without the ghosts of their parents between them, the hostilities between them...the fights, the arguments...Bruce’s fear for his brother’s mental health--all of that had been forgotten as the two young men enjoyed a topic they shared...cars.

And right now, with Dick showing an interest in the cars...Bruce smiled. It was almost like having Jack back.

Bruce frowned and wondered where Jack was right now. He had thought about trying to find him after the circus, but had talked himself out of it. Why was it so hard for him to just contact the one person in all of Gotham who he should have been close to? His own baby brother. Yet he had no clue where Jack was or what he was doing. Further, Bruce wasn’t certain what he would say or do if he knew how to contact Jack.

Bruce sighed. If he could, he would take back having Jack committed. He could understand why Jack had attacked that man. He understood damn it, but he had been so stupidly blind by...what? His sense of right and wrong? His fear for Jack’s mental stability? Or maybe because he knew, in the same situation, he might have reacted just as Jack had...Maybe it was because he felt as if he was walking a thin line between who he was, Batman...and losing it all.

Bruce closed his eyes for a moment, willing himself to let his dark thoughts go and just focus on right now...and Dick who was currently about to wave his arm off in his attempts to get Bruce’s attention.

Bruce chuckled and strolled over to see what it was that Dick wanted to show him.

*

Falcone took a deep breath through his nostrils, calming himself. He planned on enjoying himself tonight, and, though no one was supposed to be able to purchase a concept car, he had made arrangements to purchase whatever car he wanted. Money talked. He smiled in delight, and it talked loud and clear. Tonight Falcone was going to put Wayne, the Red Hood, and whatever plans that little shit had in mind, out of his head and enjoy tonight with Gigi.

Falcone glanced at the young woman on his arm. She was drawing a lot of attention, which made him smirk. It was a lot of jealous attention. Gigi looked fantastic in a tiny, burgundy slip dress that was so short that young woman was only barely not showing off her black lace thong, which he knew she was wearing, but the rest of the dress made it clear she wasn’t wearing a bra at all.

Falcone grinned. He liked having the most attractive woman in the room, gathering the jealousy and ire of every man in the room. One of the main benefits of power and money.

Falcone and Gigi walked slowly down the walkway, stopping to gaze at a car here and there when Falcone’s attention was drawn to Bruce Wayne.

Falcone narrowed his eyes watching the man and the teenager who was with him. He wondered briefly if Bruce Wayne had any connection with what his younger brother was doing, but after a few seconds of watching the man, Falcone decided probably not. He could make things very difficult for Bruce Wayne if he wished it, but he didn’t see the profit in it. It was Jack Wayne he had a beef with...though Falcone wondered...would his brother be a soft spot he could exploit if Jack Wayne became too much trouble?

Destroying Maroni’s holdings was...annoying...but ultimately Falcone would recover…
Falcone frowned in thought...

*

Jack grinned as he walked in with Harley on his arm.

They were both in “disguises” for tonight. Harley’s disguise consisted of having her hair up in a messy bun, held in place by a couple of hair sticks. She had on a pair of thick, ombre tortoise shell and blue retro cat eyed glasses, a royal blue halter vest top that left her back and arms bare, and a pair of matching blue trousers with a pair of black heeled sandals. Her makeup was done in a winged black eyeliner and a smoky purple eyeshadow and her lips were done in a dark matte red lipstick. Jack’s disguise consisted of him wearing his hair parted on the side and slicked back, a pair of slightly tinted aviator style glasses, with a little rough on his cheeks and chin from skipping shaving that day. His outfit was also a little more casual than Jack would usually wear, a pair of black slacks, a white dress shirt (minus tie), wearing his aunt’s necklace and a light, almost baby blue jacket and a pair of brown, double monk strap oxfords.

Jack leaned close to Harley. “You know, I can’t remember the last time I came to the car show.”

Harley gave his cheek a quick kiss. “I’m glad that Alex thought about you when he got a hold of those tickets.”

Jack chuckled. “Yeah, Alex is a sweet guy even if he doesn’t want anyone to know.”

“So my sweets, shall we go look at some incredibly expensive cars?” Jack asked with a wide smile.

Harley laughed. “Let’s.”

*

The two of them weaved their way through the crowds. Tonight’s showing was not open to the general public. Tonight was only for special guests. (How Alex landed these tickets Jack could only guess). There were politicians, actors, musicians, artists, the super wealthy, anyone who was anyone and who happened to be in Gotham tonight was here. Some light music was playing in the background and wait staff moved around with trays of hors d’oeuvres and drink.

Jack snagged two champagne flutes off a passing tray, handed one to his wife as they slowly drifted toward the Rolls-Royce section where the car maker had nine new models on display. Harley, her arm hooked through Jack’s, gazed over the cars. There was a gentleman up on the dias by a large, long silver Rolls, the display spinning slowly showing all sides of the vehicle in question.

“This ladies and gentlemen, is the Rolls-Royce Phantom! Entering the New Phantom, you experience “The Embrace” of the world’s most luxurious motor car. The space enhances the sense of occasion and effortless entry as the patron settles in to the car. Once inside, “The Suite” redefines comfort and refinement from the newly sculpted seats…”

The man droned on. Jack started to turn away, but Harley tugged on his arm.

“Jack--look!” she hissed, trying to point without being noticed.

Jack followed the direction of her gaze and inhaled sharply too when he saw Falcone, whispering and kissing a woman young enough to be his granddaughter.

As if sensing eyes on him, Falcone glanced over. He frowned looking confused as he stared at them.
Jack chuckled and started to turn when he went cold.

Standing on the other side of the dais watching the rotating car was Bruce. He was standing with a young man of no more than sixteen or seventeen, dressed in a very similar Armani suit as the one Bruce was wearing. The young man had dark hair, a slight smile on his lips, and stood by the billionaire’s side. Bruce had his hand resting on the young man’s shoulders. He smiled down at the young man and squeezed his shoulder.

*

For a moment Jack’s memories rushed backwards. Memories of him and Bruce standing side by side, Bruce’s hand on his shoulder squeezing. Jack looked up at his brother with a smile, that feeling of happiness, acceptance, the love his big brother--the most important person to him--the one person whose love and respect he wanted beyond anything else…

Jack tensed.

*

Bruce, who had been talking to Dick looked up, surprise clear when he saw Jack glaring at him from across the car display. Even with the half-hearted disguise, Bruce knew his brother.

*

Falcone had grinned turning to Gigi. “I’m gonna buy…”

He stopped, his attention captured by a gorgeous blonde in a blue outfit and glasses. She was extremely sexy, easily as attractive as Gigi…he frowned, there was something familiar about the man she was with...

*

Harley glanced over toward Falcone to find him staring at her. He gave her a wink.

Harley muttered. “Oh this is just going swell.”
What's Yours is Mine

Jack frowned when he saw Bruce. He couldn’t help but stare at his brother. A confusing cascade of twisted feelings rushed over him; happiness, anger, betrayal...a hollow sense of loss.

For a moment Jack felt a spike of pleasure when he saw his brother. Jack hated to admit how much he missed Bruce, Alfred, the manor, being...home. It hurt deeply. He wanted so much to come back with Harley on his arm and to maybe...build a life with his brother being part of it. He wanted that more than he had been willing to admit. But those feelings of joy mixed with a deep sense of loss were quickly squashed when Jack got a good look at his brother’s expression. As usual, Bruce looked both concerned and angry. Jack hated that look, the expression that had been on Bruce’s face nearly all the time as they were growing up. Bruce never could quite decide how he felt about his little brother, Jack was certain.

Jack was also certain that part of Bruce hated him. Hated that Jack had never been the perfect little brother, a carbon copy of Bruce, of their father.

Jack quickly blinked back tears that were a mix of pain and anger.

Jack considered just skipping out on the show, taking Harley and heading home to the park, safe in his wife’s arms, to the one person in all the world that accepted him just how he was, who expected nothing from him, who trusted him implicitly through all the darkness, the blood and the violence. But Jack didn’t budge. He wasn’t going to let Bruce chase him off...not now, not ever.

Harley, who had stepped closer to Jack, her hand in his, wrapped her other hand around his arm as she glanced f Bruce, who was now clearly cutting his way through the crowd towards Jack. She felt the shift in Jack’s demeanor, the shift from loose relaxed to a stiff, almost frozen posture--not still from fear, but from something darker, more dangerous. She glanced at her husband’s face. Harley could see the way his blues eyes had a coldness to them...a shell that he was closing around himself to protect himself from his brother. That made Harley not just angry, but furious; furious that Jack felt the need to shut himself off, to protect himself from his own brother. Harley glared at Bruce as he walked closer while the teenager he had with him hurried along behind the billionaire to catch up.

*

Bruce’s heart raced as he made his way through the crowd toward his brother and Dr. Quinzel. The sight of Jack had been a shock and he had thought for a moment about not approaching his brother, but Bruce found that he couldn’t stay away from him, that he had to speak with Jack. He felt a responsibility to his brother, to try his best to bring Jack home. The worst part was that he suspected Jack was involved with something illegal and that perhaps Jack was too far into something that he couldn’t get himself out of. Bruce felt that maybe Jack needed his help, needed him to show him the way out of whatever trouble he had himself in...out of where he was…

Bruce felt that as his older brother it was his responsibility to help Jack, maybe even bring him home. Alfred would expect no less from Bruce, to put an effort forward to heal the rift between them that had only grown wider the last year and a half.

Bruce stopped in front of Jack. The two brothers stared at each other, though it was Jack who spoke first.

“Hey Brucie, who’s the kid?” Jack sported a grin, but Harley felt his grip on her hand tighten ever so slightly.
Bruce’s lips curved upward into a smile as he motioned Dick forward next to him. “Jack, this is Richard Grayson--my ward.”

Jack’s eyebrows shot up, as did Harley’s. Jack snickered. “Ward? Are you serious?”

Bruce frowned. “Yes, his parents were…” Bruce dropped his voice to a whisper. “His parents were murdered, like ours Jack...I took him in, became his guardian.”

Jack glanced sideways at Harley before he snickered again. Dick looked between Jack and Bruce. Bruce’s lips tightened into a thin, stern line as he narrowed his eyes at Jack. Dick stepped forward and offered his hand as Bruce said a little more harshly than he intended. “Dick, this is my younger brother, Jack.”

Jack glanced at his brother and took Dick’s hand with a slow grin. “Hello, Dick...that’s a very unfortunate nickname. Dick…” Jack snickered.

Dick took a step back with a frown. “My parents used to call me Dick.”

Jack grinned. “Very unfortunate.”

Bruce sighed before taking a deep breath as if trying to calm himself before he continued. “Jack…”

Bruce reached out to lay his hand on his brother’s shoulder. “Why don’t you come home Jack, you and--and Harley. Alfred misses you. I miss you too.”

Jack laughed and edged his shoulder out from under his brother’s touch. “Really Bruce? But why?”

He gestured at Dick. “You got yourself someone new to be a brother to.”

Jack released Harley’s hand to step closer to Dick. Dick didn’t move as Jack looked down at him. “Someone to finally mold into the perfect little brother, to follow your every command like the word of God. Someone who will conform.” Jack grinned at Dick. The smile caused a shiver of cold to run down Dick’s spine as Jack put his hands on Dick’s shoulders, but he turned his ice blue gaze on his big brother. “Someone who will keep their head down, nose to the grind...someone who will follow The Bruce Wayne way.” Jack put his hands in the air, shaking them almost like “jazz hands” or a preacher gesticulating to the Almighty to emphasize his point. “Because--and you should take this to heart Dick…” Jack emphasized the “D” and the “k” of the teenager’s name as he grinned at him, then at his brother. “Because, anything else is wrong and just plain crazy.”

Bruce’s voice dipped into a snarl. “Jack, now…”

“Oh? What are you going to do Brucie? Send me off to boarding school? Throw me in the asylum again?” Jack’s smile was cold. “Better watch out Dick...get on Brucie’s bad side and you just might see the inside of Arkham too.”

“Jack, that’s enough,” Bruce said with steel in his voice. “I want you to come home. I do Jack, really. I want us to try and make things right.”

“Don’t you mean...your right? No thanks Brucie, I’m happy where I am. I have my wife and I have friends. I also have a new business venture that is going to be doing quite well, quite soon.” Jack grinned stepping back to put his arm around Harley’s shoulders. “You’ll be hearing a lot from me real soon Brucie, real soon.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes in concern. “What are you up to Jack?”
Jack grinned. “Oh, you’ll find out soon enough I’m sure.”

Jack blew his brother a kiss as he took Harley’s hand. “I need a cigarette.”

He didn’t give his brother another look as he walked away. Bruce watched him go with a frown creasing his features. Dick furrowed his brow. “That’s your little brother?”

“Yes,” Bruce confirmed softly.

“He doesn’t seem real happy with you and he seems a bit...off.” Dick pursed his lips.

“There is a lot of damage between us,” Bruce explained softly. “Years of damage.”

Bruce sighed and shook his head before his gaze settled on his ward with a faint smile. “Come on, let’s go look at some more cars.”

*

Across from them Falcone had watched as Bruce Wayne walked up to the couple. He had just finished his negotiation with the representative here for Roll-Royce about purchasing the Rolls Phantom on display (money could get you anything you wanted, even cars not currently on the market). Falcone had just made all the arrangements to have the car pulled from the show and delivered to him by the next evening, when he frowned, staring at the younger man speaking with Mr. Wayne. There was something about him that seemed vaguely familiar, but he couldn’t place his finger on it. After another second on pondering the man his attention was diverted by Gigi who wrapped her arms around his neck.

“Can we go for a ride in your Rolls when you get it?” she asked with a flirtatious smile. “I’ve never done it in a Rolls before.”

Falcone smiled while he placed his hands on her hips. “Well, we are going to have to change that aren’t we?”

Gigi giggled and kissed him passionately.

*

Jack and Harley stopped outside the building, moving off into the parking lot a little where he could smoke. Jack pulled out his cigarettes, slammed the package against the palm of his hand and yanked out the cigarette.

Harley frowned and took the cigarette from Jack. “You’re going to break it,” she said softly as she took his lighter from him as well.

Jack sighed and didn’t fight her, watching as she held the lighter up to the cigarette, cupped the flame with her hand as she puffed lightly on the cigarette to get the end lit before she gently placed it between his lips. Jack smiled at his wife, took a deep drag on the cigarette, and held it while looking up at the night sky. Even with the lights in the parking lot, some of the stars were visible.

“I’m sorry Harley,” Jack said softly letting the smoke drift from between his lips. “Bruce just…” He closed his eyes. “I can’t believe he got himself a kid.”

“Teenager.” Harley muttered. “That kid has to be around fifteen or sixteen years old.”

Jack rolled his eyes. “Well, I guess when he realized I was a lost cause it was time to try again,” he muttered softly. “Make a little Bruce clone.”

Harley stepped closer and wrapped her arms around Jack’s waist. He smiled as he pulled her closer wrapping one arm around her, resting his chin on top of her head. Harley closed her eyes, taking in the scent of him combined with the smell of the cigarette smoke, relaxing her. Jack held her with one arm, turning his face slightly to rest his cheek against her hair, carefully smoking his cigarette. He flicked ashes out onto the pavement when they both heard a couple of men talking.

Jack turned, looking over to where two men were standing on the other side of a limo. The two men, both fairly big men wearing typical black suits, white dress shirts, stood together smoking. One of them was leaning his arm against the top of of the car as he laughed.

“Yeah, he bought it right off the dais! The 2019 edition man--you can’t buy that anywhere right now. You believe that. I mean I knew Falcone had money, but not that kind of money.” The one who spoke had short brown hair. He took a drag off his cigarette then chuckled. “Maybe we should ask for a fucking raise?”

His companion, a thickly muscled man with an olive complexion and bleached white hair laughed. “You’re a fucking idiot.” The second man was smoking a cheap cigar Jack decided, judging by the smell of the smoke that drifted toward them.

The other man laughed. “Fine. So when is he getting that Rolls? Did he say?”

The blond grinned. “Tomorrow evening. It’s going to be delivered right to his fucking door, you believe that shit? They got a truck they can drive it into so no one will see it until it’s in his fucking driveway.” The man shook his head. “I wonder what it must be like to afford bitches like that Gigi and buy fucking concept cars right off the floor…”

The other man chuckled. “’Fraid a couple of working stiffs like us will never know…”

*

Jack started to smile slowly.

He whispered to Harley as he tossed the butt of his cigarette to the pavement. “Did you hear that Harley?”

She nodded against his chest followed by a shrug. “Yeah, Falcone bought a car.”

Jack giggled quietly. “Oh he didn’t buy just any car; he bought one of those concept cars, a car that isn’t even on the market yet. That thing is one of a kind right now, worth a lot of money.”

Harley frowned slightly as she leaned back to look at her husband. “What are you thinking puddin?”

“I’m thinking we are going to steal a car.” Jack winked at his wife.

Harley frowned confused. “Why?”

Jack looked insulted. “First, why not? And second...just to needle Falcone...just to show him who has the power…” Jack grinned. “...just a little dig before the main event Harls...and it will be fun!”

Harley frowned. She wasn’t sure stealing a car was going to be that much fun, but who knew she thought. She’d been wrong before.

*
The following evening Jack wore a pair of slim cut black slacks, a black athletic cut t-shirt, a black leather jacket, and black boots. (Harley had giggled and called him a discount Batman which had earned her a tickle attack.) Jack leaned back against the cushions of their couch, his arm around Harley’s shoulders. Harley was pressed against his side, dressed much the same way as Jack, (minus the jacket) all in black, but with her blonde hair pulled back in a high ponytail, her legs crossed, her shoulder against Jack’s side.

Across from them sat some of the gang, those who were going help tonight with the job of stealing Falcone’s car.

Jason leaned against the wall next to Frost (who was dressed in a nice grey suit), his hands buried in the front pocket of his jeans, while Trope and Thea shared one of the chairs, one of them in the chair, the other on the arm, their complimentary hair colors made them look like twins. The two young women had their arms around each other, with Thea’s cheek resting on Trope’s hair. Alex, who wore a bright orange and blue Hawaiian shirt, with a pair of Bermuda shorts and orange flip flops, had arrived just moments ago with the information he had gathered on the transportation and the route that the truck would be taking to deliver the high priced, one-of-a-kind car.

Alex shook his head from his seat in a chair across from Jack and Harley where he leaned on his one arm, rolling an unlit cigar with his fingers. “This is fucking crazy Jack. I mean, the whole scheme to get the car is fucking nuts, but stealing from Falcone? I mean, I know you’re after him, but why the fucking car?”

Jack laughed. “It’s just to rattle him Alex and it’s fun! Sometimes you have to just do something because it’s fun! And this--this is going to be fun. Besides, look at it as payback for his letting his dog Maroni off the leash to what he did to Fish...to us...we’re just repaying him.”

Jack shared a grin with Harley who giggled.

Alex just shook his head. “You’re fucking nuts, you know that right?”

Jack laughed. “Shouldn’t I be saying that to you? Who’s more nuts? Me or the nuts who follow me? Besides, what’s the point of living if you don’t take a few risks?”

Harley laughed as did everyone else in the room.

Alex snorted. “Fuck head.”

Jack grinned. “Ass kisser.”

The two men laughed.

Jack moved his arm from around Harley and sat up, resting his elbows on his knees. “So, girls, you are going to take care of the traffic cams on the route, mess with the cops’ laptops and the radios, correct? Make sure we are blacked out?”

The two young women grinned and at the same time replied. “Yes Boss.”

Jack nodded before he turned his gaze on Jason. “And you’re ready to play the part of the yapping dog?”

Jason laughed. “Oh yeah, the driver’s attention will be solely focused on me while you two get the car, easy.” He winked.

Jack glanced at Alex one more time. “And you’re sure the key will be in the car?”
Alex nodded. “In the fucking glove compartment.”

Thea spoke up. “We got into the trucking company’s system and made sure that the key being put in the glove compartment was part of the request in the transport manifest.”

Jack grinned, smacked his thighs, and stood. “Good...Tonight is just for fun, just to annoy the old man, but after tonight we are going to start with our real attacks on Falcone,” he promised. “I want to destroy that ACE Chemicals plant, the one where he has Giggles made. We are going to start by going after all of Falcone’s big businesses, teach the man to be a little more responsible. Besides, this is all about revenge for what he let Maroni do all this time before I took over. It’s like in the Icelandic sagas, a gift returned for a ‘gift’ given.” Jack’s smile was cold. “I’m going to rain a little vengeance down on him. And we’re just going to hit him where it really hurts...in the pocketbook and in his pride. Now, let’s get this show on the road.”

*

The moon was full in the Gotham night sky as Jason brought the Kia Stinger he was driving to a stop on top of the overpass where the truck that hauled Falcone’s car would be passing under in the next fifteen minutes...if Thea’s calculations were correct. The sat between Jason and Trope in the front seat, and as if knowing what Jack was thinking, raised her head from her laptop.

“You have fourteen minutes before the truck comes through here,” she said with confidence.

Jack nodded and pushed open the back door. He stepped out carrying the bag of equipment he and Harley were going to use to jump from the bridge onto the top of the truck. It was a reckless, dangerous move, but Jack was excited and confident in his and his wife’s skills. It was daring and something no one would expect.

Jack dumped the duffel bag down near the rail of the overpass before he reached into the car to take Harley’s hand and help her out of the car. He tugged her up against him as she stepped out, giving her a kiss and a smile before he walked over to lean against the car, looking in the driver’s side window at Jason.

“You got this?”

Jason smirked as Thea and Trope, who had been squished into the front seat got out, only to climb back into the car’s back seats. “Sure thing Boss. You two be careful.”

Thea smiled. “We’ll be fine Boss.”

Harley came over to window in the back to smile at the two young women. “You three be careful.”

“We will mom.” Jason grinned at her. Harley laughed and gave him the finger before she stepped away.

The young man turned the radio up as Jack and Harley stepped out of the way. The sounds of Rammstein poured deafeningly from the car and Till Lindemann’s rough voice sang out “Du Hast” for all of Gotham to hear.

Jack and Harley waved as Jason stuck his arm out and waved back without looking. They could see Thea and Trope turn around in the back to wave too.

Jack laughed. “I really like that boy. If I ever decide to retire, I think I will promote him to head of the Red Hood...what do you think Harls?” he asked as he turned back to look at Harley. She had the duffel bag at her feet pulled open, a small flashlight held between her teeth as she pulled out thick nylon cores and began to secure their lines to the metal slats of the rail.

“I think he would be a good choice puddin,” Harley said as she pulled the flashlight out of her mouth and stood up. “He would make a great Red Hood.”

Jack nodded as Harley handed him the metal hook and belt that was to go around his ankle. She crouched down and attached hers, testing it to make sure the latch and belt were secure. Jack crouched next to her. He attached his own belt and latch before he pulled out a very small metal box from the same bag. He popped the box open to reveal two very tiny explosives he had designed just hours ago for tonight. These mini explosives were remotely controlled, like the explosives Jack had used to take down Panessa’s building (what seemed like ages ago), but on a much smaller scale, designed to simply break the metal clasps and allow them to fall on to the top of the truck. (Harley was quite uncomfortable with the idea of a tiny explosive on her ankle, but she trusted Jack; they had yet to have an accident with explosives that Jack had put together). Jack used some sort of grey putty to stick the explosives onto the metal latches before he pulled out the handheld remote that would detonate the explosives.

Jack held up the little remote, wagging it back and forth with a grin. “Ready to be action stars sweets?”

Harley stood up glancing out toward the freeway. From this position it looked like a long way down to the road below. There were a few cars that zipped by underneath them, but at this time of night, it was fairly quiet and there was a long, dark silence between vehicles.

Jack walked over to Harley and put his hand at the small of her back. He could feel how stiff she was, felt the tension running through her. She was nervous. He supposed he couldn’t blame her, jumping off an overpass was a great deal different than shooting or stabbing someone.

Harley motioned with her head. “Walk out a bit, I want to make sure we have enough rope.”

Jack held the loose nylon rope up with a slight frown. “Looks like enough.”

Harley giggled unsteadily. “You know, Alex is right--this is crazy.”

Jack smiled as he reached out to grab her around the waist and yank her close. He gazed down at her lovingly. “If we weren’t crazy, this probably wouldn’t work.”

Harley smiled up at him before she reached up to stroke his cheek. “I love you. You know I will follow you anywhere Jack, do anything.”

Jack brushed his nose against hers. “I know you will Harls...I know.”

He pulled her closer and kissed her deeply before stepping back. “Let’s get into position.”

Harley nodded. Her heart was pounding, but both of them stepped over the guard rail and gradually adjusted their feet, their arms behind them holding onto the rail as they moved slowly and with great care. It wouldn’t do them any good to fall right now or to accidentally set off the explosives before it was time.

No sooner had the two of them gotten into position than Harley saw the truck, an all black Renault Magnum with a black trailer that contained the Rolls Royce Phantom, coming their way.

“Jack!” Harley pointed.
Jack grinned wider. “Oh, this is going to be fun!”

Harley pointed again. “There’s Jason!”

They could both see the red Kia’s headlights right behind the large, black truck carrying the Rolls they were after. Harley swallowed. This was so crazy!! This was the most insane thing Jack had had them do yet!! Jumping onto a moving truck? She held onto the railing behind her, questioning the sanity of this situation when Jack yelled.

“Jump!”

The truck sped by under them and Jack let go. Harley hesitated for a half second before she followed her husband. Just as they were over the truck, the ropes around their ankles jerked tight. Harley let out a startled gasp; the truck had been rushing toward her, the rope suddenly yanked her back into the air. She wanted to scream but she couldn’t find the air to breathe.

Jack was grinning from ear to ear. Throwing himself into the face of death like this, without worry about the consequences was more thrilling than he could have thought. He laughed as he hit the button that blew the latches that held the ropes to their ankles. The latches gave and Harley felt the hot flash of heat stinging against her ankle and suddenly Harley was free-falling through the air, the top of the truck racing toward her. Just when she was beginning to think she was going to miss, the truck moved swiftly from under her and she slammed into the truck.

She hit hard, knocking the air out of her lungs in a painful gush. Harley started to roll, her momentum and the lack of anything to hold on to kept her rolling toward the edge. Harley let out a cry as her body rolled completely off the side of the truck. For a second she could see the tires, the road that zipped pass all of it made surreal by the flashing lights going by from the city, the headlights from the cars, the truck, almost blinding her. She reached desperately for something to grab, her fingers missed the edge and she started to fall.

Jack reached out and grabbed her arm, his hand wrapped painfully around her wrist. Pain radiated out from Harley’s shoulder as her body’s downward, deadly momentum was stopped hard, her arm yanked upward, and then she was flung forward. Her entire body slammed against the hard metal of the truck’s trailer, knocking her breath out of her again.

Harley grasped as she reached out, grabbing for the metal edge of the truck breaking a nail in the process. Jack was in a crouch at the edge, holding on to the side of the trailer as he yanked his wife upward with all his strength onto the roof of the truck.

Jack pulled backwards, falling onto his back hard enough to knock the air from his own lungs while at the same time he pulled Harley with him. She landed on top of her husband panting. She wrapped her arms tight around him, tried to draw in a breath. The wind pulled at her hair, whipping her ponytail around as the wind struggled to rip them both from the top of the trailer.

Jack grinned, then started to laugh after he sucked air into his lungs. “Told you we would make it.”

Harley’s panicked breaths turned into nervous giggles.

Jack smiled, both of them laughing as he held her close. “Told you you could do it.”

Harley giggled and kissed Jack hard.

He pulled away reluctantly. “Okay baby, let’s do this.”
Jason’s eyes nearly bugged out of his skull when he saw Jack and Harley leap from the overpass and then Harley rolled off the trailer. The two women behind him screamed, which caused Jason to lose control of the wheel for a moment. The car skidded as Jason spun the wheel.

Jason’s eyes shot back to the truck. It was difficult to see with the lack of light, but then he saw the dark figures moving on top of the truck’s trailer. (That and the fact that Mrs. Wayne didn’t hit the pavement in front of him told him the first part of their plan was successful.)

“He got her!!” Jason yelled when he saw Jack catch her.

Trope gasped. “Oh my god this is so crazy!!”

Jason frowned as he realized the truck driver might have heard the impact of Jack and Harley hitting the trailer or worse, had seen them before they jumped. Jason rolled his eyes at himself. Of course they heard that! But maybe the Red Hood’s gang leaders had not been seen. He knew what he had to do.

Jason grinned. “Hold on girlfriends!” He spun the wheel without looking, blasted out from behind the truck to race along the side of the big black vehicle. He flashed his headlights before he hit the gas and the car leapt forward as Jason sped up to zip in front of the truck driver and lay on the horn. Once he had done that he grinned and turned the radio up as loud as the speakers could handle, rolling down the windows at the same time.

Thea and Trope yelped in the back as the sounds of Rammstein’s “Ich Will” blasted out from the speakers. Jason grinned tapping his fingers against the wheel as he continued to stay in front of the truck. Each time the driver started to try and go around him, Jason jerked the car over to block the driver from pulling ahead, playing in front of the truck’s headlights as he zipped back and forth, blocking the truck from going any faster.

*

Jack and Harley crouched as they tried to make their way to the back of the trailer.

The driver, becoming annoyed with Jason, hit the gas thinking to just simply bump the car. The front of the truck tapped the Kia “lightly.” The impact sent Jack and Harley falling forward to fall down on the roof of the trailer.

Jason glanced over his shoulder with narrowed eyes at the truck. He couldn’t see the driver because of the headlights, only a shadowy figure in the driver's seat.

Trope leaned forward grabbing Jason’s shoulder. “Don’t you dare play chicken with a truck Jason!”

Jason smiled. “I would never do that...geez Trope.”

Trope glared at him in his rearview. “Drive steady. I want to make sure he can’t radio anyone once he gets tired of you being a dick.”

Jason grinned and stuck his tongue out at Trope just as the truck driver laid on his horn.

*

Jack and Harley made their way to the back of the trailer, staying crouched and crab walking their way to the end of the trailer. Once at the edge, Jack pulled a pair of small bolt cutters from his jacket inside pocket before he crab walked over to the gate release mechanism. He quickly cut the thick, steel wire before he shoved the cutters back into the pocket of his jacket. Jack grinned at Harley.
“Ready sweets?”

Harley nodded and the wind whipped her ponytail around as she grinned. “Yeah, I’m ready puddin’!”

Together they stomped on the edge of the trailer which caused the now loose back panel to spring open. It fell to strike the asphalt with a loud “bang!” Sparks flew as the metal scraped against the freeway asphalt. Jack grinned at his wife as he grabbed the top of the trailer and did a somersault off the back, holding on for a split second before he dropped into the trailer.

Harley giggled and muttered. “Show off.”

She did the same maneuver, easily rolling over the edge. She hung by her arms for a moment. Jack wrapped his arms around her legs and she let go as he lowered her to the floor of the dark trailer stealing a kiss at the same time. Harley grinned, kissing her husband back enthusiastically.

Jack let her go. “Okay, let’s go!”

The car was held steady inside the trailer by a series of nylon tire straps. Jack pulled a box cutter from the pocket of his pants, Harley doing the same on the other side of the Rolls. Together they both cut the tire straps and yanked them clear of the vehicle’s wheels.

Jack pulled open the driver's seat, hopping in just as Harley did the same…

*

Trope grinned. “Okay, the driver just tried to radio for help, but I blocked him. I was also able to scramble the police radio.”

Thea gave Trope a very loud kiss on her cheek. “You are just amazing babe,” she said with a big smile. Trope blushed.

“Hey if you guys are gonna make-out, can I watch?” Jason grinned in the rearview mirror.

Thea laughed. “Asshole.”

Jason chuckled with an eyebrow quirk while zipping once more in front of the truck when it attempted once more to go around him. The driver laid on his horn and flashed his headlights.

Jason smiled at her in the rearview. “But I’m a loveable asshole.”

Thea giggled and smacked him hard in the shoulder with her fist.

Jason made a face, but smiled at her. “Ouch!”

*

Harley quickly popped open the glove compartment once she was in the passenger seat and there, resting inside as they hoped, were the keys. She grinned as she snatched them out and tossed them to Jack who caught them easily, immediately shoving them in the ignition. The car started with a quiet purr when he turned the key. Jack shared a grin with his wife.

“Now that sounds sexy.”

Harley giggled. “Hit it puddin!”
Jack laughed and hit the gas, glancing over his shoulder as he drove the car backwards out of the truck and down the ramp. As the Rolls’ tires hit the pavement, Jack spun the wheel and the car handled like a dream despite its size. Jack pressed down on the gas, raced up beside the truck. The car barely made a sound despite the acceleration and speed. He could see Jason and the girls up ahead.

Jack laughed as he laid on the horn and flashed his headlights.

*

Jason looked in the side mirror and hooted. “They got the car!!! Let’s go!!!!”

Jason hit the gas and made his car speed forward.

Jack was coming up fast and did the same, pressed his foot down on the pedal, letting the Rolls speed forward, quickly catching up to Jason until both cars were driving side by side.

*

The truck driver looked confused when he saw the Rolls show up beside him. It was happening at the same time that something was dragging on the truck. Distracted as he had been by the crazy driver ahead of him, he finally had time to glance in his rearview to see sparks bright in the darkness behind his truck and as the man frowned, he realized it was the hatch on the back of the trailer.

Just as he realized that the hatch was dragging on the asphalt, the driver watched for a few seconds as the Rolls drove alongside the asshole in the Kia who had been blocking him from switching lanes. As the two cars pulled up alongside each other, the truck driver saw the passenger in the Rolls stick their hand out the window and wave at the driver of the Kia who gave them a thumbs up.

The driver groaned. “Fuck.”

*

Harley laughed as Jason and the girls took the first exit. Jack sped ahead of the truck. Harley leaned out the window where the wind whipped her hair as she watched the truck disappear behind them.

She giggled dropping back into the seat. She hit the button on her door and the window closed silently cutting off of the wind. She hit another button and a curtain rolled across the window. Harley sighed contently looking up at the Rolls’ starry sky ceiling. “This is a really nice car.” She observed.

Jack grinned. “Sure is. I was either going to make a mess of it and leave it for Falcone to find or drive it into the Gotham river...but you know, I think I’ll keep it sweets. This is one nice car.”

He smiled. “Though I’m going to pain it a different color.”

Harley smiled as she rolled her head to the side to gaze at her husband. “And what color would that be?”

Jack thought about it for a while as he drove before he murmured. “Mm...I don’t know...maybe purple or blue...something really noticeable...I’ll have to think about it.”

Harley laughed. She reached out and laid her hand on her husband's knee with a happy sigh. Even with the crazy nature of the theft, the danger and the close call, Harley was content here with her husband. Jack smiled softly heading back into Gotham and their amusement park home. “So sweets, I was thinking--tomorrow after your game…”
Harley, who had closed her eyes opened them a little. “Hmm?”

“I thought maybe we should go out to dinner. Remember that place I took you with the retro clothes requirement?” Jack asked softly.

Harley smiled. “I do.”

“I thought we might go there...or maybe an evening in, watch some movies in bed…” He smiled at her.

Harley squeezed his leg. “I’m happy no matter what we do puddin.”

Jack picked up her hand and kissed her knuckles. “I love you sweets.”

Harley squeezed his hand. “Love you too puddin.”

*

A couple of days later Harley, dressed only in her sports bra and panties, sat in their bedroom at her vanity braiding her hair, getting ready for the roller derby game that afternoon. She was half watching the afternoon news report on the television while she fixed her hair and makeup while Jack was on the phone with Alex. She glanced in the mirror at her husband. He was lying on his stomach across their bed dressed in a pair of grey slacks and a white dress shirt which he hadn’t bothered to button yet. She smiled. His make up was done, his nails painted black, though his hair was still unstyled, a few brown locks framing his face as he spoke on the phone. She was only partly listening to the news and to her husband, both sounds a light buzz behind her while she leaned in to outline her eyes.

Jack and Alex were discussing the chemical factory that Falcone owned, ACE Chemicals...the front for his more common illicit drugs and the drug Giggles, made from Jack’s own formula. They had been discussing whether Jack should just confront Falcone, but she could tell by the tone of his voice that Jack wasn’t fond of that idea. He wanted to show Falcone that he was messing with the wrong person, that no one stole from him. She had also heard something about an invite from Fish to the club…

She wasn’t exactly listening, her attention divided between their conversation and the news report about how two branches of Wayne Enterprises, Wayne Biotech and Wayne Foods had suffered a fire...or was it an explosion last night or was it this morning? Several people had died and there were a few bits of aerial video of the destruction… Harley frowned. She had missed some of what was being said in the news report, but for some reason something about those places seemed important to her, as if she should know them, but she couldn’t really remember why...not just because they were owned by her brother-in-law, but something else was bothering her about the news report...about those places. But Harley just couldn’t put her finger on why...

After a few seconds, she had forgotten all about it as Jack hung up grinning ear to ear as he rolled off the bed and to his feet to walk over to stand behind his wife.

“Well, it seems we are going to hit Falcone’s ACE Chemicals plant two day from now sweets! Which gives me some time to mix together some of my laughing gas, a few molotovs...maybe some fun explosives...” Jack laughed. “Going to turn it into a real party pumpkin.” He placed his hands on her shoulders and kissed the top of her head. “AND, Fish called Alex. She wanted to invite the gang over to the club tonight for a little celebration party. Big Mama is going to be there and I guess there are going to be a few other business owners that are in our territory who are coming to meet us...I guess it’s also sort of a meet and greet the new bosses. Anyway, Fish promised dancing, good food and good friends. What do you think? I know we were going to have a date, but…”

Harley interrupted him by looking at his reflection in the mirror as she covered his hands with hers. “I think it will be fun puddin!”

Jack smiled. “Now if you don’t want to go it's perfectly fine.”

Harley laughed. “No, I do! I think it’ll be fun.”

She stood up and turned around. Jack wrapped his arms around her, pressed her close against him while sliding his hands down to grip her rear. She giggled and wrapped her arms around his shoulders.

“How about I wear one of my really short dresses tonight?” Harley cooed softly brushing her nose against his while caressing his lips with hers.

Jack smiled, his eyes dancing. “I think that would be a spectacular idea.”

He pressed her hips against his and kissed her slowly, passionately his tongue moving gently against hers. Harley made a soft moan as they kissed, prompting Jack to lift her up, grabbing her around her legs, turning and dumping her on the bed. Harley squealed and laughed as Jack dropped on top of her and made the bed bounce and creak in protest. He laughed, smiling down at her, his body resting between her legs. Jack stared down at his wife with her braided pigtails, bright blue eyes and her smile—her perfect, glorious smile he thought, the beacon that would always guide him home, to her. Wherever Harley was, if they were together, it was home. He grinned and winked at her before he pressed his lips against her neck and blew a raspberry against her skin. Harley screamed with laughter.

“Jack!!! That tickles!!!”

“Good!!” He smiled brightly, pleased to hear his wife’s rich laugh before he did it again. Jack worked his way down between her breasts, pressing his mouth against her skin and blowing hard which made the loudest, rudest noise Jack could make, sending Harley into peals of laughter. She kicked her legs against the mattress and laughed as her husband teasingly stroked her waist with the edges of his painted nails. He worked his way down further to her stomach, brushing his nose and lips against the softness of her skin, stopping just above her belly button. He licked her skin slowly, sending shivers up her spine before he pressed his lips to her stomach and blew loudly.

Harley squealed again. “Puddin!!”

Jack laughed as he pulled the edge of her panties down past her hip, tracing her hipbone with his tongue. He pulled the other side of her panties down, pressing his lips to her mound, teasing as he went lower.

Harley pushed herself up on her elbows. “Jack...we don’t have time…”

Jack chuckled and pressed his lips against her skin, blowing loudly. The sensation tickled at the same time feeling delicious. He teasingly brushed his teeth against her skin, blowing warm air against her sex until Harley moaned. “Jack…”

“I’m stopping.” He laughed and then took a heavy breath.

He pressed a kiss against her skin before he sat up. “But tonight I’m going to finish what I started.” He winked at her as he pushed himself off the bed with a little hop in his step, putting a hand out to her.
Harley grinned as she took his hand, letting him haul her to her feet. “I’m looking forward to it puddin.”

Jack pulled her close for one more kiss. His tongue slowly slid into her mouth caressing her tongue before he stepped softly dragging his teeth along her bottom lip before he hissed. “I am too pumpkin.”

He stepped away giving her a light pat on the ass. “You better hurry up!”

Harley stuck her tongue out at him with a smile.

*

When they arrived at the skating rink, Harley could see Alex’s SUV with Jason’s and Roxy’s motorcycles parked next to it. She grinned, delighted they were here for the game. She wasn’t sure who else from the gang was here, but it was nice to see that some of them had come out to support her.

Jack parked and stepped out of the car, wearing a pair of aviator sunglasses, a light grey suit with a dark, almost slate grey dress shirt unbuttoned past his throat, showing off just enough chest to make Harley squirm. He wore a gold chain around his neck that rested just below the hollow of his throat and another one that disappeared under the shirt. He wore a pair of dark brown oxfords with some colorful purple and green socks. He walked around to the side to open the door of the vehicle for her.

Harley hopped out, wearing a pair of large round sunglasses with red-tinted lenses dressed in white denim cutoffs, one of her husband’s dress shirts with the sleeves rolled up with just enough buttons fastened to keep the shirt from falling off, but the light breeze blew enough of the shirt back to reveal her stomach. She rounded out her outfit with a pair of red tennis shoes. Jack grinned as he took her hand, kissed her knuckles while he pressed his nose against her hand while a wicked yet seductive smile danced across his lips.

“You are so adorable,” he murmured before he released her hand and reached into the back to pull out her duffel bag and skates.

Harley giggled. “Flirt.”

He winked at her as he held her bag and skates over one shoulder and took her hand once more as they made their way toward the skating rink. Today’s game was against the Opal Curbstompers from Opal City. It was supposed to be a fairly big game, but Harley frowned in confusion as they walked toward the rink. There were a few people milling around in the parking lot, but there were a lot of people sort of standing just outside the rink talking or simply standing around as if they didn’t quite know what to do with themselves, while others were leaving the rink, filing out as if they had been asked to leave.

Harley frowned as they moved closer to the rink. Something was off; the atmosphere was all wrong for a roller derby game. She didn’t hear the usual loud music or the cheerful banter of the people who did the announcing for the game as she and Jack pushed their way inside. There was still a crowd, but it was subdued, people were milling about, talking in hushed tones. It was all a little odd she thought.

Harley frowned, a line appearing between her brows as she glanced at her husband. “Something’s wrong.”

Jack nodded. “Agreed. Everything feels a bit off. The crowd is really quiet too.”
They made their way deeper inside the rink heading toward the locker rooms. The quiet mood of the people around them continued. Once outside the locker rooms Harley turned and kissed her husband. Jack grinned against her lips, lifting her up off her feet and doing a little spin with her while continuing to kiss his wife.

Harley giggled, wrapping her arms around him forgetting the odd feeling she had only a moment ago, lost in her husband’s kiss.

Jack set her down with a sigh. “Have fun Baby--I’ll be rooting for you.”

Harley kissed him quickly. “Love ya puddin.”

Jack waved as he turned to leave. “Love you too sweets.”

Harley giggled turning, the atmosphere of the rink forgotten as she made her way inside, only to be greeted by the sounds of crying.

Harley frowned in confusion following the sounds to find her entire team sitting on the locker room benches holding each other.

“What’s wrong?” Harley asked. All the girls turned to look at her, but it was Vanessa that stood up, her makeup smeared, her eyes bloodshot, hurried over to wrap her arms around Harley.

“Oh Harley it’s terrible! Pamela is gone!” Vanessa cried onto Harley’s shoulder as Harley held her looking confused. “What? What d’you mean Pamela’s gone?”

Courtney looked up from wiping her eyes. “She was killed at her job last night. The place where Pamela worked...she worked for Wayne Enterprises...some branch...I don’t...she told me once...She was so smart. Anyway, there was a fire...I don’t know...but I guess Pam was working late...and...” Courtney sniffled. “Anyway...she didn’t show up...she is usually the first one here so Babs called her cellphone...” The young woman named Babs had bright orange hair and freckles. She just looked up, her eyes just as bloodshot as Courtney’s as Courtney continued. “...and got no answer...then she called her work number...nothing. So finally she called Pammy’s mother and she told us that...that Pamela died in the fire!”

Harley blinked in shock. “What? But...are they sure?”

Vanessa nodded. “Her mom told us they found her lab coat and some of her teeth...”

That bit of information set off more crying from the other women.

Harley blinked in shock. “She’s gone...?”

* * *

Jack was standing in the bleachers, his arms folded across his chest with Alex, Alice, Frost, his aunt, Jason, and Roxy along with Thea and Trope.

Bane, his hands in the front pockets of his slacks nodded to Jack. “Yeah, they announced it just a little while ago that the game was called off due to the death of Pamela Isley.”

Jack frowned. “A fire at one of my brother’s labs...that’s...” He shook his head again in disbelief. “Was anyone else hurt?” For a moment Jack felt a thud in his chest as the thought of something happening to Bruce made his blood run cold...no matter their differences, he didn't want his brother dead.
“I heard another doctor that worked there died too. A Dr. Marc Legrand, but as far as I’ve heard they were the only two casualties,” Agatha said with a frown. “It all seems rather strange to me. Bruce runs a very tight business, all the safety rules are followed above and beyond requirements by the law, just like how my brother ran the business…” Jack nodded. “Yeah, Bruce has always been really concerned with the safety of those who work for him. You don’t think it was on purpose do you?” He turned to his aunt. She shrugged. “I don’t think Bruce has any enemies...business enemies maybe, but I don’t think he would have anyone who would go to that extreme to sabotage one of his labs. I suppose accidents happen,” Agatha said softly. “But...I’ll check to see if I come up with anything.”

Alex nodded. “I’ll check my fucking sources too, see if anyone has been upset with Bruce Wayne, but yeah...I haven’t heard a fucking whisper about anyone on the wrong side of the law having it out for your brother. I usually keep my fucking ear open for that sort of news.”

Jack frowned, looking between Alex and Agatha. “You don’t think Falcone…?”

Alex shook his head as did Agatha. “Fuck no. Falcone isn’t stupid and this would have been stupid. Killing two scientists too...nah. This sort of thing ain’t his fucking style,”

Alex muttered. “Too messy.”

Jack’s attention was grabbed when he heard his name called.

“Jack?”

Jack turned at the soft sound of Harley’s voice. As soon as he saw his wife he opened his arms and she ran into them dropping her duffel bag and skates. She wrapped her arms around him with a soft sob.

“Oh Jack, it’s terrible!”

Jack held her close. He squeezed her tightly against him, his lips to her ear. He kissed her ear softly as he whispered. “I know sweets.”

Harley sniffed doing her best not to cry, but she said softly. “I think we were really beginning to be friends puddin. I mean...I felt like Ivy was...” Her lips trembled and she pressed her face against his shoulder.

Jack stroked her back. “I know sweets.”

He turned to the others as he held Harley tightly. “I’ll take Harley home. See you guys later tonight at Fish’s place all right?”

Everyone nodded and began to file out, each of them reaching out to touch Harley’s arm or shoulder with a whispered word of condolence.

Jason stopped for a moment. He glanced at Jack then carefully put his arms around them both. He didn’t say anything, simply gave them a tight squeeze before he walked off quickly. Jack smiled at the younger man’s back.

After everyone was gone Jack gently lifted Harley’s face, holding her face between his hands looking into her blue eyes. A few tears raced down her cheeks as she looked at him.

“I’m sorry sweets,” Jack said in a tender tone, stroking her cheeks with his thumbs. “I’m so sorry.”
She sniffled and wiped at her nose with the back of her hand. “I feel a little foolish crying like this...I mean, I didn’t know her that well yet...we had really just started being friends. She told me about some trouble she was having at work with a co-worker...and...” Harley’s bottom lip trembled. Jack pulled her back against him.

“Hey, let’s go home. Want to get in bed and cuddle? Eat some junk food before we go out tonight?” Jack said softly against her ear. “I’ll brush out your hair and make love to you. I’ll even crack open a two liter of grape soda...” He smiled saying that last part as if he had just bought an expensive bottle of champagne.

Harley gave him a hiccup laugh. “Oh puddin...yes.”

*

Harley sat naked in bed, the sheet held to her breasts as she watched Jack. He walked around the room naked while he set a few candles throughout the room, lighting them as he went. Harley giggled as she watched her naked husband walking around the room. She very much liked watching his ass; tight and perfect. Oh, she thought, his behind was a crime it was so nice. She giggled.

He glanced over his shoulder at her, waggled his eyebrows and even wiggled his ass at her as if he knew exactly what she was thinking. Harley kicked her heels against the mattress laughing.

“Puddin!!”

Jack laughed.

He had closed the curtains to block out the sunlight and now had set ten or so lit candles around the room. The soft light was not just romantic, but peaceful.

Jack had put some music on as well. Puccini was playing at the moment as he finished with the candles, quickly flicking his wrist to put out the match before he hurried out of the room and returned with a tray on which he had two champagne glasses filled to the rim with grape soda and as he came closer, Harley could see that he had a plate with Hostess Ding Dongs on it along with a sprig of mint.

“My lady?” Jack said with a grin as he bowed and held out the tray to her.

Harley laughed as she took the tray. “Puddin, this is perfect.”

Jack chuckled as he pulled the sheet back and crawled into bed beside her. He took one of the glasses as Harley set the tray down between them, picking up her own glass.

Jack smiled. “To the love of my life, the only reason I’m still here.”

Harley smiled and clicked her glass against Jack’s. “To the only man I have ever and will ever love,” she said softly.

They both took sips from their drinks before Jack took her glass and set it aside.

He picked up a Ding Dong and held it up in front of her. “Okay, take a big bite!”

Harley laughed. “I don’t know...”

“Ah...come on Harls. I promise to work it off of you.” He waggled his eyebrows at her with a smirk.

Harley giggled with a nod. “Fine.”
She opened her mouth. Jack looked as if he were about to shove the whole thing into her mouth, but at the last second he stopped with a wicked grin on his lips and held it so she could take a bite.

Harley giggled and pointed a finger at him while she chewed and swallowed before she said, “You’re bad.”

Jack took a bite of the confection and laid back among the pillows. “Just have to keep you guessing pumpkin. Don’t want you to be bored with me.”

Harley moved the plate and curled up next to him. “I could never be bored with you puddin.”

Jack set the dessert aside and turned to face her. “I’m never bored with you either Harls.”

He stroked her hair back behind her ear and gazed at her lovingly. “I feel like my life really started with you Harls, when you walked into my life…” He chuckled. “When I carried your bags to your room…” Jack stroked her chin. “I knew from that moment you were going to be special to me. You saved me Harley…you saved me.”

Harley blushed leaning into his touch, her eyes sliding closed.

“I came alive the moment you kissed me,” she whispered.

Jack very slowly ran his fingers into her hair, circling the back of her head and tugged her close. He brushed his nose against hers, his lips a breath from her own. “I have loved to the point of madness; that which is called madness, that which to me, is the only sensible way to love.” Jack grinned then whispered.

“You Harley, you are my only true madness.”

He kissed her deeply, pulled her close, opening his mouth against hers softly. Harley sighed, his lips and tongue felt as if they were melding against hers.

Jack rolled her onto her back, continuing to kiss her deeply, his tongue caressed hers with a deep liquid passion that made her body come alive. She wrapped her arms around him, never wanting to let him go, but Jack rolled his tongue from between her lips to lick her chin as he gently tilted her head back while he ran his tongue down her throat.

Harley moaned softly while Jack worked his way down to her breasts. He slowly ran his tongue over her breasts while with one hand he stroked the lines of her ribs. Harley groaned tossing her head back against the pillows while Jack pressed his lips to her skin, gently brushing his teeth over her. He kissed each breast softly, tenderly, his fingertips dragged down between her breasts while his tongue teased each hardened nipple. His lips brushed against them, tugged gently at her as Harley threaded her fingers through his hair. She arched her back just a little when Jack sucked one nipple between his soft lips while he reached up to drag his fingertips over her other nipple, making his wife writhe in pleasure. He slid his hand up to cup her breast and squeezed gently feeling the soft, warmth of her breast in his hand, the way the fullness of her breast felt in the palm of his hand, the hard nipple in his mouth—everything about her turned him on. Jack growled in the back of his throat, pressing his teeth softly into her until she gasped and arched under his touch. Her inhaled shuddering breaths each time he flicked his tongue over the sensitive surface of her nipple. He rubbed his nose against her skin, his cheek pressed and rubbed against her. He couldn’t get enough of her, the feel of her, the smell of her. Jack growled. “Harley…mine…my Harley…”

Harley tugged at his hair just a little with a hissed. “Puddin…”

He released her breasts, snaking his way down her body and dragging his fingers along her skin, spreading his hands wide to touch as much of her as he could. Jack kissed her, rubbed his face against her stomach, licked her as he moved lower, worshiped her, his wife, his doctor, his best and truest friend, his Harley. He brushed his nose and lips against the warmth and soft touch of her skin, licked the line of her hip bones, pressed his lips to the mound of her sex and whispered as he made his way lower, then slipped between her legs. He kissed the soft skin of her thighs, licked along the sensitive skin between her groin and leg, biting softly as he growled.

“Doubt thou the stars are fire; Doubt that the sun doth move; Doubt truth to be a liar; But never doubt I love.”

Jack purred as his brushed his nose against her sex, his breath hot against her sensitive skin. He opened his mouth to press his lips against her, his tongue slowly sliding, wet and hot, moving up and down as he kissed her as intimately as possible.

Harley groaned loudly, her fingers tightened in his hair, her eyes squeezed closed as she raised her legs up, her feet rested on his shoulders while Jack deepened the kiss, slowly moving his tongue up and down, twirling gently, taking his time. Tasting her, loving her tenderly.

Harley arched her hips, both hands in Jack’s hair, her pointed toes pressed against his shoulder. “Uh Jack...puddin…”

Jack smiled and moved his hands under her ass, lifting her just a little while he deepened his kiss, the flat of his tongue pressed against her clitoris before he gently twirled the tip of his tongue over her which sent a hot tingle up from her groin to spread out in a warm wave of pleasure throughout her body.

Harley groaned and her brow furrowed just before she gasped when Jack took a long, slow suck, pressing his lips to her while his tongue slid deep inside her. Her entire body tensed as her orgasm rippled through her body, beginning from his mouth on her. She arched, her fingers tugged hard on his hair, but Jack didn’t notice any pain; he only smiled. He slid his hands out from under her to wrap his arms around her legs while Jack deepened the kiss, slowly moving his tongue up and down, twirling gently, taking his time. Tasting her, loving her tenderly.

Harley panted as she grinned down at him. “Oh puddin…”

As Jack crawled back up her body, he pressed kisses to her stomach, between her breasts. “You liked that?”

Harley blushed and giggled. “Very much.”

Jack reached her face and licked her mouth before he kissed her. She groaned as she tasted herself on his tongue; he loved tasting her and being part of her and she in turn loved being part of him, in all ways. He reached up and wrapped his hands around her head, his fingers wrapped around her hair as he kissed her passionately, a kiss so filled with passion Harley wouldn’t have been surprised if the bed had burst into flames.

Jack dragged his teeth along her chin before he sat up on his knees. He pushed her legs up and out, grinning as he looked down at her swollen, wet sex. He stroked his thumb over her, made Harley gasp. He grinned while he pressed and stroked his thumb over her.
Harley mewed and rolled her pelvis in response while Jack licked his lips catching his tongue between his teeth as with his other hand he stroked himself bringing himself close to the edge while he stroked his thumb over her up and down, moving his thumb in a slow circle while stroking himself slowly.

Harley grabbed the pillows over her head and licked her bottom lip as she groaned. “Mm...Puddin...fuck me Jack...please.”

Jack grinned continuing to play with her clitoris. “You cum for me first Harley.”

Harley’s eyes rolled with pleasure when Jack moved a little closer and began to stroke himself against her while he continued to stroke his thumb over her, wet and inviting to him. She was already overly sensitive from her first orgasm that her second came in a rush. She squeezed the pillows and cried out. The instant she came, Jack thrust into her.

Harley gasped. “JACK!!”

She released the pillows to reach up for him. Her hands glided down his stomach as Jack grabbed her knees and held her legs out wide as he stood on his knees and thrust into her with abandon.

Jack groaned. “Harley...uh…”

She whimpered; he felt so good. Her hands dragged down his body to his groin where she caressed him, feeling the way his shaft disappeared inside her. Harley slid her fingers down around his erection at the point he entered her, becoming covered in her fluids as Jack slowed his thrusts. He grinned at her, looking down to watch himself disappear into her, the frame of her fingers over him. She caressed him as Jack pulled out, almost all the way, but not quite. Harley grabbed him and squeezed, which made Jack’s eyes roll.

“Uh...Harley…” he hissed.

She smiled, releasing him to stroke his stomach and chest again, her now wet fingers leaving a trail on his skin.

Jack’s eyes closed just enough that she could see the blue of his eyes through his dark lashes as he stared down at her, his hands slid up to her calves.

“I love you Harls,” he whispered to her, thrusting slowly. “I love you.”

Harley grinned. “I love you Jack...always...you...me…”

Jack hooked his arms under her legs and dropped forward, capturing her mouth in a deep kiss while he started to thrust hard and fast, making the entire bed shake. Harley wrapped her arms around him, her fingers pressed into his back, her cries muffled against his mouth. She could feel that pleasurable pressure as Jack swelled inside her and his thrusts became harder, deeper, faster. Harley dragged her nails down his back and arched into his thrust, cumming with a muffled cry.

Jack groaned as her body clamped down around him, the warm, wet pressure of her orgasm rippled through him. He released her legs and cupped his hands around her face, kissing her hard, pouring himself into her as he came.

Harley began to cry. The intensity of her orgasm coupled with the intensity of her emotions spilled out and she couldn't seem to stop herself. Jack thrust a few more times, riding out the intensity of his climax with a last, low moan of pleasure. He was just coming down from his high when he noticed that Harley was crying.
Jack frowned. “Harley?”

“Baby? You all right?” he asked softly while he stroked her hair back from her face.

Harley smiled. “Yeah puddin, I’m fine...it’s just...I love you so much Jack. I don’t know what I would do without you.”

Jack brushed his nose against her, very softly catching her lips with his. “You’ll never know Harley. Never again will I let us be separated, you got that...Arkham...that will never happen again.”

She nodded while Jack kissed her tears.

“Shh...Baby...pumpkin...don’t cry,” Jack whispered softly.

“I’m sorry Jack.” She smiled and wiped at her eyes with the back of one hand. “I’m happy I promise.”

Jack kissed her tenderly, slowly. He took his time to make sure his kiss communicated every ounce of passion and love he had for her.

She stroked her fingers through his hair returning his kiss just as sweetly.

“Nothing will ever come between us Harls...” Jack whispered. “Nothing.”

* * *

Jack sat with his suit jacket over his lap as he blinked his eyes a bit after Harley finished with his eyeliner. He looked dashing tonight, she decided--well he always looked dashing to her, but tonight he just seemed especially so in his three piece dark purple and burgundy suit with a very fine, almost floral embroidered pattern. He was wearing a white dress shirt with a dark purple tie, matching socks and a pair of burgundy oxfords. Without the jacket on, the twin weapon holster he wore was exposed as was the knife at his hip, and she also found that very sexy. She had painted a dark eyeliner on his eyes, but his lips had just a slight gloss across him. He grinned at her when she finished.

“So how do I look?” he asked.

Harley grinned. “Good enough to eat puddin.”

Jack purred. “Really?”

Harley laughed. “Really.”

Jack smiled and stood up, took her hand. “Just like you then my sweets...good enough to eat...again.” Jack waggled his eyebrows at her and made Harley giggle and blush. She was dressed tonight in a short, two piece dress in dark red with a full short skirt with a sleeveless top that laced up her back, she wore a pair of black stilettos and had her hair down, soft waves curling down her back.

“Ready to go sweets?” Jack asked as he slipped his jacket on.

Harley smiled and flipped her skirt up to show the knife on her thigh and the gun on her other thigh--of which the skirt of her outfit did little to hide. Jack wolf whistled at her and winked.

“Now that is one hot outfit.”

Harley laughed. “Everyone is meeting us there, right?”
Jack nodded as he picked up his dark burgundy fedora, slipped it onto his head and put his arm out to her. Harley wrapped her arm around his arm.

“Yup, everyone should be there, the entire gang.” Jack grinned. “Should be fun tonight.”

*

Jack and Harley arrived only to find that they were the last to arrive; the gang was already there.

Jack started to laugh as they walked in, the two of them greeted by the sight of Bane on the dance floor with Duela, the two of them dancing to the sounds of Taylor Swift’s “Ready For It.”

Harley elbowed Jack in the side as they walked past the dance floor to stop him from laughing as they made their way into the club.

Kermit waved from the bar where Jason and Roxy were sitting as Kermit made them some drink that she set on fire. Roxy cheered, clapping her hands while Jason nearly fell off his stool.

Harley could see Thea and Trope where they sat, cuddled close together sharing some multi-colored drink. Alex was on the dance floor with Alice while Frost was dancing with Agatha.

Frank was leaning against the end of the bar flirting with some redhead that Harley didn’t recognize. She saw the twins talking with Angora and Zsasz was in conversation with Gus. Harley smiled. It was nice to see their little family all together like this, having fun. She tightened her grip on Jack’s arm, who glanced sides at his wife with a smile.

Harley saw Fish as they reach the far side of the bar, dressed in a tight fitting gold evening dress that stopped just above her knees with a slit up to her hip. Her legs were crossed showing off the high cut in her dress and the gold, stiletto sandals she wore. Harley could see that Fish had an eyepatch on that covered her missing eye and part of her face. The patch was gold decorated with large gold colored gems that caught the light, complimenting her dress and shoes. Harley smiled. Fish may have lost her eye, but she hadn’t lost her style.

Fish sat in the middle of a series of black couches arranged in a semi-circle that were trimmed with dayglow blue lights. A long oval table stood in the middle that held several bottles of wine, whiskey, vodka and several glasses. There were several people sitting around on the couches that Harley didn’t recognize, but she did see Big Mama. Big Mama was wearing a long light pink crimped wig that picked up the lights of the club, and a very tight white dress decorated with pink roses and a pair of hot pink pumps. The two women sat close together, their heads nearly touching when Big Mama saw Jack and Harley. She stood up and waved at them.

Jack and Harley moved over to greet Big Mama and Fish.

Big Mama grinned. With her drink in one hand she leaned over and did a quick cheek kiss to each of them before she laughed; her voice was just as deep as Harley remembered it. “I’m so glad to see you two!! Everyone is talking about what you did to Maroni’s businesses! Oh my god, it’s just amazing! Everyone is excited to see what is going to happen next.” Big Mama laughed.

Fish had stood up as well with a smile. Harley hurried over and put her arms gingerly around the other woman.

“How are you feeling?” Harley asked.

Fish smiled. “I’m all right dear. Thank you for asking. Can I get you both anything to drink?”
Harley giggled. “I want to try whatever it was Kermit was making over there that she had to set in on fire!”

Jack laughed. “That’s my girl...living life on the edge.”

Fish laughed and made a motion with her hand, catching the attention of one of the bartenders. “What would you like Jack?”

Jack smiled. “Mmm...how about a simple old fashion?”

Harley smiled. “A wine slushie?”

Fish motioned at the bar, somehow indicating Jack and Harley’s drink order with just a motion of her fingers. She smiled and turned to the women and men who sat around the couch with her and Big Mama.

“Everyone, this is Jack Wayne, the leader of the Red Hood gang and the one to whom…”

There was some commotion nearer the front of club. Jack turned just as a shot was fired.

Duella screamed.
Blood and Bullets

Jack turned at the sound of a shout, his attention drawn to the front of the club, he heard the sharp retort of a sidearm being fired, followed by a scream, and then everything erupted into chaos.

Everything seemed to slow down for Jack as he turned. He reached out with one hand to shove Harley behind him at the same time that he twisted on the ball of his left foot; his jacket tail flew out behind him as Jack wrapped his hand around the grip of one of his pistols. The lights of the club became brighter, the music which had changed from the lighter tones of a pop song into something stronger that melded with the steady increase in movement that Jack saw around him as AutoErotique’s “Asphyxiation” started to play.

Everyone in the club turned toward the sound of Duela’s scream which occurred half second after the gunshot went off. Jack thought he caught sight of the bullet only because the lights danced off the silvery metal as it zipped toward the dance floor. Jack’s eyes followed what he knew couldn’t be the bullet, but there it was...

The bullet almost seemed to him to have moved so slowly that he could have reached out and plucked it from the air. The odd sensation of time slowing down made the scene surreal. The bullet ripped completely through one young woman before it caught Duela in the face. There was a bright burst of blood, even under the pale lavender illumination and shifting lights, the blood stood out as the bullet ripped through his gang member’s cheek…

Jack saw her begin to fall, but that was before his attention was called to someone up front by a shout. Jack turned his attention back to the front of the club. The man who yelled was slightly heavy, maybe in his thirties if Jack had to guess. He wore a plain navy suit, had short almost shaved hair, not someone Jack knew, but the man seemed to know him as he yelled.

“JACK WAYNE!! Red Hood!! I want him and I want him DEAD!!”

Chaos blossomed, time sped up. People began to scream, patrons of the club who had nothing to do with Fish or The Red Hood began to scatter, panic taking over as they tried to get out of the way as more bullets were fired into the crowd.

A dozen men (maybe more, with the flashing lights and dimness of the club it was hard to tell) swarmed into the club shooting as they went and it was clear they were not concerned about innocent bystanders. This was a death team, their focus on killing anyone and everyone who got in the way of their targets.

Jack had to wonder who they were or how they knew the Red Hood gang would be here, but he would focus on that question later--right now he had to do what he could to protect his wife and his family.

*

Jason pushed off his stool just as Kermit yelped and dropped down behind the bar. He pulled his weapons, two Arsenal Firearms AF-1 Strike Ones that Jack had given him, a gift for his work with the gang. Jason was fucking proud of these guns, two-tone black and silver, beautiful weapons...he was proud that Jack had given them to him, proud that the Boss had noticed him, proud to be part of this fucking gang he thought. He would do anything for the Red Hood, anything that Jack Wayne asked.
He didn’t know who these men were and he didn’t care. All Jason cared about was that they were after the Boss and he wasn’t going to allow that. People were running and screaming to get out of the way. Over the tops of their heads Jason caught a glimpse of several men in suits breaking off and pushing their way through the crowd.

An opening appeared between Jason and the two men. He took several steps back and crossed his arms when he fired as two men broke off from the group, firing rapidly at the bar. He had seen Kermit drop down seeking cover behind the bar, but Cher, one of the waitresses, didn’t move fast enough. The young woman was struck in the chest, bright red exploding across her torso, the blood dark against the white plastic dress she was wearing. The young woman stumbled back and hit the shelves of colored liquor glasses behind her. Several of the bottles crashed to the floor. He heard someone scream, but he didn’t see who as he fired at the men.

Jason hissed. “Fuck!”

More shots were fired. Jason ducked and weaved, yelling as he did. “Roxy!! A little help here babe!!”

Another gunman that Jason had missed seeing in the darkened room, mixed with the crowd of people who were trying to get out of the club, came around to Jason’s left and slammed into the young man. Jason hit the bar as the man wrapped his large, beefy arms around him. Jason struggled, loosened his right arm enough to slam his fist and pistol into the man’s face. Jason twisted and rolled the man down to the floor. Jason dropped to one knee by the man and shot his opponent in the chest.

Jason surged to his feet while firing rapidly. He was trying to avoid hitting any of the patrons, but he couldn’t be completely concerned about them; compared to his gang, his family, they weren’t that important right now. His bullets found one of the other two men; his shots ripped through the man’s torso. Bug the second gunman rapidly fired as he dove down for cover behind some tables. One bullet ripped through Jason’s shoulder, forced the young man to step backwards, followed by another shot that burned along Jason’s thigh. He stumbled backwards several more steps; the pain was white hot, but Jason pushed it aside. He deliberately took several steps backwards. He thought he could take cover at the end of the bar when he tripped over something on the floor and came crashing down to the floor.

The impact dropped Jason onto his ass. He scooted back and stopped.

Lying in a pool of blood was Roxy, her eyes stared up lifelessly at the ceiling, her chest a mass of red.

Jason’s voice was a whisper, his eyes wide in shock. “Roxy?”

Jason reached out and grabbed Roxy by her arm and dragged her as he pushed himself backwards on his rear as fast as he could. He made it to the end of the bar and yanked Roxy’s lifeless body with him. He couldn’t hear anything over the sounds of the music and the screams. He only partly registered that he moved through something wet and sticky until he hit something that only partially moved.

He turned to see Frank, Alex’s father, lying on his side, his throat was ripped through from a bullet, there was blood pooled under Frank and soaking his shirt. Jason pressed his fingers to the man’s throat...there was nothing, no heartbeat, no breath.

Jason snarled with a slow blink. “Fuck!”

He holstered one of his weapons to pull Roxy’s body up into his lap, and wrapped his arms around her as he laid her head on his shoulder. He grabbed his other gun and held them both out as he hissed.

“Don’t you dare be dead Roxy...don’t you dare.” Jason’s voice was desperate even though the ugly truth was right there in front of him.

B

Bane turned just as he saw Duela shot. Her head jerked back, droplets of blood were highlighted by the lights of the club which made them looked like dark rubies, glittering wetly for a moment before the blood splashed across his body and face. Her body hit the floor, her head bounced, blood splattered the dance floor, her body parted the crowds of dancers like a stone on the surface of a lake.

Bane was hit in the next second as a bullet ripped through his shoulder. The bullet blasted out the front of his shoulder before he had a chance to pull his weapon and turn. The impact of the bullet didn’t register and neither did the pain. Bane’s only response to being shot was a slight grunt.

Instead Bane’s focus was on his dance partner, his fellow gang member lying at his feet. His attention was drawn down to Duela; her face was a bloody mess, he couldn’t make out her mouth, there was so much blood. At first he was sure she was gone, but no sooner had he thought she was dead, than he saw her breathe, bloody bubbles formed on her lips and from her nose. The bloody bubbles reminded Bane of the bubbles formed from blowing into a soda with a straw. The bloody bubbles oozed down her chin and cheeks. She was alive, but for how long he could only guess.

Bane hissed to both his unconscious friend and to himself. “Just hang on Duela, just hang on.” Bane pulled his Glock 19 from his hip while in the same motion he bent down and with one hand, grabbed Duela by the front of her dress. He lifted the unconscious woman easily off the dance floor and over his shoulder. He held his Glock up and pushed people out of his way just as one of the gunmen, a tall, thin man with a thick mustache came into view. Bane had the man right in his sights, a perfect headshot, but when he pulled the trigger there was a click...and nothing.

Bane snarled. “Fuck me!”

The gunman, who had by now seen Bane, grinned and raised his weapon, clearly thinking he had the big man. Bane, still keeping a hold on Duela, rushed the gunman. The man fired but suddenly, having a very large, wounded, very angry man rush at him, his aim went wild. The man realized the large mistake he had made when his vision was filled with the image of a furious Bane.

Bane grabbed the man by the front of his shirt and lifted the gunman off his feet with his free hand. The gunman started to bring his weapon around while he kicked and struggled, but Bane let go of Duela (but still kept her balanced on his shoulder) as he grabbed the man’s gun hand and forced the gun up and under the man’s chin.

Bane growled, “I fucking hate using guns.”

Bane slammed his forehead against the gunman’s face. The gunman cried out in shock at the burst of pain from his now crushed nose, but he only had seconds to contemplate the pain because Bane squeezed his gun hand, forced the man to shoot himself.

Bane jerked back, his face splattered with blood and worse as he hissed again.

“I fucking hate guns.”

B
Five gunmen invaded the dancefloor, alternately shoving patrons out of their way or shooting them. Frost saw Duela go down and Bane lift her up in the next moment. Frost heard more shots fired and from the corner of his eye he could see Jason firing his weapons.

Frost cursed and pulled one of his Glock 17’s. He turned looking for Agatha, surprised and pleased when he saw her beside him as Agatha pulled her pistol, a match for his.

Agatha asked, “Who the fuck are they?”

Frost shrugged. “Maroni’s men? Falcone’s? No idea, but they are gunning for us.”

Agatha began to answer him when Frost shoved her to the side and kicked a shaggy headed blond man in the knee and grabbed the same man by the hair. The man was larger, slightly taller than Frost, but Frost had no problem with handling the man.

Frost grabbed the blonde by the hair and yanked him backwards hard enough that the man lost his balance before Frost switched his grip to the man’s face. Frost yanked the man’s head back further, using the blonde’s nose for leverage and used the butt of his gun to hit the man in the throat. The gunman dropped, choking, grabbed at his throat. Frost shot him in the head.

Agatha grinned thinking to herself that was one of the single hottest moves she had ever seen Frost execute. More shots were fired. Agatha turned firing off a few shots of her own, zeroing in on another gunman, this one was bald, wearing sunglasses of all things she thought, as the man tried to get closer to her and Frost.

Agatha’s first shot struck the bald assailant in the shoulder. She couldn’t hear him over the chaos, but she could see the man’s mouth moving. If she were to guess, he was cursing. The bald man reached out and grabbed one of the patrons, a young blonde woman and hauled her in front of him, just as Agatha shot again. Her bullet hit the young woman in the chest.

Agatha cursed as the gunman held the woman’s body up, using her as as shield. He shoved himself through the crowd trying to maneuver around Agatha and Frost. Frost saw two more gunmen trying to get over to Trope and Thea who had stood up and were trying to get to cover. Frost knew for a fact neither one of them carried a gun or a knife since he had began lecturing the two on learning to handle a gun, knife, pepper spray...anything to defend themselves. They were both simply too caught up in their computers and techno gear to realize that they needed to be armed and ready for a fight. Thea was trying to lead Trope over to the far end of the bar where there were some dividers that could conceal the two young women, though the dividers were too thin to provide any real protection.

For a moment Frost thought about going back to stay by Agatha, but he trusted her to defend herself. Trope and Thea needed him.

*

The music had changed to some techno beat that Agatha recognized as Swedish with the heavy beat, and the lights of the club changed flashing with the music. Agatha cursed. She couldn’t get a clear shot of the man as she shoved through the large amount of people acting like stampeding animals. She could see Frost pushing his way through the crowd when she felt someone behind her...her instincts told her to turn.

She spun around just as a young woman grabbed Agatha by the front of her dress and yanked Agatha forward, while at the same time shoving the barrel of a gun against Agatha’s stomach and pulled the trigger three times.
Agatha gasped in surprise more than pain, but she still dropped her gun. When she dropped her weapon she grabbed the young brunette by the wrist that held her pistol and yanked her forward. Agatha brought her knee up and slammed the woman’s arm down on her knee in three quick strikes. The brunette dropped her weapon. Agatha grabbed the younger woman by the back of her neck, kicked her legs out from under her and dropped the brunette to the floor.

Agatha, blood dripping from her wound hissed without remorse, “Sorry about this honey.”

She grabbed the young woman by her head with both hands under the woman’s jaw. Agatha pulled back on the brunette’s head as the woman kicked her feet against the dancefloor creating a hard drumming sound that played along with the music. Agatha hauled back and with a vicious jerk, broke the younger woman’s neck.

Frost shoved people out of his way to get to the girls. He could see Zsasz who had already gunned down two of the mobsters, but he also noted that two more of the gang were down. It looked as if the Phelps twins were down. He couldn’t be sure, but it looked to Frost as if Connor was dead, Sean was wounded, his leg held out at an odd position as he held his brother. It was difficult to make out under the strobing lights in the club, but Frost would swear something was wrong with half of Sean’s face, there was a lot of blood and more blood was pooling under them.

Frost caught a glimpse of Alex who was firing at a couple of men, his pregnant girlfriend lying between his legs. He couldn’t be sure from this angle, but it looked as if Alice had been shot, there was blood on her front, but he couldn’t tell from his position where she had been shot or if it was life-threatening.

Frost felt something cold run through his veins; everything was going to hell quickly. For a moment Frost hesitated...go to protect Trope and Thea, or get to Jack and Harley...he closed his eyes for a second...the Boss and Miss Harley were armed, Trope and Thea were not...Frost hissed in frustration and continued to push his way to the girls. Frost caught sight of Gus who was shooting into the crowd, his right arm held awkwardly at his side, Angora and Clyde were both down...Frost couldn’t tell if they were dead or not, just that there was a lot of blood as he hurried to the girls. So many of the crew were down...so much blood.

When Frost arrived at the girls’ side, Trope was holding onto Thea, her eyes wide, clearly going into shock when Thea screamed and pointed. Frost turned to see a man with short black hair and thick sideburns—a man big enough to make two of Frost—step out of the darkness of the club and fire his gun at them. Frost didn’t think, he only reacted and threw himself in front of the girls just as they screamed.

The bullet hit him in the side, cutting through the meaty section of his hip. He felt it, but not like he should. Frost was aware he was running on adrenaline and that when this fight was over he was going to be hurting badly, but he didn’t spend any time on thinking about future pain. Instead he focused on protecting Thea and Trope. He almost fell when the bullet hit him, but he fired back. The bullet ripped through the other man’s shoulder, but did nothing to slow the man down.

The gunman, a good head taller than Frost, roared and charged, surprising Frost as the large mobster hit Frost in the chest with his shoulder and lifted him up off his feet. The effect disoriented Frost as his line of sight suddenly became the man’s ass. The lights of the club were flashing brightly, and the air was knocked from him making it difficult to breathe for a few seconds. The girls screamed and threw themselves out of the way as the big gunman turned and threw Frost.

Frost hit the floor and slid across its surface. He almost lost his hold on his gun and then the large mobster charged Frost again. For a moment, as Frost swiftly regained his feet, the thought that this man had to be crazy, charging him instead of shooting occurred to Frost as the big gunman came rushing toward him.

The large man hit Frost just as he got to his feet. Frost didn’t have time to evade, raise his gun or defend himself. So instead of fighting the man, Frost let the mobster lift him off his feet. The big sideburn toting mobster lifted Frost up off his feet, wrapped his arms around Frost’s thighs and held Frost up, continuing to charge forward. It only took Frost a moment to realize the man intended to throw Frost into a wall. Rather than trying to fight his way free, Frost pressed the barrel of his weapon against the back of the man’s neck and unloaded the rest of his magazine.

Frost jerked back as he fired, a few droplets of blood struck his cheeks. The large man stumbled. He took three steps with Frost over his shoulder before he finally hit the ground, falling forward like a tree. Frost tried not to fall with him, but the dead man’s grip around Frost’s legs was too tight. Frost hit the floor with enough force that the air in his lungs exploded out in a whoosh and his head slammed against the floor, made him see stars mixed with the flashing lights.

Frost laid still and blinked several times, but there was no way he was going to stay conscious. He had been hit in the head before and realized a split second before it happened, that he was going to pass out. Damn it, please let everyone be okay, he thought before he succumbed to darkness.

*

The business people from Panessa’s old territory who had gathered to meet with Jack and Harley all leapt to their feet. There was a moment of chaos as the people gathered shoved and knocked the couches and chairs out of their way. One man was in such a panic that he flipped over the table followed by his own screaming, and running while only two of the people in attendance, a tall, elderly Japanese man and a tiny Latina woman both pulled their own weapons that were concealed on them and took up positions to shoot back at the invaders.

Harley stepped up next to her husband, the fingers of one hand glided along Jack’s shoulder in a touch that told him she was at his side, she trusted him and she was ready.

Big Mama, at the first sign of trouble, yanked her dress up to reveal a Smith & Wesson 500 Magnum strapped to her leg by a couple of double belts around her thigh.

She pulled the weapon loose and snarled. “Bunch of cunts.”

Jack chuckled before he yelled out, somehow making himself heard over the sounds of the music, the screaming and the sheer panic in the club. “You looking for me boys?” The man who had given the order when the shooters first came into the club turned and saw Jack. Jack frowned, saw something familiar about him, his features--dark hair, a certain set to his shoulders and eyes...definitely a Maroni Jack decided. There was something about his features that reminded Jack of Sal Maroni. Jack had spent enough time with Sal that he had become intimately aware of Sal Maroni’s features—before they became unrecognizable as human. This man had to be related to Maroni somehow, Jack would bet his life on it...Jack narrowed his eyes as he realized that he was doing just that...

Jack frowned with a glance toward his wife. “I still have no idea who that is, but I’m sure he is related to Maroni.”

Harley frowned with a barely perceptible nod. “Maybe he’ll give you a chance to ask.”

Jack snorted. “I really don’t think he is in the mood for talking.”

Harley asked more softly, leaning close to her husband’s ear. “You think Falcone sent them?”

Jack snarled. “It doesn’t matter...this lands on Falcone’s doorstep regardless.”

With a motion of his fingers, the mobster across the club sent several of the his men to spread out to flank Jack, Fish, Big Mama and the two business owners who had stayed to fight while his other men had already begun to shoot at patrons, Red Hood gang—anyone in their way.

Jack hissed. “I don’t want anyone left alive.”

Jack began to shove his way through the crowd his wife at his side. One of Maroni’s men (Jack began to think of them as Maroni’s) rushed forward. Jack shot the man without taking his eyes off his target...the Maroni who was leading this attack.

*

Dino Maroni pushed his way closer. He was forced to move toward the bar as people kept getting in his way. For a moment, a brief second, he saw Jack Wayne coming toward him with a pretty blonde beside him. There was a second of hesitation on Dino’s part...a flash of indecision...a doubt that he had made the right decision coming into this place and going after the Red Hood gang because the look in Jack Wayne’s eyes sent a shiver of fear down his spine.

Dino’s hip hit the bar, which forced him to turn or he would have tripped over one of several downed bar stools. He glanced over at one of his men, Augustus whose mother was a cousin to Dino’s uncle. He motioned at Augustus who was immediately was at his side.

“Get Marco and Hugo over here now!” Dino snarled.

No sooner were the words out of Dino’s mouth than Jack was there, emerging from the crowd like a phantom, his gun aimed at Dino’s head.

“Who the fuck are you?” Jack snarled.

Dino raised his own weapon. “Dino Maroni!”

Jack grinned. “I love it when I’m right.”

Jack was about to shoot when something slammed into Jack’s right hand. The impact send a vibration up Jack’s arm which forced his hand open and he dropped his weapon. There had been a flash, light reflecting off metal...a knife, Jack quickly concluded.

Jack hissed, the impact stung enough that Jack thought for a moment that he might have a broken bone and from the strange numbness that started at his fingers and raced up his arm, Jack was pretty sure he had just gotten his finger broken. He spun around to see a large man wearing a pair of very large, very round glasses.

Jack didn’t throw any witty banter at the man, instead he turned and rushed Dino pushing people out of his way as he closed the short distance in a heartbeat.

Dino brought his gun up and pulled the trigger, but Jack was already past the barrel of the gun, inside Maroni’s reach. He slapped Dino’s gun hand wide and the shot went off missing Jack.

Jack grabbed Dino’s gun hand. The two men struggled as Jack tried to get the weapon out of Dino’s hand and Dino fought to keep a hold of it. A few more shots went off hitting a woman and a young man in the crowd as Jack struggled with Dino.

Dino yelled at the other man. “AUGUSTUS KILL HIM!!”

Augustus rushed forward. Jack still maintained a hold on Dino’s arm, but was forced to turn his back to Dino as he reached for something, anything. Jack’s hand slapped along the bar counter. For a few precious seconds there was nothing, but napkins, a toothpick, before his hand wrapped around a glass still miraculously sitting on the bar untouched.

Jack shattered the glass against the side of the bar, sent the amber contents splattering everywhere just as Augustus came at him, Jack thrust his arm out without looking and the broken glass slammed into the hollow of Augustus’ throat.

Augustus gasped in shock and took several steps back, the broken glass stuck in his throat.

Jack turned his attention back fully to Dino.

Dino had wrapped his gun arm around Jack from behind, the gun still in his hand. Jack twisted and struggled with the man who was surprisingly strong. Jack tried to slam the man’s hand against the bar to break his grip on the gun, but he couldn’t quite get into a position to give the action enough power to break Dino’s hold.

Jack hissed, perspiration dotting his forehead; the clubs lights made Jack look as if he were shimmering. Jack reached out and grabbed a piece of the broken glass that had scattered across the counter. The shard cut into Jack’s palm as he wrapped his hand around it and slammed the shard into Dino’s wrist.

Dino cried out, his hand popped open and he dropped his weapon.

The pain and surprise gave Jack an opportunity to break free of Dino’s hold. The two men continued to struggle as Dino twisted around and grabbed Jack around the waist. Jack wrapped an arm around Dino’s neck forcing the man’s head forward and into the bar. He wasn’t able to get enough power behind the move to cause Dino any real damage or to loosen his grip as the two men swung around.

Jack still had the broken glass in his now bloody hand. Holding Dino’s head against his side, Jack stabbed at the man’s face with the broken glass, cutting deep and bloody gouges across Dino’s cheeks, completely stabbing through Dino’s nose and into one of his eyes. The man screamed loudly while he continued to struggle. His fighting to break free of Jack became manic as the pain sent Dino into a crazed thrashing. Jack released his grip on Dino, grabbed the man by his hair and yanked him toward the bar. Jack lifted Dino up just enough to slam his head on the bar counter.
Jack took the piece of broken glass that had by now cut deeply enough into his palm that Jack would need stitches, and thrust the glass down into the side of Dino’s throat. There was a burst of blood that splattered Jack in the face, blinding him for a moment. Jack grinned and yanked the glass out, then let the man go, taking a step back from the bar as Dino slipped to the floor, a hand going up to his throat, but the wound was a fountain of blood. Dino looked up at Jack with his one eye, astonishment clear in his expression, blood thickly pouring from his throat.

Jack grinned at the same time he wiped Dino’s blood from his face with the back of his hand. “I bet this wasn’t how you thought this was going to play out, was it?”

Suddenly Jack was hit in the side, the air knocked out of him. He winced as one of his ribs popped, and pain radiated up his side.

The Jack and whoever had hit him tripped over a couple of downed stools, both of them hit the floor with a bone jarring impact. Jack gasped when his back hit the ground, the pain from the rib, broken or dislocated, sucked the breath out of him for a second. He turned his head and his eyes widened in shock. He saw Frank’s body…and Jason holding a clearly dead Roxy at the corner of the bar.

Jason saw Jack and for a moment his expression turned to something hopeful, but in the next moment Augustus was on Jack. Augustus hit Jack across the jaw with his fist. Jack tasted blood in his mouth as he struggled to block the next blow. The man’s fists hit Jack’s forearms.

Jason aimed his weapon, but the two men were quickly entangled taking away any clean shot Jason might have had. Jason cursed. He didn’t want to take a chance and shoot Jack…

Jack gasped, his breathing labored from the dislocated rib and now the compression on his throat when Augustus twisted around and wrapped his legs around Jack’s neck and grabbed his left arm. The man yanked back hard enough that he was going to break it. Jack hissed in pain as he struggled, wheezing. He stabbed the man several times in the thigh blindly, smearing blood everywhere from his wounded hand and the blood that was flying from stabbing the other man and trying to break Augustus hold on him. Augustus let out a cry as Jack’s glass blade cut deep enough that Jack could finally break Augustus’ hold.

The two men struggled again and twisted around, the slick floor made the two of them slip and slide around a bit as they tried to grab and overpower the other. Jack gained the upper hand for only a moment before Augustus slammed him back to the floor, a knife in his hand, the multicolored lights of the club reflecting off of the blade.

Augustus grinned viciously and snarled, his expression morbid with the deep neck wound Jack had inflicted upon him. “Now you are going to die.”

“Knives are so much fun aren’t they? You get to be up close and see the play of emotions on your victim’s face…” Jack chuckled. “It’s enlightening isn’t it?

Jack had dropped his glass and wrapped both hands around Augustus’ arm to prevent the knife from going into his eye.

The two men were sweating, blood dripped onto Jack’s lips from his hand wound, his breath was labored, pain shot up his side from his rib as he struggled against the bigger man’s attempt to stab him. Jack had to take a chance. He let go with one hand and with his wounded hand he hit Augustus in the throat where Jack had stabbed him with the broken glass.

Augustus choked, his grip loosening. Jack twisted his head to the side, though the knife’s tip cut into his cheek. Jack took that opportunity to reach up with his free arm to twist his weakening foe’s head to the side and slam him to the floor while at the same time twisting Augustus’ hand holding the blade to face him. With their positions reversed, Jack put all his weight against Augustus’ hand that held the blade, Jack’s hands wrapped around his so that Augustus couldn’t release the knife. Augustus reached up with his other hand to grip Jack around his face, his thumb against Jack’s eye and began to push against Jack’s eye.

Jack snarled and surged against the blade, pain radiating from his eye, his badly wounded hand, his dislocated rib, until Augustus’ arm suddenly just gave out and the blade sliced cleanly into Augustus’ throat.

*

Just as Jack had been disarmed, Harley’s wrist was grabbed by a man with pock scarred cheeks Harley only came up to the middle of the man’s chest, which forced her to look up when the man squeezed her hand hard enough that her fingers were forced open and then he yanked her arm up slightly.

Harley gasped in pain as the mobster squeezed hard enough that she thought her wrist would pop.

The man, Marco, grinned at Harley. “Hello angel.”

He twisted her toward him and yanked her forward, slugging her across the face while keeping a hold of her other arm. Harley gasped in pain as her head snapped to the side; she tasted blood and the impact left her slightly stunned. Marco grinned and with a flourish, used Harley’s arm to twist her over his shoulder and slam her back against the floor.

Harley gasped painfully as her breath was forced from her lungs with the impact. Marco stepped over her to straddle her while he kept a hold of her wrist. Harley flung her right leg up in an attempt to kick him in the groin, but he blocked her leg with a simple twist of one of his legs. Harley frowned as she tucked her legs and rolled backwards in a somersault, coming back up on her feet while breaking his hold on her wrist at the same time.

Marco took another swing at her, but instead of simply stopping her roll, Harley did a quick series of cartwheels and a backflip to put some distance between them. People scattered out of her way as Harley cartwheeled to the middle of the dance floor ending with a second full backflip. She grinned, momentarily pleased with herself that she had pulled off her evasion even in heels. Jack would be so proud of her she thought.

She spun around to face Marco again, but the large man had simply grabbed a fallen stool at the bar and threw it at her. Harley yelped and ducked. The stool just barely missed her, but it was enough of a distraction for Marco to charge her.

He took another couple of swings at her, but Harley was ready, ducking and dodging and using her forearms to deflect--rather than block--his heavy blows. She took a couple of swings herself, but Marco easily blocked her, thrusting her arms wide enough that he was able to take a shot at her and punched her squarely in the face. Harley gasped at the suddenly flood of blood from her nose. It hurt like a sonofabitch, but as she wiggled it with her thumb and forefinger, she was fairly confident it wasn’t broken.

“Asshole!” Harley hissed as she spit blood.

Marco grinned at her. “You are fast and quite flexible angel.”

“I ain’t your angel,” Harley snarled. She yanked her knife from its sheath on her thigh, another distraction for the mobster as Marco’s eyes went straight to where she had lifted her dress. Harley threw her knife at him. She had never thrown her knife before; she knew she wasn’t good at it, but she didn’t need it to hit him. Marco knocked her knife out of the air, but Harley used it to give her a moment to come in quickly, moving under his guard. She wrapped her hands around the back of his neck once she was close, and lifted herself up, wrapping her legs around his shoulders at the same time twisting herself up onto his shoulders. She used her body as leverage to fling the man down to the floor.

Harley hit hard, the floor meeting her shoulder with a painful impact, but she kept her hold on the mobster and grabbed his arm as they both fell. She stretched his arm out against her body, trying her best to break the bone, while at the same time squeezing his throat with her legs. Harley was thankful she had worn a short skirt that gave her lots of room to use her legs.

Marco punched Harley in the thigh hard enough that she lost her hold. He thrust her legs off of him and rose to his feet quickly. Harley rolled swiftly to her feet and started to take a few steps to give herself some distance from him when Marco grabbed her and spun her around at the same time he yanked his own knife out. Harley squeaked as she was spun around and Marco slashed at her. Harley brought her arm up to protect her face and throat. The knife cut deeply across her forearm, made blood flow from the wound dark against her skin. Harley yelped and stumbled back before she surprised him by jumping up and snapping her leg out; the heel of her shoe cut across the man’s forearm. He stumbled back a step before he lunged at her again. Harley dived under his swing, but the heel of her shoe snapped, throwing her off balance. Marco took advantage, slashing at her again, the knife cut a thin line across her chin. Harley rolled away from him, at the same time yanking off her shoes and throwing them at the big man.

The shoes hit harmlessly against Marco’s arms as he batted them away.

Marco smiled and stalked toward her. “Come on angel, we don’t have to fight.”

“Oh, I think we do,” Harley snarled as Marco came close enough that Harley flung herself to the floor, landing on her side and wrapped her legs around his, sweeping him off his feet. Harley reached back over her head and pushed herself up to her feet with a little jump just as Marco began to get to his feet, his hand still wrapped around his knife. He had one leg bent, ready to push himself up as Harley rushed him using his bent leg to propel herself up and onto his shoulders again. She brought her arm up and slammed her elbow down on the his shoulder with enough of an impact that he dropped down to both knees, but the impact of her elbow wasn’t enough to put him out of the fight. She jumped off of him, but he grabbed her ankle and pulled hard, knocking her flat on her face.

Harley twisted onto her back and kicked him in the face with her free leg. Marco cursed pushing himself to his feet while he kept a hold of her ankle and tried to drag her at the same time he tried to stab her again with his knife.

Harley surprised herself when she folded herself to grab his wrist, twisted his arm and grabbed the knife. She cut her fingers on the blade, but was still able to twist the knife around and slash at him. Harley spun around on her back—the slickness of the floor made that easy—which brought her other leg around at the same time Marco (who still held her ankle) made the mistake of yanking back. This brought her body up closer to his, but allowed Harley to kick with her free foot and knock the mobster off his feet. Harley slashed deeply into Marco’s leg, cut his hamstring with her stolen knife. She swiftly stood and turned around to stab Marco in the chest three times in rapid succession before she stumbled away from him, the bloody knife still in her hand.

Harley blinked and then saw a man standing there, staring at her. He was dressed like the others, navy suit, but this man had a goatee. She didn’t know it, but the man was named Hugo. He had his gun on her, aimed at her chest but there was something in his eyes, even in the dim light that he knew this was a very bad idea. Just when Harley wasn’t sure if he was going to pull the trigger or not, another gunshot rang out through the club. Harley jerked in response and looked down at herself, but there was no wound on her. She looked back at the man who held the gun on her and saw that a hole had erupted in the the man’s cheek as his head was knocked to the side in an explosion of blood, bone and mess of tissue…

Then he collapsed.

Harley stood there in shock for a moment; her eyes shifted to the side and behind the now dead mobster where she saw Jack standing, both hands around his pistol which was aimed at where the dead man had been standing only moments ago.

His gaze met hers, his blue eyes melting from ice to warmth in seconds.

“Puddin!!” Harley ran to him.

Jack opened his arms to catch her.

*

Jack stood outside what looked like an abandoned building. His suit was stiff with dried blood, his hair was a mess and hanging down around his face. His right hand was bandaged, a splint on his broken ring finger, bandages wrapped around his palm against the stitches, his chest and side hurt from the dislocated rib. Getting it put back in place had not been fun, he had to admit. He only stood still for a moment, staring out into the darkness. There was only one street lamp that provided any illumination on an otherwise dark street. Jack stared into that darkness for several beats before he began to pace again, smoking angrily on his cigarette, his lips set in a grim line and his jaw muscles working as he gritted his teeth.

He threw the butt down and awkwardly pulled his cigarettes and lighter from his jacket pocket. He took one out and looked into the cigarette package. He had six left. Jack cursed and lit the cigarette, took a hard pull and held the smoke inside his lungs before he slowly a smokey breath out. They were at a hospital run by Henderschott, a hospital for those who didn’t want to be questioned by hospital staff or the police, for those who worked the darker side of Gotham. The place looked like an abandoned building, and the inside wasn’t much better, but Henderschott had a fully equipped hospital inside with staff, all who were paid well to keep their mouths shut and care for their specialized patients.

Jack closed his eyes and let the tobacco calm him, if only a little. They had lost five people, five members of the gang—dead. Alice had been shot and had gone into labor, but Henderschott had saved both her and the baby, keeping her from delivering early. Alex’s father Frank was dead. Everyone else except Zsasz, Trope and Thea, had suffered some sort of wound.

The Red Hood gang was in shambles, nearly broken.

Duela would be permanently scarred from the bullet that had ripped through her cheek. Agatha...thankfully, Jack thought, would live, though she was going to be out of commission for a while. His aunt was a tough one, a Wayne. Frost, Bane, Jason...all wounded, but on their feet, Gus was maimed, Roxy was gone, and Fish was dead. Big Mama had stayed behind to clean up the mess…

The entrepreneur had discovered that they had been betrayed by one of the people there to meet with Jack, one of the businessmen had told Dino Maroni where and when they were meeting; someone too scared of Maroni and Falcone to give the Hood a chance. Jack had made sure that his inability to trust had ended poorly. Jack closed his eyes. Harley...his Harley was alive with only a couple of wounds, scars she would bear, perhaps forever. Jack took another hard drag on his cigarette and his lip trembled. If anything had happened to her Jack didn’t know what he would have done...how he would have...He released the smoke slowly, clamping down on the tremor and the burn in his eyes. He wiped angrily at the tears that burned his eyes as he walked back and forth across the crumbling sidewalk...Harley was alive and she was fine. She was just inside checking on his aunt and Alice.

Jack exhaled a heavy breath of smoke as his hand shook slightly again. This entire thing had been one large clusterfuck. He had to figure out what had gone wrong (besides the betrayal), what he ought to have done, and make certain that nothing like this happened again.

He stopped pacing and leaned against the building when the door opened and Harley, barefoot and bandaged, walked out. Seeing her made Jack’s heart thump hard inside his chest.

She hurried over to him and Jack held the cigarette between his lips while he opened his arms. Harley rushed into his embrace, wrapped her arms around his waist. Jack pulled her close against him, and held her tight. Her presence calmed the rage he was feeling, his almost unbearable rage…

He cupped the back of her head, held her close as he tossed the cigarette away and kissed her hair.

“How are you doing sweets?” Jack asked gently.

“I’m all right puddin,” she said quietly. “Are you okay?” She looked up at him resting her bandaged chin on his chest.

Jack closed his eyes. “No, Harley—I’m angry.”

“Me too puddin,” she said softly. “I can’t believe Roxy and Frank are gone…”

He stroked her hair. She could feel the tremble in his hand, but she tightened her arms around his waist, stood on her toes and pressed her mouth to his. Jack tightened his hold on her, cradling her head as he kissed her deeply. Having her close, tasting her, smelling her, everything about her made him relax.

She pulled away just a little to whisper. “You aunt was asking for you.”

Jack nodded. “Let’s go inside then.”

*

Agatha was lying in a hospital bed. She had come out of surgery a couple of hours ago and had only been awake for a short time. Frost was already in the room when Harley and Jack stepped in, as was Dr. Henderschott.

The physician nodded at Jack and Harley when they entered. “Your aunt is doing well. I should be able to send her home in a few days.”

Agatha, though groggy, groaned. “A few days?”

The doctors sighed. “Yes Miss Wayne, a few days. That’s actually quite a short time, considering you were shot three times remember.”

Agatha stuck her tongue out at the doctor who chuckled turning back to Jack. “The rest of your people will all be able to leave tonight except Alice and Gus.”

Jack nodded. “Thank you doctor.”

Henderschott smiled and left the room.

Jack moved over to his aunt’s side and carefully wrapped his arms around her shoulders. “I’m so glad you’re going to be fine.”

Agatha smiled and put her arms around Jack with only a small grimace of discomfort. “I’m glad I’m all right too. Been a while since I’ve been shot like that.” She gave Jack a kiss on the cheek. “How are you two?”

Agatha laughed, then winced. “Oh damn.”

Jack stood up, glanced at Frost who had his shirt and jacket resting on his shoulders, the bullet wounds bandaged up. The man looked tired and pale, but whole. Jack started to pace again. “I’m taking Falcone out now...no more waiting.”

Agatha glanced at Harley and Frost. “Jack, I don’t…”

“No.” Jack snarled and turned toward his aunt. “Five of our people are dead! The rest of you...no.”

Jack shook his head as his nostrils flared in anger. “Maroni was Falcone’s pet, his lieutenant and his responsibility. Anything that a Maroni did can be traced back to the old man’s doorstep and this...it may have been a Maroni who pulled the trigger, but it is Falcone who is responsible.” Jack’s voice was low, filled with rage so hot and thick Harley could almost feel it across her skin. He growled more than he spoke. “This won’t go unanswered. He killed my family. My friends! I’m sick of these fucking mobsters!” Jack stabbed at the air. Harley could feel something different in her husband’s tone, in his demeanor. A line had been crossed and Jack was pushing back against that.

“Gotham belongs to me now and I am going to bring revenge down on them for what happened like a fucking GOD!” He turned suddenly and slammed his good hand, balled into a tight fist, into the wall, causing everyone in the room to jump. “I will so utterly destroy Falcone that no one will ever think about going against me and my family again.” His voice was a deadly whisper. Harley frowned when she thought she heard a tiny giggle escape Jack’s lips, but then he stepped back from the wall and turned to Frost.

“Tomorrow, we go to ACE Chemicals. We kill anyone and everyone there and we burn it to ash. Then we are going to go visit Falcone.” Jack smiled slowly. “I want to see how he feels about trying a few of the drugs he's made from my gas, maybe see how he likes what I’m going to come up with next.”

* *

Bruce pulled his cowl off and wiped his brow with the back of his gloved hand. He glanced over at Dick who grinned from ear to ear as he removed his mask too. The young man was dressed in a suit of his own design. Red and black were the dominant colors, red chest piece, the rest black, black cape trimmed in red. The only other color Dick wore was around the black “R” on his left breast, trimmed in a dark gold. He had put the uniform together with help from Alfred. This had been Dick’s first night out, much sooner than Bruce had counted on, but the young man was determined and he had shown progress. Bruce hadn’t been able to come up with a good enough reason to delay the young man any further. Dick trained almost too much, asking questions, performed research, showed dedication and discipline; he was as ready as he could be without actually going out onto the rooftops of Gotham. Bruce mused about how differently things might have been if he hadn’t trained alone, if he had had a mentor to guide him, but there was no point dwelling on the past. He had the future to look out for, a sidekick to train, a son, a brother-in-arms...

Robin was the code name Dick had chosen when Bruce gave him the option to choose his own name, the nickname his mother had given him, her little Robin was what she had called Dick, her little Robin flying through the air. Bruce hadn’t said anything against the name, and he hadn’t argued with Dick about his color choices, not when he realized what the young man was doing. He was honoring the memory of his parents by wearing the colors of their circus costumes. Bruce wondered what he would have worn to honor his parents if he had thought about it. He had chosen black for so many reasons, not just because the bat was black. He had chosen it for the shadows, partly, but if he was more honest with himself, he might admit that he chose the color for mourning. He mourned the lost of his family, his parents, and his brother by wearing black each night. Bruce dismissed his morbid thoughts in order to tackle the puzzle at hand. He pulled out the chair in front of the Batcomputer and sat down. Tonight had been Robin’s first time out, the focus being to teach Dick how to navigate Gotham when he had heard the call about a massacre at a nightclub.

When they had arrived, Batman had stayed out of the way. The police were already on the scene, so instead he had Alfred patch him into the police radio. He had learned that there were several dead patrons, including the owner, Fish Mooney, whom he had heard about though never spoken to. But the information that interested him the most was when he heard that one of the bodies had been identified as Dino Maroni.

Now back at the cave, Bruce typed in the information as Dick stepped up behind him and put a hand on the back of the high backed chair.

“So who is Dino Maroni?” Dick asked.

“Actually no one,” Bruce answered calmly. “It’s who he’s related to that’s important and that is Sal Maroni, one of Carmine Falcone’s lieutenants. It was known that Sal did some work in Panessa’s territory, a little protection racket for extra cash, and Dino was part of that. Falcone didn’t care about what Sal did on the side, as long as it didn’t interfere with his work for him, and Panessa could do nothing about—he wasn’t at the table and had little real power.” Bruce frowned, glanced back at his protege. “But what I find interesting is that someone, this Red Hood from what my sources tell me, burned down all of Maroni’s holdings. Several months before that, it was Panessa who was the target. It's as if someone is working their way up to Falcone.”

Dick frowned. “What does that have to do with the club and the shootout there?”

Bruce frowned in thought. “Fish Mooney’s place was in Panessa territory. Word has it that this Red Hood gang had taken all of Panessa’s territories. I betting that Maroni still wanted his protection fees paid and the Red Hood gang disagreed. Now Sal Maroni is missing, his properties destroyed and now Dino Maroni ends up dead in a club that belongs to the Red Hood.”

Bruce frowned. He needed to learn about this Red Hood and fast. If his guess was right, a gang war was about to erupt.

And Gotham had enough problems as it was.

*

Across the city, Falcone cursed loudly and colorfully. Smoke billowed from his mouth as he angrily smoked his cigar. Gigi wore only a green teddy, sat curled on the edge of the large queen size bed, and watched him as he paced. He was dressed only in his slacks, white dress shirt, shoes and his suspenders. They had been in the middle of what was turning into a heavy make-out session when Alfredo Bertinelli had called to tell Carmine about Dino. Carmine finally stopped prowling the room, grabbed up his cellphone and hit a number. After a second he sneered.

"Tiseu, I want extra men on several of my properties, tonight. You know which ones I’m talking about. Yes, I’m expecting trouble from that cazzo Red Hood gang. Yeah, I’m positive they have something do with Dino. I’m expecting them to make a move on me and I want extra security.”

Carmine started to hang up, but stopped himself. “And put some extra men on ACE Chemicals too.”

He waited and listened to Tiseu before he spoke again. “Look Tiseu--I don’t appreciate my orders being questioned. If you can’t do it I will find...Good. I want it done now.” Carmine hung up and tossed the phone onto the dresser before he walked back over to sit down next to Gigi.

Gigi crawled behind him and began to rub his shoulders. “Everything okay, honey bear?”

Falcone smiled at her over his shoulder. “It’s fine, just business.”

“You sure honey?” Gigi shifted around and Falcone pulled her onto his lap. He nodded.

“Just a Wayne being a pain in my side.”

*

It was late morning. They had returned to the park only an hour or so ago, but Jack hadn't rested. He had showered, thrown on some black slacks and a blood red dress shirt without bothering to button it and had stormed out of the house barefoot to walk across the park to his lab. Frost, Bane, Thea, Trope, Jason and Zsasz were coming over tonight. They were going to hit ACE Chemicals hard tonight. Jack was unwilling to wait. He was more than angry; he was livid.

The true start of the war with the Gotham mob would be tonight.

Harley had thrown on a simple white backless sundress with a little flared skirt and a pair of panties after their shower, not bothering with a bra or with fixing her hair. She had simply combed her hair out to let it air dry. She sighed as she ran the brush through her hair feeling the edges of the warm buzz that signaled that her pain medication was beginning to work. Jack had refused any medication. She wasn’t sure if he was hurting or not but he hadn’t been himself since last night. He had smoked through his package of cigarettes before they left the underground hospital, having stopped to buy a carton before they returned home. He had chain-smoked through another pack before they had showered. She had never seen him smoke like that, clearly aggravated, barely balanced on the edge, his temper simmering just under the surface. He wasn’t calming down at all, it seemed.

She was worried about him, worried about the gang, worried about what was going to happen next.

She made her way down the stairs of their home barefoot. The house was quiet, somber as if the walls felt the shift in mood. Jack had been in the lab for well over an hour and Harley decided that he needed a break. What he needed, she thought, was some food and a few hours sleep, but she would settle for getting her husband to eat. She made her way into the kitchen, made Jack a peanut butter and jelly sandwich, and some chocolate milk. She picked up the plate and glass and headed across the amusement park to her husband’s lab in the back of the haunted house ride.

*

Harley could hear music playing through the walls of the amusement ride before she even entered through the front of the haunted house. Jack always had his music loud when he worked, but from the sound of it, he had his music cranked up to deafening levels.

Harley could heard the sounds of Foo Fighters “The Pretender” playing loudly as she made her way down the tracks to find the door to his lab ajar.

She didn’t bother trying to call out to Jack as she used her hip to push the door the rest of the way open and headed inside.

She saw Jack, his back to her, with goggles covering his eyes, his shirt discarded over the back of a chair as he poured lime green liquid from a glass beaker carefully into a small, round container. She had no idea what he was doing, but it looked dangerous to her. She took a moment to admire his back, the lean muscles, the curve of his spine, which her eyes traced down to his slacks.

She walked over to where the stereo sat and set his food down before she reached over to turn the music down to a whisper.

Jack turned around with a frown that turned into a faint smile on his lips that all too quickly faded.

“Harley, sweets, I’m busy--why are you here?” Jack went back to what he had been doing.

Harley frowned at him before she picked up the food and she walked over to him. “I brought you some food. You need to eat puddin.”

Jack snarled. “I’m busy.”

Harley narrowed her eyes and slammed the plate down on the table near him. She didn’t notice that she had broken the plate cleanly in half. “You are going to eat,” she said evenly.

Jack--still facing away from her--set the container down and repositioned the glass beaker he held back in the metal tripod at his elbow.

“Harley, I need to get everything done for tonight. I don’t have time to eat.” Jack walked over to the other side of the room. He was still so angry she thought, almost blindly angry.

Harley followed him and put her hand on his shoulder and started to pull him around. “Jack, you need…”

Jack spun around and grabbed her by her waist. He yanked her in front of him and kissed her hard, pressing her lips against her teeth, his fingers pressed against her thighs and dragged up her skin, while he shoved her back until the counter pressed almost painfully into her flesh. The metal of the brace on his broken finger was chilled, creating goosebumps across her skin.

Harley made a muffled sound of surprise as Jack pressed his body hard against her, the edge of the table pressed uncomfortably into her lower back as he reached up and grabbed her breasts with both hands squeezing just a little too hard, but she couldn't stop herself from becoming hot; her body immediately responded to her husband attentions.

Harley reached up and wrapped her hands around the back of his head, one hand went into his hair and tugged him closer. She opened her mouth against his, welcoming his tongue and biting at his lips. Jack did the same, though his kisses bordered on savage as Jack lifted her up, reaching behind her to wipe away whatever was on the table to send glass and any number of other things crashing to the floor before he dropped her on the table, all while his mouth never left her lips.

Jack set her on the table edge and reached up to grab the front of her dress, then tore it down the front. Even with his broken finger, and torn up hand, Jack easily ripped the thin material. He growled as his eyes raked over her nearly naked body. He reached up to squeeze her breasts again, then he kissed her savagely; his mouth raked down from her lips, his tongue licked down her throat. He used the full flat of his tongue to trace the line of her throat to her shoulder where he bit down on her hard enough to bruise her. He dipped his head down lower and sucked at her nipples, his hands squeezed and shoved her breasts up and together, his teeth caught one of her nipples and tugged in a combination of pleasure and pain that made Harley cry out.

“Jack!”

Jack attacked her throat again, his teeth found the tender flesh of her neck, biting and sucking as he continued to squeeze her breasts, his thumbs stroked hard against her tender nipples. He pressed down on them, then, slid the flat of his thumb back and forth while he bruised her throat with his lips and teeth.

Harley groaned her breasts were on fire, his touch made her body ache. She wanted him to fuck her hard, to feel him pierce her while he pressed his teeth into her. Harley dragged her nails down his shoulders and along his chest, leaving angry red lines against his skin.

Jack dug his teeth into her bottom lip, the combination of pain and pleasure had her groin throbbing.
Harley dropped her hands to the table and wrapped her fingers around the edge as Jack reached down to yanked at her panties. He stopped to tear the thin cloth, ripped them from her body before he tossed the ruined garment to the floor.

Harley sat up and her fingers went to his slacks. She worked quickly to undo the button and zipper.
She shoved them, along with his boxers, below his hips. Jack took a few precious moments to shake the slacks and boxers down his legs before he kicked them off and across the room.

Harley looked down. His erection was hard, swollen with need, she could see a single drop of semen on the tip of his erection. Her breath picked up as she reached down and wrapped her hand around him.

Jack jerked as she squeezed, his eyes rolled closed as he growled. “Harley...Harls…”

He grabbed her, yanked her to the edge of the table.

Harley released her hold on him as Jack pulled her closer and shoved himself into her.

Harley cried out, wrapped her arms around his shoulders as her legs went up around his waist.

Jack fucked hard and fast, pounded into her, his hands gripping her hips as he held her against the table’s edge. He pressed his fingers painfully into her hips while lightning jolts of agony raced up his arm from his damaged hand, the pull of the stitches in his palm, the ache of his broken finger shot up his arm, but he held onto her, thrusting hard and fast into his wife.

Harley groaned and dug her nails into his skin. She held on to him as if her life depended on it. She dropped her hands to reach around and grab his ass, her legs held up, dangling slightly as he pressed fully into her.

Harley, gasped, tensed as Jack fucked her hard, continued to pound into her, bouncing her up with each thrust until she cried out with intense pleasure. She wrapped her arms and legs tight around him, squeezed against him, her entire body folded around Jack when she climaxed.

Jack groaned loudly when he felt her clamp down around him, her body tight and holding him. He wrapped his arms around her, held her close just as he came with a loud, guttural hiss.

Jack continued to thrust just a few more times, but slowly, tenderly, riding the last waves of his orgasm.
Harley laid her head against his shoulder. Her body shuddered and twitched. Neither of them moved for what seemed forever to Harley until Jack lifted her off the table and together they sank to the floor of the lab. He sat down, staying inside her, held her tightly against him.

Harley kept her arms and legs wrapped snugly around Jack until he settled down before she loosened her grip only slightly. She stroked her fingers through his hair, softly, brushed his hair back from his face before she caressed him with tender, butterfly light kisses along his shoulder, his neck and across his jaw until she reached his mouth. Jack cradled her head as he returned her kisses with a slow burning passion. He took his time with each lick of his tongue, the press of his lips as he tried to communicate the depth of his feelings to her.

Harley smiled and kissed his cheek, then the side of his mouth. “You could never hurt me puddin, never.”

Jack reached up and stroke both hands down her still slightly damp, clean hair. He tucked strands of her hair behind her ears and stared with concern into her blue eyes. “I’m sorry,” he said softly. “I’m sorry I was so rough.”

“I understand Jack. I’m angry too.” Harley stroked his hair back behind his ears. “I want to hurt Falcone back just as much as you.”

Jack kissed her again before he pulled her close again, his arms wrapped tight around her. “I don’t know what I would do without you Harls. I don’t know what I would have done if…”

Harley pulled back enough to cut him off with a tender kiss. “Shh...we’re together puddin and we are going to do this together too. Besides, lover, I liked what we just did.”

She looked at him through hooded eyes and gave him a smile.

Jack laid his head against her shoulder and held her tight. “I love you Harley.”

Harley closed her eyes and held her husband. “I love you too.”

*

Evening felt hot and humid in Gotham.

Jack sat on the couch, his legs crossed, a cigarette in his black gloved hand. He was dressed in a dark plum colored three piece suit with a crisp white shirt, burgundy tie, his hair slicked back, eyes outlined and lips painted. Harley sat next to him in a pair of black fitted slacks, a bright blue blouse that made her eyes stand out, some brown ankle boots and her hair down in loose, almost romantic waves.

Bane looked a little pale around the eyes, but his mouth was set in a firm line. His bandages were all covered by his clothing; jeans, a long sleeve dress shirt and just standing there, no one would know right away that he had been hurt. Harley could tell by the way Bane held himself that he was in pain. Frost was much the same way, wearing a black suit and tie and his wounds were also hidden. The only indication of pain he gave were the dark circles under his eyes.

Jason was more obvious, limping slightly and he was pale, with a haunted look in his eyes. The death of Roxy had struck him hard.

Alex was on speaker since he was with Alice. Harley had worried that they would lose Alex—an understandable loss—but he was more determined than ever to help. He had told Jack that he was now one hundred percent in the gang, his information brokerage, his neutral standing that he had been trying to maintain despite helping Jack was gone. He was throwing himself in with Jack and the gang completely now. Harley knew he was seeking revenge, just like Jack.

And Zsasz, he seemed content.

Trope and Thea sat on their favored chair together between Frost and Bane.

Jack slowly let the smoke flow from between his lips before he spoke. “Are the gas grenades ready?”

Frost nodded. “Loaded in the cars Boss, along with the two phosphorus grenades in that special case you gave me. I also put the molotovs in Bane’s car.” Jack nodded and moved his attention to Jason who took a step forward as if he were in the military to report for duty. It was clear he was hurt in the way that he moved (at least it seemed that way to Harley) a slight tilt to his gait, the darkness under his eyes…

“I have the weapons Boss. Anderson gave me a couple of M&P15-22Ps, handful of AR-15’s and as much ammo as we could carry. I’ve got my bike loaded up and I gave out the weapons, just like you said Boss.” Jason smiled viciously. There was a gleam in his eye that wasn’t too dissimilar from Jack’s Harley thought as the young man hissed. “And can I say Boss, I’m ready for some payback.”

Jack stood up as he squashed the butt of his cigarette into the ashtray beside him. “I think we are all ready, Jason darling, I think we all are. All right boys and girls--load up. I think it’s time we go tour ACE Chemicals...see what Falcone has up his sleeve--before we take his arm.” Jack chuckled.

*

ACE Chemicals was one of several factories located on the outskirts of Gotham City. It was what Harley thought of as a typical large factory for the city. The center building was an imposing gothic structure with “ACE Chemicals” on the front in pale blue neon lights. The main building was surrounded by three tall, brick chimneys hat pumped out dark clouds of pollution into the already thick and heavy Gotham summer night air. As Jack pulled up the road toward the back of the factory, Harley stared at the place. There was something ominous about the tall brick building. It reminded her of a castle, or maybe more of a monster she thought as the building loomed large in her sights. There were security lights around the factory but to her they did little to illuminate the darkness that surrounded the buildings. Instead the lights created more shadows, more patches of inky blackness, which only heightened Harley’s feeling about not liking the place. She nervously fingered her bracelet. Jack turned to look out his window with a grin before he popped open his door.

“Come on sweets,” he said eagerly, equal parts anticipation, dark humor, and simmering anger.
“Let’s go knock on the door, see if anyone is home!”
A group of vehicles stopped outside the factory under the cover of some trees. Jack pushed his door open and stepped out of the black Hummer just as the others pulled up in two black SUVs and parked behind them. The evening sky was clear, though the heavy smoke churning upwards from from the factory’s numerous smoke stacks made it difficult to see any stars; for a few blocks in each direction, the air held a noticeable haze. Jack grinned and admired the way the factory contrasted with the sky, a dark gothic structure backlit by the full moon, just visible through the heavy pollution while black smoke obscured the remainder of the night sky. All they needed now was the crack of some thunder, maybe a good wolf howl. Harley came to stand beside Jack looking up at factory at the same time that she wrapped her arms around him and laid her chin on his shoulder.

“It’s more frightening looking than a factory has any right to be,” she muttered.

Jack chuckled. “It looks more like a gothic castle than the front for a mobster’s drug factory.”

She nodded as she moved her arms to wrap them around Jack’s waist. He smiled and kissed her cheek as he put his arm around her.

“No worries sweets. We’ll bust in, destroy it, then go find Falcone. Easy peasy.” He turned her around to face him and his arms went around her waist at the same time.

“You’ll see sweets.” He rubbed his nose against hers before he kissed her. Harley leaned into his kiss as her husband held her close.

Bane hopped out of one of the SUVs. He walked slowly--a little stiff from his injuries--around and pulled open one of the back doors where Thea and Trope sat, their heads together, fingers flying over their customized laptops. Jack smiled at Harley as he gave her a light kiss before sliding out of her arms. He took her hand and walked over to the SUV, leaned against the door frame just as Jason, Victor and Frost joined them. They all stood around the open back door and watched the two young women inside.

“So, what’s it look like girls?” Jack asked as he pulled out a cigarette from inside his jacket.

Harley leaned against the other side of the door. She plucked the cigarette from Jack’s fingers with a smile and reached into his jacket for the lighter. Jack watched her and a soft grin tugged at his lips. He loved to watch his wife light his cigarettes for him. He felt it was sweet, sexy and just another small yet intimate connection between them. Harley lit the cigarette, then reached over and placed it between her husband’s lips. Jack reached up to take a deep drag, his eyes on Harley.

Trope answered first. “I have access to all their security cameras. It looks like there are at least fifty people working on drugs on the lower level. There are four uniformed guards, looks like one is at the front gate, another watching cameras…"

Here Thea and Trope both giggled. “And it looks six, maybe eight mobsters, all armed.”

Trope shared a glance with Thea; the two young lovers communicated without speaking before Trope said. “I’m gonna take out their electronic security, but I’m going to have to take out a couple of cellphone towers so we can put the factory in a complete blackout. No one--and that includes us--will be able to use their cellphones, internet…” Trope giggled. “Well of course Thea and I will still have access to the web, but their computers are all going to be dead, but that way no one can call out for help. We are going to be cut off from each other too...but…” She shrugged.
Jack nodded with a grin. “Perfect. I’m not worried because we all know what has to be done. All right, everyone have their protective masks?”

The group all nodded. Jack smile. “Kill everyone, leave no one alive.”

Jack turned to Zsasz. “Do you want to come in with us or…”

Zsasz smiled. “I’ll grab my sniper and walk in. Meet you guys inside in a bit.”

Zsasz winked and turned heading back to the SUV he arrived in and pulled out a Barrett M82. He lifted the weapon up waved at everyone else and simply disappeared into the dark.

Bane chuckled. “He is one scary motherfucker.”

Jack nodded. “Well--he is crazy.”

Jack clapped his gloved hands together (despite his broken fingers, Jack had carefully slid on gloves that night). “Okay, so, everyone got their guns, masks, mollies, explosives? OH Jason, did you pick up the flower bouquet?”

Jason nodded. “Sure did Boss--hold on.”

Jason hurried over to the vehicle he had arrived in and returned a few seconds later with a large bouquet of flowers in a variety of shades of purple, with a few white blossoms mixed in with the purple to create a vibrant spring bouquet. The flowers were held in a pretty white vase with a large purple ribbon that held the cellophane around the bouquet in place. Harley grinned and thought it was a very pretty bouquet.

Jack stepped over and took the bouquet from Jason, pressed his nose into the flowers taking a deep whiff. “Oh it’s just perfect. Just needed to plant a little bomb among the blooms.”

Harley giggled. “Ouch.”

Jack gave her a grin. “Ouch indeed sweets. All right my darlings, let’s go give Falcone the kick in the balls he deserves.”

Everyone nodded and quickly filed into their cars. Jack glanced at Thea and Trope, his hand on the door. “How soon before the towers go down?”

Thea looked up. “We’ll do it the moment we’re at the gate.”

Jack nodded before he closed the door and smiled at Harley. “Let the games begin!”

*

Trevor sat in his little guard booth and yawned as he rubbed his eyes. The dim yellow light in his guard booth did little to keep him from feeling sleepy as he flipped through the Playboy magazine that rested on his crossed legs. He had been called in tonight when Jim called in sick, again. Trevor adjusted his slacks and thought to himself that he hated his blue guard uniform; the pants were always a little too tight and he didn’t like the material against his skin. He shifted a bit before he settled down again. Trevor was pretty sure Jim was on a bender after his wife left him and was drunk in his apartment under the covers, not sick at all, but Trevor didn’t mind; the extra money was nice, even if the job was boring as hell.

He glanced up at the ACE Chemicals building then back to his magazine. He had been working here for five years and not once had anyone ever tried to get into the factory at night, not even some stupid kids. He had always hoped to fire the gun he wore on his hip, but not once in that entire time had he even had to draw his weapon.

He flipped through the magazine coming to the centerfold of Shelby Chesnes. He grinned holding the magazine up to get a better look, thinking he would look up her video on Youtube when lights from a car pass over the inside of his little booth.

Trevor frowned when a black Hummer came up to the guard station and stopped at the gate. The window of the big vehicle rolled down and a beautiful blonde (who Trevor thought would look great as a centerfold) came into view holding a bouquet of flowers. She smiled, and Trevor felt a little jerk in his pants. Damn she was beautiful he thought again.

Trevor stood up and opened the window of the booth. “How can I help you gorgeous?”

Harley giggled. “Hi! I’m wanting to deliver these to my boyfriend. Well actually I was hoping I could come in and see him. It’s our one week anniversary!” She giggled and squealed.

Trevor grinned. Whoever her boyfriend was, he was damn lucky.

“Sorry gorgeous, but I can’t just let you come in.” Trevor shrugged. “Them’s the rules.”

Harley pouted prettily. “But I bought these flowers for him and everything...could you...well could you at least see that he gets them?” She gave him a cute, pouty look, batting her lashes over her big blue eyes. Trevor grinned, damn.

He sighed. “Fine, yeah, hand them here.”

Harley giggled happily. “Oh gosh you are just so nice!! I could kiss you!” She leaned out and handed him the bouquet.

Trevor took it, wondering for a moment if he could steal a kiss or would that get him hit by this girl’s boyfriend. He grinned to himself as the scent of flowers filled his little booth. He turned to ask her who her boyfriend was when he heard a soft ticking that was coming from the flowers. Trevor frowned looking down at them just as the flowers exploded.

Trevor screamed as there was a sudden bright white light followed by searing heat across his face.

*

Inside the Hummer, Harley yelped when the explosion went off. It was strangely quietly, the sound more like a “pop”, like the little tiny poppers kids would throw at the sidewalk than a “boom” like an actual movie explosion. She turned away at the moment of the explosion, the bright white light only catching the periphery of her vision, but she still saw spots as if someone had flashed a camera within her line of sight.

Jack, who was sitting in the back seat, rolled his window down with a laugh. “That went off perfectly!”

Harley giggled and leaned out of her window to check on the dead guard only to gasp in surprise. “Puddin—he’s still alive!”

Jack blinked in astonishment, then snarled. “What?”

He opened his door and hopped out, maneuvering between the vehicle and the guard booth to open the door that led inside the guard station. Inside, lying on the floor of the small booth was the guard, his face half burned, charred black and red, his right arm mangled beyond repair and the front of his uniform burned. Large patches of crispy black skin showed underneath while other parts of his uniform slowly burned where the explosion had caught the cloth on fire. The man on the floor groaned as he struggled with his left hand, trying to pull himself, up leaving long, blood prints on the booth’s interior wall as his hand feebly continued to smack against the door. Jack sighed with irritation as he looked down at the helpless guard. “I cannot believe I didn’t have that explosion calculated correctly to kill you. I’m really sorry about that. Be right back.” Jack smiled and stepped back out of the booth.

*

Bane watched from the his seat in the SUV behind the Hummer, his hands rested on the steering wheel as Jack, illuminated by the headlights, walked to the back of the Hummer and opened the trunk. Bane watched with a slight frown as Jack fiddled around for a few seconds until he withdrew a tire iron. Bane frowned further as he watched Jack go back into the booth.

He could see Jack through the glass of the booth, then watched with a grimace as Jack began to swing the tire iron in a series of hard, brutal, swift downward swings. Bane clenched his teeth and wrinkled his nose as he watched Jack beat, he assumed, the still living guard with the tire iron. Jack hit the man several times; splatters of blood burst across the glass of the booth. Bane counted, he was pretty sure Jack beat the man for a good solid twelve seconds. Jack continued to beat the guard with the tire iron hard enough that Bane jerked and winced from his position behind the wheel with each swing of Jack’s arms.

The big man watched as Jack came back out.

Jack stopped for a moment, breathing heavily as he brushed a gloved hand through his hair, which had become mussed during the savagery of the attack. Jack walked back to the trunk of the Hummer and tossed the now bloody tire iron into the back. He stopped for a moment to straighten his hair one more time, then his tie. He turned and grinned at Bane, giving the man a thumbs up, before he headed back into the vehicle.

Bane shook his head and muttered. “Damn, that man is cold sometimes.”

*

Robin grinned as he ran through the traffic cams on the Batcomputer in the car. It was so cool he thought, being able to click from one street on the other side of Gotham to the street they were on and watch the Batmobile rush by in the traffic camera. Dick had teased Bruce merrily about the fact that he and Alfred had named everything, Bat-this or Bat-that. It was pretty funny, but also pretty cool, which made him wonder if he should name things too, like The Robin...well he didn’t have anything to name yet, except maybe his taser, the Robin taser. He frowned. Nah that sounded stupid, but maybe eventually he would have his own car or a motorcycle. Yeah, he really wanted a motorcycle. Dick pulled his thoughts away from a Robin Bike and focused again on the computer. Batman wanted him to learn the ins and outs of the Batcomputer that was part of the car in case Batman ever needed him to look something up, or use one of the traffic cameras, et cetera. Batman had told him about being hacked into most of the traffic cams in Gotham as well as having a backdoor into the GCPD computers. The vigilante hoped to be able to access security cams all over Gotham, (right now Batman could only access security cams that had been made by Wayne Enterprises.) Batman also wanted to add facial recognition technology, analyzing technology and to create an extensive criminal database or at least the means to access criminal databases not just at the GCPD, but eventually anywhere in the world. Batman had also confided in Robin that he hoped to add his own crime lab into the Batcave with all the latest technology. Dick grinned. This was not just going to be fun, but he felt good about the whole endeavor. He was doing something in response to his parents’ murder, something good for Gotham and for himself.

Batman glanced over at Robin. “I have a map of Gotham that shows me all the main cell towers in the city, the city’s power grid, all the major utilities in Gotham. I’m working on updating my data to include the subway, bus routes, and I’m slowly mapping out the sewer system, which is turning into a far bigger project than anticipated. I have some maps on the computer of some of old Gotham…”

Dick frowned. “Ah, sorry to interrupt Batman, but…” He pointed at the computer. “When you said you had a map of all the major cell towers in the area I typed it in just to see and...well one of them went dead.”

Batman frowned. “Dead?”

Robin nodded. “Yes sir. It was there and then the next second it was gone, like it just blinked out of existence.”

Batman turned the wheel hard enough that Robin was forced to grab the dash and the ceiling as the car skidded to the side of the road and parked. Batman turned the computer screen toward him and looked over the map of cell towers that were scattered throughout Gotham. The map showed an overlay of towers all shared by different cell phone companies. Each company used different frequencies and technologies when sharing a tower so they were not sharing actual hardware. Some of the towers were owned by the actual cell phone company, while others were owned by third parties who leased the use of the tower. Batman’s frown deepened. Robin was right, one of the cell towers had gone dark, an area covering about eight blocks...Batman’s eyes widened slightly when he saw the location--eight blocks right around ACE Chemicals, owned by Falcone. Falcone, the head of the mafia in Gotham, Maroni’s boss. That had to be more than a simple coincidence.

Batman pulled back out onto the street. “We’re heading over there to check it out. Something feels wrong.”

Robin grinned. “Maybe we’ll get lucky and something big is going down!”

Batman frowned. “That’s not lucky Robin, that’s bad news.”

* *

The lower level of ACE Chemicals was filled with large metal vats. Each vat was filled with a dark, yellow-green liquid that bubbled constantly, roiling and hissing. The liquid was kept at a constant state of near boiling. The acid inside the vats was moved through several pipes that ran throughout the factory, taking the liquid to who knew where. The rumor was that this factory had once made playing cards and that the acid was left over from that time. Other rumors were that this place was used by The Roman to dispose of his enemies. No one knew the truth and no one cared to find out.
All anyone knew for sure was that the place was almost unbearably hot, and the air was filled with the heavy scent of burnt plastic.

On the other side of the large vats, in a large open space the size of two football fields, were rows of long tables. Each row of tables was filled with equipment or bricks of drugs. One section of the room contained large plastic containers of acetone packed heavily against a wall. Dozens of metal containers of freon and several propane tanks were scattered throughout the room; coffee filters, glass cookware, several bunsen burners, blow torches and other materials for cooking meth, along with several fans placed throughout the area were constantly blowing. While most of the factory light was a pale yellow, the lights over the meth “cooking” area was a brighter white light. There were also large pallets loaded with bricks of cocaine, alongside others that contained bricks of heroin, marijuana and various other drugs. Here was where Falcone’s multi-million drug business was being run, within the walls of this factory.

Several people worked down among the vats--more than fifty--working the lab and packing the drugs. Most of them wore lab white lab coats, surgical masks, rubber gloves and goggles. Several were cooking meth; the acid smell of burning plastic filled the area, even with the fans constantly running, the smell didn’t really dissipate much. Other workers packed drugs for transportation into suitcases, while others were testing packages of drugs for purity that had been brought in from deals done in Falcone’s name.

Moving among the workers and on the upper levels of the factory were men in suits holding weapons. These men, who walked among the drugs, the production lines and the meth cooking area wore surgical masks as well while the ones on the floors above tended not to bother with the masks.

The factory was at least three levels, only accessible by taking several flights of rusted metal stairs. The upper levels of the factory consisted of pipes filled with water, acid, and any other number of substances that were being carried along past boilers, dials, gauges, levers, and buttons designed to help a few of the employees keep the factory from blowing itself up. Catwalks hung suspended over the vats and the drug area below that led from one end of the factory to the other designed to carry people or equipment through the factory. The upper levels were a confused combination of stairs and doorways leading to numerous dark places within the factory. The walkways and stairs were covered in rust, water and other liquids dripped steadily from the pipes. The steady sound of dripping water combined with the walkways’ slow, eerie creaking to make the upper levels of the factory uncomfortable for anyone up there.

Most of Falcone’s men went no higher than the second level, avoiding the higher reaches if possible. They were a superstitious lot and everyone believed the upper levels were haunted.

Four of Falcone’s men, Tony, Elia, Morris and Michael moved among the workers below. Tony had his gun out while the others were also armed, but didn’t feel the need to have their weapons out. They had worked this gig before and it had long ago become boring for the three of them. Tony was still the new guy, still jumpy and concerned about looking “professional.” The other men just laughed at him and let Tony walk around with his weapon out, teasing him about not shooting any of the workers.

The four men were separated, at different ends of the floor.

Tony had his Glock out and ready. For some reason his skin was crawling tonight. He didn’t know if it was the smell, the scent of burning plastic which made the inside of his nostrils burn even with the mask on, and his eyes were irritated. He had just walked around a pallet of cocaine when he heard something hit the floor. Tony jumped and turned, his weapon aimed at...nothing, but just as he was about to turn back around he heard the sound of something rolling on the floor. Tony frowned and looked down just as something that resembled an aerosol can rolled across the floor stopped as it hit his foot. So much junk down here, he thought.

Tony frowned and lightly kicked the canister away from him, but as the canister rolled away, gas began to leak from the top and the can began to spin as bright green gas was expelled from it, which made the can begin to spin more rapidly around in a circle.

Tony frowned in confusion and began to cough as he brought his arm up to cover his mouth despite already having a mask on. He grabbed his walkie on his hip, though he was coughing the entire time he tried to speak.
“Hey Morris...hehe...ack...Morris you read me? There is some weird smoke…” Tony began to laugh and cough harder, and his sides began to ache as the coughs, mixed with the laughing came out in harder and harsher tones. He blinked his eyes a few times as he heard the sounds of gunfire.

Tony rushed from around the pallet, but he couldn’t see much; the gas obscured everything. He could see shadows and the flash of gunfire, but he couldn’t really tell what was happening. He continued to struggle with the coughing and giggling when someone seemed to melt out of the green gas that had had grown thicker and obscured everything.

The man was dressed in a rather nice dark purple suit, wore a gas mask and held a weapon pointed at Tony’s head.

*

Jack grinned behind the mask when he saw one of the guards rush out of the cloud of smoke. The man stopped when he saw Jack, confusion clear in his brown eyes.

Jack waved. “Hello!”

The man stood there for a split second too long, startled by the sight of Jack in the gas mask. That split second of indecision cost him his life. Jack shot the man in the head, then another quick shot to the stomach before the man fell.

Harley stood beside Jack, also wearing her own mask while the other members of the gang had spread out throughout the bottom floor of the factory. Since there were only a few of them, they couldn’t cover as much ground, but Jack’s laughing gas helped to obscure everything, giving them an advantage as they systematically moved through the lower floor and shot anyone they encountered. At the same time, the Red Hood gang members set their plastic explosives that Jack had handed out in backpacks to each of them. Jack’s backpack had a few other explosive devices as well as a few extra canisters with his gas inside...just in case.

Jack muttered, his voice slightly muffled by his mask. “Those fans are going to clear the gas up swiftly. We need to work faster.”

Harley nodded as she placed an explosive on the pallet of cocaine. “Are we going to set some explosives on the upper levels too puddin?”

Jack glanced up. He could see shadows up there, not many but some men were still on the upper levels looking for a chance to shoot. “Yep. I want to utterly destroy this building.” He laughed softly. “There are millions of dollars in drugs in here--I want there to be nothing left.” He laughed. “Millions of dollars up in flames. Everything burns!!”

Harley giggled. She was just about to place another charge when suddenly a shot rang out. The bullet zipped past Harley, cutting across the top of her shoulder to strike into some of the cocaine, sending it up in a small puff of white powder around her. Harley yelped and ducked as her shoulder became a flash of pain.

Jack stepped in front of her, his mouth set in a scowl, and his eyes narrowed behind the mask as he shot at the shadow that was swiftly being revealed to be a man as the gas began to dissipate. At the same time that Jack shot, he grabbed Harley and yanked her back behind the small mountain of drugs.

Jack cursed. The fans were dissipating the gas for quicker than he would have liked. Already it was clear enough that he could see several men on the other side of the room from him and Harley.
Jack popped up and did a quick count; it looked like at least six armed men. He dropped back down next to Harley.

“You all right pumpkin?” Jack frowned as he saw Harley, who had grabbed her shoulder, moved her hand to reveal it was covered with blood. Harley nodded wincing. “Just a flesh wound I think. The bullet didn’t actually hit me.” She growled. “A graze.”

Jack snarled. “Fuckers.”

Jack holstered his weapon taking a moment to inspect her shoulder. He frowned and ripped the cloth of her shirt that had been torn by the bullet wider, the wound looked worse than it was...he pulled out the handkerchief from the breast pocket of his jacket and laid it across the wound, moving her still intact bra strap over to hold it in place.

“It’ll have to do for now,” he said softly, gently cupping her cheek for a moment. He smiled and kissed the tip of her nose before he pulled out his gun again.

He leaned around the cocaine and quickly brought his head back. “Okay sweets. I see six. Three are near the meth and the other three are moving...I think they are going to try to flank us.”

Harley frowned. “I’ll go for the three up front, you get the three moving targets?”

Jack laughed softly and smiled at his wife. “Sounds good pumpkin.”

Jack pulled his gas mask off and tossed it aside. Harley did the same. She could still smell Jack’s gas in the air, a slightly sweet smell, almost like bubblegum and cotton candy she thought with a smile.

“So what do you want to do puddin?” Harley asked.

Jack smiled. “Oh kill them, I think.” He grabbed Harley by the front of her top, surprising her as he yanked her close and kissed her. Harley giggled and returned his kiss.

Jack licked her lips as he smiled at her; his eyes were bright, dancing with merriment. Harley could see that he was enjoying himself.

“Ready sweets?” Jack asked softly.

Harley grinned broadly. “Whenever you are puddin.”

Jack winked at her.

They both came around the pallet of cocaine, shooting their weapons at the same time. Harley aimed for the three that were in front of them, Jack aiming for the three behind them, Jack maneuvered himself behind Harley, putting his back up against hers while Harley pressed her back to his. Harley fired, catching one man in the shoulder, another in the chest and the third got out of the way by throwing himself down. That man lay on his side and fired at Harley.

She yelped and pushed back against her husband forcing him to move.

Jack fired swiftly, struck one man in the face while another man fired at Jack. The bullet missed, gouging the cement flooring, but chips of cement flew up, cutting through Jack’s slacks and across his leg. Jack hissed and was suddenly shoved back as Harley pushed her back against his. The sudden shift saved him from being shot as the last of his opponents took aim and missed when Jack stumbled slightly.
Jack grinned with both glee and anger as he returned fire. That man took a bullet in the forehead before Jack spun around, grabbing Harley by her right wrist and with his free hand he spun her under his arm and behind him, shooting her last opponent at the same time, the bullet hit the man in the forehead just above his left eye.

Harley popped up out of her spin, Jack’s hand still on her wrist, her arm now pressed against her lower back. She came up against Jack’s chest with a giggle as Jack pulled her up against him.

“How you doing pumpkin?” Jack asked.

Harley giggled. “Just fine puddin.”

Jack smiled. “Ready to head upstairs and set some charges?”

“Sure thing puddin,” Harley said with a smile. “Boom!”

Jack laughed and spun her back out before he dropped her wrist and wrapped his arm around her waist. He pulled her against him and kissed her passionately.

*

Batman pulled up to the factory. He had found the body of the guard in the guard booth and now he could hear the muffled sounds of gunfire emanating from inside. He saw the two black SUVs and the Hummer (he didn’t bother to check the vehicles’ registration as the sounds of gunfire drew his attention).

He motioned at Robin. “We’ll enter from above. Be careful.”

Robin nodded. “Yes sir!”

Batman watched the boy take off, for a moment feeling a ball of ice in his stomach. His first reaction was to call Robin back and send him outside...there was clearly weapons fire and the boy could get hurt. But he didn’t call his sidekick--partner, protege, student?--back. Robin would never forgive him, but truly, this was what the young man had been training for. This, tonight, would determine whether Robin was ready to or not. Experience was a good teacher.

Batman took off toward the factory.

*

Jason finished setting his charges, limping as the pain from last night’s wounds slowed him a bit, only then turning around to shoot the man who had been groaning behind him. The dead man was one of the people who worked with the drugs, a nobody, someone who wasn’t armed, just doing a job, but Jason felt nothing when he killed the man. To him, these people were just as responsible for Roxy’s death as the men who had actually killed her. Like those men, these worked for Falcone and that fact alone was good enough for him.

Jason had just returned his backpack to his shoulder when he thought he saw a shadow move above him. He stood there staring for a few seconds, but he didn’t see anything moving. He frowned, but decided it was just the lights playing tricks with him. Besides, he wasn’t going to go against the Boss’s plans; he wasn’t supposed to go upstairs, he was to go to the SUV and get the molotovs ready to throw...this was going to be a spectacular explosion.

*
Jack found the stairs. He grabbed the railing and turned, hopping backwards up three of the stairs before he bowed to his wife.

He grinned at Harley. “Going up?”

Harley giggled as she walked up the three stairs. Jack took her hand and kissed her knuckles before turning around to head up the stairs. He glanced upward. The factory disappeared into hazy darkness above.

The two of them made their way up the rusty stairs to the second floor. Here the thick, rusty pipes slowly leaked onto the stairs, the sound of steam being released and the creak of the metal stairs could be heard, while the sounds of a few gunshots and screams could be heard from below. Jack stepped onto the landing and looked up, frowning slightly; he could see another set of stairs leading up to the third level.

“I’ll go set charges up there sweets and have you handle the ones down here, then we meet right here again. Get this done quickly so we can go pay Falcone a visit. Sound good?” Jack asked as Harley stepped up onto the landing.

She frowned, but nodded. “Yeah, okay puddin.”

Jack pulled her into his arms as she came off the last step. “What’s wrong pumpkin?”

Harley frowned. “I don’t like us separating is all.”

Jack laughed softly. “It’ll only be for a minute or two, I promise. Then we can go home.”

Harley nodded, but she still looked upset. Jack gave her a tight squeeze. “After this, I want to take a long hot shower, make love to my wife and order a pizza.”

Harley giggled softly as she wrapped her arms tightly around his waist and rested her head against his chest. “All right, just be quick okay?”

Jack reached down to lift her chin. “Nothing can keep me away from you Harls. Nothing and nobody. I’ll be like the wind. You’ll see, you won’t have time to miss me.”

Jack pressed his lips to hers, his tongue gently slid against her mouth. Harley opened her mouth, her tongue sliding out to meet his in a tender yet deep kiss. He tightened his embrace, holding his wife against him. Harley made a soft whimper of need, leaning into him before Jack finally stepped away from her. He caressed her chin, smiling as he stared into her eyes.

“I’ll be right back sweets.”

Harley nodded. “You better be.”

He laughed, kissing the tip of her nose before he headed toward the stairs. Harley watched him go with a hitch in her chest before she took a deep breath, straightened her backpack and headed out along the walkway.

On this level, Harley could see several large metal tubes. She had no idea what they were carrying or what they were for, but the tubes dripped water--she presumed--and were covered in rust. She set charges; along old tubes, on strange looking machinery, and along the walkway in two places. As she walked she realized that this walkway ran along the walls, covering the entire length of the building. She stopped at the railing and looked down, she could see several dead bodies, but she also saw Bane, Jason and Frost as they worked along the edges and among the drugs, setting charges as they went. She frowned when she noticed that Frost was limping, as was Jason. Everyone was still tired and in pain, trying to recover from last night, yet here they were, ready to do whatever Jack needed from them. She smiled softly, proud of their little gang. Harley’s eyes were drawn to the vats of acid. The vats looked larger from up here. The greenish yellow liquid roiled, as if something lived underneath the surface of the caustic liquid. She watched it for a few more seconds; the heavy acid scent wafted up to her and she wrinkled her nose before she stepped back.

She had just started to move again. She noticed as she came closer to a couple of large machines that looked like furnaces or boilers of some sort, that there were places where the path led off into shadows and darkness, which meant there were probably more places deeper inside where she should lay more charges.

Harley made her way between two of the machines on this floor, sliding through the small opening to walk out onto a wider platform. This space behind the machines had what looked like stacks of unused tubing, now rusted into place, some old, rusted file cabinets, a couple of chairs and a desk. Harley frowned, walking over to the desk when a shadow stepped out of the darkness in front of her.

The man, tall, broad shouldered, and with bleach blonde hair, shot at her. Harley yelped and threw herself out of the way, scrambling behind a rusted file cabinet. She pulled her own weapon and leaned around the cabinet. She could see him, standing near the desk where she had been only moments ago and he looked confused.

Harley shot her gun several times, missing with each shot as the man stumbled back and ducked down beside the desk. The man leaned around the desk and returned fire. Harley squeezed herself into the corner between the wall and the cabinet as the bullets flew past her, some hitting the cabinet with metallic sounding pings, others the floor and one hit the wall next to her. She squeezed her eyes closed, feeling bits of plaster and rusted metal hits her from the bullet’s impact. She felt something flash across her cheek, the sudden sting of pain, followed by the warmth of liquid running down her cheek. She slowly reached up and touched her cheek, wincing with pain; unsurprisingly, her fingers came back bloody.

Harley snarled, “Asshole,” before she turned and shot again, but this time only fired two bullets when her weapon jammed. Harley hissed squeezing the trigger several times, but nothing happened. Her gun just clicked.

“Shit,” she hissed to herself. She pressed back against the file cabinet. Her attacker had to have heard the sound of her gun not firing. Harley swallowed, cold settling into the pit of her stomach. A secondary weapon was always good to have, she wryly remembered Frost saying once. She looked around, but she saw nothing here she could use as a weapon. She closed her eyes trying to steady her breath and turned her weapon around, holding it so she could use the back of her gun as a weapon. Her hand shook a little bit with building adrenaline.

Harley frowned. Why was she so nervous, scared? She had fought worse than this, she knew she was capable. Maybe it was this place...the drugs...she had to have breathed some of the cocaine in when it exploded, but that would just make her hyper, excitable, not nervous and tense...but...

She heard her attacker move slowly from behind the desk. He started to walk across the room toward her and debris crunched under his feet. She could tell he wasn’t sure if she was still armed, since she had moved out of his sight. She tightened the grip on her gun; the back of the weapon would act like a pair of brass knuckles, she hoped. Her heartbeat filled her ears nearly drowning out any other sounds. Harley closed her eyes and silently counted to ten as she listened and prepared.

At the end of the count, Harley turned around the corner of the file cabinet, just as she heard her attacker’s steps come closer to her. If she had counted correctly, he should just be coming around the
He came around the file cabinet quickly, his gun out, Harley moved swiftly, surprising herself when she ducked under his arm and spun around. She tried to slam the butt of her gun into him, her aim being for his head. She had been aiming for his face in the hope of hitting him in the eye, blinding him, but missed. Instead she hit him in the shoulder.

The man let out a cry as the impact sent pain radiating down his arm, the breech of the gun impacted with his shoulder hard enough that something cracked, though the impact didn’t cause him to drop his own gun. Instead, he twisted around and backhanded Harley so quickly she didn’t have time to attempt a block, his fist and the gun in his hand slammed across her face, splitting her lip and blood gushed from her nose.

She yelped and stumbled to the right, the taste of blood in her mouth hot and coppery. The impact of his hand and the barrel of his pistol not just split her lip and smashed her nose, the impact broke across the cut she already had on her cheek, opening cut up wider. Pain caused Harley to squint her eyes. She stumbled away from him, almost losing her balance as the pain in her face radiated out, disorienting her for a moment.

The gunman turned around fully and fired his gun at Harley.

Harley gasped. The bullet would hit her in the middle of her chest, and that would be the end of Harley Quinn, but nothing happened.

The gunman tried again. Both of them, for a comical moment, stood still as he tried once more to shoot her, and Harley, stunned, didn’t move away. The man clicked on the trigger, but the gun clicked several times...empty.

Harley spun back around, snapped her leg out and kicked the man as hard as she could in the chest. The gunman stumbled backwards and crashed into the rusted file cabinet. The mobster and the cabinet crumbled to the ground with a loud crash. Harley grabbed an explosive out of her pack, tossed it at him, and ran. She knew it wouldn’t go off until Jack hit the trigger, but at least she knew there was one in this room.

She rushed over to the back of the machines that she had squeezed through to get in here and started to squeeze herself through when the man stood up. She turned, saw him getting to his feet and tried to push herself more quickly through the narrow opening.

The gunman hissed. “Come back here you bitch!”

Harley hissed as she pushed herself out, the rusted walls of the machine ripped her shirt, but she was free. The gunman grabbed her wounded shoulder just as she was stepping out which sent pain radiating down her arm, but she yanked herself free, pulling the man out with her through the narrow opening. She turned, her hand in a fist ready to hit her attacker with all her might, when suddenly a figure seemed to drop out of nowhere between Harley and her attacker.

“Don’t you know it’s not nice to hit a lady?” The young man was almost as tall as Harley, dressed in a black and red costume with a mask and cape. The young man had thick black hair and a ready, cocky smile, visible below his black half-mask.

Harley frowned in shock. “Who the…?”

“Robin, at your service!” Robin grinned then ducked as the gunman took a swing at him.
Jack raced up to the third floor, taking the rusty steps two at a time with a smile on his face. He wanted to set the charges and get out of here with Harley to go take care of Falcone. The thought of seeing the surprise on Falcone’s face had Jack chuckling to himself as he hit the landing of the third floor. This level was barely lit, dim; the few hanging lights up here were weak, the yellow light watery, faded.

Jack walked slowly. There were so many shadows up here, it was difficult to see where the walkway went. He couldn’t tell if it went around the whole of the building or only part way. Stepping off the walkway and onto the main part of the third floor, Jack could see rusted pipes and dials along the wall to his left. The further he walked he could see dark openings that led deeper into the third floor but the shadows were so thick he couldn’t see where exactly they led; did they lead into separate rooms, into small sections?

There was no way of telling unless he went to investigate.

He walked carefully along, setting charges here and there when he heard movement, a soft creak against the metal. He stopped and listened. Jack narrowed his eyes, there was a shift in the air that told him someone was up here with him. Jack kept walking, following the handrail. He assumed whoever was behind him had to be Falcone’s men, probably a couple of guards who had stayed up here instead of heading down when the gas had filled the room and the gunfire had started. He kept walking, listening...he couldn’t be sure, the metal floor echoed and creaked but he was fairly confident there were at least two men behind him. Jack set another charge, slowly sliding his backpack off his shoulder to set it on the floor, then brought his hand to his hips, wrapping his fingers around his knife hilt.

Jack did a little hop, crossing his legs and spun around like a dancer just as one of the two men behind them, both dressed in suits and clearly Falcone’s men came up on him. The first man, also armed with a knife, was about Jack’s height, with black hair slicked back with so much oil that the dim light shone off the man’s shiny hair as he rushed at Jack and tried to take a swipe with his blade. When Jack spun, the dark haired man extended his arm too far. Jack ducked as the knife cut through the air above him, then Jack rushed forward and hit the man with the pommel of his knife’s hilt, catching the man in the side, right under his rib. The dark haired man’s momentum kept him moving forward, gasping for air as he fumbled past Jack.

His friend, a thickly built man with a buzzed head, came rushing up at Jack only a beat behind his friend. Jack grinned and kicked the man in the crotch. Jack grinned, a low blow but effective! Jack then brought his knife up, flipped it around in his hand so the blade faced sideways and took a quick slash at the big man. The knife sliced through the other man’s jacket and into his shoulder.

The big man snarled, more in irritation than pain it seemed, grabbed Jack’s wrist and punched him in the crook of his arm hard enough that Jack’s hand sprang open; the knife dropped and skittered across the metal floor. The big man tried to take a swing at Jack’s face, but the thinner man lunged forward with his other hand leading and used the palm of his hand to strike the buzzcut in the chest, knocking him backwards and forcing him to release Jack’s wrist as Jack yanked his arm free. Jack turned just as his first attacker had gained his feet and came at Jack. Jack spun around to slam his open hand into the man’s throat. That attacker stumbled forward and then his knees slammed against the floor. Jack turned just as the second attacker lunged at him.

Jack danced backwards out of the way of the first attack, but the buzzed assailant grabbed Jack by his shoulder. Jack snarled and hit the man in the side with the side of his hand, ignoring the pain that radiated up his arm as he hit the man again, this time in the side of his throat. The big man took the two hits from Jack without letting go. Jack hissed and tried to kick his attacker, but the man threw his leg backwards, out of the way of Jack’s foot, avoiding the kick. He pivoted his hips to take the brunt of Jack’s kick against his thigh, perhaps bruising but in no way putting him down.

The two men swung around a couple of times, each trying his best to get a better hold of the other one. Their arms twisted back and forth, one trying to flip the other, but Jack took advantage of a minor slip in his opponent’s form and flipped the big mobster onto his back.

Jack, sweat pouring down the sides of his face, brought his leg up and slammed his foot down on the man’s chest with three vicious kicks. The mobster let out a cry of pain and rolled away from Jack into the fetal position. Jack was about to kick him again in the side when the second mobster rushed Jack, his shoulder hitting Jack in the side and brought him up off his feet to smash Jack against the railing. For a moment Jack teetered, leaning back against the railing. He glanced behind him, could see the light from below, the roiling vats of acid. He was about to fall, but with a snarl of anger, Jack brought his elbow down hard on the man’s back in two quick downward thrusts. The mobster didn’t let go. Jack hissed and snarled, brought his right foot forward and wrapped his leg around the man’s left leg and yanked, throwing himself to the side, away from the railing and back onto the walkway. Jack struggled then rolled and flipped the mobster over him onto the floor.

Jack stumbled up to his feet rushed the couple of steps to the mobster, who just began to stand up. Jack grabbed the man by his head and slammed the mobster’s head against the railing as hard as he could, chuckling just a little. The mobster struggled and tried to grab at Jack’s hands, but Jack viciously slammed the man’s head repeatedly against the rail until blood began to appear. Jack sneered and continued to slam the man’s head against the rail even harder until blood splattered the railing and Jack’s hands. Jack continued until he had split the man’s head open. Jack let the man go, took a step back as the body dropped, just as his friend with the dark oiled hair landed a hand on Jack’s shoulder and began to spin Jack around to face him.

Jack reacted without thought, grabbed the man’s arm with both hands and flipped the man over his shoulder.

Jack kept a hold of the dark haired mobster’s arm, trying to pull it back in such a way that he could break it but the mobster spun around and got to his feet, grabbing Jack at the same time with his other hand as he spun around to face Jack. The two men kicked at each other moving themselves down the walkway,

Jack snarled. “This is getting irritating!”

The dark hair mobster hissed. “You fucker.”

Jack narrowed his eyes. “So original.”

Jack jumped just a little and threw himself to the floor, pulled on the mobster’s arms while he planted his feet against his opponent’s gut, and threw him upwards and over himself to land on the walkway, then Jack performed a reverse roll to straddle the mobster. The buzz headed man kept trying to grab Jack by his throat or to scratch at his face, but Jack snarled, leaning back just enough to keep his face out of the man’s grip and wrapped both hands around the man’s throat to squeeze. Jack’s broken fingers protested the movement, but Jack ignored the pain and focused. Hate and anger were such motivators! The man under him began to kick and jerk trying to get Jack off of him, trying to grab his face, but Jack just squeezed harder. His teeth bared, Jack tightened his fingers as hard as he could. The man’s face turned red, his hands dropped, though his legs continued to kick, but slower. Jack’s whole body shook with the effort of strangling the man.

That was when he heard a voice behind him.
“STOP!! You’re killing him!”

Jack laughed. “Oops, sorry--I think he’s dead already.”

Jack stood and turned, surprised when he saw Batman standing a few paces behind him.

* Robin grinned as he easily avoided the man’s punches. Harley stumbled back as the kid’s fist shot out like a bullet and struck the man square in the face, shattering the mobster’s nose and knocking him out cold. The young man turned to face Harley.

“So, ah, who are you and do you need help getting out of here?”

Harley didn’t quite know what to do for a moment. Who the hell was this kid?

Robin smiled putting up his hands as if she were a scared dog or a skittish cat. “I’m with Batman. I’m here to help.”

“Batman?” Harley’s eyes widened. “Batman’s here?”

Robin nodded. “Yeah, I’m Robin--his partner.”

Harley whispered to herself. “Damn it.”

She needed to warn Jack, the others. Batman was here! Harley surprised the young man by rushing him, grabbing him by his upper arms and threw the young man down the walkway, at the same time removing her backpack and hitting the teenager across the face with it as she took off at a run heading toward the stairs.

Robin fell, throwing his arms up to block the backpack as he hit the floor and rolled. He sprang to his feet in the next moment with a frown on his face. Clearly the pretty young woman was with the bad guys. Why else would she attack him? Though why she was fighting with the guy he had just knocked out, Robin didn’t understand. Still, he took off after her. He grabbed his collapsible bo staff from off his hip and threw it to strike the back of Harley’s legs. The impact sent her sprawling, and her chin slammed against the first step leading up to the third floor.

Harley gasped and blinked as the pain shot up her chin across her face.

Robin frowned. “Look I’m sorry lady, just let me tie you up and we don’t have to fight. I mean, you’re real pretty, like really pretty and I don’t want to have to…”

Robin didn’t get to finish his sentence. Harley used the stair to shove herself up, coming up on her feet and spun around, snapping out her leg. Robin had stopped close enough that Harley was able to strike him square in the chest.

He stumbled backwards from the force of her kick, but Harley wasn’t done. She spun around, brought her foot up for another kick, this one catching the younger man across the face.

Robin stumbled, tasted blood in his mouth. He reached up and touched his jaw, moving it back and forth. “Damn lady!”

Harley turned, trying for the stairs again. She scrambled halfway up when her feet were knocked out from under her and she fell forward again.

Robin reached for her, but Harley twisted around on the stairs and tried to punch him. The young man snagged her wrist and lifted her up with a move she had not seen before. Harley yelped as Batman’s self-avowed partner threw her back down against the stairs and punched her in the side when she tried to kick him.

“Stay down lady! Geez!” Robin hissed.

Harley narrowed her eyes and slugged him across the face with a left hook the young man wasn’t expecting.

*

Batman stared.

He couldn’t believe it was Jack, his little brother. He struggled to keep his “Batman” voice as he hissed.

“You had that man down, you didn’t have to kill him!”

Jack grinned as he wiped blood from his mouth with the back of his hand, stood up, and dusted off his suit. “Hey Bats, what’re you doing here?”

Batman frowned. He didn’t trust himself to speak for a moment as he watched his brother, his baby brother, wipe blood from his mouth.

He swallowed and spoke, proud that he kept the tremor from sneaking into his voice. “What are you doing here?”

Jack narrowed his eyes as he looked at Batman. This close, there was something about the man’s chin, the set of his jaw, his lips that was so familiar. He had thought this before, as if something pulled at the edges of his mind, as if he should know this man. The familiarity tugged at the corners of his mind. He had thought that last time he had run into Batman, as if Batman was someone he should know. It was irritating, and Jack didn’t like to be irritated.

Batman didn’t move as Jack slowly stepped closer, ignoring Batman’s question. “I swear I know you from somewhere…” Jack tilted his head. “And I don’t mean as the shining pillar of justice you are trying to be...you are far closer to being like me than say...the police, that is.”

Batman snarled. “I take down bad people and bring them to justice.”

Jack shrugged pointing at the two dead men. “What do you think I just did? I served some justice. You think those two were good men? You think any of these people were good?” Jack pointed at the factory below. Batman had seen the dead down there--far too many.

Batman hissed. “Did you do that?”

Jack smiled. “Me and my gang.”

“Gang?” Batman frowned behind his mask, but it was noticeable. Jack laughed. “Red Hood, the Red Hood gang. Don’t tell me you didn’t know it was me? I thought I heard you were one hell of a detective? Well, it's always sad to learn the truth behind the rumor, or the facade. Though I suppose you are just as disappointed, eh? Yes, the Red Hood is led by me, little old Jack Wayne. You gonna run to my brother and tattle on me?” Jack asked with a grin.

Batman shook visibly. Bruce couldn't believe what he was hearing and seeing. He knew Jack had been involved with something dangerous, something illegal; in his heart he had known, but to hear Jack just casually confess it?! He had just confessed to murder...his own brother was a murderer.

“I’m taking you in,” Batman ground out between clenched teeth, then said, “You need to pay for your crimes.”

Jack grinned. “Oh you can try Batsy, you can definitely try, but I hate to tell you, I’m not going anywhere.”

Batman rushed forward, leading with a kick, twisted and kicked again.

Jack threw his arms up, blocking both kicks with his forearms, but Batman’s speed was surprising. The black clad vigilante kicked a third time, but this time Jack was ready and caught the man’s leg under his arm. At the same time Jack reached out and grabbed Batman’s shoulder. The two men danced around in a circle, as Batman struggled to pull his leg free. He surged upward with his free leg, about to kick the leader of the Red Hood gang in his torso, but Jack snapped his foot out, caught Batman’s knee with enough force to put the man off balance further. He yanked Batman around and with a twist of his arm he threw Batman over, letting go of his leg at the same time. The masked man hit the hard metal flooring with a loud clank.

*

Harley made it up a few more stairs before Robin knocked her down again and snagged her ankle. She slammed against the rusty stairs hard. The impact set off a fire in her shoulder, but she stopped her face from being planted against the edge of the stairs as Robin tried once more to restrain her. He reached up and grabbed at her shoulder trying to pull her up off the stairs, but as Harley struggled against the boy, he grabbed her hair.

Harley slammed her elbow back, caught her young opponent in the chin, slammed his lips against his teeth.

Robin gasped in pain tasting hot copper as blood suddenly filled his mouth. The impact of her elbow against his mouth forced him to release her again.

Harley made the last of the steps and pulled herself onto the third floor. But Rolbin was right behind her, grabbing for her again, though this time his foot became tangled with hers and they both hit the floor hard.

Harley winced and rolled onto her side with a groan. Robin rose to his feet, stood over her, and said, “Lady, you need to stay down.” Harley took a deep breath, let it out, tired and hurting.

He stepped closer and Harley lunged up, wrapping her arms around his leg. Robin let out a startled yelp as Harley held on. Robin grabbed her hair trying to yank her off of him while he raised his bo stick with the other ready to hit her with it when Harley surprised him and punched him right in the crotch.

The sound the young man made would have been funny Harley thought if she had time to laugh about it as he stumbled back from her. Harley stood up and down from her, on nearly the other side of the landing she could see Jack fighting with Batman.

Her distraction cost her as Robin wrapped his arm around her neck and yanked back. Harley squeaked in surprise.

*

Batman hit the floor, but the moment he hit the rusted metal flooring, he spun around to rise up on his feet before Jack had a chance to press his advantage. Batman lurched up and in the same moment he thrust forward, smashing his shoulder into Jack’s stomach, lifted the thinner man up off his feet.

Jack gasped and coughed with the impact of Batman’s shoulder, then gasped in pain again when Batman threw him to the floor.

“Don’t get up,” Batman snarled.

Jack pushed himself part way up on his hands and chuckled, spitting some blood. “You’re better than I thought you would be.” Jack chuckled panting a little as he struggled to catch his breath.

Batman panted too. “You’re better than I thought you would be too.”

Jack stood up. Batman took a step back from him.

Jack brought his fists up. “Ready to try again?”

*

Harley threw Robin over her shoulder. The young man landed on the metal floor hard, but Harley kept a hold of his arm, dropped to straddle him for a moment, her back to him then before the teenager could react, Harley (keeping a hold of his arm) spun herself around to face him, wrapped her legs around his neck while leaning back with his arm, trapped against her. She squeezed with her thighs.

Robin gasped, but then grinned at her, his voice strained as he said in a tight tone. “This would be a teenage boy’s dream if you weren’t trying to kill me.”

Harley frowned at him, cocking a brow in surprise as she pulled back on his arm and squeezed her legs tighter.

Robin grinned brightly at her. “I’d be worried if I didn’t have this…”

Harley gasped as she was suddenly hit with 80,000 volts. She cried out, her body tense before her limbs gave out. Robin freed himself from her legs and stood up smiling.

“I have to say, you are damn pretty and any other time this would have been great, but I’m working sooo…” He shrugged and that was when he heard a shout behind him.

*

Jack spun in a roundhouse kick that caught Batman in the side of the head. He stumbled away from Jack, his ears ringing. He knew he wasn’t fighting as well as he could be, he was pulling his punches because this was his brother. He tried to tell himself not to hold back--Jack was a criminal, he needed help, real help. It was up to him to put Jack down and give him over to the police, then as his brother, he could get Jack help, professional real help. Bruce knew Jack would probably have to be taken back to Arkham and Jack...well, what they had between them would be gone, forever, but Bruce could accept that if he were getting Jack the help he needed and making sure Jack paid for what he had done. Bruce felt the string of tears in his eyes. If their parents knew what Jack had become...

That thought opened up a dark wound in Bruce’s heart…he had become what he was to save Gotham, to save himself and in the process he had lost his brother. Thoughts swirled through his head. What if he had told Jack what he was planning all those years, what if this, what Jack had done was ultimately Bruce’s fault?
Jack kicked him again, this time just a hard kick to the chest that made Batman stumble backwards and slam into the railing. Batman caught himself, but Jack didn’t let up. He rushed the caped crusader, but instead of hitting Batman, or trying to push him over the edge, Jack grinned and grabbed the top of Batman’s mask.

“I think it’s time we find out who you really are Batman, don’t you?” Jack chuckled.

Bruce panicked. He grabbed Jack’s wrist with both hands and tried to rip Jack’s hand away, but Jack’s grip was tight and accurate. He ignored the pain of his broken fingers as he dug his fingers into the mask and yanked.

The two men twisted around and Batman fought to keep Jack from ripping off the mask. Jack grabbed Batman’s shoulder with his free hand and dug his fingers in. He snarled as he pulled at the mask.

Jack laughed through clenched teeth. “Whatcha trying to hide Bats?”

Batman glared at him and finally released his hold on Jack’s wrist only to punch his brother in the face as hard as he could. The punch snapped Jack’s head back and was hard enough that Jack saw stars for a moment. Blood gushed from his nose and he stumbled backwards, but at the same time, Jack yanked back with all his strength and tore the hood off of Batman at the same moment he stumbled backwards a couple of steps until his lower back hit the railing.

Jack’s eyes widened as he saw his brother standing in front of him, dressed as the Batman, but at the same time he had hit the railing hard enough that he lost his balance and toppled over backwards in the next second.

“JACK!” Bruce roared as he saw his brother go over the edge.

Bruce raced to the railing, lunged part of the way over the rusted metal, which nearly sent himself tumbling over the railing too, but he caught himself and Jack’s hand. Jack gasped in pain.

Jack stared up at Bruce wide eyed, then began to giggle. “You’re the Batman?”

Bruce began to pull Jack up, but the glove on Jack’s hand slipped. “Come on Jack, help me!”

Jack dropped the cowl and watched it fall three stories into the vat of steaming acid below before he looked back up at his brother and laughed.

“And you called me unstable.” Jack giggled as Bruce hissed using one hand to hold on to the rail to prevent them both from going over while his grip on Jack’s hand was slipping. “Come on Jack-- help me!”

“Batman?” Both men turned to see Robin jog over only to stop short as a gunshot rang out. Robin jerked, bright red blood spread out from a wound that appeared in the boy’s chest.

“Robin!” Bruce yelled.

A man emerged from the shadows of the third floor. He was big, nearly Bruce’s size, with short, brown hair that might have been styled earlier but was sticking to his forehead as the man sweated, the fear in his eyes clear. He carried a pistol pointed at Robin. It was clear from his expression he was angry, terrified--maybe gassed--and ready to kill someone and that someone was going to be a kid dressed up to fight crime.

Robin turned toward the gunman, the man raised the gun, Bruce knew, without a doubt that the man was going to kill Robin.

Jack slipped a little more. Bruce had a decision to make.

He looked down at Jack.

Jack stared back at his brother and knew, he knew what Bruce was going to do, who Bruce was going to pick.

“Bruce?” Jack said his brother’s name softly, pain, sorrow, so much wrapped in and around his older brother’s name.

Bruce said nothing. He could see the betrayal in his brother’s blue eyes.

Bruce simply let go.

Jack didn’t make a sound as he fell, but his eyes never left his brother until the moment he hit the acid.

*

Harley stood up a little shakily just as the gunshot sounded. When she looked up she saw Jack, dangling over the edge of the railing being held by one hand...by Bruce? But no sooner had she processed that information than she saw Bruce let Jack go.

“JACK!!” Harley screamed in denial and fear.

*

Bruce spun around after dropping Jack and yanked out a batarang from his belt; he threw it a half-heartbeat later. The light caught the dark metal just as the gunman pulled the trigger on the gun, a shot that would have ended Dick Grayson’s life. The batarang hit the gunman's hand, the point embedded in his wrist, forcing his hand open.

The man dropped the gun after the shot went wild.

That was when Bruce saw Harley rush at him.

She slammed into Bruce with the full force of her body, shrieking like a banshee. “YOU KILLED HIM!!”

She clawed at Bruce’s face, her nails dug bloody red lines down one of Bruce’s cheeks.

“Harley stop!!” Bruce yelled trying to grab her wrists, but Harley pushed back and spun around the heel of her foot catching Bruce in the cheek. The impact had Bruce staggering to the side. Harley hissed and spun again, but Bruce caught her foot.

“Harley stop! Please!” Bruce pleaded with her, but Harley wasn’t listening. She threw herself down to the floor; the sudden shift in her weight pulled Bruce off balance. She followed up with a hard kick to his knee, buckling the joint, then pulled her other foot free to kick him in the crotch; though he wore armor, the strike dropped Bruce to the floor. His sister-in-law moved swiftly, twisting around like a snake to straddle Bruce where she began to rain down punches on his face.

“You killed him!! You killed him--my puddin!!” She was crying uncontrollably while she tried to kill Bruce, beating him, bloodying his face, busting his nose, splitting his lip.
“You killed him…” She sobbed when her body jerked, her back bowed and she toppled off of Bruce.

Bruce shoved her the rest of the way off to see Robin standing behind her, holding his bloody shoulder, his taser in his hand. Though the boy looked pale, weak, on his last leg, Robin smiled.

“I really like this taser.”

Bruce stood up and grabbed Dick gently by the shoulder. “Let me look at that.”

Dick smiled though he was shaking slightly. “Never been shot before…”

Bruce tried to smile reassuringly. “It’s okay Dick, it looks like the bullet went through. Let's get you back to the cave.”

Dick gasped and pointed. “Bruce!”

Bruce turned to see Harley climbing over the railing. He took a step towards stop her as Harley turned to glare at him, but she was crying and her voice broke.

“I don’t have any reason to live without him. You took my heart from me...you killed us both.”

Bruce moved to stop her, but Harley let go.

Bruce made it to the railing and looked over just as her body hit the acid.

End of Part One.
The inside of the factory was hot and humid.

Jason had just started to leave with Frost when something grabbed his attention, movement he caught from the corner of his eye and he looked up at the very moment Jack went over the rail and dangled, his feet kicking the air.

“Frost!!” Jason grabbed Frost, spun the man around, and pointed.

The two men looked up.

Frost cursed loudly. Bane must have heard Frost because only seconds later the big man came into view, his eyes immediately followed the others as they gazed upward.

Bane hissed. “Holy shit, is that Jack?”

Frost nodded. “Come on; we have to help him!”

“Who is that holding him? I can’t see!” Jason snarled as the three men began to move.

“It's too dark, I can’t see either. Wait...what is that?” Frost hissed.

All three men watched as Jack dropped something. At first it looked like a black cloth, but as it turned, pushed by the heat from the vat, they all realized what it was, Batman’s cowl drifting down.

Bane, his voice soft with astonishment. “Is that Batman’s mask?”

None of them had a chance to contemplate the fact that Batman was there or that Jack had de-masked the caped crusader, because in the next second all three turned just in time to see Jack fall.

For a moment it looked as if Jack were floating. He seemed to be falling slowly, but just as quickly time sped up and Jack’s body was pulled down. All of them were struck by the fact that Jack never made a sound, no cry for help, no scream of pain...nothing.

The sound of his body hitting the acid made all three men jump.

Jason stumbled as he started to head in that direction, his eyes had followed Jack descent, but it wasn’t until he heard Jack’s body hit the acid that he was able to move. He wanted to save Jack, the first person to really believe in him, trust him, but he knew he would never make it in time to save his Boss. Once Jack had hit the acid, it was over.

Jason’s heart sank. In two days he had lost Roxy and now Jack. Who else was he going to lose from his little family? These people meant so much to Jason and everything was unraveling, all because of Falcone...and Batman.

The three of them were frozen; none of them knew what to do. They had just watched their Boss, their friend, the head of the Red Hood gang die and none of them could believe it. Jack had seemed indestructible, immortal even. He was their avenging angel and now...

Frost stiffened and whispered. “Harley...oh god, where is she?”

Jason laid a hand on Frost’s arm. “Where is she? We got to find her!”

Bane glanced up, a motion above grabbed his attention along with muffled shouts. He frowned, for a moment trying to decipher what he was seeing when he saw shadows moved frantically, then he pointed. “There!!”

They all saw her climb over the rail. Her head turned away from them as she shouted at someone, though they couldn’t discern her words. The timbre of her voice carried, the deep sorrow, but not her specific words and then she fell.

None of the men moved, frozen in place yet again at the horrible events unfolding before in such a short time. They knew they could never save her as they watched in stunned silence as Harley threw herself after Jack.

Frost’s voice trembled. “I can’t...this can’t…”

Jason turned and rushed for the stairs, but Bane grabbed him by the back of his shirt and hauled the younger man back.

Jason turned and swung at Bane, but the big man easily leaned back out of the way. “Stop, Jason stop!” He shook the younger man and growled. “We got a job to finish!”

Jason heaved through clenched teeth. “I want to know who killed them!!! We have to punish him!! I want him dead!!”

Bane held on, keeping Jason far enough from him to prevent the younger man from slugging him. He glanced at Frost then back at Jason. “We know who did it--Batman and we’ll get revenge. But we promised Jack, this place is coming down.”

Jason stared at Bane for what seemed forever before he visibly calmed himself and nodded. “For Jack and Harley.”

Bane released him then looked to Frost. “We still gonna try and take out Falcone?”

It was Jason who answered. “Yeah we are. We are gonna finish what the Red Hood started.”

Frost looked at the two men and nodded his agreement before he answered. “Let’s go.”

Bane asked as they were heading out. “How are we gonna set off the charges?”

Frost smiled. “The Boss left an extra detonator in the Hummer, just in case.”

All three of them smiled.

* *

Batman stood in the dark of the upper floor staring at the place from where Harley had jumped and he had let his brother go in order to save Dick. Bruce felt hollow inside. How was he going to tell Alfred. For a moment, just a brief moment, he considered not telling Alfred. The old man would never know, would always think that Jack and Harley were out there somewhere in Gotham…

But no, he couldn’t do that and he knew it.

“You okay Batman? Bruce?” Dick asked softly the pain clear in the young man’s voice. He was doing well, but Dick needed medical attention, and soon. “I’m sorry you lost your hold on that man…and that woman…I thought I recognized her, but…” His voice trailed off as he frowned examining Bruce’s expression. Batman looked like he was going into shock, despite his limited understanding of how shock worked.
Dick had recognized the blonde woman, but he couldn't place where until Bruce said softly. “That was my brother’s...that was my brother and his wife...we met them at that car...” Bruce’s voice choked on a sob as reality came crashing down on him. He had sacrificed his little brother. He had sworn to himself that he would do all he could to protect Jack even when he knew he lost touch with his brother...and now...he had ended his brother’s life. Bruce felt a hollowness in his chest growing, a numbness spreading through his body...Oh god, what had he done?!

Bruce opened his mouth to tell Robin...what, he didn’t know, but he never got the chance because the first explosion ripped through the factory. Both men covered their ears, the noise deafening. That explosion was followed by another that sent both of them stumbling, nearly falling over as the entire building seemed to vibrate and shudder. A heartbeat later, several more explosions rocked the building and the suddenly unstable floor that held them up--for now.

Bruce grabbed Dick by the arm. “Come on--we’ve got to get out of here!”

Bruce pulled out his grappling hook and aimed for a rafter above them. Dick followed suit, and the two men pulled themselves up, heading toward the opening in the roof that had given them access to get into the factory, now using it as their means of escape.

The two of them made it through the opening in the roof just as more explosions went off, the building began to collapse under them, swaying as more explosions rocked the interior.

Batman, pushed Robin before him as they ran. They leaped off at the very last minute only to use their grappling hooks on another section of the now dying factory until they were able to make it to the ground, throwing themselves out of the way barely in time as the building came down in a billowing of smoke and heavy dust. Fires raged across much of the collapsed building materials, acrid and burning odors staining the air and scorching their lungs.

Batman helped Robin to his feet, the two of them turned to watch as the factory was rocked by more explosions, followed by a raging fire taking all evidence with it. Bruce stared at the destruction, his eyes stung with tears and smoke as he looked at his brother’s grave.

*

Frost waited until morning to go and see Agatha at Henderschott’s secret hospital. He had stayed at the amusement park with everyone else drinking until late before he had headed home. Agatha would be staying at the hospital another few days before the doctor would allow her to be moved back to her place, or Frost’s...he was going to ask her about staying with him at his apartment, but right now he had news to deliver, news he wasn’t sure how he was going to break to her. He had told himself last night he was waiting until morning to let her rest, but he knew that the real reason was he hoped that by morning he would have come up with an easier way to tell her, but he had been wrong. Morning only made telling her that Jack and Harley were dead more surreal, more difficult.

Frost had stopped on the way to visit Agatha in order to buy a bouquet of flowers, something he would have done regardless, but the flowers had more meaning now. He knew they would do nothing to ease the pain that he was about to inflict, but he hoped that maybe they would bring some small measure of comfort.

When Frost arrived at the Agatha’s hospital room, she was sitting up reading a book, wearing a pink hospital gown and a pair of light pink reading glasses rested on the tip of her nose. (Frost smiled. He had learned over the months of being in a relationship with her that Agatha didn’t like any show of weakness in herself, so the fact that she was openly wearing her reading glasses demonstrated to him how tired she was feeling and exactly how much of a toll being shot like she was had hurt her.)
The curtains had been pulled aside to let in the bright summer sun. Agatha looked wonderful he thought. She still looked pale and there were shadows under her eyes, but she had combed her hair and she looked as if she had showered, there was a rosiness to her cheeks and a clearness to her eyes that hadn’t been there yesterday. She looked fresh, beautiful...Frost hated himself for what he was about to do to her. He walked in carrying a dozen white roses.

Agatha looked up over the rim of her glasses, a smile spread across her face. “There you are! I was beginning to worry. I thought someone would have called me to let me know how it went at the factory last night, or maybe stopped by…” She gave Frost a mock look of annoyance which quickly vanished. “How did it go? Did Jack take care of Falcone yet?”

She set her book down and removed her glasses. She set both on the room’s mobile table that was currently across her bed. She smiled expectantly at Frost. Now that he was here, Frost froze, unsure how he should proceed. It wasn’t like he hadn’t delivered news like this before as a cop. He had been part of several assignments where they had to go to someone’s house and deliver the bad news of a loved one's death. But this time… Frost handed her the roses. “I thought you might like these.”

Agatha blushed softly as she took the flowers. “Oh sweetie, these are gorgeous. I love them.”

She buried her face in the flowers taking a deep inhale. She let her breath out slowly.

“Mm...I do love roses. Thank you sugar.” She grinned at him and motioned him to come closer. When Frost did, she reached up and caught his face with one hand before she kissed him, a deep, passionate kiss, her hand slid around to the back of his head, her fingers threaded through his hair.

Frost put one hand on the back of her mattress, the other on the bed rail and kissed her hard in return.

When they finally pulled away from one another Agatha purred. “Mm...I need to find out from the doctor when I’ll be well enough for a little fun.” She smirked at Frost as she traced his jaw with her fingertip. “Sex really is some of the best medicine.” She giggled at him tracing his lips with her fingers before she asked again. “So, last night? I can tell something is bothering you.”

Frost settled his elbows on his knees, folded his hands together and looked down at the floor for a moment trying to figure out how he was going to tell her when Agatha murmured, her voice low with concern.

“Frost, what happened?” There was an edge to her voice, she knew something was very wrong.

Frost sighed and without looking at her murmured. “Jack and Harley. They’re dead.”

Agatha pushed herself up in her bed with a grimace of pain. “What? What’re you talking about?”

Frost closed his eyes for a moment before he looked up at her. “We saw Jack fall into a vat of acid…” He frowned as his eyes went distant for a moment as he remembered what he had witnessed. “Followed by Harley--she threw herself in after him. We think Batman caused their deaths.”

Agatha had gone deathly pale. Her voice was low, barely a whisper. “Dead?”

Frost nodded. “We think Batman was involved because just before Jack fell he dropped something that looked like Batman’s cowl.”

“Did you see Batman?” she asked softly; her voice lacked any emotion.

Frost shook his head. “No, just...just what we thought we saw a cowl, but we know someone was up on the third floor with Jack and Harley and we know someone let Jack fall...”
“Did you find their bodies?” she asked slowly.

Frost shook his head. “They both fell into one of the large vats of acid that were situated around the factory floor, but we also set off the charges after we realized they were--they were gone. We leveled the place, there is nothing left.”

Tears, very slowly began to gather in the corners of her eyes before they ran down Agatha’s cheeks. “Jackie is gone...Harley...oh Jonny…”

Frost was up, his arms around her. She wrapped her arms around him and buried her face against his chest and cried.

*

Bane was angry.

Everything had gone to shit in two days. He wasn’t sure what was going to happen now with Jack and Harley gone, the rest of the gang injured…

All he knew was that he felt helpless.

He, along with Trope and Thea, Zsasz, Frost and Jason had all headed to the amusement park after destroying the factory building, with a quick stop at a twenty-four hour convenience store to buy out all the alcohol the clerk had in stock. They had spent the night on the merry-go-around, letting the ride play all through the night, drinking themselves all into unconsciousness. Everyone knew they were going to have to tell the other survivors of the gang what had happened, but no one was looking forward to it, no one wanted to relive what had happened, least of all Frost, Bane and Jason, but they owed it to the gang to let everyone know.

Bane was currently walking toward the haunted house ride. The morning sun was too bright and his headache was pounding at his temples. He recalled, as he walked, the conversation they had last night (or was it early this morning?) about Falcone.

Jason wanted blood. He wanted to hunt down Batman and Falcone, he wanted to finish what Jack had started. He didn’t say it, but Bane was sure Jason wanted to be the Red Hood, not because the young man was power hungry, no. If that were the case Bane would have put him down. No, Jason wanted revenge, and he wanted Jack’s memory, the gang, to live on. Bane guessed this was Jason’s way of showing respect for the man, and maybe he was right. Maybe they should keep going.

As their small group had drunk themselves stupid last night, Bane was pretty sure that like him, the others kept expecting to see Jack, with Harley on his arm, walk through the park at any moment with Jack laughing and telling some corny, or off color joke to them, or telling them how he had pulled this fantastic stunt and faked their deaths...

Bane grinned thinking about it. He could easily have seen Jack and Harley dancing together, then drinking with the gang while they all sat around on the ride laughing and celebrating, but it had never happened. They had never returned that morning. Instead the gang was in mourning.

The small group of them had stayed the night, except Frost who had gone home. (Everyone knew he would be going to break the news to Agatha in the morning.) Bane and Zsasz had slept out on the merry-go-around along with Thea and Trope. Bane had acted as bed and pillow to the two young women as they curled into a drunken sleep in his lap. Zsasz had fallen asleep on one of the wooden horses, his cheek pressed up against the metal pole. Now that had been the strangest thing Bane had ever seen. He hadn’t known Zsasz long, but he didn’t seem the type of person inclined to drunkenness, though he had put down two six packs of beer without saying too much except that Jack had been his friend.

Jason had wandered off, drunk and angry to sleep off his own drunkenness somewhere else in the park. Bane understood, not only did all of them need to process in their own way, but Jason had volunteered to be the one to call Alex and tell him about Jack and Harley.

Bane had woken in the morning with a sense of restlessness, his anger which had been dulled last night by the alcohol was in full swing when he had opened his eyes that morning. He disentangled himself from the two girls. He hated to move them, they were holding one another, curled against him for protection. He smiled and stroked their hair, feeling like a protective big brother before he eased them down as gently as possible so as not to wake them before he had started to go for a walk in the park. The Gotham summer sun was harsh and bright. It was clearly going to be another scorcher of a day. Bane sighed walking past the quiet rides of the park. He had thought to simply try to work off the anger that was building inside him, an anger directed at Batman, at Falcone, but he just couldn't seem to calm down. That was one of the reasons he had joined the military, a reason he never spoke about much, but he had anger issues.

Before he had realized where he was going, Bane found he had wandered to Jack’s lab. He didn’t really know why he had come here, but as he stepped into the lab and looked around, he felt a cold emptiness of loss. Jack and Harley had been becoming more than friends, they had been on the path to becoming family and now, that was all gone.

That was the moment Bane let his rage simply boil over.

With a roar, Bane attacked the lab, his fists crashed into tables loaded with glass beakers and plastic tubing. He moved in a blind rage, his fists smashed, he threw containers of colored liquid, he upturned tables and smashed samples. Bane didn’t really focus on what he was doing, he simply let his rage run.

He had picked up a plastic gallon container, similar to those used for water--except this container glowed softly with some sort of green liquid. He threw the container and its contents with all his strength across the room, where the thick plastic met the wall and cracked open. The contents burst free, the liquid hit the air, instantly creating a thick gas which began to mix with the fumes from other liquids that Bane had unknowingly in his rampage spilled into the air. The room was swiftly filling with a mix of gases. Bane had begun to wheeze, each breath burned as it flowed into his lungs, though he wasn’t completely aware of the burn. Bane was consumed with his anger, his loss, his undirected rage needed to focus and that focus was on destroying this room.

The air in the room had become thick with a light greenish yellow haze that obscured vision. The cloud hung heavy and thick in the room, a miasma of noxious gases. Bane was so focused on destruction and blinded by his rage that by the time the big man realized something was wrong, it was already too late. Bane breathed in deeply and frowned; he couldn’t get in a breath. He grabbed at his throat, barely able to make a sound, a harsh painful wheeze was the only sound he could make. He blinked several times, his eyes burned and began to tear up while his skin itched, then burned. His body felt as if it were swelling, his head felt heavy and he was disoriented.

He began to stagger toward the doorway, reaching into his back pocket, looking for his phone. He yanked it out, held the phone up. The light illuminated his face in the thick cloud of gases around him, but just as Bane tried to focus on the phone, on dialing a number for help, Jason, Frost, the girls…

He fell forward, his face smashed into the floor and he lay unmoving as the gas slowly rolled over his still form, hiding him from view.
When Jason had woken up that morning, his head was throbbing. He had imbibed heavily that night along with everyone else and now he was paying for it with a horrible hangover. His tongue felt like it was swollen and covered in mold, his joints ached and his head and heart felt heavy.

He had wandered to the main house where Jack and Harley had lived, stumbling into the silence of their home.

What he needed was some hot, black coffee and a shower, but he didn’t feel right about taking a shower here, or touching Jack and Harley’s things, so he settled for making the coffee and pulling out his phone. He had volunteered to call Alex. He didn’t really want to do it, but someone needed to and Frost had to go tell Agatha. That was bad enough, but calling Alex too? With a small shake of his head (a gesture he instantly regretted) Jason decided Frost didn’t need to do that chore too. Jason wandered into the kitchen, grabbed the coffee, pulled out the coffee machine and started making some strong black coffee.

As he waited for the coffee to brew, Jason walked back into the living room and collapsed onto the couch. His wounds from the nightclub were aching. Jason sighed and closed his eyes. After a few seconds he smiled as he remembered he had some pain pills from that weirdo doctor Henderschott which he had stuffed in the front pocket of his jeans. He pulled the bottle out, and dropped two into his hand before tossing them into his mouth and dry swallowed them.

He sighed and pulled his phone out. Might as well get the call over with he thought. He hit the preprogrammed number and waited. He didn’t have to wait long before Alex answered.

“I was beginning to get fucking worried that one of you assholes wasn’t going to call me and let me know how it went last night, but it’s fine, I saw it on the news.” Alex sounded more than annoyed.

Jason sighed. “Morning to you too.”

“Hey Jason. So where the fuck is everyone? I thought Jack would fucking call me and let me know when you guys were on your way to Falcone’s at least. Fuck. Did you guys not do it? I didn’t see anything about Falcone on the fucking news...where the fuck is Jack? Why isn’t he calling me? Not that I mind hearing from you Jason.” Jason heard Alex hold the phone away and speak to someone, probably Alice before he was back on. “So, how the fuck did it go?”

Jason chewed his bottom lip before he replied. “Jack and Harley are dead.”

Jason was met with silence.

“Did you hear me?” Jason asked.

“That ain’t fucking funny,” Alex said, his tone flat, dangerous.

“It’s not a fucking joke. They’re dead, both of them.” Jason said, his voice lacked any emotion, flat, monotone as he tried not to feel anything.

Alex was quiet again before he asked, his tone more subdued. “What happened?”

Jason closed his eyes. “Batman pushed Jack into a vat of acid. Harley jumped in after him.”

“What?” Alex hissed. “You’re fucking with me...aren’t you?”

Jason shook his head even though Alex could not see the gesture. “I’m not. Me, Bane and Frost, we all saw it–both of them. They fell into this fucking huge vat of acid, then we blew that fucking factory to the ground, just like Jack wanted. I hope we got the Batman too.”

Alex’s voice was low as he hissed. “Fuck.”

Jason murmured. “We still want to go after Falcone…”

Alex hissed. “Not now...just...we need to wait...regroup...something…”

Jason nodded, his voice flat. “Yeah...yeah okay.”

Alex said softly. “Look, get everyone together at the park, I’ll be there and we can talk tonight, all right?”

Jason nodded again even though Alex couldn’t see him. “All right. We’ll be here.”

“Good.” Alex hung up.

As he sat there on the couch and stared at nothing, waiting for the coffee, Jason’s eyes landed on something resting in one of the chairs.

Jason frowned and stood up slowly. He walked over to the chair and picked the item up. It was Jack’s “Red Hood,” the helmet Jack wore…

Jason slowly turned the helmet in his hands, studying it. The gang needed a new leader, someone to carry on Jack’s work, his ideas…

Jason stared down into the red visor.

*

Bruce hadn’t slept well at all that night. His dreams had been plagued by the expression on his brother’s face as he had fallen into the acid. Bruce relived that moment over and over again in his fitful sleep, the face of his little brother...then Harley...throwing herself after his brother...Bruce didn’t know if that had just been a sign of her deranged mental state or a real expression of love that she would follow his brother...the dreams had twisted around, playing on repeat, Jack looking at him, resigned to his fate at the hands of his older brother, until Bruce had given up on sleep and simply gone downstairs to the gym to work himself until he was too exhausted to care. He had slept only a couple of hours after that, but at least the sleep hadn’t been consumed with images of his brother.

Bruce showered and dressed (he found himself dressing entirely in black, black suit, shirt, tie...he hadn’t been aware of his choice of colors until he was fixing his tie in front of the mirror. It was then that Bruce realized he was dressed in mourning colors) before he came downstairs. It was still very early, the house was quiet, which was a sure sign that Dick was still asleep. As Bruce made his way to the kitchen, (he thought he would put some coffee on for himself,) he heard the unmistakable sounds of Alfred moving around. Bruce stopped walking and stood in the kitchen doorway. He saw Alfred in the kitchen, doing what he always did, taking care of the family.

Dependable Alfred, measuring out the coffee into the coffeemaker, humming the anthem of Great Britain while he worked. He could tell which blend by the smell, Saint Helena coffee, he could pick out the scents of caramel and fruit. He watched Alfred, who didn’t seem to be aware of Bruce standing in the doorway. He was dressed in his butler uniform as always just with the sleeves rolled up, his jacket over the back of one of the chairs and an apron over his front. He had been slowly working back up to his typical working form; the heart attack now seemed like a distant memory, but as Bruce watched him he could see the signs on Alfred, the scars that the heart attack had left on him—more wrinkles around his eyes, the corners of his mouth.

To Bruce, Alfred had aged since the heart attack. The once towering, firm figure from his youth, who had seemed untouchable, strong, immortal even, who had been there for him—for both of them...him and Jack when their parents died—a man who had taken over the raising of two young boys, alone, and who had loved them both as his sons...Alfred had supported Bruce in his mission to save Gotham, even protecting Bruce’s secret from his own brother even when Alfred had thought Bruce should share it with Jack...and Bruce knew that Alfred had been the one person that Jack had loved almost as much as he loved his brother... Alfred had finished with the coffee and turned, stopping in his tracks when he saw Bruce standing in the doorway.

“Is all well, Master Bruce?” Alfred asked, continuing what he was doing as if he had not just missed a step.

“I...couldn’t sleep,” Bruce offered softly as he stepped the rest of the way into the kitchen and pulled up a stool, unknowingly taking the same spot that Jack would take when he lived here, sitting in the kitchen and eating his meals with Alfred.

Alfred noticed though he made no comment. “What would you like for breakfast, sir? I was thinking about making French omelettes this morning, something nice and filling for the two of you.”

Bruce frowned, his hands were folded in his lap. “I’m not very hungry this morning Alfred.”

“Sir, if you don’t mind my saying this, breakfast is the most important meal of the day and while I have in the past let you go without eating it, I have a feeling today would be a very good day for you to listen to me and eat breakfast.” While he spoke Alfred walked over to the large refrigerator and began pulling out eggs, butter, tomatoes, onions, and cheese before he pulled out some fresh herbs as well. He set those aside and pulled down a mixing bowl and a pan. Without looking at Bruce as he worked he said softly.

“Something is clearly bothering you Master Bruce. You know, you can tell me anything sir. If you need advice, a shoulder…” The older man finally turned to look at Bruce. “I’m here for you as I always have been.”

Bruce dragged his teeth over his bottom lip in worry. He looked up, but Alfred had gone back to work, chopping herbs. Bruce stared at Alfred’s back. He was sure he could see a slight hunch to Alfred’s shoulders since his hospitalization that hadn’t been there before or maybe it was simply that Bruce was realizing his butler, father figure, mentor was not immortal like he had always felt…and with Jack’s death...Bruce closed his eyes as the pull of despair nearly overcame him.

“I do need to tell you something Alfred,” Bruce said softly at the same time he rubbed his hands up and down his thighs.

Alfred began to crack eggs, his back still to Bruce. “You know you can tell me anything…” he turned to look at Bruce over his shoulder, then frowned. There was something very troubled in Bruce’s expression, he could see a tug around the younger man’s eyes, a heaviness on his shoulders. Alfred had suspected something terrible had happened last night, but neither Bruce nor Dick had said a word. Alfred set down the bowl and wiped his hands on his apron as he stepped closer to Bruce. He dropped “Master” as he focused on Bruce.

“Bruce, what is it?”

Bruce blinked, tears had started to form at the corners of his eyes and to hurry their way down his cheeks. The grief he felt was raw, like an open wound. It burned and threatened to consume him.
Bruce wiped at the tears angrily. He didn’t deserve to cry for his brother, because he was the one who had taken his brother’s life...he didn’t get to grieve, Bruce thought to himself in bitterness. He took a deep breath before he spoke softly. “It’s...it’s Jack...Jack and Harley...Alfred--they’re dead.”

Alfred stared at Bruce, his voice was just a whisper. “What? Dead?”

Bruce swallowed. “Yes.” He turned his gaze up at Alfred.

The older man had gone pale and placed a hand on the counter next to him. “What...what happened?” Alfred asked softly. He looked at Bruce, seeking something there that Bruce felt he couldn’t give him.

Bruce swallowed. “Last night, Dick and I went to ACE Chemicals to investigate the fact that one of the cell towers in that area had gone black. The place is owned by Falcone and with recent events surrounding Falcone I felt looking into the place was a good idea.” Bruce glanced down. Looking Alfred in the eye was becoming more difficult as he continued.

“ACE Chemicals is a front for Falcone’s drug business. We found several people dead.” Bruce looked up at Alfred. “It was Jack or...It was the Red Hood gang. And Jack...Jack was their leader Alfred.”

Alfred nodded. “Continue.”

Bruce returned the nod. “I saw Jack kill two men. I confronted him as Batman and we fought.”

Bruce could see the fight vividly in his mind, recall every move, every detail of their exchange. “Jack managed to pull my cowl off, but he went over the edge. He was dangling there Alfred…” Bruce’s voice dropped lower still. “I reached out and grabbed his hand, but he was slipping...his fingers were broken on that hand, he was slipping…” What little color had remained in Alfred’s face drained as he realized where this was going.

“Then Dick and Harley were there...one of Falcone’s men stepped out of the darkness and shot Dick, he was going to shoot the boy again. I had to make a choice...I let Jack go.”

Bruce said the words out loud, but they sounded as if they were coming from a stranger. Bruce, who had looked down at nothing again, now raised his head to meet Alfred’s gaze. “I killed him Alfred--I let go, I let him fall into a vat of acid...I…” He closed his eyes. Alfred still didn’t move as Bruce continued.

“After that Harley attacked me, then...she jumped after him Alfred. She said I had killed her already and jumped after him.” Bruce squeezed his eyes shut, but tears fought their way past to fall slowly down his cheeks.

Alfred was shocked. He wasn’t sure how to respond until he saw the devastation in Bruce’s face. The older man walked over and wrapped his arms around Bruce who buried his face against the older man’s chest and wrapped his arms around him just before he broke down.

“I killed my brother Alfred...I killed my brother…”

Alfred stroked Bruce’s back as he held the man much like he had done the night his parents had died. It had been after Jack had been put to sleep with some medication, and a young Bruce, that little dark haired boy with a stern face, had come to Alfred only to break down, the stoic demeanor the young boy had kept in place through the funeral, through his little brother’s breakdown, the lawyers...all of it, had shattered once it was dark, little Bruce had been through so many trials, he had broken down finally and gave into the tears he had kept bottled up.

That was what this reminded Alfred of, that night when Bruce had lost everything. The old butler held the boy in his arms and let him cry.

*

His mind was in turmoil, his thoughts, like dreams, drifted through a ravaged, jumbled mind. Images of his brother staring down at him as he fell forever. Those cold blue eyes, that frown. Those images ghosted away replaced by Harley, her smile, the look of love in her eyes, the feel of her kiss, the feel of her body against him. The way her presence brought him comfort, joy...she was everything he ever wanted, or needed...Her...his Harley. That was what hurt him more than dying, was being without her, without Harley...for a moment his anger spiked, rage filled him at Bruce, for the lies, but mostly he raged at his brother for keeping him away from her...from his girl.

Then he hit the acid.

What followed was pain beyond description.

Jack screamed, but he couldn’t make any noise as the acid floated inside his mouth, burned his flesh, his eyes. He was blind and thrashing as the acid rolled him around, moved his body as if he was weightless. The acid held him with its constantly turning and twisting of his body, surrounding him in pain that was so intense that Jack blacked out.

*

Pain was the first thing that came to his conscious mind when he could think again. He broke the surface of the acid, gasping for breath that burned as it rolled through his body. He didn’t recall passing out again, he couldn’t think at all, every nerve ending was on fire, the pain was everything. He was consumed by the burning and ripping pain that lanced through him. Pain was all he knew, all he could focus on…it was his entire existence.

He struggled to breathe, struggled to catch a breath that wasn’t filled with burning liquid. His arms were leaden, it would be so much easier to simple give up, to let the acid have him, to leave this world behind, but he couldn’t. It wasn’t in his nature to give up and there was Harley...his girl, the only person in this world he loved...he needed her...and she needed him...

He wanted to scream, but he couldn’t as the pain blanked out his thoughts, ripped through his mind, stripped and tore through his memories, his feelings, his thoughts, burning holes in everything that was Jack Wayne.

He wanted to beg for Harley, needed her, he needed her in his arms, to hear her voice telling him she was there for him. He knew, knew that she could make this all stop, that holding her in his arms, her body wrapped around his, her lips, her voice, with her very presence, she would end the pain. His Harley, his girl...Jack wanted to cry, to scream, he needed her...needed her. He tried to scream for her, call for her as his body was thrown, tumbled and twisted, banged against hard surfaces he couldn’t see in a haze of burning liquid green, but the only sounds he could make were muffled, gurgling cries that no one could hear, cries that threatened to pull away his voice, to drown away the pain...

When Jack finally broke the surface, sucking in air was a misery. The pain that had been horrible before turned into an inferno of agony.

Everything hurt, every part of him burned, his skin was on fire, as if it were being ripped from his bones, leaving him raw and exposed. His throat, his insides, everything, every part of him burned with an endless fire. His eyes burned so much he couldn’t see. He wasn’t even aware of the blood dripping down his cheeks like tears, dripping from his lips to dribble down his chin.

Jack reached up and grabbed his head, his skull pounded painfully as if a wild beast was trapped inside, seeking escape. Jack buried his fingers in his hair, nails pressed against his skull and laughed. He didn’t know why he laughed, but it was as if there could be no other response to the pain, fear, and loneliness combined with an intense rage, than to laugh.

Pain became everything.

The acid from the factory had washed Jack into the sewers of Gotham, into a complex system of pipes that were covered in complete darkness. Jack tried to open his eyes, but it was painful, as if his eyes had been peeled, leaving the nerve endings exposed. His body was bumped and tossed in the darkness, the chemicals mixed with the river water which pushed his body along with Jack only dimly aware of the movement around him. His body was being shoved and pushed along by the river like a rag doll. He had no control and no way to defend himself as his body was slammed against the sides of a cement pipe, dragged along the bottom or occasionally he would be thrown up against some obstruction in the water, an old bicycle, a refrigerator, a car...he became so battered that all the pain simply melded together until unconsciousness wrapped its arms around him.

When he came back to consciousness, Jack screamed and rolled into a fetal position trying to pull himself away from the pain. The water lapping against his skin was agony, the surface on which he lay burned like nothing he had felt before. It took an effort of will to roll himself onto his back, a strength of will Jack hadn’t been sure he had until that moment. He forced his eyes open and looked up into nothingness, there was only darkness around him.

For a short time, he thought he was dead, he even hoped for a moment that death was coming for him, that death would take away all this exquisite pain, but thoughts of Harley drifted through his pain addled mind. She was lying in bed naked, her blonde hair framing her face, her smile radiant. She giggled softly, sliding her legs together, stretching her arms over her head as she purred.

“Come here puddin, let me hold you.”

Jack shuddered, pain wracked through his body...the only sound he could make was a giggle that bordered on a sob, his tears painted red with blood.

He slowly crawled out of the stream, now a mix of sewer water, river water and the chemicals from the plant. Each movement of his arms was a struggle. His breath came out as a wheeze as he struggled to pull air into his trembling body. He could taste blood in his mouth, drooling over his lips and down his chin. He couldn’t focus his thoughts, he couldn’t see or hear properly. Everything was muffled and above everything else was the pain that threatened to overwhelm all sense and thought.

Jack knew he had to move--if he was going to live, he needed to move. If he was to get back to Harley, he knew he had to move. Harley...he giggled, then choked...coughing up bright green fluid that burned his throat.

He reached out and dug his fingers into soil? Sewage? He didn’t know and he didn’t care. He coughed, forcing the liquid out of his lungs, breathing in tortured breaths of thick, humid air. He pulled himself out of the burning liquid slowly, crawled from the ooze. The burning acid dripped from his body, diluted, but still dangerous. His clothing had been reduced to liquid shreds that sloughed off his body in dripping, melting masses. He continued to crawl until he was clear of the liquid, his arms and legs shook with the effort and then Jack collapsed, the pain momentarily gone as he gave himself over to blissful darkness.
He was not aware of the figures that emerged out of the darkness hours later to find him. The same figures picked up his now bleached white body and carried him further into the darkness.

*

He had no concept of time. His nights and days were melded together into flashes of bright lights, intense, unbearable pain, voices and darkness. He didn’t know where he was or even who he was. He only knew pain...and his dreams.

In the darkness of his mind he saw her. His angel, the golden haired beauty that protected him, eased his pain with whispered words of love to him...he couldn’t think clearly to remember who she was, but he knew she was important, she was everything. He couldn’t remember anything beyond that and he knew he needed her. She was important to him, to his very soul.

In the dreams she was waiting for him, calling his name which he couldn’t hear. He would reach for her, but she was always just out of his reach...he knew if he could just hold her in his arms everything would be all right, but then the dream would end and the pain would return.

When he woke, he woke screaming.

His body burned, everything and anything that touched his skin made him scream. They were wrapping around his limbs, he could feel the pressure from them and the way they made his skin burn. He would writhe around, trying to rip the bandages from his body, but figures would emerge from around him and hold him down. His voice was cracked, hoarse, the screaming only made it worse; his throat felt as if he had swallowed lava. He tried to see where he was, who had him, but his eyes couldn’t focus. Any light made him wince away. He knew figures were around him, but all he saw was the dark shadows, hazy images of people moving around him. He couldn’t see and he couldn’t hear properly either. Sounds were muffled, the voices he heard were like the chattering of rats, but once in a while a sound would break through the haze of noises to pierce into his skull until he wanted to scream again.

His mind was in confusion, thoughts and images moved through his mind, shooting past him before he could grab them and hold on. Images of people he should know...names that had no faces attached to them. The effort of focusing made his head swim in agony, forcing him to let the images go. He didn’t know what had happened; he only knew that he was in hell.

He had no concept of time. His entire existence was pain and confusion, endless, unbearable pain. He heard voices again and again; slurred, muttering voices. He saw faces, but only briefly, illuminated by lights that they carried. They were grotesque faces, stretched and deformed.

He cried out, shielding his eyes from the light, curling in on himself to avoid the light. The pain would spike and send him spiraling into blessed darkness again.

And in the darkness the stream of images returned...people he felt he should know...but it was always her image that drew him...the beautiful blonde...his angel...

*

Jack woke.

His eyes snapped open and it was the first time he was able to focus. He struggled for a few minutes trying to remember his name. His mind seemed slow and sluggish. It was painful to think, but after a bit he remembered his name. He knew who he was, at least partly...he was Jack. The pain was still there, but duller, more manageable. He didn’t think he could move, but he could breathe a shallowly without the pain burning his throat and lungs. He lay still only his eyes moving to see where he was lying. He could focus a little bit, squinting his eyes to see…

He was lying in a dark room; the only light was soft and filtered. Jack raised his head. He regretted the effort which nearly caused him to black out as he looked to see where the light was coming from. A door at the other end of the tiny room was where the light seeped through cracks around the warped door in the wall. Jack laid his head back down, shuddering as pain lanced through his body. He wanted to fall back into the peaceful darkness, but he wouldn’t allow himself. He struggled to stay conscious and focused.

The walls were plastered with images; posters...old circus posters, faded, decaying images on the walls and there were many masks, painted masks that at one time might have been beautiful, but they were now faded, cracked or torn. As Jack’s eyes wandered the room he saw one mask hanging in a corner. It had once been black, red and white...there were red diamonds on it and circling the sides of the mask were the points of a jester's hat...it was a harlequin mask he realized. Harlequin...Jack tried to form the words with his lips, but it was too painful. He focused on that word, Harlequin...Harley...Harley Quinn.

He frowned...Harley Quinn...Harley… Harley! Her imaged snapped into his mind. His Harley....the angel from his dreams!

Jack pushed himself up, pain burned through him, drew out a scream. He collapsed to the bed and blacked out.

But just before the darkness took him, a memory came back to him, holding her hand...Harley’s hand, slipping a ring on her finger, her smile…

“My girl,” was the last thought Jack had before he passed out.

*

The next time Jack was conscious he remembered exactly who he was, remembered his wife, Harley...he remembered everything.

He felt weak, but more himself. He felt like he was coming apart at the seams, but now, he still felt shaky, slightly unhinged, but he was holding himself together, if only barely.

Jack laid still for a few minutes taking in his environment. He was in what almost resembled a cave. Though it was hard to tell from the dim light filtering in from around the old wooden door, (though as Jack laid there, letting himself adjust, he realized he could see much better than he should have been able to…) looked like they might be made of cement, maybe rock? Cement he decided, they were too smooth for a real cave. He reached up to touch the wall, only then realizing just how bandaged up his hands were. Jack held his hands up and saw the bandages ran up the length of his arms, around his torso and as he pushed himself painfully up to a sitting position, he realized the bandages covered his hips, legs...every inch of him. Jack chuckled softly. He looked like a frickin’ mummy.

He touched his face and pulled the bandages away. The air hitting his skin made him hiss in pain for a moment. It was like his skin was overly sensitive, as if he had been burned, but almost as quickly the pain seemed to settle and recede.

Jack frowned, trying to recall the time between falling into the vat and now, but those memories remained fuzzy. As he began to move, the pain was much milder, more as if he had been working out in the gym and over exerted himself. He felt dirty, grungy and incredibly hungry. Jack moved his legs off the bed and looked down. The floor, like the walls and ceiling was cement. Jack was pretty sure he was in an old tunnel or a tube from a construction site maybe...He stood up and almost had to sit down immediately. His legs wobbled, he was weak and standing made him dizzy.

Jack put his hands up against the ceiling to steady himself before he took another step toward the door.

When he finally reached the door he could hear the voices on the other side. It sounded as if several people were outside the door and...he tilted his head, the sound of a fire?

Jack turned to look behind him for a weapon, saw nothing but the masks, the mattress on a rusted wire frame and a barrel being used as a nightstand old clothing piled against the back wall, nothing else.

Jack snarled slightly then pushed open the door.

Outside under an old bridge was a large trash can with a fire burning brightly inside it. Surrounding the can were several people, all of whom stopped talking to turn and stare at Jack.

Jack used the door frame (or rather the frame that had been built around the tunnel entrance) and stared out at the group of people.

The first thing that came to Jack’s mind was that these people looked like circus freaks, the type of people who would do sideshows. There was a large woman, unusually large, two women...no, and yes, they were joined at the hip, the side--he couldn’t tell. There was a man covered in hair every inch of him, another man so skinny that Jack could see every bone and lastly there were three men, all dwarves, with bald heads and large eyes.

They were all staring at Jack as he stood in the doorway of the makeshift bedroom.

Finally one of them, the skeletal looking man, walked forward. “You’re awake. How do you feel?”

Jack held on tightly to the doorway. He had already done too much, he felt weak.

“I’m starving,” he muttered.

The skeletal man laughed. “Good, let’s see what we can do about that.”

*

Jack, still mostly wrapped in bandages, sat on the side of the bed eating from a plastic bowl. The soup was good, surprisingly thick, with large chunks of beef and thick with vegetables.

“My name is Isaac,” the skeletal man said after he handed Jack the bowl.

Jack nodded. “I’m Jack.”

Isaac smiled. “It’s nice to have a name to put to the face now. We found you outside one of the drainage pipes that leads into the Sprang River. You’re lucky we found you when we did, you were in pretty bad shape. I don’t think you would have made it if Celesta hadn’t nursed you back to health. She used to be a nurse.” Isaac smiled.

Jack looked up at Isaac. “Where am I now?”

Isaac smiled. “Our little family lives here under the Sprang Bridge. This…” He pointed at the “room” they were in. “Is a piece of pipe for some rebuilding that never happened. We use it as a recovery room whenever one of us gets sick.”

Jack frowned with a slight nod, glancing around before he spoke again. “How long have I been here?”

Isaac frowned looking down at his hands before he spoke. “You were in really bad shape. You’ve been here almost thirty days.”

Jack’s eyes widened. “What?”

Isaac sucked on his lips. “You’ve been here with us for a month. We didn’t think you were going to make it, but you surprised everyone.”

Jack stood up nearly dropping the bowl. “Harley! I have to get to Harley!”

Isaac stood up putting his hands out. “Ah, you can’t just run off Jack.”

Jack snarled. “Get me some clothes, I’m going home! My wife…” His voice broke.

Isaac held his hands up and took a step toward him. “Jack...ah...you need to see something.”

Isaac walked to the back of the “room” where he rummaged around. Only now did Jack really take notice of the piles of cloth, clothing, and other things. After a bit Isaac came up with what looked like a cracked hand mirror. He handed it to Jack.

Jack frowned and took the mirror.

What he saw wasn’t Jack Wayne. What he saw was a clown.

His skin was so pale, it looked almost white. His lips were blood red, standing out sharply against the pale white of his skin. He yanked the bandages down off his neck and shoulders, the black of his tattoos stood out harshly against his now milk white skin. His blue eyes were shockingly blue now, a startling contrast against the ghostly pallor of his skin; the shade of blue was almost unnatural, and the dark of his lashes...no, the skin around his eyes was darker, almost black compared to the rest of his skin. Jack reached up with shaking fingers to feel his eyebrows were gone and his hair…

Jack dragged his fingers through his hair, which was now a dark green…

Jack started to laugh. He dropped the mirror letting it crash to the floor as he continued to laugh.

He laughed hard enough that tears began to run down his cheeks.

Isaac watched, pressing himself back away from Jack.

Jack dropped to the bed, wrapped his arms around himself and continued to laugh.

*

Pamela Isley was dead.

At least that was what Gotham thought. She had died all those days ago in that tragic lab accident at Wayne Enterprises, but that was only partially true.

There had been an explosion caused by Marc, Dr. Marc Legrand when he had tried to kill her...after she had stolen for him. She had taken a rare herb for him, lied for him, falsified results, wrote his reports, but when she had found out what he was trying to do, trying to create a deadly poison to sell on the black market, weaponizing plants, she threatened to go to Bruce Wayne himself to stop the scientist. That was when he had poisoned her and tried to blow up the lab to cover his trail; but the poison hadn’t worked the way Marc had planned. It didn’t kill her.

Pamela wasn’t really sure what the poison had done to her. Everything had all happened so quickly, Marc’s betrayal, the poisoning, the explosion, and before she knew it, she changed and the lab was destroyed. Pamela could only assume that Marc was still alive. As far as she had been able to gather, no bodies were found, but then again the news assumed her death, he might be dead too or changed, alive? She had no way of knowing.

But what she did know was that she had no idea what was happening to her.

After the explosion, Pamela had found herself wandering out of the remains of the lab, confused, but alive. She had fled, losing herself in Gotham until she found a safe place to hide, a place to hide from Marc, from the world. The explosion had left her confused, disoriented and lost, her body changing right before her eyes and it had hurt like nothing Pamela had endured before. Those memories, of running, of pain...Pamela couldn’t really recall with any clarity what had happened during that period, but the plants, they had sung to her, whispered to her and pulled her here where she had been staying. At the time she hadn’t understood that it was the plants calling to her, she had simply followed the sounds, the soft lyrical pull until she had arrived at her new home. Some place safe, some place where she could figure out what was happening to her. Once the pain had passed, Pamela realized she just how much she had changed. Her body was different.

(She couldn’t know the full extent of her changes without looking at herself under a microscope, but she could feel the changes and see them on her skin. Her once peach complexion was now scattered with patches of green, mottled like camouflage. She had pricked her finger to see if what she felt was true and saw that her blood was clear. The changes to her body were not just cosmetic, but she was changing--morphing--on a cellular level. And she was changing into something no longer human.) She set about creating herself a sanctuary, a retreat from the rest of the world as she struggled to figure out who Pamela Isley was now...or wasn’t…

This place had once been someone’s home, a house that had once been a beauty. It was a grand mansion built around the turn of the 20th century. The place had once been a jewel in Gotham with its thirty-one rooms, castle like tower, vast gardens and large hot house, but that had been decades and decades ago. When Pamela found herself here, the house was a ruin, the gardens and the plants had taken over. It was perfect.

In the short amount of time she had been here, Pamela had made this place a home, closing herself off from humanity, from Gotham, from her past as she learned that she now had abilities, powers. She could...do things with the plant life around her. In the days since her “death” Pamela, who was beginning to think of herself more and more as Poison Ivy, (which seemed to fit her so much better than Pamela) she had learned there was a great deal she could do. She had become one with the earth, with the plants. And most importantly, and surprisingly she thought, she was happy in her little green sanctuary.

Happy was not something she had been in a very long time.

*

Ivy was curled on her side, asleep, surrounded by the flowers she had grown with just a touch, wild roses, honeysuckle and vines that grew around her creating a sort of canopy. She was sleeping soundly when something woke her. Ivy slowly sat up, a little groggily and stretched her arms over her head. She yawned before rubbing her eyes when she felt it again, a vibration among the plants. Something had arrived that was disturbing them.
She stood up and quickly made her way outside of the crumbling manor. She followed the vibration that ran through her plants, leading her to the trickle of river that ran along the property. It had once been much wider, a real “river,” but now it was more of a glorified stream. Ivy was doing her best to clean it up for her plants, but it was difficult since the stream was still connected to the main rivers of Gotham, which in turn were used by several of the factories around the outskirts of Gotham that continued to pump sewage and toxins into the water.

She arrived at the muddy bank and stopped short in complete shock.

Lying on the riverbank was a body.

The body was nearly naked, the clothing looked to be burned off or melted, but the most notable thing about the body was that it was pale. Ivy corrected her thought; pale was wrong, the skin was white and the hair, long hair was tangled around the head like vines, was white as well. Clearly the person was dead. No normal person’s skin would be that color Ivy thought as she took a step closer.

At first Ivy was inclined to leave the body, let the plants have it, fertilizer for new growth, but something compelled her to walk closer, to turn the body over, to see the face of this person.

Ivy reached out and turned the pale, nearly white body onto its back. Once on its back she saw that it was female and the face was still obscured by the hair--white as the moonlight--that lay tangled over the young woman’s features. She could see it was a young woman, but the face…

Ivy reached out and pulled back the hair.

Ivy let out a shocked gasp. She stood up and took several steps back in surprise. It was Harley!

Ivy dropped down beside Harley and quickly checked for a pulse. It was there, but weak, thready. Ivy reached down and picked up her friend; with her new body came new strength. She lifted Harley’s unconscious body and carried her back to the house.

*

Harley cried.

She had cried in pain at first. When Harley came back to consciousness she had come back screaming in agony. Ivy had realized immediately that Harley was suffering from burns, both externally and internally. Whatever had happened to Harley had bleached her skin, but Harley had also swallowed whatever the chemical was that had created this change in her and it was killing her, slowly melting her insides.

Ivy rushed about her garden looking for the plants she knew would heal her friend, using her skills as a botanist to create a cure for her friend. It only took her a few days until she had it, a concoction, primed with her own blood, that she was sure would speed Harley’s healing. There would be side effects, effects Ivy wasn’t sure about since she wasn’t sure what her blood would do exactly, but Ivy decided that those side effects were worth the risk. Besides, the alternative was death. If Harley was going to die without treatment, killing her by giving her something fatal wasn’t really changing anything.

She held Harley’s head tenderly in her lap, feeding her the dark green liquid like a child, forcing it down her friend’s damaged throat and then Ivy had to wait. Harley would cry in the night, but her cries of pain were mixed with sobs of deep, overwhelming heartache.

It had been weeks before Harley seemed to improve. Ivy built her a bed of roses and honeysuckle, with large thick leaves that cradled the young woman and rocked her. Slowly Harley’s breathing became steady, her heartbeat stronger until one morning Ivy found Harley sitting up, awake for the first time as, well whatever she was now...

Harley, naked, her eyes bright blue against her milk white skin, stared at Ivy in confusion. “Who are you? Where am I?”

Ivy smiled. “Oh Harley!! I’m so happy you’re okay!”

Ivy threw herself down on the bed and wrapped her arms around Harley.

Harley frowned in confusion, hugging her in return. “Do I know you?”

Ivy laughed and sat back her hands on Harley’s shoulders. “It’s me Pamela Isley! Remember, roller derby, Gotham City Sirens?”

Harley blinked, clearly confused before a smile burst across her lips. “IVY?? PAM!!”

Ivy laughed. “Yes it’s me!”

Harley gasped and yanked her into another hug. “But...you died! They said you died!”

Ivy laughed. “It's a long story.”

Harley pushed her friend back and stared at her. “Are you aware you’re turning green in places?”

Ivy chuckled. “Oh I’m aware. There have been a few...changes. But let’s not talk about me...what about you? What happened?”

Harley stared at Ivy for a long moment, her eyes large and Ivy could see the tears accumulating at the corner of her eyes. “Jack...oh Ivy...Bruce...Bruce killed Jack…”

Harley broke down.

Ivy quickly gathered her close and held her tight as sobs wracked Harley’s body. “Harley...Harley honey calm down. Tell me what happened.”

Harley sat back, her voice hiccuping, her eyes bloodshot as tears continued to roll down her cheeks. “I...Bruce dropped him into a vat of acid...he dropped him...he let him die!!”

Harley began to shake. “I...I can’t live without him Ivy...I can’t.”

Ivy frowned in confusion pushing Harley’s hair back from her face as tears fell down her friend’s cheeks. “Honey, what are you talking about?”

“I jumped in after him,” Harley said in a whisper. “I don’t want to live without him...I jumped into the acid after him.”

Ivy frowned. “You jumped into a vat of acid?”

Harley nodded, her lips trembling. “I want to die Ivy...I don’t want to live…”

Ivy frowned and pulled her friend into her arms to let Harley cry. She wasn’t sure how Harley had survived before she found her, but she had.

“Did you see him...his body?” Ivy asked softly. “When you jumped, did you see him?”
Harley leaned back, her body was shuddering. She felt weak. “No...no I didn’t...”

Ivy frowned stroking Harley’s hair. “Honey, I don’t want to give you any false hope. I mean...you’ve been with me nearly a month. I had to make a healing tincture to save you, but...if you survived, maybe there is a chance he did too?” Ivy smiled softly. She didn’t want to give her friend false hope. Hell, she didn’t believe herself that Jack was alive. Harley had only lived because of her, but she couldn’t bring herself to crush Harley’s hopes just yet. Harley stared at Ivy as she tried to process two things. One that she had been unconscious for nearly a month, and two, if she survived, then maybe Jack did too!

“I need to go! I have to go find him!” Harley stood up, her legs wobbly and almost immediately she came crashing back down. Ivy caught her friend and eased Harley back down.

“I, honey, you can’t go anywhere, not right now. You aren’t strong enough, you need to recover your strength.”

Harley began to cry again. She grabbed at Ivy, holding her hands tightly. “Please Ivy, you have to help me get home!”

Ivy stroked her back, frowning softly as she thought.

*

It was several more days before Jack could move on his own.

The small group of misfits helped him, providing him clothing and a knife.

Jack immediately set off for the amusement park. He had to find Harley, to let her know he was alive.

Jack was dressed in dark clothing, a pair of jeans, black shirt, combat boots and a jacket to hide his pale skin along with a black fedora hiding most of his green hair. He took a taxi to the amusement park, alone. Isaac had offered to come with him, but Jack needed to go alone...needed to see his girl alone.

Jack’s heart raced. He trembled with the need and excitement of seeing Harley. His angel, the only thing that got him through those days of pain and torment was her...his girl...his pumpkin.

When he arrived at the amusement park Jack was surprised at how quiet it looked. It wasn’t that he was expecting there to be a lot of lights, or anything like that, but the park had that feeling of something...dead, almost like when they first found the place, a ghost of what it once had been. The park felt like that now, as if the life had left it. Jack walked up to the gates and shook them. The gates were locked, as he expected. He stood there staring at them for a few moments before he set off at a brisk walk along the fence. It didn’t take him long to find a place to break into the abandoned amusement park.

Jack hopped over the fence, landing in a crouch. He stood up slowly gazing around with his new eyes. The park was dead, no signs of life at all. He frowned and slowly walked the park. The Gotham night was warm, quiet, the only sound was his shoes against the pavement. He gazed around finding it odd how light everything seemed to him with his new eyes, but everything looked crisper, clearer, as if he had always seen through slightly blurred glass and now he could see the real world. The acid had ripped his old sight away from him only to replace it with new sight...the night was not so dark to him anymore, though bright lights bothered him...he had become light sensitive, the blue of his eyes shifted between his natural shade of blue, to one that was almost white, the blue became lighter, shifting with his mood. Right now his eyes were darker blue reflecting his worry and fear. What if she was gone? Had left Gotham? Had thought he was dead and had moved away? What would he do? He stopped in his tracks and closed his eyes, centering himself. No, he would not think like that. Harley would never leave Gotham he told himself. But what if she couldn’t stand the sight of him. What if how he looked now sent her running from him? Jack didn’t think he could handle Harley being horrified by him.

He frowned walking the path to the house, his hands in the pockets of his borrowed jeans.

He stopped near the front of the house, breaking out into a smile when he saw that there was a light on.

“Harley…” He said her name softly.

He hurried to the front door and flung the door open only to be greeted by a gunshot that blasted a hole in the wall beside him, level with his head. Jack turned to look into the living room. He didn’t see anyone, but someone snarled.

“That was a warning shot, take another step in here and I’ll blow your head off.” The voice was gruff, but Jack frowned, he recognized that voice…

“Victor? Victor Zsasz?” Jack said softly as he reached up and removed his hat.

Slowly Victor stood up from behind the couch, a rifle in his hand. He stared at Jack in confusion, narrowing his eyes before he whispered.

“Jack?”

Jack grinned slowly. “It’s me….a little more of a cartoon version of me, but it's me, Jack.”

Victor came around the couch slowly, still holding his rifle trained on Jack, ready to shoot as he stepped closer staring hard at Jack.

“Is that really you? But...you’re dead?” Victor tilted his head. “You died.”

Jack smiled, his red lips spread across his face in an almost gleeful expression.

“Tales of my demise have been greatly exaggerated.” Jack laughed.

Victor shook his head and then chuckled softly. “Well fuck me.”

“No thanks. Not that you aren’t a handsome man,” Jack said only to suddenly be grabbed by Victor into a hard embrace.

Victor laughed. “We all thought you were dead! What the hell happened to you? Why is your hair green...your skin...I don’t understand…”

Jack laughed and hugged Victor back. “Where’s Harley?”

Victor stepped back frowning. He looked down then said softly.

“She’s dead Jack.”

Jack’s smile slowly dropped, his voice a whisper of shock. “What?”

Victor set the rifle down as he spoke. “I wasn’t there so I don’t know all the details Jack, but, when Batman dropped you into that vat...Harley threw herself in after you. Jason, Frost, and Bane all saw it. They all saw her throw herself in.”

Jack’s breathing began to quicken. He reached out and put his hand against the wall.

“She’s dead?” he repeated as if he didn’t understand the words.

Jack stared at nothing, his lip began to tremble as tears began to fall down his cheeks. “She’s dead...Harley’s dead,” Jack murmured. “My girl...my angel...” He let go of the wall and grabbed his head, his voice choked on a sob. “My girl...my girl….

Jack slowly fell to his knees repeating over and over as tears rolled down his cheeks. “She’s dead...Harley’s dead...she’s dead. My beautiful girl...my pumpkin...my angel...”

He dropped to his elbows, wrapping his hands around his head and let out a cry of anguish.
When Love and Death Embrace

Bruce sat outside on the patio enjoying the cool morning. From his vantage, he could out onto the Wayne Manor gardens. Bruce let his mind wander, remembering his mother out in the gardens on her knees planting flowers instead of just letting the gardening staff take care of it. She liked to get her hands dirty, to work. For a moment Bruce could almost see perfectly, one late summer day, his mother on her knees in the dirt, gardening gloves on, her hair pulled back in a ponytail while Bruce and Jack raced around playing cops and robbers. Bruce smiled as he remembered that particular afternoon, Jack had fallen and scraped up both his knees on the path and Bruce had wrapped his arms around his little brother, telling him that it was all right. Their mother had come over to soothe Jack, kissed him on the forehead and told both boys some corny joke that made them both laugh to distract Jack from his pain.

Bruce sighed as he wondered not for the first time, how things might have been different if his parents had lived. How his relationship with Jack might have been different. Bruce closed his eyes as his thoughts drifted to Jack. He could still see the look in his brother’s eyes when he dropped him into the acid. He saw that look every night in his dreams.

Bruce reached out for his cup of coffee. The rich smell was calming. He took a sip frowning in thought. Jack and Harley had been gone over a month now; it was time to let Jack go. He needed to let Jack go so he could move on. Bruce had decided when he got up that morning that he needed to move forward, and the sooner, the better. Then maybe the dreams would stop.

He sipped his coffee waiting patiently for Alfred to return. The older man had brought out the coffee and had gone back in to retrieve a couple of slices of coffee cake he had baked last night. Bruce was worried about Alfred. He knew the older man hadn’t been sleeping well, not since Bruce had told him about Jack’s and Harley’s death. Bruce figured Alfred needed to move past Jack’s death as well, which was why he waited patiently for Alfred to return. He needed to talk to him about his plans.

Bruce heard the door slide open behind him and Alfred came out carrying a tray with an extra cup, a pot of coffee, sugar and cream, and a plate filled to overflowing with large slices of coffee cake. The older man sat the items on the table before placing the tray on the floor next to him and taking the chair opposite Bruce.

He poured himself a cup of coffee, adding sugar and cream, speaking as he did so. “I much prefer a good cup of tea, but every once in a while coffee can be quite nice.” He smiled as he finished with his coffee before he gave Bruce his full attention.

“Now Master Bruce--you wanted to talk?”

Bruce nodded. He decided to cut right to the point. “I’ve decided to bury Jack.”

Alfred paled and blinked before he said, “What sir?”

Bruce set his coffee cup down. “I’ve decided to release a statement about Jack’s death, cremate him and bury him next to mom and dad.”

“But sir, there is no body…” Alfred protested, but Bruce nodded. “I know…the public doesn’t need to know, no one needs to know any details. I will make a statement that he drowned in a tragic accident along with his wife while in Mexico. It won’t take much to create a few false stories…”
Bruce’s voice trailed off. There was no point in going into the details of how to do it; that it could be done was all that was important. “I need this Alfred. I think we both need this. Jack is dead and we need to put him to rest.”

Alfred frowned and took a sip of his coffee. “I suppose sir...I suppose.”

*

Harley sighed softly as she pushed herself up to a sitting position and wrapped her arms around her legs. She felt out of sorts still. Ivy had found her some shorts and an old t-shirt from somewhere to wear. They smelt earthy, like they had been buried or something and they were dirty, but at least she wasn’t naked any longer which helped slightly in her feeling more “normal,” but she still felt detached, lost. She supposed it was better than the feelings of despair and suicidal thoughts she had been having since she first woke up.

Harley trembled a little as she thought of Jack. She wrapped her arms around herself and the tears came to her eyes. She bit down hard on her bottom lip to stop herself from crying, but the tears came anyway, slowly flowing down her cheeks to drip off her chin.

She had only been awake a few days and still she felt weak. Moving took so much effort that there were days since she woke up when Harley couldn’t...she just couldn’t move. She would lay on her side and cry herself back into a fitful sleep, though recently her sleep had been strangely dreamless, heavy and deep, as if she were drugged. As a doctor she knew that this unwillingness to move was only partly because she was recovering, but mostly it was her depression. The constant, almost drugged like sleep seemed a little strange to her, but Harley was too groggy and numb to really think about what was happening to her. She just couldn't seem to muster any enthusiasm to care. She missed her husband so much that she realized she would rather have died in that vat of acid than live in a world without him. Ivy had told her she would heal, but Harley didn’t think she would ever heal from the wound of losing her only love, her best friend...he was a part of her and she didn’t want to be without him.

She was slowly recovering her strength day by day which Ivy seemed impressed with. She had told Harley she hadn’t expected her to bounce back so quickly after having been in what was essentially a coma for over a month, but in many ways Harley felt like she was still asleep, slowly moving through the days in a haze. While Ivy saw her recovery as remarkable, Harley didn’t really feel all that remarkable. She felt slow and sluggish, lost, confused, depressed. Ivy continually promised her that those feelings would pass in time, but Harley didn’t think so, at least not until she knew if Jack had survived or not. And right now, with no evidence to tell her otherwise, she was afraid that her husband was dead.

Ivy had made Harley promise she wouldn’t leave to try to find Jack at least for a few days because Ivy thought she needed to be monitored and she needed time to recover her strength. (Ivy had no idea what her potion, mixed with her blood, would do to Harley’s system. Obviously, it had healed her, but Ivy was still learning what she had become and she wanted to make sure her friend was indeed recovering before she let her loose in Gotham. Part of this was genuine concern for Harley, but the other part was Ivy’s scientific mind, wanting to see what would happen with her experiment. Ivy found herself fighting to remain human in her dealings with Harley, but it was a struggle as each day a piece of her humanity seemed to slip away to be replaced by her concern over her plants. Ivy was aware that this was happening to her, but she felt powerless to stop it. Or was she really powerless? Perhaps, Ivy thought, she just didn’t care for humans as much anymore? But she knew her conversations with Harley, being with her friend, was her only remaining tangible hold on her humanity. Plus, she enjoyed them. Harley reminded her that she was human still.)
Harley had promised reluctantly, and then Ivy had promised to listen for word of Jack. If Jack surfaced, if Jack was alive or dead, she would find out for her friend.

Ivy spread her connections slowly through Gotham, using vines and weeds to ferret into the places where she might hear word of Jack Wayne.

And many other interesting bits of information.

*

Harley frowned as she held her hands up and examined her skin. The changes she had undergone were bizarre; the white of her skin, her hair, it was as if she had been washed away, all color gone. She moved her hand and twisted it back and forth. She could see her blood under her skin, the blue veins just barely visible under her skin made her look even more ghostly, unreal. She reached out and held out a strand of her hair. It was milky white, like a ghost. Her brow furrowed. She supposed in a lot of way she was a ghost...a ghost of the person she once was. That Harley, the one who was married to Jack Wayne, was dead. Harley squeezed her eyes shut as she felt that hollowness in her chest open up once more.

Harley laid down on her side and curled into herself, bringing her knees up and wrapped her arms around her legs. She hadn’t been able to sleep normally since she woke up from her coma. Her dreams were plague with nightmares in which Jack was reaching for her. He needed her and she couldn't get to him. Dreams of pain, of acid, everything coated in a yellow green haze…then followed by Bruce’s cold eyes.

She squeezed her eyes closed and let her mind drift to thoughts of Jack.

She focused on his lips, the way he smiled, the sensual way he would lick his lips. The way his lips looked when he had colored them with lipstick. She remembered outlining his eyes in black, the way he would smell...Silly things like riding on the back of his bike, buying clothes, the care Jack took with dressing...the way he would hold his cigarette, smoke slowly flowing between his lips...all those little things. Harley remembered making love with him, the sensual pleasure, the way his hands felt when he touched her, the way he would hold her, caress her, his mouth on her, his tongue...the more intimate touches, her mouth on him, the sounds he made, the moans, groaning her name. She smiled, remembering his laugh, the way his smile reached to his eyes, the way his lips looked, his eyes outlined in black...so blue. Dancing...dancing...Jack holding her in his arms...her mind's eye traveled up to his eyes. No one had eyes like Jack, those beautiful blue eyes.

She started to cry again. Her soft sounds of sadness swiftly turned into gut wrenching sobs and her whole body shook. She wanted her puddin, she wanted, needed Jack. Harley cried until she had no tears left, yet she continued until she made herself ill. She retched, her eyes hurt, her body ached, every part of her was hurting and still, she cried.

*

Ivy frowned. She was with some of her flowers, practicing making them grow into the blooms so large like nothing ever seen before, large pink and red blooms the size of large animals. Ivy was sure with a little more focus she could grow them even larger! Her work was disturbed when she heard the sounds of Harley’s crying. Harley was making herself ill. Her friend was in such deep mourning that Ivy simply didn’t know if she could help her friend come out of it. She didn’t know what to do for Harley. She had kept her promise to look and listen, which was why she had learned today that Bruce Wayne had made an announcement, that his brother Jack had died. Oddly, Bruce Wayne made no mention of his brother’s wife Harley. Ivy frowned, moving her hands gently over some wild roses. It annoyed her that Wayne had dismissed Harley from her husband’s life. She didn’t know much about the situation, but she did know that not mentioning Harley was a slight.

The other odd thing about the declaring Jack Wayne dead was that he had said Jack had drowned in Mexico...which according to Harley wasn’t true; so why was he lying? She shrugged. It was all very strange. There was to be a private family funeral, no outside guests. Jack was to be cremated and the ashes interred at the family grave site.

Ivy wasn’t sure whether to tell Harley or not. She knew the news would devastate Harley…

That was the moment that Ivy made a decision. She would simply drug Harley, only for a short time, only until she felt her friend had recovered fully, recovered enough so that when Ivy broke the news to her, Harley could handle it.

Ivy smiled. She laid her hands on her plants and soon she had found some sage of the diviners growing among the remains of the green house. It would only take some mild alterations to have the plant exude its natural properties into the air. The plant was known to cause hallucinations when smoked or consumed, but she could alter that, enhance the qualities to include sleep and a haze of good feelings...enough to keep Harley happy and calm until Ivy decided Harley was ready.

*

A cigarette dangled from Jack’s lips as he sat at the piano in his old home, the home at the amusement park he had shared with Harley. (He had had the piano moved downstairs because he couldn’t bear to walk into the bedroom he shared with Harley. The sight would have been too much for him, he knew he wouldn’t have been able to function if he had walked into that room knowing she wasn’t there.) Jack was dressed all in black, black suit, shirt, vest, even his socks and shoes were black, which made his white skin stand out sharply against the black. His now green hair was slicked back, cut back into his usual style, his eyes closed. Smoke slowly drifted up around his head, resembling a twisted halo. His fingers danced over the keys of the piano as he played Chopin’s Piano Sonata No 2 in B flat minor.

Jack moved to the music as he played, his brow slightly furrowed. He was playing the funeral march for two reasons: mourning his Harley, and the death of who he was.

Tonight he would be reborn.

Jack had brought his new friends to live at the amusement park, the people who had saved him and brought him back to life. He had decided to give them a place here, in his home. They were now an extension of his family...his new family...his family without Harley. Jack tensed for a moment, his fingers slipped on a key as he thought of his wife...his girl. He almost wished the acid had stripped his mind like it had stripped his skin. For a moment, he wished he could forget because the pain was so strong, but he was going to focus that pain...focus it on destruction...on bringing chaos to Gotham. Jack smiled to himself at that thought, never opening his eyes as he continued to play.

But tonight was all about new beginnings, death and life, rising from the ashes. Jack grinned around his cigarette. Tonight would be the start of something new.

Isaac sat on the couch listening to Jack play, a cigarette in his too thin hand.

As Jack finished with Chopin, his long graceful fingers glided into Beethoven’s Moonlight Sonata as the front door opened and Zsasz entered. Behind him came two people, Jonny Frost and Alex.

Jack had learned from Zsasz that over the last month or so, Jason had taken over the name of the Red Hood. Jack had laughed, pleased as punch for Jason. Jack also learned that the girls, Trope and Thea were working with him. Duela had gone missing after Jack and Harley’s death. Zsasz said she had been upset, her face was badly scarred and she was having difficulties coping with everything. Henderschott was taking care of her, brought in a psychologist, but once word was out about what happened at the factory, Duela vanished. Jack had told Zsasz to leave the young man for now; he would contact Jason later and the others later, but for now he just needed the three of them.

No one seemed to know where Bane was...dead or alive. Jack was confident that he would easily find him. Zsasz told Jack that his lab had been destroyed, that he and Jason suspected Bane had been the cause simply because of Bane’s temper and the fact no one had seen him since that night, but no one could know for sure. Jack had been upset. He didn’t like any of his family members missing, but he had decided when he was ready, he would go after Bane and bring him home.

Jack had sent Zsasz off to contact Frost and Alex, requested that the come to the amusement park house. Zsasz was not to mention Jack to them, only that Zsasz had found something important that he needed to show them. Tonight would be their first time seeing him since Jack’s “death.”

Jack slipped into playing Satie’s “Trois Gymnopedies: No. 1, Lent et doloreux.” He played softly not once opening his eyes to look over at the people entering the room. Frost came in after Zsasz with a frown at the sound of piano music. No one they knew could play the piano, except Jack Wayne, who was gone. Zsasz stepped in and out of the way, Frost came in and turned naturally toward the sound of the music, which was when he saw Jack, although with green hair, white skin, black suit...Frost froze in the middle of the doorway, his mouth open.

Alex, who was coming in right behind Frost was talking loudly. “And this woman had the nerve to ask me if I was left or right handed??!!” Alex rammed into Frost’s back. “What the fuck Frost?!”

He pushed Frost out of his way and walked around him only to turn toward the sounds of piano playing and see Jack.

“What the living FUCK!” Alex hissed and took a step backwards.

Jack finished the piece on the piano with a flourish before taking a drag on his cigarette and smashing the butt into the ashtray at the corner of the piano. He grinned, his teeth startlingly white against his blood red lips.

“Wellcome boys, to my funeral...and resurrection.” Jack laughed as smoke slowly flowed from his lips and nostrils.

He stood up and threw his arms out. “I’ve been baptized!! Cleansed and given new life, new purpose and I wanted my friends, my family and…” (he glanced over at Isaac) “…new family to participate in my rebirth. I want you all to help me wash away the past so I can truly be reborn.”

Alex continued to stare at Jack with a murmured, “What the actual fuck?”

*

Frost, Alex and Isaac all sat together on the couch. Zsasz perched in a chair, all of them with drinks in their hands. Alex had confiscated an entire bottle of whiskey for himself and was pouring it into his glass, gulping the glass down then filling it again.

Jack stood in front of them with a broad smile on his red lips.

Alex swallowed a large gulp of whiskey and asked with a shake of his head. “Man--how?”

Jack grinned. “No idea my friend, no idea. Fate it seems, has decided I have a mission.” Jack giggled. Alex frowned at his old friend. The sound was...frightening, a slightly unhinged quality to the laugh that made goosebumps run up his spine.

“Jack, man, I mean...are you okay?”

Jack laughed again. “Am I okay? Don’t I look all right?” He spun around with his arms out, making the tails of his jacket spin out slightly as he stopped in front of Alex and the rest as they sat on the couch. “My life was stripped from me, by none other than my brother! See--that’s the saddest thing about betrayal, it doesn’t usually come from your enemies, but someone you love, someone you thought would understand you, or at least try because blood is thicker than water. At least that’s what I believed! But not as thick as acid!”

Jack began to laugh, but this time the sound clearly conveyed a man on the precipice of madness. Jack was laughing so hard that tears sprang to the corner of his eyes and he was forced to wipe them away with the back of his hand. He grinned at Alex, snorted as he tried to contain his laughter only to give into it again, his hands on his knees, locks of green hair falling across his eyes. It was clear to Alex he wasn’t going to stop laughing.

Frost exchanged a look with Alex before he asked firmly, breaking through Jack’s laughter. “Ah Boss, you wanna explain to us how you’re here, why you look the way you do? I saw you fall. It looked like Batman pushed you? Dropped you? And where is Harley?”

Jack stopped laughing so abruptly it was chilling to the other men, but he smiled. “You saw my brother drop me.” He giggled. “My big brother is Batman...you believe that? I don’t, but it’s true! The stoic dark knight, the do-gooder of the streets of Gotham is my fucking BIG BROTHER!! The man with a stick so far up his ass that he could use it for a pogostick.” Jack giggled again. “And he dropped me, let me go, threw me away like so much garbage. I mean, I know we’ve never gotten along, but really…”

Frost frowned. “Batman,” he said slowly, “is Bruce Wayne?”

Jack giggled putting a finger to his lips. “Shhh...it’s a secret.”

Frost pressed his lips together and sat forward. He held his drink in front of him between his hands as he rested his elbows on his knees. He stared down at the amber liquid before he spoke. “So, Batman is your brother and he...let you go, purposely dropped you?”

Jack pointed at him with one hand while touching the side of his nose with the other hand. “There you go Frost, that’s what happened.”

Jack grinned and gestured at himself with a flourish and a little dance step. “My new fashion statement?” Jack spun around again, sliding his fingers through his hair with a smile, then shrugged. “I have no idea why this happened.” He pointed at Isaac. “My new friend Isaac there and his band of misfits found me and nursed me back to health. I was like this when they found me.”

All eyes turned to Isaac. The unusually thin man nodded. “Yes,” he affirmed. “When we found him, he looked just as he looks now.”

Alex muttered again. “Fuck me.”

Jack smiled and threw himself down on one of the armchairs and crossed his legs as he slouched in the chair. “Really Alex, aren’t you a father?”
Alex gave Jack a finger.

Frost frowned. “What about Harley?”

The room grew quiet. Jack’s face became a mask, his eyes dulled instantly. “My girl is dead.”

Frost whispered. “I’m sorry Boss.”

Alex frowned. “Jack I…”

Jack shook his head. “I… I don’t…” His voice choked and he closed his eyes. Everyone remained quiet while Jack pulled out his cigarettes and a plain Bic lighter. The lighter that Harley had given him, stolen for him that night, the one that he always carried on him was gone when he plummeted into the acid. He stared at the lighter in his hand for a moment, the cigarette dangled between his lips. For a moment he was almost overwhelmed again with thoughts of her, his girl, his wife...his reason...Jack closed his eyes. She was gone and with her his happiness, all of it gone…

Jack took a breath through his nose and lit the cigarette taking a hard drag on it once it was lit and slowly let the smoke drift through his nostrils before he spoke.

“That’s why I called you here. Bruce--Batman took something from me. Now I’m going to take something from him.” Jack grinned and took a deep drag from his cigarette. “I won’t stop until I’ve taken everything, like he took everything from me.”

Alex drank straight from the bottle of whiskey and blinked hard, as if steeling himself before he asked. “What you got in mind?”

Jack grinned. “Oh, you’ll see, this is gonna be fun!”

Alex narrowed his eyes. “Fun in what way?”

Jack smiled. “For starters, we are going to destroy Wayne Manor.”

They were all quiet for a moment before Frost asked. “Why not just tell everyone you know who Batman is?”

Jack snorted. “Please!! And ruin the fun?? I have so much planned for my brother!! So much to pay him back for, so much to take from him. So many games we are going to play now...just like when we were kids, except this time Bruce is going to have to play with me.” Jack chuckled. “Now, this is going to be our little secret, right boys? No one is going to know my brother’s secret, no one beyond this room.”

They all exchanged looks and nodded, but Frost shook his head. “But your aunt…”

Jack stared at Frost. Frost could see the pain in Jack’s eyes; he was trying to hide it, but Frost had known him long enough that he could see the hurt as plain as day in Jack’s blue eyes. Jack finally glanced down and spoke softly. “I can’t Frost, not yet. She can’t know about Bruce and I’m not ready to see her.”

Frost nodded, but he said quietly. “She is still mourning you both Boss. I honestly thought this might break her. You and Harley dying--came damn close.”

Jack took a drag on his cigarette looking down at his shoes. Frost’s words, “you and Harley dying,” were too true. He supposed that he did die, but he had come back. He didn’t say anything for a while letting the ashes from his cigarette drift to the floor as his mind settled; when he finally spoke the smoke drifted lazily from between his lips.

“Maybe after the house. She might try and stop me and I can’t have that...Bruce needs this message...when it's done, I’ll go see her. I promise.”

Frost nodded. “Thanks Boss.”

Jack smiled and then steepled his fingers, holding his cigarette between them. The smoke slowly snaked up creating the illusion of Jack’s face forming from the smoke. With his pale skin it was eerie to his friends. Jack sat forward. “Good, now Alex, exactly how many incendiary devices and kerosene molotovs do you think you can get me and how soon?”

Alex took another large swig of the whiskey. “Give me twenty four hours, I can get you everything you need Jack.”

Jack’s smile spread across his face, sending a chill down everyone’s spine as he hissed, his voice low and sinister. “Good.”

* * *

Harley woke feeling groggy. She rolled onto her back, struggling to open her eyes. She could see flowers hanging over her head. The ceiling of her “room” on the second floor of the old mansion was a riot of bright colors. Red, yellow and pink roses with other flowers of vivid, lovely colors mixed in that Harley had no names for lined not just the ceiling of the old bedroom, but also the walls as well. The floor was covered in a thick moss of some sort that was soft and warm acting as a perfect bed. There was one window in the room that Harley could see out of, framed by vines, that looked out onto the garden and the hothouse were Ivy spent much of her time when she wasn’t with Harley. Harley frowned staring up at the roses as she laid on the bed of moss. A little light shone in here, but she couldn’t figure out where it was coming from. Some of the plants seemed to have a gentle glow of their own, but...she frowned. That couldn’t be right, could it? She asked herself, but she let the idea go, unable to fully grasp the idea and hold onto it. She was just too tired to really care.

She knew she had been sleeping a lot. No, Harley considered with a frown, more than simply a lot--nearly constantly--not that she minded. At first her sleep had been plagued with dreams and nightmares, but lately her sleep had been so deep that Harley didn’t remember any of her dreams so that when she woke she didn’t wake in tears. That was nice, but Harley felt like something was wrong, she just couldn’t figure out what the “wrongness” was that she was feeling. She knew it was something outside of the yawning hole of nothingness in her chest...the feeling of devastation that she felt over her loss of Jack. Her states of conscious waking seemed few and far between. It was as if everything was in a sort of haze. She pushed herself upright and climbed to her feet. It took her several seconds to be able to stand straight and feel as if she could walk without toppling over.

Harley slowly made her way through the practical jungle that was Ivy’s home. It seemed to Harley that each time she woke, the place had become more and more covered with plants, some of them she recognized, but most of them were becoming strange, like odd hybrids of other plants. It was all very strange, she acknowledged, but Harley couldn’t really seem to focus her attention too much on it because when she tried, her thoughts became fuzzy. It reminded Harley of this one time in college when he roommate had gotten her to try marijuana. All it had really done for her was make her so relaxed she fell asleep, her mind feeling a little fuzzy. But this was different. She felt muddle headed, sleepy, disoriented. She knew something was wrong--she just didn't know what.

She found Ivy where she usually found her when she had enough strength to go and look, in the hothouse.
Ivy was working, as she always was, humming and singing softly to the plants. Harley stopped in the doorway of the hothouse and watched her friend. She could see that Ivy’s skin was changing. When she had first come out of the coma, Harley had noticed there were only a few tiny patches of green on Ivy’s skin, but over the last several days those patches had grown, becoming larger. She had also noticed the Ivy was becoming more obsessed over her plants, talking to them, singing to them. It was definitely strange.

As Harley stood in the doorway watching her friend, Ivy picked up a potted plant. Harley had no idea what it was, only that it was green.

“There, there my little friend, let’s get you out of the dreadful pot and into the ground so you can do your work.” Ivy looked fondly at the plant. “Mmmm...my sage of the diviners...I do so love that name, it is a name that treats you with the respect you deserve, bringer of sleep and sweet dreams...with a little help from me of course...boosting your abilities, and changing them just a little. You are just such a good little thing aren’t you? Helping my dear Harley, keeping those horrible memories away from her…” Ivy’s voice dropped softly. “Letting her sleep away the pain…”

Ivy started to sing softly, low, almost hypnotically as she cooed to the plant.

“The valley green was so serene
In the middle ran a stream so blue...
A maiden fair, in despair, once had met her true love there and she told him...
She would say...

"Promise me, when you see, a white rose you'll think of me
I love you so,
Never let go,
I will be your ghost of a rose..."

Harley stiffened. Her thoughts were slow to form, sluggish, but her analytical mind pushed through the drug induced haze allowing her to focus, at least temporarily. She was able to focus enough to understand what was happening--Ivy was drugging her? She swallowed and took a step backwards, but even now she could feel the tug of the plants’ abilities on her…trying to pull her down into sleep again. Harley wasn’t sure what she was going to do, but now that a seed had been planted with the knowledge that Ivy was drugging her, Harley would do everything in her power to fight against Ivy’s control…

*

Jack sat next to Frost as the other man drove toward Wayne Manor. Frost had picked Jack up at the amusement park and the two men had been relatively quiet as Frost drove.

Frost felt as if he needed to say something about Harley, to somehow express his grief over her death and to communicate to Jack that while he didn’t fully understand his loss, Frost was there for his boss, for his friend.

Frost finally said softly. “I’m sorry about Harley.”

He could see Jack stiffen slightly from the corner of his eye. Jack had been looking out the passenger window, but when Frost spoke he turned to stare out the windshield. When he spoke his voice was low. “I don’t know how i’m going to carry on without her Frost. I don’t know that I can, except for Bruce.”

Frost frowned glancing over at Jack. The streetlights reflected off of Jack’s white skin making him seem ghost-like. His hair looked dark, almost black with only the occasional light showing that it was in fact green.

Jack spoke again. “I want to make Bruce pay for what he did...for taking Harley...for killing me...I want him to pay for the rest of his life. That is the only reason I’m still here, the only reason I will keep going. Once Bruce has paid enough, then I’m out. I can’t be here without her Jonny...I just can’t.”

Frost was startled when Jack used his first name, but he said softly. “I think I understand Boss.”

Jack didn’t look at him, but he nodded.

*

Alex drove up to the park and turned off the SUV’s engine. He hadn’t liked it, but he had agreed not to tell Alice that Jack was alive. Jack didn’t want anyone else knowing, keeping that information to just the four men who would be helping him. Alex was parked off the road under the shadow of some trees across from the Wayne estate. As he looked out the passenger window, he could see no lights were currently on except a couple of exterior lights. Jack had said that Bruce and his little sidekick would be out touring Gotham and being do gooders, so there would be no one home—except Alfred—and Jack would take care of him. Alex hadn’t liked the sound of that, but he had said nothing.

Alex knew how hard family relationships could be.

Alex frowned and pulled out a cigar from the pocket of his Hawaiian shirt that he was wearing over his black t-shirt. He had smoked a lot when he was younger and had given it up for a while, but he had picked the habit back up again when his father had arrived in Gotham, the two of them sitting outside sharing a smoke...now his father was dead. He still wanted to pay Falcone back for his part in the death of his father and for what had happened to Alice. She was doing all right, but she was still in the hospital, a month later, and she still was still having occasional panic attacks. Alex had wanted to pay Falcone back too for Jack’s death, but he supposed now that he knew it wasn’t Falcone but Batman, and Batman was Bruce Wayne...he was getting some sort of payback. (Of course, Falcone still needing to be dealt with, but that would come in time, Alex was certain.) This whole thing was just so weird, but Jack was still Jack as far as he was concerned and Jack was his friend. He didn’t’ have a problem with burning down Jack’s old home; he understood Jack’s motivations clearly. Bruce had not just taken part of Jack’s life away from him, it was Bruce’s actions that resulted in Harley’s death. If Alex was in Jack’s place, he would want Bruce’s head on a spike, but Jack, as always, had a plan and Alex trusted that.

Alex lit the cigar and took a few deep puffs on the cigar and glared at Wayne Manor.

A few minutes later another car, a dark red Mazda 3, pulled up behind him. Alex glanced in his rear view mirror. He couldn’t see any people, but he knew it was Zsasz and Isaac the new guy. Only a few seconds later he caught a glimpse in his side mirror of the last car, a dark, evergreen Ford Mustang which he knew belonged to Frost, since he had helped him purchase the car (off the record).

Alex smiled. It would feel good to do some wanton destruction after weeks of mourning. He put his cigar out in the ashtray and slipped it back into the pocket of his shirt before he hopped out of his SUV.

Jack came walking up along the side of the road dressed in a three-piece black suit with a dark, blood red dress shirt underneath that matched his now deep red lips. He had his hands in the pockets of his slacks, his jacket open showing off the chain across his stomach, an underarm holster that held a pistol under his left arm, black leather gloves on his hands. His green hair was slicked back, though in the dim light it looked almost black, and his white skin stood out harshly against the black of the suit. Alex grinned watching Jack walk over to him thinking that his friend looked like a fucking vampire or an undertaker.

Jack grinned at Alex, his teeth looked a startling white against the red of his lips.

“My friend!” Jack walked over and embraced Alex. Alex smiled and wrapped his one arm around Jack.

He whispered. “It’s really good to have you back you stupid fuck.”

Jack laughed and tightened his embrace.

“I wish I could say it was good to be back,” Jack whispered.

Alex frowned. “I’m sorry Jack. I didn’t say so the other night, but I’m real sorry man, real fucking sorry. I know what Harley meant to you.”

He felt Jack tense. Alex couldn’t be sure, but he thought Jack might be fighting off tears at the mention of Harley’s name. Jack was quiet for a few moments though his embrace didn’t falter. Alex was sure he felt dampness against cheek. Alex tightened his hold on his friend. When Jack spoke, his voice cracked with emotion. “Me too Alex...me too. Harley meant everything.”

Jack held on for a heartbeat longer before he stepped back from Alex with a grin.

“Now, let’s go do some redecorating on the old family homestead.” He chuckled. “I’ll go take care of the gate darlings.” With that Jack glanced both ways before he jogged across the road.

The men here all nodded greetings to one another before they all headed back into their vehicles. Alex could see Jack standing under the one light that shone down by the gate to the estate. He saw Jack move to stand in front of a keypad.

After a couple seconds the gate began to slowly swing open. Jack turned giving everyone a big smile and two thumbs up.

Alex smiled, turned the car on, and headed through the gate, stopping long enough for Jack to jump in.

Jack clapped his hands once he was inside the SUV.

“This is going to be a riot!” He laughed.

*

She heard a voice...a voice in the darkness. Harley frowned since the voice was calling her name. “Harley, come on Harley, it’s me.”

Harley frowned trying to peer into the darkness. “Hey Harley.”
With the greeting hanging in the air, she saw the figure walk toward her. It was her...or rather, it was who she used to be--Dr. Harleen Quinzel. She had her hair up, the fake glasses, the black pencil skirt, red blouse, and that damn white coat. Harleen waved. “Hey sweetie. Time to wake up. Time to deal with the situation.”

Harley frowned. “What?”

Harleen sighed. “Honey, I know we haven’t talked in a while, but you need to get out of here. I mean, your friend means well, but she’s talking to plants and turning green. You know that ain’t normal, right? Also, she’s drugging you. How long before she decides to turn you into a plant too? You need to get out. You need to mourn and you need to decide what you’re gonna do. But you can’t do that here while she’s drugging you Harley. Jack wouldn’t want his girl being doped and controlled by someone now would he?”

Harley started at Harleen and nodded slowly. “You’re right.”

Harleen grinned and pushed her glasses up. “’Course I’m right, I’m a doctor, remember? Now get up and get your ass out of here. NOW!”

*

Harley woke with a start, then cursed silently to herself. She had fallen asleep again. She laid there not sure what she should do. On one hand it was nice, these endless days of dreamless sleep because when she was fully awake all she did was cry. She knew that whatever it was that Ivy was doing to her was probably the only thing that had kept her from killing herself those first few days...and it was what was keeping her from killing herself now, but Harley found that it really pissed her off too! She was the only one who would determine her fate! Harley decided she had to leave. She knew that Ivy meant well, but...she needed to decide on her own and she needed to mourn, the psychiatrist part...Dr. Harleen Quinzel...knew that...had told her that...Harley felt that overwhelming despair roll over her at the thought of a world without Jack, but she needed to leave and she needed to leave now. She would have to deal with everything else after she escaped.

Harley stood up, her legs weak and shaky. Her bare feet made no sound at all as she stepped out of the room into the hall. There were plants everywhere, wild roses, honeysuckle ferns, and many more the house was only a frame now for the plants, only tiny bits of the house remained visible. Harley had no idea where she was or which way to go, but Ivy had mentioned something about a stream where she found Harley. Maybe if she followed it...

*

Jack’s first stop before heading into the manor was his old “lab,” the old workman’s cottage that Jack had taken as his own.

Jack had told the others to stay in the vehicles, that he would be back soon. When Jack arrived at the cottage he immediately saw that something was wrong. He reached out and laid his gloved fingertips against the door and pushed gently; the door swung open.

Jack stepped in slowly and immediately saw that the building had been cleaned out. His left eye twisted, his red lips set in a thin line. Though it was dark, he had no difficulty seeing as he walked through the entire place and noted that everything, every instrument, every vial...all of it gone. Jack snarled, a low, deep throated sound. He turned around and walked out, heading back to the parked vehicles. He hit the driver side window with the side of his fist as he walked past the SUV startling Alex as he headed to the back and threw it open. In the back of the SUV were several cases.
Alex came jogging along just as Frost, Zsasz and Isaac exited their vehicles and hurried over. Jack flipped open one of the cases where the incendiary bomblets lay nestled in thick form. Several backpacks holding the incendiaries, as well as a few wooden crates filled with molotovs, were ready to light.

Jack smiled. “Alex, Isaac, set the charges out here. Frost, Zsasz, you’re with me. I’m sure Bruce never thought to reset the alarm codes.” Jack grinned. “Guess he is going to learn from his mistakes.”

*

Alfred was down in the cave sipping a cup of tea, reading a book, and watching the monitors. He was wearing part of his butler uniform, shirt, slacks, vest, but the jacket was draped over the back of his chair. The manor grounds had security cameras, alarms, several contingencies in place that would let him know if there was a problem, but the house had several security cameras that were linked to the cave so that Alfred could occasionally check on the computer to view the interior of the manor even though the house had its own sets of alarms, separate from the alarms for the Batcave.

He had just flipped the page in his book when he noticed movement out of the corner of his eyes. Alfred set his book and tea down and spun the wheeled chair around so he could take a closer look. The camera feed was in black and white, but the quality was excellent. The cameras were installed in all the rooms of the house, the stairs and the kitchens.

He frowned as he saw three men were in the house. Oddly, none of the alarms had sounded, not the gate alarm, not the security alarm—nothing. If not for the cameras, he might not have known. He quickly checked the cameras that were connected to the regular house security system, but got nothing. It was as if something had simply turned them off. He watched the three men on the monitor. Two of them he didn’t know, but the third...

Alfred leaned closer, with a frown creasing his forehead. There was something about one of them...Alfred suddenly sat back hard, the impact of his back against the seat caused the chair to roll back a few inches. One of the men had turned...it was Jack.

Alfred laid a hand against his chest. It couldn’t be. Master Bruce had said Jack was dead, he saw it with his own eyes and Bruce wouldn’t lie, not about something like that...but there was no denying it...The man visible on the monitor was Jack. Alfred frowned and rubbed his chin. That would also explain why none of the alarms had sounded;

Jack would know the code, but he didn’t know about the extra cameras connected only to the Batcave.

Alfred was unable to move for a few seconds as he watched Jack take the stairs two at a time and head toward his old room. Alfred grimaced. (Bruce had the room cleaned out after declaring Jack dead. Everything in the room had been packed up by professionals and stowed away, along with everything that Master Bruce had found in the cottage. Whatever he had found here had made Bruce more upset, but he had simply ordered it packed up without a word.)

Alfred stood up slowly. He thought about calling Master Bruce, but decided it would take too long for Batman to get here. Besides, the day he couldn't handle a handful of robbers would be the time he walked away from his duties. Alfred studied the monitor, watching Jack. His old eyes could possibly be playing a tricks on him. There was no way that Jack could still be alive, but he had to be sure whether or not this person he was seeing was Jack and not some illusion brought on due to his old age. For a moment he wondered if he was about to have a stroke and that was why he was seeing things?
Either way, Alfred stood up and picked up the lever action rifle, his own weapon from a collection of his that he started after he retired from the military. Bruce didn’t like guns in the house, but that ended at Alfred’s room. Alfred always brought the gun down here to the cave with him, just in case. One never knew what might happen.

The older man checked the rifle, then took the stairs, hurrying up the steps to see who these strangers were and to see who this stranger was that looked like Jack.

*

Jack felt the hole in his heart grow even larger when he saw his room. All his memories, his life before and with Harley, here in this room scrubbed away like so much dirt. Jack felt his sorrow being consumed by his rage, his feelings of abandonment turned deadly...he was going to make Bruce pay. He wanted to be Gotham’s White Knight. Well he would show Bruce something else, something deadly...a villain like no other. Bruce wanted something evil to cleanse, let him just try and cleanse me, Jack thought. His eyes narrowed until the blue glowed as narrow slits under his dark lashes. Jack pulled his backpack around, yanking out one of the molotovs, pulled his lighter and lit the rag before tossing it into the room before he stepped back. The sound of glass shattering and the fire immediately taking and spreading made him smile. There was no sound of fire alarms since he had disabled the smoke alarm system along with the security system. He watched with satisfaction as the carpet, then the walls of the room began to burn. Jack turned on his heel yanking the door close hard enough that the slam of the wood in the frame echoed through the house.

He had just entered the hall when he saw Alfred step onto the landing. Jack grinned seeing the old man, his heart doing a hard contraction in his chest. He hadn’t seen Alfred since the hospital. The old man simultaneously looked good and he looked angry.

“Hey Alfie,” Jack said with genuine affection as he walked down the hall toward him.

Alfred turned, his eyes going wide in shock. “Jack?”

Jack grinned. “It’s me--in the flesh.”

Alfred was still holding his old rifle trained on him, but Jack could see he was shaking slightly. “You can’t be him...what’s wrong with you? You’re dead....Bruce said you were dead.”

“Oh Bruce said that, did he? Well, surprise, Bruce--or should I say Batman--was wrong.” Alfred twitched at the mention of Batman and Jack chuckled. “Oh it's me.” Jack said softly as smoke began to seep from under his bedroom door behind him. “It’s me Alfie. Jack...just...I’m a little different now.” Jack grinned. “I’ve been dead...it’s very liberating. You should think of it as therapy. Bruce has always been really fond of sending me to therapy, so I guess killing me was the ultimate in family therapy. But I did get a very interesting makeover, whaddaya think? Is green my color?” Jack laughed until he was close enough to Alfred that Jack simply walked up until the barrel of the gun was pressed against his chest. “You gonna shoot me Alfred?” he asked with one brow lifted and a crooked smile on his lips.

Alfred stared at Jack, his eyes wandered over his face before he surprised Jack and dropped the gun only to wrap his arms around the younger man.

Jack stood there for a moment before he caved and wrapped his arms around Alfred.

He whispered softly. “Hey Alfie, I missed you.”

Alfred began to cry. “Oh Master Jack...we thought you were dead. Bruce...we had a funeral…”
Jack blinked trying not to cry, but tears rolled down his cheeks even as more smoke rolled into the hall behind him, began to spread out. He squeezed Alfred tight, holding on to the older man.

“Harley’s dead Alfred.” Jack choked on a sob. He had thought he had cried himself out over her, that his pain had been replaced by his rage, but holding onto Alfred brought all of the pain back like a flood. Jack gave into the grief again, pressing his face against Alfred’s shoulder.

“She’s dead… I can’t…” Jack held on tightly to Alfred and his voice broke as he choked on a sob breaking down, crying against the shoulder of the only father he had known since he was little.

Alfred held the young man who he loved like his own son, letting him cry.

“Jack, my dear boy,” he said softly.

Alfred looked up as the smell of smoke became strong. His eyes widened as he saw fire engulf Jack’s bedroom door and move from Jack’s room out into the hall.

“Jack, what have you done?” Alfred asked in shock.

Jack stepped away smiling, wiping away his tears. “I’m burning the house down. I’m destroying it all. I’m killing the past Alfred. I’m rising from the ashes as something new and I am going to destroy Bruce and the Batman…I’m going to take everything from Bruce, just like he took everything from me.” Jack chuckled, though tears continued to slide down his cheeks.

“Jack, my boy, you don’t have to do this.” Alfred reached for him, but Jack took a step backwards away from him. “No, I’m pretty sure I do have to Alfred.” He smiled. “I will be a plague on Gotham, on Batman…Bruce will never have a happy moment in life. I’ll make sure of that. He is going to pay for taking Harley from me. He is going to pay for this…” Jack motioned at his face. “Bruce thought I was crazy before… he hasn’t seen crazy yet.”

Alfred was stunned. He didn’t know what to do, what he could say to change the situation, but Jack put his arm around Alfred’s shoulders. “Why don’t you go ahead and get out now. The whole place is coming down. My friends have set charges everywhere--it’s going to be a blast.” Jack pulled out a device from his pocket and waved it in front of Alfred.

“Boom.” He laughed as he walked Alfred down the stairs. “I’m really sorry to get you involved in this Alfred. Harley and I both loved you.” He dropped his voice. “I still do. You mean the world to me Alfred, but Bruce set us on a track that we seemed destined to follow. There is no avoiding what’s about to happen. So, I’ll give you a head start.”

They had reached the bottom of the stairs just as Zsasz and Frost came into the main entryway about the same time.

Jack grinned. “All set boys?”

Zsasz nodded. “All the charges are set.”

Frost nodded. “Yeah, everything’s ready Boss. Isaac and Alex just signaled they are ready too.”

Jack smiled. “Frost my love, will you escort dear Alfred here someplace safe to watch the show? And make sure he doesn’t have anything on him to contact my brother.”

Frost walked over and took Alfred by his biceps, gently but firmly. Alfred turned to Jack.

“Jack please, don’t do this…”
Jack’s smile dropped as he gazed at Alfred. He shook his head sadly. “I’m sorry Alfred, but I have to...I have no choice.”

“There’s always a choice.” Alfred said gravely.

Jack shrugged. “Maybe, but Batman made this one, I’m simply showing him there are consequences to his choices.” Jack smiled at Frost. “Take him outside and let’s get this show on the road.”

*

Harley struggled to walk. The urge to simply lie down and sleep was so strong, it was all she wanted to do, and it took all her will not to just let oblivion take her, but she forced herself to keep moving. The twilight made visibility difficult; there were pools of dark, inky shadows and places where Harley would misjudge her steps, but the light still allowed her to leave the house without falling down any stairs.

She stopped at the hothouse to check on Ivy. She wanted to be sure Ivy was actually busy, her attention on something else beside her. Harley found her friend standing in the middle of the greenhouse, surrounded by some overly large pink flowers that looked unnatural. They were too large, the color too bright and something about them gave Harley the willies. Ivy was talking to them, like she had been talking to the potted plant yesterday. Harley frowned as she realized she had no idea what day it was...or how much time had passed since she had last been in here. It could have been twenty four hours, or a week...she had no clue.

Harley frowned, chewed her bottom lip as Ivy moved her hands and more of the strange, pink flowers budded and grew along the vines of the others, moving and shifting to surround her. Ivy chuckled softly. “This is wonderful!”

Harley slowly turned and walked as quietly and carefully as she could. She needed to get out of here.

She made her way around the large glass structure, though the glass was hard to see with the way the plants had grown over it. She stopped for a moment and looked around, trying to get her bearings. The house was behind her, the greenhouse to her right, there was a small grove of trees in front of her. She was going to take a chance and say that the river was in front of her.

*

She walked for what seemed like forever. The drugs in her system kept trying to pull her down into unconsciousness. All she wanted to do was sleep, but she could almost hear Harleen in the back of her mind yelling at her to keep going, that she wasn’t going to let someone, no matter how good intentioned, control her.

After a while she finally found the “river,” though it was more a wide stream. The water was flowing at a steady pace though which was good. Harley frowned glancing back at the house before she took a step in, hoping that walking through the stream would hide any tracks. She wasn’t sure exactly what Ivy was capable of doing, but anything she could do to make herself more difficult to find would help. She hated to leave Ivy like this, she knew Ivy was only trying to help her in the only way she knew how, but Harley wanted to grieve on her own...and if there was a chance that Jack had somehow made it out alive like her, she wasn’t going to find him while being kept in a drug induced stupor.

Harley slowly stepped into the water. It was cold and sent chills up her legs, was deep enough that when Harley walked out into the middle of it she could feel rocks and other things under her bare feet. The ground was slimy too, which made walking hazardous. The last thing she wanted was a Harley made a face. The greenish-brown water came up to her mid thigh and in places it was deeper, which caused the ends of her shorts to become wet. She bit her lip and glanced back toward the house which she could now only see hints of through the trees. There were no lights except what was coming from Ivy’s greenhouse. She wondered how long it would take before Ivy realized she was gone? Harley took a deep breath then turned back to the stream and began to walk, following the flow of the water.

*

The level of the water slowly lowered the longer she walked until she was treading through ankle deep water. The dirty water showed up in stark contrast against her pale, ghost white skin. Harley was exhausted as she shoved her white hair out of her face while she moved to the shore of the stream after she was sure she was far enough away from the house that Ivy wouldn’t find her tracks, if Ivy even thought to look for any. It was dark where Harley was, but she was sure she could see lights ahead of her, sprinkled in places like starlight. She narrowed her eyes blinking rapidly as she tried to focus. She was feeling less groggy, but her head still felt heavy, and things seemed to wobble, but she kept moving. Her feet hurt, she had stumbled a few times cutting up the palms of her hands and her knees, but she kept walking. She wasn’t going to give up. Harleen wouldn’t let her.

The bushes and vegetation gave way to drainage pipes that ran underground. She was forced to crawl over areas where the pipes and flow of water were covered up by mounds of dirt, bushes and trash, so that she had to guess which way to go and follow along where she thought the water had gone, listening for the water until she found where it came out again, flowing slowly out of another pipe. It wasn’t long before she heard the sounds of traffic. It wasn’t a great many vehicles, but she could hear the sound of cars moving by as she walked clear of some bushes to see an old bridge ahead of her and the angled concrete sides of an old canal. Here the water had been reduced to nearly a trickle, but it still flowed along. Harley walked carefully. There was trash down here, old bikes, tires, part of a wrecked car, cans, papers, and other debris. Under the bridge, it was hard to see, but there looked to be some boxes over that way and movement.

She walked closer when she thought she saw light, a fire. There were a few people down there, a couple of shopping carts, boxes. A tall skinny man wrapped in layers of brownish grey clothing came out from under the bridge.

“Hey sweetheart! You cold? Come here, you can stay with us.” The man grinned at her and Harley heard the sounds of several men laughing.

“Yeah come on sweetheart, come get warm with us.” Another voice joined the man who had stepped out from under the bridge.

Harley took a step backwards. “No, I’m fine.”

The thin man who had spoke first came closer to her. “Aw come on sweet thing, we’ll keep you warm. We got some food--fuck we even got some drugs, we’ll share.”

The man came close to Harley and she could smell him, a mix of sour body odor, alcohol, urine and vomit. He reached out and grabbed her wrist. “Come on sweetie.”

Harley reacted swiftly. She yanked her arm back from him, caused the man to stumble toward her, and she followed this by slamming her left fist into the man’s throat with all her strength, which was far more than it should have been in her current condition. Harley registered this vaguely as the man... dropped, he gasped, struggling for breath, clawing at his throat. His friends rushed out, but instead of—thankfully—attacking her they hurried over to their friend.

“What are you?” one of the men hissed.

Harley just stared at him before she turned away.

Harley walked over to the left side of the canal and climbed the side to find herself facing a road, and some old abandoned buildings. There was trash along the sides of the streets and the few streetlights that worked were weak, one or two sputtered, trying to give out while the others that worked only gave out a small amount of weak light. Harley frowned and looked around. She had no idea where she was so she simply picked a direction and began walking.

She had only been walking for half an hour. During that time she had seen a few homeless hiding in alleys, passed out on benches or huddling in doorways, but no one bothered her as she walked along the road.

She received a few horn honks, but no one stopped until a cotton candy pink 1960 Metropolitan pulled up in front of her. The passenger side door opened. Harley frowned and walked up to the car and looked inside. In the driver’s seat was a woman who had to be in her seventies at least, if not older. The older woman had short white hair and wore large, perfectly round black glasses. She was wearing a pair of brown capri pants, a pink and white striped shirt, and orange shirt over that with a flower crown of bright orange flowers on her head, a large cigar in her mouth and bright blue tennis shoes.

She grinned at Harley as she took her cigar out from between her teeth. “Honey, you need a ride? A pretty little thing like you shouldn’t be out here in Gotham walking around in barely any clothes...and no shoes. Get in sweetie. I got a couple of bottles of coke in the back. The good kind, in the glass bottles and I got some salted peanuts if you want to pour them in the coke.” She grinned and patted the seat. “Come on sweetie, the name’s Pansy and I promise I don’t bite.”

Harley laughed softly then sniffed. “A ride would be nice.”

Pansy gestured with her head. “Well get in girlie before I got to shoot some wiseass. You wouldn’t believe how many people think an old lady in a pink car is an easy target.”

Harley slipped in and closed the door.

Pansy smiled and took off. “Now, what’s a sweet little thing like you wondering about the streets of Gotham for?”

Harley couldn’t help it, her bottom lip started to tremble. “My...my husband...I’m looking for him.”

Pansy frowned. “He run off?”

Harley shook her head. “We got separated. He...” tears began to fall down her cheeks. “He might be dead. I...I don’t know.” Harley covered her face on a sob. “I just...I need him. I love him so much...I just...”

Pansy frowned and patted Harley’s knee. “You tell me where you want to go and I’ll take you. I know what it’s like to be in love sweetie.”

Harley slowly lowered her hands and took a couple of ragged呼吸s. “Thank you.”

Pansy smiled and reached back into the back seat of her car and pulled out a glass bottle of cola.
“Here, you open this and lean back, Old Pansy will get you where you need to go.”

*

Jack, a cigarette dangling from his lips with a wide grin, and the others were all standing by the gate at the entrance into Wayne Manor. Alfred was still with him, Jack having decided at the last minute that Alfred needed to see this as he held up the detonator.

Jack grinned taking of his cigarette and put his arm around Alfred’s shoulders. “Now, for the grand finale! Or maybe this is simply the opening ceremonies!” Jack laughed.

Alfred tried one more time. “Jack please, this is your home, your parents’ home, the home to generations of Waynes…”

Jack smiled at Alfred and the effect was chilling to the aging butler. Jack’s eyes were strange, the blue fading to a chilling shade of blue that looked almost white to Alfred as Jack laughed.

“Well Alfie dear, you can’t start a new chapter without some destruction. Wasn’t it Picasso who said that every act of creation is first of all an act of destruction? Bruce destroyed me Alfred. He turned me into what you see now and he destroyed the one thing in all the world that I loved. I’m his creation.” Jack laughed. “I’m Frankenstein's monster!! And I’m simply beginning to repay him back for his act of creation with an act of destruction.” Jack giggled and kissed Alfred on the cheek.

He placed his cigarette back between his lips which forced Alfred closer. Jack then took Alfred’s hand and placed it over his on the detonator before placing his other hand over Alfred’s.

Jack glanced at everyone and chuckled. “And here we go!”

Jack pushed down on Alfred’s hand, which pushed down on Jack’s other hand pressing the button down.

The explosion was spectacular. A instant of sound, a great booming blast that was followed instantly by a bright red and yellow flash. Jack laughed as the front of the house imploded followed swiftly by the rest of the house, as blasts continued to go off in a series of rapid explosions.

Jack let go of Alfred and threw his hands in the air like he was conducting an orchestra as more explosions followed by blasts of bright lights and fire. Smoke billowed out from the manor as it came down, falling in on itself.

Jack danced around in a circle, stopping to stand in front of everyone swinging his hands back and forth, flowing with the destruction in front of him. He laughed and turned to everyone throwing his arms out and bowing. His friends all shared a looked with each other before they started clapping.

Jack laughed. “Thank you, thank you!”

He walked over to Alfred who was staring in shock as Wayne Manor fell. Jack wrapped his around Alfred’s head and yanked the older man forward, kissing him hard on the lips. Jack held him leaning back and grinning.

“You tell Bruce I’m coming for him!”

Alfred stared in horror at Jack as the younger man smiled. He gave Alfred a gentler kiss on the lips and whispered. “Goodbye old friend...father.”

With that Jack walked away and yelled. “All right boys, let’s go.”
Frost drove Jack back to the amusement park. Jack had sat quietly, once he had entered the car his whole demeanor had changed to something solemn, quiet. Frost said nothing, as he didn’t think anything he could say would be welcomed right now.

He drove into the park turning off the car when they were close to the house. Frost turned to look at Jack finally and said softly. “You sure you want to stay here Boss? You can stay with me.”

Jack stared at the house out the passenger window. He spoke softly. “No, it’s fine Frost. I’ll be fine. You go on home, or go see Agatha...I’ll be all right.”

Frost frowned, but Jack could sense he wanted to say something or protest. Jack turned around and placed his hand on Frost’s shoulder.

“I promise old friend, I’m fine. I need to be alone right now.”

Frost nodded. “All right.”

Jack nodded and exited the car. Frost watched him go, concern clear in his expression, but he started up the car and backed up, leaving Jack alone.

*

Jack felt hollow. His emotions were all over the place and he had no idea what he should be feeling. He was practically dragging himself toward the door. Part of him wanted to rush upstairs and wrap himself in Harley’s things, to smell her scent around him, to feel her one last time, but another part of him wanted to burn this house and everything in it to the ground, to completely burn away who he had been, destroy the remains of his happiness...then he could focus solely on his revenge against Bruce, the Batman. He wrapped his hand around the knob and pushed the door open. He walked into the house, his expression dead. He only belatedly realized a light was on in the living room which shouldn’t have been on, since he had left the place dark. He pulled his gun as soon as he realized he was not alone.

Lying on the couch, curled on her side, dressed in a ragged t-shirt and a pair of nearly destroyed shorts, her skin milky white, her hair the same color lying tangled across her shoulders and back...was Harley. Her eyes were closed, but it was clear she had been crying, tear streaks stained her dirty cheeks. Her legs were covered in scratches and dirt, dried blood on her bare, damaged feet.

Jack’s eyes widened and he began to shake ever so slightly. But then his rage slowly, like a beast crawling from the darkness of his soul, took over. He closed the space between him and the woman on the couch in two strides and shoved the barrel of his gun against her temple.

Her eyes flew open as she felt the pressure of the gun against her temple.

Jack leaned down getting into her face, his eyes blazed with crazed rage, and when he spoke she could feel his breath against her face, hot as he hissed through his teeth.

“I only have one question...”
Bruce and Dick arrived back at the manor, but it was far too late. They stood in the shadows watching as the manor burned, looking for all the world like a funeral pyre to Bruce. He had seen the explosion while on patrol and as he was speeding home had called Alfred. He had received no answer for what felt like hours, but Alfred had made a quick call on the communicator that linked directly into the Batmobile. All he had said was that there had been an explosion, police and firefighters were on their way, and that they needed to talk. The worst part for Bruce was that he had to stay away, out of sight while Alfred was forced to handle the situation on his own. From the cover of shadows, Bruce watched as Alfred spoke to the firemen and the police and a local news helicopter flew overhead, getting the latest story—and tragedy—in Bruce Wayne’s life. Bruce Wayne would have to make an appearance tomorrow, arriving back from his overnight stay in Star City where he had supposedly taken his ward with him for a private tour of Queen Industries as part of a shared project with Wayne Enterprises. Bruce would have to call Oliver to make sure their stories matched, just in case there was an over enthusiastic reporter, but the lie shouldn’t be a problem, Bruce thought as he watched his home burn.

Dick’s frown deepened as he watched the burning structure. “What do you think happened?”

Bruce shook his head. “No idea. I keep everything up to code; better than up to code. I have all the latest in security from Wayne Enterprises, fire protection…”

“Can we still get to the Batcave?” Dick asked glancing up at Bruce.

Bruce nodded. “Yes. The way we drive out will still be open. It’s just that now, that will be our only way in and out.”

Dick opened his mouth, hesitated, then asked quietly. “Where are we going to live now?”

Bruce frowned then spoke just as softly. “I have a penthouse apartment in the heart of Gotham. We’ll move there until I decide what to do about the manor.”

Dick frowned at him. “What to do? It’s gone, what can you do?”

Bruce sighed. “I don’t know.”

*

“Who. The fuck. Are you?”

Jack gritted out through his teeth. His entire body trembled with barely suppressed rage as he pressed his gun against the temple of the woman on his couch. He shook slightly as he glared down at the pale woman who looked like a ghost of his wife. Everything about her was Harley, the curve of her full lips, the very slight bump on the bridge of her nose and when her eyes opened, widening as she looked sideways at him, Jack could see that they were blue, the bright, light blue of his wife’s eyes.
But her skin was white, white as pure snow...like his skin. But while his hair had turned green, her hair was white...He wanted it to be her so much that his chest ached. It ached to much that it was hard for him to breathe. He wanted her so much, so desperately that he didn’t trust his eyes, didn’t trust what he saw was her and not just some hallucination, some figment of his cracked mind, playing a joke on him, giving him what he desire most in the world.

It took every ounce of will he possessed, but Jack couldn’t stop the tears that very slowly crept from the corners of his eyes to make their way down his cheeks. They were tears of want, tears of rage, and desperation.

With a shaking hand, Jack reached out and grasped her face. He nearly broke down when he touched her.

She felt real.

Jack’s chin trembled with his heavy, raw emotions. He was torn between wanting to be happy, to believe it was her and angry that fate, the universe, fucking something was messing with him. He wanted to strangle her, while at the same time wanting to embrace her. He was having a hard time admitting it, but deep down he was terrified that she was only an illusion cooked up by his mind because he wanted her back so badly. If he could strangle himself he would...if she wasn’t real...he wasn’t sure what he would do, if he could handle having her so vividly here in front of him only to learn it was a trick of his mind.

*

Harley went very still when she felt the cool press of metal against her temple followed by the question--who was she?--asked in a voice that was so close to Jack’s that her heart nearly choked her as it leapt up in her chest to slam against her breast bone. Tears immediately stung her eyes and began to fall. It was him! He was alive, Jack...her puddin...the other half of her...he was alive!

It was Jack’s voice, slightly different, as if his vocal cords had been damaged, but as if he were holding something back, struggling with holding something in check. The voice was rougher, strained, but it was him, she knew it. She would know her puddin’s voice anywhere.

Her eyes rolled sideways and she stared at the man holding the gun to her temple. It was him, Jack, but like his voice, he was different. Jack’s skin was milk white like her own, all color washed away. His hair had turned green, a unique shade of green, and his eyes--there was something different about his eyes. These blue eyes were haunted, guarded and struggling to hold something back, but Harley knew it was her Jack, her puddin. She could also tell he was on the verge, teetering on the edge and one wrong move on her part would have a bullet ripping through her skull. He reached out slowly with his other hand, lifting the barrel of the gun away from her temple at the same time. He held her tightly, painfully, his fingers pressed into her cheek, his thumb against her jaw as he forced her head uncomfortably to the side, then turned her face the other way as he studied her features.

Harley said nothing, just she let him study her, his grip hard enough that she wouldn’t be surprised if he left bruises.

*

Jack stepped back, still holding his weapon on her, his other hand still pressed against the white skin of her face as he used his hold on her jaw to slowly pull her to her feet. She continued to remain quiet as she slowly stood up, though her bottom lip trembled and her icy blue eyes were huge. Harley was both scared and overwhelmed to see him but she could tell that Jack was a powder keg, ready to explode.
Jack very slowly released his hold on her and took a step back. He pulled the pistol’s muzzle away from her head, but held the weapon still trained on her. He angrily wiped the tears off his cheeks with his free hand.

“Strip,” he snarled, his lip curled with barely contained fury.

She didn’t hesitate. She pulled the dirty t-shirt over her head, then slipped the shorts down her legs.

Jack’s gaze roamed over her. He began to tremble again as he studied her. Her skin was white like his, bleached of all color, but there was still a hint of very pale pink at her nipples, a light dusting of colors between her legs, but the tattoos stood out distinctively against her white skin and there were lighter marks, scars from their time together, but it was the tattoos they had gotten together, the tattoos that marked her as his...his wife, his Harley, his heart.

His voice broke, his blue eyes were filled with longing and pain as he very softly murmured, his voice filled with confusion. “Harley?”

Harley’s bottom lip trembled more. He looked like her puddin, but different with his milk white skin, green hair and his eyebrows gone. More tears rolled down her cheeks as she spoke softly, as if saying his name would break the spell and he would vanish or it really wouldn’t be him. “Jack?”

Then she added more softly, her eyes wide with want, with fear, with pain that even though she had felt his touch, that somehow this would all vanish...a product of Ivy’s drugs, her own rattled psyche, the cruelty of the world. “Puddin?”

Jack dropped the gun and rushed to her. He grabbed her face in both of his hands. His mouth covered hers as he kissed her, tears falling freely down his cheeks. He shook with the intensity of his emotions. His hands dropped from her face to wrap around her body; she felt real in his arms, her skin soft, her body warm, her mouth, her tongue...his wife...

Harley made a soft sound of desperate want as his mouth covered hers. He was alive! Alive, her puddin was alive!

She reached up, her hands sliding through his hair, feeling the silky texture of his hair in her hands, between her fingers. Harley whimpered as she grabbed fistfuls of his hair in her hands, her kisses desperate, needy. She couldn’t stop herself from crying. He was alive! Her Jack was alive. She pressed harder against him, she needed to feel him, to know this was real.

Jack dropped to his knees continuing to kiss her in desperation and pulled her with him. If somehow this wasn’t real he didn’t care anymore. He wanted to die right now, in her arms! He could feel her against him, the warmth of her, the texture of her lips, her tongue against his. He could feel her body; but if she wasn’t real, it was a welcome final insanity...but as he continued to assault her mouth he knew this was reality.

He ran his hands over her, touching every inch of her skin that he could, assuring himself that he wasn’t imagining her, repeating to himself in his mind over and over, assuring himself, this was real...this was real. Jack bit her bottom lip hard enough to taste blood, as if he needed that reality to know this was happening.

Harley only made a slight sound, but it was a breathy gasp of pleasure when he bit her. She dropped her hands from his hair and began yanking at his tie, needing to do away with the clothing that separated him from her. She needed to feel him, feel his skin, touch him, touch him everywhere.

Jack yanked his jacket off, tearing the fabric in his desperation to get the garment off of his arms.
Harley’s fingers worked rapidly to undo the tie around his neck, but when she came to the vest and his dress shirt, she simply ripped them open, sent buttons flying across the room in every direction. They continued to attack each others mouths, unwilling to stop, unwilling to separate, their lips and tongues needed the constant, tangible contact. Jack kicked off his shoes while Harley yanked with small grunts of frustration at his belt, ripping his slacks open. Jack stood up, taking Harley with him as he wrapped one arm around her waist and hauled her off the floor at the same that that he shoved his pants and boxers down, kicking them off as he held her against him. He needed the contact with her, needed to feel her body pressed against his and he was unwilling to let her go.

Harley wrapped her legs around him, grabbing fistfuls of Jack’s hair again as she savagely kissed him, both of them panting and growling with desperate need. Jack deposited her on the couch, going down with her.

He grabbed a fistful of her hair and yanked her head back, attacking her throat with tongue and teeth. He groaned when he licked her, tasting her skin on his tongue, feeling her flesh against his own. He spread her legs, sliding one hand down between them. She was wet for him; his fingers pressed down on her clitoris and Harley arched off the couch nearly wailing with the pleasure of his tongue on her throat and his fingers rubbing against her. He attacked her breasts, biting, sucking, licking, rubbing his nose and cheeks over her at the same time he slid two fingers into her. Jack groaned loudly when his fingers became surrounded by the warm, wetness of his wife’s body. He hissed, dragging his tongue over her skin as he thrust his fingers into her.

Harley cried out, cradling Jack’s head against her, climaxing within seconds.

Jack continued to thrust his fingers into her, biting down on one breast before he sucked her nipple into his mouth. Harley gasped, crying both with pleasure and the overwhelming feeling of happiness that Jack was alive, that she had found him.

Jack removed his fingers sliding them against her one more time, rubbing her clitoris before he grabbed one of her legs and pulled the limb up onto his shoulder, in the next moment he slammed into her, burying his shaft deep into his wife.

They gasped together.

Harley wrapped her arms around him, holding on as Jack thrust hard and fast into her, slamming up against her with each thrust. His green hair dropped forward across his brow as he leaned into her. He grabbed her hair and held her head back, dragging his tongue along her jaw and over her mouth. They kissed hard, their bodies crashing together, fucking hard, as if afraid they would lose one another again, desperate to connect again, their need for each other was overpowering.

Jack grunted with each crash of his body into hers.

Harley grabbed his face between her hands, staring into his eyes as he mewled with pleasure. “I love you...I love you.”

Jack groaned, gasping for breath as he continued his hard, deep thrusts. “Harley...my girl...I love you…”

Harley’s eyes rolled back and she screamed her pleasure holding on to Jack.

Jack followed, grunting before he snarled, releasing inside her, crying out his pain and pleasure in one anguished sound of release.

He collapsed against her and lay on top of her panting, his head against her chest.
Harley breathed heavily stroking her fingers through his hair. His hair still felt thick, soft, only now it was green. She stared up at the ceiling, took shuddering breaths until she finally broke down and began to cry great aching sobs that made her entire body shudder.

“Jack…” Harley said his name softly between her tears.

“I’m here Harley.” Jack raised his head and smiled at her. “I’m here.” He gently cradled her face and covered her in butterfly kisses.

Harley returned his kisses stroking his hair back.

Jack smiled and kissed away her tears as best he could.

He eased her leg down and wrapped his arms around her, gathering her close and laid her head against his shoulder as he shifted. He rose up on one knee allowing himself to ease out of her before he stood, lifting her up with him. Harley wrapped her legs around his waist, her arms around his shoulders and laid her head against him. Jack held her close, cradling his wife against him before he carried her up the stairs to the room he hadn’t entered since his return.

Jack carried her through their bedroom and into the bathroom. He didn’t put her down, just balanced her as he leaned into the shower and turned on the water. He set her on her feet, taking the time to remove his shirt, vest and socks.

Harley made a small sound of protest, wrapping her arms around his waist laying her head on his shoulder while he finished undressing. He didn’t push her away, but smiled and wrapped an arm around her.

Once he was free of his clothing on one side, getting the shirt and vest off one arm, Jack quickly peeled away the rest of his clothing. He held her snugly against him as together they slipped under the water.

Soap, shampoo and conditioner were in the shower, replaced over the last month by Zsasz or someone else, or the same items that they had left when their both “died.” Jack wasn’t sure, but he didn’t care. He poured shampoo into his hand and began to wash Harley’s now ice white hair.

Harley smiled and raised her eyes, smiling into her husband’s blue eyes. She continued to gaze at him as she reached over and picked up the soap, never taking her eyes off of him as she lathered her hands before she began to gently rub the soapy lather over Jack’s chest.

Jack had his wife lean her head back into the stream of water, gently moving his hands over her hair to rinse the shampoo out before he applied the conditioner. He took the bar of soap from her, trading off with her so she could have the shampoo. She giggled softly as she stood on the tips of her toes to wash his now green hair.

Jack laughed softly, smiling at her. The more time he was with her, gazing at her, touching her, the more relaxed he became as it sank in that she was really here, she was alive and back with him; his hands rubbed in gentle soapy caresses over her breasts before he followed the curve of her body to her hips. He held her there staring at her for a long moment before he finally spoke.

“Where’ve you been Harley?” he asked when he could trust himself to speak without losing control of his emotions. His voice still broke and he was forced to blink back tears that fell regardless of his efforts, lost in the steady fall of water. He reached up to cup her face, slowly caressing her cheeks with his thumbs as he stared into her eyes.

“I thought I had lost you Harley…I thought…” he paused, took a heavy breath. “They told me…you were dead,” he intoned softly. His eyes roamed over her face, taking in every little detail that he could, from the soft curl of her lips, to the way her lashes curled slightly at the edges. He closed his eyes and leaned his forehead against hers. “I was dead without you Harls, just a shell without you.”

Harley trembled. He felt the vibration and opened his eyes, though he didn’t move away, his forehead still against hers, his hands cupping her pale, white face. Jack could see the tears mixing with the water on her face, slowly rolling down her cheeks. Her lips trembled as she spoke, the pain in her voice clear. “I...I jumped in after you puddin, after Bruce let you go. I...I couldn’t live without you Jack. I don’t want to live without you. There was no point in living without you.” Her blue eyes seemed to sparkle with the tears that pooled in the corners before overflowing to mix with the shower water on her face.

Jack leaned in and kissed her tenderly, gently lifting her face. Harley wrapped her arms around his shoulders and Jack pulled her closer. He brushed his lips against hers, his nose lightly stroked along hers as well, a smile danced lightly along his red lips. “I couldn’t live without you Harley…” His voice was a soft, deep purr as his tongue licked across her lips.

Harley swallowed. “I don’t remember much after that. Ivy...I mean...Pamela Isley is alive...she found me...cared for me…” Harley closed her eyes and swallowed. “She drugged me…”

She felt her husband stiffen, a slight twitch of his fingers where he held her face.

“I’m going to fucking kill her,” he hissed low and deadly.

Harley shook her head looking into his eyes. Jack’s eyes were so strange now she realized as she stared into them, too blue with flecks of white, like ice, mixed into the startling blue of his gaze. He blinked once and the illusion was gone, replaced by Jack’s normal--though still vivid--light blue gaze.

Harley said softly. “She was just trying to help me Jack, in the only way she could think of...by stopping me from thinking of you.”

Jack stared into her eyes and continued to rub her cheeks tenderly with his thumbs. “How did you end up here?”

She shrugged. “Once I realized what was happening...I didn’t know if you were alive, but I hoped that maybe if I had made it...maybe you...I had to know…” She smiled.

“But I found you…” Her bottom lip trembled again, but she smiled. “I found you.”

Jack smiled back at her as he rubbed the tip of his nose against hers. “You did.”

She grinned and reached up to touch his hair. “I like the hair.”

Jack laughed as he touched her wet hair. “I like yours too.”

Harley giggled. “Not too plain? I mean...white...really?”

Jack grinned and whispered as he licked her cheek. “White is my new favorite hair color.”

Harley grinned reaching up to caress his face, her fingertips brushed over where his eyebrows had been. She smiled her fingertip moved softly around his eyes.

“I’m not too hideous am I?” Jack asked with a slight laugh. There was a note in his voice, a hesitation that said he was truly worried she wouldn’t want him.
Harley smiled and whispered. “Puddin, you are beautiful.”

He laughed and wrapped his arms around her lifting her off her feet and spun her around with a loud shout. “MY GIRL!!” He laughed. “I have my girl back!!

Harley giggled looking down at Jack, stroked her hands through his wet green hair. “I missed you so much puddin.”

“Oh god Harley…” He lowered her down his body. “Harley...my pumpkin pie.” He giggled as he set her on her feet and kissed her. He reached behind her and turned off the water before he kissed her again.

Harley licked his chin before she took his hand stepping out of the circle of his arms. “Come on.”

He grinned letting her lead him out of the shower.

*

They tumbled into the bed.

Jack rolled onto his back pulling her with him as they kissed.

Harley sat on top of him and brushed his damp hair back from his face moving her mouth over his with a slow burning passion. Her tongue traced his red lips then down along his jaw. She stopped at his throat to trace a line down to his collarbone with her tongue. Harley dragged her hands along his torso, needing to feel his skin, the dance of bone and muscle under his flesh moving against her hands. She caressed his sides, his stomach marveling at the whiteness of his skin that now perfectly matched hers. Harley dragged her tongue along his stomach, the tips of her fingers cascaded down his stomach feeling the roll of muscle, the silken smooth feel of his skin.

Jack moaned and took a shuddering breath. “Harley...Harley.” He groaned. “I love you…”

He reached down to caress her hair wondering again if this was just a vivid dream, for a moment doubting the way she felt under his hands, the warm silk of her skin, the press of her breasts against his chest...what if this was an intricate hallucinate? He swallowed on the pain of his thoughts. If he woke and she had gone, he would kill himself he decided. He could not live in this world without her. He would just make sure he took Bruce--the Batman--with him.

He groaned loudly as Harley slid down between his legs, brushing her nose against him, then her lips. He caressed her hair looking down to watch her, the way she dragged her tongue over him, rubbing her face against his skin, worshiping, loving... when Harley slid lower and her tongue gilded, warm and wet over his scrotum, her lips pressed against him as she spread his legs further and Jack let out a loud, deep groan.

She sucked on him, licking and mouthing his scrotum. She wanted, needed to explore every part of him, she never wanted to forget what he tasted like, felt like...Harley spread his legs wider, her thumbs pressing into the tender flesh of his thighs before she leaned in and licked his scrotum again, then followed the flow of his legs, licking and nipping the long stretch of his muscled inner thighs before she came up on her knees and dragged her tongue up the satin length of his erection. She moaned as she grabbed him, wrapping her hand around the hardness of him so she could trace her lips with the satin head of his erection.

She loved the feel of him on her tongue, the way his shaft filled her mouth, the satin soft skin contrasting with his hardness. Harley rubbed his shaft against her cheek, dragging her lips along him, followed by her tongue before she pressed her lips around the tip of him. Her tongue played along... the slit at the top, tasting a hint of the warm salty flavor of her husband. When Jack groaned in response, stroking her hair back from her face, Harley smiled.

Harley wrapped her lips around him, grasping him with one hand before she lowered her mouth down on him. She moved her head slowly, up and down pressing her lips against him, her tongue sliding back and forth covering him in her saliva. She pulled her lips up, rolling her tongue along the tip of his erection, glancing up his body to meet his gaze with a glimmer in her eyes before she slid her tongue down him again, going lower, sliding back on her stomach again and opening her mouth wide to lick his scrotum before she slid her tongue back up again.

Jack’s eyelids fluttered, his fingers tangled in her hair as Harley ran her tongue slowly up and down him. He arched his hips into her attentions, stroking her long white hair back as he leaned up to watch her, a bright smile on his face. He loved watching the way his erection disappeared into her mouth, the way her tongue felt against him, the curve of her lips...

Harley looked up at him and smiled in return, rolling her tongue over the head of his erection before she very gently dragged her teeth over the head of his shaft.

Jack hissed. “Come here Harls, turn around.”

She grinned and did as he requested.

Jack grinned hooking his arms around her legs and ran his hands up her thighs and over her ass. He gazed up at her skin, pale pink surrounded by creamy white. He licked his lips before pulling her down to him, pressing his mouth to her sex, his fingers pressing into her soft skin and groaned as he tasted his wife on his tongue. He ran his hands over her ass and down her sides feeling the silken soft touch of her skin under his fingers, the sweet roll of her curves. He traced her spine with his fingertips then lazily dragged his nails back down her back while kissing her sex, his tongue rolled and twisted slowly, tenderly lathering her in his saliva as he teased her. He squeezed her rear with both hands and pressed her down to move his mouth more thoroughly over her.

Harley groaned. His lips and tongue felt like heaven against her. She tugged one hand under his thigh while she continued to slowly bob her head, her lips pressed against him sucking slowly, gently, her one hand around him stroked up and down in time to her bobbing head. She loved the feel of him in her mouth, the little sounds he made the vibrated up her body, the grunts and groans of his pleasure, the way his hips thrust up to meet her lips. She squeezed her eyes tight as tears threatened again. She was so happy, so beyond any simple emotion like love. What she felt for him swallowed her whole, consumed her. He was more than simply the man she loved, he was everything, Jack was part of her on a level no one could understand. Her emotions were so intense she couldn’t hold them back as tears slowly formed under her lashes to drop against his skin. Jack moaned pressing his mouth more firmly to his wife’s sex. To feel his wife’s body pressed against his, her mouth warm, her lips firmly wrapped around his member, her sex on his tongue, and the shudders of her body. He groaned again. She tasted so good on his tongue. Jack dragged his tongue across her enjoying the way her clitoris felt against his tongue, velvety soft, the sweet taste of her flooding his senses...the way she opened to him...

Jack tightened his embrace around her legs and pulled her down more firmly, slipping his tongue inside her at the same time. He felt as well as heard the vibration of her moan ripple up his body. He made a soft groan of pleasure, sliding his hands up her torso again, feeling the slope of her back, the flare of her hips, the silk of her skin. She was alive...his girl was alive...this couldn’t be an illusion...it just couldn’t be told himself.

He pulled back only slightly to catch a breath before he attacked her sex more vigorously as the overwhelming joy of having her flooded him. Harley was alive! It was as if he needed to keep reminding himself that she was here, even with his tongue and lips pressed against her sex, he needed to tell himself this was real.

Jack flicked his tongue into her just as he felt her climax, tasting her burst of pleasure on his tongue, feeling the rumble of her groan around his member. He latched onto her, sucked and licked at her wanting to taste every bit of her pleasure, until Harley released him to gasp for breath. He grinned when he heard her panting, but he kissed her sex one more time.

Jack released her with a gasp. “Harley...uh...come here.”

She turned around to face him and he was struck by just how much more beautiful she had become, with her white skin and snow white hair a contrast to the drab world of Gotham, her blue eyes seem to burst from her face. They were clear, soft blue and he could see the love in them clear and beautiful. She was his angel.

Harley almost immediately lowered herself down on him, moaning as she felt him penetrate her. Her body grabbed hold of Jack, the feeling at the same time new and wonderfully familiar. She dropped down and ran her hands over his face, licking his chin and lips as she caressed his face, stroking his hair back as she kissed him, tasting herself on his tongue.

Jack caressed her sides, reaching down to grab her rear as she rolled her body, sliding up and down in shorts bursts. He reached up to caress the back of her neck guiding her mouth to his each time she pulled back. He needed her so badly he thought as he thrust in sensual jerks of his hips. He grinned and waggled his non-existent eyebrows at her, which caused Harley to giggle as she rubbed her nose against his, nipping at his lips, playing with his green hair as she cradled his head.

Jack flicked his tongue against her mouth at the same time he grabbed hold of her, keeping himself buried in her as he sat up.

Harley laughed, wrapping her arms around his shoulders. Jack held her to him and shifted up onto his knees. Once he was settled, Harley dropped back onto her hands smiling at him as Jack ran his hands up to her breasts, squeezing them before he slid his hands back down again. He leaned in to kiss each breast. Harley dropped her head back with a sigh of pleasure. Jack’s mouth moved over her nipples, his tongue flicking out to play with each one causing a shiver of pleasure that was almost too much to bear.

Harley moaned. “Puddin…”

Jack sat back and began to move again, thrusting in and out of her slowly for a few moments. He pressed his lips together watching the way he disappeared into her, the way her body looked, sprawled on her back. Jack thrust a little harder, panting as he caressed her hips with his fingertips. He caused the bed to bounce as he began to thrust a little more vigorously, spreading his legs wider and grabbed her knees, holding her legs wide. His blue eyes took in the way he moved in and out of his wife, their two pale bodies coming together. Jack hissed with pleasure, arching his back.

He slid one hand down her leg while the thumb of his other hand brushed tenderly over her clitoris. Harley jerked and gasped, made Jack smile He continued to brush the pad of his thumb over her, alternating that touch by thrusting into her.

Harley groaned loudly, dragging her hands along his chest and stomach marveling at him, smiling with pure joy before she reached up and grabbed his face to pull him down to her and kissed him passionately.

Jack shifted his arms around to cradle her head as he thrust into her with more force, wanting, needing to bury himself as deeply as possible into her while they kissed. He wrapped his arms tight around her, holding her close. They looked into each others eyes, nipping, brushing their lips against each other, their tongues flicking and sliding together, there was nothing in the world but the two of them.

Jack purred brushing his nose against hers. “My girl.”

Harley stroked his mouth with her lips, then her tongue as she panted. “Puddin…”

Harley’s eyes widened. She felt that building warmth rush up and peak before bursting over her. Her breath caught. She climaxed, her entire body responding to the flood of pleasure with a loud groan that was followed by the roll of pleasure that began small then seemed to burst like a wave, breaking across her, consuming her when she came.

Tears sprang to her eyes as she moaned. “My puddin!”

Jack caught her mouth in a deep kiss, his hands sliding up to cradle her head, fingers tangling in her white hair. He thrust hard, deep, pressing and arching into her, needing to be part of her, needing the depth of their connection to be made physical. Her body tightened around him, pulling him deeper...that was the moment that Jack came, his pleasure, his love, his need for her ripped from him to flood into her, his cries muffled against her lips. Jack kissed her hard riding out his orgasm while Harley clung to him, her arms wrapped tight around her lover as she started to cry.

Jack held on tightly to her. “Don’t cry sweets, don’t cry. I’m here.”

Harley smiled. “That’s why I’m crying.”

Jack looked down at her with a slightly confused look in his blue eyes. Harley brushed his hair back from his face gazing at him with such love in her eyes that Jack felt tears at the corner of his eyes as he smiled down at her. No one had ever loved him like this...like her.

Harley gazed at his hair, her eyes traveling down his features, tears flowing freely from her eyes. “I love you Jack, my puddin, I love you so much I can’t ever express it. When I thought you were gone I just didn’t want to live any more. I love you so much.”

Jack smiled gently wiping her tears with his fingers. “I love you Harley. You will always be my girl. My heart. My harlequin. We will always be together. They will never tear us apart and if they try, we’ll rip out their throats.”

Harley smiled despite the fact she was still crying as she pulled him down for another long, lingering and passionate kiss.

Jack smiled against her lips, holding her tightly. He was never letting her go he told himself, never.

*

Harley sighed, content. She was curled in the crook of Jack’s arm, her head nestled against his shoulder and chest. Jack smiled down at her and stroked her hair back from her face. He kept staring at her as if he couldn’t get enough of looking at her.

Harley felt the same. She didn’t want to stop gazing at her husband. She reached out and traced his lips with the tip of her finger. “They are so red now.”

Jack grinned. “You like it?”
She nodded. “Mm...yes. With a little lipstick we can make your lips even redder, like blood,” she said softly. “Then bring out the darkness around your eyes…” She grinned.

Jack laughed nuzzling her nose. “You always have the best ideas.”

She giggled, pleased and whispered while her fingers stroked his cheekbones. “You are so handsome Jack.”

He lifted a hairless brow at her. “You still think so?”

She nodded with a smile. “Definitely, the pale white skin makes your beautiful eyes pop even more, and your hair is always gorgeous. I like green.” She smiled seductively and purred. “My new favorite color.” She emphasized her point by licking his lips.

He grinned a little lopsided, clearly pleased with his wife’s praise. He kissed her slowly, tenderly, letting the gesture communicate the depth of his feelings.

Harley snuggled closer and wrapped her arm around his waist as they kissed. He pulled back just a little and rubbed his nose against hers. “My creamy beauty.”

Harley giggled.

They were both quiet for a little while, Jack caressing her face dragging his nose and lips along her cheek and up into her hair when Harley murmured. “So where is everyone else? The gang?” she asked.

Jack kissed her forehead before he laid back on the pillows and Harley moved to lay her head against his chest. She smiled hearing his heartbeat against her ear. Jack looked up at the ceiling as he spoke. “No one knows where Bane is exactly. There have been rumors of his location. Apparently he went into my lab after I died and destroyed everything, which both pisses me off and is actually quite touching.” Jack grinned. “But something happened to him. Frost said he had heard from Jason that Bane...changed. Not sure what that means, I’ll have to ask Jason, but no one is sure what exactly happened after that.” Jack kissed her forehead as he continued to speak. “I’m sure with Alex’s help we can find him.”

Jack pursed his lips then. “Let’s see what else...Ah, Jason has taken over being the Red Hood and from what Zsasz has told me he is doing a good job with Trope and Thea helping him. Agatha is still healing and she doesn’t know either of us is alive yet. Alex, Zsasz and Frost know, however. Duela is missing. Oh, and I have some new friends for you to meet my sweets, the people who dragged me from my acid grave and took care of me. I brought them all here, new members of our little family.”

Harley squeezed him. “If they saved my puddin then they are more than welcome.”

Jack chuckled shifting to face her again. He kissed her, his lips trailing from her mouth to cheek, nibbling slowly. He smiled to himself. He couldn’t seem to stop touching her, kissing her and he didn’t want to. He wanted to spend days like this in bed with her. Too bad they had work to do he thought.

After a little bit, Jack settled back again, his nose and lips against her ear, Harley asked. “What do you want to do puddin?”

Jack caressed her hair, pressing another kiss to her forehead.

She could feel the smile on his lips against her face. She closed her eyes enjoying the feel of her husband, her puddin...He used the fingers of his arm she was lying on to gently stroke through her silky soft locks. “I want to contact them all. Bring them here so we can talk. Things are about take a turn in a very interesting direction. But I think first, I want to find Bane.”

He was quiet for a little bit before he turned to lean up on his elbow to look down at her. Harley shifted position to get comfortable against her husband.

Jack smiled as he dragged his fingertips along her breasts. “I did something tonight I’m not sure how you’ll feel about it,” Jack said quietly.

Harley frowned as she reached up to stroke the locks of green hair that had fallen around his face back, though they refused to stay in place. “What is it?” she asked.

Jack pressed his lips together, then said softly. “I burned down Wayne Manor. I wanted Bruce to know that I’m coming after him. I thought…” Jack closed his eyes. “I was angry for him killing me…” Jack opened his eyes as he snarled. “He threw me away...like trash...but the worst part was coming back only to learn that he had taken you from me Harley...he tried to destroy me and everything I loved. I cannot let that stand. Bruce wants to be the good guy? The hero? Well I’m going to become his worst nightmare. Every hero needs a villain.” Jack’s lip curled.

Harley was quiet. Jack, who had cast his gaze down as he spoke, looked over at her only to see her glaring. Her gaze met his. “Good. I just wish I could have been there.”

Jack’s lips quirked into a grin. “That’s my girl,” he whispered before he kissed her. Harley giggled and wrapped her arms around him returning his kiss. When Jack pulled away, only to rub his nose against her, she asked quietly. “What about Alfred?”

Jack let out a breath. He took her hand and kissed her palm before he answered. “I got him out.”

Harley looked relieved. Whatever hatred she felt toward Bruce and that little shit sidekick of his, didn’t extend to Alfred. “Do you think he knows about Bruce being Batman?” she asked while she stroked his chest with the back of her fingers from her other hand, smiling as Jack continued to kiss her palm, then her fingers. He kissed the tip of each finger before he answered her.

“Oh, I think he does.”

Harley frowned. “Did he tell you?”

Jack laughed. “No, but Bruce couldn’t have kept a secret that big without some help.”

Harley looked sad at this. She had hoped that somehow Alfred wasn’t part of Bruce’s little Batman game. She had hoped he was innocent, but now...she felt like a stone had been dropped into her heart, where it would fester. She wasn’t sure if Jack forgave Alfred, but if Alfred knew about the Batman, Harley wasn’t sure she could forgive him for lying to Jack this whole time. She sighed mentally and put her feelings on the matter aside; at least for now.

Harley continued to frown as she traced the tattoo that ran along Jack’s shoulder. Her fingers skimmed along the outline of the cards as Jack spoke. “Bruce doesn’t trust me, never has. I’m too unstable.” Jack grinned at her. “But I’ve seen the shit Batman used first hand and in the news. No, Bruce has help.” His eyes went slightly flat. “Which makes his betrayal that much worse. He could share this with Alfred and god knows who else, but not his own brother? Because I’m fragile?
Unstable? Well, now I’m going to show him just how unstable I can be. I’m going to bring chaos to Gotham.” He turned her hand around and kissed the back of her fingers. “Bruce wants to run around playing superhero, the white knight of Gotham? Trying to save everyone...but me.” Jack’s voice dropped to a whisper when he said “me.” Harley could hear the pain in Jack’s voice. Her heart ached for her lover. She understood how he felt, being betrayed by someone you loved. Her thoughts drifted momentarily to her mother, betraying Harleen for her stepfather. Harley pushed the thought away to focus on her husband.

Jack continued to speak, his eyes looking off into the distance. Harley knew he was speaking more to himself, to Bruce than to her. “I’m going to be the dragon to Bruce’s knight, a villain to fight, an equal who represents everything he isn’t.” Jack’s voice dropped. “I’ll be the villain of his dreams, a shadow within his shadow...the tumor lurking in his soul.” Jack giggled. “He hides behind his pursuit of justice like it hides all his sins.” Jack giggled again. Harley stroked his face. Jack kissed the tips of her fingers as they passed over his lips. He giggled again, the sound close to hysterical, but he pulled the sound back as he hissed through his teeth. “He tried to take everything from me, from us Harley. He tried to destroy who I was for as long as I can remember...but now...” He grinned. “You and I have come through death and out the other side! We are both reborn! Baptized and stripped away into something new. Batman created us, so I think we need to show him exactly what he created.” Jack grinned down at her.

Harley giggled snuggling close with a nod. “So, where do we start?”

Jack frowned in thought. “Mm...the house was just the prologue, burning away the past, destroying the old to create something new. I think now Gotham and the Batman need to be introduced to the new us.”

Harley frowned in thought. “What about Falcone?”

Jack’s eyes narrowed slightly, followed quickly by his smile. “You know Harls, I think I just might have a couple of ideas.”

She grinned. “I knew you would.”

Jack laughed and kissed the top of her head. “Thank you sweets. But first I think we should focus on getting our merry band of miscreants back together, starting with Bane.”

*

It wasn’t until the morning that Bruce was able to finally speak with Alfred as Bruce Wayne. It had taken a great deal of time to slip into the cave, make sure everything was secure, that the remains of the house were not going to collapse into the batcave; then to arrange arriving back in Gotham with his ward, meeting with police, detectives, insurance...the press. That had been followed with moving into his apartment (which occupied the entire top floor of the Fitzroy building, a Gothic art deco building of black and gold in the heart of the Diamond district) that he kept in downtown Gotham, purchasing a new wardrobe for Dick, himself, and Alfred (who also had his own, smaller apartment on the same floor). By the time he had found space to breathe, it was quite late.

Dick had eaten an entire pizza by himself after Bruce had simply decided that dinner should be a simple affair (plus caving into the wishes of a perpetually starving teenage boy who said he would die without pizza). Dick had gone to his room and promptly passed out. While it worried at Bruce not to go out tonight onto the streets of Gotham, he needed to speak to Alfred about what had really happened last night.

Bruce sat on the balcony of his apartment. He could see Robinson Park from his vantage, the lights of the Diamond district and hear the dull hum of late night Gotham traffic.

Bruce didn’t drink much. He didn’t like the effects of alcohol on his system, but tonight he made an exception. He had two Pimm’s Cup drinks sitting on the table, one in front of him and the other waiting in front of the empty chair across from him. Bruce picked up his drink, using the straw to lightly turn the slices of lemon and lime around with the ice before he took a sip. He heard the door of the apartment open behind him and the nearly silent steps as Alfred approached sliding open the door and stepping onto the balcony.

“Master Bruce,” Alfred said softly.

Bruce smiled and looked up at his old friend, then gestured at the seat across from him and the drink. Alfred smiled ever so slightly and took the offered seat. Bruce took a sip of his drink before he set the glass down. “I ordered these from the restaurant below. They’re not bad.”

Alfred gave a curious frown as he picked up the drink and took a sip through the straw. He smiled. “Not as good as my brother Wilfred use to make, but acceptable.”

Bruce laughed softly before his expression became grim. “All right, what exactly happened last night?”

Alfred frowned, and Bruce noticed that his eyes took on a haunted. Bruce watched his old friend, his mentor with concern. He could see that Alfred had aged since last night; there were dark circles under his eyes and shadows in his cheeks.

Alfred spoke softly with barely controlled emotion in his voice as he was finally able to share the burden of his knowledge that he had carried with him since last evening. “It was Master Jack.”

Bruce’s eye widened ever so slightly, his voice was hushed with astonishment. “What?”

Alfred met Bruce’s eyes. “It was your brother Jack, Master Bruce.”

“It couldn’t have been!” Bruce shook his head. “I watched him die Alfred...I let him go...he fell into the acid...”

Alfred shook his head. “He’s alive Master Bruce. He...he doesn’t look the same, but it was him.”

Bruce frowned. “Doesn’t look the same?”

Alfred shuddered. Anyone else wouldn’t have noticed the slight tremble that ran through the older man’s body but Bruce did, it was small, but he saw it clearly. Alfred picked up his drink and took a long sip and swallowed before he spoke. “His skin...he looks as if his skin has been stripped of all color--white, like a ghost. His lips were red, his eyebrows were gone, burned away by the acid I suppose, I don’t know, but he still had his hair, but the color...it was green.”

Bruce stared at Alfred as if the other man had grown a second head. “Green. Alfred, are you sure...”

Alfred looked across the table at Bruce. His gazed wasn’t accusatory, he didn’t glare at Bruce for his doubts, he just looked old and sad Bruce noted.

“It was him Master Bruce, there is no doubt. I should think I would recognize the boy I helped to rear into a man.” Alfred frowned and stared down at the drink. “He said that Harley was dead.”

Alfred took a breath. “He cried on my shoulder when he told me.” Alfred swallowed, the pain he was feeling clear in the hunch of his shoulders. “He wanted you to know that burning down the manor was just the beginning. He talked about creation, destruction, starting new and about giving you what you want Master Bruce. He knows your secret now and he told me to tell you that he was coming for you.” Alfred looked up. “He said you created him, created a monster and that he was now going to be the monster you always worried he would become.”
Bruce felt a cold chill race up his spine. “He’s alive--my brother is alive.”

Bruce wasn’t sure how he should feel. He hated that part of him wasn’t happy. Relieved, maybe in some small part of him, was relieved that he hadn’t murdered his brother, but Bruce knew that regardless of Jack surviving, his intent had still been the same, to let Jack die. Bruce felt a coldness in the pit of his stomach that spread out, sending tendrils of ice through him. He didn’t know if it was fear, regret, or maybe something darker, something that Bruce didn’t want to explore. Jack had been driving him to the edge of tolerance for as long as Bruce could remember, always pushing, pushing and never falling into line, never acting or reacting with anything that Bruce considered normal. Jack was almost this side of insanity. There had been a strong sense of relief when he had finally been able to commit Jack to Arkham, a sense of relief that he hadn’t spent time analyzing...probably because he didn’t want to analyze his feelings in regards to Jack. He knew his feelings were twisted up with anger, anger that their parents left them, left Bruce to deal with Jack and his instability, anger at his brother for just not acting like Bruce thought he should, and anger at himself for never being able to simply accept Jack, help him, be there for him. Instead he had focused on his chosen course, to cure...to save Gotham. Bruce wondered if Jack’s behavior was partially his fault. It was not the first time he had wondered if he had helped in pushing Jack...

Bruce dismissed his thoughts and instead he focused on the now. It was better to leave those feelings alone for now, perhaps to be explore later, perhaps to be sealed away. Bruce didn’t know. All he did know was that he couldn’t distract himself with “what ifs.”

“What else did he say Alfred?” Bruce asked as he idly shifted his drink around.

Alfred shook his head. “That was pretty much it sir, that he will be coming for you.”

Bruce moved the straw in his glass. He wasn’t sure why he was doing it, but he needed something to focus part of his attention as he asked, hating himself for asking like this but still...

Bruce pursed his lips. “Coming for me?”

Alfred nodded. “Not only does he blame you for what happened, he blames you for Miss Harley’s death. He says you have created your own monster Master Bruce, that he is going to be your monster.”

Bruce felt the cold spread a little more.

“What do you think he will tell my secret?” Bruce looked over at Alfred.

Alfred shook his head. “No, I don’t believe so Master Bruce. I was given the distinct impression that revealing your alternate identity was not part of his plan.”

Bruce frowned, he really didn’t know how he felt when Alfred said softly. “I also wanted to tell you that I’m leaving.”

Bruce’s head snapped up. “What?”

Alfred took a sip of his drink, his eyes downcast before he looked up and met Bruce’s gaze. “I can’t do this, not right now at least.” Alfred closed his eyes, clearly in pain. “I raised you both as best I could. I love Jack, Bruce, as if he was my own son. Just like I love you.” Alfred opened his eyes again. “You are both my boys. Jack is in pain Bruce, he’s been in pain since the moment your parents died. Harleen brought him happiness, brought him back from the brink he was teetering on. But...” Alfred sniffed. “I need to step away Bruce. I don’t want to see what is about to happen...not now. I don’t know if ever.” He squeezed his eyes close. “I don’t know if my heart can take it Bruce.
This...I know this isn’t going to end well for either of you.”

Bruce stayed silence sensing that Alfred needed a moment to gather himself. Bruce wanted to yell, to protest, to scream...he felt like that child he had been when his parents died, alone, abandoned, lost. He had always known he needed Alfred, but not until this moment did he really understand how much.

“All... please... please don’t go.” Bruce voice was small. He was a child again asking for his daddy to stay, not to go out on a call, not to go to the hospital again and leave them alone...not to die...not to abandon him and Jack to the darkness…

Alfred reached across the table and took Bruce’s hand. “I have to Bruce. I can’t….” He sighed looking old, looking tired. “I’ve wiped both you and your brother’s tears. I’ve held you both. I’ve set bones and bandaged wounds, but I can’t bury both of you...either of you. You are both my boys. I can’t...please don’t ask me to stay and watch this. I need a rest.”

Bruce seized on the line Alfred had thrown him. “A rest, yes. You need rest, a long vacation, away from Gotham.”

Alfred smiled softly. “Bruce, when you started this, when we started this, your mission, our mission was clear. But now...with Jack...” Alfred took a sip of his drink, letting the alcohol push him to continue. “You turned Jack...you’ve set your brother on a path of violence. You didn’t see him Bruce. He is unhinged...there is still...he is still the little boy who chased after you, but dropping him Bruce, you’ve thrown him away Bruce, proved to Jack that he isn’t important to you. You know Jack was always trying in his way to get your attention. His acting out, his misbehavior, his...crazed behavior as you were both growing up has always been about you.” Alfred looked at Bruce with such pain in his eyes that Bruce felt it. Alfred whispered. “You were always pushing him away, focused on your mission. But Jack, he always was trying to get you to see him. Jack loves you Bruce, even after you let him...” Alfred’s voice cracked. “Even after you sacrificed him, I can see he still loves his brother, but it's become twisted Bruce. You took something precious from him, you took the one person that Jack felt loved him as he was...Dr. Quinzel. She loved him completely regardless of his bad behavior, regardless of what he did she loved him, she saw him...she was his rock in the storm. Now that you let him go, and you let her die, I’m scared of what this Jack will do...he doesn’t just want to hurt you for hurting him Bruce, he wants to destroy you, slowly. You turned his love to hate and he hates you as much as he loves you.”

Bruce felt a chill roll over him at Alfred’s words.

Alfred pushed himself to his feet. “I’ve booked on a flight to London leaving in the morning. I...I haven’t decided if I will come back...”

Bruce stood. “Alfred please...!”

Alfred smiled, walked around the table and pulled Bruce in his arms. The older man hugged him tightly, surprising Bruce.

Alfred spoke softly. “Just...I enabled you, allowed you to ignore your brother, hoping that at one point you would see that you needed him, that he could be a value to you, but now...I just can’t stand here and watch you both destroy yourselves.” Alfred shook his head. “I failed you both. I’m sorry.”

Bruce blinked back a tear as he whispered. “No, I failed you...and I failed Jack. My obsession with crime blinded me. I didn’t see what I was doing...to you both. I can change...try to reach Jack...”

Alfred stepped back his hands on Bruce’s shoulders. “A father is the one who guides Bruce, not the other way around. I don’t know if you can reach Jack anymore Bruce...try, for my sake, your own...and most importantly, for Jack, you have to try and reach him, but I fear it may be too late.”

Alfred turned and walked back into the apartment. He stopped mid step and turned around. “Before I leave, I wanted to give you this.”

Bruce reached out and took a card on which Alfred had written a name and a number. “Her name is Barbara Pennyworth, my niece. She is in Blüdhaven, but she has been thinking about moving to Gotham. She is a computer expert. You are going to need someone to watch your back Master Bruce, you and Master Dick both. I suggest you call her and meet.” Alfred sighed and turned. He walked to the door and left without another word.

Bruce watched him leave feeling lost and helpless.

*

Frost arrived at the park with Agatha, a frown firmly in place on his features. He hadn’t slept much last night, his thoughts on Jack, the manor. He had wanted to tell Agatha everything that had happened, and he hated lying to her, telling her that he had gone to a poker game with Alex that had ended badly. He could tell she suspected there was something more, but Agatha didn’t push him for an answer. She had simply nodded, but now...Jack had called and asked him to bring his aunt over to the park, but not to tell her he was alive yet. Jack wanted to tell her himself. Frost didn’t like it, but he had told Agatha that Zsasz had something to talk to the both of them about. She had looked suspicious, but had agreed to go.

Agatha had remained quiet the entire drive and he didn’t press. She looked lovely if pale, dressed in a pair of slim cut white slacks, an emerald, sleeveless blouse, her hair styled to frame her face and a pair of white tennis shoes. He could tell she was irritated with him by the lines that pulled around the edges of her lips but she said nothing.

He pulled up and parked in front of the house that had been Jack’s and Harley’s hopping out to open the door for Agatha.

When he came around to open the door he saw that Agatha was staring at the house, a haunted, sad look in her eyes. She hadn’t said much since her first break down over Jack’s and Harley’s death, but Frost knew it hurt her, continued to gnaw at her. She felt that maybe, if she had been there, she could have done something to prevent it. He frowned and suppressed a sigh. He hated seeing her in pain, but he opened the door and took her hand, helping her out.

They walked to the house and Frost knocked.

They both heard Jack’s voice from inside. “Come in!!”

Agatha had gone pale, all the color fleeing from her face. She looked at Frost. “What?”

Frost smiled a little and pushed the door open, holding it for her. Agatha stepped in with Frost following. He nearly bumped into her as Agatha had halted just a step inside. Sitting on the couch, both of them sitting forward and playing a game of cards on the coffee table in front of them—which also held a bottle of whiskey with two glasses, some cheese and crackers scattered across its polished surface. Harley was wearing a dark red button down shirt of Jack’s, unbuttoned to the middle of her chest, the sleeves rolled up and a pair of pink panties; her legs were bare, her white hair brushed back and held loose at the nape of her neck. Jack was sitting next to her wearing a pair of black slacks and another button down shirt of emerald green, a shade or two darker than his hair, the sleeves rolled up like Harley’s, only two buttons held the shirt together in the middle of his stomach. Both of them were barefoot, their snow white skin clear and undeniable.
He looked up with a bright smile against his red lips, his blue eyes unnaturally bright.

“Auntie!”

Agatha screamed.

*

Frost walked over and handed Agatha a glass of straight whiskey he had poured for her. She took the glass and downed the contents in one swallow before handing it back to him.

“Another honey, please,” Agatha asked.

Frost smiled and walked back over to the pour her another glass of the dark amber liquid. Agatha stared at the both of them taking the drink from Frost without turning to look at him.

“I just...I don’t understand…” she said softly, clearly still processing the situation.

Jack laughed. He leaned back on the couch, his arms draped across the back of the piece of furniture, his legs crossed, a cigarette dangling from between his fingers with Harley curled beside him, nestled against him. She sat with her legs tucked under her as she leaned against Jack, playing with the cards by shuffling them.

Jack lazily brought his cigarette to his lips, took a deep drag and held it for the count of ten before he blew out the smoke with a smile. “Bruce...Batman…” Jack giggled. “Dropped me into a vat of acid to kill me. Then Harley jumped in after me.” He glanced down at Harley who looked up at him, her eyes soft, full of love and devotion. Jack’s gaze reflected the same emotions, complete devotion, love, obsession. He wrapped his other arm around her shoulders and pulled her closer still. Harley smiled snuggling against him before she smiled at Agatha.

Agatha said softly, clearly upset. “I’m still having trouble wrapping my mind around the fact that Bruce is Batman...and he let you go...dropped you.”

Jack watched his aunt through the cloud of cigarette smoke. “Well, he did.”

“And, your skin...your hair?” Agatha gestured with her glass at both of them.

Jack glanced at Harley again and grinned. “We were reborn.” He made the statement as if it were simple.

Agatha frowned. “It’s a miracle.”

Jack nodded. “Yes, yes it is. I’m taking Harley’s and my resurrection from the ashes...or acid of our deaths…” Jack laughed and continued, “as a sign.”

“A sign?” Agatha asked.

Jack glanced at Harley who giggled. “We are going to bring some chaos to the lay people, but first--as I told Alfred--creation is an act of destruction. And since Bruce created me...the new me and now with my Harley at my side, we are going to create something new for him. Harley and I will create art! And the task of art is to bring chaos to order...so that is what we are going to do. A new Gotham with a villain to match it’s new face. Besides, I owe Bruce...I owe him for taking everything from me...so I’m going to take everything from him…” Jack’s voice dropped. “Everything.”

Jack took a drag on his cigarette and chuckled. “But first, I want to teach our friend Falcone about ghosts.”

Agatha stared at Jack. She wasn’t sure how she felt. Jack and Harley had returned from the dead and Bruce was Batman. Her eyes widened slightly. What would the Owls do if they learned any of this?

She felt a chill run down her spine.

*

Jack had told his aunt that the first thing he wanted to do was to get his gang back together and part of that was finding Bane.

That evening Jack and Harley were lying in bed together naked. Harley smiled content, her body felt warm, loose, relaxed after making love with her husband again. She sighed, her husband...her life had been destroyed, then restored to her. Jack was right—he was always right she mused as she watched him. They had been given a second chance, raised from the depths of the acid like angels...she smiled. Jack was her angel.

She sat up to watch him with the cards. Jack swiftly and skillfully divided the cards into three smaller stacks, twisting them around with his long fingers in what looked to be a complicated pattern as he held the cards with his fingers before sliding them easily and smoothly into the desk.

Harley clapped, which made Jack laugh. Though it was clear he was pleased with her admiration, he was just pleased with just having her beside him.

He immediately began to show off, doing card tricks with more flourish when the phone that Frost had brought over for Jack when he had also brought Jack’s aunt, went off with a low buzz. Jack frowned, quickly sliding the cards back into a deck which he handed to Harley. She laid back against his side and began to play with the cards trying to duplicate Jack’s tricks.

Jack picked the phone up. “Darling, you have to stop calling me at home, my wife's getting suspicious.”

Harley turned to glare at Jack while Alex, who had called muttered. “I see the acid didn’t burn away your ability to tell very corny jokes. How the fuck are you two?”

(Jack had called Alex about Harley, nearly going deaf when Alex yelled with joy.)

“We’re fine Alex my darling, just fine. Naked in bed and...” Jack grinned watching Harley with the phone pressed against his ear while he was greeted on the other end with Alex yelling, “I don’t what to fucking know what you two are doing naked okay? I called ‘cause I have some good information.”

Jack laid back against the pillows. “Oh? On?”

Alex’s voice was low. “I just learned where Bane is.”

Jack sat up again. “You did?”

Alex replied. “You ain’t gonna fucking like it.”

Next to Jack Harley held up the joker from the deck of cards and studied it. The image on the card was of a white skinned man wearing a three cornered, black and purple jester’s hat with bells hanging on the corners of the hat. The jester’s hair until the cap where it stuck out was green and his eyes were blue.
Harley held the card up with a smile.

“Hey look puddin, it’s you. You’re the wild card, The Joker.”

Jack turned, the phone still to his ear and saw the card as Harley held it up. A smile spread slowly across his face.

“The Joker, eh?”
Getting the Band Back Together

First everything was green, a light shade that reminded her of summer. It was almost pretty. Then there was burning. That was all she was aware of...her entire existence was the sensation of burning, her skin being ripped from her, peeled like paper, flayed alive. She couldn’t scream because it was burning through her throat, melting her voice, shredding her lungs. That was when she realized the green surrounded her; it was everywhere and everything. She tried to reach the surface, but she couldn’t see with her vision boiled away…but instead of darkness she saw green. And it burned.

She reached out, her fingers moved through the soupy substance, straining for some sort of hold when a hand grabbed hers and hauled, yanking her through the burning liquid. She gasped, sucking in more of the toxic sludge around her. She could taste it, mixed with the blood of her melting mouth, oozing over her melting and dissolving body, but just as she thought all her existence would become agony, her vision returned and she saw him, her lover, her husband...Jack. Harley cried out, reaching for him. He smiled at her, his hand on her wrist tightened, he grabbed her shoulder with his other hand, pulled her through the burning liquid toward him. Harley opened her arms, pushing the pain aside; it didn’t matter because Jack was here...he was alive. If she could only get to him...

Just as she was close enough to touch him, just as her fingers brushed against his face, Jack’s smile began to melt, his blue eyes faded to gooey orbs, his teeth cracked and dissolved, flesh and blood mixed with the green ooze around her...

Harley screamed as her fingers sank into his flesh, blood and skin melting into a thick, noxious slime that ran down his features and flowed over her hand where she touched him. She watched Jack’s features dissolve, the bones of his face peeking through the ravaged flesh...the green acid melted away his lips, his tongue was full of burning holes.

Harley cried out. “JACK!! NO!!”

Harley woke up screaming herself hoarse. She thrashed around as she tried to escape the prison of her mind.

*

Jack lay naked in bed on his side watching Harley sleep. The sheets of their bed had slid down to her waist, revealing her milk creme skin. She laid on her side with her hands tucked under her cheek. He smiled watching her, his gaze following the smooth, pale curves of her body. There was just a little light coming in through the window, weak and silvery, but as the light caressed her snow white skin, she looked like she was made of silver, as if a faint glitter was under her skin. She looked unreal, ethereal. Jack pressed his teeth into his bottom lip as he reached out and traced her side with the tips of his fingers. He would never tire of gazing at her, he realized with a smile and reached out to brush his fingertips over her lips. He would have to wake her soon so they could shower and dress to go out tonight, to take the first steps in their fight against Bruce, against the Batman. It was time for them to rebuild what his brother tried to break, to destroy...

He was still having difficulty believing that she was here, alive. He found himself dreaming of losing her over and over again when he closed his eyes. He didn’t want to sleep, it had become so bad. Too many had intruded into their lives, tried--and often succeeded--in hurting them; Croc, Crane, Benjamin, and Bruce, among others. Jack sighed and stroked Harley’s hair. His wife looked like porcelain, unreal with her bleached out complexion, which made him fear that maybe she wasn’t truly here...that he was only imagining her being with him. He needed to constantly have a hand on her, or her body next to his so he could touch her, feel her, kiss her, to know that she was really here.
with him and not some figment he had conjured up. He hated to admit that he was unwilling to let her out of his sight, afraid she would disappear, vanish when he wasn’t looking.

He didn’t want his world to rip apart again and find out that he had been dreaming the entire time, that Harley was still really dead. Jack knew he couldn’t take another break like that, he couldn’t be without her, not again. He would put a gun to his head...

He smiled tenderly at her, letting his morbid thoughts go as he reached out to stroke a strand of white hair from her face. When he couldn’t sleep, he would watch her instead. He would pay close attention to her breathing, lean in close to smell her skin or just stare at her face, assuring himself that she was indeed real.

He was watching her, caressing her jaw when he noticed the slight frown at her lips, the crease in her brow. Her body began to twist as a vibration seemed to race through her, and her body jerked. His heart sank; he knew exactly what was about to happen. Harley cried out in pain, followed by a scream, a scream that came from deep within, torn from her as she lashed out. Jack grabbed her the moment she showed distress and yanked her hard against him, pressing her face against his chest. Harley struggled against him, fighting whatever her dreams had shown her, but he didn’t let go. He wrapped his arms tight around her and held her, his hands in her hair. Harley grabbed a hold of Jack, clawing at him for a few seconds until her waking mind began to catch up with her dreaming mind. She made a small gasp and threw her arms around him. Jack held on tightly to her. His fingers stroked gently over her hair. Harley was struggling to catch her breath as her body continued to tremble.

She choked out his name. “Jack?”

“Shh...I’m here Harley...I’m here. You’re safe.” He frowned as he kissed the top of her head. Harley began to cry, great sobs that wracked her entire body. Jack’s gaze narrowed. This--this pain was all Bruce’s fault...Harley’s pain was his brother’s doing.

Harley sobbed. “Jack...Jack...you died...you died...I can’t...”

She broke down, unable to speak as the tears took over. Jack tightened his hold on her.

“I’m here Harley. We’re both alive,” Jack whispered kissing her hair. He tilted her head up so he could look into her eyes. Her blue eyes were haunted, rimmed in red as she stared up at him. She reached up with shaking fingers to brush his cheek. “Jack?”

He smiled at her. “Yeah toots, it's me.”

She clung to him and began to cry again.

Jack frowned and his eyes stung with unshed tears. It hurt him to see her like this, to know how much pain she was in despite being back with him. She couldn’t sleep more than an hour or two without waking up screaming. It was almost exactly like when they had escaped from the asylum. That place stayed with them, was still with them both, haunting their sleep. Harley had been having fewer nightmares just before...Bruce. Jack’s lip curled when he thought of his brother, again, trying to destroy their lives, to take away Jack’s happiness. It was Bruce who threw him in Arkham, prompting Harley to commit herself. It was Bruce who threw his little brother away like trash and caused his girl to jump in after him...it was all Bruce. It angered Jack that now their deaths had replaced those asylum nightmares with a new ones, and again, it was all because of Bruce. Jack rested his chin on Harley’s head as he continued to stroke her hair and whisper soft words to her. He was having the same issue. Sleep would only come in fits and starts and when it did come, his sleep was plagued with nightmares too, nightmares of pain that were twisted with images of losing Harley, of having to watch her die over and over even though he had not been there to witness her death--his mind had no difficulty in coming up with visual solutions to that lack, to plague his sleeping mind.

It appeared that dying and coming back hadn’t left either of them unscathed.

Jack held her as tight as he could without hurting her, reassuring her with his body, his presence, that he was here, that he was real and that she was safe. After a minute or so, she relaxed, calming; the tears stopped and her embrace was not as desperate. She sniffled and Jack glanced down at her moving to let her lift her head.

“You okay now?” he asked softly, smiling as he gazed at her. He reached forward to stroke back her hair, cradling her face. His thumb stroked gently across her forehead then along her cheek.

Harley nodded though she kept stroking his face as if she was afraid he would disappear. “Yes. Just...bad dream.”

Jack murmured as he kissed her eyelids and stroked his fingers through her hair and along her jaw. “I know sweets. You’re safe now. I have you.” He brushed his nose against hers. “I love you pumpkin. I won’t ever let you go. I promise.”

Harley, her eyes closed, her lips trembled, leaned into his touch, brushing her nose against his before she kissed him. Her kiss was desperate, passionate. She needed to feel his touch, to know he was there with her. She opened her mouth against his own making a small gasping moan.

Jack closed his eyes giving himself over to her kisses, pulling her up against him, needing her just as much as she needed him.

Harley groaned, kissing her husband harder, more passionately, her fingers moved through his hair as she pushed her body against him. She grabbed his hair, kissing hard, tears slowly seeping from under her lashes.

Jack growled softly, pulling the sheet away so that he could feel the warmth of her naked body against him. He didn’t want anything between them, nothing keeping them apart, even something as simple as a sheet. He settled down between her legs and inhaled sharply with pleasure, feeling her warm and wet, sliding his erection against her before he laid down between Harley’s legs. Jack wrapped his arms around her pressing her close and his erection hardened more, pulsing with his want, his need mixed together into an ache that was soul deep.

Harley made a soft noise of want, wrapped her legs around his, and pressed her hips against him when Jack rolled on top of her.

Jack took a few breaths to calm himself. He didn’t want to just take her, he wanted to love her and if he didn’t calm himself he would take her too quickly...his own desperation threatening to overwhelm him. He gazed down at Harley. He could tell by her expression she didn’t care what he did as long as he made love to her. Her want and need were just as powerful, just as desperate as his own.

Jack smiled at her and Harley started to reach for him again, but Jack put a finger to her lips as he leaned on one elbow. “Shh...Harley...it’s all right.”

She looked back at him, biting her bottom lip and nodded.

He very slowly dragged his fingers down from her lips, over her chin and along her throat. Harley moaned, a soft exhalation of pleasure, arching her head back as his fingers traced down her throat. His fingers continued to glide down between her breasts and along her belly, stopping at her bellybutton. He leaned in and kissed her lips, sliding his tongue along her lips before he gently caressed her chin with his teeth. Jack licked her chin before his tongue followed the trail traced out by his fingers only moments before. He licked his way down to her breasts where he rubbed his face over her breasts, kissing them gently. His tongue found her nipples, licking and kissing them until Harley moaned. Her fingers stroked through his green hair tenderly while she bit her lip and gasped with pleasure as his tongue wrapped around her nipples. He lavished her nipples with his tongue, switching back and forth between her breasts, occasionally biting before he sat back on his knees and squeezed her breasts together with his hands and stroked his thumbs over her nipples. He smiled looking down on his girl, so pale, like living moonlight.

Harley groaned as her back arched, her arms over her head while she rolled her hips in response to his touch. Jack’s touch made her feel warm, soft, but at the same time, her husband’s touch was a welcome fire. Her body ached, her core needed him to touch her as she began to writhe beneath him.

Jack licked each nipple again before he picked up again, tracing the trail he had mapped out with his fingers, tasting her skin as he slid himself lower, past her belly button until he was between her legs. Jack pressed his lips to her, his mouth moved over her, his tongue finding her sensitive clitoris and licked her, slow and sweet. He laid both hands over her sex, his thumbs pressing up and pulling at her, spreading her wider while he licked her again.

Harley spread her legs for him as Jack pressed his lips on her and sucked, gently moving his head back and forth. He sucked softly, taking his time to please her while at the same time his thumbs and fingers pressed into her skin. He slowly moved his head in a circle while continuing his attentions, slathering her clitoris with his tongue and lips. Harley arched again with a deep moan. Her hands reached out to his green hair, her fingers massaging and twitching as Jack sucked sweetly on her.

He slowly licked her, alternating with gentle sucks against her, shifting one hand down to slide two of his fingers into her.

Harley made a soft, high pitched moan as Jack shifted his weight to his right elbow. His fingers continued to pull and tease at the soft flesh above her clitoris while he slowly sucked her clitoris between his lips. Jack’s fingers moved gently in and out, pushing down at the same time as he thrust his fingers into her all the way. Jack moved slowly, taking his time with each insertion of his fingers until Harley’s breathing picked up, becoming faster. Her body arched, her legs jerked as he brought her closer to climax. Jack groaned against her, continuing his attentions, bending his body into her with his mouth latched to her, alternating his sucking with long licks of his tongue and his fingers continued to move inside Harley with a slow, steady rhythm.

Harley raised her legs up, wrapping her arm around one leg to hold it back while she grabbed his hair with her other hand, her foot resting against his shoulders while she gasped and groaned. Her entire body tightened, warm ripples building quickly. Harley, opened her eyes to look down at Jack, holding his hair back as she watched him suck on her, moving his lips up and down against her, his tongue sliding out slowly...She whimpered. Seeing his green head between her legs, feeling the delicious slide of his tongue against her, she mewled and groaned, her hair falling around her shoulders, thick locks of white falling across her eyes while she watched him.

Jack continued to lick and suck, his fingers moving in and out of her, his groans muffled by her sex, moving his mouth against her until Harley arched her head back into the pillow and cried out. Her fingers yanked on his hair when she arched more, her toes pointing the moment her orgasm burst over her tightening her body.

“Uh...Puddin!!!”

Jack grinned enjoying the pain of her nails against his scalp, her tugging his hair. He continued to lick, moving his lips over her as she jerked and trembled with spasms of pleasure moaning loudly, her cries pitched high.

He gave one final pull on her clitoris with his lips, sliding his fingers out slowly before he rose up on his knees. He grinned down at her, sticking him fingers in his mouth, licking them off and winking at her as he pulled them out of his mouth. “Mm...delicious.”

Harley blushed, a faint pink coloring her cheeks, chin, and nose, but then she put her arms out. “Come here puddin.”

Jack smiled giving his fingers one more lick before he crawled on top of her, gathering her closer to kiss her.

Harley wrapped her arms and legs around him kissing him hard, tasting herself on his lips and tongue. She could kiss him all day enjoying the feel of him, the weight of his body on hers, she smiled as an nearly overwhelming wave of love for her husband rolled over her and she kissed him harder.

Jack returned the kiss, then grinned at Harley as he adjusted his erection to slowly rub himself against her. He hissed, closing his eyes for a moment. She was so wet, her body welcoming him. He wanted to fuck Harley hard, to drive her into the mattress, to claim her while at the same time assuring her and himself that they were both still here, still alive, still together. He also felt that he needed to go slow, to caress her, cherish her and to humble himself before her...she was his everything.

Harley reached up to run her hands along his face, pushing back his hair that had fallen free around his face. He looked at her with his eyes blazing, the blue striking in his pale white face. She held his face between her hands, staring into his eyes. She became lost in the sea of blue. She murmured intently, trying to convey just how much she loved him but being bound by the limit of language.

“I love you Jack...puddin...I love you.” she stroked his cheeks with her thumbs.

Jack licked her mouth and brushed his nose against hers with a tender smile. “I love you too my sweets.”

Jack kissed her, a kiss so filled with his love and his need for her that Harley whimpered in response, wrapping her arms tight around his shoulders.

Jack took hold of his erection, rubbing back and forth feeling her warm wet fluids on him, the slick back and forth as he rubbed against her. Harley made small noises of pleasure, her body aching to have him until he finally pushed, easing into her slowly.

Harley groaned loudly, her body arched and she tightened around him.

Jack groaned with her, leaning his forehead against hers as he eased into her. “Uuhh...Harley…”

They rolled together, their bodies moving as one.

Jack brushed his nose along her throat before shifting up onto his knees. His lips brushed and caressed her breasts while at the same time he rocked his body into hers. Harley laid back on the pillows, her knees bent, her legs spread making small breathless grunts and moans caressing Jack’s green hair, her hands running over his milk white skin as he moved in and out of her thrusting slowly and his lips danced across her skin. He arched up on his hands, leaning over her, kissing her deeply, their tongues dancing together in a warm caress as he thrust his entire body forward, burying himself deeply inside her.

Harley gasped, running her hands up and down his arms feeling the play of muscles under his skin.
She moaned softly gazing at him as if nothing else in the world was more beautiful.

Jack leaned in to brush his lips and tongue along her throat while Harley cupped the back of his neck, the tips of her fingers caressed the short hairs there while she ran her other hand up his back, desperate to have him close to her, closer still. She hooked one leg around his pulling him closer.

Jack dragged his lips along her cheek to her lips, staring down at her. His eyes seemed to shift, the color becoming deeper, the blue hypnotic, catching the thin light coming through the window. The love in her husband’s gaze made her heart ache. Harley arched her head back, dragging her bottom lip along his chin.

Jack groaned softly leaning into her. He dropped to his elbows, his hands sliding into her hair and grabbing fistfuls of her white locks as he moved, thrusting his hips in slow, deep waves, pressing all of him into her. His lips moved once more from her mouth to kiss her breasts, though never once did he stop with the slow, deep thrusts.

Harley began to pant heavier, her fingers digging into his skin. Her body arched under him when she felt the building heat, the climb of pleasure spiraling upward and upward. She whimpered and groaned, her nails pressed into his flesh as she struggled to hold on to Jack. He felt so good, fucking her slow and deep, feeling the way the muscles in his back and shoulders moved with each thrust. She brought one leg up, her foot caressing his ass, sliding down as she thrust her hips up to meet him when he pressed into her. Harley groaned louder still...

Jack thrust long and deep, rolled his hips, undulating as he fucked her. He laid his forehead against hers, his face contorted with the intensity of his pleasure, feeling her intimate embrace, hot and wet. He thrust as deeply as he could, forcing himself not to hurry, to keep control until Harley cried out, until his wife climaxed. Her movements under him took on that frantic feel as her body built toward her orgasm. She desperately held on, but like a damn breaking, she came, her body suddenly tensing, followed by instantly going liquid under him as her body flooded over him.

“Uhh...Puddin...oh Jack...Yes!” she moaned loudly.

Jack came only a moment later. It was a combination of how good she felt, sliding himself into her, the sound of their flesh meeting, the wet, gooey sound of their shared fluids, but he knew it was her cry, her voice pitched high with pleasure that really had made his climax complete.

Harley held on tightly to him while Jack thrust a few more times, riding both their climaxes until his was jerking and shaking as the intensity of his pleasure made him want to collapse.

He settled down on top of her, nuzzling her neck until Harley began to giggle.

He kissed the sensitive spot just behind her ear before he pushed himself up on his elbows to look down at her. He smiled lazily, stroking her hair. He loved the way she looked after sex. Her eyes glowed, the color becoming lighter. He loved how relaxed she felt under him, the lazy smile on her lips, but mostly it was the look of love in her eyes that made him happy beyond anything he had ever imagined.

He kissed the tip of her nose. “Better now? No more nightmares?”

Harley smiled and giggled softly. “Much better.”

She was quiet for a moment before she whispered. “I wish the dreams would go away.”

Jack frowned while his fingers stroked her cheek. “I’m sorry sweets…” His voice was soft, but filled with pain.
Harley pulled him closer planting kisses on his face, soft butterfly kisses. “I’m sorry too puddin...I know you have bad dreams too.”

Jack was quiet for a long while, so quiet that for a moment Harley thought he had dozed off, but then he sighed.

“Do you want to try and catch another hour before we head out?” Jack asked as his eyes wandered over her pretty face. Part of him hated to go out. He wanted to stay here with her, safe, away from the world and all the things that could hurt them. But he knew they couldn’t stay here. He needed to pull the fractured parts of his “real” family back together and he needed to rebuild what his brother tried to destroy. Jack smiled, he needed to show Batman, to show Gotham, there was a new clown in the big top.

“Cuddling sounds nice; I don’t think I could go back to sleep,” Harley purred as she stroked her fingers along his spine and one foot caressed the back of his leg. He smiled enjoying the feel of her toes against the back of his thigh. He leaned in and licked her chin, playfully running his tongue along her jaw then grabbed her earlobe with his teeth and tugged playfully.

Harley squealed and wiggled. “Puddin!!”

He released her ear with a wide smile. “Mm...the Joker says cuddling is acceptable.” Jack grinned as he eased himself out of her feeling that warmth of her body slip away. For a moment they were both distracted when he began to pull out. She moaned softly hating to lose the contact, the heat and weight of his body pressed against her, inside her. It made her feel a little empty when they separated; but when Jack rolled off of her and onto his back, Harley moved to cuddle against his side.

“The Joker?” Harley asked while she wrapped her arm around his waist and kissed his hairless chest before she laid her head against him. Jack had never been “hairy” and he had shaved before, but now she noticed, that like her, he was hairless everywhere except his head, just as she was, both of them smooth and almost shiny, like new coins she thought with a smile, except she had kept her eyebrows. She closed her eyes enjoying the warmth of his skin, the beat of his heart.

“Yes. The Joker. Jack Wayne is dead. He died that night in the factory...and I was reborn...I’m someone...something else. And so are you, my girl. We are something different.” Jack kissed her forehead. “So it’s time to leave our old lives behind and start fresh. When you showed me that card the other night...I’ve been thinking. I want Jason to stay the Red Hood, he’s earned it. But I need a new name, a new identity to go along with the new me and you gave me the idea. The Joker with his Harley Quinn...two clowns out to show Gotham a good time.” Jack grinned proud of himself.

“The Joker…” Harley said the name, trying it out on her tongue. “I like it puddin.”

Jack nodded while he absently stroked his fingers through her hair, his other hand resting on her arm that was around his waist.

Harley murmured kissing his chest “The Joker and Harley Quinn.”

“The Joker and Harley Quinn…it has a nice ring to it,” he whispered. “A very nice ring, but Harley, you can still call me Jack...and especially ‘puddin.’”

Harley giggled happily, snuggling closer to her husband. “You will always be my puddin, puddin.”

Dressed in his typical style of black suit, Bruce paced his apartment living room as he waited for his guest to arrive. Alfred had left and Bruce had waited twenty four hours before he had finally called the number that Alfred had given him. The young woman who answered had a slight British accent and sounded like she couldn’t be older than fifteen, but she had sounded enthusiastic. Bruce sighed.
He couldn’t believe he was doing this, interviewing a stranger for a position held by the only person he truly trusted.

The doorbell rang.

Dick, dressed in jeans and a red polo, came rushing out of the kitchen.

“I’ll get it!!” he yelled.

Bruce shook his head. Dick had been upset about Alfred, but in typical teenage boy fashion, had quickly became enamored of the idea of a possible pretty girl becoming part of their team.

Dick dashed by Bruce, grabbed a hold of the nob without looking through the peephole and pulled the door open only to stop, frozen in place.

The young woman at the door was indeed pretty. She had short dark auburn hair cut to frame her face, skin the color of creamy coco and dark, chocolate brown eyes. She was dressed in dark leggings, an oversize grey t-shirt that read “Nerd? I Prefer “More Intelligent Than You.” across her chest, with another shirt, red plaid over the top of that with the sleeves rolled up, and a pair of bright red high top sneakers. She couldn’t have been much older than Dick, who's seventeenth birthday would be in a matter of days. Bruce would guess she was around eighteen, maybe twenty at the very most. She was carrying a large messenger bag that probably had a computer in it--judging by the shape and size--along with a black and orange backpack that seemed to be loaded to the point of barely being able to close. She grinned brightly and waved at Dick.

“Mr. Wayne...you’re a lot younger than I thought!”

Dick didn’t make a sound. Bruce chuckled softly and walked over, stepping past Dick with his hand out. “Miss Pennyworth? I’m Bruce Wayne, and this is my ward Richard Grayson...”

Barbara Pennyworth took Bruce’s hand with a bright smile. “Barbara, but you can call me Babs, everyone does.” She smiled at Dick. “Hey,” she said in a friendly tone.

Dick answered with a noise that might have been a badly garbled, “Hi.” Bruce couldn’t be sure.

Barbara frowned slightly before turning back to Bruce. “So ah, my uncle told me a little bit about the job. He said you would fill in the details.”

Bruce ushered her in closing the door behind her. Dick was still not saying anything though he was staring at Barbara as if she were the most beautiful person he had ever seen...which perhaps she was Bruce thought. For a moment he was uncomfortably reminded of Jack and Harleen...the way Jack had reacted to Dr. Quinzel wasn’t that too dissimilar from how Dick was reacting now to Barbara, though Jack always hid his reactions well under nonchalance and wit.

Bruce directed her outside onto the balcony with Dick following behind. Bruce frowned at the young man then asked Barbara.

“Can I get you anything to drink? Eat?”

Barbara grinned. “You have any iced tea?”

Bruce smiled. “Of course--Dick would you mind?”
“Ah...sure, okay.” Dick walked off to the kitchen slowly turning around to take a few steps backwards gazing at Barbara.

Bruce pulled out her chair and Babs sat, Bruce taking the chair opposite her.

He took a breath then said softly, “Anything we discuss cannot leave this room, you understand? The only reason I’m even speaking to you about any of this is because of who you are and what Alfred means to me.”

Babs nodded. “I understand. My uncle told me this was top secret. He also said I was sworn to secrecy no matter what your decision was...I trust and love my uncle. I would never disappoint him.”

Bruce nodded and smiled. “All right then--let me start by asking you if you’ve heard of the Batman.”

*

Jack stood beside the full length mirror in their bedroom, dressed in a pair of dark blue slacks, a dark green vest printed with a pattern of clubs, clovers, hearts and diamonds all in shades of black or a faded red. Under the vest he wore a white dress shirt and over that, a long jacket in a color of purple so dark that it almost looked as black as the lapels of the jacket. He ran his fingers, gloved in dark blue leather, through his hair while Harley adjusted the dark blue and purple striped tie he wore. The colors, though dark, looked bright and stark against his white skin. Jack smiled softly at his wife while she worked on his tie. She glanced up, a tiny smile on her red lips, as a soft pink flowed over her cheeks. She grinned at her husband before she turned her attention back to fixing his tie.

“You look very handsome,” she said softly, reaching up at the same time to brush a lock of his green hair back. He looked so different now from the man she fell in love with, but he was still her puddin. Oddly, something about the way he looked now, the ghost white skin, deep red lips, the way his eyes stood out in shocking blue from the darkness around his eyes, it all seemed more...natural to him than the way he had looked before. She couldn’t explain it, but Jack...no she thought to herself--Joker, looked more...himself in a strange way.

Jack smiled. “You look gorgeous my pumpkin pie.”

Harley giggled with delight.

She finished with his tie and took a step back, cocking her head to the side as she inspected her work. She reached out and ran her fingers along the tie, her eyes slowly moving from tie inspection to look into his bright blue eyes. His gaze was intense and the lack of eyebrows made his blue eyes that much more alluring to her, hypnotic. She caught herself licking her lips. She blushed, caught her tongue between her teeth for a moment, and the blush moved up her cheeks to the tips of her ears. Jack smiled gazing at her, soaking in not just her beauty, but her presence, just having her close, having her back in his life. He could barely stand to have her out of his sight now, and having her not within touching distance was nearly impossible for him to bear. He knew Harley felt the same way just by the way she would constantly touch him, her fingertips always stroking his cheek or brushing against his arm or fingers.

Jack smiled not to show his turmoil behind the smile, but he was scared, scared he would lose her again. He simply would not be able to handle losing her again...he would break, he knew he would. Jack reached out and slid the pad of his thumb over her chin. She looked gorgeous, he thought, her white hair up in a high “ballerina” bun showing off her milk white complexion. Her makeup along with her bleached skin made her eyes brighter, glowing almost, like blue diamonds. His gaze traveled down her body. She was wearing black leggings, a sleeveless, red dress with a mock turtleneck and layered ruffles that stopped just below her hips, along with a pair of black booties. Jack couldn't stop staring at her at the best of times, but right now she looked so incredible; the colors stood out bright against her bleached skin...she was dazzling. He idly wondered as he released her chin and reached for the weapons Zsasz had brought him, if he would have to kill anyone tonight for looking at her too long. He frowned slightly, then grinned at the idea as he picked up the two Glocks sitting on the table beside the mirror and slipped them into the holsters under his arms.

Harley reached over to the table where his guns had sat and picked up the tube of lipsticks that sat there, red velvet, a shade of matte lipstick that was a dark red, and stood out against the milk white of her skin. But she wasn’t putting it on herself, her lips already painted with the dark color. Instead she reached over and grasped Jack’s chin.

He stopped moving to lift his nonexistent brows.

Harley smiled. “Just hold still a moment puddin, I want to make your lips just a little darker.”

Jack grinned at her with a lifted hairless brow. “Whatever you say my sweets.”

Harley caught her bottom lip between her teeth with concentration as she slowly applied the lipstick to Jack’s already blood red lips making them darker and more defined. Jack held his mouth out, his eyes watching her face, the little tug on her lips with her teeth, the way her eyes became a soft, yet intense blue as she applied the lipstick to his lips. Her mouth opened, her lips slightly parted, her eyes became slightly hooded, a look he had seen on her face during sex. Her expression made his groin ache.

“Now press your lips together,” she said in a heated whisper while she still grasped his chin. Jack did as she asked, pressing his lips together before rubbing them together just a little feeling the slide of the lipstick between his lips.

Harley smiled, her eyes moving from his lips to his eyes. “Perfect.”

Jack growled. “Thank you pumpkin.”

Harley giggled very softly and said with a wink, “You’re welcome.”

Jack reached out to caress her face with the back of his fingers. “Do you know how much I love you Harls?”

Harley caressed his chin with her thumb. “As much as I love you puddin.”

Jack’s eyes stared intently into hers as he hissed. “We are always stronger together Harls.”

Harley nodded. “Yes puddin...yes...”

They stared at each other for a few seconds before Jack leaned in and kissed her.

Harley dropped the lipstick onto the table, her arms moving up to encircle his shoulders, fingers caressed the back of his neck as she kissed him in return. Jack’s hands held her face, his fingers wrapped around the back of her head, pulling her close kissing her with all the depth of his passion for her. They stood in front of the mirror kissing for what seemed forever, and no time at all before Jack pulled back to smile at her. “That’s good lipstick.”

Harley laughed at him, giving him one more light kiss before she stepped back. Jack released her with a grin watching her as she stepped in front of the mirror to check her hair. She looked unarmed, but Jack knew she was wearing a bra holster, a gift sent over by his aunt just today. He found the idea that there was a weapon hidden on Harley, between her breasts, intoxicating and very, very arousing. Jack longed to slip his hand down between her breasts to pull the gun out.

Harley saw Jack’s reflection in the glass as he stared hungrily at her breasts.

“Puddin?” she asked.

Jack’s eyes came up to meet hers in the mirror and he grinned. “Just imagining undressing you later.”

Harley’s smile was wide. “I look forward to it puddin.”

Jack grinned wickedly in response. Harley turned her head to the side to examine her hair. “So, Big Mama first right?” she asked.

She turned to face him and Jack put his hands on her waist, pulling her closer. “Yep. Just to let her know I’m back—and Jason is going to meet us there.”

“Does he…” She started to ask and Jack shook his head and grinned just a little wider. “Oh no...Frost called him for our big reveal my sweets...a little business, a few drinks, then off to find our dear, dear Bane and hopefully soon, Duela. Though our dear Alex hasn’t located her just yet.”

Harley smiled as she traced Jack’s bottom lip with her fingertip. She pulled his bottom lip down slightly as she did so. Her gaze was steamy, her eyes traveled along his mouth, holding her tongue pressed against her upper lip.

Jack watched her, his fingers pressed into her. He hissed pulling her just a little closer. “Kiss me Harls.”

She smiled, her arms going around his neck.

Jack wrapped his arms tight around her and dipped her slightly with a steamy, tongue coiling kiss. Harley’s eyes fluttered close, the room, the world falling away until all there she knew were Jack’s lips and his tongue in her mouth directing all her focus.

*

The place that had once belonged to Fish had been given a major overhaul in the weeks since her death. Frost had informed Jack and Harley that Fish had left her club to both Big Mama and Kermit in her will. Kermit had decided to leave Gotham after the shootout, heading out to stay with family, in, of all places, Wyoming, so now Big Mama was the sole owner of the club which she had renamed Narrow’s End.

*

Frost, wearing his typical black working suit, pulled around back and parked before he and Agatha—who opted for a white sleeveless blouse and a pair of white bell bottom slacks—escorted everyone inside. Jack with Harley on his arm, stepped inside and stopped in the doorway. The club still had an elegant feel to it, with the subdued gold and yellow lighting which cast the place in a honeyed colored warmth and security. It somehow reminded Harley of being in a grandmother’s kitchen, except instead of cookies you could get good drinks. The bar, Harley noted, was located exactly where it had always been, not looking too much different than before except the bartenders looked to be a mix of drag queens, both dressed in black motorcycle jackets, leather bras and very short, shorts. They worked along with a couple of pretty girls, one dressed in a white, sequin set of overalls, sans shirt, her hair up in a high ponytail while the other wore a pale blue body suit printed with smiling ice cream cones, her hair in double buns, and one very pretty young man wore nothing but a pair of pink leather pants. The furniture had all been changed with booth areas now sporting a series of large, warm beige couches with glass topped tables in the middle of the more intimate areas. There were several elevated “cages” with mirrored bottoms that held dancers dressed in gold dancing to the music of Die Antwoord’s “I Fink You Freaky” while there were other dancers on the glass floor of the main dance floor.

Harley leaned against Jack’s shoulder to whisper against his ear “Big Mama definitely has different taste than Fish did.”

Jack grinned, the honeyed lights playing off his white skin and teeth. “Indeed. I like it and I would ever so much like to see you in one of those cages.”

Jack gave her a playful wink that made Harley giggle happily as she clung to his arm.

They made their way around the bar to the far end of the room where Jack and the others could see Big Mama, her pink hair was shoulder length and crimped. She wore a light pink blouse with a high ribbon collar tied in a bow with large puff sleeves that ended in tight cuffs at her wrists, and wearing a pair of matching pink slacks that were so tight on her that they looked like a second skin, along with a pair of pink satin pumps. She was sitting on a couch, (much like Fish had done with her table) situated so she could watch both the bar and the dance floor. Sitting on the couch on her left was Jason, his dark hair slightly mussed. He looked slightly older now, Harley thought, and the lock of white hair that was prominent on his forehead was new too. He was wearing his usual favorite outfit, tight black pants, black t-shirt and motorcycle boots, though he had a red leather jacket on despite the late summer weather. He was talking and laughing with Big Mama, a beer bottle held in his hand.

Sitting next to Jason were Trope and Thea. The two young women had their computers with them, their attention on the laptops, but Harley could see that Trope’s hair was a bright violet color while Thea had dyed hers baby blue. The two were wearing black trouser shorts, thick soled black army boots and while Trope was wearing a plain black t-shirt, Thea was wearing a fuzzy pink top in the same shade of pink as Big Mama.

As their group approached Big Mama turned. “Frost! So nice to see you. And Agatha, nice to see you on your feet honey.”

Agatha smiled. “If you don’t mind, I need to get off of them and order a stiff drink!”

Big Mama laughed and motioned at the two other couches arranged in a square in the intimate seating area. “Have a seat,” she offered. “And who are your friends?” She smiled lifting a brow in question.

Jason turned his attention toward the group, stood up and walked swiftly over to Frost when he recognized his friend. “Frost!! I haven’t seen you in weeks!”

The two men embraced, smacking each other hard on the backs. Agatha smiled as she took a seat on the couch next to Big Mama who patted her on the knee as she gave Jack and Harley curious glances.

Jack just watched his two friends without saying a word, glancing down at Harley who smiled up at him as they waited. Jason looked good, as did the girls. It made Jack happy to know they had survived intact after everything that happened, that they had been able to go on, to continue working on making the Red Hood a name that the Gotham underworld knew and hopefully feared.

The music had shifted to Rihanna’s “Diamonds” which was also followed by a shift in the lighting. The lights went down low and dark, the color shifted from the warm gold to a more bluish light with a sprinkle of “diamonds” mixed into the shifting lights on the dance floor and moved throughout the club, making it almost look as if it were snowing inside the club. People danced, the lights shifted and moved, the glow cast about the room, and the glittering glow danced across Jack and Harley’s pale skin which made both of them seem to shimmer.

Frost released Jason, glanced over at Big Mama, Trope, and Thea who were now looking curiously at Jack and Harley. It was clear they all saw something familiar in the two extremely pale people. Frost kept his arm around Jason’s shoulders, moved the younger man to face Jack and Harley before he began to speak.

“Jason, girls, Mama...This is...” He glanced at Jack who nodded. “This is Jack...Jack and Harley.”

Jason narrowed his gaze. “What? What the fuck are you trying to pull Frost? This isn’t funny.” His nostrils flared in barely contained irritation. “They died--we saw them die.”

Jason yanked himself out from under Frost’s arm and shoved the bigger man, his anger building swiftly. “This ain’t fucking funny.”

Frost allowed Jason to shove him as he shrugged. “I know Jason, believe me I know. I was there remember...but, it is them.” Frost glanced over at Jack before he continued. “You heard about the fire at Wayne Manor, right?”

Jason glanced over at the girls who nodded (both staring at Jack and Harley) before he spoke. “Yeah, so? Who hasn’t? It's the biggest news in Gotham right now.”

Frost nodded. “Yeah well, Me, Zsasz and Alex all went with Jack here and burned it down.”

Jason looked confused. “But...wait?” He turned back toward Jack.

Jack smiled and waved. “Hey Jason.”

Jason stiffened. For a moment his face seemed to transform, quickly rippling from one emotional response to the next. His blue eyes went from denial, to hope, to anger in a matter of seconds. Jason shoved Frost further away from him and stomped over to Jack thrusting his finger out and hitting Jack in the chest. “I don't know who you think you are, freak, but...”

Jack released Harley. His hand shot out to wrap around Jason’s finger while his other hand grabbed the young man’s wrist. Jack stared hard at Jason. The younger man couldn’t move. It wasn’t because Jack was holding him in such as way that he couldn’t move, but it was Jack’s eyes. His eyes had Jason frozen; the color was subtly different, but those were Jack’s eyes. Jason knew those were Jack’s eyes, no one could mistake the intensity of Jack’s gaze...Jason stiffened as he stared back, but then Jack smiled sadly and whispered.“I’m sorry about Roxy. I know you two were close.”

As Jason stared at Jack, the color drained from his face, his voice dropped and broke slightly when he spoke. “I thought...Jack?” He looked confused. “I thought, I thought you were dead...”

Jack grinned. “Hardly.”

Jason made a small sound, half sob, half angry gasp and threw himself at Jack. Jack barely had time to catch the young man before he was hugging him. Jason was struggling not to cry as he hissed, his face against Jack’s shoulder. “I saw you fall. I saw Harley...”

Jack suddenly let go of Jack and turned to Harley.

He stared at her. “Harley?”
She smiled and nodded. “Yep, I’m alive too.”

Jason grabbed her into the circle of his arms, holding them both in a tight hug which was quickly enlarged when Trope and Thea threw themselves on top of them with gasps of shocked delight.

Jack laughed followed by a disgusted sound and his arms going limp. “Ugh, too much human contact!!”

Jason laughed and stepped back looking between the two of them. “What the fuck man...I mean...what happened? Why do you look like that? Where’ve you been this whole time?”

Jack grinned. “Let’s get some drinks, then we can talk.”

*

Soon they were all sitting around on the couches, drinks in hand as Jack leaned forward with one elbow resting against his knee. A cigarette dangled from between his fingers and his other hand rested on Harley’s thigh. She was sitting close to him, sipping a drink that looked to be made out of the color blue. She sipped her drink through the colorful striped straw with a smile as Jack spoke.

“So there you have it. We both fell into the acid...and survived.”

Jason shook his head. “Fuck man, your own damn brother.”

Trope spoke up. “Does he know you’re alive? I mean, does he know you burned the house down?”

Jack leaned back and raised his arm. Harley instantly curled up next to him as Jack draped his arm around her shoulders. “I left him a message with an old friend, but I have a plan to hammer the message home that I’m after him, that this is just the tip of the iceberg, so to speak. Bruce wants to play games? I’m very, very good at games.”

Jason looked eager. “So, what’s the plan?”

Jack smiled. “I want you and the girls here to continue whatever it is you’ve been doing. What I have planned for Bruce, for Gotham, is just a little introduction to the new me, to my new persona...the Joker.”

Agatha frowned as she sipped her cocktail. Something about the way Jack spoke, the new moniker, the fight between him and his brother, Harley...she had sensed it before, seen it in Jack’s eyes, a violent need to prove himself...to prove something to Bruce, but she sensed this was also Jack’s only avenue left to him to show Bruce his affection too.

She took a hard pull on her straw. Bruce was Batman, now Jack was going to call himself the Joker and pursue his brother until one or both of them were dead. She wasn’t sure how she felt about any of it. She hadn’t really thought about what any of this meant, Jack’s return from the dead...Harley’s return and Bruce’s part in all of it. If she was honest with herself (which she liked to think she was most of the time) she had only been focused on her joy that Jack and Harley were alive. She had learned about the manor through Jack’s perspective, burning down Wayne Manor...she could understand why...hell, when she had first left home after joining the Owls to save Thomas, she had been so angry at her brother for forcing her to make that choice (regardless of if he had known about it or not) that she had thought about burning the damnable place down herself. That place had meant so much to Thomas, sometimes she had felt it meant more to him than his own sister, but unlike Jack, she would never consider hurting Thomas seriously...but then again, Thomas didn’t kill her or someone she loved. Thomas hadn’t taken everything away from her and thrown her away like Bruce had done to his baby brother.
She closed her eyes, sipped from her drink again. Thomas and Martha would be devastated to see what had become of their children; Agatha was devastated for them. She hadn’t really realized it, but she had hoped that Bruce and Jack would have a better relationship than she had with Thomas, and she supposed that was always what one wanted, for their children, the next generation to be better than the last. Though Agatha wondered, with Thomas and Martha’s death, had this rivalry between the boys always been inevitable? Those boys were so different. She had seen it from the start, the few times she had seen the boys before their parents’ murder. They had gotten along, but it was clear they were polar opposites of each other. Bruce was so much like Thomas, unbending, unyielding, so sure of himself, righteous. And blind--reckless with his sibling’s emotions. Agatha believed it was because both men thought their siblings love them would regardless, that no matter what happened, they would always love them. Thomas and later, Bruce, were both correct, she still loved Thomas, which was why she cared so much about the boys. And Jack, despite all his rage and pain, loved Bruce. Still, Jack was so much more like his mother, wild, emotional...unstable...Agatha opened her eyes to look at Jack. Bruce had done that to him, bleached his skin to a ghostly white, turned his hair green...scarred him and Harley...he had taken so much from his younger brother...all in the name of helping him. Or was it Bruce’s attempts to shut his brother away, though his intentions were good? Agatha snorted quietly to herself, the road to hell was paved with good intentions.

Bruce had scarred Jack physically and emotionally. She could only imagine what Jack had been like when he thought Harley was gone. Bruce had done so many terrible things to his little brother in the name of “helping him,” that Agatha could understand what was happening with Jack on some level...she and her own brother had such a similar relationship. There were things that Thomas had done in the name of helping her that had scarred her too, and those scars still stung so many years later, but she was wondering if she could stay here in Gotham and watch the destruction. She glanced over to Frost who was leaning forward, listening to Jack. She knew Frost was devoted to Jack, completely. Frost would follow him into the fire, but could she?

She had run away once. The Owls had forced her to leave, but hadn’t she gone willingly?

Agatha sighed. She knew she would stay, at least until the Owls were taken care of...she loved her nephews, but she had already put her lot in with Jack and that would be where it would stay.

*

Jason frowned, taking a large gulp of his beer. “We haven’t been doing a lot really since you...died. Going after a few drug dealers, some arms deals. Biggest thing we’ve done since you…” He looked a bit sheepish as he said it again. “Since you died, was to break up this prostitution ring that was being run by this new up and comin’ in Gotham, goes by the name Black Mask. No one knows who he really is, but he is starting to make himself known. I heard that even Falcone is getting pretty annoyed and interested in him. Word on the street is that he might be wanting to take Black Mask under his wing. There is a bit of a power vacuum under Falcone at the moment.”

Jack nodded. “I want you and the girls to keep pushing the name of the Red Hood. You are the Hood now Jason.”

Jason frowned chewing his bottom lip for a moment. “You sure Boss? I mean, you’re back! We could be like we were before…”

Jack shook his head. “No darling, we can’t.” He look a long drag on his cigarette. “I need you out there Jason, to continue doing what you’ve been doing, but I also need you to be my eyes and ears on the streets of Gotham, to tell me what the news is with the mob and anyone else who decides to come to Gotham. You are going to be my eyes, ears and recruiter...think of yourself and a branch of the new organization I’m going to build.” Jack chuckled. “The Joker organization.”
Jason grinned taking a sip from his beer. “So what are we going to do first Joker?”

Jack grinned. “We are heading downtown my friends, downtown.”

C

Cobblepot tried to keep his facial expression under control as he sat beside his partner, Carmine Falcone. They were both situated up in one of balconies that lined the street. Down below the rabble were lining the streets and alleys cheering for the matches to begin. Cobblepot smiled faintly. There were a lot of them, and the crowds had been growing over the months and so had the money.

Just not fast enough.

The biggest mistake he had made, Oswald thought with a sneer, had been going to Falcone and asking for a loan.

Cobblepot chewed angrily on the end of his cigarette holder. He had needed the money to make this place safe, to safely widen the streets, take out a few of the buildings, for organizing the fights, paying the scouts, the bookies, food, drink, additional entertainment...for hauling in the right quality and quantity of the god damn mud for fucks sake! He had thought he would get a simple loan, open up the fight club to a larger crowd, get some professional fighters involved, add some cage fights, a little more blood, the mud wrestling with the nearly naked ladies...

Violence and sex always equaled more money, but as with anything, first you had to throw some money in to see a return. Instead of getting a loan that he had planned to easily pay back, what he got was a partner he didn’t want and a special series of fights that had turned into some sort of death match. Granted, the money was good, real good, but Cobblepot found that he didn’t have the stomach for senseless violence. He didn’t mind killing someone who deserved it, but this...he sighed and glanced out at the crowds. The music was loud as were the hundreds of people in attendance. The place was packed with humanity. The whole thing made Oswald feel confined, cramped, like the walls were slowly pushing in, a little bit at a time, inch by inch. The location where they were holding the fights contributed to that claustrophobic feeling. The fight club had been moved down into the bowels of Gotham into a section that had been called Wonder City, a place where there would be no Gods or Kings, only the inventiveness of man, a place that followed similar ideals to the 1950’s Objectivist philosophy of Ayn Rand...and ultimately crumbled because of it.

Wonder City was an abandoned city project from the turn of the century, now only a footnote in Gotham’s long history, buried underfoot like so many other things and people that failed to thrive in Gotham’s dark heart, a project initiated by Cobblepot didn’t know who, but it ultimately didn’t matter. It was supposed to be some sort of utopia, a place of scientific advancement with all the latest gadgets that the early 19th century had to offer. And it had been a colossal failure and later buried deep under the true advancement of Gotham. Cobblepot had found the place by accident, or rather some of his people did and he had moved the fights down here, into the city that time forgot. Cobblepot glanced up at the dome overhead, an art deco masterpiece of stain glass with tons of concrete and dirt over the top of it. He frowned, wondering how long before the entire thing caved in. When they had first taken over the place he had been thrilled with it, but now, under Falcone’s boot, the feeling was uncomfortable and confining. He took a deep breath through his nose, glancing once more at Falcone who was now talking to his son, Mario. Falcone held a big fat cigar up, his son lighting it for him and smiling. Cobblepot needed to find a way to get himself out from under Falcone’s influence...some way he had to get free.

He turned his focus onto the beginning of the fights. He smirked seeing that the mud wrestling was well underway, a couple of scantily clad women rolling around and struggling as several men and not a few women, cheered them on. The star in that arena was a woman named Firebug. Oswald had no idea what her name real name was, only that she was a rather sexy young woman with bright green hair and a nasty attitude. She was the current ruling champion in the mud ring.

Cobblepot’s gaze drifted over to where the cage fights were getting started. There, a huge hulk of a man stood head and shoulders over everyone down below. The man only went by the name Bane and no one had seen what he really looked like, as the man kept his face covered by a black and white luchador mask. The man was violent, truly vicious, unstoppable and monstrously huge. Bane wasn’t the size of a normal man and from what he had heard, the man was an addict—to what Cobblepot didn’t know. What he did know was that Bane’s caretaker, a young, pretty Russian doctor named Viktoria October had come in with Falcone’s people, providing biological enhancements, steroids and who knew what else, but recently she had attached herself to Bane. Oswald suspected they were more than just doctor and patient.

Cobblepot grinned. Despite everything, tonight, money wise, was going to be a very good night.

*

The Joker’s small group, which included himself, Harley, Frost, Agatha and Zsasz, entered through the gates into Wonder City. Jason was waiting outside in case Jack needed him to come in with guns blazing. Trope and Thea were hidden safely away, their communicators linked to Jason, and from Jason to Frost, from Frost to Jack, an open line of communication just in case. Jack had told Jason that he didn’t want to know where Jason was currently keeping his home base, where the girls were hiding out, any of it. That was Jason’s gang now and he wanted Jason to act as an outside force to him, an ally, but not actually part of the Joker gang. (Jack had laughed telling Jason that they would be partners, sorta like Spotify and Starbucks.)

Jack grinned from ear to ear as their small group walked into the underground city through the armed gates behind them, his arm around Harley’s shoulders, both lovingly and protectively. He was not going to let her out of his sight if he could help it tonight. He would never admit it aloud, but part of him was terrified of losing her again, though he covered his fear with a bright grin and a laugh. Harley had her arm around his waist, her thoughts much the same as Jack’s, unwilling to let him go unless she absolutely had to...which, as she looked around at the new fight club, she felt a pit open up in her stomach. She knew without a doubt Jack was going to end up in a fight, end up hurt...

That was the moment there came a loud voice over a speaker that cut through the music and the ambient noise of the crowd.

“Right now Ladies and Gentlemen, it’s time for not one, but two matches!! Over to your left you can see the fiery, the sexy FIREBUG ready to take on anyone who dares to enter her domain and fight her to a stand still in our pool of mud...and no boys, only lady challengers need apply!!” This was met with a chorus of good natured boos. “And to our Right, We have the one, the only monster, BANE!! You know the rules, you survive three rounds with Bane you win $10,000!!! Or die trying.”

Jack grinned brightly kissing Harley on the cheek. “Well, finding Bane in this mess turned out to be far easier than I thought!”
Mud and Cages

The crowd roared their approval, followed by a pounding rhythm as the music swelled and a wave of people moved to watch whichever fight struck their fancy.

Jack grinned, his eyes slightly wild as he whispered to Harley. “Mm...a fight…”

Harley frowned with a glance around. This was not the fight club that she remembered at all; this was bigger and a lot more money was being passed around. When Alex had called to tell Jack that Bane was one of the star fighters in Penguin’s fight club, she had thought of the old one, small, a few dozen people at most in some old abandoned building, not a god damn entire underground city with a crowd that would rival a professional sports event. Yes Alex had told them some of the fights were to the death, especially any fights against Bane and that the money on the table was astronomical, but she hadn’t really “thought” about what that meant at all. But, for a brief moment, she was terrified that she and Jack...Joker...that they were in over their heads. How on earth were they going to pull Bane away from this?

Jack turned to Frost and the rest of their little group, motioning them over to a relatively clear spot where a vendor was cooking what smelled to be funnel cake. Jack laced his fingers with Harley’s as he pulled her over to the stand and made everyone wait as he got in line to buy some of the confection, grinning brightly like a kid at the circus. Harley glanced over to where she could see the large cage. She couldn’t see the fight exactly, just the head of Bane in his luchador mask, though she could hear the anguished cries of whoever was fighting him over the sounds of the cheering crowd. Her frown was turning into a scowl. Harley couldn’t be sure from her current vantage point, but she thought Bane might be...bigger than she remembered. It was really hard to tell from where she was, but she was fairly confident...Bane looked taller, wider...

“Puddin, how are you gonna talk to Bane? I mean, I’m assuming you’re gonna talk to him right? About coming back?” Harley asked.

Jack grinned, the red of his lips stood out against his skin looking like blood against his pale pallor. “Oh yes, I’m going to try talking to him, just don’t see why we can’t do that and eat funnel cake too. Who can say no to funnel cake? Hmmmm...maybe I should lead with that...” Jack mused with a thin smile and speculative glance at the ceiling far above.

Harley frowned and shrugged; there were worse ways to try to start a conversation. She glanced around as they waited in line to order their food. She couldn’t see the mud wrestling at all from where they were currently standing, but she could see that there were other smaller fights going on all through the “city.” She could see small crowds were formed around men and women bare knuckle boxing, a few kickboxing, some others were participating in a style of fighting that she didn’t recognize, but from what she could see, a lot of the style centered around a great deal of footwork, along with a lot of body twists. The style almost resembled dancing to her. She turned around and looked over to where she could see some people were even arm wrestling and all of it, every contest of strength, prowess, and fighting ability was being bet on. She could see money changing hands, which she supposed were smarter bets. But where the real betting was going on was over at one of the refurbished buildings with a large neon sign hung over the front of the facade, the red and green lights flashing read: “BETS HERE.”

Jack walked up to the stand and leaned up grinning at the man in the food stall as he waved at him. The man smiled at Jack and waved back. “What can I get you?”

“Six funnel cakes please and don’t skimp on the sugar.” Jack smiled brightly.
The man nodded and began to work putting Jack’s order together. Jack turned around and leaned his back against the counter. He grabbed Harley by her wrist and tugged her up against him while they waited, his arms wrapped around her waist, with his hands resting at the small of her back.

“Mm…” He kissed her softly. Harley wrapped her arms around his shoulders and leaned into his kiss, for just a moment forgetting about why they were here; her only concern was the taste of his lips and the feel of his tongue.

Jack kissed her tenderly before he pulled back and kissed the tip of her nose with a grin. Harley turned around and leaned her back against Jack’s chest. He held her tightly against him resting his chin on the top of her head while they waited.

Harley was watching the cage fight as best she could, only catching glimpses of Bane’s head and not much else. She frowned and glanced up at her husband even though he couldn’t really see her face. “So how you gonna talk to him puddin? I mean, he seems a little busy.”

“Okay pale man, cakes are ready.”

Jack smiled, releasing her as he turned around, pulled his wallet out and reached up to hand the funnel cake man some bills in exchange for the six cakes. Jack handed two cakes to Harley, then while balancing the other four, began to make his way over to Frost and the others, using his hips to push his way through the crowd. Harley couldn’t keep the smile from her face as she followed him, Jack pleasantly bumping people out of his way.

“Coming through! Move it!! Funnel cake!! Out of the way!!” Jack smiled until he finally arrived at their small group. He beamed at them. “Okay kiddos--Daddy brought treats!”

He began handing out the funnel cakes, one to Zsasz, one for Agatha while Harley handed one of the ones she held to Frost. Jack held onto one for himself, plus the extra funnel cake.

Agatha shook her head. “Oh god, my figure is going to suffer.”

Frost smirked and gave Agatha a significant look, prompting her to smack his shoulder.

“Don't you say a word,” she murmured, but Frost grinned.

“I promise it will get worked off.”

Agatha actually blushed taking the cake. “Fine.”

Harley took a bite out of her cake smile before turning back to her husband, their little group close together. Jack tore off a bite of the cake and stuck it in his mouth while balancing the extra one he had bought and speaking around the bite in his mouth. “If I have to, I’ll fight him, then I can talk to him, but I’m hoping maybe some powdered sugar goodness might help me get close.” He smiled holding up the funnel cake. “Who doesn’t like funnel cake?” Jack’s gaze shot between everyone looking for agreement.

Harley giggled around her own mouthful of deep fried sugary goodness, her lips stained with white sugar. “You’re not wrong puddin.”

Jack chuckled and leaned forward to lick the sugar off her lips. For a moment the two of them completely forgot their family around them...

Frost frowned looking between Harley and Jack, trying to school his features, but Harley could see that he thought Jack was nuts. “What are you talking about Boss?”
“Harley wanted to know how I was going to talk to Bane.” Jack turned to Frost before he indicated with his head the cage match where Bane, judging by the sounds, was winning. “If I can't win my way with funnel cake, then I’ll just have to fight him until he gives up and talks to me.”

Frost paled. “Boss, those fights are to the death, you heard that right? I don’t think you can just...fight for fun.”

Jack grinned and took a large bite out of his funnel cake, leaving a smear of white sugar on his lips. “Been dead once already sweetie.” He chuckled and chewed as Harley took her turn to lick sugar off his lips.

Agatha shook her head as she delicately pulled a bite of the cake off somehow doing so without scattering powder sugar. “Jac…” she start to say his name, then stopped herself. She looked from the cake in her hand to her nephew. The skin around her eyes was tight with stress, a pain there that was clear to anyone looking at her. She wasn’t sure if she had completely lost Jack to his new persona yet or not.

Jack smiled at her, his voice was pitched low just for their small group. “You can still call me Jackie, Auntie, only you though and only among us, never where others can hear, okay?” He took another bite of his cake seeming to have not a care in the world.

Harley smiled softly thinking that it was sweet her puddin still would allow his aunt to call him by the nickname she had given him when he was a child.

Agatha smiled and reached out to cup his milk white cheek. Her eyes still looked pained and there was a slight crack to her voice when she spoke. “Nephew...” she said instead. “I don’t know if getting into the ring with him is a good idea. I’m sure none of us...” Her eyes connected with Harley’s. “...want to go through the pain of losing you again.”

Harley nodded. “I don’t know puddin...he looks bigger than before...like, unnaturally bigger…”

Jack snorted. “Don’t worry,” he assured them all with a lift of his hairless eyebrows. “It’ll be fine.” He stuffed a large bite of funnel cake into his mouth, smearing a little powdered sugar again before he spoke. “I’ll get through to him. I have a way with people.” He chuckled.

Jack turned with the extra funnel cake in one hand and grabbed Harley’s hand with the other. He spun around quickly and began to push his way toward the cage fight. Harley exchanged a look with everyone before Jack’s momentum spun her around, forcing the rest of them to either stay put or to follow.

*

Inside the cage Bane roared. He brought his hands forward and slammed his palms on either side of his opponent’s head. The man wobbled, the impact had his ears ringing disorienting him as he struggled to block Bane’s next attack, but the bigger man’s hand shot out and grasped the man by his neck, lifted him off his feet.

Bane held the man up off his feet. To him, the squirming individual weighed nothing, nothing at all and with barely a thought, Bane flexed his fingers, easily snapping the man’s neck. Bane snarled and then dropped the body to the floor. The crowd alternated between cheers and boos. He could see the exchange of money, a few minor fights breaking out along the edges of the cage, but he didn’t care. He was here for two reasons, one being Viktoria and the other being his need to prove himself. After Jack and Harley’s death, he had, in a fit of grief and rage, destroyed Jack Wayne’s lab. Whatever it was that Jack had been brewing in his lab, whatever sets of chemicals
Jack had been using, had mixed with other substances, things that Bane hadn’t understood and combined into a gas that Bane had accidentally breathed in. That, combined with the skin on skin exposure to the fluids in the room and Bane had been...changed. He could feel the foreign chemicals inside of him, altering his body.

Bane’s memory was fuzzy after that. He was blinded by rage, violence, loss. The chemical change in him had made him stronger, faster, but he would also lose control and blackout, losing hours, sometimes days. He had run into Viktoria by complete chance. One night he had found his way into a homeless shelter, had arrived the same night that Viktoria October was there looking for volunteers for a drug experiment while offering food, shelter and money. Bane had agreed to be part of the experiments...and the rest, as they say, was history.

Viktoria had become, at first, enamoured with Bane’s blood, then with what she could create, but lastly with the man himself. She used his blood to create something new, her own drug that she called Titan. It was the combination of the chemicals from Jack’s lab altered by Bane’s blood, and the drug that Viktoria had invented using Bane’s altered blood as a base had created Titan.

Titan made Bane stronger, faster, and more durable that any mortal man. Bane had become an unstoppable force...except that now he was unable to function without Viktoria's Titan being constantly pumped into his system. Worse yet, the drug had also made him more violent with a tendency to fall into blind, murderous rages. Minor drawbacks really when compared to the power the drug gave him, Bane decided. Viktoria had devised a system, similar to an intrathecal pump that kept a steady supply of Titan pumping into Bane’s blood stream.

That was how he ended up here with Viktoria. The fight club was a perfect place for Bane to not just prove himself, but to earn money for Viktoria’s experiments...and hopefully to get her out from under Falcone’s boot. She had sold herself and her experiments to the gangster so that she could continue her work, but now she wanted out. Viktoria wanted her freedom and Bane was determined to win it for her, no matter how many opponents he had to kill to make that happen. Bane loved Viktoria and she loved him. Bane would do anything for her, kill as many men as she needed him to kill...

*

Jack waltzed up to the guards standing in front of the cage after aggressively pushing his way through the crowd using his elbows and hips. He kept the funnel cake balanced in one hand while he kept a tight hold on Harley’s hand with the other until they arrived in front of the two guards standing outside a cordoned off area around the cage. The two men, both tall and built like wide, muscular walls, just stared, their expressions dour. The two men could have been twins, their build and expressions were so very similar Harley noted as she stared at them, except of course for the fact that one was white and the other was black. Her eyes narrowed, a small smile spreading across her lips. Tweedle Dum and Tweedle Dee she thought to herself.

Behind the men was an area around the cage where several people milled about, a few in suits looked like managers or mobsters, (Harley could see that one or two of them looked to be armed) and there were several people that might be medical staff? Harley wasn’t sure how matches to the death worked...maybe they were simply morticians? She wrinkled her nose as her gaze traveled along to the curve of the cage. There she could see a young woman, maybe a little older than her--though it was hard to judge from this distance--with a short black bob that had a white streak in the front, not too dissimilar from Jason’s white streaked hair. She was dressed in black slacks and blouse with a white doctor’s jacket and a stethoscope around her neck. She was watching the fight intently. Next to her was a short man with a long black ponytail dressed in jeans, and a green t-shirt. The man may have been short, but he was heavily muscled with the leathery look of an old fighter. Other than those two, Harley didn’t see any “regular” people past the area that was coordinated off from the main crowd, she presumed for the purpose of keeping the cage separated so that no one could hang on it, reach into the cage, or be able to throw things into the cage during fights.

Jack smiled brightly holding up the funnel cake. “I’m a friend of Bane’s and I would like to speak to him. I brought him funnel cake!” Jack said the last part as if he had just brought forth the most wonderful of gifts. The two guards exchanged a look with one another neither one of them saying a word. Jack stuck his bottom lip out.

“Should I have brought cake for you fellows too?” Jack’s expression shifted from expectant to sad.

The black one chuckled. “Sorry Bozo, no one talks to Bane. You either fight him or you watch.” He looked Jack up and down. “Though I’m gonna tell ya, he would wipe the floor with your skinny, white clown ass.”

The white guard shrugged. “You might be able to talk to Trogg, he’s like Bane’s manager, or maybe that hot piece of ass Dr. October. But Bane, Bane don’t talk to no one. You wanna talk to the big man, you gotta get in the cage and only Trogg approves who gets to go into the cage with Bane.”

Jack was about to reply when the short man that Harley had noticed only a moment ago, glanced in their direction. He cocked a brow watching Jack for a few seconds before he made his way over to their little group. (Harley noticed that Frost, Agatha and Zsasz were close, but they were also blending in with the crowd).

The man stopped on the other side of the gate that separated the two spaces and leaned against the gate between the two guards, crossing his arms. He looked Jack up and down, then turned his attention to Harley. This time his inspection was much slower as his brown eyes traveled down her body and back again before he brought his attention back fully to Jack.

“So what’s your story clown?” the man asked.

Jack only smiled. “I’m an old friend of Bane’s. Just wanted to have a few words with him.”

The short man narrowed his eyes. “I’m Trogg, Bane’s manager and Bane ain’t got no friends buddy, ‘cept me and Doc October. You wanna talk to him you’re gonna have to fight him, get in the ring with him…”

Jack shrugged as he handed Harley the funnel cake. “All right…”

Trogg grinned. “Oh no, ain’t that easy clown face. First, your girl there, Snow White--she’s gotta go and fight our little fire princess Firebug. She wins, you get to come fight Bane. She loses, then you go away.”

Harley felt Jack tense. She quickly glanced sideways at him. The smile was still there, but his eyes were flat, deadly…

“I’ll do it,” Harley said quickly before she could think better of it.

Jack turned to look at her in confusion. “What?”

Harley frowned glancing from Jack to Trogg. “It’s not to the death or anything, it’s just wrestling in mud, right? I’ll do it.”

Trogg’s grin was slimy, Harley decided. “All right, your ghost girl beats Firebug, then you can get into the ring with Bane...whether he talks or not will be entirely up to him.”
Trogg slid past the gate and the two guards who were grinning as Trogg motioned at Harley. “Come along princess, let’s get you in the tub there with Firebug.”

Jack yanked Harley close and hissed. “Harls, what are you doing?”

Harley smiled. “Puddin, it’s fine. I can beat her.”

Jack stopped following Trogg, shoving the funnel cake he had been carrying into the chest of a man walking by as he grabbed Harley by her upper arms.

“Harls, I just...I don’t want you getting hurt,” Jack whispered through his teeth.

She smiled at her husband. “Trust me Jack—I can do this.”

He frowned looking into her eyes. “I trust you Harley, I trust you above all others. I just don’t know if I can let you get hurt…”

Harley stepped closer and wrapped her arms around his shoulders, kissed him. The kiss was full of her desire and love for her husband as her tongue slipped between his lips. Jack groaned as he wrapped his arms tight around her waist, lifting her off her feet and kissed her back until the few people around them started to cheer or yell obscene remarks. Jack put her back on her feet slowly as Harley grasped his bottom lip with her teeth, sucked slowly before she let him go. Jack gave her a lopsided grin, his hand sliding down to grasp her rear.

Harley giggled, and her voice was quiet as she laid her forehead against his, her eyes looked into Jack’s as she spoke. He could hear her despite the crowd yelling at them.

“Puddin, do you think I like the idea of you getting hurt? Do you think I want you killed? I love you puddin, I can’t stand the thought of anything hurting you--and Bane is a killer now. What if you can’t convince him you are you? He could hurt you puddin, you think I want that?” Her lip trembled. “Did you consider how I would feel about you stepping into the ring with him?” She tried not to let them fall, but a couple of tears rolled down her cheeks.

Jack frowned looking genuinely confused by her question. He hadn’t been thinking about how she would feel if he got himself hurt, he had mostly been thinking about getting his family back...about keeping Harley protected...about getting the pieces back together so that he could punish Bruce, Falcone...the Owls...about how he wanted to torture Gotham in order to hurt the Batman...having Harley back would not change his mind about that. Batman, Bruce, had to suffer for what he did, what he failed to do because it didn’t matter that they both were alive. What mattered was that Bruce had…

Jack frowned deeper, he hadn’t thought about what his possibly getting hurt would do to Harley...he only thought about what he needed to do...about how her getting hurt would affect him...not the other way around.

“I have to try and get him back Harley. Bane is one of us,” he said softly.

Harley nodded letting go of him so she could reach up and wipe away her tears with the back of her hand. “I know puddin, I understand and that’s why I’m not trying to stop you. I want Bane back too. I know this is important, which is why I’m going to wrestle that Firebug and beat the shit out of her.” Harley smiled. “What’s a little mud?”

Jack stared at Harley for a moment then snorted on a laugh turning around and draping his arm across her shoulders and resumed walking toward Trogg.
“I love you.” He said affectionately.

Harley grinned. “I love you to puddin.”

Jack whispered. “I promise you pumpkin, Bane won’t hurt me.”

Harley frowned. “How can you be sure?”

Jack shrugged. “Think of it as intuition of someone who has come out the other side of death.”

Harley made a rude sound. “That makes no sense at all.”

Jack’s only response was to laugh.

Trogg waited for them with a smirk. “Done putting on a show for the locals and ready to put on a real show girlie?” Trogg did a game show hostess bow and arm gesture toward the large plastic pool about eight feet in diameter, large enough for two adults to move around in and filled knee high with “mud.” The pool had a little platform on the outside of it, with stairs leading up and to the platform and another set that led into the mucky pool, all of it designed to protect the wrestlers from the crowd and prevent the crowd from simply throwing themselves into the pool of mud. A couple of men where dragging out a young woman covered in the milk chocolate goo, her bra hanging off, a blood dripping down her chin from her split lip. On the other end of the pool, standing on the outside of it, a young woman with skin the color of warm caramel, shapely, wearing a neon green bikini which matched her neon green hair, was currently being hosed off. She glanced across the pool at Harley, Jack and Trogg with a curious frown, and then her eyes settled on Harley.

Harley was keenly aware of how she looked with her snow white skin and white hair. The woman smiled just a little and gave Harley a wave. Harley waved back. Trogg grunted. “That there my friends is Firebug, our current champ. You get in there and beat her...and I’m gonna be nice, you only have to pin her once–you do that, I’ll let you into the ring with Bane. And if you can get Bane to talk, well, more power to you.”

Harley nodded and began to remove her clothes. Jack made a sound of protest grabbing Harley by her shoulders. “Pumpkin…”

Harley gave Jack a narrowed eye look. “I am not wrestling in my clothes puddin. It’s bad enough that I have to in my bra and panties. I’m going to be muddy and then wet. I don’t want to ruin my outfit and when I’m clean and hopefully dry, I want to be able to get dressed again.”

Jack wanted to protest, but he knew she was correct. He pressed his lips together and hissed in defeat. “Fuck.”

Harley smiled and cupped his cheeks between her hands. “Don’t worry puddin. I’m all yours.”

Jack growled his gazing shooting around the crowd. “It’s going to be really hard not to blind everyone here.”

She giggled and planted a kiss on his red lips before she took a step back to pull her shoes off, handed them to Jack before she began to slide out of her leggings. She handed them to Jack before she turned around. “Get my zipper puddin?”

Jack looked patently unhappy as he grasped the zipper of her top and pulled it down. “The urge to burn this place to the ground is growing,” he muttered behind her back.

Harley smiled with a soft giggle. “Maybe later puddin.”
Jack grunted.

Trogg chuckled. “All right sweetheart, what’s the name?”

Jack growled deep in his throat turning his strange blue eyes on the shorter man. “You call her sweetheart, honey, sugar...anything else little man and I’m going to rip your dick off.”

Trogg blinked in shock at Jack, not because he hadn’t been threatened before--he had--but the viciousness and cold blooded way that Jack said the words, followed by the lipsticked smile that did not reach the man’s browless blue eyes, actually made Trogg shiver.

He put his hands up. “Fine, it’s fine mister, we’re all cool here.”

Harley pulled her dress top off over her head, patting her hair to make sure it was still in place as she said to the short man, “Just call me Harley.”

Trogg nodded and did his best not to look at the young woman, as Harley was now standing in her underwear, which included a pair of red lace thongs...he only caught a glimpse of them as he kept his eyes up, but Trogg saw that they were a particularly tiny pair of red lace thongs matched with a red lace bra and she was hairless, everywhere if his brief glimpse had been correct. He swallowed. He made no response to Jack or Harley and instead walked up to the stairs and climbed up to the platform. He stood there for a moment looking over the crowd before he cupped his hands around his mouth and yelled out, his voice projecting over the sounds of the music and crowd. “All right ladies and gentlemen, boys and girls, time for out next match!”

A young woman dressed in another bikini, this one blue, came hurrying over with a megaphone and handed it to Trogg. Trogg gave her a lecherous grin as he took it and held it up to his mouth. “Our champion Firebug will be going against the sexy Harley!!”

He turned and motioned for Harley to climb up onto the platform. Harley leveled a smile at Jack, giving him a quick kiss at the corner of his mouth before she hurried up the stairs. Jack stared after her holding her clothing and looking dangerously unhappy. Frost moved closer and leaned down toward Jack’s ear.

“Boss, you want me to…”

Jack gave his head a tight shake, but his eyes were narrowed. “No. Not yet, maybe later.”

Frost nodded and took a step back toward Agatha who glanced at Frost.

Frost muttered. “He said no.”

Neither Agatha nor Frost needed to ask what they were talking about. It was clear from Jack’s expression, he was beyond simply angry; he was furious. Frost sighed. That man doing the introduction wasn’t going to have much life to live after this Frost thought to himself.

*

Harley stopped near Trogg, the crowd screaming their approval. Usually rogg would manage to get a pinch in or a pat on an ass cheek, sometimes he even managed to rub up against the women who participated in the mud matches, but this girl’s boyfriend, with his corpse white skin was watching him with those beyond-the-dead eyes which looked even more unsettling with the lack of eyebrows. Plus, the man’s freaky complexion paired with the green hair...Trogg shuddered. He had thought when he first saw the two of them that it was some sort of weird makeup trend, like club kids or Goths, but now that the girl was nearly naked...it clearly wasn’t makeup...bunch of freaks Trogg thought, even if the girlfriend was a hot piece of ass. He shook his head and continued with his routine.

“Watch as two gorgeous women cover themselves in mud as they fight for dominance!! Who will win??!!” Trogg grinned and lowered the megaphone as he gestured at the pool.

“Just step on down into the mud there swee…” He stopped himself glancing back to see the pale man watching him intently. “Harley.”

Harley saw the other woman quickly hop into the gunk. Harley moved slowly down the ladder and slipped her foot into the disgusting looking mess. It felt cool, even a little slimy, but it wasn’t mud at all. It felt more like warm, watery jello.

Trogg brought the megaphone back to his lips. “Just a quick rehash of the rules: No kicking! Especially in the face or groin. No pinching! No biting! No hair pulling!! And last but not least, no arguing with the referee!” Here Trogg pointed to a man wearing a black and white striped shirt.

Trogg smiled. “Now, do you all remember how a match is won??”

The crowd responded with yelled affirmatives.

“So boys and girls, how do we win?!” Trogg held his hand to his ear.

“RIP HER TOP!! RIP HER TOP!!”

Jack’s eyes widened. “What?”

He started to take a step forward anger blazing in his gaze as he hissed to himself. “That motherfucking little troll…”

Frost was there at Jack’s side quickly, his hand on Jack’s shoulder. “Boss…”

Jack stopped moving, but Frost was acutely aware that Jack staying in place had nothing to do with Frost grabbing his shoulder. “I am going to kill that little snake,” Jack hissed.

“Okay Boss,” Frost agreed. “But you can’t right now--not here, not like this.” Frost leaned down and hissed in Jack’s ear. “There are too many people, mobsters and cops…”

Jack took a deep breath through his nose and chuckled. “Of course not, you’re right… but I won’t forget…” Jack grinned brightly. “I think I need to start a list, a people-to-kill list.” Jack laughed. “Oh, I do like the sound of that.”

“All right ladies! Let’s go!” Trogg grinned his voice carrying over the crowd. “Let’s get dirty!”

*

Harley watched as the other woman made her way closer, stopping and dropping to her knees. Harley smiled at the woman across from her and waved. “Hey.” Firebug grinned back. “Hi.”

“So, what happens if I win?” Harley asked. She knew there had to be more of a prize than getting her husband into the cage with Bane.

Firebug smiled. “Well, it’s a thousand dollars, though most men just like to try to beat me not for the money, but because they get to wrestle me and try and get my top off. They learn real quick, I’m a serious athlete. I think they are also convinced I like seeing their goop covered junk, or they like watching two women slipping all over each other and a free mud covered boob shot.”
Harley frowned. “Oh. Sorry.”

Firebug grinned with a soft laugh. “It’s fine. I get paid every night so I don’t really care. Besides, no one’s ever wins the prize money. I always win.”

“You must be good then.” Harley nodded as she spoke.

Firebug’s smile was bright. “One of the best.”

“You ever consider putting your talent to use doing other things?” Harley asked as the two women moved on their knees and started to move around each other looking for an opening.

“What do you mean?” Firebug frowned at the pale woman’s words.

This close Harley could see she was a pretty woman, her eyes an unusual shade of yellow gold. Harley shrugged. “I don’t know, maybe joining an up and coming organization where you can make some money without degrading yourself like this…”

Firebug frowned, which was followed by a smile. “You know what? Let’s talk later.”

Harley grinned, but her smile didn’t last long when Firebug lunged, wrapping her arms around Harley’s shoulders and immediately threw her down into the goop with a loud splash that sent a spray of brown flying in all directions, sending some of the droplets to rain onto the crowd around them. The crowd was cheering, chanting, “TAKE HER TOP! TAKE HER TOP!”

Firebug was strong, but Harley found herself easily squirming out from under Firebug’s grasp. Still on her back Harley spun herself onto her side, the gooey stuff around them made each move a quick slip and slide as she brought her right leg up and wrapped it around Firebug’s neck and used her strength and weight to force the other woman down. Harley pushed herself away from Firebug once she had knocked her into the murk, and the ooze allowed her to slip easily to the side of the pool where she struggled for only a few seconds to get to her feet. She was already covered from head to toe in what look like thick chocolate milk.

Firebug got to her feet.

The two women circled each other, moving carefully as the slick goo around them made it difficult to keep their footing.

*

Jack was clutching Harley’s clothes to his chest when a man, short, bald with glasses tapped him on the shoulder. Jack turned with his eyes narrowed.

The guy smiled at him. “Hey ah, I’ll give you five hundred dollars for her top.”

Jack blinked as he let the words process. “What?”

The man grinned. “I said I’ll give you five hundred dollars for her top, two hundred just to let me smell it.”

Jack turned so fast that the man didn’t have a chance to react before Jack slapped the man across the face, knocking his glasses into the crowd, followed by stomping onto the shorter man’s instep. The man fell back, but no one in the crowd caught him. Instead everyone backed away letting the bald man fall. Jack snarled, but Frost was there catching Jack by his upper arm.
“Boss…” Frost hissed. Interrupting Jack was becoming all too frequent in this place, Frost thought with a grimace.

No one came to stop the little fight thought several patrons were laughing and a few were yelling. “Kick his ass clown boy!!”

Jack glanced at Frost. “I’m fine.”

He reached down and grabbed the man by the front of his shirt and hauled him to his feet pulling him close enough that when Jack snarled, spittle flew across the man’s face.

Jack’s voice was low and menacing. “You leave right now. If I find you I am going to cut your nose off and shove it down your throat until you choke on it.”

The man in the glasses nodded. “Yes sir, yes…”

Jack grinned. “Joker.”

“Yes sir Mr. Joker.”

Jack grinned and shoved the man away from him. The bald man turned and fled.

Jack made a face as he said conversationally to Frost. “I don’t like the ‘Mister’ part...just Joker I think…”

*

The two women were locked around each other, arms around torsos, legs intertwined in an almost intimate embrace. Firebug struggled and pushed, brought her legs up to wrap tight round Harley’s waist while Harley struggled to break her hold. Harley sensed that she might actually be stronger than Firebug. She wasn’t sure why she felt that way, though it felt as if something was coursing through her. Her mind drifted back for a split second, something that Ivy had said to her, but in the next instant the thought was gone as Firebug struggled to move her hands up, her slimy fingers struggling to grab a hold of Harley’s bra strap, but Harley kept shifting her body, just enough to make it impossible for Firebug to get a good hold. The two women rolled in the muck, the chocolate colored slime covering their entire bodies and gobbing into their hair.

The only reason Harley was having trouble was because the “mud” made moving so uncertain. Every time she thought she had her footing, or that she could make a more aggressive maneuver, the sloppy mud would cause her to slip or lose her grip. The two women rolled, and Firebug was clearly doing her best to get Harley below her, getting the edge if she could get on top of Harley.

Harley yanked her arms down, the slime let her slip her arms easily between her and Firebug. She shoved her limbs between the two of them, just as Firebug rolled Harley onto her back in the muck, forcing the other woman to break her embrace for a second. Harley took advantage of that moment and pressed her hands against the other woman’s chest. She could have broken Firebug’s position over her by simply squeezing her breasts painfully, but to Harley that seemed like a cheap shot, akin to kicking a guy in the crotch, (and she wasn’t in a life or death fight) so instead she shoved.

The move did indeed break the hold that Firebug had on Harley, but Harley surprised herself when she shoved with enough force that not only did she push Firebug off of her, but she sent the other woman flying up and back before she came back down into the slime hard and slid on her ass to hit the other side of the pool.

Firebug gasped in surprise when she hit the side of the pool, almost hard enough to knock the air out of her lungs, her legs spread out in front of her as she watched Harley get to her feet. Harley grinned, her teeth showing bright white against the slimy mud covering her hair and face.

*

Jack grinned slowly watching his wife fight. He could be mistaken he thought, but she seemed a bit stronger than he remembered her being…

*

Firebug hurriedly got to her feet and charged at Harley, half sliding and half running. Harley ran forward and performed a double twisting double back, surprising herself as she flipped over Firebug and landed on her feet sending muck flying around her. Harley spun around and threw both her hands out, the palms of her hands hit the other woman. Harley shoved Firebug in the back with a surprising amount of force to send the other woman sliding again. Firebug pinwheeled her arms for a second as she tried to keep her balance, but she fell over. Firebug gasped in shock as the vibration of slamming into the mud and floor beneath rippled up her body. She spun around on her rear with a hiss of annoyance.

Firebug shoved herself to her feet and rushed Harley thinking to knock her off her feet if she moved swiftly enough, but Harley giggled in surprise at herself as she brought her arms up crossing them in front of her so that when Firebug hit her, Harley slid backwards to the edge of the pool and then she lost her footing in the slippery goo. Harley yelped in surprise, her sudden confidence in her unusual speed and reflexes slipped a bit when she fell, but she snapped her hands out and grabbed Firebug to yank the other woman down with her.

Firebug wrapped herself around Harley as soon as she fell. The two women struggled, trying to keep a hold of the other while at the same time fighting for their tops. Harley could feel the other woman’s hands sliding across her back as she tried to grab at the hooks of Harley’s bra, then transferring her grip to try and yank the straps off her arms when she couldn’t get a hold of Harley’s back strap.

*

Jack was hissing under his breath, balling her clothes up in his hands. “Come on Harley, come on sweets, you can do it.”

*

Harley stumbled to her feet, but kept herself from slipping as she grabbed Firebug and lifted, surprising herself as she lifted the other woman off her feet with little effort, as if Firebug weighed next to nothing to her as she lifted the green haired woman up and then dropped her back into the mud. Thick droplets splattered into the air and over the rim of the pool to splash over the crowd.

Harley threw her arm up blocking the mud from splashing into her face. She dropped down on top of Firebug, trying to pin the other woman, but Firebug reached up and grabbed her, stuck her feet up to slam the bottom of her feet into Harley’s chest. Harley gasped, but she didn’t have time to react before the woman flipped Harley over her head. Harley twisted in the air and landed on her feet in a crouch (surprising herself yet again), slipped a little, but didn’t fall. She spun around just as Firebug came up and crashed into her.

*

Jack cupped his hands around his mouth and yelled with glee. “GO PUMPKIN!!”

He grinned thinking he might have to buy a plastic pool so he could wrestle Harley in it, all oiled up and naked...he wondered if any place was open this late where he could get a pool and some almond oil?

*

Harley snarled and flipped Firebug onto her back. Mud splashed in all directions. The two women struggled, slipping and sliding all over the pool floor and against its side as they fought to get the upper hand. Firebug tried to get out from under Harley while Harley fought to keep her down. Firebug reached up grabbing at Harley’s bra and began to pull. The crowd went wild with yelling. Harley slapped Firebug across the face with enough force that she snapped Firebug’s head to the side momentarily leaving a clear space on the woman’s cheek. The impact of her hand was enough that Firebug’s grip on Harley’s bra loosened since the strike momentarily stunned her. Harley took advantage of the momentary shift, stood up just enough to flip the other woman around and grab the ties of her opponents top and pulled back. The ties unraveled. Firebug scrambled to grab her top, but it was too late. Harley stumbled to her feet, the top in her hand and waved it over her head with a hoot before she launched it into the crowd who was screaming with excitement.

Trogg looked surprised as he put the megaphone to his mouth to announce. “And we have a new champion!”

Harley put her hand out to Firebug. The other woman looked at the offered hand for a moment before she took it and let Harley pull her to her feet while she kept one arm across her breasts.

Harley smiled. “So, you think about my offer Firebug?”

Firebug smiled. “My name is Bea Bonilla da Costa and...how about we meet for lunch tomorrow and talk about it?”

Harley grinned at her fellow muddy wrestler. “Sounds great.”

*

Jack stood protectively near Harley, holding her clothing and a towel that Trogg had tossed to him, (the man having enough good sense to head back toward Bane), a cigarette dangling between his red lips while Harley was being hosed off by a young man who was doing his best not to look at her. Harley stood with her arms over her head, eyes closed as she let the water and mud run down over her body. If she was aware that the water had made her bra and thong more see-thru she wasn’t showing any sign of it, more concerned with getting the muck off her body than whether anyone was seeing anything they shouldn’t. Jack was giving the people milling around in the background enough of a murderous look that no one’s gaze was lingering.

Jack pulled his cigarette out, smoke slowly rolling from between his lips as he watched Harley, his gaze primal, lustful, but with a mix of love and devotion. He smiled at Harley, his gaze rolling down her body as she moved, bending over to run her hands down her legs. She would occasionally rub her hand over her breasts, stomach, sliding more of the mud off before she would turn, slowly, standing on her tiptoes for a moment arching her back as the water washed away the muck. Jack watched her like a predator, his eyes flashing over to the man holding the hose every so often. The young man had only needed one death glare from Jack to know enough not to look at Harley as he tried to clean her off, keeping his eyes on the floor waiting until he saw the water run clear before he turned off the hose.

Harley turned to look over at Jack. He smiled watching the way the mud rolled off revealing her bleached white skin underneath. It was eerie, almost as if the water was washing away all her color to reveal a ghost, but at the same time, as Jack’s eyes raked over her, it was sexy, watching the water run down her stomach, over her legs revealing the snow white skin.

After another few seconds Harley shivered and giggled hurrying over to Jack. He slipped his cigarette between his lips as he held up the towel for her. Harley hurried into his embrace. Jack wrapped the towel and his arms around her and pulled her close, kissing a damp spot just at the corner of her forehead.

“You did good there Harls. That was incredible,” Jack purred softly. “You, as always, were amazing my sweets. Though I think I will enjoy it far more if I was the one wrestling you...in a pool of warm oil maybe?”

Harley snuggled in close to him with a giggle. “I’ve never moved like that before puddin, it was like...I don’t know...I’m stronger, more agile...I can’t really describe it.” She laid her head against his shoulder. Jack held on tightly to her, rocking her back and forth in his arms.

Jack cooed softly. “You were impressive.”

She giggled. “I’ll have to switch from roller derby to mud wrestling?”

Jack snorted. “Unlikely. I’m not too fond of my wife being lusted after by a room full of mostly men.” He squeezed her. “Come on. I need to go over for my little bout that you won for me.”

As they walked over toward the cage, Jack kept an arm around Harley’s shoulders. She smiled happily and put her arm around his waist. She had taken the towel and wrapped it around her torso, looking as if she had just stepped out of the shower. She reached up and loosened the bun she had her hair in, letting the long white locks fall in slightly damp waves down her back. She looked angelic, like something other than human. He was aware of people looking at Harley, still in her underwear even thought she was now wrapped in a towel and the violent urge to pluck out their eyeballs was almost too much for him to resist. He didn’t just hate the fact that people were looking at her nearly naked body--he loathed it.

Instead of thinking about murdering all those people though, Jack focused himself on the fight with Bane, convincing the man who he was, and getting him to come home. He took a deep drag on his cigarette before causally flicking the still burning butt into the crowd as they kept walking until they arrived at the cage. The crowd was becoming restless, more congested right around the cage, waiting for the next event with Bane. Jack mused with a smirk that this must have been what it was like during the gladiator games, that lust for violence and blood. The human animal didn’t really change much he thought...they craved violence, destruction...chaos. He giggled, drawing a look from his wife as he thought about the chaos he was slowly going to unleash on Bruce, on Falcone...on Gotham City. He was only giving them what Gotham wanted...like a good entertainer should he thought.

Trogg was standing by the cage speaking with Dr. October; Bane was already inside moving restlessly around the cage, grunting and snorting like an animal. Harley’s eyes widened as they approached. She could see when Bane would pass by, that the man was bigger than before...she couldn’t be sure, but she thought he might be bigger even than he had been an hour or so ago...and for just a moment as the the flashing lights moved over the large masked man, she could have sworn she saw a faint glow of green under his skin. But just as she thought she saw the glow, following the lines of his blood vessels under his skin, Bane moved past and the illusion was gone.

The two guards opened the gate for them as Jack and Harley strolled up. The white guard smirked at Harley and his eyes began to trace her body when Jack growled. The man glanced over, the lustful smirk on his face falling as he glimpsed Jack’s expression. Jack smiled, but it wasn’t pleasant and something about his eyes made the guard feel cold. He quickly dropped the smirk and glanced away from Jack and Harley, like a dog hoping not to be noticed as he held open the gate.

Harley and Jack stepped through while Jack’s smile and eyes continued to bore into the offending guard as he walked by.

Trogg was waiting for them next to Bane’s doctor, Viktoria October; when he saw them he waved them over.

Trogg grinned at Harley as they approached. “That was pretty impressive, you might consider taking Firebug’s place. A pretty woman like you with moves like that, you could make a lot of money.”

Harley felt her husband stiffen next to her. She still had her arm around his waist and squeezed, pressing Jack’s body up against hers more to comfort him and silently keep him from murdering the man in front of them. She had this gut feeling that if she let Jack go, Trogg would be hard pressed trying to keep his blood inside his body.

She smiled at the short man. “No thank you. I’m perfectly happy working with my husband.”

Trogg shrugged looking only slightly disappointed. “Okay, fine. You ready mister?” He looked to Jack.

Jack’s smile eased into a relaxed confidence as he released his hold on Harley. He handed her the clothing he had been holding for her before he began to strip off his jacket, shirt, and tie. “I am.”

Trogg shrugged and began to head up the steps to the cage to make his announcement when he stopped. “Hey, what do they all you?”

Jack smiled as he bent over to remove his shoes and socks. “You can call me Joker.”

Trogg frowned at the name, then shrugged. “Okay, Joker it is.”

Trogg made his way up the few stairs to the outside of the cage, holding his megaphone to his lips as he yelled into it. “All right--you guys ready??”

The crowd yelled their approval. “You’ve already seen three men try their hand at defeating the monster that is BANE!”

The crowd responded with cheers and a few boos interspersed. Bane roared in response, slamming his fists together as he stalked the cage.

Harley frowned looking up at the cage, then back at Jack. “Are you sure about this puddin? Bane doesn’t look...right. He seems more like a caged animal than the man we used to know. I mean look at him puddin, he’s way bigger than when we knew him. And even steroids over a month can’t do...that.” Harley’s eyebrows were lifted in surprise and some amount of alarm as she watched Bane.

Jack was holding the wrist of his right arm and stretching to the side before switching arms and doing another stretch; this was greeted with some female cheers in the crowd. Harley turned to look at the crowd, her eyes narrowed.

“He’ll know it’s me sweets. Don’t worry. And besides, isn’t the old saying: the bigger they are the harder they fall?” Jack grinned at her as he stretched his arms over his head. Harley reached out and ran her fingers along his chest and down his stomach. His skin was so white, like flower petals, soft, the black ink of the tattoos stood out starkly against his milk white skin. Jack chuckled, goosebumps racing along his skin from her touch. Her eyes traveled up to his face, a lock of his now green hair had fallen loose around his forehead. She reached up and tucked the hair back as she gaze at him.
Jack grinned at her and his lips stood out, bright, blood red against his skin and the healthy white of his teeth. Harley sighed in frustration at the fact that he didn’t seem to be taking this seriously at all.

Jack cupped her face between his hands and whispered, his lips close enough that she could feel their movement when he spoke. “Don’t worry sweets. I’m going to be fine.”

Harley frowned. “You better be puddin or I won’t forgive you.”

Trogg walked around the outside of the cage, lights danced around him as someone turned several small spotlights on him. He yelled at the crowd throwing his free hand up into the air. “Our next combatant to take on the all time winner, the killer known as Bane is--THE JOKER!!!”

The crowd cheered. The lights narrowed in on Jack who grabbed Harley and pressed her against him, kissing her until her knees felt weak. The crowd around them cheered and whistled as Jack lifted her off her feet, continuing to kiss her as if she were the air he needed to breathe. Harley wrapped her arms around his shoulders returning the kiss passionately, desperately until Jack set her down on her bare feet.

He grinned at her and kissed the tip of her nose. “Be right back pumpkin pie.”

He winked at her. Harley could have slugged him, but she smiled instead. She loved him so damn much and he was being so reckless she thought. She sighed and moved over to where Bane’s doctor was standing, the other woman’s gaze flickering between Harley, Jack and Bane.

The woman put her hand out to Harley as she approached, a small yet open smile on her lips. “Hello, I’m Dr. Viktoria October, but you can call me Viktoria.”

Harley smiled. “Harley and that is my husband Ja...Joker.” Harley glanced toward the cage with a frown.

Viktoria patted Harley’s shoulder. “Don’t worry. I have had an 80% revival rate for Bane’s victims.”

Harley turned to look at her with a frown. Viktoria smiled. “The matches are to the death, no one said they had to stay dead. If I can help them after they lose, I do. People wouldn’t keep challenging him if they all died--doesn’t matter how big the pot is--but as along as they have a chance to live, they keep trying.”

Harley nodded matter-of-factly. “That’s nice of you.”

Viktoria shrugged. “I don’t know about nice exactly, but my Bane would not be happy if he killed them all...I save who I can and who I’m allowed to.” Her eyes were a dark blue and she glanced over to the right beyond the cage. Harley followed her gaze and gasped softly. There was Cobblepot, no surprise, but sitting next to him was Falcone. Harley’s eyes widened in surprise. She glanced into the cage then; she wasn’t sure how Jack was going to react about Falcone being here, but she would bet quite a lot that it wasn’t going to be good.

*

Cobblepot frowned. The Joker? What an odd name he thought. He pulled out his opera glasses to try to get a better look at the man about to enter the cage. White skin...that had to be some sort of all body makeup to make his skin look that white...green hair, another odd choice...He got a brief glimpse of the man’s face, handsome in a strange way, but he lacked eyebrows and his lips...had to be lipstick to get them that red and his eyes were a vivid blue. Cobblepot humphed to himself, hadn’t seen eyes like that since Jack Wayne and that bastard was dead. Cobblepot frowned slightly, wasn’t the way he would have liked to beat Jack Wayne, but...He shrugged and let the thought fade away.

Oswald glanced over to Falcone; now if only Falcone would have a fatal accident…

*

Jack walked into the cage. He could hear the sound of Trogg behind him locking the cage door. Bane turned when Jack entered and his eyes flashed behind the mask. Even with the distance between them, Jack could see that Bane’s eyes were dilated to the point that the black of the pupil almost took up the entire iris leaving only a very thin line of color around the exposed pupil. He snarled at Jack as he stalked closer. The two men began to circle one another; Jack frowned, studying Bane. Harley was right. Bane looked much, much bigger, his hands were huge and Jack could see a green glow under Bane’s skin that traced the veins of his body. Something was up with Bane, certainly, but Jack laughed to himself. Clearly, something was up with all of them.

Bane stopped just inches from Jack.

Jack smiled back at him.

“Hey Bane, you are not going to believe this, but it’s me Jack.” Jack put his arms out to his side and did a little spin. “I’m alive.

Bane didn’t answer him, he didn’t show any recognition as he reared back and swung his right fist at Jack.

Jack leaned back, though the big man’s fist still nicked him across the front of his nose, barely a touch and without any damage. Jack swung a left hook and struck Bane across the right cheek just as Bane was still leaned forward into the swing he had intended for Jack. If Bane hadn’t leaned forward Jack wasn’t sure he would have been able to reach the big man’s face at all. It was as if Bane had been turned into something almost inhuman.

Jack followed his left swing by bringing his other hand up in an undercut that hit Bane hard in the jaw; he quickly followed that with another punch from the left that caught Bane in the back of the big man’s head with yet another hit from Jack’s right fist catching Bane directly in the face.

Jack started to press his advantage, but Bane roared and burst upright. His large right fist lashed out, striking Jack in the chest and sent the slimmer man practically flying across the ring to crash into the cage.

*

Harley gasped and began to grab at the cage, but Viktoria reached out wrapping her hands around Harley’s shoulders and hauled her back from the bars.

“No! Don’t grab the cage--you could get your fingers or arms broken!” The other woman cried out as she pulled Harley back from the bars.

Harley turned to look at the young woman, her eyes wide with concern. “What is wrong with Bane? He wasn’t this big before…”

Viktoria frowned “Wait...what? You know Bane?”

Harley frowned glancing toward Trogg, but the man was too far away and with the volume of the crowd there was little chance that he could hear them. Harley put her hand on the doctor’s shoulder and pulled her close.
“Yes we know Bane. That’s why we’re here, to bring Bane home,” Harley said with a crease in her brow, her tone intense.

Viktoria frowned in confusion. “Home?”

She then glanced around, especially at Cobblepot and Falcone where they sat on a balcony watching the fight before her gaze came back to Harley. “Are you friends of his?”

Harley nodded. “Yeah, it’s...it’s been a while and….anyway that doesn’t matter, we are here to bring him home.”

Viktoria bit her bottom lip in thought before she said, “Do you think you can get him out of here, get him someplace safe?”

Harley frowned. “Yes, but...What is going on?”

Viktoria sighed. “I’m...he...” She closed her eyes and swallowed, trying again. “I love him and Falcone has us under his thumb...Bane is addicted to a drug I made, based on his altered blood. I call it Titan...” The doctors’ voice cracked, Harley realized that whatever was going on (and it seemed as if there was a lot that needed to be explained later) it was hurting this woman and Bane. The doctor was visibly becoming upset, starting to break down, but Harley grabbed the other woman by her upper arms and held her giving her a little shake.

Harley’s voice was firm as she whispered only taking a heartbeat to correct herself, stopping herself from saying Jack’s name. “Joker and I will get you out from under Falcone, you have my word. Bane is part of our family, and we help family.”

Viktoria stared at Harley, her blue eyes filled with fear, but also a sliver of hope. Harley could tell the woman was desperate and willing to take any offered branch that might help her and Bane. Viktoria nodded then whispered. “Thank you. Even if you can’t help us I appreciate that you want to...” She closed her eyes. “We don’t have any friends here.”

Harley smiled a little then glanced back at the fight. “Course it won’t do any good if Bane kills him.”

Viktoria frowned. “Well, I will say this: Bane has usually put his opponent down by now, so the fact that your Joker is still standing is amazing.”

The two women turned to face the cage watching the men they loved battle it out. Viktoria reached down and took Harley’s hand, surprising the pale woman, but Harley held Viktoria’s hand and squeezed. Please, Harley prayed to whatever was out there, let Jack get through his intact, please.

*

Down in the crowd, Agatha held onto Frost’s arm, her gaze on her nephew. Her lips were a thin line and Frost could see the strain around her mouth. He glanced over at Zsasz who looked slightly paler than usual. As if sensing Frost’s gaze, Zsasz glanced over. The normally cool and efficient man looked upset too, but as Frost knew, there was nothing any of them could do but watch.

*

Bane took a swing, but Jack jumped back just out of reach. The two men turned, keeping at arm's length away from each other.

Jack smiled and his voice was pitched low to prevent anyone else from hearing him but Bane.
“Come on Bane dear, I know I look dramatically different, but I assure you, it's me, Jack.”

Bane grunted. There was no recognition in his eyes, only murder. Jack pouted.

“Really Bane, I mean I appreciate your desire to kill me, but can’t we at least discuss it? I’ve been dead already and I suspect you have gone through a similar situation? A resurrection?”

Bane growled and swung at Jack. Jack leaned back smiling as he noticed that his reflexes seemed...quicker, easier...

Bane snarled at Jack and the large man moved surprisingly quick. His arms moved in a rapid one, two swing, first his right, then his left. Jack moved out of the way avoiding Bane’s right hook, but the left caught Jack across the ear, knocking him off his feet.

Jack hit the concrete floor of the cage, his shoulder taking the brunt of the fall. Jack gasped more from the shock than the pain which was strangely not as noticeable as he would have thought, though his ear was still ringing. Bane came after him, his right fist coming down at Jack’s head like a jackhammer. Jack’s eyes widened and he rolled out of the way. Bane’s fist smashed into the concrete, missing Jack by less than a finger’s width.

Jack rolled again as Bane came after him, continuing to slam his fist into the space where Jack had been, but Jack was quick, rolling away with only a second to spare until Bane in frustration reached for Jack, tried to grasp his smaller opponent.

Jack twisted around on his back and slammed both feet up, pushing up with as much power as he could into the maneuver. The flat of his feet slammed Bane in the chest and while the strike didn’t knock the man down, it did--surprising everyone watching--knock the giant man back a step or two, giving Jack enough space and time to get back up to his feet.

*

Viktoria gasped. “He moved him?!”

Harley grinned. “My puddin is just full of surprises.” And hopefully more than just that, she thought, cheering her husband on silently.

*

Jack sprang to his feet, his fists out, but yelped as Bane kicked him just as he got to his feet. He didn’t block in time, though he did twist his body to the side allowing his hip to take the main force of the impact. Jack stumbled back a couple of steps, but the altered Bane’s attack didn’t put him down.

Jack spun around, using his entire body to give the kick enough power that when his foot struck Bane across the face, he hit the big man with enough force that Bane’s head snapped to the side. When Bane turned back to face him Jack could see blood staining the cloth of the mask. Jack grinned.

“Oh Bane dear, it looks like I made you bleed sweetheart.”

Bane roared and charged at Jack whose eyes became as large as half dollars.

“Shit!” Jack yelped. He turned and ran.

Bane bellowed like a silverback gorilla as he came racing after Jack. Jack ran to the end of the cage.
Harley shoved her arms through the bars and was screaming. “Get out!! Puddin get out!!”

Her heart dropped to her stomach when Jack looked at her, but in the next instant Jack was yanked off his feet by Bane and held over Bane’s head, one hand around Jack’s thigh, his other hand grabbed Jack by the back of his neck leaving Jack’s arms free.

Bane lifted Jack over his head. Harley’s eyes widened in terror as the large man started to bring Jack down, at the same time Bane brought his knee up. Harley could see what was about to happen, Bane was going to break Jack’s back against his knee!

She screamed. “NO!!”

Viktoria raced up beside Harley grabbing the bars and screamed. “BANE STOP!”

Bane, turned, the sound of Viktoria’s voice drew his attention. Harley almost took a step back; she could see that Bane’s eyes were completely black, and the whites were shot with red. His teeth were bared and stained with blood. Jack must have busted Bane’s lip, she noticed with fierce pride.

Viktoria held the bars next to Harley, her voice tight. “Bane, don’t--please.”

Bane hesitated looking at Viktoria in confusion, the bloodlust made rational thought difficult. He snarled and shook his head side to side for a moment like an animal, but his hesitation caused his grip to loosen on Jack.

His handhold loosened just enough, but it was all that Jack needed to break free. He threw all his weight forward, twisted his body and broke Bane’s grip. Jack dropped to the floor, hitting his shoulder again, ripping some of the skin away at the same time that his hip smashed equally hard and painfully against the concrete. Jack gasped, the hot flash of pain blasted through him, but he moved swiftly, scampered to his feet and stumbled backwards putting himself temporarily out of Bane’s reach. Bane, like a T-Rex, noticed movement from the corner of his eye. He swung his head around when Jack stumbled away, his eyes focused on the pale man. He sniffed the air.

Jack’s eyes widened as he glanced at his bleeding arm then back to Bane. Bane was smelling the blood in the air. Bane growled baring his teeth as he turned on Jack.

Jack cursed. “Fuck, fuck, fuck!”

He didn’t have time to do more before Bane came charging at him like a bull.

*

The crowd was screaming for blood.

Harley hissed at Viktoria. “What is wrong with him?”

Viktoria’s bottom lip trembled. “It’s the Titan. It turns him into a monster, all he wants to do is destroy. Regular humans, it turns them into…” She shook her head. “Creatures--burns through their bodies until they are nothing but husks. Bane is the only one who has been able to withstand the drug, his body feeds off of it. He’s addicted and I have no idea how to get him off…” She covered her face with her hands. “Falcone has ordered me to increase his dosage… I don’t know if it will kill or him worse, turn him into a true monster.”

Harley frowned, then put her hand on Viktoria’s shoulder, her eyes on her husband. Fear made her heart race until she was sure anyone close to her could hear it.
Jack snarled with a grim smile on his lips. He could taste blood on his tongue as Bane came at him and threw his fist, connected hard against Bane’s face. Bane took the hit, his mouth dripping blood, but he didn’t slow down. He swung his right hand, backhanding Jack, sent the pale man flying backwards, but Jack twisted and kept his feet under him. Bane hit Jack three more times, a punch to his chest, another punch to Jack’s stomach and another across the face.

Jack stumbled back, gasping in pain. His mouth was filled with blood—enough he had to spit a gob of crimson onto the concrete—and the air was knocked from his lung, but he was still standing and he was pretty sure Bane hadn’t broken anything. Not yet. Jack wasn’t sure why, but he was taking Bane’s beating and judging by the power behind the man’s strikes, Jack should have been down long ago, but he was still standing for some reason.

Jack brought his arms up when Bane started to punch him, his fists flying swiftly, each hit of the man’s fists was like being hit by a truck, the vibration of each hit radiated through the bones of Jack’s arms sending bright sparks of pain up to his shoulders. Bane threw another punch, Jack ducked and spun under Bane’s arm, came up along Bane’s back and threw his own punch, struck the big man in the ribs.

Bane roared as he turned, but Jack was ready for him despite the pain in his knuckles, the skin scraped off from where he had hit Bane. Jack threw another punch, smashed the huge man in the face again; the fabric of the luchador mask burned across Jack’s knuckles. Bane took another swing at Jack, but Jack weaved out of the way, avoiding not just one but two more swings from the large man. Jack snarled and smashed Bane again in the face. He followed that by using the elbow of his other hand to smash Bane back, came in close…and that was when Jack realized he had made a mistake.

Jack came in too close, trying to press his advantage.

Bane roared and before his eyes, the big man seemed to grow just a little bigger. Jack’s eyes widened as he watched in shock. The green glow in the larger man’s vein burned bright and he expanded.

Jack hissed. “What the fuck?”

The crowd lost their collective mind.

That was when Bane kicked Jack.

The air was knocked from Jack’s lungs in a painful rush. Bane grabbed Jack by his shoulder, his large fingers pressing down on Jack and he threw the smaller man across the cage. Jack slammed into the metal bars. The impact didn’t break Jack’s nose or any other bones, but blood burst in a flood down his lips. Bane stalked forward and grabbed Jack by the back of his neck before the pale man could get his bearings and hit him, pounding Jack in the chest, face, shoulders. Jack struggled to block and throw a few swings of his own, but he seemed to be doing little except enduring Bane’s abuse.

Bane threw Jack down then kicked him in the side. Jack gasped in pain unable to stop Bane as he grabbed Jack by the back of his neck and lifted him to his feet. Bane wrapped one hand around Jack’s head, the other around Jack’s jaw and chin. Jack grabbed at Bane’s hand, struggling as Bane began to twist, trying to snap Jack’s neck.

*
Harley cried out. “He’s going to kill him!!”

Trogg was laughing. “Yeah, that’s what Bane does sweetheart.”

Harley turned seeing that Trogg had sauntered closer to the two women. He grinned at Harley. “Sorry honey pie, but your boyfriend ain’t gonna make it out of that cage.” Harley didn’t think, she wasn’t sure what she hoped to accomplish, but she launched herself at Trogg with a snarl. She spun around and aimed a kick that caught the man in the face, dropping her towel at the same time that her heel connected with Trogg’s cheek. She knocked his head to the side and bloodied his lip. She spun swiftly for another kick that hit the man in the chest and knocked him off his feet.

The crowd around them was cheering, watching as Harley, dressed only her in underwear, gracefully spun and kicked Trogg again. The announcer couldn’t stop her, off balance, dazed, and she was moving too quickly, each spin followed by another. Nobody, not even the guards, rushed out to Trogg’s defense.

Harley kicked the short man with all her strength in the chest, cracking several of the man’s ribs as she knocked him flat, nearly knocking him off the platform that ran around the cage. When he landed hard on his back, Harley jumped onto the man straddling him. She grabbed him under his chest and hissed through clenched teeth. “Give me the key to the cage!”

Jack hissed in pain, clawing at Bane’s arms, but it was like trying to loosen the grip of something made of stone. His fingers clawed and tore at Bane’s skin, but Bane seemed completely unaffected as he kept pushing, struggling with Jack, straining but slowly twisting Jack’s neck.

Jack, lipstick smeared across his lips and cheek, grinned at Bane, looking into the nearly solid black, bloodshot eyes and hissed. “You saw me fall into the acid, didn’t you? You saw me die.”

Bane snarled, but Jack saw a flicker of something in Bane’s eyes. It wasn’t much, but it was there--he hoped--a hint that Jack’s words had touched on something.

Jack groaned in pain, but smiled regardless. “You saw Harley…” Jack couldn’t keep the pain out of his voice or the tremble when he said softly, his voice strained by the pain. “You saw Harley throw herself into the acid Bane, didn’t you?”

Bane’s cheek twitched.

Jack struggled, spittle flying from his lips as he fought against Bane. The pain was building, the strain of struggling against the man as he tried to break Jack’s neck made Jack’s muscles tremble with the effort of resisting. He didn’t know how much longer he could hold out.

Jack hissed, his voice low, rough. “Remember the party on the ship, when we first met? The fight? Or when you and Kermit came to Harley’s roller derby match?”

Bane blinked. He frowned in confusion.

Jack smiled as he felt Bane’s grip loosen a little bit more when he spoke, though his voice was filled with pain. “Remember the fight at Fish’s club?”

The black in Bane’s eyes suddenly shrunk. Bane blinked several times before his eyes focused on Jack and his grip on Jack’s head loosened more. Jack saw Bane shrink, losing some body mass just a little bit as he said in a confused voice, little more than a murmur. “Jack?” Jack’s voice was strained, but he grinned. “Welcome back big guy.”
Bane frowned, blinked, confusion clear as he looked down at Jack. “What the fuck happened to you?”

Jack couldn’t help it—he started to laugh.

*

Harley snatched the keys from Trogg as he held them up. She belted him across the face one more time for good measure, broke the man’s nose, which earned her a round of cheers from the crowd. She leapt to her feet and raced for the cage door, slamming the key into the lock. Viktoria was right behind her as Harley turned the key and threw the door open, the two women running into the cage to a chorus of both cheers and boos.

Just as Harley arrived in the middle of the ring ready to attack Bane, the big man dropped Jack. Jack fell to his knees, coughing and gasping as he lifted one hand to his throat. Harley cried out and threw herself to her knees beside him wrapping her arms around him.

“Oh puddin!!”

Jack laughed, coughed, laughed more, still struggling to catch his breath.

Bane was looking around as if he was lost. His gaze fell on Viktoria. She rushed to his side, wrapped her arms around his waist and began to lead him from the cage. The crowd was yelling, people clearly getting upset. Harley helped Jack to his feet, the two of them stumbling after Bane and Viktoria.

People were yelling for the their money back while others were cheering and yelling, “JOKER JOKER!”

Trogg, holding a handkerchief to his bloody nose was holding the megaphone to his lips and snarling into it. “All right everyone--calm the fuck down!”

Just as they exited the cage, Jack grabbed Bane’s arm. The big man turned to look at Jack, clearly confused still.

Jack smiled. “Get to the amusement park as soon as you can.”

Viktoria glanced around Bane to lock gazes with Harley. “Amusement park?”

“Bane will know,” Harley said as she quickly started to lead her husband out of the fight club.

*

Up on the balcony Falcone frowned watching the pale couple leave while Dr. October led Bane away. “Now that was interesting.” He muttered around a cloud of smoke drifting up from his cigar.

Oswald glanced over at him. “Interesting? Bane fucking lost! That’s never happened!”

Falcone smiled. “Precisely. I want to know who this Joker is…”

*

Harley was driving. Jack wore only his slacks; his shirt, jacket and shoes had been lost in the club when they fled before either onlookers or guards could decide if they wanted to inflict harm on those who had lost them money. He was laying back in the passenger seat next to her, his eyes partly closed, lipstick smeared across his lips and chin, but he was watching her. She still wasn’t dressed, having nearly forgotten her clothes when she dropped everything to attack Trogg, only grabbing them at the last minute as they left.

Harley glanced at her husband. “You think he’ll remember?”

Jack knew exactly who she was talking about and he smiled. “Oh, I have no doubt.”

Harley squeezed the steering wheel as she drove. “You scared me,” she said quietly.

Jack smiled. “I’m sorry sweets.”

He reached out and stroked her thigh. “I am truly sorry sweetie, but we needed Bane back.”

She nodded. “I know. Viktoria…”

Jack glanced at her in confusion and Harley shook her head. “Sorry. Dr. Viktoria October, Bane’s doctor, the one that helps keep him drugged up and functioning--she said she and Bane are under Falcone’s thumb.”

Jack’s eyes narrowed. He hissed in a low tone. “Falcone.”

“She said something about a drug she made from Bane’s blood, a drug Bane’s addicted to…” Harley shook her head. “He grew didn’t he? In the ring?”

Jack nodded. “He did. And his eyes…” Jack frowned, then sighed and relaxed back into the seat.

Harley licked her lips, then asked quietly. “Jack, do you think something else happened to us, when we fell into the acid? I mean, besides bleaching our skin and changing our hair…”

Jack stared out the front window of the car as Harley drove. “Yes. Have you noticed if your eyesight is better?”

Harley frowned in thought, then nodded. “Yes, yes I have.”

Jack grinned. “Stronger, more flexible...tougher.”

Harley glanced sideways at him, her brow furrowed. She surprised Jack as she yanked the wheel to the side; their car’s tires screeched as she yanked the car to the side of the road, nearly coming up on the sidewalk. A few cars that were on the road honked their horns at her, but she ignored them. She slammed on the brakes bringing the car to a stop. She turned off the engine and turned to face Jack.

“What is going on with us? What happened to us Jack?” Her bottom lip trembled. “I don’t understand…”

Jack didn’t say anything, but instead he opened his arms to her. Harley threw herself into his embrace. He pulled her the rest of the way across the seat and onto his lap. Harley wrapped her arms tight around his shoulders and buried her head against his neck.

Jack smiled stroking her back. “Oh sweets I don’t know...we were reborn, like the phoenix, we rose from the ashes of our deaths. We are no longer what we were...maybe we are something better?” He chuckled low, his voice husky. “Don’t worry my sweet little pumpkin, we are in this together no matter what it was that happened to us. You are the harlequin to my clown.” He smiled tenderly stroking her hair. “No matter what we are my sweets, I will always be with you. Remember, you and me against the world--always.”

Harley lifted her head to look down at him. Her eyes roamed over his face, her fingers stroked through his green hair as she gazed at him, the street lights dancing over his pale skin.

“I love you puddin,” she whispered. “I don’t care what happened to us, as long as you are always with me.”

Jack ran his hands up her back in a tender caress. “I’ll never go anywhere Harley, nothing and no one, on heaven or earth will take me from you again. Nothing.” He tugged her down and kissed her. His tongue moved lazily over hers, his hands rose up at the same time and easily unhooked her bra. Harley returned his kiss slowly, dropping her arms from his bare shoulders just long enough to let the bra slipped down her arms before she let it fall to the floor of the car.

One of Jack’s hands slid into her hair, grabbing a fistful of her white locks and pulled her head back exposing her neck. He ran the flat of his tongue along the tender flesh of her throat, down to her collarbone. He pressed his teeth into her neck, sucking hard for a moment, his fingers tightening in her hair while his other hand reached up and cupped her breast, pushing up, bringing her nipple higher to his mouth. He pulled away from her throat, smiling as he glanced at the dark purple mark he had left on her nearly flawless porcelain skin before he lavished the sensitive nub of her nipple with his tongue, his grip in her hair tightening.

Harley moaned softly, her fingers grasped his bare shoulders while Jack sucked on her nipple.

He switched to the other breast, his teeth teased her nipple causing goosebumps to race over her skin. Jack tugged her back further by her hair, her body arched back from him, and with his free hand he slipped his fingers under her panties and between her legs.

Harley gasped, one hand slammed against the window, her other hand reached out and grabbed the steering wheel in order to balance herself as Jack pulled her hair, forcing her back until his knuckles brushed the dash. He held her like that while his fingers explored her, sliding between the warm, wet folds of her skin.

Harley moaned while Jack stroked her, the pad of his fingers slowly rolled her clitoris, his touch tender, his caress sweet. His fingers in her hair loosened, allowing Harley to raise her head. She kept her hands on the glass of the window and the steering wheel as she began to roll her hips, moving with the strokes of his fingers. She groaned, gazing down at him, her blue eyes hooded, her dark lashes framed the blue of her eyes, along with the dim lights of the streetlight made her blue eyes glow.

Jack growled, his gaze lingering over her face, taking in the fullness of her lips, the way her tongue slipped between her teeth, the way her body moved against his fingers. Her breath was coming quicker, her breasts full, her nipples rosy against her pale porcelain skin. He rubbed a little faster, building his speed with the increase of her breath. Harley threw her head back with a groan of pleasure, arching as she came against his fingers.

Jack hissed and slid two fingers into her, dragging his other hand along her cheek and down her throat. He groaned, his fingers dragging along her pale milky white skin as he continued to gently thrust his fingers up into her, feeling the warmth and delicious wetness of her on his fingers. He cupped her sex, his fingers deep inside her, stretching the poor lace of her panties until they began to tear. He grabbed one side of the thin cloth and with his surprising new strength, he easily tore the cloth from her leaving her completely naked on his lap.

Jack squeezed one of her breasts, his fingers thrusting up, his thumb caressing her clitoris.

Jack groaned. “My girl…”
Harley’s eyes rolled. “Puddin...ah...Jack...”

He purred. “Call me Joker...just once pumpkin...”

He thrust his fingers up, grinning at the sound of how wet she was...wet, soft, and wanting...he licked his lips. “Come on Harls...”

Harley groaned. “Uh...Joker....ah!!”

She came again, her body tightening as Jack’s fingers thrust up into her.

He groaned. “Uh, Harley...”

He pulled his fingers away which nearly caused her to collapse against him. He moved quickly pulling his slacks open and nearly ripping his boxers aside to free himself. He grabbed the side of her hip with one hand and held his erection guiding her down on him.

They both moaned together as their bodies joined together. Harley wrapped her arms around his shoulders, pressing her forehead to her lover’s.

She stared into his eyes, her voice low and thick with emotion.

“My Joker,” she growled with a grin.

Jack grinned back at her, his hands sliding up her sides then back down again. He grabbed her ass and pressed her down on him.

“My girl, you’ll always be my girl Harley...always.” Jack growled and thrust up into her.

Harley cried out as she thrust back, pressing her mouth to his, her tongue thrust into his mouth at the same time as she rolled her hips.

Jack groaned, squeezing her ass.

They moved together, the car shifting with their fucking. Jack drove her down on him growling and panting as her fluids washed over him.

“Grrr...Harley...Harls...” He snarled, pressing his head back against the seat.

Harley licked his cheek with a shudder. “Uh puddin...”

She came with a jerk of her entire body, clamping down around him. She cried out loudly, thrusting faster and harder until she was a shuddering mess of over stimulated pleasure.

Jack cried out, his eyes closing and his brow knitting with the intensity of his pleasure as he burst inside her with a jerk of his entire body.

He shuddered, his hair falling around his face as Harley kept moving, rolling her hips for a few more minutes until he had to grab her and hold her against him, his face buried against her shoulder, her hair covering his face as he held on tightly to her.

Harley held him, stroking his green hair back.

“I love you. I love you...” she whispered softly.

Jack purred. “Hmm...I love you...never forget Harley...I love you.”
Harley glanced sideways at Jack and grinned. He looked dashing she thought, dressed in a silver grey jacket and vest, with black slacks a white shirt and a terra cotta colored tie. He had on a dark brown wide brim hat pulled low on his head, his dark green hair only barely visible underneath. The pointed oxfords he wore matched the hat, in color, perfectly. He had on a pair of dark lensed bronze metal aviator sunglasses to hide his face and his unusually blue eyes. Jack held his wife’s hand tightly in his brown gloved hand as they walked down the street, his other hand in the pocket of his slacks. He looked casual and relaxed with a lazy smile on his red painted lips. Harley grinned with a shiver; all she wanted to do was kiss those lips.

Harley caught a glimpse of herself and Jack in a mirror in one of the stores that they walked by. She had played up her white porcelain complexion and hair by having her hair up in two braided buns on either side of her head, which drew attention to her long pale neck and her snow white hair. She received a few sideways looks from people passing by, but no one reacted oddly, most just smiled and gave her quizzical looks. Harley thought if anyone found the way she and Jack looked to be strange they gave no indication. Harley smirked at the thought—this was Gotham where a rainbow of hair and skin colors were seen everyday, and two people with stark white skin and unusual hair wouldn’t stand out all that much.

Harley grinned squeezing Jack’s hand, the leather of his gloves creaked slightly. He glanced over at her with a soft smile. She could see a hint of his unusual blue eyes as he gave her a red lipsticked grin shocking off his perfect teeth against his red lips. Harley, dressed up in the new clothing that Agatha sent over, smiled back with pure happiness at Jack, a little skip in her step. She felt good today. She reached up and adjusted the pair of sunglasses she was wearing, the frame and lenses of her Elton John style glasses were both a dark shade of pink which made her see the world with literal, rose-colored glasses. She wore a pair of pink denim leggings with a matching pair of wedge pink sneakers and a black shirt with scalloped edges and a white peter pan collar, all of which made her feel very cute. She was also carrying a pink, dome fabric umbrella which she had resting on her shoulder and a pink purse that was draped across her middle and rode along her hip as the two of them strolled down the sidewalk. Not too far behind them, blending into the crowd, was Frost. He was dressed casually today, which Harley found weird. The tall man was wearing khaki slacks and a simple white button down shirt, looking like every other moderately attractive man on the streets of Gotham on an early fall day. Hell, she thought, the shirt wasn't even tucked in! It was so strange that each time she glanced behind her and caught a glimpse of him, she would giggle.

She felt Jack jerk her arm slightly. “Stop staring there Harley, if someone is watching they'll make Frost. Besides, you keep laughing at the poor man, you are going to hurt his feelings.” Jack’s lips curled into a smirk.

Harley nodded, but she looked over her shoulder at Frost who had stopped to look at dresses in a shop window. She giggled again which caused Jack to yank playfully on her arm. She quickly turned back around and spun her umbrella on her shoulder holding it upright better to protect herself from the sunlight.

They only had to walk another block before they saw the coffee shop that Firebug had asked them to meet her at this afternoon. Harley had been surprised to get a message from the wrestler sent to her via Alex. Harley had so many questions about how Firebug had known to contact Alex, but she figured Alex’s tentacles in the Gotham information business were wide and far reaching. Any message sent out was bound to come through him at some point even if he wasn’t currently active in the information business any longer.
Jack stopped and pointed. “There it is.”

The coffee shop, The Gotham HideOut, occupied a corner of an old turn to the century brick building. The shop had two large windows with the name of the shop painted across the top of the glass in a style of rustic lettering that reminded Harley of a floral shop for some reason, though the lettering also made her think warmth and comfort. Jack pushed the door open, a small bell lightly tinkled as he held the door open for her, the warm, comforting smell of coffee rolled over them both. Harley grinned as she stepped inside, closing her umbrella at the same time. The aroma made her think of rainy days curled under a blanket on the couch, snuggling with her husband. Not that they had had many days like that, but the warm, delicious scent of coffee immediately made her want to do just that. The inside of the shop matched the lettering. There was a homey, rustic feel to the place with the rich brown hardwood floors and exposed brick walls. A large glass display case was filled with delicious looking pastries, and a large board behind the baristas—all of whom looked like they had stepped off the covers of some twenty-something fashion magazine—that held long lists of coffee choices.

Harley quickly spotted Firebug sitting at a table by herself, her green hair unmistakable. She looked quite different when she wasn’t covered in mud and half naked, Harley realized. Firebug, or Bea Bonilla da Costa, had her bright green hair up in a long ponytail, dressed in a pair of black leggings, boots and a Ramones t-shirt. She was currently looking at her phone while idly spinning a large white coffee cup with her other hand.

Harley tugged Jack with her as she hurried over. “Bea?” she asked and the young woman smiled frowning only slightly as she asked. “Harley, Joker?”

Harley nodded. “That’s us.”

Bea motioned at her table. “Please--have a seat.”

Jack pulled out the chair for Harley, leaning over to kiss her cheek. “Would you like a drink my sweets?”

“Oh yes please.” Harley smiled at him reaching up to stroke his chin. Jack returned the smile as he stood. “And what would my pumpkin pie?”

“Mm...how about a white mocha?” Harley asked.

Jack touched the brim of his hat. “As you wish,” he said before he stepped away, his long legs quickly taking him across the room to the counter. Harley watched him with a soft smile.

Bea asked softly. “That was an amazing fight last night between him and Bane.”

Harley turned around. “You know Bane?”

Bae shook her head. “No, I mean, no one does, but Viktoria...I mean Dr. October. I know her. She has been working with me and my little issue.”

Harley frowned her attention fully on Bea. “Issue?”

Bea frowned. Harley could see there was something there she wanted to talk about, but instead the other woman asked. “I know you offered me a job...something away from the fight club and Falcone...”

Harley reached over and placed her hand over the top of the other woman’s. “No, I offered you a place with our family. We’re not a gang or an organization, we’re a family.”
Bea frowned. “Like the mob?”

Harley chuckled. “Only vaguely. No, we are a real family and a real family sticks together.”

Bea picked up her coffee as Harley tilted her head. “Why don’t you tell me how you ended up in the fight club doing mud wrestling for money.”

Bea laughed. “Well, I ended up there because of my brother. He came into the country illegally and I came here after him. Some...things happened and my brother Lajos, he got himself in debt to the Falcone family; he had to do some work for them and I helped. I was in an accident, my brother was killed.” She suppressed a sigh and went on in a tight tone. “I found my way to Falcone and his doctor, Viktoria October. I stayed because I needed the money to pay off Lajos’ debt, but October was also helping me.” Jack returned and set Harley’s coffee in front of her taking the seat next to his wife. Harley smiled. “Bea was just explaining why she was working at the fight club.”

Bea smiled, hesitated, took a breath. “I...the accident...something happened to me and now I can do things?”

Jack slid his sunglasses down to looked at the green haired woman over the top of his glasses. “Things?”

Bea blinked seeing the unusual shade of blue that was Jack’s eyes. He smiled at her. “Do tell my dear, what things?”

Bea stared at the two of them and it was clear she was weighing something in her mind. She sighed, chewing her bottom lip for a moment before she cupped the finger of one hand with the other and held it across the table. Jack and Harley leaned in close to look at her finger and both of the gasped in surprise as green flame engulfed Bea’s finger. She held it for a breath, then just a quickly the flame disappeared.

Jack giggled. “Oh now, that is neat!”

Harley picked up her coffee with a grin. “So, that’s your little problem?” Bea nodded. “I can’t control it very well, only in small doses like that. Dr. October was helping me not just figuring out what I can do, but helping me with controlling the flame.”

Jack sipped his coffee. “So how much fire can you produce?”

“Only my hands, but Dr. October thinks I could do more.” Bea picked up her coffee cup.

Harley smiled. “So what would it take for you to join our little family unit Bea?”

Bea looked between them. “If you can get me out from under Falcone, and my brother’s debt, I’m yours.”

Jack chuckled. “I think we might be able to help you out there my dear and appropriately named Firebug. I have a little job planned that will not only bring Falcone to his knees, but will announce to all of Gotham that there is a new threat in town, a new family of clowns in Gotham’s circus.”

Jack glanced at Harley over the top of his sunglasses, the two of them sharing a chuckle.

Bea looked between them, but Harley put her coffee down and pulled her purse onto her lap. She opened it and rummaged inside before she pulled out a card and handed it to Bea.

Bea took the card and examined it. The card looked like a joker playing card with the bright image of a laughing clown with red lips and green hair. On the back of the image was an address.

Jack stood, took Harley’s hand and gently pulled her to her feet.

“Come to that address this evening and you can meet the rest of the family, my dear.” Jack pulled Harley against him. Jack turned his face to gaze at Harley. “I think you will find we are all a rather close knit group.”

Harley giggled and traced Jack’s bottom lip with her finger. He turned and nodded to Bea. “We hope we see you there darling.”

Harley waved. “See you soon!”

Bea watched them go with a small smile. Maybe wrestling with Harley had been just the thing she needed.

*

Bruce was dressed casually in black slacks and a white dress shirt, the sleeves of which were rolled up. His simple oxfords barely made a noise as he walked down the stairs into the Batcave, carefully balancing a tray with a plate of chocolate chip cookies on it and two glasses of milk. He was greeted by the sounds of keys clicking. Barbara Pennyworth looked far younger than Dick at the moment, in a pair of rolled up jeans and a long sleeve black and white striped top. She had on a pair of white tennis shoes, her red hair styled around her face and sat at the wall of computers, her fingers flying over the keyboard, her eyes darting among the multiple screens. She looked intense with a slight frown on her lips, her nose wrinkled as she worked. Bruce could see by the images on the screens that she was doing research on Wayne Tech.

Bruce smiled. Barbara he was a lovely young woman, sweet, friendly and determined. He could see a lot of her uncle’s fire in her as she read over police reports, studied the few cases he had solved as Batman, read over the specs for his equipment, vehicles, familiarizing herself with all his tech and his journal entries, reports on his encounters as Batman. But there was one thing that wasn’t in the files that he felt he should talk to her about.

Bruce walked over, set the tray down between them though not in her space, pulled the second desk chair out and sat down. Barbara didn’t startle at all. She just smiled, her eyes roaming over a file.

“It looks like you are slowly tackling bigger and bigger crimes, almost like you are circling the mob...or at least that’s what an amateur sleuth might deduce from the crimes you have gone after in recent months, say--the last eight.” Barbara turned to look at him. “You have a plan to go after the big crime families in Gotham or is it just coincidence?” She spun the chair around to face him, the front tips of her shoes on the floor while moving the chair back and forth.

“I’m not sure,” Bruce admitted softly. “There are other issues to consider. For each head I cut off, another, potentially more dangerous one takes its place. If I could cut off the main head, perhaps, I might make a major difference, but when there is a power vacuum, there is always someone who likes to fill it. I just have to be satisfied with the little progress I’m making now, but I hope to cut off the main head soon.” Bruce spoke with a firm rod of steel in his voice.

“So what you’re saying is that you’re not sure you want to take out Falcone?” Barbara asked reaching over for one of the cookies and grabbing her glass of milk.

Bruce nodded, also picking up a cookie. “I’m not sure if taking out Falcone would be the best thing for Gotham no...there are a lot of elements worse than Falcone who could step into the void left by his absence.” Bruce took a bite of his cookie and chewed thoughtfully before he swallowed. He picked up his glass of milk and took a sip before he spoke again. “I came down here to tell you something that I felt might be important for you to know if you are going to be working for me.”

Barbara lifted her brows in question as she took another bite of cookie.

Bruce sighed. “I’m assuming Alfred gave you the public version of events regarding what happened to Wayne Manor?”

Barbara nodded. “Yeah, something about a gas leak…”

Bruce nodded. “That truth is, it wasn’t a gas leak. It was my brother.”

Barbara frowned. “Your brother? I thought your brother died in a boating accident or something…”

Bruce sighed and set the half eaten cookie down. He rubbed his hands along his thighs before he spoke. “My brother...Jack...I thought he was dead, I really did. I was there when it happened...as Batman. I was investigating activity at a chemical factory, and he was there.” Bruce closed his eyes for a moment. “My brother was involved in criminal activity. I don’t know the extent of it, only that he was deeper involved than I realized. We fought, he fell over the edge of a railing. I caught him, but then...I let him go and he felt into a vat of acid. His wife was there as well. She threw herself in after him. I thought Jack was dead...I thought they were both dead, but Jack…” Bruce looked at Barbara as he spoke. “He wasn’t dead, though he was changed. I can’t explain it, but...he is alive. He came to the manor and he is the one who burned it down. Jack destroyed our home to get back at me for what happened...for what happened to his wife...” Bruce’s voice broke.

Barbara looked stricken, the color drained from her face, but she waited, letting Bruce collect himself.

Bruce took a deep breath through his nose and said softly. “That is why Alfred left. He was here when Jack arrived, spoke to my brother. I understand why Alfred left...Jack was like a son to him...we both are...were...and seeing how Jack had changed...” Bruce shook his head. “Anyway, I thought you should know the truth about me, about what happened and why Alfred left.”

Barbara didn’t say anything. She wanted to, she had so many questions to ask, there was so much that Bruce wasn’t telling her that she wanted to know, but she was smart enough to realize now wasn’t the time. She would have to save her questions for another time.

“Thank you for telling me,” she said softly.

Bruce shrugged. “I just, I didn’t want you working for me under false pretenses, I needed you to know the truth. I drove Alfred away...Jack and me both.”

Barbara frowned then said softly. “Family is hard. I mean, no one’s got a perfect family. So you and your brother got some drama...maybe you can work it out, but even if you don’t, family sometimes is the people to choose not that people you’re related to.”

Bruce looked up at her and smiled. “Thank you Barbara.”

“Pfft, call me Babs.” She turned picking up another cookie.

Bruce smiled. “Babs.”

*
Dressed only in her black bra and panties, Harley sat cross-legged on their bed watching her husband get dressed. Tonight was going to be the first meeting for the new gang, Joker’s gang (and ostensibly, Harley’s) and Jack seemed rather concerned with how he was going to dress. He wanted to present the new him in a certain light, a new image...plus, he was also concerned about his plan to kidnap Falcone’s son, Mario. Jack had explained his plan to Harley as: kidnap Mario and make an announcement to Gotham; to challenge Batman to come and rescue the son of Gotham’s most notorious criminal, the head of all the crime families in Gotham; and to make Batman feel the sting of failure.

Jack giggled to himself as he adjusted his tie. The suit he had chosen for tonight was a dark purple three piece suit with gold accents in the threading, an asymmetrical four pocket vest in an even darker shade of purple on the edge of being black with a silver chain that ran across Jack’s abdomen. The shirt underneath was white and the tie he had chosen, held in place by a silver tie pin, was a shade of blue that almost perfectly matched his eyes, with a pair of sharply pointed black and purple oxfords.

Jack ran the palms of his hands carefully over his green hair that was slicked back as he inspected the suit.

Harley smiled, watching Jack as he looked at himself in the mirror. “Alex did such a good job with your suits,” she said with a smile.

Jack chuckled running a hand down the front of his jacket. “I have to admit, for a man who thinks holey jeans are the height of fashion, he did a fine job. I only told him where to go and a list of colors I liked; my friend did the rest and he did well.”

Jack turned and threw his hands out. “You like?”

Harley giggled. “Oh, I like very much puddin. Purple is a gorgeous color on you.”

Jack’s smile spread across his face. “Mm...I will always take compliments from the woman I love. Help me with my lipstick sweets, then you should probably get dressed, not that I have any issue at all with your current state of undress, but no sense distracting the gang,” he said with a wink.

Harley giggled, hopped up off the bed, and hurried over to her makeup. She quickly searched through her lipsticks until she came up with the one she was looking for, a shade of red lipstick called “On Fire.” She moved over to Jack and stood in front of him on her tiptoes. She held his chin in her hand as she applied the color to his lips.

“So, how are we going to kidnap this Mario guy?” Harley asked, her attention on his lips.

Jack waited, his blue eyes following hers until she was finished before he pressed his lips together rubbing the color on his lips. He loved the expression she made when she was intent on a task--determined and cute.

“I have no idea. I’m hoping that your other new friend, Dr. October, shows up with Bane and that our new little Firebug might have some ideas too. Once we have our little worm, I know exactly how to set the trap for Falcone...and a little introduction to Gotham. And to the Batman, of course.” Jack smiled with a little crook at the corner of his mouth. “I also have a little idea that I’m rolling around about paying Bruce a visit soon. But first...Mario.”

Harley smiled. “I do like that color on you.”

Jack purred pulling her close, pressing her nearly naked body up against his while his hands slid down to cup her rear. “I think later I’m going to see how well this lipstick stays after some vigorous bowl licking.” He grinned and lifted his non-existent brows at her.

Harley began to giggled and playfully smacked his shoulder. “Puddin!”

Harley shivered with a blush. “I better get dressed.”

Jack brushed his nose against hers. “Yes, I suppose you should, but later…” He kissed her deeply, his tongue sliding into her mouth and he dipped her back. Harley nearly purred with pleasure, her fingers pressed into his shoulder. He set her back on her feet and slowly stepped back, but when she hurried to the closet he gave her rear a light, playful smack.

Harley squeaked and laughed as she hurried over to the closet. She pulled it open and reached for the dress she had hanging on the back of the door, a little black skater dress with button short sleeves and peek-a-boo sheer mesh panel that made up the top of the dress, sleeves and the back with a little velvet collar and velvet ends to the short sleeves. She pulled out a pair of red suede flats with black laces on the side. Jack watched her intently as she dressed, as she slipped the dress on over her head, then pulled the flats on. She sat down at her vanity and started to brush out her hair, parted it, pulled some of it back into a ponytail. Harley then used two of her fingers to roll up the front of her hair to the side in two large victory curls. She pinned them in place, then pulled out the ponytail. She next fluffed out the rest of her white locks so they cascaded down the sides of her head and draped over her shoulders.

Jack smiled all while watching her; he liked watching her dress, do her hair, put on her makeup. He took a deep breath. There was something sexy about watching her dress that was almost as alluring as getting her out of her clothing. As he gazed at her, Jack realized how hollow his life would have been if he hadn’t found her again...just simple things like watching her dress would have been lost...for a moment Jack was almost overwhelmed by that hollow, lost feeling, that emptiness that would have existed in him without her; almost immediately that feeling of hollowness twisted into anger, anger at the world, but mostly, anger at his brother. Bruce would never understand, never truly understand what he had tried to do to Jack. So many times he had tried to take Harley away from him and then he succeeded. The fact was that he now knew that Bruce didn’t love him, had never loved him. If Bruce cared about him he would never have done what he did...he wouldn’t have kept his secrets, he wouldn’t have tried to take Harley...he wouldn’t have let him die all for that...kid he had taken under his wing. If Bruce loved his brother, he would never have replaced him.

Harley had leaned forward, glancing at her husband in the mirror as she started to paint her lips with black lipstick. She noticed that Jack wasn’t watching her any longer, his eyes had gotten this far off look. From her vantage point, she would swear she could see them change from bright blue to almost white. Jack’s lips twitched and she could see tension in his jaw. She quickly stood up, hurrying over to him.

“Puddin? Jack--Joker?” She whispered in concern, her fingers gently glided over his cheeks as she tried to get him to focus on her.

“Puddin, come back, please,” Harley whispered, her voice laced with worry.

Just when she was beginning to think something was very wrong, Jack’s eyes snapped over to hers and he giggled. “Hey there pumpkin, you ready?”

Harley frowned with a question in her eyes. “Puddin?”
Jack smiled wrapping his arms around her waist and pulled her up against him. “What’s wrong sweets?” He frowned. “You only did half your lipstick…”

Harley looked confused as she gazed at him then said softly. “It’s nothing.”

Jack kissed her nose. “Go finish putting on your face sweets, then lets get downstairs.”

Harley nodded with only a slight frown and a confused look, but she said nothing, returning to her chair to finish with her lipstick.

*

The downstairs of their home was crowded with everyone in attendance, including the members of the Red Hood gang, Bea, Zsasz (who it was clear to Harley at least, was completely smitten with Bea), Frost, Agatha, and Alex.

Harley came in from the kitchen carrying a tray with a variety of drinks, from a couple of mugs of coffee, two Smirnoff Cherry Blasts (which Harley was very proud of herself for making), a hot chocolate and some butter rum cocktails. She was in the middle of passing out the drinks when there was a knock at the door.

Jack, who had been sitting on the couch talking to Jason about the latest “bust” that the Red Hood gang had performed, grinned brightly as he pushed himself up. “That must be Bane and the good doctor!”

He hurried to the door and pulled it open. Bane, without his mask and wearing a simple t-shirt that seemed to be stretched to its limits and a pair of jeans, filled the doorway. It was clear the man was bigger than he used to be, taller, broader. His muscles, even with the t-shirt he wore, were more defined, more noticeable. Jack guessed that his friend had gained quite a few inches in height and perhaps a hundred pounds at least. When Bane saw Jack, his expression went from a sort of neutral state into a full blown smile. Bane grabbed Jack, wrapped his big hands around the thinner man’s upper arms and lifted him off his feet and into a tight bear hug. Jack only had enough time to respond with a slight, “Ah!” sound before he was being hugged by the bear of a man.

Harley giggled pressing her lips together on a wide smile.

Jack’s arms were pinned to his side as Bane hugged him, pressing Jack against his chest and rocking Jack back and forth. Jack grinned the entire time.

“Shit man, I thought you were dead!” Bane said loudly with a hitch in his voice. Harley noticed that his voice sounded rougher, deeper than it had been before she and her puddin had died. Bane squeezed Jack tight. “Fuck man...it killed me to think we had lost you both. I just...it hurt man...it hurt…” Bane said more quietly.

Jack groaned his head thrown back, his tongue sticking out dramatically. “Can’t breathe! Going to die again…”

Bane laughed though Harley noted his laughter didn’t contain that free open sound it had had before, like something was stilted in him. It hurt her to hear him sounding so different. She would have to find out more details about what happened to him, about the drug Viktoria said he was addicted to...and maybe there was a way for Jack to help him.

Bane chuckled giving Jack another squeeze. “Sorry buddy.”

Bane placed Jack back down on his feet though he kept a hold of Jack’s upper arms looking him over. Bane grinned as he spoke. “I like the green hair dude, not sure about the lack of eyebrows, but you manage to make it look good.”

Jack smiled. “What can I say, I’m a leader in fashion. Soon all the kids will be throwing themselves into vats of acid to achieve this look.”

Bane snorted. “Glad to see an acid bath hasn’t harmed your sense of humor any.”

Jack laughed. “Never my friend, never.”

Bane laughed with Jack as he turned and looked into the room, his gazed distracted when he saw Harley.

“Harley!!” He grinned at the pale woman.

Jack just barely got himself out of the way in time as Bane barreled into the room and grabbed Harley, causing her to drop her tray (thank goodness she had gotten all the drinks off of it she thought) as he lifted her off her feet and pressed her against him in a heavy hug.

“There’s my sweetheart!!” Bane laughed, though still not with the same freedom as he had had before. It was clear to the doctor part of Harley that Bane had been through some trying events that had changed him since their deaths. She wondered if she could convince Harleen to talk to Bane, or if she could convince Bane to talk to Harleen, maybe work through what he had gone through since their deaths...Harley let the thought go as Bane squeezed her tight, the big man hugged and pressed her against his chest, rocking her a bit as he did so.

“Damn girl.” Bane choked a little. “I’m so damn glad to see you alive, to see you both alive.” He sniffed. “About killed me when you two were gone, but now...look at you!” Bane grinned. “You both look good, a lot more white than I remember, but all you white people look the same to me.”

Harley giggled wrapping her arms around Bane as best she could and hugged him back. “So glad to see you back.”

Jack snorted from behind Bane at the white comment as he walked around and again took his place on the couch watching Bane and Harley with an amused and pleased grin.

Bane smiled down at Harley. “You look spectacular Harley, pretty as an angel. I love the hair, suits you.”

Harley giggled. “You look good too Bane. A lot bigger than I remember.”

Bane nodded. “Yeah, seems we all been through a few changes.”

Bane chuckled setting Harley delicately on her feet, glancing toward Jack, then back to Harley with a smile before turning his gaze to look at everyone in the room, taking in each member of the gang. “God damn, it's so good to see you all again.”

Jason had stood up and reached over taking Bane’s hand with a smile. “Good to see you big guy.”

Bane chuckled and yanked a startled Jason into his embrace giving the young man a hug and ruffling his hair. He had just released Jason when Trope, (her hair dyed purple with blue bangs) who had been waiting patiently, jumped up from where she had been sitting on Thea’s lap and hurried over, throwing her arms around Bane. “I’ve missed you.”

“Hey sweetheart!” Bane wrapped an arm around her and motioned for Thea (whose entire head of hair was a light sky blue) to come over with the other. Thea leapt up and rushed over, both women wrapping their arms around Bane.

Bane hugged them both with a gentle laugh. “There are my girls. I miss my two unicorn sisters.”

The two women laughed. Trope looked up at him. “Unicorn sisters?”

Bane grinned. “That’s how I always thought of you two...with the hair and all.”

He shrugged slightly embarrassed, but the two young women simply hugged him in response.

He sighed, let them go, and turned toward Viktoria who had come in and closed the door behind her, but stayed where she was by the front door while Bane greeted everyone. She had a soft expression in her eyes, a cross between being pleased and upset as she watched Bane with his adopted family. He had spoken to her about these people when he had been able to, about how they had met, the feeling of family he had received from them, a feeling that hadn’t been part of his life much for many years. She had felt how deeply Bane cared about these people and how acutely their loss had affected him. She had tried to encourage him to reconnect with those who were still alive, but he had told her after the death of their group’s leaders, and his new condition, he just hadn’t felt right about seeing them. But now, with the two main people alive, Bane had been eager to return home.

Bane motioned to her. “Guys, I want you to meet Dr. Viktoria October. This woman saved my life in more ways than one.”

Viktoria blushed. She looked like a professional in a simple black pencil skirt with a dark blue blouse and a pair of simple matching pumps. “Bane…” she began, but Bane grinned and walked back toward her and put his arm around her shoulders. He pulled her against his side affectionately. “Hey it's true!” he said with a smile. “If not for you, I don’t think I would have made it.”

He gave her shoulders a squeeze. “You not only saved me from dying, but you’ve saved my heart too.” He gave her a soft smile Harley noted, a smile filled with tenderness. Oh yeah Harley thought. Bane was in love.

Viktoria blushed tucking a lock of her hair behind her ear as she glanced down, slightly embarrassed. Bane grinned looking at everyone in the room.

“This drug she came up with, it saved my life.”

Viktoria murmured. “It’s also made you an addict.”

Bane snorted. “Honey, that’s a small price to pay.”

There was an awkward silence until Harley motioned them in. “Grab a seat you two, you’re part of the family now. Oh Bane, Viktoria, let me introduce Bea, who I’m assuming you already know as Firebug, our newest family member.”

Bea smiled from where she sat on one of the kitchen chairs, a drink in her hand. “Hey Bane, Vik.”

Viktoria looked surprised. “You’re here?”

Bea shrugged. “Hey don’t look so surprised, I hate Falcone as much as you do.”

Bane nodded. “Nice to see you Bea and glad to know we aren’t the only ones with a Falcone issue.”

Bea laughed. “Yeah, well we all have an issue with Falcone.”
Bane leaned against the wall. Viktoria moved to stand near him. Bane rested a hand on her shoulder as he turned his attention to Jack. “So, Viktoria said you wanted to help us get out from under Falcone?”

Jack nodded. “That’s right. My plan is to wear Falcone down into a whimpering mess of a man, then I’m going to kill him. A slow, fun destruction with the added bonus, I’m going to do it all in front of Batman...and Gotham gets to meet their new, soon-to-be favorite criminal, The Joker and his gang of Jokesters…” Jack tapped his chin. “Though on second thought we can work on that name.” Jack laughed.

Alex took a sip of his drink. “So, what’s the plan?”

“We are going to kidnap Falcone’s son Mario and kill him on live television!” Jack said proudly.

Everyone was quiet for a moment. Harley, who had walked over and sat on her husband’s lap, glanced around. Everyone seemed to be slightly in shock by the idea, but she smiled when she realized no one looked against it either.

Alex whistled. “That is one fucking bold move...Joker.”

Jack grinned. “I know. I thought it might be a nice way not only to announce ourselves to Gotham, but to let the mobsters know we’re coming for them AND to let Batman know we mean business. We are going to wipe Gotham free of it’s mob influence and replace it with us, but now we are going to do so on a much larger, much grander scale. It’s going to be fun!! And in the process we are going to needle Batman until I finally kill him.”

Bane frowned. “We’re going after the Batman too?”

Jack laughed. “Oh, you don’t know the news do you my friend?”

Bane frowned deeper. “Well, I know it was Batman you were fighting when you...died.”

Jack nodded and leaned forward, a maniacal grin on his face his blue eyes dancing with a strange mirth that was somewhere between humor and murder. “Yes, yes, but did you know, my dear friend, that Batman is none other than Gotham’s favorite playboy...Bruce Wayne?”

Bane blinked in confusion. “What? But...ain’t Bruce Wayne your brother?”

Jack giggled, his eyes gleefully manic. “The very same! Isn’t it delightful?”

Jack started to laugh, but the laughter was strained and haunting, sending chills up the spines of everyone here. Jack leaned back, continuing to laugh until he had to reach up with his fingers to wipe the tears from his eyes. “It’s the best joke EVER!” He snorted on a little giggle.

Harley had her arm around Jack’s shoulders. She stroked her fingers through the fine short hairs at the back of his neck while he laughed. She could feel the subtle shift in her husband, the tensing of his muscles as he spoke of his brother, then the strange relaxing of his shoulders as he giggled. This close and knowing her lover, she could hear the sorrow in his laughter, the pain that his humor was masking. Jack was hurting, deeply, deeper than maybe even she could heal.

She leaned close, placed a kiss against his ear, then another at his temple. Jack relaxed more, his giggles easing, his eyes drifting slightly as he leaned into her kisses. He stroked his hand that was resting on her knees gently along her leg. Jack turned his blue eyes on her. She could see he was thankful for her attention, bringing him back from the edge he was teetering on, and his giggles died down until only a slightly manic smile remained. He grinned and caught her chin with his long, agile fingers and tenderly guided her mouth to his where he kissed her passionately, his tongue sliding into her mouth, forgetting about anyone else that was in the room as he delved into her mouth to let the warmth and passion that she created him in burn away the pain that was mixed with his love for his brother.

Jack bit her bottom lip with a growl tugging back playfully, now back to his more usual calm.

Harley reached into his jacket and pulled out Jack’s package of cigarettes and his lighter. She smiled as she placed the cigarette between her lips. Her thumb rubbed over the lighter, frowning only slightly. She missed the lighter she had stolen for him...gone now...she would have to get him another special lighter she thought, a Joker lighter. Jack watched her as she lit his cigarette. She clicked the lighter closed, held the cigarette between her fingers as she took a deep drag on it. The smoke didn’t burn down her throat and into her lungs like it used to do; the burn was still there, but muted. It was something to think about another time she thought as she smiled at her husband, taking the cigarette and gently placing it between Jack’s waiting lips. She blew the smoke out slowly. The smoke rolled along and caressed Jack cheek. He smiled lazily, removed the cigarette from his mouth and tugged Harley close. He kissed her. Harley made a soft sound of pleasure before she pulled gently away and laid her head against his with a whispered.

“You all right now puddin’?”

Jack smiled. “Yes my pumpkin, much better.”

He sighed contentedly and turned his attention back to the room of people who waited patiently.

Bane spoke first with a shake of his head. “So you’re telling me it was your brother that let you fall?”

“Oh Bane sweetie, he didn’t just let me fall, he dropped me on purpose.” Jack replied with a smile as smoke slowly rolled from between his lips. “He was holding me and simply let me go.”

Bane started at Jack, then muttered. “That is fucking cold.”

Jack shrugged. “No one can hurt you the way family can.” Jack said quietly before he smile. "Ah well, as they say: family is the people you choose and I have chosen all of you.”

Harley knew Jack meant that, but she also knew that Bruce had cut his brother so deeply that Jack would never recover, not until Bruce was dead...and perhaps not even then. Harley was sure that what Bruce had done to Jack would never and could never been repaired.

Bea looked confused. “Bruce Wayne is Batman? Is that what you’re saying...and he’s your brother, so that makes you…”

“The late great Jack Wayne. That is who I was--Bruce Wayne’s younger, insane and always in trouble little brother.” Jack said softly. “But Jack Wayne died a horrible death at the hands of Batman. I on the other hand, have been resurrected as the Joker.” He tilted his head at Bea, and the smile on his face grew just a little as he twisted his hand elegantly and bowed his head.

He smiled sweetly and rested his chin in the palm of his hand. “Is that going to be a problem Firebug?”

Bea put her hands up. “No, hell no. Family is complicated, so yeah...I mean no. You don’t have to worry about me telling anyone anything.”

Jack smiled just a little wider yet. “Oh good. Now boys and girls, we need a plan on picking up our little worm.”
Viktoria held up her hand a little hesitantly. Everyone turned to look at her. Under the scrutiny of the assembled people, she felt growing anxiety, but quietly said, “Um…I have an idea of where you can easily take Mario from.”

Jack grinned. “Oh do tell! Share with the class!”

Viktoria frowned slightly, but continued. “Mario likes to party. He has a fiance, but he likes to party without her nearly every night at this club owned by his father, though I don’t think Falcone has ever stepped foot in there. The club he likes to go to, Inferno, it has this gimmick where the staff wear horns and fangs, but Mario hangs out in the VIP section known as The Second Circle, where all the sex and drug use takes place. Anything you want want in terms of sex and drugs, can be found in Inferno’s Second Circle--anything goes. That is where Mario likes to spend his time nearly every night. The only reason I know anything about it is because I’ve been called out there to administer naloxone to that fool on more than one occasion. How Falcone’s idiot of a son is still alive is a medical miracle. Anyway, it’s a little bit of a BDSM sort of club.”

Jack’s smile was wickedly gleeful. “A nightclub, really? How interesting.”

He leaned back pulling Harley close. “How would you feel about a night on the town my sweets?”

Two nights later, Trogg, dressed in an all black suit and trying his best to look good and professional, was hurrying into the Inferno. The red, pink and purple neon that made up the sign of Inferno pulsed in the wet Gotham night. The rain made the colors of the sign dance along the sidewalk and the liquid darkness of the asphalt. The color choice always bugged him about this place. It was called Inferno, shouldn’t the lights be red and orange or something? Trogg shook his hair as he got out of the limousine he had been driving and opened the back door.

Four scantily clad young women, none older than twenty-three, all slid out of the car giggling. Each one of them was a paid escort, all paid for by Mario. Trogg leered at the women as he motioned at the club.

“Follow me ladies.” Trogg turned and headed to the door. There was a long line, wrapping around the corner of the building with people all waiting to try to get into the dance club. Trogg grinned, noting plenty of beautiful women were waiting. Trogg narrowed his eyes, picking out half a dozen as he walked swiftly up to the bouncer, the four escorts hurrying along behind him.

The bouncer on duty tonight was a man named Daniel who had the typical bouncer build, tall, his chest and shoulders muscled and wide enough that any major league football team would have been pleased for a chance to get a hold of him. He was dressed all in black too, black slacks, black t-shirt with the name of the club blazoned across it in bright pink and purple; the shirt looked as if it was struggling to keep all of Daniel inside. Daniel’s blonde hair was cut in a ducktail with just the hint of a mustache across his upper lip.

As Trogg came closer Daniel nodded. “Hey Trogg.”

Trogg laughed. “Hey Daniel.” He motioned the young man closer. Daniel knew the drill and leaned down as Trogg hissed. “Four blondes, a brunette and two blacks girls, they are all within the first twenty, send them all to the Second Circle, got it?”

Daniel nodded then grinned. “Mr. Mario feeling good tonight?”

Trogg chuckled. “Yeah he is. He is planning on partying until the wee hours.”
Daniel laughed. “I don’t know how that man walks straight, let alone stays engaged.”

Trogg shrugged. “The privileges of money.”

Daniel unhooked the rope behind him and stepped aside as Trogg led the young ladies behind him in. Daniel gave the women a wink. “You girls have a good time.”

They all tittered and laughed following Trogg into the club.

*

Just a little ways down the street, Frost opened the car door and Jack slipped out. He was dressed in a black silk shirt, no tie, the buttons undone to the middle of his chest. He had on a pair of black slacks and a vest of purple and gold with a pair of gold and purple sharp pointed toe oxfords. He grinned, his lips blood red as he ran his hands over his hair, making sure the green locks were slicked back. He then turned and reached in to take Harley’s hand and gently pulled her out of the car.

She stood up with a smile. She was wearing a dress so tight that it looked like it was actually painted on her and not a cloth dress at all. The dress was short, black and sleeveless with asymmetrical straps over one shoulder, a deep cut out over her breasts that showed of her cleavage, the left side was a line of cutouts that started right under her breast and made their way down the entire length of her torso, showing off the fact that she was clearly not wearing any underwear. She had on a pair of stilettos with heels sharp enough to be weapons that faded from blood red to black. Her white hair hung down in rolling waves down her back.

Jack slipped his arm around Harley’s waist with a bright grin.

“Ready to paint the town red my sweets?”

Harley giggled. “Definitely.”
Safe Word

Harley frowned as she gazed around the inside of Inferno, illuminated with pink and blue lights that mixed strangely with the thick, red velvet decor and made the place feel cramped--and, she thought, that was not even accounting for the high quantity of people inside.

There were several poles scattered throughout the room on small, round elevated stages where a single person--some male, some female, and some indeterminate--danced. The floor was a slick shiny red that melded into what looked to be some thick red and gold carpet; though it was difficult to tell with the weird lighting and all the people moving about. There was a main bar draped in red velvet looking curtains that wrapped around the bar with red leather topped stools. There were red cushioned chairs as well as giant red “X’s” reminding Harley of weird crosses that ran around the outside of the club, each one with someone strapped to them arms and legs spread.

The sound of Sisters of Mercy’s “My Corrosion” was playing loud enough that the air felt like it was vibrating with its own life. Men and women were walking around the place with trays of drinks, dressed in black, shiny rubber and leather, each of them wearing chains, masks, and with exposed pierced nipples or other pierced parts of themselves exposed. There were people with whips, people in full rubber outfits with only their eyes and mouths exposed, people wearing only chains with piercings all over their bodies. Some patrons were wearing only buckles or ropes, there were people on leashes, some carrying and dancing with whips, but lastly there were the “regular” people crowded onto the dance floor or in chairs and booths drinking and watching other dancers.

As Harley looked around with slightly wide eyes, she noted that there were stairs that led up into a separate section that was cordoned off by a velvet rope and guarded by two large men dressed in black suits with leather or lace masks across their eyes. There was a kaleidoscope of lights that could be seen from that upper level, and a few scantily clad women and men going up and down the stairs, but other than that she couldn’t see anything else. She did notice that occasionally someone would come down the stairs, either a man or a woman, the man wearing nothing but a pair of leather pants, with biker boots, and the woman dressed in a spiked leather harness bra and a collar harness with a waist leg garter harness and a pair of fetish boots that looked like horse hooves. They would mingle on the dance floor and pick a few people out, and then lead them upstairs.

Jack stood for a moment, taking in the scene around him. He narrowed his eyes and wrinkled his nose as his gaze wandered over the club just before he broke out into a wide grin. “This place seems nice.”

Jack chuckled and bumped her hip with his. “Why do I feel like my aunt would know a lot more about this sort of thing than I’m comfortable with knowing she knows?” He shivered at the thought of his aunt and Frost in rubber suits and chains.

Harley giggled again. “Your aunt is very...cosmopolitan, puddin.”

Jack looked contemplative, he suddenly had an image of his aunt in black leather with a whip and Frost tied to one of the X-shaped crosses while his aunt whipped him. Jack’s eyes widened, followed by him making a goofy face just before he grabbed his wife’s hand. “I have far too vivid of an imagination sweets. I need a drink to chase away that image I just gave to myself!” He shuddered. “Going to give myself nightmares!”

Harley giggled as she was hauled across the room with Jack shoving people out of his way as he pushed through the crowd to the bar. Half these people were likely masochists anyway, Jack mused. They probably enjoyed a good shove.

When they arrived at the bar, Jack turned and grabbed Harley by the waist, lifting her up and setting her on one of the red stools. He smiled, kissing the tip of her nose which made Harley smile before he turned to get the bartender's attention.

One of the three bartenders working stepped over, a young woman wearing a black leather halter top and flared mini skirt. Her blood red hair was pulled up and back into a high ponytail with a chain that ran from her pierced nose to her ear; both ears were heavily pierced, and her chin was tattooed with a design from under her bottom lip to wrap under her chin, but her smile was sweet making her look more adorable than edgy.

“Hey, love the look, man.” She smiled looking between the two of them. “Very cool and unique, the white, white skin and I love the shade of green your hair is too.” She leaned close to Harley and gasped. “Your hair is so white! I’ve never seen anyone get their hair that shade of white, like snow. Gorgeous!”

Harley giggled and smiled. If the girl only knew. “Thank you.”

The bartender grinned as she stood back up. “So, what can I get you two?”

Jack grinned glancing at his wife. “Why thank you darling--my wife and I do try to look good. So what’s your name sweetheart?”

“You can call me Wanda.”

Jack purred, leaning his elbows on the counter. “Well aren’t you just sweet. Wanda--what a delightful name. Don’t you think that’s a delightful name Harley?” Jack smiled at his wife.

Harley giggled. “Oh it's just lovely, just like you Wanda.”

Wanda laughed, showing dimples in her cheeks. “Thank you.”

Jack grinned, his red lipstick making his teeth that much whiter. “And what, Wanda dear, would you recommend for my lady and me to drink?”

Wanda thought for a moment, then smiled. “Well, I would recommend one of our signature drinks called a BDSM; it has dark cacao liqueur, maraschino liqueur, whipped cream and a cherry on top.”

Jack chuckled. “Sounds delightful. What do you think pumpkin?”

Jack turned his attention to Harley who grinned. “Sounds fantastic.”

Wanda nodded. “Two BDSM’s coming right up.”

As the bartender moved out of the way to make their drink, Jack hopped up onto the stool next to Harley and spun around to look out onto the room, his gaze going up to the upper floor.

“Hmm...how should we get up there sweets?”

Harley had been watching the people that moved up and down the stairs; they were all good looking people, people who stood out. Harley’s attention was momentarily drawn to the door as she saw Frost enter (Agatha was still not on top of her game and while she had wanted to come along, Jack had convinced her to stay with Trope and Thea tonight and help them with Jack’s little project.)
Zsasz came in right behind Frost, and a few seconds later she saw Jason, their little team...with Bane waiting to be called in later...were all here. Harley watched as Zsasz headed over to where a demonstration was going on that seemed to be about whipping. Jason headed onto the dance floor, immediately blending in with the other dancers, and Frost went to the other end of the bar.

Wanda returned a few moments later with their drinks, a three layered concoction of dark, clear, and whipped cream with the promised cherry on top. Harley giggled with delight picking up her drink. “OH it's pretty!”

Wanda laughed at Harley’s reaction. “Thank you. You two enjoy.”

Jack picked his drink up and gave Wanda a salute with it while Harley turned around to face the interior of the club, with her drink in hand. She giggled picking up the cherry and popping it into her mouth while moving her body to the music. Jack smiled at her, taking the cherry from his drink, rolled it in the whipped cream before he leaned over to trace her lips with it.

Harley grinned and opened her mouth just slightly, letting Jack trace her lips, her tongue snaking out to lick the cherry before Jack placed it between her lips. Harley caught the cherry with her teeth holding it as her blue eyes gazed lustfully at her husband before she rolled the cherry into her mouth.

Jack growled watching her.

Harley took a sip of her drink which tasted of bitterness mixed with sweet. She licked her lips glancing toward the top floor of the club again. Jack followed her gaze, then back to Harley. He could tell she had a plan to get them up to the Second Circle. She finished her drink just as the music changed, surprisingly switching to Donna Summer’s “I Feel Love.” The lights switched to a more disco feel, flashing with a strobe effect.

Harley hopped off her stool and took Jack’s hand. Jack quickly downed the rest of the drink as Harley dragged him onto the dance floor.

She turned to face her husband putting her arms over her head which pulled her snug dress up on her shapely legs as she began to twist and rock her hips. Jack grinned, placing his hands on her hips, his fingers stroking the skin exposed by the dress’s cutouts. He pulled her close as Harley lowered her arms, arching her body into his and rolling herself to the music, her shoulders back just a little. Jack leaned in close, his head touching hers as his hands slid up her hips then round to grab her rear. He pulled her against him, sliding a beg between hers which forced her dress up further. They rolled and undulated together to the sound of Donna Summer.

Harley giggled brushing her nose against Jack’s, bringing her arms up to slip around his neck and traced his mouth with her lips.

Jack brushed his red lips against hers, letting the beat of the music and his desire for his wife guide his movements. His hands snaked up her back, his body leaning into hers as he pressed his mouth to hers, his tongue sliding sensually into her mouth.

Harley groaned dragging her lips along his tongue, while her tongue twisted with his, her hands sliding along the back of his neck.

Jack pulled Harley up, then surprised her as he made her squeal by spinning her out, forcing several other dancers to scurry out of the way.

Harley let go of his hand and put her arms in the air again, rolling her hips as she spun around giving Jack a hungry look as she rolled her shoulders and her hips.
Jack watched her move, her body turning, her hips swaying to the music. She made his groin ache and his mouth water as his eyes raked over her with longing, taking in every detail of her body as she moved.

She spun around and arched her back, the figure hugging dress showing every curve of her body. She glanced over her shoulder at her husband with a coy look and purposely stuck her rear out toward Jack. Jack licked his red lips as he reached out and grabbed her hips, pressing his fingers into the soft flesh of her curves, finding the places where the cutouts left her skin exposed, stroking the satin flesh and wishing the fabric of the dress wasn’t between him and the rest of his wife’s skin. He tugged her back up against him, pressing his pelvis against her, rubbing just slightly to tease himself and her.

Harley’s eyes rolled with pleasure, her smile spreading across her face at feel of her husband’s hard bound erection against her backside. He made her body ache for him. She giggled as she arched back to drag her hands along his cheeks, thinking how she actually wouldn’t mind strapping him to a cross and having her way with him, then she stepped out of his reach.

Jack grabbed her hand before she was too far away, pulling her back against him. She bumped up against his chest. Jack’s eyes stole down to her breasts, pressed against the chest, grinned crookedly before he looked back up to meet her gaze. He gently caressed her arms, guiding them up to place her arms on his shoulders, his fingers dancing down her arms, caressing her skin softly, sending goosebumps along her skin, before he slid her hands into a classic tango position.

Harley’s lips curved into a grin as she looked into her husband’s blue eyes as he began to move her around the dance floor in the steps of a classic tango. He moved her gracefully in time to the sensual sounds of Donna Summer’s voice, dipping her back to lick her throat or nip her chin before he would spin her around again, holding her close to him.

Harley laid her cheek against his as he weaved in place for a moment before turning them both in a quick circle; her feet moved with his as if they had done this a hundred times before. He stared into her eyes, forgetting for a moment why they were here, where they were, and even the music playing; for this moment the only thing that Jack cared about was her, his girl, in his arms. Jack smiled at her and Harley felt her heart race as heat rushed through her body, burning with a liquid sensuality between her legs as she stared back into his bottomless, bright blue eyes.

Jack’s teeth shone in a broad smile as he gazed at her. His body ached with need for her, especially knowing how close he was to having her (she wore nothing under that dress.) All he had to do was lift the cloth a little further up. He groaned holding her tight, his siren, his angel, his madness all wrapped in one pretty package. He would die for her, kill for her, live for her. Jack dropped her hands to wrap his arms around her. He pulled her up against him delighting in the way her body felt flush against him, and just before he kissed her, he reached one hand into her hair, balling his hand into a fist, kissing her hard, letting his passion for her fuel his actions until Harley groaned and wrapped a leg around him. When her thigh came up and Jack grabbed her leg, lifting the limb against his hip, her foot bumped the handle of the gun that Jack had hem clipped to his slacks and pressed against his lower back. She smiled wickedly at the thought of what Jack was going to do with that gun. She knew her husband was also armed with a knife and poppers, which he thought would be funny. She giggled as her hands caressed the back of his neck, her husband the Joker.

*

Their little dance had worked. Someone from upstairs in the Second Circle sent the young man and woman both down to fetch them to join the party above.

Frost saw the couple he had pinpointed earlier going around the club to tap people on the shoulder and lead them up the stairs. He watched as they headed out onto the dance floor making a beeline toward Joker and Harley. Frost glanced across the club to where he saw Zsasz sitting, a woman wearing a pair of sparkling, disco ball influenced mouse ears on her head, a black mask and a leather bikini was sitting on his lap kissing the top of his bald head leaving perfect red lip marks behind.
Frost smirked. It would have been hilarious if Frost had been a little more relaxed, but it wasn’t all that amusing at the moment; this entire thing had him on edge. He would have felt better if they had more people with them, if Jac...if Joker didn’t seem so unstable, and he knew Harley would simply go along with whatever Joker did. Frost adored his Boss, but right now...He sighed with a small shake of his head. At least they had an ace up their sleeves with Bane.

Frost sipped his drink, waiting for Zsasz to look over at him knowing the bald man, while quiet, was always acutely alert. The bald man turned when he sensed eyes on him and nodded at Frost with a small smile. Once Frost had Zsasz’s attention, he shifted his gaze to the couple from the Second Circle. Zsasz followed Frost’s lead and his gaze turned toward the couple approaching Joker and Harley.

Jack weaved in place, keeping Harley’s body pressed against his as he kissed her, exploring her mouth with his tongue, his hands slipping down her torso to squeeze her rear. He growled softly biting her bottom lip while pulling her harder against him. Harley rubbed against him until she moaned, reaching down to grab his rear and tug him more firmly against her, her dress riding up.
They were both deeply into their dry lovemaking on the dancefloor when they were both tapped on the shoulder. Jack licked Harley’s lips, his hands traveled back up her body, but he held her close, unwilling to let her go before he turned to look at the leather and spike wearing couple.

The woman smiled. “I’m Mandolin, this is Saxophone. You’ve both been invited into the Second Circle--if you’ll just follow me.”

Jack chuckled. “Mm, so who invited us?” he asked as he wrapped his arms around Harley’s waist, lifting her off her feet as he continued to weave. Harley giggled grabbing his shoulders while Jack playfully bit at her belly.

Mandolin simply smiled. “Our boss, the owner. He only selects the most interesting to join the activities of the Circle.”

Jack grinned brightly then looked up at Harley. “So, what do you think sweets, shall we?”

Harley giggled as Jack slid her down his torso and placed her back on her feet before he took her hand, kissing her knuckles. He stared at her with an amused grin.

“Sure thing puddin.” She giggled.

Jack noticed the man named Saxophone, who had been silent during the entire exchange, had walked off. Jack followed the man briefly with his eyes and saw that he had headed over to tap Jason’s shoulder which made Jack smile wider. Good, back up he thought as he and Harley followed Mandolin to the stairs.

*

The guards at the top of the stairs, looking like a matching set, similar builds, both dressed in black with matching black masks and bald heads, unhooked the rope and stepped aside at their approach, letting Jack, Harley and Jason enter the Second Circle.

In the Moment’s song “Blood” was playing loudly on this level as the three of them walked into the Second Circle and looked around. The upstairs was painted all in red, with red and black marble flooring, blood-red walls, and even the lighting had a reddish hue to it. There were several rows of red and black chairs, couches, some situated into little “private” sections where smaller parties were drinking and playing, clearly demonstrating that all activities were permissible in the Second Circle. There were women and men, some naked or wearing very little, dancing on tables. There was obvious sex going on that included whips, cuffs and other playthings, while waiters/waitress dressed in a wide variety of leather, rubber, and straps and chains, moved around carrying trays of drinks, and each one of them wore a mask over their eyes.

There were several large crystal chandeliers up here and hanging between them were two young men and a woman, all naked, tied up bondage style and swinging slowly, one with hooks clearly in his flesh helping to support him, although he looked to be in throes of ecstasy rather than pain.

Harley giggled and leaned close to her husband to whisper. “I wonder if they need dusting after hanging up there all night?”

Jack snorted and gave his wife a playful pinch.

Harley squeaked to Jack’s delight.

There was a large bar up here as well, but the three bartenders wore very little. One young woman who sported long pigtails that were in a rainbow of colors, wore a black leather corset with many buckles, straps that circled her bare breasts, and a black thong. The young man, whose head was buzzed shiny bald, worked next to her. He was dressed in a head-to-toe nylon bodysuit with only a section cut out for his mouth and another section for his crotch, though the young man’s penis was wrapped up tight in a stainless steel chastity cage. The last bartender was dressed in a sleeveless black rubber bodysuit with a black corset, sky high black boots, and a black military hat on her ink black bobbed hair. Unlike the room downstairs, this one had a few more toys on display. One wall along the back held a variety of toys, from whips, collars, and chains, to ball gags and crops, canes, paddles, feathered ticklers, to nipple clamps and restraints. Patrons and staff of the Second Circle would walk up to the wall and remove whatever it was that they wish to play with at the moment. There were the same X’s along the walls, all occupied by naked people getting whipped or paddled. There were a few “beds” where people were being tickled or teased with hot wax, whips or feathers.

A large dance area occupied a section between the more private areas and the bar where several people were dancing, a few doing a lot more than dancing, but no one seemed to notice or care.

Jack frowned slightly and leaned over to Harley. “Some of this looks fun, but I think I would rather do that in our room alone with you.”

Harley giggled. “You can tie me up any time puddin.”

Jack smirked at her when Mandolin tuned with a smile. “Everything here is open to you. As long as all parties are willing, anything is allowed in the Second Circle. Over there is our owner’s section, but only approach if he calls you.” Mandolin pointed to her left where they could see a circle of couches along the wall where a man who had to be approaching six hundred pounds sat, with a woman wearing nipple clamps and nothing else sat on one side and a man wearing only buckles—that didn’t cover anything—was on his other side.

“That is Mr. Lynch,” Mandolin said with a smile. “He welcomes you to enjoy all the Second Circle offers.” Mandolin motioned as she continued. “Over here is one of our prime members, Mr. Mario Falcone.” Mandolin pointed to the right and there was Mario, dressed in leather pants and a white flowery shirt looking like a cheap pirate. He was laughing at something as he tugged on the chain that dangled between a woman’s breasts while he sipped from a champagne glass. (Harley recognized him immediately from the pictures that they had found online, the man had that sort of slimy demeanor that only men with too much money and too much time indulging their appetites had about them). Mario’s area was dominated by several women, several of whom were making out with each other. Jack noted that there was an occasional pretty young man mixed into the group. Jack grinned as he saw not just Mario, but Trogg sitting at the far end of the couch with a couple of women around him.

Jack chuckled to himself. Perfect; nothing like taking care of two things at once he thought to himself. He liked to multitask.

Mandolin smiled at the three of them. “Please make yourself at home, enjoy a drink at our bar, play with anything you like. Again--nothing is forbidden in the Second Circle.” With that, she and Saxophone strolled back over to Mr. Lynch’s side of the room.

Jack glanced at Jason who gave him a barely noticeable nod before he walked over to the bar. Jack took Harley’s hand, pulling her onto the dance floor.

“How do you wanna do this puddin’?” Harley asked as Jack tugged her along with her hand before he turned and spun her into his arms, her back pressed against his chest. He began to weave his hips as his hands glided over her breasts. He held her breasts, squeezing them together, feeling the warmth, the softness, the weight of them in his hands while pressing his pelvis against her rear, the two of them moving in sync.

Jack frowned softly, one hand running down her stomach. “Hmm...not sure pumpkin, let’s just see what happens.” Jack laughed softly as he leaned in to nibble her ear.

Harley smiled, her eyes fluttering as Jack spun her around. He yanked her up against him and slid his leg between hers again, causing her skirt to hike up her thighs all the way to her hips. His hands slid over her rear, grabbing her and yanking her close while he lifted her up slightly at the same time. Harley slid her leg up along his as Jack pulled her closer, their pelvises rubbing together, continuing their sensual dancing as the music rolled into K. Flay’s “Blood in the Cut.”

Jack rolled his hips slowly, moving down her body dragging his nose against her chest, snapping his teeth at her while his hands snaked down her side until he was in a crouch. He grinned then. He so much wanted to shove her dress up and bury his mouth against her sex, to flick his tongue against her and hear the music of her moans. Instead, he looked up at her sucking in his bottom with on his wide grin.

Harley smiled down at him, her hands sliding through his hair as she gently thrust her hips at him. She wanted him, wanted to feel his tongue on her, wanted to wrap her lips around him and suck on him, suck him deep into her mouth...

*

Mario was laughing as he poured some champagne down the cleavage of one of the women he had bought for tonight. She giggled, arching back letting him lick the alcohol from her neck down to where it pooled between her breasts when he saw Harley on the dance floor. He stopped what he was doing to stare. He had never seen a woman like her, her skin like porcelain, her hair white enough that she was matching all the colors in the room. The black dress she wore stood out against the milk white of her skin. She looked like a goddess, an unreal creature, perfect and unblemished...she didn’t look quite real he thought. He saw the man she was dancing with, but only briefly, his full attention on the girl. She was unique and he liked to have unique things. There was one thing that Mario was good at and that was getting what he wanted, no matter how hard it was to get, no matter the price and if he couldn’t get it himself, he could also rely on his father to help him out.
It was amazing what money and power could get, he thought as he licked the champagne off his “date,” though his eyes were on Harley. He followed the lines of her body as she moved, her hips swaying sensually, her body arching, her dress riding up her legs. She moved with the strength and grace that he liked in all his women since it made them very good in bed. He continued to watch her. She was like an ice princess...just so different.

He grinned. It was decided, he had to have her for the night, but she was different and Mario always liked to have anything different.

*

Jack tossed Harley’s arms over his shoulders holding her close, both of them rocking their hips back and forth against each other. Jack stared into her eyes, his fingers tickling up her sides. Harley squirmed, which made him laugh as he licked her lips. The music edged into something softer, more sensual, FKA twigs’ voice flowed softly as her song “Pendulum” played over the sound system.

Jack rolled Harley against him, his tongue traveling along her smooth throat as she arched her head back, completely forgetting the reason they were here, too caught up in Harley. He wanted to have her, right now, his body aching for her. He pressed his aching groin against Harley, enjoying the way she rubbed herself along him, knowing exactly what she was doing to him. Jack’s tongue licked along her ear lobe as he cupped the back of her head, feeling the soft waves of her hair between his fingers. He kissed her, his tongue sliding into her mouth, caressing her tongue, kissing her deeply. Harley moaned, one hand grabbing the back of his head, her fingers gathered his hair, pressing his mouth harder against hers. She licked his tongue and lips catching his bottom lip with her teeth.

Jack growled softly. “I want you. I need you.”

Harley’s voice was half moan, half responding growl. “I want you too puddin.”

He smiled closing his eyes for a moment just feeling her body against his, the press of her breasts against him, the heat emanating from between her legs as his thigh thrust up against her. He whispered against her ear again, his lips close to tickling the sensitive skin of her ear, his tongue flicking against her creating a warm ripple down her spine as he asked. “Want a drink pumpkin?”

Harley purred. “I would love one.”

He let her go reluctantly and Harley took a step back, but she continued to move to the music, almost in a trance. He loved watching her, the way her body weaved and twisted with the music. Jack dragged fingers over her, his hands caressing along her breasts, feeling her nipples hard under the fabric. Harley made a soft gasp of pleasure her eyes opening just a little to stare at him under her lashes, her lips opened just enough to make her mouth tempting. Jack grinned dragging his teeth over his bottom lip. As Harley continued to dance, Jack noted that her gymnastics training made her sensual movements and gestures that much more graceful. She started to stop and follow him, but Jack dragged his fingers between her breasts and stopped her with just a small amount of pressure.

“You keep dancing sweets. No reason to stop something so beautiful,” he purred.

Harley grinned at him, her cheeks rosy. “You say the sweetest things.”

Jack chuckled and purred. “I’ll be right back.”

He hurried over to the bar, his long legs cutting the distance quickly. He glanced over his shoulder once as Harley, her eyes closed, once more moved gracefully to the music. Jack felt a momentary spike in his heart as a wash of feelings came over him. The intensity of his love for her burned his eyes for a moment. She was everything to him he thought, everything—without her...he shook himself as the remembered feelings of despair and pain washed over him. That was over and he was never losing her again he thought. He smiled wide as he turned back to the bar and rapped his knuckles on the counter as he leaned against the edge.

The bartender with the bare breasts hurried over with a smile. “I’m Venus. What can I get you?”

Jack leaned forward a little with a smile. “Hello Venus, I’m Joker. What drink do you have that would tell my girl how much I want her?”

Venus smiled. “Oh god, that is like, so sweet! You call her your girl?”

Jack chuckled. “She’s more than just my girl. She’s everything to me.”

Venus shook her head. “Wow, she is one lucky girl to have a guy feel that way about her, and such a handsome one at that. Mm...Let me think...do you wanna get kinky with her or vanilla?”

Jack giggled. “Oh, let’s say kinky.”

Venus nodded. “Then I would recommend a Dirty Shirley shot. It has vodka, the juice of Ole Smoky Tennessee Moonshine Cherries, grenadine and topped with the moonshine cherries. It’s also bright red. How does that sound?”

Jack grinned. “Delicious Venus and red is one of my girl’s favorite colors.”

She nodded with a wide grin. “Coming right up.”

*

Mario grinned, pushing himself up. The woman he had been drinking champagne off of reached up and grabbed his hand. “Where you going sweetie?”

Mario grinned as he shook her hand off. “I got a prize to go fetch.”

Trogg, who was enjoying the attentions of two lovely ladies, glanced up as Mario stood and began to make his way past him. Trogg frowned as his gaze followed Mario. He saw that his boss was heading out to the dance floor. That was when Trogg saw the extremely pale woman dancing. It was as if the other dancers had unconsciously stepped aside, creating a circle of space around the gorgeous dancer. She moved with controlled elegance and grace. Her body flowed to the music as if the notes of the song were guiding her while she spun around, her arms weaving, her hips rolling side to side. He frowned then. She looked familiar, but he had to admit, she was damn hot. The dress looked fucking painted on her he thought, and the black stood out against her stark white skin and her equally white hair. She looked ethereal. Trogg smirked. He could see why Mario was making a beeline toward her; the man always liked the exotic.

Trogg furrowed his brow in thought as he thought again that she was very familiar. Someone with skin that color was unusual enough that he knew he had seen her before, but he was slightly drunk and a little high, so he shrugged, turning his attention back to the young women who were hoping he would buy them some pretty gifts for fucking him. The short man chuckled. The pleasures of money he thought, dismissing Mario from his mind. Mario pushed a few people out of his way as he headed over to the pale woman. She still had her eyes closed as her body moved gracefully and in time to the music, as if she had not a care in the world. Mario walked up behind her while she spun her body around admiring the curves of her figure. He leered at her, his eyes following the flow of her body. He reached out and ran his hands up her thighs to her hips.
Harley immediately knew it wasn’t Jack touching her. She knew her puddin’s touch, the feel of his hands on her body. Her eyes popped open to see who had dared to lay hands on her. She was surprised to see that it was Mario Falcone. Harley balked for a moment. She wasn’t really sure what to do, as this was the man they were here to kidnap. The plan was to get close enough to drug Mario’s drink...then take him once they got him outside of the club, but now...he was right here in front of her and she had no idea what she should do.

Harley glanced toward the bar, but Jack had his back turned and was talking to the bartender.

Mario grinned and the leer in his expression made her skin crawl.

“Hello beautiful.” Mario moved to the music though he left his hands on Harley’s hips. He kept trying to pull her closer, but Harley set herself firmly, having stopped dancing altogether.

If he noticed her distaste, he made no indication which made Harley think the ass was probably used to women reacting the way she was right now. “My name is Mario, Mario Falcone. You might have heard of me.”

He kept moving his hips back and forth, his hands firmly on her hips, purposely sliding his fingers along the cutouts of her dress to touch skin. The sensation was like a cold wet snake slithering along her flesh. He yanked her forward, almost against him, but Harley put her hands out against his chest preventing him from drawing her in closer.

Mario pouted. “Come on dance with me beautiful,” he urged. “What’s your name?”

“The name’s Harleen and I don’t feel like dancing,” Harley muttered, unwilling to let him say her true name. She tried to pull away, but Mario’s grip on her hips tightened.

He smiled continuing to dance, weaving his hips back and forth, completely ignoring her efforts to pull away.

“You know, I have a lot of money Harleen. Girl like you, a very beautiful girl, could make a lot of money hanging out with a guy like me.” Mario smiled. “I pay very well and the happier I am, the more I pay.”

Harley shoved against his chest, resisting the urge to punch him only because she didn’t want to ruin their chances of kidnapping the man by putting him on alert, but she didn’t want to dance with him and she didn’t want him touching her. She was getting angry, angry enough by his yanking on her that she was about to say hell with the plan and kill the bastard herself, right here.

“Look, just let go of me and I’ll dance with you all right?” she snarled, but Mario refused to let go. He pulled her closer as if he was unaware of her hands on his chest trying to hold herself away from him. His hands moved around, using his fingers to crawl around to her backside and grip her rear.

“Aw, come on, don’t play coy. You know, I have a couple of spreaders at home...some handcuffs, I even have nipple clamps, pinwheels, clit suckers, butt plugs...you name it baby, I got it. Everything your perverted little heart could want. And there are certain things I’ll even pay extra for...”

His gaze moved down to her breasts.

Harley snarled. She didn’t care that they were supposed to kidnap this guy! She was going to kill him!

*
Venus walked over with the two shots, her gaze wandered over to the dance floor. She grimaced as she set the drinks down. “Ah, Joker, you might want to go save your girl. That creeper Mario is all over her.”

Jack turned slowly.

He saw Harley, her hands against Mario’s chest pushing herself as far away from him as she could without resorting to violence. He could hear Venus talking behind him, her words only barely penetrating his mind as he glared at Mario.

Venus was saying that Mario Falcone was the type of man that gave BDSM a bad name. Everyone knew how bad he was, but Mr. Lynch kept letting him in because of Mario’s father’s money.

Jack filed that information away, but his attention was on the fact that Mario was getting handsy with Harley. The man had his hands on her hips, and then he tried to yank her closer his hands working around to grab her rear. Jack snarled, the sound low and deep in his throat. He bared his teeth. He didn’t stop to think, didn’t consider their plan, the possible fate of his friends below, or Jason who was currently sitting at the other end of the bar talking with some woman; he didn’t care about any of it at the moment. The plan could go to fucking hell because that bastard was touching Harley! Jack trembled just a little as a manic sounding giggle bubbled forth.

Venus frowned. “Ah, Joker, you okay?”

But he wasn’t paying attention. All Jack cared about, all he saw as his vision turned red, was someone touching Harley, touching his girl, trying to take what was his, trying to hurt his wife and something in Jack’s mind snapped. Suddenly his carefully thought out plan didn’t matter any longer; all that mattered to him was that someone was touching his girl and that someone needed to be hurt for it.

That someone was Mario Falcone.

Time slowed for Jack. He could see the placement of every person on the dance floor from the corner of his eye. He didn’t hesitate or care about any of them as he reached behind him and pulled out his gun from its holster at the small of his back. The weapon, a Ruger SR9c that Frost had gotten for him as a gift was a nice, simple pistol loaded with seventeen shots. Jack brought the weapon up, grinning the whole time as the world narrowed down to the barrel of his gun and the man touching Harley. He aimed swiftly, barely giving it a second thought as he pulled the trigger.

The bullet flew across the space between him and Mario. The bullet, like Jack, only had one target, the rest of the crowd reduced to slightly unfocused figures as the bullet raced forward until it found its mark.

The bullet slammed into Mario, ripping through clothing and penetrating the side of his knee, then through his leg in a blast of fabric, blood and bone.

Mario screamed. Instead of instantly buckling over, he grabbed harder at Harley as white hot pain raced up the man’s leg.

Harley pushed him with all her (now enhanced) strength, sending the man toppling backwards to fall as he screamed in pain trying to grab at his now shattered kneecap.

Jack grinned as time sped up again and people began to scream. He reached over and grabbed one of the shots. Venus was staring at him as Jack downed the shot with a smile.

Jack winked at her. “You’re right Venus, that is a really sexy drink.”
Downstairs, the sounds of “Queen of Pain” by the Cramps was playing so loudly that for a moment Frost wasn’t sure he had actually heard the sound of a gun being shot, but then he heard a scream. Frost’s eyes shot up to the upper floor of the club.

He muttered under his breath. “Fuck.”

No one downstairs had reacted to the sounds coming from upstairs. Considering what type of club it was he supposed screams were common, but he just knew it was the Boss...then he saw the first person come running down the stairs and Frost knew he had been correct.

“Fuck,” he muttered again and pulled out his phone. He only had to text one word. “Now.”

Jack started to walk across the dance floor as people scattered. One of the guards at the entrance rushed over to restrain him, but Jack spun his gun, sliding it into the front of his slacks before he pulled another weapon from the front pocket of his slacks, a Microtech Combat Troodon DE knife. The blade, like the handle, was black, another beautiful gift from Frost. First Jack simply turned and punched the man in the throat just as the bouncer came close enough. The man grabbed at his throat, making horrible choking noises that were barely audible over the sounds of the music, shouts and running feet. Jack grabbed the man’s shoulder with one hand, yanked him forward, at the same time he popped the blade and shoved it under the man’s chin and up into the man’s mouth. The man’s eyes rolled wildly as from his mouth blood spilled down over his lips and dripped from his chin as he stared at Jack.

Jack held the man close to him, grinning into the man’s face, his blue eyes wide and gleeful.

Jack purred, his eyes smiling into the other man’s. “You know, this is why I like knives, up close and personal.”

Jack yanked his knife out and in a graceful movement, sliced open the man’s throat before he released him.

Jack smiled down at the dying man. “You really should consider a different line of work, you’re really not that great of a guard.”

Jack shrugged with a soft chuckle before he turned away. He saw Harley kicking Mario and laughed.

“Hey pumpkin! Whatcha doing?” Jack asked with a big smile.

People were rushing past, heading for the stairs. Trogg stood up trying to see what had happened and wondering where the fuck the guys who were supposed to be up here protecting Mario were. He had seen one of them over getting his ass whipped by some kid in leather pants and the other had been over by the bar. There were supposed to be at least two others up here, but Trogg didn’t see them anywhere. Those fuckers were so used to Mario dismissing them to do what they wanted, that none of them were any good at their job anymore he thought with a snarl.

He had heard the gun shot but the sound hadn’t really registered as a weapon firing until he had heard a scream, but even then, screaming was something that happened so often up here...by then so many people were moving he couldn’t see what was going on and he didn’t see Mario anywhere.
Trogg started to shove people out of his way, heading toward the last place he had seen that sonofabitch Mario when he saw the Joker.

Trogg’s eyes widened. He remembered him from the fight club, that pale sonofabitch had fought Bane...lost him a fuck ton of money too. Trogg pulled out his own knife, a little yet deadly blade he kept on him, used it to play with some of the ladies and for when someone was getting out of hand at the fight club. He began to move slowly, using the cover of people trying to leave to sneak his way over when he saw Harley...the ghost white beauty from the fight club...the mud wrestling! That was where he remembered her from and she was with the guy...the Joker...

Trogg narrowed his eyes and muttered. “Bitch.”

His gaze moved to the wall of toys and he smiled.

*

Harley kicked Mario in the stomach with the point of her shoe, snarling with each kick. The man curled in on himself cried out like a baby until he wet himself.

Harley jumped back in disgust. “Seriously? Eww!”

She looked up when she heard Jack call out. “Hey Pumpkin!”

“Puddin!” She waved at her husband with a bright smile, but suddenly someone grabbed her from behind lifting her off her feet. Harley yelped in surprise, but she reared back, smashing the back of her skull into the face of the person who had grabbed her. She heard a male grunt of pain and something wet in her hair. She grinned viciously and brought her fist back, slamming it into the man’s groin. The man who had her, one of the patrons dressed for a night on the town, gave a high pitch squeal of pain dropping Harley. She spun around, brought her arm up and used her elbow to slam the man in the chest. He gasped in pain and bent forward. Harley spun around with a giggle, using her other elbow to strike the man across his face. Whether or not she had broken his nose before, she shattered it now with her second impact.

The man fell, but Harley saw several more people moving toward her. Judging by their dress she was guessing they were all patrons thinking that their BDSM experience meant they could dominate her. BDSM heroes, she thought with a smirk, then Harley smiled and made a run for the wall of toys, her gaze zeroing in on a wooden paddle.

*

Jack hissed when he saw a man grab Harley from behind, but his hiss of anger was replaced with a laugh when he saw his girl beat the shit out of the man in just a few seconds. He stopped and clapped before sticking two of his fingers in his mouth and whistled.

“That’s my girl!!” he yelled.

He turned to look over at the bar where Venus still seemed to be paralyzed. Jack grinned and pointed at Harley for Venus’ benefit. “That’s my girl!!”

He didn’t get much of a chance to enjoy watching Harley (he noticed more people converging on her and her immediately running for the wall of BDSM toys) when a man dressed in what looked like a rubber surf suit with the crotch cut out tried to take a swing at Jack.

Jack brought his arm up to block the man’s punch with his forearm. The man shoved Jack back and brought his foot up, kicked Jack in the chest. Jack took the hit with a smile. The man in the surf suit... tried to swing at Jack again, but the green haired man simply batted Mr. Rubber-suit’s fist away taking a step backwards and took his own swing at the man with his knife. Jack was holding the blade down when he lashed out, hoping to slice the man across his throat or face, but the man in the rubber surf suit surprised

Jack as he ducked under Jack’s arm and hit him in the chest, lifting Jack off his feet to slam him to the floor.

*

The chaos that was erupting upstairs of the club was just now beginning to trickle down as people began to realize something was wrong. Frost saw several men, all dressed in matching black slacks, t-shirts and black masks, who seemed to materialize out of nowhere and head up the stairs. Frost pulled his gun, held it down and close to his body. He saw Zsasz do the same when they both heard the roar outside.

Suddenly a body came flying through the doorway to land on the dance floor and skid and bounce across it like a stone skipping on water. There were several screams, then the doorway was blown inward as Bane, his luchador mask in place and his veins glowing green stood in the shattered doorway and roared.

The screams inside the club hit a higher pitch as Bane began to pick people up at random and throw them across the room.

Frost cringed. “Shit, I knew this was a bad idea.”

*

Harley kicked her shoes off and ran, pumping her arms to give her more speed, her gaze zeroed in on the paddle on the wall that looked like an old fashioned school paddle that she had seen in a hundred movies. The paddle looked like it might be walnut, maybe four inches across and about twenty inches long. Not as good as a bat, but she would make do.

She grabbed the side of one of the unoccupied beds (people were leaving those strapped or tied to crosses or “beds” instead of getting them free in their frenzied mob mentality of escape), which was simply a hard, flat surface, like a table, except with straps, and jumped onto it. Her feet hit the solid platform of the bed and she raced across its surface as several people, five in total, three men and two women, converged on her. She raced across the hard platform and did a little flip off the end, landing on her feet with a bright smile as she reached out and grabbed one of the large paddles off the wall.

She spun around and swung the paddle with one hand at the two people who were closest, a man wearing nothing but buckles and a woman in a black bra, corset and panties. The man ducked her swing, but Harley countered with the elbow of her other arm to smash the man in the face. The woman had leaned back, the swing missing her completely as well, but just as Harley used her elbow on the one man’s face, she did a swift turn toward the woman and kicked her in the chest, knocking her back several steps and into the side of another bed.

Harley shoved her paddle at the man, using the flat end to try to knock him back. The man leaned back, her thrust barely missing him, but Harley followed this with a quick and low strike, slamming the man across one of his knees. As her weapon struck the man’s leg, Harley dropped down onto one knee. She twisted to the side and thrust the paddle out to hit the lunging woman in the groin. The impact of the hard top of the paddle meeting her unprotected groin made the woman the corset gasp in pain and stumble back, her hands dropping to her crotch too late to protect it.
Harley stood and swung the paddle with one hand as hard as she could, straight across the woman’s face, shattering her nose, mashing her lips, and breaking several teeth.

The woman fell and didn’t get up.

Harley’s attention was drawn back on the man just as he hit her in the face.

Harley gasped in surprise, tasting blood in her mouth, but she hissed, her bloody teeth bared, and her blue eyes looked slightly crazed.

The man who hit her took an involuntary step backwards realizing too late that he had just made a grave error.

Jack got to his feet at the same time the man who had thrown him did. Jack had kept a hold of his knife and when the man swung at him, Jack raised his arm, blocking the blow and forced the man’s arm up high; Jack tried to slash at the man’s stomach with the knife. His opponent hit Jack in the chest hard, sent a vibration of pain through his torso and made Jack cough, but the attack wasn’t strong enough to knock Jack down.

The man swung at Jack again, forced him to leaned back. Jack kept his arm up to prevent the man from hitting him with his other fist, before Jack ducked under the raised arms, past the man as he attempted another slash with his knife. Jack’s opponent was surprisingly agile as he yanked his arm down and flipped Jack, both men once more hitting the floor.

Jack snarled in anger shoving himself to his feet as the man made a grab for Jack’s leg. Jack thrust his knife into the middle of the man’s back before he grabbed the back of the man’s head and thrust down, smashing his face against the floor.

Three more men were converging on Jack. He muttered, “Can’t they see I’m busy? Geez.” He shouted as she shot all three men quickly before pressing the gun to the back of the head of the man he was holding down. “I mean, everyone needs to wait their turn—I’ll get to them and if not me I’m sure Harley will happily beat you all to death.” He giggled as he stood up, but just as soon as Jack was on his feet, someone hit him in the small of his back, tackling him to the floor.

Downstairs Bane was a one man wrecking crew, killing and destroying without reason. Frost grunted, ducking as a table came flying overhead. He yelled at Zsasz, glancing up the stairs.

“We gotta get the Boss and Harley out of here with Mario, but I don’t think Bane is going to let anyone leave.”

Zsasz frowned before he motioned. “I might be able to slip out and get Dr. October; isn’t she supposed to be with him?”

Frost nodded. “She might not be able to get in. You think you can get past Bane?”

Zsasz grinned. “Of course,” he said with confidence.

With a wink at Frost, the bald man slipped into the panicked crowd. Frost shook his head. He glanced up the stairs and took off, pushing or shooting anyone who got in his way.
Jason had yanked two hidden weapons out within a heartbeat of Joker shooting Mario. He hopped onto the bar when he saw two of the bartenders going for weapons under the bar.

He grinned and his boyish good looks made the expression slightly sinister. “You know, I wouldn’t do that if I were you.”

The young male bartender made a grab for what looked to be a shotgun. Jason was quicker. He shot the man in the forehead. The woman next to him screamed. Venus, on the other hand made no sound and stood still while she simply stared in shock.

“You ladies want to live through this, I suggest you get down.” Jason grinned and winked. “It’s about to get a lot more messy in here.”

Venus slowly slid down and put her hands on her head. Her fellow bartender looked between Venus and Jason before she finally did the same.

Jason grinned. “Thank you.”

His attention was drawn back into the fight. His gaze landed on Jack who had just stood up after shooting some dude in the face.

Jack saw Jason standing on the bar and waved. “Hey!!”

Jason laughed and waved back. “Hey Boss.”

Jason’s smile faltered as two shadows rose up behind Jack. He didn’t wait, but fired, two headshots, taking out two men moving towards Jack’s back. Jack spun around in surprise then turned back and waved again.

“Thanks darling!!”

Jason chuckled. “No problem Boss!”

Just as Jack turned away, another man, this one was fairly muscular and wearing nothing but black and red speedos, grabbed Jack’s gun arm and shoved his arm up before he punched Jack in the mouth. His hold on Jack prevented the slimmer man from stumbling back. The nearly naked man hit Jack again once more in the mouth.

Jason yelped. He could see blood trickling down from Jack’s nose and bloody mouth. He brought his weapons forward to shoot the man attacking Jack, but the crazed crowd blocked his view of Jack and his opponent.

Jason snarled. “Fuck me!”

*

Harley turned, her paddle a bloody mess as three more people decided to try their hand at taking her down.

Harley rolled her eyes. “Either you guys are all stupid or you are taking this BDSM thing a little too far and hoping I’ll beat you to a bloody pulp. It’s your lucky night, because I will.”

She didn’t wait for an answer; instead she used her entire body to swing the paddle at the first person to get too close to her. The paddle struck the woman across the face with a loud thunk that could be heard over the sound of the music. The colored lights caught the flash of blood, spittle, and teeth flying as the woman crumpled to the floor, her jaw broken and hanging oddly.

Harley turned as another man tried to grab her. She thrust the handle of the paddle up into the man’s chest, driving his breath from him. She rolled the paddle back up and knocked the man in the side of the face before she spun on her bare feet, rolling the paddle once more around to hit him across the face, first one direction before snapping his head in the other direction as she used her paddle to slap him across the face. Blood splattered across the man’s face and onto the floor before he fell down, unmoving.

Harley giggled in satisfaction.

Suddenly there was the snap as a whip came out of the shadows and struck Harley in the hip, ripped across her side where the dress exposed her skin to leave an angry bloody slash in its wake. Harley cried out in pain and surprise. She stumbled back a few steps with blood running down her side.

She spun around, her eyes flashing angrily, and blood on her lips. She narrowed her eyes as the man holding the whip stepped out of the shadows.

“You!” she hissed.

Trogg snapped the whip against the floor with a grin. “Hello beautiful. Ready to submit?”

Harley’s eyes narrowed, she smiled. “Sure, you first.”

She raced forward and grabbed her paddle with both hands while dropping to her knees. She slid across the floor and swung the paddle upwards.

Trogg snapped the whip at her, the end of it cutting along her forearm, but the pain didn’t stop Harley as she slammed the paddle forward under the whip and into Trogg’s stomach with enough force to knock him off his feet. She hopped up back onto her feet as her opponent slammed onto the floor.

She sneered down at the little man and hissed. “You know what? I think my puddin could have a use for you.”

With that she brought the paddle over her head and slammed it down on one of Trogg’s knees, shattering bone.

Trogg screamed and grabbed his leg.

Harley laughed. “What was that? I didn’t hear you?”

She brought the paddle down again against the same knee, smashing one of his hands as well. Trogg’s screams turned into guttural sobs of anguish.

Harley giggled, though her blue eyes were flat. “You know what Trogg honey? I don’t know a lot about BDSM, but I do know one thing--it’s about permission you little shit and I don’t give you permission to ever touch me!”

She cracked the paddle across his face knocking him out.

“Hmpf.” Harley grinned.

*

Jack struggled. He was stronger than this man, but his balance was a little off as he tried to bring his gun arm down and the polished floor was making it difficult. The man began to force Jack backwards. The soles of his shoes slipped a little on the floor until Jack yanked himself backwards and brought his foot up to smash the sole of his foot into the crotch of the other man. The man in the speedo let Jack go with a gasp of pain. Jack giggled and brought his gun up to shoot the man in the crotch through his hands.

Jack grinned. “Teach you to wear a speedo.”

“Hey!!”

Jack turned as another man wearing black leather pants and a harness of leather and chains swung, snapping Jack across the face with a riding crop. Jack blinked, opening his mouth a couple of times tasting blood in his mouth again. The crimson blood coated his lips, making them a brighter red. The crop left a harsh bloody mark across Jack’s snow white face.

Jack reached up and ran his fingers over his wound, smearing the blood from one side to the other creating a wide bloody smile. He giggled as the man with the crop, now not looking so sure of himself, took a step back from the pale, green-haired man.

Jack grinned, his teeth bloody against his now extended smile. “Oh now, come on sweetling, smile!!! I’m not going to shoot you.” Jack held his hands up and slowly put the gun back into the front of his slacks. “See, let’s play nice shall we?”

Jack took a step toward the man, giggling as he did so. The man with the riding crop swung the crop in front of him, cutting the air.

“Stay back!” he yelled.

Jack chuckled as he tilted his head to the side. “Oh but I thought we were going to play?”

The man used the riding crop to try to keep Jack back, but the pale smiling man grabbed the crop in mid-swing, wrapping his hand around it. He grinned, holding it as the man struggled, trying to pull the crop away from Jack, but he simply held on and giggled.

Jack yanked back, ripping the crop out of the man’s hand. He smiled, flipped the crop around and caught it by its handle. He held it up to examine it, then grinned at the man.

“My turn sweetheart--what’s your safe word?” Jack giggled.

*

Jack was breathing heavily, but he was grinning from ear to ear as he looked down at the man he had just beaten soundly with the riding crop. The man was groaning loudly. Jack twisted his lips in annoyance before he pulled his gun out once more and shot the man in the face. He took a deep breath and looked around, a slight frown dancing across his features.

“Oh, we’re done? No one else wants a go?? My safe word is Guacamole!! Anyone??” Jack threw his hands in the air as he laughed, but his attention was then drawn to Harley just as she brought her paddle down on someone.

His smile was bright. “Oh, my girl seems busy.”

He started to walk across the dance floor using the crop to encourage anyone in his way to move. He waved as he saw Jason, who had just shot two more people who thought him an easy target.

“Darling!! Would you mind grabbing Mario there…” He pointed at the man who was still on the floor in a pool of his own urine and crying in agony.

Jason made a face, then shrugged. “Sure thing Boss.”

Jack walked over to Harley just as she knocked Trogg out.

He smiled. “Hey pumpkin, you done?”

Harley turned to see her husband, blew a loose strand of hair from out of her eyes, and squealed dropping the paddle and threw herself into his arms. Jack caught her and kissed her, lifting her up against him, his arms sliding under her rear as he held her up. Harley thrust her tongue into his mouth, the taste of their blood mixing on their tongues. Jack growled deep in his throat, holding her close before he lowered her back down to her bare feet.

He frowned caressing her face. “Who hurt you sweets?”

“Oh it's fine puddin.” She pointed to the whip marks on her side. “That little creep did that.” She pointed at Trogg lying unconscious on the floor. Harley turned her attention back to Jack with a concerned frown. “Looks like someone hit you in the face too.” She touched his lips tenderly, followed by a ginger touch of the wound on his cheek.

He smiled. “Don’t worry my sweets. They didn’t use a safe word.” He giggled. “You ready to go? Jason has Mario.”

She pointed at Trogg. “I think we should take him too. He might be useful.”

Jack frowned, but after a moment his face brightened. “Oh, I know just what to use him for!”

Jack bent down and lifted the short man up, throwing him over his shoulder in a fireman’s carry. “Okay, let’s go! Still have a lot to do!” Jack headed for the stairs where Jason was waiting just as Frost came scrambling up the steps.

Jack smiled. “Hey Frost, my love, how’s it going downstairs? Oh, and hey, can you take this for me?”

Frost cringed but took Trogg, tossing the man over his shoulder as he spoke. “Bane is out of control Boss. He is killing and destroying everything. I tried telling him to stop, but he took a swing at me. Good thing I’m fast and he was distracted with other people too stupid to get out of his way in time.”

Jack’s eyes widened before he turned to Harley. “Harls! We’re missing it!”

Harley laughed. “Well let’s get downstairs before the cops come!”

Frost frowned looking between Jack and Harley before he said. “Boss, we can’t get out because Bane won’t let anyone leave. Zsasz went to go find Dr. October because we don’t think she can get in to stop him.”

Jack nodded. “Okay, but I wouldn’t mind seeing Bane rampaging.”

Jack grabbed Harley’s hand and pushed by Frost and Jason, the two of them laughing.

Frost sighed glancing at Jason then shrugged, shifting Trogg’s body. “Let’s go.”

*

The dance lights were still going and the pre programmed music was currently playing Jamiroquai’s “Canned Heat” while Bane tore the club apart.

Jack arrived at the bottom of the stairs with Harley’s hand in his and let out a high pitched gasp. “OH my GOD Harley--look at him go!”

Harley watched as Bane, who seemed to fill the room and with his veins glowing green under his skin, ripped the bar counter up and threw it across the dance floor. There were several patrons and staff still trapped inside, screaming as the counter slid across the dance floor and into a wall where it hit with an impact that created a crater in the wall.

Bane roared, his head whipping around. Harley could see his eyes were glowing green as well. He seemed to grow a few inches right in front of them.

“Puddin...did he just grow bigger?” Harley asked in a whisper against his ear.

Jack giggled. “Oh he did! He did!”

That was when Zsasz, holding Dr. October’s hand, pushed himself through the broken doorway followed by the sound of sirens.

Bane’s head whipped back and forth, his eyes glowing unnaturally bright as he roared, the sound of the sirens triggering him as he smashed his fists into the floor.

Jack squealed. “Oh my god, he is magnificent!!”

Bane’s head whipped around to Jack and Harley. He snarled, which was followed by another roar of rage. He launched himself toward Jack and the others.

Frost and Jason, now behind Jack and Harley both cursed. “Ah fuck! BOSS!”

Jack laughed and clapped his hands and stomped his feet in glee. “Hahaha!!”

Harley grabbed Jack by his shirt. She shook him a little trying to get him to focus. “Puddin!! We need to move!!!”

Jack was laughing so hard he had tears in his eyes and with the bloody smile on his face, he looked crazed. He was still laughing leaning forward with his hands on his knees. Harley shook him. “JACK! PUDDIN!!”

Jack’s eyes, which were that strange unnatural shade of blue, snapped to hers then back to the oncoming Bane. His expression changed as if he was finally realizing they were in trouble.

“Oh shit,” Jack said softly. He grabbed Harley and shoved her behind him and drew his gun out from the front of his pants.

He pointed it at Bane and yelled. “Don’t make me do it!! BANE!! Don’t you fucking hurt Harley!!”

That was when another voice cut through the music, Bane’s roaring and Jack’s shout.

“BANE!”

Bane stopped in his tracks just before he would have been on Jack, Harley, Frost and Jason. The large man turned to see Viktoria. She was dressed in a pair of jeans and white shirt, unarmed but her hands were out and she was holding a syringe in one hand.

“Bane, it’s time to come home,” she said softly.
Bane took several deep breaths as she approached him, but he didn’t move as she came forward and took his arm. The syringe contained a clear liquid that almost looked as if it had sparkles floating in it. She put the needle to the huge man’s arm and plunged the liquid into Bane’s flesh. He shuddered then as his mass was reduced only slightly. Viktoria looked up at everyone.

Jack was still holding the gun on Bane, though he grinned brightly. “We ready to head out?”

She nodded. “Yes, the cops will be here anytime.”

Jack put the gun back into the front of his pants. “Okay, let’s go my dears, we still have so much to do before our introduction to Gotham!”

Jack hopped down the last few stairs before he turned and put his arms out to Harley. She squealed and jumped into his arms wrapping her legs around his waist, her dress sliding dangerous up her thighs. She cradled his face in her hands and kissed Jack, her tongue tracing his bloody lips with delight. Jack growled and squeezed her rear before he shifted her onto his hip throwing his free hand up into the air.

“Let’s go my clowns!!” Jack laughed, turning to head toward the exit.

He kissed Harley as the beat of Florence and the Machine singing “Kiss with a Fist” played over the sound system. Jack danced, bobbing back and forth a little while he carried her out of the club, followed by his gang, and singing at the top of his lungs.

“A kick to the teeth is good for some
A kiss with a fist is better than none…”

Harley giggled holding him tightly kissing his ear as he danced out with her.

*

Later that evening, Batman stood in the bloody remains of Inferno. Batman had left Robin in the car; he didn’t think a BDSM bar would be appropriate for the teen, though Robin had complained quite vigorously.

The police detective Bullock was shaking his head. “So far reports are crazy. We got at least fifteen dead and another twenty or more injured. Not only do we have a fucking giant, or a “troll” attacking, we have reports up there on that fucking Second Circle where the real creepos like to play, they say two people with white clown makeup--one of them with green hair--attacked several people. The man was going around with a smile painted on his face in blood and the woman with him was beating people with a fucking paddle. Personally, I think there were too many drugs and spankings going on and things got out of hand.”

Batman frowned, looking around at the aftermath of the violence that had occurred here just a couple of hours prior. “Clowns you say?”

Bullock nodded. “And a giant, don’t forget the giant, Bats.”

Batman frowned.
They had returned home late, or as Jack had said: it wasn’t late, but really just early in the morning.

Jack knelt down in front of Harley and very carefully applied the first aid ointment to her side and hip. They were both naked, their hair wet and freshly washed. While Jack was applying the cream to her side, Harley combed her wet hair and braided it. She had her eyes partly closed enjoying the gentle touch of her husband’s fingers on her skin. Jack’s expression was intent as he worked to cover the wounds on her sides. They looked harsh and painful against her pale skin, and that made him angry. The urge to head out to where he knew Frost and Jason were holding Mario and Trogg was almost too strong to resist; he wanted to go and beat both of them to death for hurting his wife, but, lucky for the them, his naked wife was too much of a temptation to resist. He would just hold that anger in check for later.

Mario and Trogg had been taken by Frost and Jason to a secure location where Jack and Harley would go visit tomorrow, while Trope and Thea set everything up for their big introduction to Gotham. Jack smiled at the thought of it. He was excited—the whole thing was going to be so much fun! He grinned as he gently spread the cream over the slashes on her side.

Jack glanced up at her as he cooed. “All better?”

Harley smiled at the same time, pushing a lock of white hair that she had missed from her braid back behind her ear and nodded. “All better puddin, thank you.”

She reached out and caressed her fingers through his slightly damp green hair. He smiled up at her, his eyes traveling up her body slowly, taking his time to enjoy every naked inch of her.

Jack hopped to his feet and tossed the cream aside; the tube hit the floor and skidded out of sight.

Jack gazed at Harley and reached out to caress her face.

“You were so magnificent tonight. My sweet, deadly angel.” Jack spoke with love in his voice as his fingertips caressed her jaw, his eyes tracing the lines of her face.

Harley’s white cheeks turned pink at his words. “You are so sweet.”

Jack chuckled, but his voice was soft and sweet filled with affection as he caressed her jaw. “Only for you.” He traced her lips with his fingertip until Harley giggled and sucked her lips in. “That tickles.”

Jack laughed softly. “Now, for some real healing.”

He slid his arms around her waist and gently tugged her to him. He gazed at her lips, then gradually up at her eyes before he kissed her, taking his time to enjoy the feel of her lips, the way her tongue felt against his, her body soft and smooth. He loved the way she fit up against him, the way that her body was made for him and his body for her. She was always meant to be his girl Jack believed; she was what he had been waiting for his whole life without realizing it and she had been through hell and back with him. His perfect girl, his pumpkin, his wife. Jack smiled slowly as an idea began to form in his mind while he pressed her against him.

“Harley—will you marry me?” he asked while brushing his lips against hers.

Harley laughed softly. “Silly, we’re already married.”
Jack brushed his nose against hers, his lips playing against her. He licked her lips, played with her tongue before he answered her.

“That was before...when we were Jack and Harley. Now I’m Joker...the Joker and you are my Harley Quinn...we died...Jack and Harley died so that Joker and Harley Quinn could live. We lost everything Harls, our lives, our identities, and we nearly lost our family. But worse, we almost lost each other. Fuck Harls, we both thought we had lost each other!” Jack squeezed her tightly. “I think that means another marriage is in order, another chance, a symbol of our bond, to reestablish the fact that we are inseparable, and that even death couldn’t keep us apart.” He stared into her eyes. Harley could see the intensity of his emotions as he spoke. Even with his emotions running high, Jack had a smile dancing across his pale face. She could feel his lips move against hers as he spoke. “I, the Joker, am asking you, Harley Quinn, to marry me.”

Harley’s hands caressed down his lower back, as she stared back at him. Her fingers spread out to grab his rear and press him up against her. She loved the feel of his erection pressed against her abdomen, hard and warm while her arms were around him, holding him close, never to let him go.

Jack purred and his blue eyes glowed from under his lashes as he whispered, asking once more. “Will you marry me Harley Quinn, will you marry your Joker?”

Harley giggled. “Yes Joker, I will marry you.”

Jack laughed happily and lifted her up off her feet. Harley squeaked in surprise, wrapping her arms around his head and leaned into him as her husband carried her over to the bed. Harley laughed and squealed as he tilted her over his shoulder a little, coming dangerously close to toppling her over while he crawled on his knees onto the bed while trying to balance Harley, but ultimately she made him too heavy and the two of them collapsed onto the bed laughing.

Jack rolled up into a sitting position, folding his legs before he reached for her, grabbing Harley by her ankle and hauled her toward him. He let go of her ankle and grabbed her wrist pulling her up and onto his lap.

Harley giggled as she twisted around to sit on his lap, wrapping her arms and legs around him. Jack smiled brightly at her. “There ya go pumpkin, sit on daddy’s lap.”

Harley laughed and smacked his shoulder lightly. “Puddin! That’s terrible!”

Jack continued to chuckle. “You like it when I’m terrible.”

Harley giggled louder, stroking her fingers through his green hair. “I do like you being terrible.”

Jack grinned at her with a wink. “I knew it. Come here to daddy sweets, I want some sugar and some spice.”

Harley brushed her lips against his and whispered. “Mm...puddin.”

She reached down between them, stroking her hand along his member in soft, but firm gestures. Jack arched his head back with a low groan. “Uh, Harley.”

She pressed her teeth into her lip watching his expression. She continued to stroke him up and down enjoying the feel of him in her hand, but especially liked the look on his face, his brow furrowed, his mouth slightly open. She rubbed her thumb over the head of his shaft, spreading the drop of thick moisture at the tip around the head of him. Harley licked her lips, her groin aching, watching Jack’s expression of pleasurable agony made her want him all the more. She wanted to make him cry out, to yell her name. She lifted up just enough to hold Jack in position before she slid down, feeling that... pleasurable pressure followed by his shaft filling and stretching her. She dropped her hands to his shoulders and leaned, pressing her hips down on him with a low moan. He felt so good; their bodies coming together made her shiver.

Jack pulled her closer, shuddering when he felt how wet she was, her body wrapping around him and holding him inside her. His hands went to her hips, spreading his fingers to grab as much of her as he could as he pulled her closer. He thrust up with his hips, though the position left Harley all the power. He slid his hands up to her waist, bending his head to kiss and suck at her breast.

Harley caressed his shoulders, up the back of his neck, and stroked her fingers through his hair, rolling her hips into him at the same time she cradled his head against her chest.

Jack ran his hands gently up her sides, caressing her back, brushing his nose against her skin, his tongue flicking out to tease her nipple, which he quickly followed with a tender kiss while Harley thrust against him, moving back and forth and occasionally shifting her hips side to side.

Jack smiled, lifting his head from her breast to lick at her mouth. Harley rose up over him cradling his face in her hands while she moved back and forth slowly, squeezing her inner muscles and made Jack groan loudly. He pulled her closer, his hands sliding down to her rear, his fingers grabbing her ass cheeks and sliding between them, reaching down to feel his shaft moving in and out of her as Harley moved against him. He hissed with a smile, feeling her slick fluids coating him each time she moved back, then the feeling of her body taking him in again made his shiver.

Harley moaned as she arched her back and cupped the back of Jack’s head at the same time. Her nails pressed into his scalp when she leaned back, thrusting herself forward, sliding on his lap. She dragged her teeth across her bottom lip, the intensity of her pleasure was building with each stroke of her hips along his erection, each thrust forward brought her closer and closer...

She gasped loudly, glancing down at Jack, her breath quickening when she saw his expression, the blue of his eyes just visible through his lashes, his mouth slightly open, a smile gracing his lips and the dim light glancing off his straight white teeth. Harley’s heart swelled in her chest. She loved him so much; it was all consuming, she would and had done anything for him and she would continue to do whatever Jack needed. She would not just help him, but love him and protect him. She gasped, arching her back, thrusting onto him, her body trembling with each stroke.

Jack pulled her closer, meeting her thrusts with his own, his crossed legs bending up slightly with each movement of his hips. He kissed her throat, his lips gliding up the column of her neck, his hands pressed harder against her back holding her close. He was desperate to hold her against him, to feel her, to take comfort and pleasure from the woman he loved.

Harley moaned loudly, her thrusts increasing in intensity, coming quicker and quicker, her breathing becoming louder as she became wetter. Jack trembled feeling her swiftly approaching orgasm. He kissed her collar, her shoulders, and licked her neck whispering sweet nothings to her.

“Harls, my pumpkin, my girl...” His voice was thick and deep with emotion.

“Uh...uh, puddin!” she groaned. Strands of her white hair came loose from her braid, sticking to her white skin, snow against alabaster. Jack smiled at the image of her, hair stuck to her forehead and her cheeks as she worked up a slight perspiration that made her snowy skin sparkle, as if flakes of snow or diamonds decorated her body. She moved her body against him, showing him her love in the most primitive and expressive way possible. It wasn’t that they were fucking, Jack thought, it was that they were joining together, their bodies, their pleasure, their love, sharing themselves with each other in a way that no one else could understand.
Jack could do this with no other but her, ever. His arms around her tightened at the thought of how much he needed her, loved her.

Jack hissed, watching her. She was so beautiful, his girl, with her creamy, milk white skin, pressed against his matching coloring, the slight rosey pink of her nipples, the pink of her sex, but it was her expression that turned him on the most, that look of sexual pleasure on her face that excited him beyond reason. He dipped his head down once more to kiss and suck at her nipples, tasting the sweetness of her skin, enjoying the feel of her body shivering against his when he lightly grasped her nipple with his teeth. The way her muscles tightened around him, the feel of her heels pressed against his back all combined to drive him nuts! But it was her deep moan of pleasure that sent shivers up his spine, knowing he was causing that expression, that sound of wild abandon made him grin.

He bit down on the curve along the side of her breast, sliding a hand along her ribs to push her opposite breast up, to squeeze the silky softness of her breast while he bit down on her skin and sucked hard. He wanted to leave a mark on her, a purple brand on her creamy skin. He smiled pulling back to gazed at the reddish, purple mark left by his mouth, shifting to another position to make another mark, this time adding the slight pressure of his teeth. Each time he pressed his teeth against her, Harley groaned. Jack moved his mouth along her skin, his tongue sliding along, enjoyed the slightly salty perspiration until he arrived at her shoulder where he bit her again, leaving another mark before switching to the top of her other breast, growling deep in his throat with each thrust of his hips and bite of his teeth.

Harley gasped and leaned back. Jack uncrossed his legs, which allowed Harley to reach back behind her with one hand and grab his calf, her other hand on his shoulder. Her fingers dug into his flesh as she held on and thrust forward harder and faster, her breath coming in quicker, deeper pants. She leaned back, placing her feet on the mattress, spreading her legs a little wider, letting go of his leg to put both hands on his shoulders so that Harley could thrust harder, deeper. Her mind was a blank filled only with the primal sense of her pleasure and her love for the man she was with.

Jack kept his hands on her back, helping her balance, watching the slip and slide of his penis entering her, sliding almost out, then into her again as she moved back and forth. He thrust back, though Harley was doing most of the work. He licked his lips at the glistening wetness she left behind on him, accompanied by the sound of their bodies coming together. He grunted with the effort of holding back while Harley just thrust with more abandon, her pants mixed with grunts of passion, her fingers pressed hard into his shoulders as she arched back further.

Just when Jack thought he couldn’t hold back any longer, she came with a gasp and a loud, lingering moan that ended in a little squeal.

Harley cried out, throwing her head back, her eyes tightly closed as her body bowed backwards her hips thrusting down on him while as she climaxed with a loud, shuddering cry. She dug her nails hard into his shoulders with both hands, her body tightening when she arched into him.

Jack yanked her closer then, needing to feel her, desperate to have her close, wanting to feel every moment of her climax. He groaned when he felt the flood of her orgasm wash over him. He trembled, his fingers spasming as he struggled to hold onto her, as well as to hold back. He didn’t let himself climax with her; he wanted to wait.

Jack needed to feel her orgasm again, needed to have her wash over him, soak him with her fluids again. Jack instead focused on her, on how much he loved her, how much he needed her. He gently covered her neck, shoulders and breasts in kisses, tightening his hold on her.

Harley giggled with pleasure, leaving her cheek against her arms, wrapped tightly around him as she hugged him.
“Mmm...my puddin,” she purred, catching the lobe of his ear with her teeth for a second before she leaned back and placed both her hands on Jack’s chest and shoved.

Jack blinked in surprise as her shove sent him backwards onto his back. Jack made a small startled grunt as he went down. At the same time Harley came up to position herself on top of Jack (careful not to pull off of him), her knees forward and her feet planted on the mattress so she was squatting over him.

Jack grinned lopsidedly up at her placing his hands on her bent knees. “Being a little aggressive are we?”

Harley giggled and then growled. “I want you to scream puddin.”

Jack lifted a brow at her, his smile crookedly endearing she thought. She grinned, pressing her teeth girlishly into her bottom lip as she rested her hands on his chest, sliding her hands up to his shoulders, caressing his throat before her fingers glided up to where she caressed his jaw with her fingertips before dragging her fingers over his lower lip. Jack licked her fingers as they passed over his mouth, making her giggle.

Jack slid his hands under her rear, giving her a good squeeze as he did so.

Harley lifted up, sliding her hands back down to his chest where she pressed her hands against him, using him to steady herself, her eyes fluttering as she squeezed him with her inner muscles. Jack groaned, his eyes rolling back in pleasure. Another louder groan was followed by her slowly lowering herself down. She moved carefully, slowly, taking her time to find not just her rhythm, but to check her balance as well. She wanted to feel every inch of him as she moved up and slowly down, tightening her muscles around him.

Jack groaned loudly as warm ripples rolled through him. His hands snaked from her rear to her thighs, helping to hold her up. This position made her fully exposed to him, her clitoris swollen bright pink, asking for him to touch her. He raised his head, catching her gaze for a moment. Harley looked down at him, a seductive smile traced her lips at the same time that her hands pressed against his chest. She lifted up slowly, then down again, moving with slow, deliberate thrusts. She moaned softly, the feeling of his hard shaft inside her made her want to shudder, but at the same time the feeling of being with him like this, so intimately intertwined made her gasp as her emotions roiled up and bubbled over. She loved him so much; that combined with how good he made her feel, so unbelievably good on so many levels, made her gasp. Harley swallowed, her piston-like movements began to increase in speed and intensity. Her hands pressed down on his chest harder, her nails digging into his flesh just slightly.

She brought her knees forward, leaning toward the man she loved at the same time continuing to bounce up and down, holding her body tense as she moved. She grinned down at him, and breathlessly she murmured, “Scream for me puddin...I wanna hear you yell.”

Jack hissed through his teeth in response, his hands sliding up under rear then up around her hips.

He groaned with a laugh. “Make me pumpkin.”

Harley giggled sliding her hands down to his stomach, spreading her legs wide to the side. She grinned at him, her eyes sparkling. She pushed up then with her bottom lip caught between her teeth, and she moved up and down again, building up to faster movements.

Jack pressed his lips together, stifling a long groan watching her going up and down on him, his hands sliding along the tender underside of her thighs. She arched her back, her arms both squeezing and thrusting her breasts out. Jack slid his hands long on her thighs, caressing the soft, silky flesh, his eyes moving from watching the expression on her face, to looking down to watch his member disappearing into her, her clitoris pink and wet, her body leaving his shaft glistening and wet. He hissed with pleasure, his teeth clenched.

Harley moaned and she stopped with the up and down bounce to start a grinding roll of her hips against him, pressing down and taking him completely inside her.

Jack shuddered arching his back while thrusting his hips up into her. “Oh god Harley…”

Harley giggled between her moans. “Cum for me puddin, cum for me...scream for me Jack…”

She gasped, squeezing and grinding as she purred. “Cum for me Joker.”

Jack cried out loudly, thrusting up and almost convulsing when he climaxed. He threw his head back against the bed, his mouth opened as he groaned and squeezed her hips. The sound of his moan filled their bedroom.

Harley cried out loudly and dropped forward when he climaxed. She ground her hips against him, her thighs clamping tight around him. She kissed him roughly at the moment she orgasmed.

Jack wrapped his arms tight around her, swallowing her climax-wrought groan, his tongue in her mouth. He bent legs up trying to hold her tightly. He finally rolled over to his side taking her with him, wrapping himself around her.

Harley giggled holding on tightly, hooking her ankles behind him.

Jack brushed his nose against her, nipping softly at her lips. “You are such a bad girl.”

Harley giggled. “You like it.”

“Mm...I like it very much.” Jack purred before he playfully covered her face in kisses until Harley was laughing. “Stop!!”

Jack whispered. “Oh no, you can never make me stop pumpkin. You are mine and I’m going to kiss you as much as I want.” He made loud kisses as he pressed his lips to her cheeks and nose causing her to squeal.

Jack stopped with a chuckle. “Wanna hear a joke?”

Harley giggled. “Okay.”

Jack, stroking back the loose strands of her hair, murmured with a grin. “A teacher is teaching a class and she sees that Johnny isn't paying attention, so she asks him, "If there are three ducks sitting on a fence, and you shoot one, how many are left?"

Johnny says, "None."

The teacher asks, "Why?"

Johnny says, "Because the shot scared them all off."

The teacher says, "No, two, but I like how you're thinking." Johnny asks the teacher, "If you see three women walking out of an ice cream parlor, one is licking her ice cream, one is sucking her ice cream, and one is biting her ice cream, which one is married?"
The teacher says, "The one sucking her ice cream."

Johnny says, "No, the one with the wedding ring, but I like how you think!"

Harley stared at him for a beat before she burst out into laughter.

Jack chuckled holding her close. He could feel the vibration of her laughter through her entire body and into his. He snuggled her closer, enjoying the sensation as Harley whispered back. “You’re horrible.”

Jack chuckled. “That’s why you love me.”

Harley purred. “One of many puddin, one of many reasons.”

Jack nuzzled her neck with a whispered, “I love you my sweets.”

Harley closed her eyes. Jack shifted a little, slipping out of her, made her stick her bottom lip out. He laughed softly kissing her bottom lip.

They were both quiet for a little bit, neither of them moved, content to lay in each others arms. Jack lazily kissed her eyelids, then her nose and cheeks until he finally arrived at her lips again.

Harley sleepily smiled. “Puddin? You all right?”

“About?” she asked softly, her eyes closed. She tucked her head under his chin and tightened her grip on him. For a moment an overwhelming feeling of fear washed over her, fear of losing him again. She didn’t know where it came from or why, especially after making love, but it was suddenly there. The feeling was powerful and it made her shiver. Harley pressed her cheek against his chest squeezing her eyes shut against the spike of fear in her chest.

Jack felt her body shiver and he tightened his grip on her.

He chuckled giving her a tight squeeze and a kiss on top of her head. “I’m just thinking about what’s coming. About punishing Bruce, Gotham. It’s just going to be so much fun pumpkin!! I have so many plans swirling in my head. It’s a bit overwhelming really. There is so much to do! We are going to remake Gotham into something so special Harley, together with our new family.”

She could feel the emotions in Jack, in the way his body tensed and relaxed, the rumble of his voice in his chest.

He whispered softly. “You, Frost, Agatha...all of them--they are my real family Harls. They are the people that stood by me, by us, no matter how bad things have gotten. They have stood with us and unlike my brother or your mother, they are our real family Harls. They loves us and we love them, that is what family is all about. Not blood.”

Harley kissed his chest. “You’re right puddin. You and our friends, they are the family I want, the family I’ve always needed.”

Jack laughed softly squeezing her playfully. “We are going to have so much fun Harley...so much fun together, all of us.”

Harley pressed her teeth worriedly into her bottom lip. She closed her eyes and held him tight. She didn’t care what happened next, she only cared that she would be with him, by his side through all the trials yet to come. She was going to help her puddin do whatever it was he needed to do.

And she had her own revenge to seek on Bruce Wayne.

Harley smiled as Jack pulled the covers up over the two of them.

*

Carmine Falcone wore an Armani suit and puffed on an expensive cigar as he paced his office. The office, which was located in the heart of the fashion district, was a testament to Falcone’s wealth. The walls had aged cedar wood paneling along with several tall bookcases that contained books he had never read, along with paintings that he had purchased, expensive paintings, including a nude by Modigliani and an untitled piece by Philip Guston. Falcone stared at the painting without really seeing it as smoke slowly rolled from between his lips, fogging up the glass that he had surrounding and protecting the painting. Falcone liked to protect his investments, and sometimes that meant protecting them from himself.

His office contained a large glass desk that dominated the left half of the room next to the large window that looked out at Gotham, with an expensive black leather chair. On the desk Falcone had a laptop and a crystal decanter that contain cognac with two glasses sitting on a silver tray alongside a large crystal ashtray, but in his hand Falcone carried a large glass filled to the rim with bourbon, the bottle of Ancient Age Bourbon sat on a bookshelf as he continued to pace the office, puffing on his cigar like a great dragon, waiting for his appointed man to arrive and the man was late. Falcone hated it when his people were late.

He had just finished off his glass and jammed out the cigar; he had reached for the bottle to refresh his glass when he heard a light knock and his secretary, a very pretty and shapely brunette named Angela opened the door. Today she was wearing purple, a very flattering color on her rounded curves.

“Mr. Falcone, Sargent Loeb is here to see you,” Angela said with the same flirtatious smile she had on her lips since the moment he had hired her.

Falcone nodded. “Send him in, Angela.”

She smiled and nodded and a few seconds later the ugly visage of Sgt. Gillian Loeb filled the doorway. The man hurried into the room looking nervous.

Angela closed the door; as soon as she did Loeb smiled and pulled out a flash drive. “I got the copies of the camera footage as soon as I could Mr. Falcone.”

Falcone grabbed the bottle off the bookshelf and walked over to his desk. “Well, what are you waiting for?” he snarled taking a seat behind his desk. He set his glass and the bottle down, flipping up the lid of the computer and put his hand out for the flashdrive.

Loeb hurriedly handed the drive over. Falcone shoved it into the slot on his computer, his fingers quickly moving over the keys and had the video going in moments. Falcone narrowed his eyes as he scrolled through the footage. Loeb stepped over to the mob boss’s desk.

“Sir, if you move to the 48 mark, that is when the giant shows up. There isn’t any footage of the Second Circle—they actually don’t have cameras on that level sir. And the security cameras at the club have no sound. I believe that is where your son was located so there is only some minor footage of him being carried out of the club. This camera was mostly focused on the entrance and the stairs. There is...”
Falcone snapped, “Shut up.”

Loeb snapped his mouth shut.

Falcone sped the footage up to where Loeb had recommended. That was the moment someone or something crashed through the door. Falcone sat up straight and leaned closer to the screen. He recognized who it was—Bane, but only because of the man’s size and he knew the mask. Even with the grainy image, the pattern of the mask was something he knew from the fight club...the images of the rest of the people involved was fuzzy, grainy. All Falcone could see was that one of them was female and with white skin...

Falcone snarled low. “Bane...what the fuck was he doing there?”

As Falcone watched, the camera only caught one angle of the destruction, so that Falcone was only seeing moments as Bane moved through the club like a one man wrecking machine. Without looking up from the computer, Falcone hissed. “Where is the rest of the footage?”

“Sorry sir. I was only able to get the film from the one camera.”

Falcone glanced up with narrowed eyes at Loeb who looked as if he were about to wet himself. “Sorry sir, it took a lot of waiting and misdirection to make that copy. But if you watch, you will catch a glimpse of the people who took your son.”

Falcone snorted and returned his attention to the screen. Bane had moved out of view of the camera’s lense, but Falcone saw movement by the stairs, a group of four people, three men and a woman. Two of the men looked to be carrying bodies, though from the camera’s location he couldn’t be sure who they were. Falcone’s attention was on the two people in the front, both with ghost white skin. Loeb spoke, leaning over to point at the scene. “We think those are your son and the man named Trogg who works at...”

Falcone snapped as he paused the image. “I know where Trogg works you little weasel. Why are they taking him too?”

“No idea sir,” Loeb replied with a little shrug.

Falcone stared at the image. The two people in the front, a man and a woman, pale, ghostly white skin...something looked familiar about them, but the footage just wasn’t clear enough.

Falcone hissed under his breath. “Send Angela in here on your way out.”

Loeb started to say something, but Falcone looked up at him with narrowed eyes as he quietly repeated, “Send Angela in on your way out.”

Loeb nodded. “Yes sir.”

Falcone watched as the officer left. A few seconds later Angela walked into the room. “Yes Mr. Falcone?”

Falcone picked up the bottle of bourbon and poured himself another glass. “First, call Gigi and tell her that I’m picking her up for lunch, next I want you to contact Tallyman, let him know I have a job for him.”

Angela paled just slightly around the eyes. “Tallyman sir?”

Falcone nodded. “I have a few people who need to pay for their bad decisions.”
Bruce, dressed casually in black slacks and a white dress shirt with the sleeves rolled up, was down in the Batcave with Dick and Barbara. He stood by the computers, his arms crossed over his chest as he stared at the security camera footage on his computer screens in front of him. Dick sat in one of the chairs trying to resist the urge to spin around, though he did have his feet on the floor, his entire body slumped as he moved the chair back and forth with the balls of his feet. Bruce watched as Babs, a pencil stuck behind her ear and her tongue sticking out just slightly from between her teeth, did everything she could to make the image clearer.

After another couple of second Babs cursed under her breath and sat back in frustration. “Shit.”

“Language,” Bruce said without emotion and without looking over at her where Babs glared in annoyance at the computer screens. Instead, his eyes were narrowed as he focused on the images before him.

“Sorry.” Barbara sighed. “I can’t make it any clearer. This is some of the worst recording I’ve seen; it’s primitive, god da…” She cut herself off. “Anyway, I’m sorry—it’s the best I can do.” She slumped back in her chair in frustration.

Bruce nodded his understanding. “Anything on the plates or the cars?”

She shook her head. “I checked the traffic cams and there is a glimpse of their group splitting up outside. I mean, the giant guy is hard to miss, and I can see a hint of some of them getting into a vehicle, but with the crowd outside and other people leaving… ” She threw her hand up at the grainy image. “I couldn’t get a plate. All I can get is that the one guy is huge…or was huge. Is it just me or did he seem to shrink?”

Bruce only grunted in response.

Babs exchanged a look with Dick as she said, “Anyway, the traffic cam shows him getting into a van, but I can’t get a good image of the plate…so, that’s as good as I can get and there were no cameras on the second floor of the club. Seems that the club doesn’t have cameras up there.”

Bruce hissed in frustration. “So what you’re telling me is that we didn’t get anything at all.”

Barbara sighed. “That’s right.”

Bruce nodded. “Just keep your eyes and ears open, both of you. This was a big deal. They took Mario Falcone; his father is going to respond with violence. I want to be ready.”

With that Bruce turned and left.

Dick and Barbara watched him go before they turned back to exchange a look.

Dick made a face. “Whaddaya think crawled up his shorts?”

Barbara turned back to the computer, her fingers flying over the keys as she chuckled. “Better watch it. I think he might hear you.”

Dick wrinkled his nose and sat up straighter. “So, he tell you all that stuff about his little brother.”

She nodded, her eyes still on the computer screen. “He did.”

“Kinda weird don’t you think? I mean, his brother went nutso and Bruce is all straight and narrow,”
Dick muttered as he pulled out a piece of gum and offered it to Babs.

Barbara shrugged, taking the offered gum without looking at him, her eyes still on the computer as she tried and failed to do anything with the image from the cameras.

“Family is always weird, and some people just have weirder families than others.”

Dick frowned slightly and shrugged. “True. My mom said family wasn’t about who you were related to as much as it was about the people you chose to bring into your life.”

Barbara smiled. “Your mother sounded like a smart woman.”

Dick nodded, his voice sad. “She was the best.”

Barbara turned her chair around to face him. “Hey, I’m sorry.”

Dick shrugged slipping another piece of gum into his mouth so that the wad was much bigger and then gave her a slight smile. “It’s cool. I miss them, every day, but Bruce has been great, mostly. A bit of a hard ass actually, but…” He shrugged again. “I admire him. It’s just...he needs to loosen up a bit.”

Barbara laughed as she chewed her gum. “Yeah, he seems a bit tightly wound.”

Dick grinned. “You have no idea.”

*

Frost, wearing only his boxers and a grey t-shirt, walked into his living room carrying two mugs of coffee. Agatha was sitting on the love seat wearing a pair of white sweats, a loose white t-shirt and a white sweater, her feet were bare and her hair was slightly rumpled. Frost smiled as he handed her the cup of coffee. Even dressed casually and with mussed hair, Agatha was all class and sexy as hell to Frost.

Agatha took it with smile. “Thank you dear. So you were saying about Jackie last night?”

Frost sat down next to her with his own mug. “He seemed more unhinged than I’ve seen before. It was... I mean, the plan went to hell. Jason said it all happened so fast. I guess Mario was trying to dance with Harley and instead of sticking to the plan, the Boss lost his temper and simply shot Mario in the knee in front of all those people. He didn’t care. We were only supposed to call in Bane if things went wrong, but damn, things went wrong fast.”

Agatha sipped her coffee. “Sometimes plans go south.”

“Yeah, but...it was a madhouse in there. Bane immediately was out of control and the Boss...he was just killing people...which, I mean he’s done that before, but there was just something different. He almost didn’t get us out of there before...” Frost sighed. “If Harley hadn’t yelled at him, got his attention, I don’t think he would have cared if Bane attacked us. It was different...he’s never been careless about our lives quite like that before Agie.”

Agatha reached out and stroked her fingers behind Frost’s ear. “Don’t worry Jonny. Jackie and Harley have had a traumatic experience. It’s natural that it’s going to take them both some time to adjust, unless you’re thinking about leaving him?” Agatha asked with concern.

“I guess you’re right. I’ve just never seen the Boss so...” Frost shrugged. “I don’t know. He’s just...he’s different and not just in how he looks. I can’t put my finger on what it is, but I have this feeling...” He shook it off. “I would never leave him Agie. He is more than my Boss, he’s a friend, he’s family. And family—real family—stick with you no matter what because family isn’t about blood, it’s about the people you love and who love you back. It doesn’t matter how the Boss may change Agie. Him, Harley, all of them...you...” He gave her a loving smile. “You are my family.”

Agatha smiled and set her coffee down on the table on her side of the love seat and pulled Frost into her arms. He set his coffee down and gathered her close, laying his head against her chest.

Agatha whispered against his hair.

“I’m so glad Jackie has friends like you Jonny.”

*

A week had gone by with no word about his son and Falcone was not just upset, but livid. Gigi was lying across the couch dressed in a sheer pink babydoll lingerie top made of chiffon lace with a matching pair of thong-like panties and nothing else. She watched as Falcone, still dressed in his grey suit and tie, poured them both a shot of whiskey.

“Carmie, you really need to relax. Maybe Mario wasn’t really kidnapped. I mean, you know how kinky he can be, maybe this is just some sort of sex game he’s playing?” Gigi smiled as Carmine came over and handed her drink to her and sat down beside her, laying a hand on her leg as she lifted them for him to sit and replaced her legs on his lap.

“No Gigi honey, this ain’t one of my boy’s games. He would have contacted me by now.” Falcone frowned. “He knows better.”

Gigi took a sip of the whiskey and did her best not to make a face. She didn’t like whiskey, but she drank it for him.

“No, someone took him. I just don’t understand why, I haven’t received a ransom note...nothing. What the fuck do they want?” Carmine took a large swallow of his drink. Gigi began to say something when Carmine’s phone began to ring playing the main theme from The Godfather.

Gigi giggled. “That is so funny that you have that as your ringtone.”

Carmine smiled at her. “What? It’s my favorite movie.” He picked the phone up and answered. “Falcone.”

Gigi giggled under her breath. “Of course it is.”

Carmine listened, a frown creasing his features. “Send him up.”

Gigi looked up. “But Carmine, I thought tonight...”

“This is important Gigi, just shut up, okay?.” Carmine stood while Gigi made a sour face at him. There was a knock at the double doors.

“Enter,” Falcone called out. The doors were opened by one of Falcone’s guards, who stepped in with a man following close behind him while another guard closed the doors behind the two men. The man behind the guard was a very tall, slender black man with close cut hair, wearing a crisp white suit with a black turtle neck underneath.

The man stepped around the guard and put his hand out to Falcone. “Mr. Falcone, you sent for me.”
The man’s voice was smooth, cultured; there was a slight accent that Gigi couldn’t quite place. Falcone took the man’s hand. “Tallyman?”

The man smiled and bowed slightly. “At your service Mr. Falcone.”

Falcone smiled. “Can I offer you a drink?”

Tallyman glanced once at Gigi, but then quickly dismissed her as he turned his attention to Falcone. “No thank you, I’m just here about the job you have in mind, Mr. Falcone.”

Falcone nodded. “All right, straight to business. I want you to find my son and kill whoever took him.”

Tallyman frowned sliding his hands into the pockets of his white slacks. “I’m not usually in the business of finding lost children.”

Falcone snorted. “You’re in the business of settling scores. I’m not hiring you to be a detective, I’m hiring you to help me find the sonofabitch who has my son and kill him. That is what I want you to do, to kill them and everyone they love, I want him or her or them dead. I want their family dead, lovers dead...and I want my son returned.”

Falcone took a breath and added, “I will pay double your fees.”

Tallyman smiled. “Double you say?”

Falcone nodded. “Double.”

Tallyman smiled and put out his hand. “Then you have hired yourself an assassin Mr. Falcone.”

Falcone smiled and took the offered hand. “Good, and I know just where you can start, with a man in my employment named Bane.”

*

A week had gone by, the evening air was crisp, almost downright cold and they could both easily see their breath in the air.

Jack, with Harley sitting behind him, grinned from ear to ear as he twisted back on the handle, feeding more gas to the motorcycle and made them leap forward. Jack let out a wild laugh as he sped through traffic. (Jason had brought the bike over for Jack, a gift for him. Jack had been over the moon, grabbing Jason up into a tight hug. It was a Harley Davidson Breakout, painted a dark purple and Jack loved it.) He wasn’t wearing a helmet, so his green hair flew back, but he did have on a pair of black lensed goggles along with a royal blue three piece suit, black dress shirt with a royal blue tie, blue and black checked socks with brown monk strap dress shoes and a pair of burgundy leather driving gloves. Harley, her hair up in ponytails that were currently trailing behind in the wind, had her arms wrapped around Jack’s middle. She could feel the knife he had concealed under his jacket where her arms pressed against him, and grinned. She wore a pair of her own goggles over her eyes and had a bright smile on her face. She was wearing a pair of red skinny jeans, a black top with sheer upper panels that had little polka dots throughout the material. Over that she wore a quilted black leather jacket, a little red purse over her shoulder, and a pair of red heels decorated with black polka dots.

She yelled, whooping and let go of Jack to throw her arms up into the air just as Jack took several curves in the road, causing the bike to lean dangerously to the side. Jack laughed, his smile spread clear across his face while the bike zipped dangerously through the Gotham evening traffic.
They were headed out to a location in The Hills district where Frost and Jason had stored their “victims” for the last week in an abandoned building while Thea and Trope worked their computer magic.

Jack pulled the bike around the building, an old abandoned building on a street that looked like it too had been long abandoned. There were few people about, a couple on a street corner who stepped back into the shadows when the light from the bike washed over them; a few homeless people were visible here and there; and piles of trash were gathered at the corners of buildings and in the alleyways. This part of The Hill looked like a lost and neglected toy, there was once love here, but over the years that loved had faded leaving this place sad and depressed.

Jack parked the bike and hopped off gracefully, shoving his goggles up onto his forehead, causing strands of green hair to fall to the side of his goggles. Harley did the same with her goggles just before Jack turned and grabbed her around the waist and lifted her up. Harley giggled putting her hands on his shoulders smiling down at him as Jack spun her around once before setting her on her feet with a deep kiss.

“Mm...your lips always taste like candy sweets,” Jack purred brushing his nose against hers before he released her, turning to grab the handles of the bike and walk it toward a metal door set in the back of the building. Harley hurried over to the door and performed a complicated sets of knocks as she grinned over her shoulder at him.

“You are so sweet puddin.” She giggled as the door opened to reveal a normal (his new normal) size Bane without his mask.

Bane grinned down at her and Jack. “Two of my favorite people!”

Harley reached up and wrapped her arms around his waist giving the big man a hug with a gleeful giggle. “Bane!”

Bane laughed hugging her in return with one arm as he stepped back to let her in and to make room for Jack to roll his motorcycle inside.

Jack grinned. “Hey Bane darling, how are things going?”

Bane closed the door letting Harley go at the same time. “The unicorn sisters have everything up and running, just waiting for you and Harley.”

Jack’s smile was bright. “Perfect!”

Jack set the bike in a corner and turned to face Bane and Harley, his arms outstretched to display himself. “How do I look? Good enough for TV?” He did a little spin showing off his outfit. Harley gave Jack a wolf whistle at the same that Bane replied with a grin. “You look great Boss.”

Jack reached out and grabbed the hand of a giggling Harley to spin her around and into his arms. “Now, Harley looks good enough to eat, don’t you agree Bane?”

Bane chuckled. “My little girl looks like an ice princess Boss.”

Jack smiled, gazing down at Harley. “Mm...my little frosty cupcake.”

Harley laughed. “All right you two, enough--come on.”

The two men laughed as Bane took the lead with Jack and Harley following.
He led the two of them down a little hall that twisted to the left, which opened out into a large central room. The room was filled with adjustable umbrella lights, several green screens, a lawn chair, and a colorful beach umbrella. There were several large cameras on tripods and stands, microphones and so many other little things that just delighted Jack. They looked like they had a real studio.

Jack and Harley saw that Thea’s hair had been shaved on the side, but the top was a thick wavy blue. She was bent over her computer, typing away intently. Trope had her hair braided in pigtails, now a rainbow of bright colors that were startling against the all black outfits the two young women wore; she was typing away at such a speed that it was impressive. They were set up in a corner with several computers and computer screens on the wall in front of them, typing away though Trope turned around when she heard them and waved. “Hey Boss! Harley!! Almost ready! Another few minutes and you’ll be broadcasting on every station and over all networks, even cable. We’ll only be able to hold control of the signal for a few minutes, but it should be long enough for you.”

Jack waved. “Thank you darlings!”

Harley giggled and waved back at the girls.

Jason, who had been peering into one of the cameras came over with a grin. He was dressed all in black tonight. “Want us to move them into place Boss?”

Jack nodded. “Please.”

Jason nodded and motioned at Bane, the two men disappearing deeper into the building.

Jack, holding Harley’s hand, walked over to where Alex, Frost, Agatha, Bea, and Zsasz were sitting at an old wooden table on some equally old kitchen chairs. A few of them were drinking beers, though Zsasz looked to be drinking seltzer water. Agatha, who had been sitting on Frost’s knee jumped up.

“Jackie! Harley!! So good to see you both.” She wrapped her arms around them and pulled them into a hug. “Sorry I missed all the fun at the Inferno though.”

Frost chuckled at Agatha’s choice of words.

Bane came around the corner at the other end of the room carrying two metal chairs with two men strapped securely to them with duct tape. Behind him came Dr. October and Jason. Jack turned, watching as Bane carried the two men and their chairs as if they weighed no more than a couple of sacks of potatoes. He took the two men over to the little studio set up and set the chairs down next to the umbrella. Both men had tape over their mouths and were struggling against their bonds as Bane straightened their chairs before Viktoria did a quick inspection of Mario and Trogg. Bane loomed nearby, watching their prisoners while Jason strolled back over.

Jack smiled. “So, have they been good?”

Jason snorted. “I’ve learned a lot of new curse words if that is any indication as to how things have been.”

Jack laughed. “Well, I am so glad your education hasn’t been neglected.”

Trope called out. “We are going to be ready in like, fifteen minutes guys.”

Jack clapped his hands. “I guess it’s almost show time. I need a mirror! Need to make myself presentable.”
Frost pointed. “There’s a bathroom over that way Boss.”

Jack nodded and waved, tugging Harley along with him as he made his way to the indicated bathroom.

*

The bathroom was small, just barely big enough for two people, with plain white tile walls and a linoleum flooring, a simple shower, toilet, a baby changing table that was shoved up against the wall, and a mirror over the sink that had a crack that ran diagonally from the upper right corner to the left bottom corner. The light was a harsh white that seemed to emphasize the smallness of the room.

Harley dropped her purse down on the baby station, shoved her goggles inside the purse, and began to pull out some makeup from her purse--brought just for this occasion--and placed the items on the table, a deep red lipstick, black eyeliner, a comb for Jack’s hair, and some hair gel. She glanced up from placing the items on the table. She noticed Jack, both hands on either side of the sink, his goggles dangling around his neck as he leaned toward the mirror. He was staring at himself in the mirror, his nose slightly wrinkled, his hairless brow furrowed, then smooth as he widened his eyes, then furrowed again as he glared at himself. He had combed his hair back with his fingers, but after the ride here on the motorcycle his hair was still a bit wild with long strands, curling ever so slightly, framing his face.

“Everything okay puddin?” Harley asked as she finished setting out the makeup.

Jack frowned without looking at her. “I don’t think I look frightening enough sweets. I think I need something...more.”

Harley stepped over to her husband and leaned against his shoulder looking at him in the mirror. Their gazes met in the mirror. She tilted her head to the side and smiled slowly.

“You are going by the Joker now right? Why don’t we play up the clown aspect of that...you already have a sort of darkness around your eyes that makes the blue very striking, let me darken that further and I can make your smile come out to here...” She put her arm around him and with her fingers indicated his smile, how she could stretch it past his lips.

Jack chuckled. “I like it--do it sweets.”

Harley grinned and turned him to face her. Jack grinned at her, stealing a quick kiss. Harley giggled returning his kiss before she reached back for the eyeliner. She started with his eyes, drawing the pencil around them. His electric blue eyes were already highlighted by a darkness around them that was now natural for Jack, but Harley darkened them more, using her fingers to smudge the pencil out further. She picked up lipstick and began to color Jack’s already red lips, making them a deeper shade of red.

Jack watched her, adoring the wrinkle between her brows as she concentrated on what she was doing.

After she finished coloring his lips, Harley very slowly extended the red out from the corners of his mouth by barely an inch, keeping the line nice and smooth. She finished and took a step back to examine her work. Jack smiled at her, and the red was bright against his perfect white teeth.

Harley’s smile slowly spread across her face. “Almost done puddin.”

She picked up the comb and ran it through his hair, slicking it back.

Harley grinned. “You are so handsome.” She turned him around. “Look in the mirror puddin, tell me what you think.”

Jack turned to gaze at himself in the mirror. He turned his face one way and then the other, smiling the entire time.

“Nothing like going to work with a great big smile,” he said with a chuckle just before he grabbed Harley and yanked her into his arms. She yelped in surprise as Jack lifted her off her feet and swung her around in the tiny bathroom.

“Puddin!” Harley laughed.

Jack beamed at her. “You, my girl, are a genius!”

Harley giggled with delight as Jack set her on her feet and grabbed her face in both hands, kissing her soundly.

“Now, let’s go make some magic!” Jack laughed grabbing Harley’s hand and yanking her out of the bathroom with him.

*

Jack walked back into the large room and yelled. “I’m ready for my close up!!”

Jason looked up from where he was working with the camera, then over to the girls. Trope didn’t turn around from the computers, but she thrust her hand back behind her giving them all a thumbs up.

Everyone else in the room turned to look at Jack with startled gasps.

Jack grinned with delight throwing his arms out. “How do you like my look?”

Frost nodded. “Creepy boss.”

Zsasz grinned. “I like it.”

“Fuckin’ A,” Alex echoed.

Agatha murmured. “That is chilling Jackie.”

Jack grinned happily. “Perfect!”

Jason motioned at Jack. “Okay Boss, get in position.”

Jack kissed Harley one more time before he walked to the little “stage” that was set with the fold out chair and umbrella, along with Mario and Trogg who were continuing to struggle, only stopping to stare as Jack strolled over to them. He waved his hand at them both with a big smile.

“Hello boys, ready to make TV magic? I know I am.” Jack laughed as he sat down in the folding chair and crossed his legs elegantly.

Jason glanced at Trope who began to count down out loud. “Three...two...”

Harley went to stand behind Jason while everyone else stayed where they were, Jack pulled out a pack of cigarettes, pulling one out and lighting it as Trope called out. “ONE!”

She hit something and all her computer screens switched over to a blue screen before they were suddenly filled with Jack’s smiling image.

Jason turned the camera toward Jack and everything went quiet.

*

All across Gotham, all televisions and streaming devices, everything suddenly went blank. Three seconds later an image of a green haired man in what looked like clown makeup popped up on the screen.

The man took a hard drag on his cigarette before he very casually blew out a stream of smoke and he grinned at the camera. To the audience he looked as if he were on a beach, the scene behind him was of a sunny beach and a blue sky. The clown sat under a beach umbrella while two men sat duct taped to a couple of chairs with tape over their mouths, staring back at the camera. Falcone had been lying back on his couch sipping some bourdon with Gigi’s head on his lap, watching some dance competition show that she liked when his eyes widened in disbelief as the screen flipped to some fake ass beach scene, but it was the sight of his son Mario and the man Trogg who worked for him, duct taped and gagged sitting next to the clown that made the mob boss’s blood run cold.

*

Dick had been playing on his phone and watching a ball game when the TV went wonky. He frowned, glancing up as the screen clicked back on, revealing a man with green hair and two men who were taped up.

Dick’s mouth dropped open before he yelled. “Bruce!! Babs!! You might wanna come see this!”

*

The sound of old fashioned cheerful organ music from a carousel began to play. The music very slowly faded until it was only background noise as the camera focused fully on a green haired man sitting on a fake beach.

“Good evening Gotham!!!” Joker grinned at the camera, smoke slowly rolling from between his smiling lips as he bounced his crossed leg, leaning back in the lawn chair as if he had not a care in the world. “Let me introduce myself Gotham...” Joker pressed one hand to his chest. “I’m the Joker.”

Trope triggered the sound of applause and canned laughter.

The Joker laughed with delight before he turned his attention back to the camera. “I thought it would be a good time to introduce myself to all of you here in beautiful Gotham City. I’m here to bring a whole new world of fun not just to you, the simple citizens, but to the mob families that control nearly all of Gotham’s crime.” He winked at the camera. “And who control a lot more than that.”

Joker stood up with a bounce, flicking his cigarette off screen as he walked over to stand behind Mario and Trogg, placing his hands on their heads. The two men began to struggle in a futile effort against their bonds.

“Now, tonight these two are my special guests. This here...” Joker pressed his fingers into Mario’s head tightly, holding him still. “Is Mario Falcone, the son of Gotham’s own crime lord, Carmine Falcone. And this...” Joker pressed down on Trogg’s head. “Is a man named Trogg. I don’t actually know a lot about him, but he works for both father and son Falcone. I have these two delightful men here with me for two reasons. One, as a challenge to Batman, Gotham’s own White Knight...or should I saw Dark Knight since he likes to creep around at night and beat the living shit out of poor criminals just trying to get by on the tough streets of Gotham. And two...for you Mr. Falcone...this is just a little warning to let you know, I’m coming for you, I’m coming for you, your family...all of it.”

Joker laughed. “Now, let’s see what our very special guests have to say, shall we?”

Joker turned his back to the camera and ripped the tape from the mouth of Mario Falcone before he stepped out of the camera’s way.

“YOU MOTHERFUCKER!! My Father is going to RIP OFF YOUR DICK AND STUFF IT DOWN YOUR THROAT!!” Mario screeched, his voice breaking as he yelled.

Joker turned to the camera and put his fingers to his mouth that he held open in mock shock, his eyes going wide in mock surprise. “Such language!” He turned back to Mario. “Do you kiss your mother with that mouth?”

Mario opened his mouth again, about to yell more profanity when Joker slapped him hard across the face with one gloved hand before wagging his finger at him. “That is quite enough young man.”

Joker turned back to the camera with a grin. “Sorry folks, sometimes you just gotta show children some tough love.”

Joker put his hand out gesturing with his fingers. Off camera Jason threw him a roll of duct tape, which he caught, and yanked some out while Mario started to protest.

“Don’t you dare, you fucker!!”

Joker shook his head as he reapplied tape to Mario’s mouth. “Tsk tsk. Remember: Manners maketh man.”

*

In Wayne Manor, Bruce stood behind the couch with his arms crossed over his chest, while Dick still sat watching the television. Bruce had gone pale when he saw his brother, with white skin the color of milk, green hair, and the wide red smile. Bruce felt a shiver ran up his back.

He turned to Barbara who was standing at the other end of the couch. “Is there any way you can trace where the signal is coming from?”

Barbara shrugged. “I don’t know. I can try.”

Bruce nodded. “Go.”

He turned his attention back to the television as his brother continued.

Bruce said softly under his breath low enough that only he could hear. “Oh Jack…”

*

Joker walked behind Trogg. “Now, I wonder what our little Trogg has to say?” His grin was crooked as he ripped the tape from the bound man’s face.

“You fucker!! When I get free I’m gonna make you watch as I rape your girl!”

Joker’s smile dropped, and his eyes, which had been dancing with amusement, went flat. Harley gasped in shock as Jason cursed low under his breath. Everyone else in the room made little noises in response to Trogg, all eyes on Joker.
Joker’s smile quickly returned.

“Well, you do have quite a tongue on you Trogg. I guess it’s a good thing that I don’t actually need you except as an example to Batman and Falcone that I do mean business.”

Joker turned his full attention on the camera with a big smile. “Look away if you’re squeamish!”

He pulled his knife out from under his jacket and with a flourish, flicked the blade open. He moved swiftly, grabbed Trogg by the hair on top of his head to yank his head back. The man’s eyes widened in shock as he realized what was about to happen, but Joker just grinned at the man, then back at the camera.

“Let the games begin.”

With a bright smile, Joker drew the knife across Trogg’s throat.

Mario tried to scream, his body thrashing wildly in the chair.

*

Bruce gasped in shock.

Dick turned away.

*

Falcone tossed Gigi to the floor, throwing his glass at the TV where it smashed against the screen sending veins cracking through the LED screen as he stood up and snarled, his face turning red. “I want the Joker’s head on a spike RIGHT NOW!!”

*

Somewhere in Gotham, in a small apartment hidden away in the forest of old buildings that made up this end of Gotham, Jonathan Crane watched the programming in front of him. He was sitting in an old, patched up cushioned chair that was much too low to the ground for his long legs, causing him to have his legs bent at the knee and spread wide, his knees practically in his face. His arms laid across the arms of the chairs, hands gripped the ends, fingers pressed into the fabric. He narrowed his eyes as he watched the clown on the screen. There was something familiar about that clown’s features, something about his face…the way he spoke. The Joker...

The clown on the screen motioned to someone off camera as Trogg bled out on the screen for all of Gotham to see. He twitched feebly and his head hung forward against his blood covered chest. “Oh! Before I go kiddies, I want you all to meet my Mrs. Joker. Come here pumpkin, let the nice people see how pretty you are and what a lucky man Joker is.”

Harley giggled and hurried over nearly falling into the Joker’s arms. Like him, her skin was clown makeup white, but her hair was the same color as her skin, white, making her look like an ice queen...

Crane leaned forward, his brow furrowing as he stared at the screen, the Joker’s voice echoing in his room. He stared at the woman and a slow smile spread across his face as he whispered low and dark. “Harleen…”

“Good night Gotham!! Sleep tight and sweet dreams. Be seeing you Batsy!! Good luck finding me and the Missus. Oh, and Falcone...hope you find your son soon before he becomes a pinata!!”
For a moment the screen filled with the visage of the Joker, his laugh echoed into the small apartment room, then suddenly the visual snapped out of existence and Crane’s television was suddenly back to the droning sounds of a regular television program once more.

Crane smiled. “It seems my dear, precious Harleen is now wearing some sort of mask...not the same person as she used to be...” Crane smiled slowly. “The Batman, the Joker...perhaps it’s time I showed Gotham my mask too.”

Crane looked over to the mask that covered a styrofoam head, a mask that resembled a burlap bag that looked to be held together with thick black stitching ran along the top and down the side of the strange mask, with small cutouts that would barely show the eyes of the person beneath, and a ragged cutout for the mouth with long, ragged black stitching creating a fearful frown across the dark, rough material.

“Yes, we all wear masks--perhaps it’s time I should wear mine too?”
The following night, Jack and Harley headed out to the fight club to watch Bane fight. The plan was to go to the fight, then for Jack to take Harley out to dinner, a little date just the two of them and maybe some celebration back home. Jack wanted to go simply to watch Falcone squirm, and perhaps talk to Penguin. He figured that his old friend Cobblepot would not be working with Falcone of his own free will, that the little man had probably gotten himself twisted around Falcone’s finger, which was good for Jack who figured he could always use knew frienemies in the upcoming fights with the Bat.

Jack frowned in the mirror. Harley had purchased him some temporary hair dye that had colored his hair a strange reddish color with green undertones where his now natural hair color struggled to bleed through. Harley had also applied make-up to his skin, giving him a skin color that closely resembled his pre-acid bath tone; furthermore he wasn’t wearing any lipstick or eyeliner.

Jack glared at his reflection. At the moment, he hated it.

Jack made a face in the mirror as he pulled on the dark purple leather gloves over his hands.

“I look weird Harley,” he stated with a slight pout. “I miss my lipstick.”

Harley smiled without looking up as she pulled up the zipper on her thigh-high black boot. “You are still my handsome puddin.”

Jack turned to look at her over his shoulder and lifted one of his penciled in eyebrows at Harley. She had drawn eyebrows in for his disguise and while he thought she had done a good job, he had quickly grown accustomed to no eyebrows and having them made him feel odd.

“Like this even?” he asked with genuine curiosity.

Harley looked up from zipping up her other boot. “Even like that. I find you sexy as hell no matter what puddin.” Harley smiled and blew him a kiss.

Jack smirked at her. “You are crazy.”

Harley giggled. “That I am puddin, but you like me crazy don’t you?”

Jack chuckled as he nodded his head in agreement. “That I do Harls, that I do.”

Harley smiled looking down to check her boots.

Jack gazed at her with appreciation, even in her disguise she was gorgeous. She was wearing the boots along with a short black flared mini skirt and a loose grey sweater that fell tantalizingly off of one shoulder. She had applied very little make-up to her skin so that while she still looked quite pale, she had added pink highlights that gave her white flesh the illusion of color, just the right amount of pink shimmer so that her skin glowed a little. It gave her the illusion that her skin tone had more to do with the lighting than the fact that her skin was actually bleached white. Her hair was still white, but she had let Trope and Thea get a hold of her earlier today; the two girlfriends had colored the ends of Harley’s hair turning one side of her hair pink, the other side blue giving Harley a cotton candy look. Jack grinned. Harley always looked good enough to eat he thought, but comparing her to candy made him lick his lips, his eyes roaming down her figure as the thought of licking her came to him vividly, her thighs against his cheeks, her fingers in his hair, the taste of her pleasure on his tongue. He sighed, maybe later when he didn’t look so...weird.
Harley had pulled her hair up into two pigtails, but the tails were folded giving her the illusion of twin buns on either side of her head, the pink and blue curled down close to her head making her look younger, sweeter, Jack thought with amusement. She had put on her makeup differently than her usual style, with the help of Thea and Trope she had contoured her features in a way that made her look slightly less like herself. It was quite the change Jack thought and while he could still see his wife in her face, she looked just different enough that someone else—especially people not familiar with her—wouldn’t necessarily recognize her.

Harley ran her hands over her skirt as she looked up at Jack, the thick black framed glasses she wore completed her disguise, hiding the vivid blue of her eyes and definitely making her look like someone else instead of his Harley Quinn.

Harley smiled. “Put the glasses on puddin and let me see.”

Jack stepped over to the chair that sat in the corner of their room and picked up the brown fedora, placing it on his head along with a pair of lightly tinted glasses that hid Jack’s now unusually bright blue eyes. He was dressed in a pair of brown slacks, a light blue dress shirt, no vest and without a tie. He looked very pedestrian, all very boring Jack thought glumly. Even the jacket he wore screamed “I’m boring,” but being boring was part of the plan because it would let him blend in with the crowd better, to hide in plain sight. The only thing he liked about his disguise was at least it was tailored nicely and fit well. The only thing he wore that had any of Jack’s flair were the shoes and the socks, a pair of dark brown monk strap shoes with some purple and green striped socks, the only color Harley would allow him for their disguises.

“I still don’t see why you get to have color in your hair and I have to go with this...weird red.” Jack folded his arms over his chest, the glasses perched on the tip of his nose.

Harley laughed as she pushed herself up and walked over to him, sliding her arms around her husband’s waist. “Puddin, we talked about this...”

Jack sighed. “I know.” He laughed, kissing the tip of her nose. “I just hate dressing so boring.”

Harley kissed his chin carefully, not wanting to mess up his makeup. “I’ll make it up to you, I promise.” <>Jack grinned. “You better.”

She giggled. “I will. Ready?”

Jack sighed. “As I’ll ever be! Let’s go watch Bane smash some people!”

Harley laughed, stepped back and took his hand forcing him to uncross his arms. “Come on, you grouch.”

Jack laughed then, letting her pull him from the room, but on the way down the stairs he slipped his hand under her skirt and gave her rear a squeeze. Harley squeaked, which made him laugh.

*

The fight club was just as crowded as the night Jack and Harley had come to find Bane. They could see Bea over by the mud pool already in a bout with some young man who was being cheered along by his drunken friends. Harley could tell that Bea was playing with him, giving the man’s drunken friends a good show by putting their pal into embarrassing holds, keeping him down long enough for them to take a few pictures before she would flip the poor man into another painful and embarrassing position. Harley chuckled, but turned her attention to the large cage.
Jack smiled when he saw Bane and Viktoria near the large central cage. Bane, wearing his mask, was pacing the inside of the cage and occasionally pumping his fists. His whole body was tight, muscles bulged with the light green glow of the Titan drug in his veins visible as he moved around the inside of the cage waiting for his next victim while Viktoria, looking professional in black slacks, matching blouse and white lab coat, watched him, a frown clear on her face as she fiddled with the stethoscope that hung from around her neck.

The two of the moved further, going around Bane’s cage to get a better view of the balcony. Jack’s attention moved from the cage to his true goal of the night, Oswald Cobblepot. Oswald and Falcone sat on their “thrones” in a place of honor on a balcony that looked down on the rabble, away from everyone. Jack had difficulty reading their facial expressions from his position, but judging by the way Cobblepot was sitting on his chair, his arms folded protectively around himself, wrinkling the expensive suit he wore, and his cigarette burning itself to ash at the end of his cigarette holder, Jack saw a man who was very unhappy, but doing his best to look genteel and smile. Jack smirked. It was pleasant to see Oswald taken down a peg or two.

Jack turned his attention to Oswald’s balcony companion. His main reason for coming to the fight club was not just to watch Bane, but Jack was also here to watch Falcone squirm a bit as he tried to keep up appearances that he had everything under control even with his son still missing. Joker had left no other messages about Mario Falcone’s fate and he had no intention of leaving any...not yet. The game had just started ad Jack had decided while he had one pawn, everyone else had knights and bishops; it was his turn to collect more pieces, stronger pieces, in the game.

As Jack frowned trying to work out how he was doing to get close to Cobblepot--who he didn’t believe for a moment was working willingly with Falcone--he studied the balcony. Oswald had three women with him, two at his sides, another at his back and a young man kneeling at his feet with his arm across Oswald’s lap. Jack’s lip curled in derision. The man always was so decadent.

Jack pursed his lips in thought. He didn’t need to know the reasons why Cobblepot was working side by side with Falcone, allowing the mobster to be part of his fight club; all Jack needed to know was whether or not he could get old Pengie to flip and work for him...as they say, the enemy of my enemy is my friend...perhaps that old adage held true, at least for the time Jack needed it to be true. He grinned. As Jack continued observing Penguin and Falcone, he saw a club employee escort a young woman onto the balcony. He couldn’t hope to hear what was going on, but he tilted his head in curiosity as the woman leaned down to Oswald and grinned, followed by a few words from him and a kiss on her cheek. A moment later, a chair was brought for the young woman to sit. Interesting.

The music thumped loudly, the sounds of music mixed with shouts, cheers and the basic human rumble of several bodies occupying one room filled the air. As Jack and Harley made their way deeper inside the building and closer to the balcony where Penguin sat, Jack’s grin widened when he saw Falcone better. It looked as if the man had aged since the last time Jack had seen him. He had an additional guard at his back that made four and as Jack let his gaze wander around the club, he could see several more thuggish men in suits, trying to blend into the crowd. The mob boss’s men fit in with the fight club patrons about as well as oil in water.

Jack ran his tongue over his teeth in thought. How to get up to Penguin without drawing Falcone’s attention? That was when his eyes landed on Bea. She was in the middle of being hosed off at the moment ,which was perfect.

Jack pulled Harley close so he could whisper in her ear. “Harls, I have a job for you.”

Harley grinned at her husband. “Anything puddin.”

Jack kissed her on the cheek carefully. “I need to be able to talk to Pengie, but without being so close to Falcone that he recognizes me, or hears anything I want to talk about with Penguin. I think Bea might be able to get you up there to deliver a message for me...” Jack frowned in thought. “I don’t like sending you up there, but…”

Harley smiled. “Bea will be with me. Not a problem puddin.”

Harley glanced up at the balcony. “You don’t think Cobblepot would betray us do you?”

Jack glanced back at the balcony too, following her gaze. “No, I suspect old Cobblepot just might be thankful for our help.” If not, Jack thought, it will be a really interesting night.

Harley grinned, kissing the corner of his mouth. “I’ll be right back then puddin.”

Jack grabbed her hand as she started to walk away. Harley turned to look at him with a frown only to find Jack’s eyes behind the glasses shadowed. “Be careful sweets.”

Harley smiled reassuringly. “I will puddin. Don’t forget, Penguin helped me once. I trust him.”

Jack’s frown deepened, but he let go of her hand watching his love make her way toward Bea.

*

Bea, dressed in a dark green bikini with a halter like top and cutouts that ran down the middle between her breasts and a tiny bottom with cutouts along her hips, she was drawing a lot of attention as she stood talking to Harley while wringing out of the water from her ponytail. She frowned at Harley, rubbing the back of her neck as she thought about Harley’s request. “I guess so, I mean Mr. Cobblepot picks men and women out all the time to spend the night with him and I know sometimes some of the others around here will bring up people who want a chance to be with him. He’s pretty popular, though I think it has more to do with the money around him than with Cobblepot himself. I mean, he can be charming in his own way, but he ain’t no Brad Pitt that’s for sure.”

Harley chuckled. “But do you think you can get me up there without raising any suspicions?”

Bea shrugged. “Sure. I’ve never brought him anybody before, but there’s a first time for anything. Besides, I know he likes me. If I bring someone up he is sure to want to meet them if only to be nice to me.”

Harley grinned. “Perfect.”

*

Mixed in with the patrons of the club, the only thing setting him apart from anyone else was the white suit he wore; Tallyman studied the crowd around him. There was nothing unusual that he could see though he didn’t really expect there to be. He was here to catch Bane after the fight and question him about what he was doing at the club the night Mario had been taken. Tallyman had come to the club tonight not really expecting to see Bane, but he was surprised when Bane and his doctor girlfriend had shown up tonight, which, if they had nothing to do with Mario’s abduction made sense, but it could also be a ploy to throw Falcone off their scent. It was also possible they didn’t have any idea that there had been cameras at the club. Tallyman gave a mental shrug, he didn’t think they would be that stupid since a man of Bane’s size was hard to hide and from the images on the video he had seen, the man had grown far beyond his normal size, not something you could hide. So again, maybe they had nothing to do with Mario Falcone’s kidnapping, but he still needed to talk to them. It paid to be thorough.

He knew Falcone already owned their asses, thought he didn’t know the details, but if they hadn’t shown up here tonight that would have set off more alarm bells, so this could simply be them hiding in plain sight.

Either way, he would talk to them after the end of the fights tonight.

*

Harley and Bea made their way through a door into the building that ran alongside the building where Cobblepot and Falcone sat overlooking the fights. Bea led Harley through a doorway and up a hidden set of stairs, all peppered with armed guards. The men and women on guard duty only nodded their acknowledgement of Bea and Harley, but didn’t stop them or search them. A couple of men on the stairs grinned. “Hey Bea, how’s it going tonight? Heard you embarrassed from frat boy.”

Bea laughed as she walked past swinging her hips with a little extra sway to them immediately drawing the undivided attention of the two nearest men.

“Oh you know how it is, couple of drunk college kids get their friend to go into the ring and I have to teach them a lesson about not touching what isn’t theirs to touch.” She smiled. “That’s always fun.”

They walked past those two, but one of them called back. “Hey Bea, who’s your friend and where are you two heading to?”

“My friend here wants to meet The Penguin.” Bea stopped and cocked her hip out laying her hand on it and giving the guard her best smile. Harley turned and did the same, shifting one leg onto the stair above her so that her short skirt fell away off her thigh giving the two guards a hint that she wasn’t wearing much under the skirt. The one who had stopped them grinned.

“That man sure is lucky.”

His friend smacked him in the shoulder turning away from the women. “It’s the money that’s attractive Benny.”

Benny shrugged. “Yeah, but still...damn lucky.”

The two men began to have a discussion about how much money one needed to attract beautiful women as Bea rolled her eyes and motioned for Harley to continue following her up the stairs. Harley silently nodded at Bea in agreement, wondering what was wrong with so many men.

The two women arrived at another set of doors at the top of the stairs where two guards, a tall woman with blonde hair buzzed so short that Harley thought she qualified as bald and a man with hair long enough that he had it braided well below the nape of his neck; both dressed in the typical black suits of bodyguards the world over Harley thought with a slight smirk.

The woman smiled when she saw Bea. “Hey, I got a new one for you.”

Bea laughed. “Hit me Marie.”

The woman grinned. “Arguing with a lawyer is like mud wrestling a pig, sooner or later you realize that they like it.”

Bea and Harley both laughed, but the man standing guard shook his head. “Honey, your mud jokes are getting worse.”

The woman smiled and shrugged. “Sorry, I can’t help it, but at least I haven’t repeated myself yet.”
Bea laughed. “It’s fine you two. How’s the baby making going?”

The woman grinned giving the man next to her a wicked grin. “Oh, good.”

The other guard blushed then shook himself. “What you need Bea? You don’t usually come up here.”

“I promised my friend Sally I would introduce her to Mr. Cobblepot.” Bea indicated Harley with a slight nod of her head.

Harley smiled and waved.

“Oh okay.” Marie glanced at her partner before she leaned over and opened the door.

Bea and Harley stepped onto the balcony.

Harley blinked looking around. It was a really good view from up here, she thought. The occupants of the balcony turned. Falcone frowned giving the young women a once over look before he turned back around to watch the festivities, dismissing them both while Cobblepot’s gaze lingered on the two young women. He gave Bea a very clear once over before turning his attentions to Harley, his gaze lingering on her legs. Oswald’s current companions all glared at the two women.

He smiled taking a drag off his cigarette, smoke slowly rolling from his nostrils as he spoke. “Well hello Bea my dear, what brings you up here?”

Bea smiled. “I have someone who wants to meet you.”

She indicated Harley who giggled and waved. “Oh wow, Mr. Oswald Cobblepot! I’ve heard so much about you.” Harley hurried forward and the two women around Cobblepot stepped back while the young man at his feet scooted out of the way looking annoyed as Harley plopped herself down on Cobblepot’s lap.

Oswald looked startled but pleased as the young woman wrapped her arms around him, giving him a fantastic view of her thighs when her short skirt fluttered up.

*

Down below Jack was trying to watch the balcony without full on staring; someone would notice his scrutiny if he wasn’t careful and that just wouldn’t do. Right now, he had to be careful...and he hated it. He had moved himself into a better position to spy on the balcony and its occupants when he saw Harley step onto the balcony with Bea. He felt a flash of panic when he saw her, out of his reach and surrounded by people who could hurt her. He pressed his lips together in anger and frustration, but this was his plan and he trusted Harley. He just really didn’t want anyone to touch or hurt his girl.

He had just registered her appearance there when she was suddenly in Cobblepot’s lap. Jack growled low in his throat as he began to rush forward only catching himself in mid stride, his eyes still on his girl. She was kicking her legs and leaning into Cobblepot. There was something over-the-top about her actions and Jack smiled. She was acting...of course she was...He cursed himself for his hot flash of rage, but calmed. He only had to trust her, which he did; he trusted Harley with his life.

*

Harley threw her arms around Cobblepot’s neck, leaning in close as if she were going to kiss him. Oswald grinned broadly as this new, lovely woman came close, her glasses sliding to the end of her nose. She winked at him.
"Hello Pengie."

Oswald stared at her for a moment in confusion. It was clear that he didn’t recognize her at first as he gazed into her face. Harley smiled as she waited, when suddenly she saw understanding blossom across his features as he realized who this was...Harley Quinn, the Joker’s girl. Like everyone else in Gotham, he had seen the broadcast, but as he gazed at her in dawning horror he realized she was also Harley, Jack Wayne’s girl. Or had been. Jack Wayne was dead and so was Harleen Quinzel...this couldn’t be the same woman, though they shared similar features he thought. There was something wrong with her eyes and something off with her demeanor. Cobblepot was confused, but he pushed all those thoughts aside to focus on the woman on his lap.

Penguin glanced once at Falcone who was paying no attention at all to him, his full attention on the fight Bane was currently participating in.

Oswald hissed back. “You’re Harley Quinn, the Joker’s girl. I saw the broadcast--everyone in Gotham saw it.”

Harley smiled. “The Joker wants to talk to you. He feels you both have a mutual enemy and that joining forces might be in the interest of both of you.”

Oswald glanced from her out into the crowds below with a look of confusion in his eyes. “He’s here?”

Harley nodded. “So, do you wanna meet?”

Oswald frowned for a moment before he hissed. “I don’t know. What’s he want?”

Harley leaned closer her lips practically pressed against his ear. “He figures you aren’t working with Falcone because you want to be, so maybe you can help each other out.”

Cobblepot frowned in thought. A chance to get out from under Falcone sounded good, a chance to take his fight club back, and all the profits that went with it...but this Joker person seemed dangerous. Oswald chewed the end of his cigarette holder before he answered.

Oswald murmured back. “I won’t get my hands dirty.”

Harley giggled. “You don’t have to...information is all Joker wants.”

Oswald chewed on the end of his cigarette holder as he thought about what this might mean to him before he nodded. “All right,” he conceded. “I’ll meet.”

Harley grinned. “Good, is your number the same?”

Oswald nodded, suddenly more uncomfortable knowing that this woman and the Joker would have his number, but he took a nervous pull on his cigarette telling himself his number wasn’t unlisted so maybe it wasn’t that strange. Still, he couldn’t seem to prevent the chill that ran up his spine and the goosebumps raised on his skin.

Harley beamed again and wiggled in his lap for show, but Oswald grunted as she rubbed against him however unintentional the gesture was. She was a sexy woman and she was sitting on his lap, things happened.

Harley kissed him on the cheek. “Good. He’ll be in touch and Ozzie,” she smiled with a glint in her eyes behind the glasses. “No tricks.”
Oswald frowned, but nodded. “No tricks.”

She laughed and hugged him. “Thanks Ozzie, talk to you soon.”

Oswald nodded as Harley stood up. She kissed him on the nose with a grin as she said more loudly. “I look forward to hearing from you Mr. Cobblepot.”

Oswald smiled at her. “I look forward to our meeting my dear.”

Harley waved and walked back to Bea who had remained near the doorway, not quite willing to leave Harley alone up here. Falcone paid no attention as the two women turned and left.

Harley left Bea to finish out her night of mud wrestling and soon was back with Jack who grabbed her hand as soon as he was close enough to her and yanked her into his arms. Harley smiled snuggling close. “He’s with us puddin. At least he is willing to talk.”

Jack purred licking her ear as he whispered. “Good job sweets. I knew I could count on you, though I didn’t like you sitting on his lap.”

Harley frowned. “I’m sorry puddin, but…”

“It’s okay Harls, I understand, though I still might have to punish you. I might have to just tie you to the bed when we get home…” He grinned. “Have my way with you.”

Harley’s cheeks turned red as she teased in response. “Oh no, please don’t punish me Mr. Joker.”

Jack laughed, but hissed against her ear. “Just Joker sweets, just Joker.”

*

Later that evening at the end of the night, Bane and Viktoria were heading out. The big fighter had seen Jack and Harley briefly; Jack told him to come by tomorrow night.

The disguised man had a project for the gang that he wanted to discuss with everyone.

Bane sighed with exhaustion.

Viktoria frowned with concern, laying a hand on his arm. She could still see the Titan in his viens, a soft glow under the skin. At least right now the drug’s intensity was far less noticeable than when he was pumped full of it for the fight club. Viktoria had no idea how Bane continued to function. “Are you all right?”

Bane nodded, laying his large hand over hers. “Yeah, just tired.”

Viktoria frowned. “I…”

They had just walked outside the building, the air had that almost metallic scent of rain in the air. The two of them had turned toward the parking lot where Viktoria’s car was parked when a man stepped out of the shadows forcing Viktoria to hastily swallow down a startled yelp. How the man had managed to remain hidden while wearing an all white suit, she didn’t know, but he had appeared as if from nothing at all.

“Hello, Bane, Dr. Viktoria October. I would like to talk to you both about the night that Mario Falcone was kidnapped.”

Bane growled dangerously. The drug in his body made the veins along his arms begin to glow more strongly as Bane hissed. “Who are you?”

Viktoria stepped closer to her lover, wrapping both arms around Bane’s forearm. She could feel the swelling of his muscles…

“You can call me Tallyman. I’ve been hired by Mr. Carmine Falcone to find his son. I’m asking you what you know about it.” Tallyman smiled, his voice calm, almost dead sounding with little to no inflection in his words. He stood with his hands behind his back, looking casual as if he were simply out for a stroll and happened to stop and talk.

Bane growled again. “Why talk to us? We don’t know anything about it.”

Tallyman sighed. “Well, you see the club had cameras and they caught sight of you inside the club, destroying it.”

Bane frowned looking down at his hands before he glanced back up at Viktoria. Bane pressed his lips together before he answered. “I don’t remember much about that night. Viktoria and I had decided to try the place out. I don’t know what happened, but…I black out sometimes…”

Tallyman frowned. He had heard about the drug that Bane used, provided by Falcone. Tallyman had heard about the man’s blind rage, which could explain his rampaging presence at the club.

“I don’t remember anything when I have one of my episodes,” Bane said softly, clearly troubled by the thought. “I don’t remember anything at all.”

Tallyman turned his attention to Viktoria. “Were you there?”

She nodded. “I was. Someone cut in line and when Bane said something to them, that person cursed Bane out. It doesn’t take a great deal to trigger him, not with the drug enhancing his intermittent explosive disorder and Bane lost control…I guess the rest was visible on the camera.”

Viktoria sighed. “Bane had nothing to do with the kidnapping and if his outburst helped the kidnappers, that wasn’t Bane’s fault or intent.”

Tallyman frowned looking between the two of them. What they said made sense with what little he knew about Bane and the drug from Falcone. The tape showed no real interaction between Bane and the kidnappers, so...

Tallyman took a step back, putting his arm out in invitation. “Thank you both for your time. Have a pleasant evening.”

Bane grunted in response, unable to keep the sarcasm out of his tone. “Thanks.”

As the large man and the doctor walked to her car, Tallyman watched them go. Something still felt off to him, but he couldn’t put his finger on exactly what that was…yet.

*

It was late, the streets of Gotham were mostly deserted as all decent people had gone to bed leaving the late night streets to the other side of Gotham. The air smelled of rain with an undercurrent of some rotted vegetation, almost like cabbage. After the fight club and Cobblepot agreed to meet, Jack had driven Harley on their motorcycle to an all night diner that was located nearby. Jack had seen the place the last time they had been here and decided he wanted--needed--a slice of every pie available. And a greasy hamburger to boot.
“I think I could eat a horse,” Jack muttered as he turned toward the diner.

Harley laughed. “Me too.”

Jack laughed leaning back a little toward her. Harley wrapped her arms tighter around him and kissed his shoulder. Jack pulled up in front of the diner, parking the bike. He eased off turning around to help Harley off and pulled her into his arms. He hugged her tightly, pressing her against him. He gazed down at her, rubbing his nose carefully against hers while also doing his best not to smear the makeup he wore.

“Mm...I love you sweets.”

Harley giggled. “I love you puddin.”

The diner’s outside was nothing special: a neon sign over the entrance announced that the diner was simply named Gotham Diner with two long windows that ran out along the sides from the glass door.

A dainty chime signaled whenever someone entered the diner. The interior of the diner had all brick walls and warm amber colored tiles on the floor, highlighted with the dim, twilight glow of golden colored lights. There was a brick counter with a glass display case that was filled with the pies they offered behind the glass. The place smelled of old grease, coffee and sugar.

There were a few people in here, a couple of old men, four sets of teenagers out way past their bedtimes and at least one pair of young lovers. Jack, holding Harley’s hand, led her over to one of the booths where the red vinyl of the seats was worn and cracked. A waitress, with a head of white hair cut short, and a few wrinkles around her eyes, but with a grandmotherly pleasant look, came over to take their order. She looked tired, but she smiled. “So what can I get you two good-looking people?”

Jack glanced at his wife reaching across the table to take her hand and smiled at the waitress. “Cheeseburger sweets?”

Harley smiled. “Sure thing puddin, sounds delicious.”

Jack grinned his eyes darting to the woman’s name tag. “All right Queenie. Two cheeseburgers, no onions, with a side of fries, two chocolate malts and one piece of every pie you have.”

Harley began to laugh as the waitress frowned. “Are you sure? One piece of every pie?”

Jack grinned. “Oh yes I’m sure my dear, bring it on!”

“Want anything to drink besides the malts?” Queenie asked.

“How about some coffee?” He looked at Harley who nodded her agreement. Jack smiled at his wife before turning back to Queenie. “Coffee then.”

The waitress headed off to put their order in calling out as she did. “Hey Alison, two cheese cows!”

Jack tugged on Harley’s hand. “Come over on my side sweets. I’m lonely over here.” He stuck his bottom lip out to accentuate his point.

Harley smiled and hurried over, her hand in his the entire time as Jack tugged her into the booth as soon as she was around the table and nearly onto his lap.
She laughed falling into the booth. Jack wrapped his arms around her and gazed at her lovingly, his eyes behind the glasses glided over her face before he reached up and caressed her jaw.

“Kiss me pumpkin,” he whispered.

Harley sighed happily leaning in to kiss him. Jack pulled her closer his hand moving to the back of her neck, his mouth moving over hers until Harley felt the butterflies that had already burst to life when his lips brushed hers, begin to spin and spiral with the pleasure of feeling his tongue in her mouth, his lips pressed against hers and his hands, one on the back of her neck the other resting on her knee. He only stopped when the waitress returned with their coffee.

Queenie chuckled as she set the cups down and filled them with hot black coffee. “Oh don’t stop on my account. It’s always nice for an old lady like me to see a couple of sweet lovers.”

Jack smiled at her. “Thank you Queenie.”

She smiled back. “Be right back with your malts and I’ll start bringing the pie slices over for you while you wait for your burgers.”

After the waitress left, Harley turned to Jack, scooting close enough their hips touched. Jack put a hand on her thigh, under her skirt.

“So what exactly do you want Penguin’s help with puddin? Or is it just to have someone else against Falcone?” Harley asked as Queenie returned, deftly placing a slice of apple, peach, lemon and chocolate pie on the table in front of them—each on its own saucer—before she hurried back over to the counter.

“I have a plan sweets,” Jack said with one eye squinted introspectively. “I have Mario, but I think I need to really get Falcone’s attention and Penguin is going to help me do that.” He grinned then, clearly pleased with the plan that he hadn’t told Harley yet.

Queenie arrived back at their table with two chocolate malts, two large cheeseburgers with a side of fries, a slice of peanut butter pie, and a slice of cherry. Jack clapped his hands at the sight of the burgers.

“Yes!! Food!”

Harley laughed at him as she inspected her burger, which looked delicious. The meat glistened, the cheese melting down the sides. Queenie had just walked back to their table with more slices of pie smiling as she set down a slice of pumpkin pie along with a slice of coconut cream. “I hope you two have a big appetite.”

Jack grinned brightly. “Oh I’m gonna work it off of her later.”

Harley gasped and playfully smacked Jack in the shoulder as he lifted up his burger, wagging his painted on eyebrows at her.

Harley giggled as she picked up her burger taking a bite a half second after Jack when the little chime over the door rang. Harley glanced up just as Jack did, both of them frowning as three men stepped into the diner.

They were each dressed oddly and the man that was slightly in front of the other two was much shorter than the men behind him. His hair was dark and curled softly around his shoulders under a very large dark green top hat, an old fashioned price tag stuck in the band around the hat. He was also wearing a patched up green overcoat with tails along with a white shirt and red bow tie, red vest... and checkered green and black pants along with combat boots of all things Harley thought. The two men behind him wore regular street clothes, but they each had bunny masks over their faces and--what drew everyone’s attention--they held AK-47’s in their hands.

The man in the hat giggled as he asked loudly for the whole diner to hear. “Alice?! I’m here to take you home my dear. You are terribly late for the tea party Alice dear. The March hare is most upset and the Dormouse simply won’t wake up!”

Queenie hissed. “Fuck, not him again. Shit. I knew we should have called the cops on him the first time he showed up.”

Jack tilted his head to the side, slowly setting his burger down as he stared hard at the man in the hat before his said slowly. “Is that Jervis Tetch?”

Queenie didn’t move, no one in the diner moved, all watching Tetch and his armed rabbits as they walked further into the diner. “Alice! Come out, come out!” Tetch called.

Queenie glanced at Jack and Harley, pitching her voice low. “You know him? He’s been in here a lot over the last few weeks. He has an obsession with our cook Allison…”

Tetch called out again. “Oh Alice dear! We are running oh so late for our tea party.”

A young woman stepped out from the back. She had long blonde hair that was tied up into a messy bun on her head. She wore blue jeans and a blue t-shirt with a white apron over the top. She wiped her hands slowly along her apron trying to walk calmly, but it was clear she was terrified.

“Jervis…” she said with a tremor in her voice.

Tetch smiled. “There you are, dear Alice!”

“Jervis, you need to leave these people alone. I’ll come with you,” Allison said, and took a shuddering breath. Harley glanced at Jack, then back at the young woman as Tetch replied. “But Alice, I can’t just leave these cards. They took you from me, trying to take you to the Red Queen Alice! They have to pay.”

Jack narrowed his eyes, but then suddenly stood up. Harley gasped as Tetch turned to look at Jack. A ripple of fear ran through the patrons of the diner, all eyes turning toward Jack.

Jack smiled and bowed. “Hello Hatter, it’s been a long time.”

Tetch narrowed his eyes angrily. “Who are you? Do I know you?”

Jack’s smile spread slowly across his face. Jack took his glasses off, which made his startling blue eyes stand out more vibrantly as he took his hat off and put his arm across his chest for a very elegant bow despite the small space of the booth. “Why Hatter, I’m simply beside myself with grief that you don’t remember me, your friend, the Cheshire Cat.”

Everyone was silent watching the exchange, their nerves on edge.

Tetch tilted his head. “I know you, I do or am I mad?”

Jack smiled. “You do old friend, you do, but we’re all mad here my friend. Some of the best people are mad.” He chuckled softly.

With a slight nudge of his thigh, Jack urged Harley to move. Harley slid to the side and stood as Jack followed her out of the booth and began a slow approach toward Jervis, his hands out. Jervis watched him with both madness in his eyes, but with a calculation as Tetch weighed how much of a threat Jack was to him. Harley could see Tetch was trying to decide if Jack was not just friend or foe, but a threat to him. She glanced sideways at her husband, watching the way Jack approached the man slowly, smiling the entire time.

Jervis narrowed his gaze. “Are you here to take my Alice, Cat?”

Jack smiled and reached back for Harley’s hand. Harley stepped forward taking Jack’s hand, lacing her fingers with his as Queenie hissed. “Don’t...”

“I have my own girl, Hatter. My own little white rabbit.” Jack smiled.

Jervis studied Harley intently before he smiled and turned his gaze full on Harley. “White Rabbit my friend! It’s been a long time, but you are always running late.”

Harley quickly searched her mind. She had read Alice in Wonderland years ago. “Well ah, yes my pocket watch has stopped working, too much tea in the works.”

Jervis chuckled. “Did you remember to add jam?”

Jack took another step forward keeping a hold of Harley’s hand. “Hatter, my dear, dear Hatter, I do believe that you have the wrong Alice.”

Tetch frowned. “No no, I have the right Alice. She just isn’t quite herself is all. Once I get her back to the tea party she’ll remember who she is.”

Jack shook his head frowning sadly. “I’m afraid not dear, dear Hatter. This isn’t your Alice.”

Hatter looked unsure. “But Cheshire...”

Jack smiled wide, his grin taking up his entire face. “As they say Hatter, haste makes waste. So think my friend, are you in haste to find Alice that you will take any Alice you find instead of the right Alice?”

Tetch came closer until he was standing in front of Jack. He leaned forward and whispered loudly. “You don’t think this is the right Alice, Cheshire?”

Jack shook his head sadly. “I do not my friend. You have the wrong Alice. I think you need to keep searching. Isn’t that right rabbit?”

Harley nodded. “I’m afraid so Hatter. This isn’t your Alice at all.”

Jervis removed his hat and held it in front of him worrying at the brim with his fingers. When he spoke, his voice was sad. “I’ve been without Alice for so long Cheshire. I don’t know how much longer...”

Jack put his hand on Jervis’ shoulder, and the shorter man looked up at him with pain clearly etched in his eyes. Jack felt a pang of sympathy for the man—he would be lost without Harley too. “I understand my friend, but this Alice is not your Alice and Rabbits don’t know how to use guns Hatter. Isn’t that right White Rabbit?”

Harley nodded. “It’s true, rabbits have no idea how to use guns.”

Jervis looked unsure, his eyes darting from Jack, to Harley, to Allison before he finally said.
“Rabbits, give the guns to the White Rabbit. We are leaving, this isn’t the right Alice.”

The two men with the weapons moved like robots as they walked over and handed the weapons to Harley. Harley let go of Jack’s hand to take the weapons. She lifted a brow at the masked rabbits as she took the guns and slid the weapon straps over her shoulder.

Hatter turned and headed to the door, his rabbits following him. He stopped and turned smiling.

“Thank you Cheshire. You should come by for tea, we are always having tea you know.”

Jack smiled. “I will Hatter.”

Jervis nodded and walked out. The diner erupted into applause the moment the doors closed behind him.

Queenie gasped turning toward Jack. She grabbed him and yanked him against her, hugging him until Jack was sure he would suffocate. “Oh MY GOD!! Are you crazy? You could have gotten you and your girl killed!! But damn, thank you.”

The cook Allison ran over and threw her arms around Jack and Queenie. “Oh thank you, thank you!”

Jack struggled for a moment before he disengaged himself from the two women. He held his arms out not touching either of them as Harley gave Allison a sour look carrying the guns over to their booth.

Queenie motioned at the diner patrons. “Someone call the cops.”

Jack gave Allison an awkward pat on her back as Harley set the weapons down on their table with a glare.

“Okay, you’re welcome,” Jack murmured. The woman still didn’t let go, so Jack was forced to take her arms and physically move her as he looked over at Queenie. “Ah, can we get our food to go?”

Queenie nodded smiling. “Of course and it’s on the house too.”

Jack grinned. “Thank you Queenie.”

*

Jack and Harley got themselves out of the diner with their food, all the slices of pie and even the weapons long before the police finally showed up. No one thought to take the guns from them and Jack had no intention of leaving them behind.

Jack sped through the Gotham night, while Harley held onto him, her arms around Jack’s middle, the bag of food in front with Jack and the two weapons slung across her back.

“You were amazing as always puddin.” Harley grinned into the wind, giving her husband a squeeze.

Jack grinned. “Just have to know how to speak crazy Harls, and I’m fluent.”

Harley giggled laying her cheek against his back as he drove them home.

*

The following night somewhere in Gotham.
Jack walked over with the marker in his hand and pointed at the whiteboard. He had asked Frost to put the board in, a large white board that took up nearly an entire wall. They were all at their secret location where they were keeping Mario who was currently tied up in a chair in the corner of the room. The man looked much the worse for wear, dirty, sweaty and giving off a sour stench. Plus, he was beginning to annoy Jack on many levels.

Jack stopped at the board, his all black suit with a bright purple vest was complemented by the purple tie against the black dress shirt he wore. His black double monk strapped shoes gleamed. Jack hurriedly wrote something on the board.

Everyone was here from Alex to Bea sitting almost like students as Jack explained his plan.

“You see, right now we only have one chess piece, Mario Falcone, but I think we need a few more and so here is what we are going to do...”

Jack wrote Falcone’s name on the board with three names beneath it.

“Penguin provided me with information about the three people he thought were the next closest to Falcone after Mario. People who would make great pieces on the large chess board that is the Gotham underworld. We...” he said as he wrote, “are going to take three more of Falcone’s people: his girlfriend Gigi, his ex-wife Louisa, and his lawyer Victor Page. They are currently the people closest to him in Gotham. Trope, my darling girl, found out that while Falcone has two more children, neither of them are in Gotham at the moment so, they will simply have to wait. BUT before we have any more fun with Falcone, I have another plan.”

Jack turned from the board with a grin. “As you all know, Batman has a little partner, The Boy Wonder!!! Robin. With the help of my talented information gathering dears...”

Jack smiled at Trope and Thea; the two girlfriends beamed under his smile. “I have learned that Robin, or Richard Grayson, still has deep, deep connections to Haly’s Circus, which just so happens to still be in Gotham! I want to make that our first message to Batman and the Wonder twerp. We are going to go and visit the circus.”

Harley, who was sitting on a stool beside the board frowned and leaned forward to look at Jack. “I thought you liked the circus puddin?”

Jack grinned with a nod. “I do Harls, I do, but this is about a message, a message to Gotham, a message to Batman. Nothing is sacred Harley, nothing...and no one close to him, the Batman, is safe.” Jack giggled. “Besides, I have my own circus now!” Jack laughed and threw his arms up in the air encompassing everyone. “You are my circus, my family! My clowns!”

He giggled. “Now, let’s go to the circus kids!”

*

Haly’s circus was only planning on being in Gotham until the first week in November, then they would close up for the winter, but right now with the evenings being mostly cool, the circus was still open and the crowds were still big.

The big top had been closed for several weeks after the death of the Graysons, but had reopened a few weeks ago with some new headline performers, a lyrical acrobatic group called the Hoops that included some of the old catchers and flyers who had worked with the Graysons, along with a group of contortionists who called themselves the Dolls, led by their leader who called himself Ragdoll, a new elephant show, a group of bicycle performers, jugglers, two gorgeous ribbon dancers, and a fresh group of clowns.

So far, Haly was pleased that they had managed to put the tragedy of the Graysons behind them.

Haly yawned. The circus had closed just a couple of hours ago, and clean up had just finished, but a few of the performers were having a party in the big top. It was Marc’s--one of the new catchers--twenty-first birthday, so they were all having an after hours birthday party for the young man. The music was blaring loudly as everyone gathered in the middle of the big top. Someone had put on some music, the sounds of P!nk’s “Get this Party Started” was loud enough that Haly couldn’t understand how anyone heard themselves over the sound. He smiled watching everyone, still in their costumes, drinking beer, and it looked like one of the clowns, he thought it might be Baily, had brought in supplies to make margaritas. There was a huge four layered birthday cake, and everyone had brought in some food. Haly had just ordered three dozen pizzas to the delight of everyone.

He smiled at his family of circus people and turned thinking he would go have a smoke before rejoining the party.

*

Everyone was dancing, eating, drinking and laughing, so no one noticed the green “fog” that rolled into the tent. The green gas moved slowly, slithering between everyone ankles, drifting under tables and hiding in the stands. The noise in here was loud enough that no one heard the roar of one of the circus lions, or the trumpet of one of the elephants as someone opened their cages and released them into the Gotham night. They didn’t realize something was wrong until the gas had not only begun to make them laugh at nothing, but they all realized at the same time that they couldn’t move, paralyzed to the spot even as the urge to laugh became stronger and stronger even though the gas slowly began to fade.

No one noticed when the tent flap was pulled back and the Joker’s gang came strolling in.

First came Harley Quinn. She was dressed in a half-black, half-red body suit that plunged down her neckline showing off her cleavage, along with a half black and half red corset around her middle. Her white hair, with the ends still dyed pink and blue, was held up in ponytails held up with red scarves and with a tiny red top hat pinned between them. She also wore a pair of black ballet slippers that laced up her calves. Her face had been done up to resemble a clown with a red dot on the end of her nose, dark makeup surrounding her eyes like diamonds and red lips. The smile extended past her lips to make her smile seem larger. She did a cartwheel along the side and into the main circle of the tent.

She did a backflip and stopped with her arms up smiling brightly.

“And now...” she called out.

Everyone turned their eyes to look as someone turned down the music and that was when the first giggles began.

Harley smiled and continued. “I present to you. The one, the only: JOKER!!”

The flap of the tent pulled back to show Joker backlit in the frame of the tent opening.

With a wide smile Joker strolled down the aisle. He was dressed in purple equestrian pants with knee high black leather riding boots. He wore an orange shirt under a green vest, a purple military style jacket with swallowtails, large gold buttons and gold epaulettes. The entire outfit was topped off with Joker wearing a purple top hat and a large pink carnation pinned to the front of this jacket. His lips were painted bright red, the smile drawn past his lips to curl up his cheeks. The darkness around his eyes was made deeper, allowing his blue eyes to sparkle brightly.

He walked up beside Harley, and only now was it visible that he was carrying a bullhorn. He stopped beside her and leaned over to kiss her cheek, wrapping his free arm around her waist and pulled her against him. He gazed into her eyes with a wide grin before kissing her once more, a hard passionate kiss, dipping her back while holding her against him.

Harley returned his kiss, her hands grabbing the front of his jacket as she growled and giggled against his lips. Joker pulled her back up, licking her lips before he turned and waved with the hand that held the bullhorn to the increasingly giggling crowd of circus performers.

Joker held the bullhorn up to his brightly painted lips. “Here ye! Here ye!! Good circus folk! The show is about to begin!”

The laughter spread through the crowd as Bane entered the tent, pushing a large round wheel painted red and with white knives painted on either side. Tied to the wheel was C. C. Haly. Behind Bane, who wore his mask, was Viktoria, Frost, Bea, Zsasz and Isaac (on his first mission as part of the gang), all dressed in clown makeup. Everyone continued to laugh as Haly was pushed out into the middle of the ring while the circus performers’ laughter slowly descended into manic fits.

Joker laughed. “Good evening folks. I and my girl Harley are here to entertain you and to send a message to Gotham that it's not just Falcone and Batman I’m after.”

They all laughed and Joker chuckled turning to Harley. “Aren’t they a great crowd pumpkin?”

Harley giggled. “Just the best puddin.”

“Now, lucky for you, I’m not planning on killing the lot of you...just him.” Joker pointed at Haly. Jack chuckled. “I mean what's the point of a message is no one gets to repeat it, am I right?” Everyone laughed in response.

“You will also notice, besides your jovial urge to laugh, that you seems to not be able to move. That my friends is a little twist I added to this version of my laughing gas--you are paralyzed. Don’t worry, it will wear off and you’ll be just fine, if not a little sick, but me and my clowns will be long gone by then.” Joker laughed. “You will be able to run off and tell the Gotham police of your little experience, but please, make sure you let Batman know this message is just for him and his Boy Wonder...I know everything about him, about his little sidekick and nothing--no one--is safe from me.” Joker’s laugh took on a deep, sinister tone.

Joker’s people circled around as Joker motioned at Isaac who stepped forward and handed Joker a rolled cloth. Harley held her hands out and Joker unrolled the cloth on her outstretched arms revealing ten long, deadly looking throwing knives with black handles and silver and black blades.

Joker picked one up and flipped it around easily catching it by its handle. Harley giggled and Joker leaned over to kiss her again before he waggled his eyebrows at her.

He turned and yelled. “Someone cue the music!!”

The sounds of cheerful organ music began to play. Joker laughed grinning at Harley.

“Now, let's see how good I am at this!” Joker chuckled.

Harley smiled. “Puddin, how about we make it more exciting! What if you were blindfolded?”
Joker stopped, the knife held in his hand, his arm back ready to throw when he turned toward Harley, his blue eyes bright and he smiled even bigger. “Harley, you are a genius! Mm...One of the many, many, MANY reasons I love you, sweets!”

Harley giggled and set the knives down. She reached up and pulled out one of the red scarves from her hair, then stepped over to Joker. He turned his back to her as she reached up and gently tied the scarf around his closed eyes. She leaned over his shoulder and kissed his ear.

“I love you my Joker.” Her breath caressed hot against his ear.

Joker smiled leaning into her and whispered back. “I love you my Harley Quinn.”

She giggled softly and stepped back as Joker once more held the blade up as the crowd around them giggled uncontrollably.

“All right boys and girls! Let the games begin!”
Acquisitions

Bruce sat on the edge of his chair as he looked up at the computer screen in the Batcave, which showed several crime scene pictures. He examined the photos with narrowed eyes, looking for information. Gordon had sent the photos over from the circus just moments ago after connecting to Batman on the private number the caped crusader had given him. Bruce had his cell phone tucked between his ear and his shoulder as he made some notes, his eyes quickly scanning over the pictures. It would be better if he could be on scene, but no one had found the victims or the body until morning.

He turned his chair as he asked. “So Haly was the only one killed?”

“That’s right,” Gordon confirmed grimly. “Everyone else at the party is in the hospital for observation, but every single one of them claimed it was this new guy, the one everyone saw on TV, the Joker, the one who took Carmine Falcone’s kid. I’m sure you heard about it since he seems to have a beef with you. We found a playing card pinned to Haly’s corpse with a knife. There were no fingerprints--must have worn gloves or wiped the handle--but eyewitness accounts describe a clown, white face paint, green hair, red painted smile, dressed as a ringmaster and some woman in white face paint, clown makeup, in black and red, some sort of clown acrobat who announced him, and a few other accomplices. But by then I guess the gas he was using was working to full effect, because none of them could describe much else but those two. The rest of the Joker’s gang were described as foggy shapes, ghosts, shadows.” Bruce heard Gordon snort in his ear, then the familiar sound of a match being lit followed by a few puffs...Gordon was lighting a pipe.

Bruce glanced behind him.

Dick was there, his arms crossed tight over his chest as if he were struggling to keep himself together. The young man paced back and forth, his face pale and his gaze on the floor, but not really seeing anything. It hurt Bruce to see the young man so upset, but he didn’t know how else to comfort him except to try to bring Joker--his brother--to justice. Bruce closed his eyes. It hurt to think that the Joker and Jack were the same person. His little brother, the one person in all the world that Bruce was supposed to protect. He shook the thoughts from his head and turned his focus to Barbara. Jack had made his choices and they had been the wrong choices.

Barbara sat next to Bruce, putting in the relevant data, her fingers flying over the keys as she checked traffic cams, security footage, anything that might provide them a lead as to Jack’s whereabouts, but she was coming up short. There were few cameras around the circus, only one or two traffic cams and only one or two security cameras on the circus grounds that functioned...and none of those provided any information. It was as if the Jack (Bruce corrected his thought) as if Joker, knew just where to move to stay out of the view of the cameras.

“Thank you Commissioner, I’ll see if I can learn anything,” Bruce said in his Batman voice.

Gordon sighed on the other end of the phone. “Thanks. I’m not sure what this Joker is up to, but with him, that ass the Riddler and now some other freak that people are calling The Mad Hatter showing up...I’m not sure what’s going on. It’s like Arkham let all the crazies out or there is a permanent full moon over Gotham.”

Bruce’s frown was apparent in his tone. “Don’t worry Jim, I’m sure these criminals are just some outliers, men who are in need of help. We’ll find them.”

Gordon sounded tired as he replied. “I hope you’re right.”
Bruce hung up.

As soon as he was off the phone Dick rushed over. “So what happened? Who attacked the circus? Is anyone else dead?” Dick’s voice broke, rising higher and higher with each question. Bruce stood up and noted that Dick had grown recently. He would likely never be as tall as Bruce, but he was becoming a striking young man with thick dark hair and brilliant blue eyes. With a wry realization, Bruce thought that Dick could have been his biological son. Barbara was beginning to take notice of the young man, but he was still an adolescent. Bruce opened his arms and Dick ploughed into him, wrapping his arms tight around him. Bruce felt a little awkward holding the young man and trying to comfort him, but he knew he had to make an effort.

Barbara glanced over at them, feeling a little like she was intruding so she quickly turned away focusing her attention back on the computer.

Bruce spoke softly. “We’ll find who did this.”

Dick stepped back from the man who had become his mentor, wiping at his eyes furiously. “We know who did it! It was Jack!! Your brother!!”

Bruce frowned. “It wasn’t Jack...not the Jack I knew. This...this was the Joker.”

Dick stared at Bruce before he turned and headed to the stairs. “I’m going out.”

Bruce took a step after him. “Dick don’t...”

“I’m just going for a drive all right?” Dick turned and grated back. He took a breath calming himself before he said in a calmer tone. “Haly was like an uncle Bruce. He took care of us...he was everyone’s father. He shouldn’t have died like that.” Dick swallowed a lump in his throat. “The Joker could have killed all of them. I guess we’re lucky--in a way--he only murdered Haly.” His voice had dropped to a whisper. “This could have been so much worse, but who else is he going to go after Bruce? Have you thought of that? Jac...Joker is out to punish you, me...Falcone. Who else is on that list Bruce?”

The accusation was clear in the young man’s gaze. This was Bruce’s fault, that look said. Bruce wasn’t sure he disagreed. If he had done something with Jack before this...if he had made sure Jack was dead that night...hunted him down after he had escaped Arkham...fired Harleen Quinzel when he had realized they were more than doctor and patient...Bruce pressed his lips together. All this...every life Jack...the Joker...took could be laid at his feet just as much as it could be laid at The Joker’s feet...

Bruce wanted to tell Dick he understood and he would do something about his brother, but he couldn’t. He didn’t know what he could do except to get out there, find Joker, and take him in, maybe back to Arkham, maybe Blackgate. Jack need to be somewhere where he could get the help he needed, but Bruce couldn’t promise he would fix this because he knew he couldn’t...nothing could fix the dead. Instead, Bruce just nodded at his partner.

Dick frowned slightly before he turned and quickly took the stairs. The sound of the hidden door sliding shut was the last thing they heard.

Bruce sighed and walked back over to take his seat.

Barbara glanced sideways at him before she spoke. “Why do you think The Joker went after Haly?”

Bruce frowned. “I can’t be certain,” he admitted. “But he wants to punish me. I’m thinking part of that is going to be to hurt those around me. The closest person to me in Gotham right now is Dick.”
Barbara nodded understanding before she asked. “The closest person here?”

Bruce nodded. “Alfred’s gone, though I like to think he wouldn’t hurt Alfred. Jack was as close, if not closer to Alfred than I was. There is a woman named Selina, but I have no idea where she is right now, and Talia…but she isn’t in Gotham either.”

Barbara was a little surprised that Bruce was telling her any of this and she had so many questions, but she didn’t say anything. Bruce sighed and stood back up. “You’ll let me know if you find anything useful?”

Barbara nodded. “Of course.”

Bruce smiled. “Thank you Barbara.”

She returned what she hoped was a comforting smile. “No problem.”

She watched at Bruce left the cave. After a couple of minutes Barbara pulled her phone out and dialed a number. She placed the phone on her shoulder, holding it to her ear while she worked until someone picked up.

“Pennyworth.”

“Hi, it’s me. I think you need to hear this,” Barbara said softly.

*

Harley laid on her back, naked, her head sunk into the softness of her pillow, the sheets and blankets tangled around her hips, only partially awake. She smiled sleepily. Her hair had fallen over her face making the darkness of the room that much more fuzzy as she opened her eyes. They had bought blackout curtains for the bedroom which worked so well that she couldn’t be sure what time it was at all. She could feel Jack, his head between her breasts, his arms wrapped tightly around her, one of his legs draped over her and resting between her legs. He held onto her most every time they slept as if he was afraid she would disappear while they were sleeping, as if she was just a dream. She understood how he felt. She still had nightmares about dying, about being alone, lost, and unable to find him. Touching him in some way always helped her relax and drove the bad dreams away.

She shifted her position just a little. Jack was still asleep, his breath deep and steady against her skin, his naked body pressed against hers. He twitched slightly, tightening his grip on her as if he sensed she was thinking of moving.

She grinned looking down at his green hair, loose and falling over her chest, the color bright against her bleached skin. She tenderly brushed her fingers through his hair as she tried to push herself up on her elbow. She combed her fingers through her hair gently trying to make sure he stayed asleep as she lifted up. She reached to the side, stretching her fingers toward her phone that sat on the table next to the bed, her fingers just short of the device. She leaned a little further, trying to reach it without waking him when she felt Jack mumble, his breath warm against her skin.

“What are you doing sweets?”

Harley giggled. “I was just reaching for my phone to see what time it is.”

Jack shifted just a little kissed the curve of her breast. “Why, you have someplace you need to be?”

Harley giggled. “No, just curious.”
Jack lifted up to look at her. His green hair fell around his face as he grinned at her. “Don’t worry about the time pumpkin. You just focus on right now.”

Harley smiled, running her fingers through his hair and pushing the green locks slowly back at the same time she moved her legs to caress his thighs. Jack made a soft purr of contentment and brought his hands up to lock his fingers together over the top of her breasts. He shifted a bit more so that his entire body was lying on top of her with his pelvis nestled between her legs. He rested his chin on top of his folded hands as he smiled at her. “You look so pretty with your hair messed up like that.”

Harley giggled and pushed her tangled hair back. “You’re funny.”

He grinned. “You like it.”

Harley giggled again as her thumb caressed over his hairless brows. “You’re right, I love it.”

Jack leaned down and brushed his lips between her breasts sliding his lips over the soft hill of one breast to her nipple. He only stroked her hard nipple with his lips, just barely touching her.

Harley gasped softly, his breath was warm against her skin. She stroked her fingers through his hair arching with desire for him to touch her more aggressively, wanting to feel his lips on her skin, his tongue licking across her. She felt him smile against her skin like he knew just what she wanted and instead of giving it to her he was going to tease her as dragged his nose over her breasts, his lips sliding softly while he whispered. “We have all the time we need right now Harls...we’re dead remember?”

He wrapped his mouth around one breast and sucked softly.

Harley moaned arching her back toward him, her hands slid through his hair. Jack slid one hand down over her ribs, following the line of her body to her hips where he pulled her leg up. Harley hooked her leg around his, her foot pressing against the back of his thigh. He pressed his fingers into her skin and dragged under her thigh, his mouth moved over her breast.

She groaned softly in response, one hand caressing his shoulder.

Jack dragged his hand back up, tickling her skin, all the while sucking softly, teasingly at her breast.

Harley’s breath quickened as Jack worked his way up to her throat, now using his tongue to trace the smooth curve to her jaw. She could feel the press of his erection against her when he moved.

“All the time to do what I want with you,” he breathed softly before he dragged his tongue along her jaw to her ear.

Harley made a sound, a cross between a moan and a whimper. “Jack...”

He chuckled before he pressed his lips to her throat, followed with his teeth. He smiled against the tender softness of her flesh when he felt her jerk in response to his teeth against her. He sucked, tenderly kneading her throat with his teeth, while his hand moved over her breast to squeeze softly. He moved to catch the lobe of her ear with his teeth next before he pinched her nipple, chuckling softly. “Anything I want.”

Harley’s eyes rolled closed while her hands caressed his shoulders and back. “Yes puddin, anything.”

Jack surprised her by rolling off of her. Harley stuck her bottom lip out as Jack rolled out of the bed and up to his feet.
“Puddin.” Harley pouted. “What are you doing?”

Jack grinned dropping to his knees onto the floor. “Just a minute.”

He came back up long enough to turn on the lamp before his head disappeared again.

Harley wrinkled her nose and crossed her arms under her breasts, annoyed. He began to get her all riled up and then just stopped!

She heard Jack rummaging under the bed for a couple of seconds, her curiosity peaked despite herself. She rolled over and scooted around to look over the edge of the bed.

“How are you doing?” she asked. Jack had one arm stretched under the bed and after a half dozen seconds he sat back on his haunches.

“Ha! Found it!” He grinned holding up a bottle of almond oil. “I knew it was here!”

He stood up and motioned at Harley to get back onto her back. She giggled and rolled, doing as he said, spread her hair out on the pillow over her head.

“What are you going to do with that?” she asked with a smile, though she was fairly certain that she knew.

Jack purred. “Whatever I want, remember?”

He pumped a large amount of the oil into the cup of his hand before he set the bottle on the table next to her phone and rubbed the oil over his hands until they were thickly covered in the oil.

Harley laid on her back, her arms under her head and watched him with a growing smile. He was sitting on his knees, his rear on his ankles. She sighed with pleasure, her eyes wandering over his pale bleached, naked skin, tracing the muscles of his body, the smooth hairless lines of his figure.

Jack scooted between her legs forcing her to spread her legs wide before he placed his oiled hands on her hips.

Harley shivered in delight; his oiled hands were slick and felt warm and smooth.

Jack smiled at her and slowly pushed his hands up her stomach to her breasts, then down again, the oil allowing his hands to slide over her skin smoothly.

Harley closed her eyes with a hiss of pleasure while Jack’s hands glided over her flesh, coating her torso in almond oil. He reached over to pick up the bottle, pumping more oil onto her body, then set the bottle down so he could work the oil into her skin.

His hands moved lower, gliding over the bones of her hips and over the tops of her thighs, then back again. He smiled, watching his hands move over her, the way the oil made her bleached skin glisten. His thumbs moved gently over the soft tender skin at the joint of her hips, his thumbs teasing her sex, brushing against the lips of her sex, pressing down gently before sliding up.

Harley groaned, her body arching slightly, her hips shifted with his touch, aching for him.

Jack leaned over to add more oil to his hands before he touched her again. His hand cupped her sex first, pressing against her before he very slowly pressed his fingers just inside her, sliding his oiled fingers up against her, not touching her clitoris yet, but oiling and caressing around the bundle of nerves. While he did this with one hand, he slid his other hand up her torso to her breast, cupping one, squeezing and sliding his oiled hand over her while he teased with the other. Harley groaned loudly. Jack smiled as he watch her for a moment, the way she moved, her head thrown back into the pillows. Her hands dropped back to her sides, fingers gripping the blankets. He stopped touching her long enough to spread her legs wider, oiling his hands again. He shifted himself down onto his stomach, using one oil slick hand to tantalize the pink flesh at the edge of her clitoris and then slid his fingers down to spread her wider. Harley hissed between her teeth, panting. Jack licked his lips and very, very slowly slid his oily fingers against her sex, caressing slowly, letting his fingers slide up and down over her, but not touching her clitoris yet. Harley whimpered and her legs jerked against the blankets. She sucked her bottom lip into her mouth and arched her hips, willing him to touch her, needing him to. She was burning up, her body taut and shivering like a violin string wound too tight, ready to break at the merest stroke.

Jack leaned close and exhaled; his warm breath fluttered across her clitoris, close but still not touching her, not yet. Harley gasped in pleasure and frustration. “Puddin!”

Jack glanced up with a crooked smile at her. She was so beautiful in her wanton agony. He wanted to both extend her torture while at the same time he wanted her to orgasm, to hear her cry out, to feel that moment of release that only made her ache more. He swallowed, turning his attention back to her sex. He ached too, hurt with the need to bury himself into her, to pound her, to slam his body up against her until they came together. Her body was so inviting, warm, the bright pink contrasted with the white of her skin and oh, how he wanted her, wanted to hear her scream, to hear the wet, welcome sounds of their fucking. But not yet. Jack moved slowly, drawing out the agony for them both as he dragged his oiled fingers over her clitoris and pressed down with the tips of his fingers, not too much, just enough to tease her. Harley cried out, her body bowing, her feet pressing into the mattress.

Jack’s fingers slid with more purpose, caressing and stroking, covering her clitoris with the almond oil. Harley arched and cried out, her orgasm washing over her quickly, her feet pressing into the bed as her hips arched toward him. “Puddin! Ah...yes!” she groaned out with a gasp.

Jack leaned down and ran his tongue over her. She tasted of almond oil and warmth. He closed his eyes losing himself in the taste of her at the same time he slipped two oiled fingers inside of her. Harley reached down to grab his hair, her fingers twisted around the green locks. Harley arched, her head tossed back and forth slowly, her body in delicious agony. Jack’s mouth on her was too much and not enough all at the same time. He pressed her teeth into her bottom lip, her fingers feeling the soft locks of his hair between her fingers. Harley threw her head back with a low moan. She moved her hips in rhythm with his fingers, gasping for breath with each thrust. Her head came up to look down her body at her husband. His eyes were closed, but, as if he sensed her gaze on him he opened his incredible blue eyes and looked up at her with a smile as his lips while his tongue caressed her. Harley groaned dropping her head back. Watching him was almost too much.

Jack pressed his mouth to her more firmly, his tongue sliding up and down, back and forth while his fingers moved slowly into her, then out until his entire body ached. He needed to release, needed to feel her.

He pulled his fingers out of her giving her one last long lick before he was up on his knees. Harley released his hair with a grin as Jack pulled her legs up to place her feet on his shoulders.

“You ready pumpkin?” he asked, his voice of a low purr, his hand wrapped around his shaft.

Harley smiled with her teeth pressed into her bottom lip as she reached forward to drag her fingers down his stomach. She caressed his shoulders with her feet. Jack grinned as he felt her toes stroke his ear, her voice warm and sensual. “Yes puddin, I want you.”

Jack grinned and looked down to rub his hard, aching erection against her. He hissed with pleasure coating the head of his shaft with her, wet and feeling the warm slickness against him before he pushed forward slowly, delving into her. He groaned loudly giving in to his desire, his passion for his wife; his body shuddered as they joined together.

Jack leaned forward, dropping to his hands at the same time pressing her knees to her shoulders, then leaned closer until he could kiss her. He grinned gazing into her bright eyes.

“You feel so good Harley...so good,” Jack purred brushing his nose against her. “So wet.” He chuckled. “So warm and wet pumpkin.”

Harley moaned in response, blinked heavily and said, “Puddin...fuck me.”

Jack groaned with a smile, sitting back up. He rubbed his hands along her legs, his fingers spread wide as he dragged them along her smooth, pale skin. He began to move, slowly at first, taking his time and rocking his hips so his shaft moved in and out of her almost completely. The bed creaked each time he thrust forward, burying himself deeply inside her. He rested his hands at her knees, looking down at her, watching the way her breasts moved each time he thrust forward.

Harley whimpered, feeling that delightful press, the way his hard erection filled her, touching everything. He dropped his hands from her knees, leaning and reaching forward to squeeze her breasts. Harley was panting heavier, her little exclamations of pleasure growing higher in pitch as Jack’s thrusts picked up speed.

He squeezed her breasts before dropping his hands down beside her and leaned forward again to bring her knees to her shoulders, his expression one of pure pleasure. He kept moving, feeling her becoming wetter with each thrust.

Harley grasped his hips, pulling him closer as her cries became louder, her fingers pressing into his skin and urging him harder and deeper.

Jack kissed her, leaning forward, thrusting hard and fast.

Harley’s cries were muffled against his mouth when she came again, her fingers pressed hard into his hips before sliding up his sides. Her body tightened, unable to move much in this position; she just took what Jack gave her. He kissed her deeply, his tongue caressing hers, when he suddenly pulled away and out of her.

Harley gasped in surprise and frustration. “Puddin!”
Jack grinned, but he tossed her legs off his shoulder and to the side before he started to push her over. “Roll onto your stomach Harls.”

Harley was confused for just a moment, but she did as he requested, rolling onto her stomach.

Jack smiled, running both hands eagerly over her rear, exploring the soft roundness of her backside with his fingers before he grabbed her hips and pulled her up to her knees.

Harley giggled, tossing her hair over one shoulder and pushed up onto her hands and knees, her legs spread wide.

Jack licked his lips, one hand resting against her lower back while with the other he held his shaft and rubbed against her. She was practically dripping, she was so wet. He swallowed and eased his erection once more into her, eliciting a low groan from deep in his chest.

Harley’s hiss as he pushed slowly into her was replaced with an intense moan as he slid all the way into her. She pushed back, bouncing along his erection to enjoy the wet, smooth slide on his shaft and the feel of her rear bouncing against him.

Jack grunted with the effort of holding back just a little while longer. He held her hips with both hands, the back of her thighs were pressed up against his as he pulled her back, watching the way she bounced against him, his shaft disappearing into her and out again. Her cries of pleasure made it difficult for him not to cum; he wanted to hold out just a little bit longer, but she was so sexy, so beautiful. He ran one hand down her back feeling the smoothness of her skin, the way her spine curved as she arched back against him, the bounce of her rear against him, the ripple of her flesh when he thrust into her.

Jack groaned loudly. “Harley...damn...uh...”

He gripped her hips tighter, his fingers pressing into her snow white skin. He pressed her down until Harley’s arms and legs gave out and she dropped to the bed. Jack laid on top of her, thrusting his shaft into her. He reached over and laced his fingers with hers on each hand, bringing her hands closer as he held on tightly while he continued to thrust, his lips against her shoulder, kissing a ragged line to her ear while continuing to thrust harder and quicker until Harley squeezed his fingers tight, her body tensing and she cried out.

“Uhh Jack….!”

Her body tightening around him sent Jack spiraling over the edge. He came hard, bursting inside her with a loud, long drawn out cry. They squeezed each others hands, the bed creaking and squeaking with each of his thrusts until Jack simply collapsed, his panting breaths mixing with hers.

They lay there for several seconds catching their breath until Harley murmured against the blankets.

“You’re a little heavy puddin.”

Jack chuckled as he peppered her shoulder and back with kisses. “Sorry sweets.”

He pulled out slowly, both of them moaning with displeasure at being separated. Jack flopped down beside her on the bed with a grunt before he pulled her up against him.

PHarley pressed back into him, her body lining up with his perfectly. She could feel his still semi hard erection against her rear, sticky and warm. She grinned with pleasure, wiggling closer as Jack wrapped his arm around her waist. He brushed her hair back and kissed her ear, then her throat.
Harley smiled contentedly, closing her eyes. After a couple of seconds she whispered.

“So, what time is it?”

Jack made a loud groan.

*

It was a cloudy, rainy day, which made both Jack and Harley happy as they drove on their motorcycle into the heart of the fashion district on a mission. Harley had her white, pink and blue hair in a loose braid down her back. She looked trendy and young today, wearing a pair of black skinny jeans, knee-high black boots, a loose black top with a close cut waist high jean jacket where her gun was hidden along with the goggles over her eyes and a pair of black leather half palm gloves as she grinned, holding tight to Joker.

Joker was wearing goggles, his green hair whipping loose in the air as he drove. He wore a three piece light tan plaid suit with an orange silk tie and a green and brown gingham shirt with a long brown trench coat over the top, along with a pair of dark brown monk strap boots and matching leather gloves. The entire outfit was all brought together by a bright orange flower in his lapel, hidden under the trenchcoat along with his knife, gun and the tiny bombs he was carrying across his front.

They zipped along through the traffic moving so fast that the light rain stung slightly against their skin, but they welcomed it. Traveling along behind them was a black SUV being driven by Frost, with Zsasz and Jason in the passenger seats.

They were here to take the first of three people, the closest to Falcone to be currently living in Gotham, Gigi Lombardo, Carmine Falcone’s girlfriend. She kept a fairly consistent schedule, spending her Thursday afternoon shopping downtown with lunch at Chez Vous. The whole time she was being chauffeured in a dark blue BMW 7 by two of Falcone’s people, a woman and a man, the same two every time; Mary Puglia and her brother Frank Puglia.

Right now it was just past two p.m., which meant that Gigi would be heading down Maiden Lane just past 6th street. With the rain the side streets weren’t quite as busy as usual, which was perfect for what Joker had planned.

*

Gigi leaned back in her white leather seat and stared out the window with a frown. She hated the rain and the chill. She sighed uncrossing and crossing her legs in the short dress she was wearing, wishing she could have a drink. She glanced down at her hand with a smile, admiring the square emerald ring rimmed in diamonds she had just bought herself with Falcone’s money. It glittered in the dim light. At least the rain couldn’t dim the jewel.

“Mary, can you put some music on at least? The sound of the rain is getting on my nerves.” Gigi sighed, laying her hand down on her lap.

Mary glanced at her brother who was driving. The siblings looked a great deal alike, both six feet tall, black hair worn short, and both wore black suits. Frank looked at his sister and shrugged.

Mary leaned over and turned on the car’s stereo system; the CD in the car’s player came to life with the sounds of Taylor Swift. Gigi grinned and began to bounce her foot.
Joker grinned when he saw the car up ahead. He gave a hand signal.

Frost saw Joker’s hand come up. “All right boys, masks on.”

Jason, who was sitting in the front seat beside Frost picked up his red helmet while Zsasz pulled a full head covering mask over his head. The mask was black, but the front was painted with a skull face. Frost pulled out his mask from the glove compartment and, while holding the wheel, he pulled it over his head. The mask covered everything except his eyes.

Frost hit the gas as Joker twisted the motorcycle into the bicycle lane to move up alongside the BMW.

Gigi looked out the window just as a motorcycle came speeding along beside the car. She frowned at the two people on the bike. Neither of them were wearing helmets, only goggles. Idiots, she thought. She frowned as the woman on the back of the bike grinned and waved at her followed by the man who was driving the motorcycle, a man who had green hair she noticed. Weird she thought. They both had big smiles and if she wasn’t mistaken, both of them were wearing lipstick though the man on the motorcycle had his extended past his lips to curl up into a bigger smile drawn out by the red lipstick he wore and his teeth were perfect, very white, just like the woman’s. Gigi thought the couple was a little creepy, but then the bike sped ahead of the BMW.

Mary frowned as the bike came close to her side of the car zipping past them, the two people on the bike waving as they sped pass. She looked over at her brother.

“Hey, did that guy have green hair?”

Frank narrowed his eyes as the bike and its passenger whipped in front of him, coming a little too close for comfort.

“What an asshole. Who cares about his hair. There are so many people with weird hair colors anymore.” Frank grumbled as he slowed down to avoid hitting the motorcycle.

“What I’m getting tired of is bad drivers and motorcyclists who think they own the fucking road.”

Mary shrugged and settled back with a sigh.

Harley leaned forward, her hand slipping around Joker’s chest, though she dropped her hand down to give his thigh a squeeze (which earned her a laugh along with a wiggle of pleasure from Joker) before she reached up and snapped off one of the bombs Joker was carrying on a belt across his chest. She pulled it up in front of her and with a bright grin pulled the pin out with her teeth before she threw the grenade-like bomb behind her. She didn’t watch where it went before she reached around to grab another leaning forward over Joker’s shoulder and kissing his ear.

Joker grinned with pleasure.

Something came flying at the car.
Mary pointed and had just enough time to say, “What the fuck is that?”

The object was small and round, but it looked to be painted green and purple. Frank tried to avoid it, but the little object came right at the vehicle and hit the hood. Just as soon as it impacted with the hood of the BMW, the object exploded.

Frank cried out in shock. “Fuck!”

Mary yelped.

Gigi in the back screamed.

Frank lost control of the car for a moment, the front swinging wildly from one side to the other, but just as he got the car under control, another bomb hit the windshield. Gigi continued to scream while Frank slammed on the brakes, but that was the moment the SUV that Frank hadn’t noticed behind them, sped up and slammed into the back of the BMW.

All three of the BMW’s occupants were thrown forward. Frank’s face smashed into the airbag without harm, but he was dazed and his neck and shoulders radiated pain. Mary was jerked painfully forward, though her seatbelt kept her in place (and her airbag did not release.) Gigi, who wasn’t wearing a seat belt, slammed into the back of Mary’s seat with her face. She hit hard enough that she felt her nose break on impact. Gigi sat back screaming and lifted her hands to her face while blood gushed from her nose. The motorcycle had swung around, turning so quickly that Joker nearly laid the bike to the road as he squeezed the break handles and performed a quick reverse spin, dropping his foot to the street as the bike drifted for a few seconds while Harley laughed, one hand around his waist, her other hand in the air like she was riding a wild bronco.

“WOOHOO!!” Harley squealed with excitement as Joker, smiling ear to ear, did a burnout causing smoke to billow around them from the back wheel before the motorcycle lunged forward. Joker accelerated quickly, aiming for the damaged vehicle at a dangerous speed, but at the very last possible second, Joker spun the bike to the side again, twisting the bike to the side stopping within inches of the smoking vehicle.

They didn’t have a lot of time before the Gotham police would show up, but Joker wasn’t moving with urgency. Joker kicked the stand down and hopped off the bike easily, turning to grab Harley’s hand to help guide her off the bike. He tugged her close, lifting his goggles up with one hand at the same time he leaned in to kiss her, his lips puckered comically. Harley giggled and kissed him before he tucked her arm around his and strolled over to the now smoking BMW as if they were simply on an afternoon stroll. Frost leapt out of his vehicle the moment the SUV came to a stop just a few feet behind the BMW, barely stopping long enough to put the vehicle into park. He trusted his partners to follow the plan as they had discussed it. Frost hurried over to the driver side, yanked the door open, holding his weapon on the driver while Jason did the same on the passenger side. Both Frost and Jason, weapons trained on the two people, dragged the two guards out of the vehicle. Both were stunned and a little bloody, allowing themselves to be pulled from the car with little effort. Frost turned the driver slamming him up against the side of the car, yanking his arms behind his back with one hand while holding the barrel of his gun to the man’s head. He pulled a zip tie out from his jacket pocket and quickly tied the man’s wrists together. Jason did the same thing to the stunned woman he had just pulled from the passenger seat.

Zsasz rushed to the back seat and pulled the door open, grabbed a screaming Gigi out of the car. She stumbled on her heels, losing one of her shoes in the process. She was screaming and crying as Zsasz turned her, slamming her up against the car and yanking her hands behind her back.

“You don’t know who I am!! Carmine is going to kill you!!! I’m Carmine Falcone’s girlfriend and he is going to kill you all!” Gigi, covered in her own blood, blubbered.

Joker strolled over with Harley as Zsasz flipped the confused, bleeding woman around.

Joker grinned at her. “Hi! Gigi right?”

Gigi stared at him and Harley in horror. “Who are you?”

Joker smiled with a sideways glance at Harley. “I’m really going to have to work harder on getting our name out there sweets.” He sighed and looked back at Gigi. “I’m the Joker and this is Harley, the infamous Harley Quinn.”

Harley waved. “Hiya.”

Gigi was trembling, but she was trying to put on a brave face. “What do you want with me?”

Joker smiled. “Oh, I’m glad you asked. You my darling are going to teach Carmine Falcone that no one fucks with The Joker.” He reached forward and patted her cheek. “And you are going to teach the Batman that he simply can’t save everyone.”

Gigi’s eyes widened and she began to scream again. Joker glanced at Zsasz, who held a cloth drenched in chloroform over the distraught woman’s nose. Gigi struggled against Zsasz’s grip, coughed roughly into the cloth, inhaled. After a few more heartbeats, her eyes crossed and she went limp in the assassin’s arms. He lifted her up and with a salute to Joker headed back to the SUV. While Joker and Harley were dealing with Gigi, Frost and Jason finished binding the two guards, gagged them both and moved them to the front of the vehicle.

Joker stopped in front of them releasing Harley’s arm to step forward. “Now, you are going to send a message for me to Falcone, let him know I have his girlfriend. However, unlucky for the both of you, I only need one messenger.”

Joker pulled his gun holding it out at arm's length frowning as he aimed it at the head of one, closing one eye, then the other. The two guards made noises, but nothing intelligent escaped from behind their gags. Joker frowned, switching back and forth between them with one eye closed as he aimed, then switched targets again. He glanced at Harley.

“Who do you think I should shoot sweets?” Joker asked with a slight frown creasing his forehead.

Harley tapped her chin. “Hmm...how about eeny meeny miny mole?”

Joker frowned as he considered it before he shrugged. “Sounds good.”

He smiled starting with the woman. “Eeny meeny miny mole catch a tiger by it’s toe...”

When he finished his gun was on the man.

Joker smiled broadly showing off his perfect white teeth. “Guess you’re it.”

He pulled the trigger. The bullet ripped through the bodyguard’s head; blood, bone and brains exploded out the back bursting in a meaty red streak across the hood and windshield of the car. The woman next to him screamed behind her gag. Harley grabbed her and pulled her close.

“You tell Falcone that the Joker is coming for him, okay?” Harley smiled.

The woman nodded, in shock and horror, and Harley let her go. The blonde jumped up on her toes and patted the woman on top of her head.

“Good girl.”

Joker smiled as he holstered his gun. “Come along sweets. Let’s take Gigi to see Mario, shall we?”

Harley giggled as Joker made a hand motion over his head. Frost and Jason headed back to the SUV where Zsasz waited with the unconscious Gigi.

Joker walked back over to the one remaining guard. “Oh, please give this to Falcone for me, will you darling?”

He pulled out a playing card with the Joker on it. He smiled and showed it to her, twisting it back and forth between two fingers before he reached over and slid it into the pocket of her jacket. He smiled and waved before walking off to follow his people.

Mary watched them go before she collapsed onto her knees next to her brother’s body.

*

That night Falcone stood staring out the window of his apartment into the darkness filled with the twinkling lights of Gotham. He looked pale and older. He was wearing only a dress shirt, his tie thrown over the back of the couch, his hand in his pants pocket and a large glass filled to the very brim with bourbon.

Tallyman was standing behind him, his hands crossed in front of him as he waited.

“This Joker now has my son and my girlfriend, but he hasn’t made any demands. What the fuck does that clown want?” Falcone’s voice was soft, but there was a slight tremble to his words as he held the playing card that Tallyman had brought him from the scene of Gigi’s abduction.

“Maybe he is trying to scare you?” Tallyman responded softly.

Falcone shook his head. “I...I don’t know. He hasn’t sent any messages except for Mary. No demands for money, no threats...nothing. He just took her.”

Tallyman said softly. “I think you need to tighten your security sir. Get your other two children someplace safe.”

Falcone nodded, but he seemed dazed. “Yes...”

Tallyman turned to go before he turned back to look at Falcone who was still staring out the window. “I’ll find them sir.”

Falcone simply nodded.

He lifted the card back up, then angrily ripped it in half and threw it to the floor.

*

Louisa Falcone, dressed in tight jeans and a simple black t-shirt, barefoot, her blonde hair styled in loose curls around her shoulders danced in place as she waited for the popcorn in the microwave to pop. She sang to herself as she danced in place swinging her hips side to side, lifting up on her bare feet.

“You got me feelin’ hella good
So let's just keep on dancin'

You hold me like you should

So I'm gonna keep on dancin'...

Louisa lived in the South Hinkley district in a two bedroom, one bath home paid for by her ex-husband Carmine Falcone. He kept her well taken care of, paid all her bills for her and gave her spending money for groceries and an allowance for whatever else she wanted. He had paid for her plastic surgery, her breast enhancement, tummy tuck, weekly visits to the salon to have her hair done. He still even came around once in a while to spend time with her. They would have a nice, intimate dinner; either she would cook or they would get take out, just the two of them in her kitchen, like when they were first married, watch a movie together on her couch, make love all night like teenagers.

He would either leave or spend the night, staying to have breakfast with her before he would return to his life. Louisa liked their little arrangement. It was simple and uncomplicated by the criminal life he led, plus she got her freedom, and him if she was in the mood. She didn’t mind sharing him with his latest girlfriend. Being the other woman was novel and, it was actually fun for her. She got all the benefits and none of the downside of being with “The Roman,” all in all it was a good arrangement. Louisa smiled and pulled the bag of popcorn out. “Ouch!” She giggled at herself as she pulled the hot bag open and dumped it into the waiting bowl she had setting on the counter. She grinned as she picked up the bowl and walked over to her couch carrying with her bowl of popcorn and sat, pulled a blanket over her lap before she picked up the remote and turned on the television. She was going to watch Fifty Shades of Grey again. She settled back and tossed some popcorn into her mouth.

She was watching her movie when she heard something. She frowned and set the bowl down, then sat up straight looking toward the front door. She narrowed her eyes before she shrugged and settled down again. She had just reached for her bowl of popcorn just when she heard the sound of glass shattering.

She got to her feet quickly at the same moment her front door was forced open and a man who looked like a well dressed evil clown with bright green hair, white skin, a bright red smile that showed off rows of perfect white teeth, and the bluest eyes she had ever seen, came waltzing in dressed in a bright blue three piece suit with a black vest and white shirt, with a gold chain across his abdomen. Another chain ran from the breast pocket of the suit to the lapel of his jacket. He smiled at her, his hands in the front pockets of his slacks, but she could see the tops of dark blue leather gloves as he walked closer. She even noticed the shine of his shoes, bright black oxfords with white spats...so odd she thought even as fear raced through her. She noted the weapon at his hip and felt rooted to the spot. Directly behind him a woman stepped in, her skin pale like his, too white, like it had been painted that way, with white hair, in two long pigtails, the ends of which were pink and blue. She was wearing a ruffle short purple skirt, a black sweater that hung off one shoulder, matching purple leather half palm gloves and purple thigh high boots, also wearing a shoulder holster with a pistol.

Louisa screamed.

She swung around and ran right into the chest of another man. This one was tall, bald with dead looking eyes and dressed like a mortician, all in black. She screamed again, slamming her hands into the man’s chest and knocking him back a step. The pale man with the green hair came up behind her, wrapping one arm around her waist, his other hand going to her mouth.

Louisa screamed against the leather glove of his hand.
“Calm down Mrs. Falcone!” the man said.

Louisa fought as he lifted her off her feet. She kicked and struggled before she bit down as hard as she could on his gloved hand. She was rewarded by the man yelping in surprise and dropping her. Louise fell hard on her knees, the impact rattling through her, but then she pushed herself to her feet and ran, going for the stairs and disappearing around a corner. She looked back, but they weren’t following her. She wasn’t thinking clearly as she raced into the bathroom, panic setting in.

Joker frowned. He walked over to the stairs and looked up with a curious expression. “Where does she think she is going?”

Harley frowned moving to stand next to him. “Maybe she has a panic room?”

Zsasz came to stand on Joker’s other side. “I doubt it. This place is too small for one.”

Joker shrugged and pulled his glove off to examine his hand.

Harley took his hand. “Puddin, did she hurt you?”

Joker frowned, the woman had actually drawn blood.

He pouted. “Does this look infected?”

Harley giggled. “No silly.” But then her expression darkened. “I’m gonna bust her lip for biting you.”

Joker glanced up the stairs. “Come along Harley, Zsasz, let’s go convinced the Mrs. Ex Falcone that she needs to come with us.”

Joker chuckled and headed up the stairs with Harley and Zsasz. Once they were at the landing, Joker could see there was a simple hall that stretched both ways, the doors on one end were open but the doors at the other weren’t, not that either meant anything--she could be hiding anywhere.

“Split up, let’s find her shall we?” Joker smiled.

Harley leaned over and kissed the tip of Joker’s nose. “Be careful puddin.”

Joker grinned and stuck his tongue out at her.

Harley giggled and sauntered off. Joker watched her go admiring her backside while Zsasz took off to examine the other room. Joker headed to the bathroom to clean off his bite. He walked into the bathroom looking around with a slight inquisitive frown. The bathroom was entirely white, from the tiles to the towels and shower curtain.

Joker cringed. “Boring.”

He shuddered and pulled open the medicine cabinet, glanced through the contents looking for some first aid cream. Louisa Falcone had a lot of drugs. He picked up a few of the bottles looking at the prescriptions; sleeping pills, pain pills and some he had no idea what they did. He grinned and pulled a few of the bottles out and pocketed them, not sure what he was planning on doing with them, but one never knew. After a couple of more seconds he found a tube and pulled it out. He examined the tube before he opened and spread the cream across the wound. It wasn’t bad but better safe than sorry he thought. He finished and pulled his glove back on. He opened his jacket and pulled out his lighter and a pack of cigarettes, lightly tapping out one cigarette before putting the pack back into his inside jacket pocket. He put the cigarette between his lips before he held the lighter up, flicking a flame to life. He cupped his hand around it, holding the flame to the cigarette when he saw something in the mirror, a movement behind him that caught his attention. Joker frowned, clicking the lighter closed and taking a drag on his cigarette as he stared into the mirror. His blue eyes narrowed as he leaned closer to the mirror, smoke slowly rolling from his nostrils as he studied the shower curtain behind him. It was pulled across the tub, looking perfectly normal, but something about it, the way it was hanging seemed off. He leaned closer to the mirror, he could swear there was a shadow or maybe movement...

He turned toward the tub with a curious frown just as Mrs. Ex-Falcone came rushing at him tearing the curtain off the rod at the same time. She let out a yell like an animal, her fingers held like claws through the cloth as she tried to launch herself at him.

Joker’s hairless brows lifted in surprise, but he simply sidestepped out of the way of the attacking woman, blowing out a lazy stream of smoke as she stumbled into the wall next to the sink with a loud thud. Joker watched as the woman stumbled out of the bathroom, the shower curtain fell only to become tangled around her legs. She listed to the side and slammed into the wall. The ex-wife of Gotham’s most powerful (currently) mob boss spun around looking dazed from her impact with the wall. She took a step backwards away from the pale man. Joker thought about reaching out and grabbing her, but instead he simply watched as she tripped and fell over backwards down the stairs.

Harley came running from the bedroom she had been searching in the short hall when she heard the sound of a scream followed by a loud impact sound. “Puddin?”

Harley looked down and saw the woman, tangled in the shower curtain stumble, hit the top stairs, turn around just before she went tumbling down the stairs. She hit the floor hard and went still.

Harley made a face, followed by a whispered. “Ouch.”

Zsasz had come out of the room he had been searching, moving calmly, not in any hurry since he saw Joker and Harley looking curiously down the stairs He walked over to where Joker and Harley stood and turned to look down the stairs. He made a grunt and lifted a brow.

Joker took a drag on his cigarette before he giggled, smoke rolling out from between his lips. “How to fall down stairs: Step 1, Step 2, Step 6,7,8 9,10…”

Harley laughed and gave him a light smack on the shoulder. “Puddin, you’re terrible.”

Joker grinned and shrugged. “What can I say? Well, at least she made transporting her a little easier. Wrap her up and let’s get her in Zsasz’s car.” Joker bounced on his toes happily. “One more to go!”

Joker danced down the stairs and jumped over Louisa’s body, pulling a playing card from his pocket and with a grin he hurried over to the kitchen, coming back with a butcher’s knife. He took the knife and pinned the card--a Joker card--to the wall where it would easily be visible to anyone entering the apartment.

* * *

Victor Page came out of his office into the crisp Gotham night. He sighed and pulled the collar of his jacket up as he walked to his car. His expensive shoes made a loud clapping sound against the pavement as he moved. Even in a parking garage, the damp chill seeped through the concrete. He looked expensive with his styled blond hair, Isaia navy blue suit and his Alexander McQueen dress shoes, all bought and paid for from his work with Carmine Falcone. As the older man’s lawyer, Victor Page had gotten Falcone out of jail more times than he could count, and that didn’t include paternity suits, money laundering, and tax fraud. Victor smiled. He was good at what he did, manipulating the system for his client. What else would any self-respecting attorney do, he often thought.

The parking garage was silent, only one of two cars scattered throughout the level he was on. He didn’t know if they were people who worked in the building or just cars that people had left for some reason and he didn’t care.

After a couple of minutes of walking, Victor saw his baby, his newest purchase, a black and white Bentley Bentayga Mulliner AWD, (a simple quarter million dollar purchase) with white leather interior and all the bells and whistles. Even Bruce Wayne didn’t have a car like this Victor thought to himself as he hurried over and let himself into the car. It was one of the many indulgences that Victor allowed himself.

He flopped down onto the seat, tossing his briefcase to the seat beside him with a sigh before he put the key in the ignition and turned the car on. The car purred to life and Victor spent a few seconds adjusting the massage and heating feature of the seat before he leaned back with another happy sigh. This was the life, he thought. Tonight he was meeting with Candy, taking her out for a fancy dinner, then some fun at his apartment. He smiled and pulled his jacket open, slipping the joint that he had hidden there out, and withdrew a lighter from his pocket. As he held the joint between his lips and flicked the lighter open, he thought he might give Mason a call and get some coke, maybe some ketamine and ecstasy, might as well make it a fun night he thought with a grin.

Victor leaned back and took a hard drag on the joint and held it, feeling the burn in his lungs before he slowly let the smoke out slowly and feeling the beginning of a buzz. He had just put the joint back to his lips, relaxing into the seat when he felt the press of metal against his temple.

"Don’t you know drugs are bad for you?" A warm, sensual voice purred at his ear at the same time pressing the barrel of the gun against his temple just a little harder. Victor’s eyes opened wider as he tensed. He could feel the man’s lips against the lobe of his ear, but the gun against his temple was more concerning. “Though I suppose nowadays marijuana isn’t considered all that bad is it?”

“No it isn’t puddin,” a soft female voice answered from behind Victor.

He could almost see the smile in her voice as she spoke to the man with the gun.

The owner of the smooth sensual voice reached around the other side giving Victor a view of a finely tailored suit jacket of deep emerald green. If he hadn’t been ready to shit himself, Victor thought, he would have asked where he got a jacket that color. He saw the sleeve of a white dress shirt and the person reaching around wore a pair of deep evergreen colored leather gloves, but what struck Victor the most was the hint of the wrist and arm he saw between the sleeve and the gloves. The skin was pure white, like chalk or snow...no color at all, like a drowned corpse.

The fingers of the gloved hand plucked the joint from between Victor’s numb lips.

Victor glanced in his rearview to see a man with chalk white skin, scarlet red lips, and green hair, and as he watched the man with the gun, he saw vivid, haunting blue eyes. Victor’s eyes widened more as he took in the man’s face while he held the joint between his thumb and forefinger, lifted it to his lips and took a drag. While the green-haired man held the smoke in, he motioned with the hand holding the joint--Victor assumed gesturing to the other person in the car.

Victor watched in the mirror as a pretty young woman with the same skin condition as the man, sat forward, emerging from the shadows like an ethereal ghost or angel. She was beautiful with long white hair that she had pulled up in two pigtails making her look younger than what she probably was and as she leaned close to the green haired man, it was clear to Victor--a man who dealt with lust on a nearly everyday basis—that this woman lusted after the man. But there was something else in the way she held herself close to him, the looks they exchanged even as the man held a gun to Victor’s head. These two clowns shared a look of love, devotion and obsessive desire. There was just something about the way she gazed at the man as he held the joint to her lips.

She took a hit off the joint, holding the smoke in her lungs as the man slowly exhaled. He looked at the joint with a sigh and a lift of his lips at one corner. “Nope, drugs never did do much for me.”

Victor made a high pitched whine as the man put the joint out by crushing it against the back of the leather seat next to Victor’s shoulder before he brought that arm around to dangle his gloved hand loosely against Victor Page’s other shoulder, though his attention seemed to be on the woman in the car. His hand caressed Victor’s chest idly for a moment before the man used his free hand to pull aside Victor’s jacket, finding the inner pocket where he had kept his joint and the lighter. The man holding the gun to Victor’s temple easily pulled the lighter out of the lawyer’s pocket. He brought it around to inspect the lighter while Victor trembled. The pale man narrowed his eyes and mumbled, “If I’m not mistaken, a Caran d’Ache Ecaille from China, gold and with a cherry wood and lacquer finish.”

“What about you sweets? Joint do anything for you?” the man asked with a smooth tone.

The woman exhaled and shrugged. “Nah.”

Victor heard movement followed by (Victor guessed the woman) catching something. “Nice lighter,” the man said to him before turning his attention once more to the woman. “Sweets, can you wipe off the lawyer cooties for me? I think I have a new lighter.”

The woman giggled. “Course puddin, can’t have cooties on my puddin’s lighter.”

The man laughed leaning toward her. The woman grabbed his face in both hands forcing him to turn toward her and then kissed him. Victor slowly began to open the door, thinking he could make a run for it when the man pressed the gun’s barrel hard against his head. A second later, his other arm wrapped around Victor’s neck, though his grip of light.

“Oh now don’t be stupid Victor,” the man said in a smooth tone. “We were just starting to get along.”

Victor went stiff, trying not to maintain his calm, but he was trembling and he was pretty sure he had just wet himself a little. He dealt with all kinds of people, dangerous people, he had often thought...but right now, he realized he had been fooling himself.

“Who are you? Whaddaya want? Is it money? I got money. Drugs, girls...” Victor spoke quickly with a slight whine. When he said “girls” the man reached up and tapped a couple of fingers against the lawyer’s forehead. “Shut up Vic darling. I’m The Joker and this is my beautiful partner Harley Quinn. And you my friend are about to become a puzzle piece in my little game.”

“Game?” Victor shook when he spoke. He knew about The Joker within the hour that he had appeared on television with Mario Falcone. And the dangerous lunatic was right here. Victor considered praying.

Joker laughed. “Yes, a game against Falcone. I decided I wanted a few more pieces to have in play. Though I am getting a bit tired of Mario. You know, you really should speak to Carmine about how he is raising his children.” Joker sighed and shrugged, the gun never wavering from Victor’s temple. “The mouth on that kid! Shocking. Isn’t it shocking Harley?”
“Very shocking puddin. He called us names I’ve never heard of.” The woman, Harley, shook her head. “And he kisses his mother with that mouth...shame.”

Victor mumbled. “What are you doing to do with me?”

The Joker laughed. “That’s the spirit! Why worry about Mario when you can worry about yourself. Well Victor dear, I have no idea yet.” The Joker chuckled. “We’ll just have to see won’t we. Flying by the seat of our pants, as it were.” He winked at Harley. “Now darling, why don’t you hand me the keys.”

Victor, with shaking fingers, reached forward and pulled out the keys to his car. The Joker had his free hand out and Victor dropped them in.

“Sweets,” Joker said softly.

Harley moved, crawling into the front seat. Victor stared sideways at her with wide horrified eyes as she smiled prettily at him and restrained his hands with a zip tie before she leaned over with a ball gag which she forced into his mouth, wrapping it around and buckling it tight. Joker handed off the gun to her as he slipped out from the back of the car.

Between them, Joker and Harley easily got the lawyer out of the car and moved to the back where they walked him around to the trunk. Victor looked around the parking garage in a panic, hoping that someone might lend assistance, call the police, something--but it was deserted.

Joker opened the trunk and gasped. “Harley! Look at that! Isn’t it just luxurious?”

Harley, with her hand on the door of the trunk, leaned in and smiled. “Well if you are going to have to ride in a trunk I could definitely pick this one.” She leaned down to rub her hand along the interior. “Oooh, plush.”

Joker laughed. “See there, aren’t you glad you spent a ridiculous amount of money on this car so you could be kidnapped in style?” Joker gave Victor a shove. “In you go darling. Harley and I have places to be, so chop chop!”

Victor crawled in and laid on his side looking up at Joker and Harley as Joker reached up and grabbed the back hatch. Harley waved her fingers at him.

Joker smiled. “Now you get to join the fun.”

The hatched snapped down leaving Victor Page in darkness.

* * *

Ashley Doorman yawned as she shoved her hand deep into the pocket of her old red coat. This early in the morning there was no one up on the street where she lived. It was that weird eerie morning quiet in the big city, hard to find, but even though she was dead on her feet, she did like this time of the morning. She shivered under her coat as she walked. She was going to have to purchase a new one she thought, but damn, she didn’t want the expense. Winter was coming, though, and winter in Gotham could be brutal. She sighed and kept walking; her dog, a mix breed named Bart, stopped and sniffed at some trash cans.

“Come on Bart.” Ashley groaned giving his lead a half-hearted tug. She wanted to have enough time to have some coffee before she had to catch the bus for work, but Bart could be super picky about where he wanted to piss. She had never seen a dog so particular.
Bart sniffed for a few more seconds before he began to walk again.

Ashley yawned hard enough to crack her jaw and continued letting her dog lead her along when Bart stopped and began to bark.

Ashley cringed and tugged on his leash. “Shut up Bart!! You’re gonna wake everyone!”

Bart was jumping up and down at something, barking his head off. She tugged again at her dog’s leash, but he wouldn’t be distracted. Ashley looked up and her eyes widened in horror.

Hanging from the light pole in front of her was a man, dead clearly if the wide unblinking gaze was any indication. His mouth was pulled back into a too wide smile--no one smiled like that Ashley thought in horror, no one. The body was wrapped in plastic with a large cardboard sign hanging from around the man’s neck that read in large purple and green letters.

“YOUR MOVE!”

The glass flew across the room and shattered into a hundred pieces against the wall and leaving a wet stain. Falcone’s face was a mask of rage. It was late morning, but the shirt that Falcone wore had a wet amber stain on the front from the alcohol he had been drinking. Judging by his look, wearing only black slacks and his stained, white shirt with the sleeves rolled up, and the nearly empty bottle of whiskey on the living room table, Vito figured Falcone had been drinking since he got up that morning.

The man turned and snarled looking on edge and dangerous. Falcone turned the full force of his angry on his employee. “WHAT?!”

Vito Savellini flinched. “Sorry sir, we just found out this morning, a call from one of your guys in the area, but we just got the report that your ex-wife Louisa is missing. There appears to have been a break-in at her apartment. And ah, Victor Page, your lawyer–his car was found totaled against a light pole in the upper east side, though no one was in the car. It had been spray painted with “Ha Ha Ha” and “Joke’s on You” written all over it in purple and green. The interior had been spray painted too. Someone dumped water in the oil...locked up the engine, so I had it towed, but the car is totaled sir.”

Falcone was about to say something when there was a hurried knock at the door.

Carmine turned toward the door with an angry glare. “COME IN!”

The door opened and Cristian Romano, one of Carmine’s soldiers came in. The young man was dressed in a police uniform, one of Falcone’s men who worked at the GCPD keeping tabs on anything to do with Falcone, stopped for a second looking stunned, his mouth hanging open as he looked around. It was clear this was the first time he had ever been in The Roman’s apartment.

Falcone hissed. “What the fuck do you want?”

Romano swallowed. “Ah sir, we ah...we just got a report of a body hanging from a light pole nearly Cape Carmine in Robbinsville...”

“I know where the fuck Cape Carmine is stronzo! Why do I care?” Falcone snarled.

The young policeman walked over pulling out something from his breast pocket and handed it to Falcone while Vito watched. Falcone took the photo. He stared down at it and wobbled backwards to drop into a chair.
He looked up at Romano, his voice hushed. “When did they find him?”

“Early this morning sir. Someone will be coming to see you this afternoon,” Romano said softly. “But when I realized it was your son, I came right away. I thought you would want to know.”

Carmine nodded mutely, touching the image of his murdered son gently. He had gone deathly pale before he turned his attention to Vito. “Was there anything else about the wreck, my ex-wife?”

Vito nodded. “Yes sir, there was one more thing. There was one found at your ex-wife’s house and in the car.”

He pulled a card from his breast pocket and handed it to Falcone.

Carmine took it and stared. It was a playing card.

The Joker.
Jack revved the bike’s engine and darted between vehicles, weaving in and out of the Gotham traffic. He was headed toward their destination, a small intimate party of their closest family members at a club called Lovecraft’s Horror in Coventry near the university. One of the few places in Gotham where his hair along with his and Harley’s complexions should blend in.

Jack grinned, his goggles in place as he leaned forward, the bike zipping along at a speed that would surely get them pulled over if a cop saw them, but he didn’t care. Tonight was about celebrating their success and one more step toward taking down Falcone. Jack chuckled to himself. Falcone, then the Owls, and during the entire thing, he was going to play with Batman, show him that he could control nothing, fix nothing. Jack and his real family would show the caped vigilante what his actions had actually created. But right now he was just interested in some drinks, food and dancing with Harley; his thoughts about Gotham and Batman were on the back burner for now.

Tonight Jack was dressed all in black, a black and grey pinstriped Carlo Pignatelli suit, black silk shirt and black tie, but the vest was white and grey, decorated with black flower print. He wore a pair of comfortable, black lace-up boots. Harley was behind him, her arms wrapped around his middle. She looked gorgeous—as usual he thought—dressed in a short, bouffon style leather dress with a sweetheart neckline and belts as straps over the arms, though Jack was very interested in the zipper that ran between her breasts. She wore some black fishnets, a biker style leather jacket to keep her warm and some black combat boots. Her white hair was worn in soft pigtail boxer braids. He grinned; they would fit right in tonight. Though Jack’s mind was preoccupied by the thoughts of pulling that zipper down to release her breasts, or running his hands along her fishnet covered legs, he still managed to get them to the bar without drawing any unwanted attention from the Gotham PD.

After a little over an hour of navigating the busy highways and streets of Gotham City, Jack pulled up in front of the bar and pulled the bike around the corner to park. The bar wasn’t much to look at on the outside, just a plain black facade with the name of the bar over the top in red neon and a doorman who looked like doormen outside every bar in Gotham—big, bald and dressed in black. The man checked their ids without comment. If he recognized them at all, he gave no indication as he ushered them inside.

The sounds of some kind of dark electronic music greeted them when they walked through some black curtains and into the club. The place was crowded with patrons, forcing Jack and Harley to shoved their way deeper inside. The inside of the bar/club was dark; the dim lights cast everything in an what Harley thought of as an eerie glow. The bar that ran along the left wall was the first thing that Harley noticed with a large cut out painting of tentacles that ran along the top of the bar and down the side, which gave the illusion that the bar with its mirrored back wall and shelves of colorful liquor bottles were being held in the embrace of a giant octopus. There were fairy lights strung all around the bar and continued along the wall mixed with fish bones, animals skulls and strange symbols. The walls of the club were decorated with framed images, eerie black and white photographs of monstrous looking people surrounded by skulls and other bones. The bottom half of the walls were decorated with a line of skulls that ran all the way to the stage and dance floor. The dance floor—where a few people were currently dancing—was a smooth, shiny black while the ceiling above the dance floor and stage had a large, strange looking symbol painted over it. There was a smoke machine somewhere that was blowing out a steady stream of smoke that ran along the floor of the club, looking as if fog was rolling in. There were booths with black or red leather seats, as well as tables and chairs where people were sitting, drinking, eating and enjoying the music and atmosphere of the place.
Jack, his arm around Harley’s waist, chuckled. “Oh, now this is a fun place.”

Harley leaned against Jack. “We definitely don’t stick out here.”

Jack laughed looking around until he saw their family sitting at a table near the dance floor. At the table sat Frost, wearing his typical suit and looking (perhaps also typical as of late) uncomfortable, nursing a beer. Next to him was Agatha, wearing an tailored old fashioned tuxedo with tails without a tie, her hair styled with a 1920’s bob inspired flair and smoking a cigarette. She looked perfectly at home, though Jack suspected his Aunt could fit in anywhere she wanted. She had a green drink in front of her that Jack guessed, knowing the sort of person his aunt was, and the color of the drink, it was probably absinthe. Next to her was Jason dressed in black jeans and a snug fitting red t-shirt that showed off the young man’s muscles, with a beer and some sort of sandwich. Next to Jason was Zsasz, all in black and holding what might be a cup of tea. Next came Bane dressed in black slacks and dress shirt minus a tie, the sleeves of the shirt rolled up to show his biceps. He also seemed to be drinking tea with Viktoria (being the only new member of the gang here tonight) who sat beside him. The doctor kept one hand resting on Bane’s thigh. Of the group, she looked the most out of place in her pencil skirt and white blouse. Trope and Thea were on the dance floor, each with their hair dyed a different shade of blue. The two young women danced intimately together as if no one else was there watching them, and lastly was Alex, with a glass of something dark brown with a burning piece of rosemary in the glass, dressed as he usually was in jeans, t-shirt and an outrageously colored hawaiian shirt.

When Agatha caught sight of Jack and Harley, she waved before saying something to Frost who stood up and retrieved a couple of chairs for them. Everyone called out greetings as Jack and Harley came over and sat with them.

Jack smiled. “I’m so glad to see you all.”

Jason grinned. “Thanks for inviting us Boss, Harley. Been a good few days.”

Jack laughed. “So, our guests are doing well?”

Frost snorted, dropping his voice though with the volume of the music it would be a surprise for anyone to hear them. “Gigi is surprisingly vicious. She has a mouth on her and she’s bitten me twice.”

Frost pulled up the sleeve of his jacket.

Jack looked at the marks and grimaced. “Ouch.”

Agatha frowned picking up her drink and taking a sip. “I think perhaps I might have to visit your guests for a lesson in manners.”

Jack chuckled in response. “How are the other two? Do any of them know about the others?”

Jason spoke up. “Nah. Louisa just keeps telling anyone who will listen how Falcone is gonna make sure our bodies are never found and that lawyer is sure he can buy us off. If he has the kind of money he keeps offering, Falcone would be pissed because that dude is clearly skimming off the top.”

Jack put his arm around Harley’s shoulders. “Mm...I think I might have to come by and talk to Victor Page a bit...he might have some useful information.”

Zsasz spoke, his voice low and soft. “So how long before you turn them into...warnings?”
Jack frowned in thought while his fingers idly stroked up and down Harley’s arm. A waitress, carrying her pad and pencil, came over dressed in shorts, striped leggings and a corset, her hair reminiscent of Lily Munster. “What can I get you to drink?”

Jack smiled at her, looking at her name tag before he asked. “So Rachel, what’s your house special?”

The young woman cocked her hips, giving Jack a seductive smile and a very obvious once over. “For you, our Baba Yaga drink. It’s absinthe, vanilla rooibos cream soda syrup, and soda.”

Jack grinned and held up his hand. “Make it two darling.”

The young woman grinned and nodded before she walked off. Harley smacked him in the shoulder. Jack yelped. “What?” His expression immediately changed to sly as he took in Harley’s expression. “Oh--jealous?”

Harley narrowed her eyes only slightly, but there was a playful smile on her lips and Jack laughed. “Come on pumpkin, let’s go dance while we wait for our drinks.”

He smiled and nodded to the rest of their table as he stood and took Harley’s hand.

Bane frowned in thought before he glanced at Viktoria. “Wanna dance?”

She beamed. “I would love to.”

Agatha stood up too. “Well, if everyone is dancing…”

She grabbed a startled Frost by the hand and pulled him out to the dance floor.

Zsasz, Jason and Alex watched them go.

Bane frowned in thought before he glanced at Viktoria. “Wanna dance?”

She beamed. “I would love to.”

Agatha stood up too. “Well, if everyone is dancing…”

She grabbed a startled Frost by the hand and pulled him out to the dance floor.

Zsasz, Jason and Alex watched them go.

Bane frowned in thought before he glanced at Viktoria. “Wanna dance?”

She beamed. “I would love to.”

Agatha stood up too. “Well, if everyone is dancing…”

She grabbed a startled Frost by the hand and pulled him out to the dance floor.

Zsasz, Jason and Alex watched them go.

The music that began to play, Siouxsie and the Banshees’ “Face to Face” was slow and dark.

Jack smiled taking Harley into his arms, one arm around her waist holding her firmly against him, while with the other he held her hand. He brought her hand to his lips and brushed them against her knuckles softly.

“You don’t have to ever be jealous Harley. I only have eyes for you, forever and always my love.”

Jack’s voice was a warm purr. “You are my girl, forever and always. Remember, you and me against the world Harley.”

Harley smiled, her cheek lightly pink under her snow white skin. “Only you Jack, only you forever, until death do us part.”

Jack smiled, kissing her knuckles once more. “Until death do us part.”

He spun her around slowly.

“Tango with me Harley?” Jack asked softly. “Dance with me my sweets.”
Harley giggled, a soft small smile on her lips. “You know I don’t know how puddin.”

Jack purred brushing his nose against hers. “Just follow my lead my sweets. I’ll move slowly.”

He used his leg to gently push her left leg out. “Put that leg out behind you, lean back and wrap your right leg around mine.”

Harley did as he instructed. Jack slowly titled her back, his hand pressing into her back as he raised the hand he held up twisting his body slightly.

His voice was warm. “Now, just follow me pumpkin...you know I will never steer you wrong.” Jack replied brushing his nose against hers. “My sweet girl.”

Jack grinned as they moved together across the dance floor, their bodies naturally arching and flowing against one another.

Jack held her arm up, his body arched, his left knee pressed against her right as they both arched, stretching their opposite legs out behind them. Harley grinned, pleased with herself when she duplicated his stance. She tossed her left arm out, holding it in a pose she had seen before in movies or tv, her body’s natural grace made her movements agile and elegant. Jack waggled his hairless brows at her. He matched her in gracefulness, his body lean and tight.

They slowly flowed up from their shared stance. Jack gently pulled her closer, his forehead rested against hers for a moment as he stared into her eyes. Harley felt a shiver run through her staring into his hypnotic blue eyes. He held her gaze, the smile on his lips was slow, both beautiful and predatory.

He moved in a circle, guiding her with him, their eyes never leaving each other. He moved swiftly, surprising her as he spun her around. Harley responded by lifting her right leg up and wrapping it around him as he moved smoothly across the dance floor.

Neither of them were aware that they were drawing a crowd, people stepping out of the way to watch the two of them. Jack spun her around, then stopped and dipped her back. He leaned down and blew his breath along her breasts watching with delight when her skin goosebumped. He grinned and brought her back up to her feet. He spun her around once, then did a series of hip sways leading Harley to one end of the floor. Harley followed along with him swaying her hips in time to his until they reached the end of the floor. Once there, Jack spun her body in toward him, her back coming up against his chest, their hands and arms still intertwined. He slid his hand up her side to her ribs, spreading his fingers just under her breast while holding up her other arm out, his hand just under her wrist. They moved sideways, their legs seeming to elegantly and gracefully twist and untwist as they made their way to the other end of the floor.

Once there, Jack spun her back around to face him, smiling brightly at her as Harley did the spin on her toes, grabbing his shoulder with her free hand once she was facing him again. He swayed in place with her, they bodies moving back and forth together perfectly as if they had been dancing like this forever. Jack surprised her by spinning her out again, twisting her around until her back was against his chest. He dropped her hand and slowly glided his hands up her hips to her waist, his hands naked around her torso, wrapping his arms tight around her.

She could feel his breath against her ear, his hardness pressed against her backside as he once more swayed back and forth with her, his lips traveled down her throat to her shoulder, then back again not quite touching her skin, just a breath above, but it was enough to send goosebumps racing over her skin.
Jack set her out just a little and kissed the back of her throat as he released her and walked slowly around her, his back straight, his legs moving gracefully as he turned around to face her. He reached out, wrapping his arms around her and slowly brought both hands up her back, caressing her tenderly, his fingers spread as he once more gazed into her eyes. He dipped her hand, sliding one hand around, his other balancing her as his fingers stroked down her throat, his fingers tickling down over the tops of her breasts.

He lifted her back up smiling at her.

“I love you,” he said softly. “You are the most beautiful girl I’ve ever seen Harley.” He walked around, his fingertips just barely caressing her shoulders as he glided around her. “You are my world Harley. I would do anything for you.” He leaned close and whispered in her ear before he came back around to face her, wrapping his arms around her.

Harley reached out and stroked the fingers of one hand through his hair, the fingers of her other hand caressed his throat and shoulder. “I love you puddin. I love you more than anything in this world. You are my everything, Jack.”

Jack pulled her close, covering her mouth with his at the same time he dipped her back just slightly, his tongue sliding into her mouth. Harley reached up to grasp the back of his head sliding her tongue against his with a soft sound of pleasure. The world fell away leaving just the two of them.

*

The evening had grown chillier as Jack drove the bike through the late night streets of Gotham. Harley yawned, leaning her head against his back, a soft happy smile on her face as she watched Gotham’s buildings zip by. After a few minutes, she could tell they weren’t heading back to their park, their home, but looked to be heading toward the Bowery area.

“Puddin? Where are we going?” Harley lifted her head up and looked around, a little confused. She couldn’t see anything around here that would have drawn Jack’s attention until she remembered what was here in the Bowery. Crime Ally.

Jack turned his head just a little to make his voice heard. “I need to stop and pay a visit.”

Harley frowned slightly, but she didn’t say anything. She knew exactly where he was going. This would be the first time that Jack had taken her to the place where his parents died. She wasn’t sure if this was the anniversary or not. She knew Jack would never say and she wouldn’t ask.

She laid her head back down against his back and hugged him. Jack reached down and laid a hand over one of hers as he drove through the night.

*

When they arrived at Crime Alley, the place was dark. There were a couple of street lights that worked, one or two sputtering, struggling to stay alive while most of them were dark. The little light that was provided was weak and watery, as if even the streetlights had given up on this area. Harley could see trash along the street and piled along edges, down alleyways, and in doorways. The buildings looked not just old, but worn, as if the weight of the world, of despair, was bringing them down. The buildings looked as if they were sagging, the facades faded, years of posters stuck to their surfaces peeling and flaking away, like old whores with cracking makeup and sagging breasts still struggling to make it through a day, still working to shelter those who depended on them.

As Jack pulled the bike up along a cracked and broken sidewalk, Harley could see a couple of working girls huddled in the doorway of a condemned building, the weak streetlight making the two women look like phantoms. There were a couple of the homeless sleeping in doorways, or along the sides of buildings and the distant sounds of sirens followed by the barking of dogs. Other than those few unfortunate souls, there was no one else about except the two of them.

Jack slipped off the bike and turned to help Harley off, taking her hand and lacing his fingers with hers once she was standing beside him. He didn’t say anything, just began to walk. They walked up a short flight of stairs and into a wide alley. Jack continued to walk, took a right turn, followed by a left until they arrived at a spot just past a three way cross section of paths.

There was one weak light here from an ancient looking light post. Jack stood just outside the thin, weak circle of light and stared down at the alley’s cracked, wet, and dark asphalt. There was--of course--nothing there, no chalk outlines, no warning tape, no sign...nothing to indicate the tragedy that had happened here so many years ago to two young boys.

Jack’s voice was distant when he spoke. “Sometimes I still dream about it, that night.”

He let go of her hand and took a handful of steps forward before he dropped down to one knee and reached out his fingers, to lightly place them on the asphalt.

“I remember the color of the blood,” he said softly. “It was so red, so bright in the street light. I remember crying and Bruce...the sound their bodies made when they fell…”

Jack choked as he spoke. “That night changed everything Harley.”

Harley hurried over to him and dropped to her knees beside him putting an arm around his shoulders. “Oh puddin.”

Jack leaned against his wife. She put her arm around his shoulders and held him, though he didn’t make a sound, he didn’t cry; nothing. After a few seconds, Jack turned to look at her and she saw he was smiling. He opened his mouth to say something, at the same time reaching over to caress her jaw when they both heard the faint echo of footsteps. Whatever Jack was going to say to her was lost as they both stood up to see two shadows approaching them.

Harley felt Jack tense next to her, his hand moving slightly to his side where she knew he carried a knife, but he didn’t draw it yet, waiting as the two shadows stepped into the light.

Harley jerked in surprise swallowing a gasp when she saw Bruce and his ward, Dick Grayson. Bruce looked as he always did, a wall of impeccable taste in a dark blue Armani suit, over which he wore a simple black coat. The young man next to him, who had clearly grown even taller since the last time she saw him, wore simple black slacks, a blue dress shirt and a leather jacket over that, but he still mirrored Bruce’s aura of brooding self-righteousness.

Bruce stopped in his tracks and stared when he saw his brother, or the man who had been his brother. This was the first time that Bruce had seen him in the flesh since Jack’s return from the dead, seeing his transformation. Bruce was horrified by the changes in his brother’s physical appearance. It wasn’t just the bleached white skin or the green hair, but the missing brows and his eyes--something had definitely changed about his brother’s eyes. Seeing Jack...No, he thought to himself, Joker...this man was the Joker now. That was what he was calling himself. Bruce pressed his lips into a thin line as he thought that this person wasn’t Jack Wayne any longer. But seeing this man who had been his brother here, at the site of their parents’ death, even with his transformation made Bruce wonder how much of his brother was still in there.

Jack laughed. “Well, well, well, lookie who it is Harls? Bruce Wayne himself, or should I say...Batman?” Jack’s brow wrinkled as he continued to laugh softly.

Bruce didn’t bother to keep the snarl out of his voice. “What are you doing here?”

Jack chuckled at the other man’s anger. “What? Am I not allowed to mourn too? You think you were the only one hurt that night, Brucie?”

Bruce’s jaw flexed as he gritted his teeth, uncertain how to respond. Jack turned his attention to Dick. “Well, well, look at you! I think you are actually taller than the last time I saw you...when was that? Oh yes--I remember, the night my dear dear brother killed me.” Jack chuckled darkly. “Did it make you feel good brother, to watch me die at your hand?”

Dick stepped forward, but Bruce put a hand on his shoulder stopping the young man from going further. “You killed Haly you sonofabitch!” the young exclaimed.

Joker laughed, his voice pitching a fraction lower. “I did, didn’t I?” He tapped his finger against his chin. “Well, you do know accidents at the circus, happen quite frequently actually. I mean, look at what happened to your parents…” He grinned wider when he saw Dick jerk against Bruce’s hand. “I guess we’re all orphans here, ain’t we Brucie?”

Joker giggled.

Dick hissed and tried to break free of Bruce’s hold, but Bruce’s fingers dug into the boy’s shoulder and yanked him back. “Not now Dick; not here.”

Dick gave Bruce a furious look, but he didn’t try again to break free from Bruce’s hold on him.

“Oh yes, not here where our dear parents were murdered, turning my big brother into a flying Bat. You know Brucie dear, under all the stern expressions and batarangs, you are just a little boy in a playsuit crying for Mommy and Daddy. Ah, Brucie, it would be so damn funny if it wasn’t so pathetic.” Joker dropped his tone from light to something darker as he emphasized the word “pathetic.”

Joker slid his arm around Harley’s waist pulling her close. “Don’t you think it’s funny Harls?”

Harley leaned into Joker as she spoke. “Hilarious puddin. In my professional opinion, he has anger management issues, he is unloved, empty, looking to fill a void left by the loss of his parents. Mr. Wayne has a deep need for conflict, a compulsive need to control and fix things that don’t need fixin’ and obsessive narcissism. Oh, and he is jealous of his better looking, more intelligent, funnier, younger brother.” Harley grinned and stuck her tongue out at Bruce.

Bruce hissed. “Stay out of this Dr. Quinzel. This is between family.”

Joker hissed right back. “Harley is my family Bruice. She is my wife and my friend. She cares for me! More than you ever did, obviously, or ever could. If anyone should be staying out of family business it’s him, your little mini-me in progress there!” He pointed an accusing finger at Dick.

Dick took a step forward, but once more Bruce pulled him back.

Bruce sighed and tried to bring himself under control. “Jack please. It doesn’t have to be like this. I can get you help. Just turn yourself in to the police and let me help you. I’m sure you would be found unfit to stand trial, then I could get you the best help money can buy. I can find someone to fix your...” He paused as if he were unsure what to say before he continued in a quieter tone. “Your disfigurement.”
Joker snorted. “Oh, as if I haven’t heard that song and dance before…” Joker’s voice rose in pitch. “Just let me help you Jack. I love you Jack. I’ll be there for you Jack…I have no secrets from you Jack…I’m your brother, trust me.” Joker said the last few words with so much bitterness that Bruce could almost taste it on his tongue.

Bruce cringed slightly as Jack threw his words back at him.

Joker snarled. “I’m not disfigured Bruce, I’ve just shed my skin to be who I really am. A clown...someone who you laughed at all the time, but now i at least look the part. Why would I want that fixed Brucie? Hmm...oh yes, I forgot...gotta fit in!” Joker laughed. “Be part of the status quo…a carbon copy of the perfect Bruce Wayne!”

Bruce sighed and ran a hand over his hair. “Jack, I tried to help you. I did. But you were always so resistant.”

Joker snarled. “Of course I was! You weren’t trying to help me! You never cared about helping me! You just wanted me quiet, wanted me to conform, conform, conform--to be like you. You never cared who I was--who I really was--except the family embarrassment. Are you really that insane that you thought you were the only one who was in pain Brucie?” Joker snarled and stabbed a finger against the side of his head. “Your words, your actions Brucie, were like a cancer in my head, always trying to eat away at who I was, always trying to change me! You never cared to know the real me, who I really was! You never cared about my pain, what I was suffering! You only cared about yourself!”

Bruce narrowed his eyes when he spoke. “Keep your voice down Jack.” Bruce took an unintentional step forward. “You know Jack, under all that makeup, you’re in just as much pain as the day our parents were shot right in front of us. I know you are hurting...and despite everything you’ve done, I still want to save you.”

Dick looked up at Bruce in shock. “But…how could you want to save him? He’s a monster!”

Bruce shook his head, telling Dick without words to keep silent. The younger man glared at Bruce, but said nothing else, turning a hateful gaze on Jack and Harley instead.

Joker laughed. “Yes, I’m the monster!”

Joker tilted his head forward and down a fraction while staring at Bruce and his ward. His voice soft and sinister. “Oh yes, don’t listen to him Bruce, he’s too young to know what he’s talking about—or does he? Maybe I am a monster? Maybe you’re just as much a monster as I am Brucie. Hiding behind a mask and telling yourself that beating the shit out of people is justice. You think you’re some sort of saint under that mask you wear, but you really are a devil under that mask Bruce. A sinner...just like me.” He took another step closer to his brother. “You can’t save me Bruce. I’m a monument to your failure! You can try to save as many people as you want, but you couldn’t save... your own brother.” Joker laughed and pointed at Dick. “Remember that Dickie, when the cards are down, neither Batman nor Bruce are going to be there to save you. Just you watch; when you need him the most he is going to let you down, just like he let me down.”

Bruce released his hold on the young man’s shoulder and took another step forward so that they were only a few steps from each other. “I’m still your brother Jack, I still love you.” He put his hands out to the pale man and stopped. “I’m still here for you Jack. Let me help.”

Jack stared at his brother, then at his outstretched hands.

Harley frowned. She wasn’t sure what she should do. She didn’t trust Bruce. If he had truly wanted to help Jack then he would have never have let him go…but he did drop him, he dropped Jack into the acid knowing full well that the chances were he would die...a horrible death, yet he had let him go. Now here he stood, trying to convince Jack that he loved him and wanted to help him?

Joker didn’t move. He just stared at his brother. Harley sensed that Jack wanted to trust Bruce, wanted to take his hand, but she knew Bruce was lying. She reached up to take her husband’s face between her hands, turning Jack to look at her. “Don’t believe him puddin. He has never had you or our best interest at heart. You know that. He just wanted you out of the way, taken care of while he did...whatever he wanted. He lied to you, lied to you this whole time, keeping Batman from you.” She glared at Bruce. “Your miserable life is going to swallow you whole Bruce and you are going to be alone with nobody to blame but yourself.” She turned back to her husband. “You can’t trust him puddin. I know deep down you want to, but you can’t.”

Jack stared at her as if trying to process her words. Harley held his face, her thumbs gently stroked his cheeks, her eyes pleading with him. “Puddin, please--you can’t trust him, he’ll put us both back in Arkham...or try. He could try and kill us again...he can’t be trusted, but you can trust me.”

Bruce hissed. “Harleen, stay out of this. You are half the reason he is like this! I brought you in to help him and look where that got him!! You betrayed your profession to hurt my brother!”

Harley opened her mouth, her eyes wide in shock. Tears sprang to her eyes and flowed down her cheeks, her voice was a choked whisper. “I would never hurt him, I love him. I love him more than my own life.”

Bruce almost growled. “You have a funny way of showing it.”

Jack’s head had snapped around, breaking Harley’s hold on him. His eyes flashed dangerously as he glared at his brother, his voice low and venomous. “Don’t you talk to her like that.”

Bruce gestured at his brother. “But Jack it’s true. There was hope until I made the mistake of bringing her into our home. She twisted you more, played into your sickness instead of helping you. She used you to make herself feel more important. She tricked you into falling for her...I blame myself and I’m sorry, but...” Bruce stopped short when he found himself staring down the barrel of a gun. He took a step back; the gun was steady between both men as Joker giggled.

He moved slowly, his long legs and trim body made the moves graceful. Joker, kept the gun on Bruce as he walked around, forcing Bruce and Dick back.

Joker frowned at Bruce, his expression painfully sad Bruce noted. He could see traces of Jack mixed within the face of the Joker.

Joker’s voice was barely a whisper. “You never did understand me Bruce. Never. I admit, I have always been a little fragile, but really Bruce, you hurt me like no one could.” He smiled and his eyes flashed in the dim light, a chilling, mad glow to them. His voice changed slightly becoming a little higher, slightly sing song as he spoke. “Wouldn’t Mom and Pop just love this little reunion? Just look at the two of us, no longer brothers, no longer Bruce and Jack, but something more profound, perhaps even more enduring than brothers? We are now Batman and The Joker...it’s simply poetic don’t you think? We’ve become what we have always been, adversaries, polar opposites in all things and here, on the spot where it all began.” Joker’s voice dropped low. “The spot where both our lives changed forever brother.”

Joker sighed. “Ah, this is the stuff that makes a classic story or movie.” He waved the gun. “All right, you two move over to that wall, turn around and put your hands against it.”

Bruce frowned. “Jack, I thought…”

Joker’s voice trembled with barely contained rage. His arm shook, his eyes flashed with hatred. “Don’t call me that name anymore!!! It’s Joker to you and if you don’t do as I’m so politely asking, well, I just might have to damage your little sidekick there.” Joker gestured at Dick. “Clip his wings for you as it were.” Joker laughed. “Let’s see if you can save him or is he doomed to die at your hands too...brother?”

Dick gave Joker a deadly look, but after a silent exchange with Bruce, both men turned and put their hands up against the wall.

“Good. Now I’m sure we’ll be seeing each other again soon. Until then, sleep tight Bats!” Joker’s laughter was followed by the sound of running.

Bruce turned, but Jack and Harley had disappeared. He slumped against the wall defeated. He closed his eyes. He promised himself that he wasn’t going to give up on Jack.

He had to find a way to save him from himself...there had to be a way to save his little brother.

*

The drive home had been quiet. Jack remained utterly silent the entire time. His focus was on the road, pushing the bike to its top speed, driving as if he were running from something. Perhaps he was Harley thought, running not just from Bruce, but from the memory of his parents, of what might have been. There were so many twists and turns in his life that might have changed the current outcome of it, but none of those had happened. What had happened was that his parents were murdered in front of him, his brother had tried to destroy what happiness he found and finally...Bruce threw Jack away, to a certain death. Only it hadn’t been certain death. Jack had come back as The Joker and now Bruce--Batman--was going to pay for everything he had done to his brother, Harley thought with a satisfied smile. But she could still tell that Jack was hurting, despite his words, his actions--he hurt. Some small part still wanted Bruce’s love and approval no matter how much Jack defied it. Harley frowned wishing she could help him, wished she could make that small part of him that wanted Bruce’s love to vanish. Bruce didn’t deserve Jack she thought, didn’t deserve her husband’s love.

Harley frowned. She would have to be the one to find a way to destroy Bruce, to destroy Batman once and for all. Once Bruce was gone, really gone, Jack could heal. At least that was what she hoped, and they could take Gotham, fully take it over and save it like her puddin wanted.

She didn’t say a word and she didn’t expect Jack to either as he drove, so she simply held on, her head resting against his back, closing her eyes and hoping her presence gave him some comfort.

*
Jack pushed the door open to their home, having still not uttered a word since leaving Crime Alley. Harley stepped inside, quietly pulling the door closed behind her. She had just slipped her jacket off when Jack suddenly turned. He grabbed her wrist and immediately hauled her up the stairs. Harley made a small squeak of surprise as she stumbled on the stairs behind him struggling to keep her feet under her as he dragged her up the stairs without once looking behind him. Jack didn’t stop to wait for her to make the steps; he hauled her with him taking the steps two at a time, a man on a mission. He continued to drag her behind him, pulling on her wrist as he made his way up the stairs and into their bedroom.

Once they were past the threshold of the room, Jack turned and slammed the door shut. Jack spun her around and practically threw her up against the wood of the door, pressing his body up against hers. Her yelp of surprise was smothered in the next breath by his mouth crashing down on her lips in a bruising kiss. It wasn’t a gentle kiss, but rather one of desperation, born of a need for closeness. Harley knew exactly what was wrong. He felt abandoned, feared that maybe his brother was right. Doubt made him desperate to know that she really did love him, that she was here for him. Harley whimpered back in response, kissing him with just as much desperation, wanting him to know he wasn’t alone, that she did love him, more than life, more than she could tell him, that everything Bruce had said to him was a lie.

She started to grab a hold of him, to wrap her arms around him, but Jack grabbed her hands by the wrists and lifted her arms up, pinning them over her head. He continued to abuse her mouth, kissing her hard, desperately. Harley responded in kind, her mouth moving over his, her tongue sliding along Jack’s with just as much desperate need as his tongue. His grip on his wrists was almost painful. She could tell he was probably going to leave bruises, her fingers were tingling with numbness, but she didn’t fight his grip.

He held her tight for a few moments. She could feel a tremor in his body that very slowly began to ease, his kisses becoming more tender than hurting. Gradually, he eased his hold on her. His hands released her wrists and glided up to her hands. The blood immediately rushed back along with feeling in her fingers just as Jack’s fingers slowly laced with hers. Jack’s kisses became more gentle, tender, loving though the underlying desperation was still there; he could feel it in the way he held himself, as if he were struggling not to tremble. He dragged his teeth over her tongue, his lips moved from her mouth to her jaw down to her throat.

Harley moaned softly, her head back against the door, her eyes closed while Jack’s tongue traced the line of her throat. He released her hands, his fingers slowly dragging down her arms. He wrapped his arms around her tight, pulling her up against him, at the same time he bit her throat and sucked, tugging at the silky skin of her neck, making little noises of want, of desperation, soft moans followed by desperate growls. His mouth moved to her ear, his teeth catching her earlobe between the white straight rows, a low growl deep in his throat.

Harley responded by wrapping her arms tightly around him, begging him with her body for more. Jack lifted her up off her feet. He dragged his lips across her cheek back to her mouth where he kissed her once more with barely contained fever of need.

He turned and Harley brought her legs up, wrapping them around him as he carried her to the bed. Holding her with one arm wrapped around her waist, Jack slowly crawled onto the bed and laid her down, but once he had her on the bed his need intensified once more. He reached between them, grabbed the zipper of her dress and yanked it down, nearly tearing it. Once the dress was unzipped Jack grabbed the straps and yanked them off her shoulders.

Harley gasped. His fingernails dragged across her skin as he scooted down her body, taking the dress with him. He yanked the dress down her legs. Harley tried to help by lifting her legs, but Jack moved too quickly, ripping the dress the rest of the way off of her and threw it behind him. She heard it hit the door.

Harley made a small noise, now wearing only her bra, panties, fishnets and boots, but Jack ignored her for the moment. He crawled backwards off the bed; standing he lifted one of her legs and yanked at the laces of her boot, tearing it off of her and throwing it to the side where it thunked to the floor loudly. He followed that boot with the other.

Once her boots were off, Jack wrapped his fingers around the fishnets she wore and tore, ripping them off of her. The sound of the netting tearing filled the room. Her husband yanked her panties painfully down her legs followed by tearing off her bra.

Harley gasped as she was exposed to the sudden cool air of their room, but she didn’t move to grab a blanket; instead she brought her legs together and her arms up, pressed against her breasts to ward off the chill. Jack stared at her for a half second before he started to work at his own clothing. Harley watched Jack strip out of his clothing. He moved quickly, kicking off his shoes, yanking off his jacket, tearing the buttons of his shirt, stepping out of his pants and kicking things out of his way until he was naked. He crawled quickly back onto the bed and over her. He stopped, a hand on either side of her head, his body raised above her. He stared down at her, his eyes catching the ambient light from the window. The blue glowed eerily for a moment from under his lashes.

“Do you love me?” he asked softly speaking for the first time since they had left Crime Alley. The emotion in it was raw, the pain an open, bleeding wound. Harley realized that he feared that his brother was correct, that she didn’t love him, a dark whisper of doubt. She was going to kill Bruce Wayne if it was the last thing she ever did, kill him for hurting her lover, her friend, her husband that way.

She reached up slowly, almost afraid he would pull away from her. She cupped her hands against his snow white cheeks. “I do. I love you puddin, with all my heart. Only you, ‘til death do us part. I’m yours, always and forever,” she said gently her voice broke with emotion.

He reached up and stroked his hand over her head, gazing at her tenderly.

“I love you,” he whispered. “I loved you from the moment you walked through the door of Wayne Manor, Harley, from the moment I saw you, I knew that I needed you. I loved you.”

“Oh puddin…” Harley said quietly.

Jack kissed her hard again, pressing his body down against hers. Harley wrapped her legs and arms around him, holding him close and taking comfort in feeling his naked body against hers. One hand slid into his hair, her other hand pressing into his back. He made soft breathy noises, his lips gliding down over her chin, his teeth pressing into her flesh as he explored her exposed throat. He pressed his teeth into her flesh, biting down hard, though not enough to break the skin. She gasped arching her head back, dragging her nails up his back leaving bright red marks on his skin.

He reached up and stroked his hand over her head, gazing at her tenderly.

“Do you love me?” he asked softly speaking for the first time since they had left Crime Alley. The emotion in it was raw, the pain an open, bleeding wound. Harley realized that he feared that his brother was correct, that she didn’t love him, a dark whisper of doubt. She was going to kill Bruce Wayne if it was the last thing she ever did, kill him for hurting her lover, her friend, her husband that way.

She reached up slowly, almost afraid he would pull away from her. She cupped her hands against his snow white cheeks. “I do. I love you puddin, with all my heart. Only you, ‘til death do us part. I’m yours, always and forever,” she said gently her voice broke with emotion.

He reached up and stroked his hand over her head, gazing at her tenderly.

“I love you,” he whispered. “I loved you from the moment you walked through the door of Wayne Manor, Harley, from the moment I saw you, I knew that I needed you. I loved you.”

“Oh puddin…” Harley said quietly.

Jack kissed her hard again, pressing his body down against hers. Harley wrapped her legs and arms around him, holding him close and taking comfort in feeling his naked body against hers. One hand slid into his hair, her other hand pressing into his back. He made soft breathy noises, his lips gliding down over her chin, his teeth pressing into her flesh as he explored her exposed throat. He pressed his teeth into her flesh, biting down hard, though not enough to break the skin. She gasped arching her head back, dragging her nails up his back leaving bright red marks on his skin.

Jack rolled off her just enough that his hand could snake down and squeeze her breast, pinching her nipple hard enough that she cried out, a mix of pleasure and pain. He moved his mouth from her throat, leaving a red, bruising mark behind on her collar, once more biting into her skin as if he was torn between hurting her and pleasuring her. She hissed when his teeth pressed down, followed by his sucking on her flesh. At the same time his hand snaked down her torso, stroking along the flat plains of her stomach to her groin. His fingers slid between her folds, searching for her clitoris. His fingers were met with wet heat and he smiled against the top of her breast.
Harley gasped when he touched her, sliding his fingers up and down against her then in a slow agonizing circle, followed by his light pinching of her clitoris. Harley’s yelp was both from shock and pleasure.

Joker grinned and chuckled, his fingers diving into her at the same moment that his mouth found the nipples of her breast. His fingers were demanding, pressing deep into her at the same time he took a bite of her breast, his teeth pressing into her, sucking hard while three of his fingers thrust hard. He reached up with the arm he was leaning on, positioning his hand above her head. He grabbed one of her braided pigtails and wrapped it around his hand and forced her head back. One of Harley’s hands pressed into his back, the other grabbing a handful of the comforter, her body arching off the bed, her legs wide as his fingers thrust harder, his hand ramming up against her until she screamed out with an orgasm.

Joker grinned sliding his wet fingers out of her. He positioned himself on his knees over her, holding one of her legs up, positioning himself before he slid into her slowly. He groaned as her wet warmth enveloped him. He grabbed her other leg, his hands pressing into the softness of her thighs, holding them up and out so she was spread wide in front of him. Joker’s lids were lowered, the blue glowing from under dark lashes. His eyes moved to graze over each red, purpling bite he had left on her porcelain skin, each a brand of his ownership, his possession of her. He pressed his lips together as emotion welled up hot and fast in his chest. He didn’t own her, he thought, but rather she was simply part of him, he belonged to her just as much as she belonged to him. No one was going to take her from him, no one.

He held her legs wide and thrust into her slowly. His eyes moved from her face, down her body to watch as his shaft disappeared into her, slowly pressing in, followed by the slow pull back.

Harley licked her lips gazing back at him. She reached up and dragged her nails down his stomach, pressing hard enough that she left red marks on his ghost white skin.

Joker hissed, arching into the sweet, mild pain, his fingers pressing hard into her thighs. He thrust harder, breathing harder, watching her breasts bounce with each thrust into her.

Harley groaned loudly, caressing his stomach, tightening her muscles around him to hold him tight. She whimpered, arching her body toward him. “Harder puddin.” A smile spread across his face, his perfect teeth shining in the dim light against his red lips. He leaned into her, thrusting harder until Harley and the bed were rocking, the headboard slamming against the wall. She cried out arching as a wave of warmth rolled over her.

“Yes puddin!! Uh...yes...” Harley grabbed his hips, arching her back off the bed with the pleasure of her orgasm.

Jack released her legs and dropped down pressing his body against hers. He leaned on one elbow, his fingers stroking the top of her head at the same time he kissed her, a tender, deeply passionate kiss, his tongue sliding tenderly along hers while his thrusts became slower. He arched his hips upward, moving at a rate that allowed Harley to feel every inch of him.

Jack groaned, his eyes fluttering. “Harley...”

Harley wrapped her legs around the back of his, her hands caressed his shoulders then along his sides, nipping at his lips with her own.

Jack took his time to feel her lips, soft against his, to taste her tongue on his lips. He felt overwhelmed with his emotions, his love for her. He dropped to his elbows, his hand cradling her head as he kept up a rhythm, slow firm thrusts into her.
Harley wrapped herself around him, kissing his lips, his chin until she felt it once more, that warm tickle that built slowly, slowly rising, her body tensing in anticipation until the warm ripple burst like a wave on the shore, washing over her entire being. She cried out, arching into him, desperately wanting to share her orgasm with him, wanting her lover, her husband to feel how he made her feel.

Jack thrust a little harder, faster when he felt the wash of her orgasm over him, the warm liquid sweetness, until a tremor rolled through his body, beginning small then picking up speed until he suddenly released.

“Uhh...Harley...” Jack cried out and Harley caught his cry with her mouth.

They continued to move for a few more moments, riding their shared orgasms until they were both spent. Jack collapsed on top of Harley, but he wrapped her tight in his arms and buried his face against her shoulder.

His voice was muffled against her neck, a warm tickle of breath. “You were all I ever wanted Harley when I saw you that first day... All I’ve ever really wanted in my life was you.”

He kissed her ear. “I tried to change, to be someone else until the day you arrived. You showed me I didn’t have to be someone else, I could be me and still be loved. I know this is who I really am...I found my true self because of you Harls. You rescued me Harley...Because of you…”

He lifted up and looked down at her. “I love you.”

Harley smiled gently, tears at the corners of her eyes rolled down. “I love you puddin. You made me complete...I need you. You saved me too.”

Jack kissed her until all her thoughts were clouded except for the feel and taste of him.

* * *

They laid in bed, Harley with her head resting against his chest, his arm around her shoulders. His long pale fingers stroked slowly down her arm, idly tickling her skin. He spoke softly into the dark room. “I don’t want to do this every time Harley, every time I see him I don’t want him to hurt me anymore. To make me doubt...” His voice dropped. “To scare me. Did I tell you, Bruce always scared me when we were kids, even before our parents murder? He was always so fucking dark, brooding.”

Harley stroked her hand over his hairless chest. “Do you want to leave, to leave Gotham?”

He giggled and squeezed her close. “Never Harley, I never want to leave Gotham.”

Jack’s giggles turned into full laughs. “Oh no, I’ll simply have to think of something else to distance myself from Bruce...from the Bat. But I think I have a very fun idea.”

* * *

Bruce sighed doing his best not to look bored as he glanced out the large windows onto the Gotham evening skyline. The board of directors of Wayne Enterprises were having their annual October cocktail party, but this time with an added celebration since Wayne Enterprises closed on several deals at once in the last week, nice big profitable deals that would make the company billions more this next year. Wayne Enterprises had just become the proud owner of a private energy company here in Gotham that would offer Gothamites a choice of where to buy their electricity. They had also come into ownership of a small robotics company that had made advancements in AI research that Bruce found to be both exciting and interesting, as well as closing on the purchase of a new passenger train company that had the latest in transportation technology designed by one of the field’s top engineers in the design of bullet trains, Hideo Berger. Getting Hideo Berger had been a major plus. With three such big deals closing, Wayne Enterprises was looking to close the year on a very high note and thus, the cocktail party.

Dick was home, doing homework and waiting until Bruce returned so the two of them could head out on patrol. The young man was still seething after their encounter the other night with Bruce’s brother Jack. Bruce understood how the young man felt…what Jack had done…the Joker, what the Joker had done to Haly was horrible. But underneath that bleached skin and lipstick was Jack…Bruce’s brother and while the Joker was Batman’s enemy, Jack was still Bruce Wayne’s brother…he just wasn’t sure what he was going to do about either of them, Jack or the Joker.

The board of directors had gone all out for this party. A live band was playing some light jazz. Bruce glanced over where the woman playing the piano sat in front of the rest of the band. She was attractive with long black hair, smooth dark skin and great legs. He frowned slightly in thought. He might try and ask her out, Bruce thought to himself. Bruce’s attention moved away from the piano to the rest of the party. There was plenty of a champagne being carried around on trays by the hired wait staff, along with glasses of expensive wine…which he should know was expensive since he had provided it from his own wine cellar, the bottles having been imported from the vineyard he owned in France.

No expense had been spared on the food either. Trays floated around carried by servers, containing bite size portions of Beluga Caviar, light verrine with shrimp, baked brie cheese appetizers, and pate served with baguette crostini, just to name a few that Bruce recognized. As Bruce let his eyes wander over the party, he took note of everyone in attendance. He spotted Molly Mathis, a young woman who had skyrocketed to her position on the board and while she had money from a trust fund, she had proven herself to be a hard worker. She was speaking with Ferris Boyle and Lucius Fox; they seemed to be having an animated conversation. Bruce’s gaze wandered over to the other side of the room. There he saw Roland Daggett deep in conversation with William Earle and just little away from them he could see the Wayne Enterprises newest investors, Troy and Tiffany Randall. Bruce pursed his lips as a wry expression crossed his features, looking at them thinking to himself that Jack would have been thrilled to know the Randells had bought enough stock in the company to earn a place on the board.

As Bruce watched them, he saw Troy’s eyes wandering over a particularly lovely server and Tiffany, who had recently had another breast job and some more surgery on her face, making her look as if natural smiling was not impossible, smacking her husband in the shoulder and leaning in to hiss something. From the look on Troy’s face, Bruce speculated that whatever she had said had something to do with losing his manhood. Bruce smirked then, his attention shifting to the rest of the party. Bruce was dressed in one of his most expensive suits, a Tom Ford charcoal Windsor Base Sharkskin Three-Piece Suit and a pair of leather oxfords, handmade for him while in Italy. He had chosen this suit for tonight as an illustration of wealth, the carefree playboy with expensive taste.

He made his way around the room, grabbing a glass of champagne from one of the waitresses who walked by wearing a pair of tight black slacks and an equally tight shirt. She was blonde with a bright smile and very pretty. When Bruce had grabbed the champagne off her tray before she could walk pass, the young woman had given him a saucy wink and a bright smile, at the same time slipping a piece of paper into his breast pocket.

Bruce had raised an eyebrow in surprise at her, but he turned to watch her walk away, giving her a very obvious up and down examination that anyone watching could see before he slipped out the paper she had given him. Opening it with just his fingers on one hand Bruce looked down. The note read: “Call me,” with a number private before.
Bruce looked back up to see the young waitress watching him with a smile. Bruce winked at her in response and slipped the paper back into his breast pocket.

He turned around and stopped short in shock. Across the room Bruce saw someone he didn’t expect to see again. Selina smiled and held up her glass of champagne. Her hair was styled differently, curling under her ears, the black bangs were swept to the side across her forehead. She was wearing a long black evening dress with a slit up the side that came all the way to her waist. She smiled at him, giving him a wink. Bruce began to move across the room toward her when a crash sounded throughout the room.

All eyes turned toward the front of the room where two oversized large wooden doors had suddenly burst open.

Several men wearing clown masks and dressed in black rushed into the room all armed, a couple of them shooting their weapons into the ceiling, which was followed by a few startled screams as the intruders rushed around the room and began to push everyone back, forcing the guests to the edges.

Bruce hurried backwards along with everyone else. He couldn’t take any action, not yet with so many armed intruders. One of the bigger men shouted. “Everyone back, back against the wall!!”

There was a sound, like a child’s horn being blown and drawing everyone's attention back toward the double doors where a woman cartwheeled into the center of the doorway followed by the sound of tiny chiming bells. She came into the room doing several well executed backflips that were also accompanied by the sound of little chiming of bells. She flipped high and landed with her feet together, threw her arms into the air with a big smile on her snow white face. She was dressed in what Bruce could only think of as some sort of jester or harlequin outfit. Her clothing consisted of a tight fitting black and red top with card diamonds of the opposing color on each side. She wore a jester's collar, the long white ends of which held tiny dangling bells. Over this she wore a long sleeved black and red jacket with long tails that fell down to the back of her knees, the tails also ending in bells. Her long, femininely muscled legs were clad in skin tight black and red leggings that held a red and black diamond pattern, the sides of which had white stitches that ran up the side of her thighs all the way to her hips. The young woman also wore black and red gloves with white ruffles at the wrists; even her shoes Bruce noted, looked like some sort of boot which had bells on them too. Every movement she made chimed. She wore a black mask over her eyes and her white hair was done up in pigtails.

She grinned at everyone, her lips painted a matte black which made the white of her skin that much more noticeable as well as the white of her teeth as she smiled broadly.

Bruce starred, there was something about her that was familiar...

The clown grinned and threw her arms up in the air as she said to the crowd. “And now, for tonight’s entertainment I present to you, THE JOKER!”

She bowed and threw her arms out toward the doorway.

All eyes were riveted to the door as a tall, lean man came strolling in. He wore a tailored black suit, a blood red shirt with a matching pocket square, a dark purple tie and matching purple gloves. He held a walking cane, also dark purple with a gold handle, and a pair of dark purple and red oxfords. His green hair was slicked back and his lips were painted the same shade of red as his tie. “Good evening everyone!” Joker stopped and smiled.

“Now, where can I find Bruce Wayne?”
Before Joker moved further into the room, one of the masked clowns hurried forward and set a device down. The device was small, hexagon shaped, and silver. Then the clown pushed a button on the contraption. What followed was a low hum that rose in sound becoming so high pitched that everyone in the room (excepted the masked people, along with Joker and Harley) gasped and grabbed their ears. Just as suddenly as the sound had risen, it quickly faded away.

Joker grinned, seemingly pleased with the result before he walked further in, tapping his cane against the floor, coming up alongside Harley and put his arm around her waist. With a cheerful smile, he strolled over to the crowd of people. He grinned with delight when they all leaned back from him and Harley; the fear in their eyes made him chuckle. He tossed his cane to one of his masked clowns before he reached out and picked up a glass of a champagne from the tray of a trembling waitress. Joker smiled at the young woman, his eyes filled with humor before he turned and handed the glass to Harley. “There you go my sweet. I’m sure Bruce Wayne has the best champagne money can buy.”

Harley took the glass and Joker leaned close, placing a gentle kiss to the side of her mouth. Harley giggled and blushed with delight.

Joker grinned, picking up a glass for himself.

Joker made a show of tasting the champagne. He held the glass up with a smile. “Ah, now see this is exactly how champagne ought to be served, in a white wine glass instead of a flute. I’m sure all of you knew that of course.” Joker’s eyes roamed over his captive audience as he continued. “You want that so the drink will open. Now, you also want the glass wide like this so that when you put your nose in it to sniff the drink, you get the concentration of aromas. Oh, and remember, don’t move the contents too much, you want to capture the subtle scent of flowers.” Joker demonstrated, smiling as he sniffed the wine. “Ah, citrus, very floral.” He grinned at the audience. “Next you want to tilt the glass for the second sniff...or nose as it is called. Now doing this you’ll catch different aromas.” Joker tilted the glass taking another sniff of the liquid inside. “Ah, very nice. Now to study the color.” He held the wine glass up to the light. “The color can tell you a lot about the flavor, but nothing beats just taking a sip.” Joker took a sip of the champagne and grinned wider. “Ah, from Wayne’s personal cellars...if I'm correct this was made in that vineyard he owns in France. I believe it was a fairly recent purchase too.”

Harley sipped her drink with a soft smile watching Joker as he swallowed the champagne.

“Mmm...not surprising, only the best for a Wayne, am I right?” He looked over the group of people and frowned. “Quiet bunch aren’t you? No one has a comment?”

Everyone was silent.

Joker sighed.

He placed the glass down and stopped to inspect another tray that held hor d'oeuvres. The young man that held the tray was shaking so badly that the tray was shivering.

Joker smiled at him and picked up one of the hor d'oeuvres. He held it up, looking it over before he took a sniff. “Mm...Beluga Caviar. Wow, Wayne Enterprises must have really hit the jackpot on some business deal if Brucie is dishing out Beluga Caviar. Very posh I must say. Wanna try some Harley?”
Joker held the cracker with the tiny round, black eggs toward her.

Harley made a face. “You know I don’t like fish puddin, eew!”

Joker laughed. “I had almost forgotten sweets. I’m so sorry, forgive me?”

Harley giggled leaning in close. “Oh, you know I’ll forgive you anything puddin.’”

Joker leaned in to her, kissing her passionately, his tongue sliding into her mouth. Harley moaned, and her hands moved up to cup his face before sliding along his shoulders. She leaned into him, kissing him deeply while Joker negligently tossed the cracker into the crowd of people. All of them gasped and scrambled away as one to avoid the hor d’oeuvres as if it might explode on impact.

Joker wrapped his arms around Harley, lifting her off her feet as he continued kissing her. His hands ran down her back to her rear which he grabbed, spreading his gloved fingers wide and squeezing. Joker’s mouth moved from her lips to her chin, slowly following the curve of her throat. One hand moved up to cup the back of her head, his other hand moved to her waist to hold her more firmly as Harley leaned back. Joker ran his tongue along the front of her throat to the edge of her collar. He stopped, a low growl vibrating in his throat that only Harley could hear, but he sighed in frustration giving her chin one more peck before he stepped back and took her hand.

Joker returned his attention to the crowd. As his eyes wandered over the terrified people he frowned.

“You all seem nervous. Is it the bleached skin? The green hair? My lack of eyebrows? I’m a little sensitive about that.” He pointed to his brow with his free hand and nodded as if he understood their discomfort. “It was quite the adjustment for me, you might imagine, but let’s not focus on looks shall we? I mean…” Joker motioned to the crowd of hostages. “…you lot aren’t all members of the elite in terms of looks are you? I mean, money can buy you a new face, but can it really make you look better? Clearly, some of you are giving plastics a go, but really…” He shook his head. “Anyway, I’m not here to talk about looks. So, now, where was I?” He snapped his gloved fingers with a loud crack.

“Oh yes, Bruce Wayne. Come out, come out Brucie…where are you? I know you’re here.” Joker stood on his tip toes and looked over the top of everyone’s heads.

*

At the back of the crowd Bruce snarled silently. He had tried his phone, but it wasn’t working, no service. Nothing. He had noticed a few other people trying their phones as well with similar results. He had also hoped that maybe he could slip out and return as Batman, but Joker wasn’t going to give him that chance. He glanced around looking for some inspiration to help him when he saw Selina again. There were several people between them, but he had a relatively clear view of her. She motioned with her head toward Joker and Harley and mouthed at him.

“What the hell is that?”

Bruce mouthed back. “Explain later.”

That was when he heard the Joker’s gleeful laugh as the crowd around him parted, leaving him exposed.

“There you are! Bruce Wayne, Gotham’s number one billionaire playboy! The Golden Child, the head of Wayne Enterprise and man about town, head of the Wayne family and a handsome devil on top of all of it. Wow.” Joker grinned and shook his head in amazement.
Bruce turned to see Joker and Harley standing at the end of a path made for him by the crowd. Bruce looked around at everyone. All of them stared back at him in fear. No one wanted the Joker’s attention on them and they were willing to sacrifice Bruce if it meant that got them out of here alive. He supposed he couldn’t blame them. Not only was Joker a new unknown element, but none of these people were really Bruce Wayne’s friends. They were all business acquaintances. There were only two people here who…

No sooner had Bruce thought about his friends here than Lucius Fox stepped forward.

“I don’t know who you think you are and what you hope to accomplish here, but leave Bruce Wayne alone. Just tell us what you want.” Lucius was a tall man, brown skinned, his hair was cut close and he had a well trimmed beard and mustache. Lucius wore a simple dark brown suit, tailored, but it was clear the man didn’t have the kind of wealth that most of those in attendance had—or didn’t care to flaunt it.

Joker smiled. “Oh aren’t you adorable! Hey Candy, can you come over here dear and take Mr. Fox over to that end of the room please?”

Fox looked shocked that Joker knew his name as one of the clown masked criminals hurried over. He grabbed Fox by his upper arm, the barrel of his gun pressed against the man’s side and moved him over to the left side of the room.

Joker smiled. “Now, where were we...oh yes. Bruce!! You look good. It’s a pleasure to finally meet you.”

Bruce glared back at him. “What do you want?”

Joker glanced at Harley. “Hmm…what do I want pumpkin?”

Harley shrugged. “To make a statement puddin?”

Joker nodded with pursed lips. “Maybe, maybe…”

He kissed Harley on the cheek releasing her hand and walked slowly over to Bruce. “You know Bruce, you and I, we have so much in common. I used to be just like you...at war with my true nature.” Joker put his arm around Bruce’s shoulders. Bruce shrugged him off, but Joker simply put his arm around his shoulders again and held on firmly, his hand pressing painfully into Bruce’s shoulder making it almost impossible to dislodge him. Bruce was surprised. He had always known that his brother was stronger than his slender frame made him appear, but the grip with which Joker had a hold of him was surprising in its strength; Joker might even be stronger than him, Bruce realized with some discomfort.

Joker forced the billionaire to walk with him over to Harley. She had just danced back several steps doing a round off to a back flip. The soft sound of jingling bells sounded as she followed that with a full turn, a graceful leap and lastly, Harley did one more impressive leap forward, turning when she landed and sliding into the splits.

Joker laugh and hooted, applauding her, his arms coming around to press Bruce close as he clapped his hands.

Joker laughed with delight as he whispered conspiratorially to Bruce. “Can you imagine what she is like in bed?” Joker’s grin widened and he waggled his non-existent eyebrows. “Ooh, lala…” He giggled. He grinned at the frowning Bruce and continued to make his way over to Harley who now stood waiting, a bright smile on her masked face. Joker spoke loud enough that everyone could hear.
“You know Bruce, I think you and I are destined to be best friends. I understand what it's like to be fighting your true nature, to have a darkness inside you.” The smile that Joker gave him was more of a smirk, a smirk just for Bruce. “I know exactly what it’s like to fight that darkness, to fight who you truly are, to live two lives.” Joker’s smiled knowingly as he gazed sideways at Bruce. “You need to truly embrace that dark inner nature, that part of you that’s your true self. And you know what Brucie? I’m going to help you.”

Joker turned around when he came up to Harley, placing Bruce between them. Harley smiled at Bruce, a smile that didn’t quite reach her blue eyes.

Bruce hissed. “You may be right, but I know how to control mine.”

Joker tilted his head grinning at Bruce. “You do, do you? Really? I think you might want to rethink that answer, Brucie my friend.” Joker sighed and patted Bruce on the cheek. “Anyway Brucie, I’ve come to a realization. In order to help you really embrace who you really are...that dark...knight shall we say? I need to transform Gotham. I need to make her into something new and different. To make her into something that your true dark soul can really appreciate. Now, part of that is going to be getting rid of some of the old...baggage that the poor old city has. And I promise, I’ll help with that, but the other part is making Gotham into the dark paradise you need in order to be your true inner self Bruce Wayne. Let’s see how much, how far I’m going to have to take this before you reach the same point I’m at. So...for starters…”

Joker stepped away from Bruce, only for Harley to slip up next to Bruce and press the barrel of a gun against Bruce’s side. She leaned in close and whispered. “Don’t get any fancy ideas Brucie. You’re lucky puddin has plans for you or I would shoot you right now and happily watch you bleed out for what you’ve done to him.”

Bruce glared at her, but he didn’t move or say a word. The look in her clear, blue eyes told him that she would murder him happily.

Joker clapped his hands as he took long steps toward the cowering people. (Selina slipped around to the far side, trying to stay out of the way and out of sight.) Joker walked in front of the crowd, tapping his chin. “Now, let’s see...I think what I’m going to do is a little separation of the Wayne Enterprise upper crust from the rest of you poor unfortunate souls...so...let’s see.” Joker moved into the crowd, inspecting people before he would push them out of the way.

He stopped in front of a man who looked ready to wet himself. “Ah...you are...Ferris Boles…”

Ferris’s eyes widened. “How...how do you know my name?”

Joker grinned. “Let’s just say I’m psychic, shall we? Now…” Joker shoved Boles away from the group and toward a masked clown who moved the frightened man over to stand with Fox.

Joker made his way through the crowd pointing at people and calling them out by name: Molly Mathis, William Earle, Roland Daggett, to name a few, but when Joker came across Troy and Tiffany Randell he stopped short, his eyes going almost comically wide.

“And why on earth are you two fuckfaces here?” Joker took a step back, his hands against his lips as he asked in surprise.

Troy hissed. “We’re stockholders in Wayne Enterprises and we are both on the board of directors, you fucking freak!”

Tiffany hissed and grabbed a hold of Troy’s sleeve. She tugged him hard toward her, trying to pull her arrogant husband away from Joker who stared at Troy in amusement, a smirk dancing across his red lips.

Her voice was pitched high, threatening to turn hysterical. “Troy! Shut up!”

Troy turned and gave his wife a dirty look while at the same time pulling her hand off of him. “You shut up Tiffany! I know what I’m doing! You don’t let scum like this intimidate you! People like this are the bottom of the barrel! In real life they wouldn’t even be here talking to us, fucking clowns! Who dresses like a goddamn CLOWN! I’m sure that woman…” Now he pointed at Harley who had a hold of Bruce’s upper arm, the barrel of the gun next to his side. “Is just some streetwalking slut and this clown is some druggie with a habit who thinks he’s someone important!”

Joker snickered. “Oh my goodness. Aren’t you just a special toy?” Joker reached out and patted Troy on the chest. Troy yanked away and Joker snickered. “You know Troy, you’re a cunt, you’ve always been a cunt. You’re a cunt now and you’ll always be a cunt and your wife’s a cunt too. But besides being a cunt, you know what your biggest issue is?”

Troy glared at him.

Joker shook his head. “You’re an idiot.”

Joker reached down and opened his jacket. He reached into his inside pocket. Troy and Tiffany tensed but Joker pulled out a package of cigarettes and tapped one out. He held the package out to Troy.

“I don’t smoke cheap cigarettes,” Troy hissed.

Joker blinked and shook his head with a self-mocking grin. “Of course you don’t Troy old man. I’m so sorry I insulted you.”

Joker smiled as he pulled out his lighter and flipped it open, taking a moment to light the cigarette. The crowd held their breath watching him, waiting for something to happen to the man who so brazenly insulted the Joker, but he simply lit the cigarette and flipped the lighter closed, slipping it back into his pocket. Joker took a drag off the cigarette letting the smoke out through his nostrils as he smiled at Troy. Troy glared back at him while Tiffany looked equal parts angry with her husband and scared of Joker.

“You know Troy, since you are such a cunt, I have something I want to show you.” Joker smiled and pulled his jacket open once more.

Everyone tensed again and everyone around the trio moved back as Joker once more pulled something from his inside pocket, but he only pulled out an ink pen.

Joker held the pen up examining the pen as he took another drag off his cigarette. “Now this, this is something new I’ve been working on. I think it has real potential to be fun.”

(While this exchange was happening, Selina moved closer to the back of the crowd. She could still see Bruce, but she didn’t see anything she could do to help him. She had come here tonight thinking to reconnect with him, apologize and maybe...she didn’t know what ‘maybe’ was, but she was certainly hoping to find out. But this was not at all what she had hoped for…)

“This is a new and improved Joker product. One of several lines of products I’m working on.” Joker chuckled. “Who knows, maybe after tonight Wayne Enterprises might want to look into investing into my little device here. It will certainly put a smile on a lot of faces.” Joker grinned as he rolled the pen between his gloved fingers. “Now I know it looks like a simple ink pen, but it is far more than that!” He spun the pen between his fingers performing a series of finger-passes quickly and elegantly, alternating with a few spins around his thumb so quickly that it was almost hypnotizing. Joker smiled and continued to talk. “This little device holds a secret that will have your friends laughing and is guaranteed to put a smile on that face.” Joker spun the pen one more time before he twirled it with a flourish of his wrist and hit the button at the top; instantly a puff of green gas burst from the pen right into Troy’s face, then Tiffany’s as Joker brought the pen to her face and another puff of green gas burst from the pen.

The crowd of people let out a startled gasp; as one the entire group took a step back from Troy and Tiffany.

Joker smiled taking a step back from the Randells holding his cigarette to his lips between his fingers as he watched them. The couple began to cough which quickly turned into wheezing with a trace of laughter mixed in. Immediately following their loud struggling breaths, both Randells’ skin began to turn pale, not as white and bleached as Joker and Harley’s, but paler than their current spray tanned looks. Their lips brightened, the skin burning a strange shade of red visible even under Tiffany’s lipstick, mixing with the spittle that began to burst from their mouths with each laughing cough, laced with flecks of blood that was beginning to color their lips further. The couple’s breathing became more and more labored. It was clear that Troy and Tiffany couldn’t breathe.

Bruce yanked against Harley, but she kept a firm grip on him. “What did you do to them?!” Bruce snarled.

Joker laughed. “Just watch Brucie!” Joker laughed holding the cigarette between his lips and clapped his hands. “Look at that pumpkin! It worked better than I expected!”

Harley giggled. “Oh puddin! It’s fantastic! Don’t you think it’s fantastic Brucie?”

Bruce only glared at Joker, straining against Harley’s--also surprisingly strong--grip.

Joker chuckled. “Well, now that we know it works like a charm, I just might have to get these little pens on the market. Need a way to lighten up those boring, stuffy meetings? Why not try one of Joker’s pens?” Joker turned to grin at Bruce. “Whaddaya think Brucie? Wanna invest? Joker pens, sure to leave your friends laughing!”

Bruce snarled in response as Joker giggled. “Grumpy aren’t you? Geez Bruce, lighten up!” Joker turned to the crowd smiling, the smoke that floated softly around him created a strange halo in the dim party lights.

“Okay boys and girls, that was fun, BUT let’s finish up here. I plan on getting home early so I can do a little wink wink nudge nudge with the Missus.” Joker winked and made a nudging gesture with his elbow.

“All right, now let’s see.” He looked over the people he had divided from the main body of the party, all members of Wayne Enterprises board of directors Bruce noticed. Joker strolled back and forth in front of the board of directors his lips pursed, tapping his chin. “Mm...I feel like we are missing some people...let’s see...Where is Bob from accounting?”

Joker spun around to look back into the main body of the party. To his surprise the crowd parted to reveal a man in glasses wearing a nice, though not very expensive suit. Joker stopped pacing and looked genuinely surprised as he studied the bespectacled man. “Oh there is one? Wow. Where is Dick from legal?” Joker stood on his toes and looked around the room then giggled. “Oh what I’m I thinking, there’re all sorts of dicks in legal!”
Joker, Harley and all his clowns laughed while the hostages just stared.

Joker frowned. “You really are a tough crowd. Okay well…” He flicked the butt of his cigarette into the crowd–eliciting a startled yelp from a few hostages–and motioned at one of the clowns.

The clown hurried over to Joker. He was carrying not just the AK 47 in his hand, but he had another weapon slung over his shoulder. He lifted the weapon off and handed it to Joker who smiled as he held it. Bruce paled. The weapon was an FN P90.

Joker smiled and petted the weapon as he walked over to Bruce and Harley. “This thing is a real beauty, wouldn’t you agree Brucie?”

Bruce said nothing.

Joker laughed. “This weapon is fantastic. Now granted, Samuel L. Jackson’s character was speaking about an AK 47, but this little baby will do that same thing… “When you absolutely, positively have to kill every motherfucker in the room, accept no substitutes.””

Joker leaned close to Bruce, his voice dropped low so that only Bruce and Harley could hear him. “I wanted us to be brothers, to be friends, but you ruined it Bruce, like you ruin everything. But you know what? That’s okay because now I am going to do everything in my power to bring out the real you...the you behind the mask of Bruce Wayne…” He giggled. “Just like you did for me when you let me go...when you tried to kill me Bruce...when you let me die...or should I say…” He dropped his voice lower still, a hoarse whisper. “Batman.”

Bruce looked angry enough to spit which only made Joker laugh more. “Oh don’t worry, I won’t tell anyone here...no one is going to know but me and my family and we aren’t going to share that tasty little tidbit. Oh no...now where would be the fun in that?” Joker reached up with one hand and grabbed the back of Bruce’s neck forcing him closer until his forehead was resting against Joker’s. Harley kept her hold on Bruce, her gun still pressed hard against his side as she watched Joker, ready to defend him if she needed to, ready to kill Bruce Wayne at the drop of a hat.

Bruce stared into Joker’s eyes. He could see his brother in them, the hurt little boy crying for comfort that Bruce had never given him, now twisted with the man who was before him.

Joker whispered, his fingers kneading his brother’s neck. “Two threads in the same stitch Bruce, bound together, forever by blood.”

Joker continued to speak softly so that only he, Bruce and Harley could hear. “So now I’m going to be your enemy. I’m going to be your best enemy Bruce because no one knows how to press your buttons like I do. No one knows all your little secrets, knows all your faults like me, big brother.” For a moment Bruce saw his little brother smiling back at him. His little brother, small, weaker than him, terrified and asking to be saved. The brother he had failed on so many levels.

Jack smiled. “Be my best enemy Bruce...Batman, be my very best enemy.”

Jack kissed his brother on the lips, pressing hard, holding Bruce there for several seconds before he let him go with a grin and a wink.

When he spoke again, it was loud enough for everyone to hear. “Now Mr. Wayne, I’m going to be nice here and let you save one of these people right here.” Joker pointed to the group of board members he had separated from the rest of the party. “Just one. And you only have a minute to choose, time’s a wastin!”

Harley forced Bruce around the face the group of people that Joker had separated from the main group of party-goers. All were people Bruce knew, people he had dined with, talked to on both personal and business levels, people he knew had lives, families of their own.

Joker laughed and put one finger in the air which he waved back and forth like a clock.

Joker grinned at Bruce. “Dun Dun Dun Dun, Dun Dun Dun Dun...ta dum dum dum...ta ta ta dun…”

Bruce stared at Joker, then at the terrified members of the Wayne Enterprise board of directors. They weren’t all nice people, but they weren’t all bad people. None of them deserved to die, deserved what Joker had planned, but Bruce was helpless, so he called out the first name that came to mind as his gaze moved swiftly over the people in front of him.

“Lucius Fox!”

Joker grinned. “Lucius Fox it is! Come on down Lucius Fox!”

One of Joker’s clown masked men walked over and grabbed Fox from the group and shoved him back with the other party-goers.

Joker’s smile was wide, his perfect white teeth, red lips and blue eyes looked slightly manic as he hissed. “Well, there ya have it folks!”

Joker unloaded the weapon into the group of directors, taking careful shots to make sure that he killed every one of them. The other hostages screamed as they watched all of those people, every last member of the Wayne Enterprises board of directors shot down. The weapon was deafening in the room, drowning out the sounds of terrified screaming and death cries until the only sound was the sobbing and whimpering of the remaining people.

Joker laughed. “Oh well now, that was far more fun than I thought it would be.”

He leaned close and whispered so only Bruce heard him. “You have no idea how long I’ve been wanting to do that.”

Bruce snarled, his voice low and deadly. “I’m going to bring you to justice Joker.”

Joker giggled. “Oh Brucie...you love to hide behind that word don’t you? Think it will forgive all your sins...well guess what? It doesn’t.” Joker turned and hissed. “Just remember, I can get you anywhere, anytime Bruce...I know you like no one else.” The pale man’s lips curled into a derisive grin as he repeated, “Anywhere, anytime…”

He turned to the rest of the party of now sobbing and terrified people. “Aren’t you all glad you weren't them? I mean I know I am, because brother! The cost in bullets alone would have been staggering. Hehe…” He smiled. “Okay, well this has been fun. The food was great and the drinks were splendid, but as I said, I got things to do with the Missus that shouldn’t be done in front of an audience. Toodles!! Enjoy the rest of your party!” She pushed him toward the others, at the same time yanking the blade out. She felt it catch, scraping against bone, forcing her to pull with more effort. The knife came free and Bruce hit the floor with a pained grunt. Most of the people got out of the way, but Selina couldn’t, she rushed over and dropped to her knees beside him as Harley hurried along with the rest of the clowns for the elevator.

Joker grabbed Harley with a laugh, lifting her off her feet and into his arms.

Harley giggled with delight wrapping her arms and legs around him, both of them turning to wave.

“Bye bye!” Joker and Harley called out together...but they both saw Selina, recognizing her as the doors shut.

*

The gang quickly split up after leaving Wayne Tower, all of them disappearing into the night. Joker and Harley headed home as well. They rode on their motorcycle, weaving their way through Gotham, arriving back at the park just as it had begun to rain. They made it inside, wet, but before either of them became drenched.

Jack laughed with delight while facing Harley. “Well, that should make an interesting story on the news.”

Harley smiled untying his tie and dropping it to the floor. “Feel better?”

Jack smiled as he slipped out of his jacket, tossing it across a chair in the corner of their bedroom. “I do so love it when a plan comes together!”

Harley smiled as she worked at the buttons of his shirt, tugging the dress shirt out of his slacks to finish unbuttoning the rest of the buttons before she pulled the shirt over his shoulders.

“I think we deserve a little celebration puddin.” She smiled up at him before she leaned in and kissed the hollow of his throat. Jack closed his eyes enjoying the warm press of her lips while she dragged the shirt down his arms.

Jack reached around, finding the zipper of her jester’s collar, pulled it down and let the collar drop from around her throat. He reached for her shoulder, slowly pulling the back down, the soft sound of jingling bells followed. He smiled at her, reaching forward to gently tug the jacket down her shoulders, letting it fall to the floor.

“I do like celebrating with you,” he murmured. “My sweet harlequin.”

Harley gave him a sweet smile. “I love you puddin.”

Jack reached up and pulled the mask off her eyes. “My girl.” He ran his fingers gently over her hair and very gently tugged her hair down smiling as he watched it fall in thick white waves of snow. He ran his fingers through her hair smiling as he watched it fall like white silk through his fingers.

Harley closed her eyes enjoying the feel of his fingers through her hair. She smiled leaning toward him, her body and soul drawn to him as always. She dragged her fingers down his chest and along his stomach her smile becoming a smirk of pleasure when he twitched. She licked her lips when she reached the top of his slacks and eased the button through the hole, before she grasped the zipper, slowly tugging the zipper down. Her knuckles brushed against the cotton of his boxers feeling the heat of his constrained erection against the back of her fingers. She ran her fingers along his hips, sliding her fingers under the band of his boxers. His skin was smooth, warm, she could feel the places where the boxers had pressed into his skin, leaving impression marks that would fade soon. Her hands gilded along to his back and up along the curve of his spine, her fingertips bracing the bone. She tilted her head up and smiled into his eyes.

Jack stepped out of his shoes before he began to work her top off, sliding his hands under it and pushing up her body, gliding along the flow of her ribs and up, pushing the top up at the same time until he could pull it over her head and off her arms, tossing it away. He dragged his fingers along the top of her breasts, caressing the soft silk of her skin, tracing the upper curve of her each breast.

“Undressing you is like unwrapping my presents at Christmas, only better,” Jack murmured at the same time he reached around her and with quick deft fingers, Jack unlatched her bra. He smirked at the amused expression on her face as he reached up for the straps and slid them down her arms.

Harley shivered slightly; the room was cool, almost downright cold.

Jack dragged the back of his fingers between her breasts, his gaze taking in the hardneses and deep pink color of her nipples.

His voice was husky as Jack whispered. “Cold sweets?”

“Mm...yes puddin, but you’ll warm me up, won’t you?” Harley teased reaching up to run her fingertip over his lips, stopping briefly on his bottom lip. She caught her tongue between her teeth as she pressed down on his lower lip, pulling the lip down, smearing his lipstick before she continued to drag her finger down over his chin leaving a red mark on his white skin.

She smirked.

Jack purred softly. “I wanna watch you take the rest of your clothes off Harley.”

He took a step away from her. She watched hungrily as he pushed his pants and boxers down his long, lean legs, taking his socks off at the same time before simply stepped out of his clothing. Jack moved over to the bed and sat on the edge, leaning back on his hands. His erection was hard, and she realized, he looked to be throbbing to his heartbeat, awaiting her. She swallowed heavily, her eyes taking in the man she loved, his legs out in front of him, crossed at the ankles, leaning back on his hands, his body long and lean, his penis hard, hot, making her groin ache with a need so intense she wanted to throw him on the bed and ride him into the mattress.

Instead she leaned down and began to untie her boots.

Jack watched her. Like the song by the Police, every move that she made…

Oh can't you see
You belong to me
My poor heart aches
With every step you take…

Harley slipped out of her boots, grinning at her man as she turned around, hooked her thumbs in her leggings and pulled them and her panties down her legs before she slowly stepped out of the legs. She looked over her shoulder, tossing Jack a saucy wink.

Jack grinned in appreciation and let his gaze roam over her, taking in every curve. She turned around slowly weaving her hips back and forth. He smiled broadly in appreciation of his wife’s body, her agility, and her seduction of him.

Harley slowly walked toward him, grace and sensuality in every motion. She moved her hips and legs like a predator stalking her prey, the smile on her lips spread slowly, her eyes seductive, wanting.

Jack grinned as a shiver of anticipation traveled down his spine; his groin ached as he watched her.

She widened her legs over his crossed feet, and dropping her hands onto the mattress on either side of his narrow hips. She licked her lips, gazing at her husband. Her pale skin caught the dim light of the room. Jack thought she looked to be made of moonbeams, her bleached skin seemed to glow making her into an ethereal creature made of light. Her smile was sweet, soft. She slowly placed a kiss on his chin, followed by the hollow of his throat. She made her way down his chest, taking the time to kiss the middle of his chest, followed by pressing her lips to each nipple.

“Now spread your legs puddin,” Harley purred, her voice deep with desire.

Jack did as he was told, uncrossing his ankles with a grin. Harley slipped down between his legs, dropping to her knees. She gently wrapped one hand around him tilting her head forward very slowly, tenderly to nibble up the side of his erection, sliding her tongue against him at the same time.

Jack groaned deeply, closing his eyes and dropping his head back. A fire began to burn where her lips had touched him, a fire that felt as if it would consume him. The feel of her teeth, the brush of her lips and the slide of her tongue against his shaft pulled at him. Her attentions fed the burn in his groin, causing a quickening sensation that rolled over him, feeling the pleasure, but also pulling at the ache that had spread through his body. He didn’t just want to fuck her, he wanted to hold her, to feel her body pressed against his, to smell her, taste her, to be enveloped in Harley, in all of her. When he felt her roll her tongue slowly over him, exploring the head of his penis, her tongue finding every curve, every spot of sensation, Jack moaned loudly, his body being pulled toward her while a shiver ran up through his core. “Uuhh…Harley…”

Harley smiled when she felt that shiver through her lover. She loved to hear his moans, to feel his body quake because of her, knowing that not only was she making him feel good, but that he trusted her, loved her enough to let himself go with her, to enjoy her attentions, to let her know how much she pleased him.

Harley licked her lips and slowly lowered her mouth down on him until her nose brushed against his groin. She pressed her lips down on him, her tongue snaked back and forth along the underside of his erection before she began to pull her lips up, alternating with the gentle friction of her teeth. Her tongue continued to lather the underside of his penis while she slowly pulled and sucked.

Jack looked down at her, his mouth slightly open, watching her, feeling her, not just the warmth of her lips, the wet, slick feel of her tongue on him; all of that was combined with the brush of her silky soft hair against his thighs, the smile in her eyes when she glanced up at him. Jack thought briefly there was a good chance he would die like this, a sensual overload from his Harley Quinn’s attentions. The thought made him giggle.

Harley looked up when she heard the soft giggle from Jack. He was watching her intently, resting on his elbows, a few locks of his green hair had come loose and now framed his ghostly pale skin and his hypnotic blue eyes. She licked him, smiling.

Jack moaned. “Come to me Harley.”

She smiled kissing the tip of his penis before she stood slowly.

Jack smiled and scooted back further onto the bed and put his arms out. “Come here.”

Harley giggled and crawled on top of him until her face was over his. She smiled and brushed her nose against his. She lowered her hips down to rest on her knees, his erection warm against her stomach.

“You okay puddin?” she asked tenderly as she held herself up on her hands, her white hair falling down around them to create a curtain of deeper seclusion.

Jack reached up and dragged his fingertips down her sides to her hips, tickling her as he did so. She giggled and wiggled in response.

He wrapped his arms around her and tugged her down on top of him.

Harley dropped to her elbows smiling as she rubbed her nose gently with his, her breasts pressed against his chest, her stomach warm against his as he held her close to him snuggling her. He kissed her gently, tenderly, the kiss drawn out so that they both could enjoy the pleasure of their tongues entwined. After a few long seconds of kissing

Harley, he pulled back just enough to speak, but he didn’t say a word, he just looked up at her, his gaze soft. There were so many emotions behind his blue eyes that Harley reached out to tenderly stroked a thumb under his eye.

“Puddin?” Harley murmured looking into his eyes. “Puddin, are you sure you’re all right?”

“Yes my sweets. I’m fine.” He smiled and kissed the palm of her hand. “You’re my pumpkin--as long as you are always with me I’ll always be fine.”

He wrapped his arms tighter around her, his face buried against her throat. He squeezed and rocked her gently back and forth, his voice muffled.

“I love you so much pumpkin.” Jack voice caressed her skin.

Harley giggled rubbing her nose against his. “I love you too puddin.”

Jack grinned and turned, rolling Harley over onto her back and settled over her, between her legs. Harley squeaked in surprise which quickly turned into a laugh.

He growled softly, teasingly in the back of his throat when he felt the warm, damp heat of her sex against his erection. He didn’t enter her, though he wanted to desperately. Instead, he nibbled her chin. They both laughed as his nibbles made their way down the column of her throat, finding the soft sweet spot that made Harley shiver when his teeth or tongue tickled her skin. He licked and nibbled that area grinning when she laughed and squirmed.

“Ahh! Puddin!! Stop!! That tickles!!” Harley squealed and wiggled in a way that turned him on even more, making his groin throb with need. The way her legs moved against him, the press of her breasts against his chest, but her laugh made him feel like he was home.

Jack stifled her laugh with his mouth against hers, his smile pressed against her smile. He kissed her soft, slow and passionately, wanting to communicate just how much she meant to him with only a kiss.

Harley caressed his hair, feeling the thick green locks between her fingers. She dragged her feet along the back of his calves while her fingers caressed his cheeks, slowly gliding down along his shoulders until she could once more wrap her arms tight around him. He smiled and Harley traced the smile softly with her lips.

“Puddin, I love you so much,” she whispered. “I love you more than anything in this world.”

Harley giggled as he reached down between them, holding himself steady and stroked the head of his erection against her, warm and wet.

Harley moaned, spreading her legs wider inviting him inside her.
Jack rubbed back and forth a few more times, enjoying the tension in their bodies, that moment of need so tight, so hot, that ache was so exquisite that it was intoxicating. Part of him wanted to prolong the tension, the building excitement, but he wanted her badly, wanted her wrapped around him, holding him, tugging...his body thrusting into hers...he held off just a few more seconds, drawing out that moment...

Harley whimpered with need and just a little annoyance because Jack was fooling around, teasing instead of…

Jack plunged into his wife.

Harley gasped, the sound quickly turned into a groan loud and pitched high as the delicious feeling of him inside her, thrusting into her body, rolled over her.

Jack hissed, growling his pleasure as he buried himself into her; Harley’s warm wetness surrounded his shaft and sent shudders rolling through his body. He pushed himself up to his knees, tugging her hips upward with him. Harley smiled, panting and throwing her arms over her head as she gazed up at Jack. He thrust slowly, moving with a sensualness that Harley delighted in as he rolled his hips to slide into and almost out of her, his fingers pressed against her skin. His gaze raked across her body, enjoying the way her breasts moved, soft mounds of sensitive flesh that jiggled just slightly when he rose up on his knees and thrust into her. Jack licked his lips looking down, watching his shaft move in and out of her, glistening with her fluids, her juices covering him. He hissed with pleasure grinding his hips up, using his knees to give him more power, but still keeping the thrusts slow and controlled.

Harley squeezed and pressed her feet against the mattress so she could meet his thrusts with small ones of her own.

Jack reached down and gathered her up so he could kiss her, once more shifting his legs into a sitting position. Harley returned his kiss, at the same time wrapping her legs and arms around him, devouring his mouth, her groans and pants of pleasure muffled against his lips and tongue.

Jack thrust up at the same time that Harley met his thrusts by rolling her hips, pressing her body against him. Harley moaned, leaning back harder into the mattress. She held onto his shoulders and Jack dipped down to caress her breasts with his lips and tongue, pressing her hips down on him, wanting to be as deep into her as he could, to feel their bodies connecting.

Harley smiled at him as she lifted back up, cradling his head in her hands, kissing him tenderly, pouring herself into the kiss just as much as she poured herself into their love making.

She smiled leaning back again and Jack ran a hand between her breasts, marveling at the beauty of her while he thrust into her at the same time.

He lowered her onto her back again, his legs spread wide as he came up on his knees, his arms tight around her as he thrust harder, deeper, pressing her into the mattress.

Harley held on, her nails dragged across his snow white skin leaving bright red marks against the white plains of his back. Her legs were spread wide, her feet off the mattress. Jack grabbed one leg and pressed the limb back as he leaned heavily into her before he released her leg in favor of leaning more firmly on his hands above her. She brought her feet up and pressed her heels against his rear, rocking her body into him, holding him as close as she could, her breath ragged, building slowly, slowly until she felt the heat racing, pooling in her groin.

Jack bit into her shoulder, thrusting harder, just a little faster, his groans muffled against her skin.
Harley gasped as suddenly something broke; she was flooded with sensation, pleasure burst over her putting every nerve ending on alert.

She threw her head back and cried out as she came. “Uuh...puddin...Oh...I love you…”

Jack gasped, continuing to hold her tight against him as if he were afraid of losing her. He thrust just a little more frantically as he raced to his orgasm and he pressed his mouth to hers. Harley held on tight groaning as another orgasm rushed over her.

Jack’s hiss of pleasure dissolved into a deep moan, washing over him as he came hot and fast, his pleasure pulled from him at the same moment Harley’s body tightened around him, her third orgasm bubbling and exploding like bubbles, leaving tickles of sensation across her skin. Their cries of ecstasy mixed together, peaking and fading as they each struggled to catch their breath.

Jack held her tight against him, his face buried in her hair, his cheek against her throat.

Harley gently caressed his back, her fingertips moved gently up and down his spine, then over his shoulders, her legs still wrapped tightly around his waist.

They stayed that way as long as they could, their bodies a tight ball of slowly cooling passion.

Jack gradually pulled out of her, reluctant to leave the warmth of her body. He collapsed on the bed beside her, a goofy grin on his pale face.

Harley laid sprawled beside him for a few seconds, her own goofy grin on her face. Her body felt warm and liquid, her muscles so relaxed she wasn’t sure she could move if she wanted to.

Jack pulled her closer, wrapping an arm around her shoulders.

Harley snuggled up next to him, laid her head on his shoulder, with her arm slipping around his waist. They breathed deeply together, their breath finally easing into a normal rate.

Harley giggled. “That was fantastic.”

Jack grinned, giving her shoulders a squeeze. “That was a pretty decent reward.”

“Decent?” She smacked him lightly on the chest.

Jack chuckled. “Oh I see how it is, gonna beat me now? Hmm...see what I get for fucking your brains out.”

Harley snorted. “Fucking my...oh well if that was what you were going for, you are going to have to do better than that.”

Jack pushed up on one elbow and looked down at her with the most comical affronted expression that Harley began to giggle. “Oh puddin!”

“Don’t you ‘oh puddin’ me!” Jack laughed rolling on top of her and began to blow raspberries against the crook of her neck and shoulders. “Have to do better than that!! HA!” He wiggled down and blew another raspberry between her breasts.

Harley screamed and laughed struggling to buck him off, but Jack refused to move, continuing to blow raspberries against the side of her breasts.

Harley squealed. “Aahh!! Stop!!”
Jack, resting his chin between her breasts, giggled, his voice going deep and sounding for all the world like a carnival hawker. “Never!!! The clown prince of crime will now go for for round two pumpkin! The clown against the harlequin!!! You put out a challenge--well, the challenge has been accepted!! You shall have your brains fucked out tonight until you cannot walk in the morning if it is that last thing the Joker ever does!!”

Jack laughed and began to nibble on her breasts, alternating with tickles and raspberries.

Harley squealed and laughed with delight.

*

A week had gone by since the death of Wayne Enterprises’ board of directors.

The murders had been all over the news with varying reports on the Joker’s involvement. Bruce sat in his office; the floor where the murders had taken place had become an ongoing crime scene making everyone uncomfortable, which had forced Bruce to simply shut down the building, except for security and maintenance, until further notice. He sighed, closing his eyes as he sat behind his desk, a copy of the local paper rested open in front of him. He had been keeping up with the news reports on the story, but clearly eyewitness accounts were faulty, fear and shock making nearly every witness account unreliable as each person wove a story that was slightly different, but all had one thing in common--they were turning Joker into Gotham’s boogieman.

In addition to the murders, Wayne stock had taken an unhealthy plunge. Bruce was certain that the company would survive, but it would definitely be different now...

Bruce turned and stared out over the cityscape of Gotham City. The pale sunlight made everything look fresh and...normal. He sighed again wondering where Joker and Harley were out there, what were they planning next? And where was Selina? She had been gone when the police arrived...he shouldn’t have expected anything less he supposed. Perhaps she would contact him again later once things calmed down.

He could hope at least.

On top of everything else, Bruce Wayne and Lucius Fox were both under federal investigation since he and Lucius Fox were the only surviving members of the board. Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose. He wasn’t sure how much more he could take. His brother had gone down the rabbit hole and Bruce knew he was beyond bringing back, but something in him just couldn’t quite let go. He had to capture Joker, had to capture Jack and get him to Arkham...it was the only way that his brother could get help. Bruce rubbed both hands over his face thinking to himself...if only Jack had died that night at ACE Chemical...if only...

*

Later that night, in a small pool of light that was surrounded by pitch darkness, Joker sat in a large, purple velvet wing back chair. A simple round wooden table at his elbow held a package of cigarettes, a plastic ashtray and his newly acquired expensive lighter. There was also a crystal decanter of amber colored brandy with three crystal glasses beside it. A golden rust colored floor lamp sat just behind the table and chair, providing the only light in the room.

A thick, round carpet in shades of golden brown and honey yellow lay on the floor where the chair and table sat. Across from the chair where Joker sat, another purple wingback chair currently sat unoccupied.
Joker was dressed in a three piece black suit, the lapels of which were trimmed in dark red. Under the vest and jacket he wore a matching dark, blood red shirt with a tie that was several shades of red darker than the shirt he wore. The tie was threaded with black so that there was a pattern of crisscrossing lines in the tie that could only been seen with close scrutiny. The gloves Joker wore were a perfect match for the tie. The tie had a gold stick pin in it that caught the dim light in the room. Joker also wore a dark red rose in the lapel of his jacket, his lipstick and the rose perfectly matched in color.

His legs were crossed, the ankle of his right leg rested against the knee of his left, the slacks he wore riding up to reveal dark green paisley socks and a pair of red and bordeaux colored brogue shoes with a flower pattern on the captoe.

Joker himself couldn’t quite be seen as the moment as he held a newspaper in front of him, a lazy trail of smoke drifted above the top of the paper. He seemed engrossed in some articles he was reading.

He heard four sets of footsteps coming toward him on the concrete floor. Joker smiled folding the paper and laying it across the table next to him. He grinned when he saw Harley, dressed in a strapless red dress that ended just above her knees. The dress skirt puffed out with a layer of black tulle underneath. She wore black fishnets and a pair of black stilettos with ankle straps that had large bows on them. Her white hair, which still had the pink and blue dye in it, was pulled up in an elegant high ponytail. He grinned watching her walk across the concrete with Oswald Cobblepot beside her. Harley had her arm through Ossie’s, the two of them chatting as they walked into the room. Joker tensed for a moment, his eyes narrowing as jealousy raged white hot through him. He didn’t like Harley touching anyone or for anyone that wasn’t him to touch her. He took a drag on his cigarette letting the burn calm him. He trusted her like he trusted no one else, she was playing a part, his bubbly, airheaded girlfriend...

Oswald, who was clearly flirting with Harley, looked good, thought Joker. He could tell Cobblepot had put on a little weight recently, but he still looked good. Ossie was dressed in a tailored black suit, the jacket with green lapels, a purple vest and green paisley tie. He was leaning heavily on his cane, his limp more noticeable as he moved. Behind Penguin were his two female bodyguards, both women dressed in tight black leather. Joker smirked and wondered if Ossie had to rub both the ladies down with leather polish to keep them shiny. Joker chuckled to himself as he stood up waiting for Harley to escort Penguin closer.

Frost and Jason walked in behind Harley and Oswald looking casual. Joker could see they were both tense, though no one would have noticed but Joker.

Harley smiled beautifully as she stopped at the edge of the carpet. “Oswald, let me formally introduce you to the Joker.”

Joker put his cigarette out and stepped forward with his hand out. “Ah, at last we meet in person.”

Oswald took Joker’s hand, doing a good job of not looking uncomfortable as Joker stared at him with his browless eyes, the intense blue was almost hypnotic. “Ah, a pleasure. Your...lady, said you wanted to speak with me, that perhaps we might be able to benefit one another?” Cobblepot did this best to look confident, but Joker could tell the shorter man was uncomfortable.

Joker grinned. “Yes, yes, but first, have a seat. Can I offer you a drink?”

Joker turned and picked up the crystal decanter, wiggling it. “Brandy?”

Penguin sat in the other purple chair, his two guards moving to stand behind him. “That would be nice, thank you.”

Joker smiled pouring Oswald a drink and handing it to Harley who walked over and handed the drink to Cobblepot. “Thank you my dear.”

Harley grinned at him and walked back to Joker who took his seat having filled the other two glasses with the amber liquid.

Joker crossed his legs again and patted his lap. Harley stepped over, picking up the package of cigarettes and the lighter, taking her seat on Joker’s lap as Joker smiled.

“Now, for business. I believe you are unhappy with your current business arrangement? Are your balls caught in a mobster shaped fist Ossie?”

Cobblepot sipped the brandy, raising a brow in appreciation and taking another sip. He stopped to glare at Joker before he answered a little disturbed by this Joker’s familiarity with him. “Maybe, what are you offering?”

Joker grinned as Harley held the lighter to the cigarette in her mouth. She cupped her hands around the lighter as she lit the cigarette, taking a couple of puffs before she pulled the now lipstick stained cigarette from between her lips and placing it in Joker’s mouth. He grinned at her, taking a drag.

“Thank you pumpkin,” he said in a smooth voice, smoke slowly flowing from between his lips as he spoke before he turned his attention back to Cobblepot.

“You give me information on Falcone’s inner dealings and I will take care of Falcone. You get the fight club all to yourself, no partner.” Joker grinned, smoke flowing slowly from his nostrils like a dragon. Joker giggled. “Oh Pengie!! Chaos! I get chaos!”

Harley and Joker laughed together. Joker grinned. “Oh, come on now Ossie. I’m a man of simple taste. I like dynamite, gunpowder, gasoline, poisonous gases, explosions, and sexy women named Harley.”

Harley giggled.

Joker smiled taking a drag on his cigarette. “I just want to remove Falcone and you benefit, nothing more complicated than that...all I need from you is information.”

Joker leaned back, his arm sliding around Harley and her arm around Joker’s shoulders as he leaned on his elbow, the cigarette dangling behind his fingers. Joker lifted a hairless brow, smoke drifting around him and his girl.

Oswald got the impression that he was about to make a deal with the devil himself…

*

Professor Irving (he name Crane had chosen to live his new life under and also a little literary joke he found amusing) frowned as he turned from the chalkboard where he had been writing notes while he lectured, to look out at his class. He sighed, dusting off his red and black plaid suit glancing down at the wad of paper that lay on the floor at his feet.

Several of his college age students snickered behind their hands. Others had the good sense to look upset. One or two young ladies whom Crane knew had a sort of crush on him, looked disgusted. Crane picked up the paper and unfolded it to read the note on the inside that read: You’re a turd-like fascist brainless pencil-necked conceited smelly-assed bastard.
Crane sighed and tossed the note into the trash can next to his desk.

“If you are quite done,” he said to his students. The handful of young women who were enamoured with their professor made a point of drawing his attention to a particular set of students.

Crane followed the young women’s intense gaze and saw several male students, all snickering together, each one a member of Delta Sigma Alpha, but the main three, Eric Lydecker, Gunther Charles and Adam West were the head of the fraternity, the instigators, the class clowns and the all around pains in Crane’s side. Crane frowned at them, but said nothing; there was nothing he could do. These three young men were protected by the fact that their fathers were all wealthy men, who supported the university with large donations. Those three men were untouchable.

He turned back to the board when another paper hit his back. Crane narrowed his eyes, his jaw tensing, but this time he did not bend down to pick up the paper.

He smirked. Perhaps, it would be a good night to test his new formula.

*

It was Friday night and the Delta Sigma Alpha was having their annual Oktoberfest fraternity party. Everyone was supposed to come in costume. The fraternity house was decorated for the holiday season with pumpkins, ghosts, orange lights and anything else they could nail or tape to the house that was related to Halloween. The music was playing loudly; Russ “The Flute Song” was playing so loudly that the entire block could hear the rapper as more cars pulled up.

Adam, dressed as Julius Caesar and standing on a picnic table outside on the front lawn, was directing Eric, who was dressed as a cowboy, and Gunther was had decided to come as Batman, as they brought in the fourth keg.

“Come on you two, stop acting like a bunch of girls! Lift!!”

Eric yelled back. “You know Adam, you aren’t really Caesar, so shut the fuck up!”

Adam laughed. “Stopped being such a wuss. Hey Missy!! Love the outfit!”

A young woman in a very short toga danced by and winked at him. Adam laughed before he turned back to his friends. “Is that the last one?”

Gunther nodded. “Yeah, George and Ed are bringing some wine coolers and Maggie is making mixed drinks in the kitchen.”

Adam jumped down. “Anybody bring the bongs?”

Eric frowned. “I thought that was your job?”

That was when someone tapped Gunther on the shoulder. The young man turned and jumped a foot when he turned around a saw a tall slender man dressed like a scarecrow. The guy’s mask was the scariest shit he had ever seen, burlap with a stitched up mouth, the eyes behind the mask were wide and brown.

“Fuck man!! You’re lucky I didn’t deck you!” Gunther snarled.

Eric laughed. “You are such a fucking wimp Gunther. Hey, is that Joe?”

The scarecrow didn’t say a thing, but he held up a ten inch beaker bong and a bag of weed. Eric grinned. “Fuck yeah! That is what I’m talking about!”

He hurried over and took the bong and bag from the scarecrow and put his arm around the tall man’s shoulders. “Come on buddy, it’s time to party!”

*

The next morning a statement was released to the local news.

One of the morning news anchors, Linda Park, looked at the screen with a solemn expression as she reported.

“Two students, Adam West and Gunther Charles have died of unknown causes at a fraternity party at the Delta Sigma Alpha house. Another ten students have been hospitalized with extreme fear reactions that were accompanied by hallucinations. None of the students affected by what the police are thinking was a bad reaction to some tainted party drugs were coherent as of this report, but the Gotham City Police Commissioner James Gordon had released a statement in the hopes that someone with information would come forward.

“One student, Eric Lydecker, son of renowned ornithologist Armand Lydecker, claimed to have been given a message by a masked man calling himself the Scarecrow.

Lydecker was noted as saying--and I am told this is a direct quote:

“Harleen, You are my obsession
You are what I need, I desire.
There is something about you
Of which, I shall never tire.
I will find you again…”
Several nights later, Bane made his way toward the parking lot outside of the fight club with his mask stuffed in the pocket of his jacket and Viktoria on his arm. It had been a decent night; he hadn’t had to kill anyone in the ring, much to the disappointment of the crowd. Tonight didn’t lessen the weight on his shoulders, but it made him feel good when he didn’t have to take a life because some fool decided to get in the ring with him. Viktoria held his hand as they made their way to her car. Bane smiled. She was close enough that he could easily smell her perfume, a blend of orchids and something uniquely her, and it excited him. He sighed happily as they made their way to their car, a Honda Fit, nothing special, but it was a car they had purchased together--so to Bane, that made the little blue vehicle special.

He had never really thought he would fall in love, real love, like this, like what Joker and Harley had, but here he was, in love and thinking about asking Viktoria to marry him. He had a ring picked out and if she said yes, he wanted Joker to be his best man. He smirked to himself. He had a whole wedding planned out. Him, Bane, thinking about weddings. He pushed these thoughts aside for the moment and focused on getting to the car and home to their apartment.

Viktoria, wearing wide leg navy slacks and a loose white blouse under her long navy jacket, looked beautiful Bane mused. Her hair, as usual, was styled just so, simple yet lovely. When they had grown closer she had been so afraid to tell him the truth about her, but it hadn’t made the least little bit of difference to him, who or what she had been before he met her. All that mattered to Bane was right now and right now she was Viktoria October, his doctor and girlfriend.

She smiled, giving his hand a squeeze. “Joker offered to let me work in his lab--did I tell you that?”

Bane smiled. “No you didn’t. How do you feel about that?”

Viktoria frowned faintly in thought. “I think it might be a good idea. Working with him will get us out from under Falcone. And he is extremely smart, the few times we’ve discussed chemicals and my Titan formula, he has proposed some interesting ideas, some modifications. I haven’t seen his lab yet, so I’ll have to wait and make a decision then, but I find it an intriguing offer. And getting away from Falcone...” she let the sentence drop, but Bane knew exactly what she meant. It was what they both wanted.

Bane grinned. “In the meantime, what do you want to eat tonight? I’m starved!”

Viktoria laughed, leaning into Bane, her shoulder bumping his arm. He looked down at her and his heart skipped a beat. She was beautiful, smart, funny, everything he had ever looked for. He was still shocked that their relationship had changed from doctor and test subject to lovers. He grinned laughing lightly with her when suddenly Viktoria’s laughter died off. He frowned in confusion looking down at her, to see her staring ahead. He followed her gaze and saw a dark skinned man in a white suit leaning against their car smoking, the weak yellow streetlight haloed around him and the car, looking like a spotlight designed just to highlight him. The smoke drifted around him lazily as he watched them walk closer.

Bane growled low in his throat. “Stay behind me Vik.”

Viktoria moved behind Bane without a word as they walked closer to their car.

Bane stopped. “So what do you want?”
Tallyman smiled as he took a deep drag on his cigarette. When he spoke, the smoke drifted from between his lips. “I’m here because I think you know more about Mario Falcone’s disappearance and death than you have let on. Something just hasn’t set right with me.” Tallyman frowned tilting his head as he spoke to Bane. “You were at the club where he was taken. I saw what you did on the tapes and something about all of it just never seemed on the up and up. Mr. Falcone is blind, he thinks he has you over a barrel, and you make him a lot of money. Money can blind men to a lot of things, but a man like you--I know you probably have options, and I have this feeling…” Tallyman pushed himself away from the car and tapped himself in the middle of his chest with two fingers of his left hand at the same time flicking his cigarette into the darkness. “I have this feeling you know more than you’re saying…if you are being used, just tell me. But if you are indeed working against
Mr. Falcone, it’s better to just confess now and I will make sure that your death is quick.”

Bane narrowed his eyes. “I told you all I knew the first time we spoke. I can’t help what you believe.”

Tallyman shrugged. “Sure, sure,” the suited man admitted with a bob of his head. “I could be completely wrong, but I’ve been in this business long enough to trust my gut and my gut says you and this Joker have a connection. So, I’ll tell you what: you simply tell me what I need to know and I’ll say nothing to Falcone. You can just keep on earning your keep and your cute little doctor can keep you supplied with your drug until she figures out a way to give you more control. She can also help Falcone get the drug ready for street use, or, I can simply beat the information out of you, give you over to Falcone and let him finish the job in any fashion he sees fit. And if I understand him, that could be very painful--for you both.”

Bane felt his anger rising and snarled. “I ain’t answering any more of your questions you chalado-- now get out of my way. I’ve had a long night.”

Bane began to reach past the other toward the car door, but Tallyman grabbed his wrist. “This would go a lot easier if you would just give me honest answers to my questions.”

Bane tried to yank his arm back, but while Tallyman was much slimmer and was less muscular than Bane, he showed surprising strength, holding onto Bane’s wrist. Bane reached behind him and touched the place on his back that activated the device that supplied him with Titan. (He knew that it was a bad idea since he had been high on Titan all evening, quickly approaching his limit. He hadn’t allowed himself to overdo it, raging out of control on a severe Titan high, but at this moment, he was on the edge. He could go over and and lose control, or he could OD…each time he came close to overdosing, Bane had suffered chest pains. He didn’t want to find out what happened if he pushed himself beyond what he had previously experienced. If he upset the delicate balance he and Viktoria had been working toward…) At the same time that he activated his Titan regulator, he shoved Viktoria back from him as he suddenly grew in size. Tallyman narrowed his eyes, but Bane moved quickly yanking his arm up pulling Tallyman off his feet just before he slammed his fist into Tallyman’s chest. The impact was enough to break Tallyman’s grip on him and send the smaller man tumbling backwards, head over feet, but the man broke the fall, hopping to his feet with an amazing display of agility.

Bane snarled through clenched teeth, turning to face the smaller man. “Leave now and I won't tear your arms from your pitiful body!”

Tallyman smiled with a little roll of his shoulders. “All right, well I guess you want to do this the difficult way.”

Tallyman shrugged out of his jacket.

Bane hissed at Viktoria. “Get the car started.”
She nodded and without a word, she rushed around to the driver’s side of her car.

Tallyman rushed forward. Bane threw his fists with a quick one-two punch. Tallyman weaved extremely quickly before dropping onto his right hand and swung his legs up, kicking Bane across the face before he dropped back to his feet. Once Tallyman was on his feet, Bane’s hand snapped out, grabbing the smaller man by his shoulder and yanked the man closer. Once Bane had his opponent close enough, he switched his grip to the back of Tallyman’s head, forcing the man to bend, while at the same time holding him, preventing Tallyman from moving away from him. Bane brought his knee up to slam his knee cap hard into Tallyman’s side, followed by a quick thrust of his hip into Tallyman’s stomach. Bane was rewarded with a breathless sound of pain from the shorter man on impact.

Bane kept his grip on Tallyman, kneeling the other man once more, but Tallyman, his head caught in Bane’s grip kicked Bane in the ankles hard enough to throw the big man off balance. Tallyman twisted his head out of Bane’s grip and once more dropped to one hand and swung his legs up, kicking Bane across the face a second time. The big man stumbled back a couple of steps, then backed up a few more steps. Tallyman turned and swiftly did a quick series of somersaults coming in close to Bane before he threw a couple punches that Bane easily blocked.

Bane was impressed despite the situation; the man was moving far more swiftly than he had ever seen anyone move except maybe Harley Quinn, but that was all he had, each punch that Tallyman threw held only slightly above average strength and as pumped up as Bane was with Titan, he felt virtually nothing. But Bane knew he was only running on fumes, despite the drug. He had been fighting all evening, he was weakened and needed food and rest. It would only take one wrong move on his part to give Tallyman the edge the man needed to possibly win this fight. Bane cursed to himself. If this had happened at any other time during the day, he would have won easily, but right now, strung out on the drug from over use over the course of the day, tired and hungry, Tallyman had the advantage and would soon realize that. Bane either needed to end this quickly or run.

No sooner had Bane come to this conclusion than Tallyman surprised him. The man rushed Bane, slamming his shoulder hard into Bane’s diaphragm. The pain from the actual hit wasn’t that bad, but combined with Bane’s over use of the drug today, the strike sent a twist of pain through his chest and heart. Bane gasped, taking a step back, but at the same time he lashed out with a kick. Combined with the drug and Bane’s building rage gave the kick a great deal of power. The strike sent Tallyman flying backward, his hip clipping the car and his back slamming into the brick wall near the car.

Inside the car, Viktoria cried out in surprise as the entire vehicle rocked with the impact.

Tallyman, surprisingly, picked himself up and came rushing toward Bane again. The impact with the car and wall seemed to have done nothing to phase the man.

Bane cursed as he raced forward to try to grab the man. “Fuck!”

Tallyman dropped to one hand, twisted his hips to bring up both feet and slammed them into Bane’s stomach knocking the big man back several steps. Bane took the hit, kept moving and shifting to the side, leading Tallyman away from the car, trying to put some distance between him and Tallyman, but the man rolled, doing a sort of sideways somersault at lightning speed, hopping up in front of Bane. Bane threw a punch, but Tallyman dropped down to his right hand, throwing his legs up and hooked his legs around Bane’s arm, locking tight around the muscled limb. Tallyman then flipped himself backwards, taking Bane with him, both men crashing to the asphalt.

Bane gasped for air as the impact with the ground knocked the air from his lungs. Tallyman grabbed Bane’s fist which was trapped between his thighs and pulled back with all his strength struggling to break Bane’s wrist. Bane surprised the smaller man when, in a feat of agility Tallyman didn’t think the bigger man had, Bane brought his left leg up and kicked Tallyman in the side of the head hard enough to break the man’s hold on him. Both Bane and Tallyman rolled to their feet, taking several steps back from each other. Tallyman narrowed his eyes, blinked away the daze that his opponent’s strike had left him with, and took a step toward Bane when suddenly Viktoria--her car screeching as she slammed on the gas and sent the car barreling backwards--rammed into Tallyman. The impact dented the little car, but it also sent Tallyman flying through the air to crash onto the parking lot asphalt.

Viktoria had her window down and yelled on the verge of panic. “Bane!! Get in!! NOW!”

Bane didn’t hesitate, he raced over, yanked the door open and shoved himself into the car. It was difficult with his size nearly doubled as it was, his shoulders and head scraping across the metal of the car, burning as skin was ripped away as he forced himself inside. He had barely gotten himself into the seat, the door still hanging open when Viktoria spun the car around, her hands moving quickly as she spun the steering wheel and hit the gas, once more sending the small vehicle hurtling forward and out of the parking lot.

Tallyman stepped out of the shadows panting as he watched the car disappear into the night. He narrowed his eyes in frustration.

*

Warm, dim yellow lights chased back the darkness under the non-functioning roller coaster. Jack walked slowly around the bright green croquet ball which was right next to Harley’s red ball, chewing on his bottom lip in concentration, his mallet on his shoulder as he studied the ball. His blue eyes drifted from his ball to Harley’s ball and the wickets, his browless eyes narrowed slightly. He was still wearing his bright blue and black checked slacks, purple and green striped socks, suspenders and dress shirt. His tie, vest, dress shoes and jacket lay in a pile next to another pile with Harley’s shoes, her leggings, her panties, hair ties and her jacket. She still had on her skirt, top and bra, but she wasn’t doing well at strip croquet. Jack wasn’t just winning, he was dominating and she was pretty sure the only reason she had managed to win his jacket, tie, vest and shoes was because he let her.

Jerk, she thought with an affectionate smile.

Harley wasn’t sure how yet, but she knew was going to be forced to resort to cheating in order to win.

Jack walked slowly around then stopped in front of the brightly colored green ball, placing his foot on his ball. Harley knew exactly what was going to happen.

Jack grinned at her and winked. He was definitely being obnoxious she thought, and then he hit his ball with the mallet. The smart smack of the mallet struck his stationary ball and set Harley’s ball flying across the croquet field they had set up, rolling to the edge of the gaming field and stopping at an odd angle to the wicket, thus making it difficult when her turn came up to hit her ball through the wicket.

Harley muttered, “Damn it.”

Jack laughed. “Mm...I think that deserves your top Miss Quinn.”

Harley stuck her tongue out at him as she pulled off the red t-shirt she had been wearing and tossed it to him. “I think you’re cheating on the scoring puddin.”
Jack laughed catching the shirt out of the air. “Don’t be such a sore loser sweets!”

Harley gave him the finger as she stomped over to her ball, leaving Jack laughing at her. She had to search for a couple of seconds, her ball having rolled past the circle of light instead of staying in its position by the wicket. She had to bend over and look with squinted eyes until she saw it, under a scraggly looking bush. She nudged the ball out just a little with her toe, glancing over at Jack.

Jack had pulled his phone out, resting his mallet against his leg and was checking something; his attention seemed to be squarely on the phone. Harley smiled, a sneaky glint in her eyes as she reached down and rolled her ball with just enough force to get it back onto their little field and through one of the wickets.

Jack looked up as Harley giggled and walked back into the light, her mallet on her shoulder, her hips swinging in a manner that Jack found distracting and tremendously sexy. The tightness that had been in his groin since he had watched her shimmy out of her panties early now intensified. He was entranced, gazing at her while she walked over to her ball, her long white hair flowing down her back like a cascade of snow ending in snowcone colors of pink and blue, wearing just the little flouncy skirt she had on, the black lace bra and nothing else. The light danced along the porcelain perfection of her skin, her long lean muscled legs, her cute bare feet, the slope of her breasts cupped by the black lace, hints of white skin showing through the lace in a tantalizing way that had his lips tingling with the thought of brushing his lips across her breasts…

But her little trick hadn’t gone unnoticed.

Jack chuckled and tilted his chin down as he looked at her from under his hairless brow. “You cheated.”

Harley turned to glare at him, her hip cocked to the side, one hand resting on the cocked hip, her mallet still on her shoulder.

“No I didn’t,” Harley maintained with a smile.

Jack tossed his phone casually onto the pile of his clothes as he walked closer, leaving his mallet behind as well. “Oh, and fibbing too? I think some cute little minx is asking to be punished.” Jack’s grin was slow and seductive on his lips. Harley felt a little shiver of delight rush down her spine. She didn’t move as he stepped closer, doing her best not to smile at him when he stopped in front of her. His brilliant blue eyes made her insides turn to butterflies and her heart hammered inside her chest. He was so handsome that sometimes it hurt to look at him, his milk white skin, the lock of green hair that fell loose, begging for her to brush it back, the red of his lips, his smile. He was different now than when they had met, but he was no less fascinating, no less handsome. She wanted nothing more than to push him down and have her way with him, but she enjoyed playing games just as much as Jack did, so she didn’t move, giving him a cocky grin instead.

“Hmm...so what shall the punishment for lying and cheating at the old, sacred game of croquet be?” Jack crossed his arms over his chest and tapped a finger on his chin.

Harley giggled and whispered. “You can’t prove I cheated.”

Jack purred in response. “I don’t need to prove it. In a minute, you my sweets, will admit everything to me.”

He stepped closer, the tip of his nose touching hers, his blue eyes boring into hers, but he hadn’t touched her yet and her body was responding, heat pooling in her groin, her nipples tightening, wanting to be touched by him. She pressed her lips together against the warm brush of his breath, struggling a little to keep her aloof cockiness in her expression.

Harley dropped her mallet to the grass, her eyes on his, her smile teasing as she whispered. “How are you going to make me do that?”

Jack purred, his voice quiet, warm, seductive. “Like this.”

Jack grabbed her sides, pulling her closer before his fingers began to tickle her.

Harley squealed. “No!”

She tried to pull away, but Jack hooked his leg behind one of hers, tripping her and forcing her backwards. Harley squealed again, but Jack cradled the back of her head, turning the fall into a guide as he forced her down to the ground carefully setting her head down to the grass as he gracefully lowered them both down. Once she was down safely, he straddled her, sitting on her hips and began to tickle her without mercy. Jack lightly caressed behind her ears, along her neck and not quite under her arms. He leaned down at the same time and licked her ear, using the tip of his tongue to tickle her ear lobe with light flicks.

Harley squealed and giggled as she wiggled underneath him, both trying to protect herself from his tickling fingers by squeezing her arms together while at the same time trying to catch his hands. “NO!! This isn’t fair!!”

Jack laughed, continuing to find ticklish spots while Harley, holding onto his hips, tried to buck him off. “No one said anything about fair sweets!”

Harley laughed and squealed. She tried to push up and wiggle out from under him, but Jack tightened his legs around her, keeping her in place.

Jack tickled her sides. “Oh no you don’t missy!! You take your punishment!”

Harley threw her head back laughing so hard, her heels kicking against the grass, that her eyes were beginning to water as she gave up and simply wiggled and jerked back and forth trying to stop him tickling her, but unable to do anything but laugh.

“You’re evil!!” She cried out while laughing hard.

Jack grinned and laughed as well. “Yes I am! Now admit you cheated!”

Harley giggled. “Never!”

Jack laughed, leaning in to blow against her neck followed by a whispered. “Admit it.”

Harley giggled, kicking her legs. “Nooooo!”

Jack nibbled on her neck, his tongue flicked along her ear, his tickling fingers slowed to soft caresses. “Admit it.”

Harley purred. “Nope.”

Jack responded by catching the lobe of her ear with his teeth, tugging lightly which made her giggle. Now that he had started to tickle her, she was ticklish all over!

“I guess I’ll have to make you submit another way.” He brought his hands up from her sides and grabbed the cups of her bra, yanking the lace down over her breasts exposing her nipples to the slightly chilly evening air. Harley made a soft gasp when the air hit her, but that coolness was quickly replaced by Jack’s mouth, his lips and tongue warm as he covered one of her nipples and sucked deeply.

Jack slid down her body, pushing her legs open so he could nestle between them. He switched breasts, sucking deeply on her other nipple while he reached between them, grabbing her skirt and pulling it up, his hand sliding under her stroke her hip and thigh.

Harley widened her legs, bending her legs to rest her feet on the grass, her hands sliding down over his back, grabbing at his shirt and pulling, tugging at the cloth. Jack released her breast shifting his body up slightly so he could kiss her. Their kisses were passionate, hot, the feel of his lips on hers, his tongue in her mouth sent heat racing through Harley’s body, the chill of the outside air forgotten as the heat of his tongue and his body warmed her. She pulled desperately at his shirt, needing to feel his skin against hers.

Jack sat up on his knees between her legs and his eyes grazed over her. Licking his lips as he looked down at her, spread and waiting for him while he pulled his dress shirt over his head, he tossed it aside before dropping back down to kiss her. His body rocked naturally against hers, though his slacks were still in the way.

Harley moaned softly, her hands tracing the muscles that moved under the ghost pale skin of his arms, her fingers caressing and tracing the line of his sides, the curve of his back. He ground his pelvis against her, the material of his slacks sliding against her sex, making her body ache. She kissed him hard, reaching up to run her fingers through his hair.

Jack’s breathing became ragged with need, his mouth and tongue traced a wet trail down her throat and between her breasts. He moved further, sliding himself down her torso, his lips skating over her porcelain skin, his tongue lapping at the soft planes of her stomach, moving lower. He shoved her skirt out of his way to nip at her belly before dipping down between her legs where he planted a soft, gentle kiss. He sat back for a moment, glancing up to smile at her before he grabbed her leg, setting her heel on his shoulder while he bit and kissed her calf, slowly making his way down to the soft creamy skin of her inner thigh. He slowly rubbed his lips along the sensitive skin, his tongue following in tender licks that ended in gentle, sucking kisses. He moved down further until he came to her sex. He rested her legs over his shoulder and opened his mouth wide.

He kissed her, his tongue snaking slowly over her clitoris and parting her inner lips as he delved deeply, using his tongue to cover as much of her as he could. He wrapped his lips around her sex and sucked tenderly pulling at her with his tongue and lips.

Harley gasped, her fingers sliding into his hair, her body arching with his attentions. His mouth and tongue felt so good against her, the heat of his breath and the gentle sucking a delight.

Jack slid his hands under her rear and lifted her up just a little, opening his mouth wide over her once more, his tongue moving in a slow back and forth motion. Harley gasped and arched her hips, her foot pressing down on his back as the building pressure climbed. Her clitoris felt swollen against his tongue, her breath came faster and faster until she threw her head back with a loud wail of pleasure as she climaxed and her fingers dug into his hair, pulling.

Jack smiled and chuckled, enjoying not just her orgasm, but the sensation of her pulling his hair. He continued to kiss her for a few more moments, alternating with tender sucks on her followed by long, deep licks before he lowered her leg and crawled up her body, grinning like a cat, his smile shimmered with liquid.

Harley giggled reaching for him. She slid her hands along his shoulders then down his back, pushing his slacks and boxers down, her fingers caressing his rear, squeezing as he reached down and struggled to get out of his pants while at the same time trying to never break contact with her mouth.

She moaned softly when she felt him; his erection was hot, pressed against her, caressing her thigh, the skin warm, satin soft. His shaft teased her opening when she suddenly placed her hands on his shoulders and shoved Jack over.

Jack made a soft sound of surprise, but he rolled without resistance onto his back.

Harley quickly straddled him, holding her short skirt up with one hand while reaching down between them with the other to hold his erection until she could cleave herself on him. Together they gasped as their bodies joined together.

Harley dropped her skirt at the same time that she dropped down to kiss him, her hands on either side of his head, her body rocking back and forth, sliding herself up and down his length. She kissed him with every ounce of passion and love she felt for him as her hair dropped around them, shielding them like a soft curtain of winter, trapping them in a gentle fall of snow.

Jack grinned at her, reaching up to gently caress her face, his smooth fingers traced her cheeks, caressed her jaw and then sweetly, his fingertips caressed her lips.

“My sweet pumpkin,” Jack whispered as his finger traced her bottom lip before gliding down to her chin. “My sweet, sweet girl. You saved me Harley...you saved me from the darkness, the loneliness.” He purred which turned into a groan of pleasure when she moved, pressing down on him, tightening around him, her legs squeezing against his sides. “You are all I ever wanted, Harley.”

“My puddin,” Harley murmured then moaned, biting her bottom lip before she smiled down at him. She rocked back and forth slowly, taking her time to not only feel him inside her, but to enjoy the expression of abandon on Jack’s face. She pushed up, pressing her hands down on his stomach and began to move with more urgency, rocking and thrusting against him, her fingers pressing into his stomach before sliding up to his chest. She arched her back, squeezing him before she reached back behind her to grab his knees continuing to thrust and rock against him.

Jack hissed with pleasure and a warm intensity swept over him. She looked glorious in the pale light that danced over her snow white skin, and her hair brushed tantalizingly against his thighs as she leaned back. He reached up to cup her breasts, brushing his thumbs over her nipples. Her entire body moved in a graceful undulating motion that was driving him crazy, watching the way she slid up and down. Jack hissed again, his hands sliding down her smooth torso, enjoying the soft delicate lines of her body before he grabbed her hips, squeezing. His pale fingers pressing into her soft flesh, holding her down on him while she ground her pelvis against him.

Jack moaned, arching his back. The pleasure was so intense he wasn’t sure how long he could last. At the same time he watched the way her body slid up his erection, the grace of her movements, the light dancing across her skin. She was his: his girl, his lover, the only one in all the world he could trust, love, give himself over to completely, only Harley, only her.

He slid one hand down over her stomach, his fingers dragged along her smooth skin moving lower until his thumb slid over her clitoris. Jack began to rub his thumb over her in slow and agonizing circles. At the same time he thrust his hips upward, continuing to roll his thumb over her.

Harley moaned, thrusting harder, faster. She pushed herself up and dropped down again covering his mouth with hers, panting faster and harder, climbing the mountain of her building releasing, her body rolling in waves over her puddin until she suddenly gasped, her back arching, muscles tightening, her mouth crushed against him, her cry of orgasmic pleasure trapped between their lips.
Jack wrapped his arms around her and pulled her down as he thrust his hips up to meet her, grunting when she came, feeling that warm flood of her orgasm over him, coating him, his shaft slipping in and out of her until his mind seemed to go white, a blank that was quickly filled with overwhelming pleasure as his body released, the bubble of building delightful tension broke like a dam and he was flooded with feeling as he flooded his wife.

Jack groaned heavily against her mouth. Harley wrapped her arms around his head, her fingers tangled in his green hair, her kisses both smothering and full of passionate love for him. Jack held onto her like his life and his soul depended on her.

* *

They were lying on top of a pile of their clothing, still naked, but the chilly air didn’t bother them as Harley laid on her side, Jack curled against her back. He traced his fingers down her arm smiling softly to himself as he caressed her pale skin.

Harley smiled, content when Jack whispered against her ear. “You still didn’t admit to cheating.”

Harley didn’t open her eyes as she giggled. “Oh, I never will.”

Jack was about to turn her onto her back, thinking that she needed to be tortured again when they both heard the sound of the front gate being opened.

Jack was on his feet before Harley had fully processed what had happened.

“Jack?” She looked up pushing herself up to a sitting position.

Jack reached down, grabbing his clothing. “Get dressed sweets--something’s wrong.”

* *

Half an hour later Bane and Viktoria were sitting on the couch in Jack and Harley’s living room, each holding a steaming cup of hot chocolate piled high with whipped cream. Bane had a few bandages on him for a couple of minor cuts and scrapes, a first aid kit lay open on the living room table. He was back to normal size, looking tired and a little strung out. Viktoria sat next to him looking pale. Her usually calm exterior looked cracked. Harley noticed that there was a slight tremble in her hands.

Jack sat in one of the chairs facing Bane and Viktoria, his elbows on his knees, the tips of his fingers mirrored, touching to tips. There was a steaming cup of coco next to him on a small table that he hadn’t touched yet. Harley came back from the kitchen and took a seat on the footstool next to Jack, her own cup of coco in her hands.

“So, Falcone will know for sure you are with me after this.” Jack didn’t ask it as a question, more of a simple statement of fact.

Bane nodded. “I mean, I never answered him directly, but I’m gonna say yes. It won’t take a genius to make that leap, though Falcone might think I am just acting on my own. He knows Viktoria and I aren’t pleased with being shackled under him.” Bane shrugged. “Either way, I can’t see us going back to the club…”

Viktoria spoke softly to Jack. “I can continue my research if you can provide me the equipment…”

Jack nodded, but it was clear his mind was going over details by the far away look in his eyes.
Jack dragged his teeth over his bottom lip in thought as he said quietly. “I need to pull Bea out of there too.”

He pouted. “Oh well, I had plans for the fight club, but I will have to put those off for another time. Right now I think I just might have to put our pawns into play, at least one of them...but first…” Jack smiled. “Penguin gave me some interesting information about Falcone’s holdings in Gotham as well as several events coming up that involve our favorite mafia leader...such as a little party for Gotham’s favorite crooked mayor and the man in the back pocket of Falcone...Mayor Hamilton Hill.”

Joker giggled, “Harley how would you feel about dressing up for a formal dinner?”

Harley giggled grinning at him. “Mm...are you going to wear a tuxedo?”

Joker laughed. “Oh I have something a little different in mind my sweets.”

* *

Carmine took a sip of his old fashion as he leaned against the wall watching the party. The restaurant was owned by the Falcone family, a beautiful classy joint with marble floors, crystal chandeliers and tables with elegant, red tablecloths. Gigi loved it here. It had started as his Uncle Bernardo’s place, a small hole in the wall serving traditional Italian food in the heart of Gotham. His uncle was able to have this place thanks to the work, the fight in his brother, Carmine’s father, Vito and their father before him, Fredo, and Carmine’s great grandfather, Angelo who had arrived in Gotham fresh off the boat and worked his ass off to come up in the mafia, creating a future, a dynasty for his family. That was what Carmine wanted, to leave Gotham to his children, a future, a dynasty.

Carmine took a drink. He felt a tug in his chest at the thought of Gigi. That stupid woman meant more to him than she should. He had people looking for her, including the expensive Tallyman, but there had been nothing so far. He had thought when he had heard about the attack on Wayne Tower that maybe that mad man, the Joker, would turn his focus somewhere else and slip up, giving his people a chance to find her, his lawyer and ex-wife included, but it was as if the Joker had simply snapped his fingers and the three of them had disappeared off the face of the earth, let alone Gotham. The one thing that brought him comfort right now was that none of them had shown up dangling from a street lamp like his son. But, the fact that the Joker had made no demands, asked for no money, nothing...that bothered him. He needed to know what the Joker wanted...every man had something they wanted, something that could be used, leveraged against them, Carmine just needed to find out what the Joker wanted. Carmine took a hard swallow of his drink letting the slow burn of the alcohol comfort him. His daughter Sophia and youngest son Alberto would be arriving in Gotham in the next week, Sophia from business in Star City and Alberto from college in Sapienza University of Rome in Italy. Carmine was bringing them here to help with the family business while the search for Gigi and the others continued, especially Sophia...now that Mario was gone, she needed to be groomed to take over when he was gone. Alberto might be able to go back to school after this business was taken care of, but Carmine figured the boy just might have to consider Gotham University instead.

Carmine had hoped his daughter would be here for tonight's dinner, to meet Mayor Hill and for Hill to meet her, for him to know that there would be no getting out from under the heel of the Falcons, even when Carmine was no longer here. But she had been delayed by her business.

Carmine sighed wishing he could slip out for a cigar to calm his nerves when the lights dimmed. He glanced over to the stage at the back of the restaurant and glanced down at his watch. He frowned. It was later than he thought, guess it was time for the night’s entertainment.

The red velvet curtains slowly parted, the spot light clicked on, bathing the stage in a warm yellow glow with a focus on a gorgeous grand piano that sat in the middle of the stage, with an old fashioned looking (circa 1940) microphone resting in front and to the side of the piano. Carmine smiled. He had paid good money for the duet of Jonathan Browne and Silver Shannon to perform tonight for this dinner. Browne and Shannon were one of the most popular local bands who specialized in jazz, particular jazz of the 1940’s. Carmine had paid for their services tonight to bring another level of sophistication to the night’s celebration. The stage remained empty except for the piano and the microphone for several long seconds.

The audience began to murmur among themselves.

Carmine frowned.

He had just begun to walk toward the stage when a man walked out. The man was dressed in an all white pinstripe suit with a bright, shiny blue dress shirt, long white tie, and black oxfords with white spats. The man also wore a white fedora and a pair of blue mirrored aviator glasses and matching white leather gloves.

Carmine almost thought the man’s skin was the same color as his suit, but chalked that down to the lights. It was hard to tell what the man looked like as he walked silently across the stage and over to the piano. He took a seat at the piano, unbuttoning his jacket where a hint of white suspenders could be seen against the blue of the shirt. The man then took several quiet moments, adjusting the microphone that was attached to the piano, flexing and cracking his gloved fingers, running his fingers over the keys, demonstrating in those few minutes the he did indeed knew how to play as his fingers moved quickly over the keys performing a section of Cziffra’s Transcendental Etude no. 5.

The man gave himself over to the music, his whole body becoming one with his playing. It really was something to watch Carmine thought, a true musician. Carmine, however, could tell immediately it wasn’t Browne though, the man he had hired. This man was much, much taller than Browne and slimmer, but there was a compact grace to the man’s movements, something that Carmine was familiar with in the way the man had held himself as he had walked onto the stage. He moved like a predator. Carmine dismissed the thought, letting himself enjoy the music. The man at the piano was far more talented than Browne, as the man seamlessly went from from Cziffra into Rachmaninoff’s Sonata No. 2, op. 36, without missing a beat. The man in white threw himself into the piece, his entire body moved to the music as he played.

Carmine shrugged and smiled walking over to the bar to order another drink. This man at the piano was a pleasure to listen to, he really was much better than Browne and as far as Falcone knew, he didn’t have to pay him.

The man finished the entire Rachmaninoff piece, easing gracefully into the next. The man’s body flowed with the music as if the bench he sat on was barely keeping him in place, tapping out a rhythm with his foot, his long fingers dancing across the keys, but this time the strange man leaned into the microphone on the piano and began to sing in a honeyed voice.

“As he came into the window

It was the sound of a crescendo

He came into her apartment

He left the bloodstains on the carpet

She ran underneath the table
He could see she was unable

So she ran into the bedroom

She was struck down, it was her doom…”

*

That was when a beautiful woman walked out onto the stage. She had pale white skin, her hair was snow white as well, dripping pink and blue at the ends. The hair at the sides and top of her head was pulled back while the rest of her white hair fell down her back like a shimmering cascade of snow. She wore a white chiffon spaghetti strap dress with a neckline that dipped all the way to her navel, her smooth porcelain back fully exposed and a slit that run all the way up to her thigh. She wore a pair of silver and jeweled ankle strapped sandals. The dress made it very clear the woman wasn’t wearing a bra or panties. The dress also made clear the woman was wearing a gun strapped to the one exposed sexy thigh, the black and silver of the weapon stood out almost harshly against her skin.

Carmine tensed. He began to put his hand up to draw the attention of his bodyguards when he realized the mistake he had made. There were several people at each of the doors, all wearing clown masks, all heavily armed.

The woman on the stage leaned against the piano, the dress falling open along her shapely leg to show the gun. The audience, unaware of the masked people at the door began to murmur as a ripple of anxiety began to roll over the crowd.

The man at the piano sang.

“You've been hit by

You've been hit by

A smooth criminal…."

This was followed by a laugh that made Falcone’s blood run cold as the man at the piano removed his hat and glasses before he turned to the crowd…

“HAHAHAhahaha!!”

Joker leaned his elbow against the piano, his red lips pulled back in a sinister grin, his browless blue eyes danced. The spotlight show off his milk white skin and made his dark green hair look glossy and unreal.

“Welcome all to the Joker and Harley Quinn show!”
Joker grinned at the crowd turning at the same time to run his fingers over the piano keys. “This next piece is for my girl, Harley Quinn.”

He chuckled and started in on another piece of music. As he played, Joker leaned into the microphone and sang, his voice in perfect pitch, caressing the words as he looked at Harley who leaned close to the keys, her smile only for him. Both of them acted as if the rest of the people in the restaurant were simply not there.

Joker gave at her with a grin and sang.

“Show me, show me, show me how you do that trick
The one that makes me scream she said
The one that makes me laugh she said
Threw her arms around my neck
Show me how you do it and I'll promise you I'll promise that I'll run away with you, I'll run away with you…”

*

Harley swooned, staring at Joker with a smile. She walked around him, dragging her fingers along his shoulders as she did so. Joker followed her with his eyes as he continued to sing.

*

Everyone stared at the at the stage, frozen in place. A few people began to murmur, not sure exactly what was going on, thinking that maybe this was some sort of joke, while others had clearly heard about what had happened at Wayne Tower, the amount of death that had occurred there, or had seen the hijacked television broadcast not long past. A few guests began to panic, turning to head toward the doors only to discover the clowns blocking the exits, each armed with a gun. A few other clowns had mixed with the crowd while the patrons’ attention had been on the stage; each of those clowns were clearly armed as well.

Carmine pushed through the crowd of guests. People reached out grabbing him.

“What’s going on?”

“Who is that?”

“Is this a joke?”

Carmine smiled tightly. “It’s nothing, please just stay calm.”

Falcone repeated this sentence over and over again as he made his way toward his man, Danny Pollard, his head of security for this party. Danny was standing off to the side with a few of his men who he was pointing and directing in hushed voices when Falcone walked up to him. Danny was tall, not quite a head taller than Falcone with the build of someone who had played football in his youth. Falcone struggled not to make a scene, but he grabbed Danny by the lapels of his jacket, yanking the man toward him so he could hiss into the man’s ear.

“What the fuck is going on? How did he get in here…” Falcone pointed an accusing finger at the stage. Falcone looked around then, realizing that not only were the doors blocked by Joker’s men, but that there weren’t as many of his own men around.

“Where are the others?” Falcone snarled in growing agitation.

Danny was a tall, muscled man with creamy dark skin who looked as if nothing could faze him, but right now the man looked confused and slightly uncomfortable, as if fear was just now beginning to seep under his skin.

He frowned at Falcone and shrugged in clear confusion. “I don’t know sir. There are only five of us in here and that’s including me. I had the rest of the guards stationed outside. None of us reacted to the clowns because we all thought it was part of tonight’s entertainment.” Danny’s voice trailed off as Falcone’s glare turned murderous.

Falcone snarled. “How many guns do we have?”

Danny looked like a little boy who had been caught without his homework. “None sir, with the mayor here and a few civilians, we only have tasers and the few guns we did have, well, those are with the men I had stationed outside.”

Falcone hissed. “Have you tried contacting them?”

Danny nodded. “Radio’s down like I said, but no one's cell phones are working either.” He glanced at the crowd of people and Falcone followed his gaze. He could see that other people were trying their phones, only now beginning to realize that they were cut off, trapped from the outside by the two clowns on the stage. A murmur of panic rolled over the guests.

Joker continued singing, his honeyed voice was almost hypnotic, his gaze never leaving Harley’s.

“You, soft and only, you lost and lonely

You, strange as angels

Dancing in the deepest oceans

Twisting in the water

You're just like a dream

You're just like a dream…”

Joker finished the song with a wide smile while Harley clapped her hands. He grinned and stood up taking a bow even though no one but Harley was clapping. Putting his arm around Harley, Joker walked over to the main microphone.

He tapped it to make sure it was on. A high pitched whine sounded over the sound system followed by Joker speaking into the microphone.

“Good evening, good evening. Thank you so much for having us! Harley and I are here to blow some minds...literally maybe…” He giggled putting a finger to his chin and smiling innocently as he looked heavenward. “I know--so naughty. But seriously folks, we are here just to have a good time.”

He grinned at the crowd of startled looking guests. Joker noticed one man who was pushing himself to the front of the crowd to stand in front of the stage. Joker lifted a brow in amusement as the man stood defiantly staring up at him.

The man was of average height in a typical black suit and tie. His hair was well coiffed and completely grey. He had a pair of hard grey eyes behind a pair of round glasses. The man glanced at the crowd behind them before he pointed at Joker.

“I demand as Mayor of Gotham, to know what it is that you want? You will not get away with taking hostages. The Gotham Police will be here at any moment to haul you off to jail you...you freak!” Mayor Hill crossed his arms over his chest. “We do not negotiate with terrorists or hostage takers!”

The crowd murmured in a mix of approval and shock at the mayor's boldness.

Joker blinded several times, then exchanged a look with Harley. Harley giggled and shrugged at Joker.

Joker leaned one hand on the microphone as he narrowed his eyes at Mayor Hill.

“You certainly have a big mouth, but...you are a politician in the back pocket of Falcone who we all know...no matter how much he tries to hide behind his respectability, is a mobster, a plain old, criminal, but I suppose you are too Mayor Hill.” Joker’s smile just barely hid the sneer that lurked behind it.

The mayor opened his mouth to protest, but Joker held up his hand.

“Tsk tsk, come now Mayor Hill, don’t treat me like I’m an idiot, or the rest of Gotham for that matter. We all know whose ass you are kissing. BUT lucky for you, you are not who I’m here to see tonight. Harley and I are here for a one night performance just for Mr. Carmine Falcone.”

He put his hand over his eyes and searched the crowd. “Now, come out, come out wherever you are Carmine—don’t be shy.”

Carmine frowned taking a step back. Danny moved to step in front of him.

On the stage Joker sighed dramatically. “Oh come on now, I’m not going to kill you. Geez, no, no. I have far too many plans!! Games to play with you first Carmine, no. Killing you right now would spoil all the good times I have planned ahead for us! Besides, I’ve got to give Batman a chance to play with us too.”

When Falcone still didn’t step up Joker sighed looking at Harley. “Mm, well Mayor Hill, why don’t you join us here on the stage? I’m thinking of performing another song and you could sing along with me! It’ll be fun!”

Mayor Hill took a step back. “I don’t…”

The crowd behind him stepped out of the way, no one came to stand beside the mayor or tried to protect him. Joker grinned and motioned at the mayor.

“Oh now come on Mayor Hill, don’t be such a sour puss!”

A large clown holding an AK-47 and a fanny pack around his waist, stepped up behind Hill and put gloved hand on the mayor’s shoulder. Hill looked stricken, but was smart enough not to struggle, instead he let himself be guided to the stage.
Joker called out. “Someone bring a chair for our honored mayor!”

Another clown grabbed a chair and brought it up onto the stage. The chair was set down near the piano. The clown who had a hand on Hill’s shoulder guided the mayor to the chair, pushing him down on the seat. The clown continued to stand behind the mayor, his hand firmly on the mayor’s shoulder.

Joker laughed. “Now see, that wasn’t so bad. You get to sit here and have the best seat in the house for the show!” The well-dressed clown walked over and gave the man a light pat on his shoulder grinning at him brightly before he turned that same smile out on the crowd. “Now, please make sure our dear Mayor is secure in his seat, we don’t want him falling off his chair.” Joker grinned at the mayor as the clown pulled out some duct tape from the fanny pack at his waist and began to tape the mayor to his seat. Mayor Hill’s protests were cut short as the duct tape went around the politician’s mouth. Joker’s lips widened in a broad smile at the mayor before he turned his attention back to Harley.

Joker wrapped his arm around her waist and pulled her up against him. He dipped her back, eliciting a giggle from her just before he pressed his lips to hers. Harley wrapped her arms around his shoulders and returned his kiss with vigor. She brought her leg up, the dress falling away as she wrapped her leg around him, revealing the long length of her pale shapely leg around Joker’s waist. He reached down and grabbed her thigh, lifting her leg higher which caused the skirt of her dress to fall further down revealing her hip. They kissed hard, both of them making soft sounds of need that were picked up by the microphone. Harley threaded her hands into the back of his green hair, wrapping her fingers around the thick locks, her mouth demanding more, her tongue caressing his breathlessly while she pressed the back of her heeled sandals against his thigh. Joker growled, the kiss becoming passionate enough that several guests turned away.

After a few more intense seconds of kissing, Joker pulled away from Harley’s mouth reluctantly, bringing her back to her feet. He smiled at her, stroking her lips, his other hand snug around her waist. “Harley my love, why don’t you go and get our special guest while I perform another song.” He turned just enough to motion at another clown in the crowd. This clown grabbed another chair from one of the many restaurant tables in the room and brought it over to the stage; the crowd hastily parted to let him pass.

Harley smiled and caressed Joker’s cheek, her fingers running down to his chin. “Sure thing puddin.”

She turned to walk off the stage, her hips swaying seductively.

Joker grinned watching her go. He looked back at the crowd of hostages as the other clown placed the chair next to Hill who had stopped struggling. The mayor’s eyes were wide in panic.

Joker leaned into the mic. “Isn’t she something folks?”

He placed a hand against his chest and swooned grinning at the audience before he turned and walked back over to the piano. He smiled, cracking his knuckles before running his fingers over the keys improvising for a moment before he began to play.

“Now…” He began to play Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 2 as he spoke. “I thought now would be a good time to explain why we’re here.” He looked up from the keys to smile at the crowd. “We’re mostly here just to send yet another message. The first one was for Bruce Wayne, but I suppose most of you know about that one, at least I hope you do. I’ll be so disappointed if you didn’t hear about it! I just wanted to let Bruce Wayne know that even with all his money, he isn’t safe. And I had a personal message for him that I could only deliver in person, but that is really private between the two of us.” Joker’s fingers ran deftly over the keys of the piano. “No, this message is for Carmine Falcone. I just want to let him know that he isn’t the only shark in the water now. That changes are a coming…” Joker smiled, closing his eyes and focusing on the piece of music for a few more seconds before he changed the song into something more contemporary.

“Now, for something a little different.” He winked at the terrified crowd. “This song is an oldie, but goodie. I think you all will enjoy this. This song holds a special place in my heart,” Joker confided to the audience as he leaned close to the piano’s microphone.

“He is a hustler, he's no good at all
He is a loser, he's a bum, bum, bum, bum
He lies, he bluffs, he's unreliable
He is a sucker with a gun, gun, gun, gun
I know you told me I should stay away
I know you said he's just a dog astray
He is a bad boy with a tainted heart
And even I know this ain't smart…”

While Joker was singing, a woman stumbled onto the stage, her arms duct taped to her sides, with another piece secured over her mouth. Her hair was a mess and her face was a tear streaked mess of smeared makeup. She was barefoot, still wearing the dress she had vanished in. She stopped and began yelling behind the duct tape when she saw the audience watching her.

Harley followed behind the woman. She gave the woman an annoyed shoved past Joker toward the empty chair. The woman tried to run for the front of the stage, but Harley grabbed the captive by her hair and yanked her back, nearly pulling the young woman off her feet before the second clown on the stage grabbed the woman by her shoulders and forced her onto the chair where his fellow clown began to duct tape her to the chair.

*

Falcone took in a startled breath when he saw Gigi on the stage, alive. He began to move toward the stage, but Danny put a hand on his shoulder.

“Sir, are you sure about this?” Danny looked nervous.

Falcone yanked his shoulder away from the security chief. “I’m not going to let a clown intimidate me.”

Danny frowned, then asked in a voice tinged with annoyance. “Sir, is she really worth it?”

Falcone froze for a moment as if the question had startled him. He frowned closing his eyes for a second before he replied.

“No, probably not, but I am not going to let this clown try to scare me in my own restaurant. Gotham belongs to the Falcones. It always has and it always will.”

Danny nodded as Falcone turned and began to push his way to the stage, the young guard following behind. Danny knew that he may only have a taser to use against guns, but he was going to try to protect his boss any way he could.

*

Joker smiled at Harley as he sang.

“But mama I'm in love with a criminal
And this type of love isn't rational, it's physical Mama please don't cry, I will be all right
All reason aside I just can't deny, I love the guy…”

Harley came over and sat next to the green haired man on the seat and took over singing, her voice was delicate and sweet next to his more honeyed tones.

“He is a villain by the devil's law
He is a killer just for fun, fun, fun, fun
That man's a snitch and unpredictable
He's got no conscience, he got none, none, none, none…”

Joker laughed bumping her with his shoulder which sent Harley into a fit of giggles.

*

Falcone stopped at the front of the group of guests and yelled. “What do you want Joker?”

Harley glared angrily and pulled her gun, leaning around Joker, her arm pressed along his back, the barrel of her gun on Falcone. She snarled over Joker’s singing.

“Let him finish the song, asshole.”

Falcone stopped, his mouth snapping shut though he glared at her while Joker continued.

Joker chuckled as he continued playing, leaning seductively toward the microphone.

“All I know, should've let go, but no ’Cause he's a bad boy with a tainted heart
And even I know this ain't smart…”

Joker leaned into the instrument, playing it with a fierce passion, letting his body move with the music as he sang the piece to its climax ending the number by adding a few ad-lib alterations to the music. When he was finished he stood up; the clowns throughout the restaurant all clapped.

Harley stood up and walked to the front of the stage, her weapon aimed at the audience.

“Clap!” she yelled.

The audience complied.

Joker giggled and bowed. “Thank you, thank you. Now…”
He turned his gaze on Falcone. “To business.”

He smiled at Falcone and began to pace the stage, projecting his voice as he spoke. “So Falcone—what do I want?” Joker frowned in thought and rubbed his chin. “What do I want? Mm...that’s an interesting question. What do I want?” He turned to look at the crowd. “Do I want money? Nah…” He waved a hand dismissively with a grin on his lips. He put on a little bit of an over the top Russian accent. “Opulence, I has it.”

He and Harley giggled at his joke as he continued. “Mmm...what do I want...this is such an interesting question! It really is!” He stopped and crossed his arms over his chest, tapping his fingers against his arms. “What do I want? Do I want Batman’s head on a spike? Maybe...Do I want Gotham trembling at my feet...could be? Do I want to watch all of Gotham burn? Quite possibly. Do I want revenge? Yes, no, maybe? Maybe I simply want to recreate Gotham in my image, or maybe I simply want to play a long, complicated game of cat and mouse with Batman? Or maybe this is all about Gotham’s soul? Maybe that’s what I want?” He chuckled. “Or maybe I don’t know what I want? Do I really want anything at all?”

Joker picked up his hat and with a elegant twist of his hand, placed it on his head, picking up the sunglasses and slid them into the front pocket of his jacket as he turned to Harley. “What do I want pumpkin?”

Harley giggled. “Me?”

Joker laughed grabbing her around the waist and yanking her close. “That’s so true! I always want you, anytime, anywhere.” He kissed her, wrapping his hands around to grab her rear and squeeze which made Harley giggle. He caught her bottom lip and tugged gently when he began to break the kiss. “Mm...my little murder kitten,” he whispered before he reluctantly released her and turned back to Falcone. He pulled his own gun out with a wide smile.

“You know, I’m a simple man, Carmy. I like simple things, my girl, naked and all over me. Nice clothes, knives, guns, explosions...that sort of thing. I also like getting my way.” Joker laughed. “But who doesn’t? No, no Falcone, there is nothing you have that I can’t simply take. I just thought tonight would be fun, just to let you know that I’ll always be one step ahead of you. I’ll always have the upper hand.”

He shrugged, turning just a little to bring his weapon around to point it against Gigi’s head. “And to show you who really has the power in Gotham.” He stepped closer to Gigi, but his eyes never left Falcone’s gaze. “You know Falcone, I’ve learned that madness is like gravity, all it takes is a little push to drive a sane man crazy...I wonder,” he said with a little tilt of his head to the side. “Is this your little push?”

Joker grinned and pulled the trigger.

Gigi’s eyes had been on Falcone the entire time that Joker was talking. Her eyes widened when Joker turned the weapon on her. She knew that Carmine was not going to save her.

Falcone yelled. “NO!”

The mayor screamed behind his tape as he was splattered with blood, bone and brains. The audience screamed. There was a sudden turn of the crowd as if they forgot that the doors to the restaurant were blocked by Joker’s men. A couple of the men in clown masks fired their weapons up into the ceiling of the restaurant which resulted in more screams.
Joker grabbed the microphone. “Now now, quiet now everyone, quiet down.”

Joker grinned at a stunned Falcone examining his gun. “You know, I thought the safety was on, but I guess I was wrong. Let that be a lesson to you kiddos, always double check to make sure the safety is on.”

Falcone snarled and shouted. “I’m coming for you clown! I will find you and I am going to kill you real slow. I’ll kill your bitch first, make you watch, then I am going to kill you. I’m going to drag it out for days!!”

Joker grinned. “You know Falcone, it’s a funny world we live in.” He tilted his head to the side and giggled. “Well, this has been fun, but I think my girl and I should head on home. Talking about her being naked has gotten me thinking about her being naked.” He snickered. “So, you all enjoy the rest of your evening and remember Falcone dear, I have two more hostages...and who knows where they will show up!”

Joker stepped back and made a “round up” gesture with this hand. All the people wearing clown masks pulled out canisters from which they pulled rings and rolled them across the floor. Bright green gas began to fill the room. Falcone started to rush toward the stage, but the party guests started to panic, screaming and getting his in his way as they tried to find a way out. Their screams swiftly turned into laughing as the gas filled the room so quickly that Falcone was immediately blinded. He began to cough, then laugh. He staggered finally bumping into the stage, but the laughter, he couldn’t stop, his mouth stretched back in a smile so painful that tears came to his eyes and still he couldn’t stop laughing.

Falcone fell to his knees.

*

It was the next day that Sofia Falcone arrived. Her brother Alberto would still be another day or two. She had heard about the attack last night almost as soon as she had arrived in Gotham. She was both relieved that her father was alive and annoyed that someone, some clown, was making a fool out of the Falcone family. There was a part of her that blamed her father for this...this should not be happening, not to them.

Sofia brushed a hand through her dark hair swallowing down the pain that flared in her chest. She blamed her father for Mario’s death. Not only should their father have protected Mario, but the old man had let Mario indulge in his pleasures to the point that he had become unfit to take over the family when the time came. It was almost as if their father was purposely trying to sabotage the family himself! No one should have been able to take Mario in the first place, but to humiliate the family by leaving his body hanging in the open like that, like a damn...pinata!! It was bad enough her father had allowed that to happen, but to then not turn around and seek instant revenge? He should have put every able body on the case, they should have had that clown, The Joker’s head on a platter by now. This was humiliating and intolerable.

As her heels made a hard click against the polished floor of the airport terminal, Sofia wondered if maybe it was time for fresh blood in Gotham, in the Falcone family...maybe sooner rather than later.

*

Bruce, dressed in simple brown slacks, his dress shirt untucked and his tie lying across the back of his chair, was at his desk in his apartment that he shared with Dick while Wayne Manor was still being rebuilt. He frowned deeply looking over the police report on his computer that Gordon had sent Batman about the attack on Mayor Hill and Carmine Falcone. Gordon believed that attack was targeted at the mayor, though the death of Falcone’s girlfriend made Bruce suspect otherwise, especially since she was the only target in a room full of potential victims, many of them high profile, yet the Joker had only killed one person, Falcone’s girlfriend. (Not counting the two dead performers, but Bruce was certain that they were just collateral damage from Joker’s stunt, at least that was what he had gathered from the report details.)

The evidence showed that the young woman had been held captive for several weeks, though there had been no missing person case filed for her. Bruce rubbed a finger over his chin in thought. He should look into missing persons reports to see if anyone else connected to Falcone was unaccounted for. Just because no one had reported the girlfriend missing, didn’t mean that anyone else connected to the mafia leader wouldn’t have made contact with the police in regards to other missing people. He just needed to look, or have Barbara look for him.

Bruce chewed his bottom lip. Other evidence that pointed to Falcone as the intended target of Joker’s little attack was the fact that Falcone had been the target of other violence for some time now. There had been the attacks on some of the weapons and drug business that Bruce knew for a fact were Falcone’s, regardless of the fact there was no evidence drawing a line between Falcone and the sale of guns or drugs in Gotham. Bruce knew there was a connection. Then there had been the death of Panessa and Sal Maroni, both part of Falcone’s operation, but those were before the Joker...and there had been connections between those attacks and the Red Hood, which was still active after the appearance of the Joker. Bruce rubbed his hand across his cheek and wondered if there was a connection between Joker and the Hood. He would have to ask Barbara to gather some information, a timeline perhaps of reported Red Hood activity.

He wasn’t sure what it was that Joker was after by targeting Falcone, perhaps there was no reason behind it at all except to pester the man, but Bruce suspected that the Joker...that his brother...had some reason for the attack, even if Bruce didn’t yet know what that reason was…

Bruce sighed in annoyance. He drafted a quick secure email to Barbara, attaching the files and hit send before he slammed the lid of the laptop down. He felt himself growing agitated as he glanced over at a clock on the wall to check the time. Dick should be on his way home from school soon. Bruce sighed. A good hard work out in the gym would be good for them both, but especially him. Bruce needed to work out some of his aggression; Joker had him on edge.

Joker was so unpredictable, and Bruce could only guess what he would do next and he didn’t like that. The criminals he had deal with so far had been, well, predictable. He knew and understood their motivations, what drove them, but his brother...the Joker, he had no idea why he was focusing on Falcone. He understood why he was after him...Bruce couldn’t really blame him he supposed.

Bruce sighed and rubbed the bridge of his nose. He wished he understood...Jack…the Joker...Bruce rubbed his hands down his face with a loud groan when there was a buzz indicating that someone downstairs at the desk needed to speak to him.

Bruce walked over to the intercom and hit the button.

“Wayne here.”

“Sir, I have a Selina Kyle down here. She says she has an appointment with you.”

Bruce’s heart leapt into his throat. Suddenly his mouth was dry. “Ah, yes, send her up Carl.”

“Right away sir.”

A minute later there was a knock at the apartment door. Bruce took a deep breath and reached slowly for the door and pulled it open.

Selina smiled. “Hey Bruce.”

Selina looked beautiful he thought. She was dressed in long sleeved black dress with a scoop neckline. The full skirt had a color block grey strip that ran along the bottom, black tights and a pair of black boots that came all the way up her thighs. Her short hair was styled in a way that made him immediately think of Audrey Hepburn.

“Selina.” Bruce said her name softly.

She smiled. “Been a little while.”

Bruce nodded. “It has...ah...come in please.”

He stepped aside and Selina entered with a smile. She turned once she was inside. “I’m sorry Bruce, I heard about Jack and Harley. Both of them...” She looked down at her hands as if searching for the words. She knew how much Bruce both loved and...hated his brother. She looked up. “I’m so sorry Bruce...it’s all so tragic, then the explosion that destroyed Wayne Manor...and Alfred left? That’s...that’s a lot of tragedy for one person Bruce. Are you doing all right? It’s just that...that’s a lot to have to deal with Bruce on your own. How are you doing really? And I heard you adopted a young man who had lost his parents as well.”

Selina looked as if she wanted to hug him, but didn’t know if she should. She understood what it was like to lose someone close, to lose a sibling. Further, she didn’t know where she and Bruce stood after their last evening together...when Jack had caught her in the house. Selina frowned, bit her bottom lip, and instead wrapped her arms around herself.

Bruce swallowed. The urge to hug her, to give himself over to mourning the loss of his brother was strong. Even when he had truly thought Jack was dead, he hadn’t mourned, not really, not properly. He had instead wallowed in his guilt more than the loss of his brother. Now, knowing that Jack was in fact alive, but...no longer Jack...no, that wasn’t true either. Jack was buried somewhere inside the Joker and it was his duty, his quest to find a way to not just make amends to his brother, but to bring Jack back from whatever this was that was happening to him, to find a way to separate Jack from Harley and perhaps get Jack on a real road to healing. Maybe? He didn’t know precisely what he wanted to do where Jack was concerned. These questions were simply too big for him to answer right now. Stop Joker, certainly, but then...

He couldn’t say all this to Selina, it didn’t matter how much he wanted to tell her everything. He couldn’t completely trust her, no matter how much his heart wanted him to. Instead Bruce smiled softly. “I’m holding it together. The young man I took under my wing, Richard Grayson has helped. Focusing on his well-being makes dealing with my other...difficulties easier. I’m just glad he wasn’t as that party the other night.” They had both walked further into the luxury apartment as they spoke. Bruce stopped with a motion toward the couch. “Would you like some coffee, tea, water? Feel free to sit, make yourself comfortable.”

Selina smiled. “Thank you, and coffee sounds nice.”

Bruce frowned watching her as she went to the couch and sat. He made his way to the kitchen looking through the cabinets for the coffee, his mind wandering as he let his body fall into the habit of making coffee (something he did all the time now that Alfred was gone). It amazed him how much he wanted to tell her about Jack, about Batman, about everything, to share all of this with someone on the outside of everything. About how he had dropped his brother on purpose, to get rid of the family shame, to wipe off the miasma of Jack’s slowly building madness. About how he realized he had hated Jack all these years for his weakness, for always needing him to help him, for never being strong enough, for being so god damn weak. His own jealousy over Jack and Harley’s relationship, how he hated Jack for finding someone, while Bruce felt alone--always alone. Part of Bruce felt that Jack didn’t deserve love. He had wanted that chance to pretend…that he was not the one responsible for the death of every member of his company’s board of directors. Joker may have pulled the trigger, but it was him, Bruce, who caused their deaths. Batman had created whatever it was that Jack had become, all because of his own inadequacies and prejudices.

All of that, he wanted to confess it all, but he didn’t. Instead he shoved the intrusive thoughts away and focused on Selina.

“IT’ll take just a few minutes,” he said as he took a seat beside her on the couch, close, but not too close to her, though he was keenly aware of her presence, the aura of her.

“So, what are you doing back in Gotham?” he asked crossing his legs, his arm draped causally over the back of the couch.

Selina tilted her head sideways. “Is that really an important question? What I want to know is how you are. After what happened at that party, I just…” She shook her head. “Who was that madman?”

Bruce dropped his leg and sighed, his arms dropping to rest against his elbows. “Well, I’m under investigation to see if I had any part in what happened. As far as running the company, I’m still the CEO, so the basic functions of the company are still running, though I will be meeting with my lawyers soon to decide the next step. As to who that man was…he’s calling himself The Joker. That’s as much as the police or I know about him. He made some declaration on television, announcing himself to the city. So far he has attacked me and just recently Carmine Falcone, but other than that there had been no real reason given for any of this. I don’t know why he targeted Wayne Enterprises. He made no demands, didn’t take hostages. He just came in and killed the entire board and left. He is also thought to be involved in the murder of Mario Falcone and just recently the murder of Falcone’s long time girlfriend and two musical performers.”

Selina frowned. “Mm...yes I heard about the attack at Falcone’s party for Mayor Hill, though only three people died there.” She rubbed a hand along her thigh as she spoke. “The Joker. I’m assuming that's all you know? No reasons why? Why you? Why Falcone?”

Bruce shook his head without looking at her, his gaze focused on the coffee table in front of him. “No, nothing.”

Selina noticed a slight twitch around Bruce’s eyes along with another at the side of his mouth. It wasn’t much, just a very tiny twitch both times, but it was all she needed to know he wasn’t telling her everything. She frowned wondering what it was that he wasn’t telling her. She didn’t think he was out and out lying to her, but he was withholding information. Though she supposed she couldn’t blame him, she did try to steal from him. Their relationship, what there was of it, was complicated. And Bruce was a CEO of one of the biggest companies in the world; he had to have some secrets.

Bruce stood up. “The coffee should be ready. Do you want sugar? Cream?”

“Two sugars please, and cream.” Selina stood up and followed him.

Bruce stepped into the kitchen and pulled down two cups. Selina looked around impressed. The kitchen could have been its own separate apartment, it was that big.

Bruce set about making the coffee as he spoke. “So what brings you back to Gotham and I guess I should ask, what you were doing having snuck into my cocktail party.”

Selina leaned against one of the marble countertops. “I was there to see you.”

Bruce gave her a look that indicated he wasn’t sure he believed her. Selina stared back before she finally caved with a small laugh. “I’m here on business that has to do with one of the men that was at your party, a Max Shreck.”

Bruce frowned in thought then made a face. “Oh Max Shreck. Yeah he works in the Wayne Technologies divisions. He has some interesting ideas about a new type of power plant that he has been trying to push through. I’m not sure about it myself, but...” He shrugged.

Selina smiled taking her offered cup of coffee from him as Bruce handed it to her. “Well, I have some unfinished business with him and I thought I might get a chance to talk to him at your party, well, until things turned south.”

Bruce nodded and sipped his coffee. “So, is he the only reason you’re in town?”

Selina smiled, perhaps a bit coy. “You happy to see me Bruce?”

He smiled softly at her. “Yes, yes I am.”

“Even though I was trying to steal from you last time we saw each other, or when I called you last time…left a cryptic message?” Selina frowned softly followed by a soft chuckle. “So, how about we start over? Hi, I’m Selina Kyle and I’m a thief with a heart of gold.”

Bruce chuckled. “Hi Selina, I’m Bruce Wayne, a man with too much money.”

They both laughed.

*

A few more days had passed, a quiet week. There had been no other news of the Joker and the Scarecrow had been quiet as well, but tonight was Halloween and Halloween in Gotham was always interesting.

Jack grinned at himself in the mirror, having just finished applying his lipstick and doing a little spin, admiring his costume for the night. He had on a black top hat, coral red frock coat, a light brown vest with darker brown fleur-de-lis pattern over the form fitting vest that he wore over a white shirt that had white lace dripping from the sleeves along with a white cravat. The knee breeches he wore were white with a very light pinstripe in lighter shade of coral, and a pair of brown knee high boots with buttons running up the sides. He put his arms out and smiled at his wife.

“So what do you think my sweets?”

Harley clapped her hands. “You look divine puddin!”

Jack laughed and bowed. “Thank you my sweetness. Now, let’s get a good look at your costume.”

Harley stood up. She was also dressed as a ring master, but instead of a frock coat she wore a red and black pinstripe bolero jacket with a black and white corset which pushed her breasts up in a way that drew attention immediately toward them. Her costume also had a matching red and black skirt that was short and gathered in the front, but had a long tulle bustle in the back. She wore a garter belt that was visible, holding up the black and white stockings she work and a pair of Victorian style ankle boots and completed the outfit with her own black top hat.
Harley did a spin and stopped with a giggle putting her hands on her hips and cocking them to the side with a wink at Jack. “So how do I look puddin?”

Jack opened his eyes wide in delight and growled. “Good enough to eat my dear.”

He reached out to her, his white gloved hands making grabbing motions.

Harley squealed. “NO! I just got dressed!”

Jack laughed. “Boobies!”

Harley yelped with a giggle and raced down the stairs with Jack in hot pursuit. Waiting for them in their living room was Frost, with his face painted like a sugar skull, but instead of bright colors he was all blacks, whites and greys, and still wearing his regular suit while Agatha, who was also painted like a sugar skull, but with jewels around her eyes wearing bright reds and greens along with large red flowers in her hair. Jack’s aunt had opted for a dark red corset dress, with layers of red lace, but the corset of the dress was painted with the ribs of a skeleton.

Agatha squealed when she saw the two of them rush into the living room Jack nearly tackling Harley from behind as he grabbed her around the waist and lifted her off her feet.

“Oh my GOD, you two look fantastic!” Agatha gasped. “Oh crud, where did I put my phone? I need a picture!”

Harley laughed leaning into Jack as he wrapped his arms around her waist and nibbled at her ear, nearly knocking both their hats off.

Harley giggled as she wiggled in Jack’s embrace. “Thanks Auntie.”

Agatha smiled fluffing out her skirt. “Well, if you two are ready, let’s head to Big Mama’s. Everyone else should already be there.”

Jack kept a hold of Harley from behind as he began to sort of crab walk her toward the door. “Let us go!! Halloween partying awaits!!”

Harley giggled happily. A night of fun was just what everyone needed she thought as Jack hugged her tightly and lifted her up, carrying her out of the house.

*

Across town in the darkness of his apartment, one light glowed softly over Crane as he stood in front of his bedroom mirror, an old full length mirror attached to the back of his bedroom door. He stood in front of the mirror completely naked. The sides of the mirror were plastered with pictures of Harleen, images of her in Arkham, pictures of her in her room, eating breakfast, showering, secret pictures he had taken when he had her at his home. There were pictures he had found of her online, photos from the paper. He had even dug deeply finding pictures of her from college, high school, some photos copied over and over again as the images circled the outer edges of the mirror. He stared at himself as the sounds of Franz Liszt’s Liebestraum played in the background, his eyes darted to one of the pictures of Harleen and he reached out, his fingers caressed the image as he whispered.

“My Lady Crow.”

He smiled closing his eyes and letting the images of his first night as his beloved Scarecrow wash over him. That frat party had been like the first push of a drug in his veins. He had never felt so energized, so alive except when he had been with her, with Harleen. He was coming for her, and she would be his again. But until then he had a whole night ahead of him. A whole night of tricks.

Crane turned and walked toward the bed where his costume lay, the Scarecrow. He smiled and ran his fingers along the fabric of the outfit before he picked up the material and began to dress.

*

Gillian James took a sip of her drink as she glared at her husband Aubrey dressed as a fucking pirate dancing with some blonde bitch in a sexy nurse outfit. Not even trying to be subtle, she snarled to herself, the fucking turd. This fucking Halloween party was his idea. He wanted to have a big Halloween party, a party to top all Halloween parties. Well he got that, he got the fucking huge party and spent over a two hundred thousand dollars just to impress the fucking neighbors. There were smoke machines pumping smog all over their god damn lawn and into her living room, there were stupid blow up decorations on her lawn and for 200K (though she suspected it might be closer to a quarter million), there was so much cheap shit in her house it made her ulcers burn. She supposed most of the money went to all the fucking booze and her costume. She was dressed like Marie Antoinette, with the expensive dress and white wig to match.

Gillian narrowed her eyes again watching Aubrey and the blonde as she leaned against the doorway of their front door which was open, pumping music into the evening air. She was waiting for the police to show up, sure that someone was eventually going to call the cops on them because the party had simply grown louder over the course of the evening.

She took another sip of her drink when she saw the scarecrow coming up the walk. She frowned. The costume wasn’t half bad. If she hadn’t been standing here staring out the front door, the bastard might have actually scared her. He walked slowly up the walk, then up the stairs.

Gillian gave him a once over with a smirk on her red lips. “Nice costume,” she offered.

The Scarecrow turned to stare at her. She could see his eyes behind the mask and there was something cold about them Gillian could see. Looking into his eyes was like looking into a dark pit. Gillian shivered, but she was going to be damned if any of her fucking husband’s stupid ass friends were going to scare her.

“Drink and food are that way. Anything else, you are on your own. Any damage you do, you pay for, got it buddy?” Gillian warned and took another sip of her drink.

The Scarecrow smiled and spoke; his voice was surprisingly elegant. “Got it. I do like your smoke machines. May I look at one? I was thinking about getting one next year for my own party.”

Gillian gestured with her head. “There’s one in the living room and another down the hall. Feel free to look, though I’m sure my husband paid way too much for them.”

She could see the smile again behind the stitches of the man’s mask. “Thank you…” he waited tilting his head.

“Gillian. I’m Aubrey’s wife,” Gillian said a little more softly.

The Scarecrow took her hand. Gillian didn’t move allowing him to take her hand. He brought her knuckles up to his mouth. She felt a hint of soft lips between the heavy stitches on the mouth of the mask and the rough burlap.

“Thank you my dear. You are simply divine.”
Gillian blushed. “Well, ah...thank you.” Attention from a masked man was more than what she often got from Aubrey.

The Scarecrow grinned. She could see his teeth behind the mask.

“Tell me my dear Gillian, what are you afraid of?”

*

The next morning, Harley was naked except for wearing one of Jack’s dress shirts with only two buttons done up and a pair of his green and blue striped socks on to keep her feet warm against the coolness of the floor as she made coffee and some toast and jam for her and Jack. Jack was still asleep upstairs. She wanted to surprise him with breakfast in bed. They had a wonderful night last night at Big Mama’s Halloween Party. The club had been decorated in such a fun way with pumpkins, ghosts, and pretty much anything else Big Mama could think of to give the club a real Halloween haunted house feel.

Their entire family had been there. Jason came as Judge Dredd, Trope and Thea had dressed up as the twins from the Shining, and Zsasz had dressed as a mortician. Alex and Alice had been there with Alex dressed as a shark attack victim, dressed in his regular clothing but carrying a surfboard, fake blood on the stump of his arm and a stuffed shark around his neck while Alice was dressed as Violet Beauregarde from Willy Wonka the moment the character was turning into a blueberry. Jack had also invited his friends that had saved him after...the acid. Everyone they cared about. had been there last night, in costume. Even Big Mama had dressed up, wearing a red dress that was so tight Harley had wondered how she breathed in her Jessica Rabbit outfit.

There had been so much food at the party and the drinks! Big Mama had all drinks last night tailored to the holiday with candy corn shots, black widow cocktails to smoking witches heart cocktails. Harley had tried at least one of every drink available.

Harley grinned remembering dancing close to her puddin, his arms around her, his lips against hers. Jack had held onto her like he would never let her go, swaying to the music, singing softly to her in his beautiful voice. It had been such a romantic night. Harley shivered with delight at the memories of last night, especially when they came home. She giggled with pleasure as she walked over to turn the radio on the counter up a little bit. The sounds of Selena Gomez’s voice filled the kitchen while Harley pulled out the butter and jam from the refrigerator. Harley sang along, popping bread into the toaster and digging out a tray from one of the bottom cabinets, upon which she set some cups and saucers before she filled a tea pot with the hot coffee. The song had just finished when she yelped, pulling the toast up, but accidently touching the hot bread with the tips of her fingers when the DJ began to speak.

“There has been a report by the Gotham City Police of another Scarecrow attack. Eyewitness accounts describe a Scarecrow at the home of Aubrey and Gillian James. Aubrey James was one of Gotham’s top corporate lawyers. Last night James was hosting a large Halloween party at which thirteen are confirmed dead, and another thirty people are still hospitalized at this time with four of those in critical condition all suffering from what appears to be drug induced fear, though at this time, no drugs were found in the victims’ systems. As with the last attack, the Scarecrow, as the GCPD are referring to the culprit, left a message for a woman named Harleen. The message was as follows:

To My Lady Crow:

“I told my love I told my love

I told her all my heart
Trembling cold in ghastly fears

Ah she doth depart.”

If you have any information about the Scarecrow or this Lady Crow, please contact the GCPD at this number…”

*

Harley stumbled. She felt a wave of nausea wash over her. Lady Crow...Lady Crow...a sweat broke out over her. It couldn’t be him...it simply couldn’t.

Harley turned as the room around her began to fade, darkness around the edges of her vision. Her chin began to tremble. No...no it couldn’t be him...but Lady Crow… Tears began to fall down her cheeks as she sank to the floor of the kitchen. She felt so weak, scared like a child. Suddenly the shadows were so dark, she could hear the sound of crying, screaming, the sounds, the smells of Arkham Asylum came back in a rush.

Harley began to tremble harder.

*

Jack woke up slowly. His eyes fluttered as he came more fully awake. The bed was colder. He frowned opening his eyes fully only to see a curtain of green, his hair having fallen in front of his eyes. He pushed the hair aside to see that the reason the bed was cold was that Harley wasn’t in it. Jack frowned more deeply. He pushed himself up and looked around the room. No Harley.

Jack glanced toward the bathroom, but the door was open and he heard no sound of running water.

“Harley?” he called out thinking that maybe she was taking a bath, but no one answered him. Jack looked confused as he swung his legs off the bed and rose to his feet, the sheet falling away from his pale, naked body. He walked to the bathroom, but as he had already realized, no Harley. He went ahead and relieved himself, reaching down to grab his bright gold boxers off the floor as he walked past them and headed to the door. He only stopped long enough to hop into the boxers before he opened the door and headed downstairs.

“Harley?” he could smell coffee had been brewing and, as he made his way down the stairs, he heard the sound of the radio playing. His heart started to hammer against his chest as he began to feel that crawling feeling of fear up his spine. Where was his wife?

“Harley?” Jack looked into the living room, but there was no indication that she had been there. He made his way toward the kitchen, the scent of coffee growing stronger along with the sounds of the radio. He could see the tray, with toast lying partly on the plate that set on the tray, no butter or jam on them. Two cups for coffee, a tea pot, but no Harley.

“Harley?” Jack called her name again, trying not to panic. He reached over and turned the radio off looking around the kitchen. That was when he heard the sounds of crying. Not just crying, but muffled sobbing.

Jack tilted his head listening. The sounds seemed to be coming from one of the cabinets. Jack walked over to the large lower cabinet. It took up a large space on one side of the oven, with double doors under the marble counter top, big enough for someone to hide in. The crying was definitely coming from in there. He dropped into a crouch on the balls of his bare feet and grabbed the handles of the two doors. He waited only a fraction of a second before he pulled them slowly open.
Inside was Harley. She had her arms wrapped around her legs, her face buried against her knees.

Jack reached in slowly to stroke her hair. “Harley, pumpkin--what’s wrong?”

Harley sniffled, but she didn’t look up.

Jack’s long pale fingers brushed her shoulder. “Harley, sweets, tell me what’s wrong.”

Harley looked up and Jack’s heart felt like he had been stabbed in the chest. His girl looked scared, her light blue eyes were ringed in red and slightly swollen. She didn’t look simply scared, he realized, she looked terrified.

When she saw Jack, Harley launched herself at him, nearly knocking Jack off his feet. Jack dropped back onto his rear catching her in his arms at the same time. He held his wife tightly as Harley sobbed into his shoulder.

“Oh puddin, puddin, he’s back...he’s back…” Harley choked on her words breaking down into fresh sobs.

“Who’s back sweets? What are you talking about?” Jack shifted so Harley could wrap her legs around his waist and sit on his lap. She wrapped herself tightly around him, holding on as if her life depended on it. He stroked his fingers along her spine tenderly, while his other hand combed through her hair. He could feel that she was shaking. “What is it pumpkin, what happened?” Jack’s voice was soft and soothing. He leaned back a little so he could better see her face, his fingers gently caressed her hair back behind her ear before he stroked her cheek and chin. “Tell me what’s up.”

Harley looked into his blue eyes. He gave her such a sweet encouraging smile, her puddin, her Jack, her Joker. “Oh puddin…” she said softly. “It’s Crane--he’s back.”

Jack frowned in confusion, but a coldness dripped down his spine at the thought of that madman.

“On the radio, there was an attack last night at some Halloween party by a man dressed like a scarecrow. They said it was the second such attack. He left a message puddin, a message for Lady Crow.”

Jack’s voice was dangerously quiet. “What?”

“Lady Crow, he left a message for Lady Crow...oh puddin, he left a message for me!” Harley’s eyes began to tear up again. “He’s alive and he’s looking for me!” “Shh...shh...Harley...shh...it’s all right. I won’t let that monster touch you, I promise.” Jack cupped her face with both hands. “He is never going to touch you sweets, not while I’m around.”

Harley stared back at him, her voice a whisper. “You promise?”

Jack nodded slowly. “I will never let anyone hurt you. Crane has to get through me first and I promise you, I’ll gut him. I’ll rip him apart slowly sweets. He’ll suffer every painful moment.”

Harley stared back at him for a few beats of her heart before she wrapped her arms around him and kissed him. The kiss was filled with desperation and fear, but also with plenty of lust and need. She needed him, needed the safety of his arms, the comfort of his body; Harley needed to be part of him. She rolled her tongue against his, her hands threading into his green hair, wrapping her fingers tightly in his thick green locks while her kisses moved from his lips to his chin. She pulled his head back by his hair, her tongue sliding down his throat followed by her teeth pressing into the column of his throat, sucking hard on the soft skin leaving a deep purple bruise against the paleness of his flesh.
Jack groaned, giving himself over to his wife, giving himself willingly to her, whatever it was that she needed from him, he would give her. While she focused her attention on savaging his throat with her teeth and tongue, Jack reached between them and undid the buttons of her shirt, his agile fingers moving quickly. He shoved the shirt over her shoulders causing Harley to gasp. He dipped down, the shirt falling away from her breast. He wrapped his hands around her ribs and yanked her closer, his mouth covering her breasts in licks and bites. He grabbed one breast, pressing it up to roll his tongue over her hard nipple.

Harley groaned arching her back, her hands dropping to his shoulders, holding onto him as he sucked at her nipple, switching breasts to do the same, scraping his teeth over her nipple causing goosebumps to race across Harley’s flesh. She made a moan of pleasure, her fingers pressing into his shoulders in a firm grip.

He dragged his tongue up from her breast to her throat, where he latched on to the soft spot between her throat and collarbone and sucked. Harley moaned, wrapping her arms around him as Jack worried at her skin, sucking and tugging with his teeth while his hands slid up to cup her breasts, squeezing gently, his thumbs playing with her hard sensitive nipples. Harley arched her back, moaning low and deep. Jack sent ripples of pleasure through her body as he sucked against the porcelain white of her skin, pulling away to smile at the purple bruise he left shining brightly against the white of her bleached skin.

Suddenly Jack stopped what he was doing and stood, yanking Harley up with him, lifting her by her waist and placing her on the edge of the cabinet she had been hiding under. He pulled the shirt the rest of the way off of her, tossing it to the floor to leave her naked, except for the socks on her feet. He pulled her close, one hand caressing her hair, his other hand around her waist as he whispered to her.

“Tell me what to do Harley, tell me what you want.” Jack caressed her cheek with his, kissing her ear before he pulled back to look at her. “Tell me what you need.” Harley reached out and laid her hands on his waist. She stared back at him, her light blue eyes intense, the passion and lust burned in her gaze as she leaned into him, kissing him slowly. Her lips and tongue moved with his, taking her time to enjoy his kiss, the warmth of his mouth, the soft slide of his tongue. She pulled away from his mouth, leaned her forehead against his, and whispered with intensity. “I want to fuck you puddin. I want to fuck you until you’re weak. I want to fuck you hard and fast until you scream.”

Jack smiled slowly.

She pulled him close again, her hands sliding around to cup his head and kissed him hard enough that their lips smashed together. Jack could feel the slight sting as she pressed his lips back against his teeth. He tasted a hint of blood as she cut his lips against his teeth, but he didn’t care. The mix of pain and pleasure only made him harder, his body reacting with the need to bury himself inside her. She grabbed his hair again, thrusting her tongue into his mouth, all gentleness gone as her fingernails scraped against his scalp in her desperation.

Jack put his hands down on the cabinet next to her thighs, holding on as they kissed each other almost savagely. Harley yanked him forward more, kissing and biting him, making a soft little growl of need.

Harley made another soft growl before she broke the kiss releasing him briefly, which was followed by her grabbing his waist and yanking him closer. Jack went willingly closer only to have Harley bite down on his shoulder. It wasn't a soft sensual bite, but a full bite, her teeth pressed into his shoulder with a sharp sting that made Jack’s erection throb. Harley reached down between them, sliding her hand into Jack’s boxers and grabbed him, cupping his swollen member and his testicles at once, then squeezing him. He moaned in response as she cupped him and squeezed again followed by a slow, warm massage.

Jack groaned when she squeezed once more before she wrapped her hand firmly around him. She stroked up his length, her thumb caressed the head of his erection. As she held him, Harley sucked on the bite mark at his shoulder. Jack panted in response, thrusting his hips, willing her to pull and thrust her hand up and down his length, wanting her to, needing her to rub her hand on him to squeeze him, hurt him.

Harley slid her hand up his length, squeezing the head of his shaft, enjoying the heat of him combined with the velvet softness of his skin. She slid her thumb and forefinger over the velvet soft head of his penis while she bit him again, closer to his throat. The sensation made Jack’s grunt turn into a groan. He grabbed her knees and spread her legs while being careful to keep her balanced on the counter.

He laid his hand against her, his palm pressed against her wet sex before he slowly stroked his fingers across her, feeling her wet and warm. She jerked her one arm that was around his shoulders tighter, her hand on his erection jerked upward as she bit him again, this bite a little further up from the first. The mix of pain tempered by the pleasure of her touch caused Jack to gasp leaning into her, his fingers pressing harder against her.

Jack purred. “You’re so wet Harls. So hot…” He slid a finger into her and Harley groaned. “Puddin...now...I need you now!”

Jack chuckled. “Yes ma’am.”

He pulled his finger away and pulled his boxers down. Harley released him and leaned back on her hands, her legs wide. Jack held himself, sliding the head of his erection up and down her letting the wetness of her coat the head of his shaft.

Harley groaned and gave her husband a fierce look. “Uuhh...now!”

Jack chuckled, positioning himself before he pulled her toward the very edge of the countertop and thrust into her. Together they cried out as their bodies connected. Jack leaned into her, his hands on the counter shoved into her with grunts and hisses as the pleasure of being inside her washed over him. He leaned against her, holding still for a moment just to enjoy the feeling of being inside her, to have her surrounding him. He wrapped one arm around her, holding her close. He slowed his movements, easing back before slowly diving into her again. Jack closed his eyes, resting his cheek against her head.

Harley squeezed her muscles, tightening her entire body around him, but she was becoming frustrated. He was moving too slow, too gentle. When Jack leaned into her, Harley wrapped herself around him, her legs went around his waist at the same time she grabbed his shoulders. She shoved, practically leaping off the counter. Jack yelped in surprise as Harley’s hips thrust forward, her legs wrapping tightly around his waist, her hands grabbed his shoulders and she used her entire weight to knock him off balance, riding him down to the floor.

Jack’s arms cartwheeled for a second or two, but Harley wrapped her hands around the back of his head, cradling his skull, unlocking her feet at the last moment to hit the floor first and soften the blow. Jack’s back hit the floor hard, but not so hard that it knocked the air painfully from his lungs, only a startled burst of air and a grunt Jack’s gasp was followed by a laugh that he didn’t get to finish. Harley leaned in and crushed his mouth with hers. She had her legs bent, facing forward and she ground into him, thrusting herself forward. She released his head and arched back, reaching behind her to grasp his knees, spreading her legs wide like the petals of an opening flower, allowing her to bounce up and down and give in to her lust, riding Jack as if she was going to grind him into the floor.

Jack groaned, the pleasure was almost painful and watching her was nearly too much, she was so beautiful, her white hair down around her shoulders falling like snow, the bounce of her breasts, her smooth soft skin like unbroken porcelain. She thrust her hips and her entire body rolled, arching, beautiful he thought as he held on, letting her take everything she could from him. He reached up and placed his hands on her knees for a few moment as she thrust and bounced on him making him gasp with each of her movements, his fingers digging into her knees struggling to hold on. She was on full display for him, her swollen clitoris, his shaft inside her, wet and slick from her. He closed his eyes, clenching his jaw, struggling to hold back, but when she had said she wanted to fuck him she hadn’t been exaggerating. He slid his hands down along the tender delicate skin of the inside of her thighs down to her clitoris. He rubbed his thumbs against her while Harley thrust faster.

Harley thrust herself down on him, his stroking her clit combined with the way he felt, deep inside her almost took her breath away. She was doing all the fucking, controlling how fast, how much. She wanted, needed to take from him; take, take, take. She gasped and her grip on his legs tightened. She pressed her fingers into his skin knowing she was probably bruising him. She cried out, arching back as a quake began small, but spread becoming bigger, more intense. She groaned loudly as he pressed his thumbs against her.

He rubbed her clitoris, rolling his thumbs and watching her, reading her expression, feeling her tense, that moment when her entire body arched back and she cried out, flooding him when she came. The wet sounds of their bodies thrusting together made Jack arch, and a wave of intensity rolled over them both.

Jack groaned, his fingers pressing into her skin as he struggled to hold back, but his erection was throbbing so hard he wanted to let go so badly. He bit hard on his bottom lip, holding back watching her bounce on him in complete abandon. He smiled as he watched her, listening to her, the way her panting became high pitched, the glow of her eyes under her thick lashes. She was so goddamn beautiful he thought.

Harley dropped forward, her hands coming down on either side of his head with a loud smack, and her hair fell like a snowy curtain around them. She continued to move with a hard determination to fuck her puddin hard, thrusting and rolling her hips at the same time crushing her mouth to his, her fingers grabbing hold of his green hair, holding his head down to the floor while she moved. She kissed him again, forcing her tongue into his mouth.

Jack wrapped his arms around her, kissing her back just as hard, biting at her tongue and lips, his fingers digging into her back before sliding down to her hips. He bent his knees to allow him to thrust up to meet her rolling hips, needing to feel her cum again. Needing to have her wash over him again.

Harley ground down on Jack. she pulled back to catch her breath kissing. “Oh puddin...I love you...I love you…” She wanted to fuck him harder, to take more from her husband. She bit her way along his jaw, alternating bites with long licks of her tongue all the way down his throat, thrusting harder and faster as another orgasm came racing up from deep inside.

Jack held onto her hips, whimpering just a little as his coming orgasm built and he fought it, but it was becoming painful. His need to let go was quickly rushing beyond his control.

“Harley...uh Harley I...I can’t...I love you, my girl...” He panted holding on tightly to her hips as if he were afraid that his orgasm or hers would cause him to lose touch with her as if he might just spiral away from her if he didn’t hold on.
Harley wrapped herself around him, her legs squeezed tight against him, and her arms slid under his shoulders at the moment her orgasm threatened to split her in half. She cried out, her body rocked with the pleasure of her climax. Jack followed quickly behind her, his body set itself free and he filled her, letting everything go with a moan that came from deep inside.

*

Joker leaned his bare back against the cabinet and exhaled, watching the cigarette in his hand burn while additional smoke flowed slowly from between his lips. Harley was curled against his side, her arm wrapped around him, her eyes closed. She was breathing slow and steady. He was sure she had fallen asleep.

He glanced down at Harley with a tender smile. His beautiful girl, his murderous kitten, his harlequin.

She was calmer now, but he knew that wasn’t going to last. There would only have to be another report of the Scarecrow and she would fall apart again. Hopefully the nightmares about Arkham would not resurface to mix with the ones she still had about that night at the factory, but he knew the chances were slim of that...now that she believed Crane was back, and looking for her. He just couldn’t have that.

Joker narrowed his eyes. He hated anyone who hurt his girl, but he had a special kind of hate for Dr. Crane, a very, very special kind of hatred that he would cultivate and release when the time was right.
Lime and Vodka

Chapter Notes

I hope my Russian is correct. Had to use several sites so I'm not sure!

The soft mellow sounds of Nat King Cole’s voice filled the bedroom as the soft golden light of a late afternoon sun filtered in through the curtains. Jack was only partly dressed, with his white dress shirt open showing off his pale, snow white skin and the dark blue and green boxers he wore stood out in contrast to the same pale skin. His green hair fell loose around his face, still slightly damp from a shower. He smiled gently down at Harley, his blue eyes bright, surrounded by rings of darkness as he gazed at her in his arms. Her long white hair curled slightly as it dried along her porcelain shoulders and back. She was dressed only in her red lace bra and panties and nothing else.

Harley had her hand resting against Jack’s shoulder, her other hand held tightly in his as he moved her gradually around the room in time to the music.

Jack smiled and sang softly along with Cole while he danced her gently around their bedroom.

“It’s very clear our love is here to stay
Not for a year but ever and a day
Oh the radio and a telephone, movies that we know
May just be passing fancies and in time may go
But oh my dear our love is here to stay Together we’re going on a long, long way
In time the rockies may crumble, Gibraltar may tumble
They're only made of clay but our love is here to stay…”

He grinned as he spun her slowly away from him, keeping the tips of his fingers lightly against her fingertips. Harley smiled, turning back around to take his other hand, the two of them swaying together to the song before Jack pulled her back into the circle of his arms. Harley laid her head against his shoulder and Jack pressed his cheek against her hair closing his eyes. They almost looked like two ghosts dancing in the room’s shadowy light, moving in and out of the shadows, their bodies pressed together and their hands clasped. Jack held her gently, swaying gracefully back and forth with her in his arms, the music carrying them back and forth. His voice was a whisper, his lips against her hair singing gently.

“It's very clear our love is here to stay
Not for a year but ever and a day
The radio and the telephone and the movies that we know
May just be passing fancies and in time may go…”

The music came to a gentle end, but Jack kept swaying in place with Harley in his arms. He was reluctant to let her go. He closed his eyes focusing on the feel of her in his arms, the scent of her hair, her skin. His girl, his one and only, the only one in all of Gotham--in all the world--who knew him, loved him...he belonged to her just as much as she belonged to him.

He whispered against her hair. “It’s you and me against the world Harls, just you and me.”

Harley, her eyes closed whispered back, “Always puddin, always,” which made him smile and tighten his hold on her.

After a few long moments of continuing to dance, Jack sighed. “I suppose we should get dressed sweets. We have murders to plot and empires to topple.” A soft chuckle followed the statement while he turned them in a full circle.

Harley still had her eyes closed, enjoying the feel of their bodies pressed together, the gentle swaying, the smell of him. “Mm...I suppose you’re right puddin.” Though she made no effort to move out of his arms.

Jack kissed her ear and gently eased her up; he spun her out one more time stepping lightly around to pull her back, wrapping his arms around her.

“Always be mine pumpkin?” he asked with a smile, looking down on her in his arms.

Harley grinned up at him. “Always puddin. There is no force on earth, or in Gotham that could keep me away from you.”

Jack chuckled and tightened his embrace before he kissed her, the kiss long and lingering. He rubbed his nose against hers when he pulled away from her lips and softly whispered. “Always my girl and I will always be your puddin.”

Harley giggled before she pushed herself up on her toes, her lips meeting his for a deep, passionate kiss.

*

Several minutes later, Jack was sitting in the living room of his home with Harley on his lap. Frost, Jason and Zsasz sat across from him, all of them sipping hot chocolate.

Jack had his arms protectively around Harley.

Jack sipped his steaming chocolate with a grin, placing the cup on the coffee table before he spoke. “All right darlings, we have two things to discuss tonight. One: I want another attack on Falcone...we still have two pawns in play and I want to use one soon, I want to place another crack in The Roman wall. And two: I need one of you to start looking into this Scarecrow asshole. I want to know who he is and what he wants.” Jack’s eye twitched slightly. He knew exactly what Crane wanted because that was who the Scarecrow was. Crane, returned from the dead, just like he and Harley had returned...Jack’s hand that rested on Harley’s lap, slowly rolled into a fist on her thighs. Harley reached over without a word and took his hand, her gentle touch softly caressed his tightened fist until he relaxed.

Frost glanced at Jason and Zsasz, the three men sharing an unspoken communication before Frost turned back to Jack. “We’re on it Boss.”
Jack smiled, tightening his grip on Harley as he leaned back in his seat, his red lips spreading across his face in a sinister smile. “Good.”

*

Sofia waited outside her father’s office, running her hands down the silver pinstripe skirt of her business suit making sure she was every inch the professional. She ran a hand over her shining slick hair catching the attention of the bodyguards stationed outside the office. Both were very large men who were doing their best not to stare at the boss’s daughter, but Sophia didn’t pay much attention to the two men; her mind was on her father. She was annoyed that he was conducting this meeting with her, the first time they had seen each other in months, like a goddamn business meeting with any of his clients or any of the hired thugs, lesser family members, other members of the mob...and not his own daughter, the heir to his empire. She took a breath through her nose and let it out through her lips, she was not going to let her father get under her skin. He called her home because he needed her and she was going to make sure he remembered that.

She only had to wait another couple of seconds before the door was opened by one of her many, many cousins, Luca. He smiled at her as he held the door open.

“Your father will see you now.”

Sophia didn’t bother to give him a look or a smile, she just walked on past Luca like he didn’t exist because for her, he didn’t. She marched into the office, her heels making a smart click clack against the floor.

Her father was sitting behind his desk staring out at the Gotham skyline. He had been released from the hospital yesterday, but he still looked pale and she could see a slight tremor around his mouth. He took a sip from the glass he held, filled to the brim with amber liquid. She made her way across the office to stop in front of her father’s desk schooling her features into something neutral as she did so.

“Daddy,” she said with as little emotion as she could. Her father looked different, as if a small part of him had been broken. She had heard about the attack on the party that he was holding for Mayor Hill, about the rather graphic death of his girlfriend. She also heard on the news about the disappearance of her father’s lawyer.

Carmine turned to look at her. His eyes looked haunted, though his voice betrayed nothing. “I’m glad you’re here Phia. I have some news I need to share with you...and I need your help.” He gestured toward a chair that was positioned at the corner of his desk.

Sophia frowned deeper, but she stepped over to the chair and pulled it in front of her father’s desk before she sat down, crossing her legs and folding her hands, her back ramrod straight. She refused to betray herself with any sign of weakness, least of all to her father.

Falcone sipped his drink before he spoke again. “Of course I told you about your brother and I assumed you heard what happened at the party with Gigi?”

Sophia nodded. “I have. I also heard that your lawyer is missing.”

Carmine took another drink. Sophia wondered how many it would take for her father to get drunk. She wrinkled her nose in annoyance with him. Drinking in the middle of the day over some little slut he was seeing who was only interested in him for his money and power annoyed her. Sophia would never say it out loud, but she was glad the bitch was dead. Maybe now her father could put his attention where it needed to be.
Carmine sighed. “Your mother, Louisa is missing too. I think that freak, The Joker, has her. I managed to keep it out of the papers here. It helps that she didn’t live directly in Gotham.”

Sophia sucked in a breath. “What? Why did you wait until now to tell me?!” She resisted the urge to stand up, instead grasping the arms of her seat to keep herself from standing up, the momentary display of emotion on her part irritated her, but she quickly brought herself under control.

Falcone examined his drink before he spoke. “One: because I didn’t want to worry you. And two: because I was sure we would have her back before you returned to Gotham.”

Sophia said in a low and menacing tone, “Just like you got Mario back.”

Falcone narrowed his eyes at her daughter. “I brought you and your brother here to protect you, because of what happened to Mario, but also because we need to present a united front to the families. You are now the next in line Sophia. I need to show the families that the empire is safe and that you are ready to take the reins of power when I’m gone.” He took a sip of his drink and set it down on the desk; the ice in the glass made a light tinkling noise. Her father stared hard at her, the old gruff mob boss back in his eyes. “I need you to be here, learn the business, to learn everything I was teaching your brother and to help me keep our hold on Gotham. We are not going to let this clown destroy what we built.”

“Even if we have to sacrifice my mother?” Sophia’s voice was cold.

Carmine looked genuinely unhappy as he spoke, his voice soft yet firm. “Even if we have to sacrifice your mother.”

*

Bruce was smiling. Something Dick found weird; more than weird. If the earth had opened up and swallowed Gotham he wouldn’t have been any more surprised than he was by Bruce’s jovial attitude at the moment.

Dick, who was sitting on the couch doing homework, glanced over to Barbara who was currently sharing the couch with him. She was on the phone texting with someone, looking as if she might slide off the couch at any moment, her slender legs were out in front of her resting on the coffee table, a pair of pink converse on her feet. She looked cute he thought, in her purple sweater and jeans, her short hair sticking up from the hat she had removed when she had come over (to babysit...Dick couldn’t believe Bruce had her over to watch him! They were almost the same age! What did Bruce think he was going to run off and do? Fight crime without him? Hunt down the Joker? Or was it that deep down Bruce simply didn’t trust him? Any of those options annoyed Dick.)

Bruce checked himself in the mirror by the apartment’s front door.

Dick watched Bruce from the corner of his eyes in surprise. Bruce hadn’t been on a date since he had come to live with him. He wasn’t sure why, but it made Dick suspicious of this woman Bruce was seeing tonight, Selina Kyle...or maybe he was just being a jerk. He shrugged and went back to his school work.

Bruce picked up his keys as he walked toward the door. “Barbara, remember: no video games until he has finished his homework.”

Dick glanced up from his math. “You know I’m right here?”

Bruce smiled. “I know. I’ll try not to be too late getting back.”

Barbara turned and waved. “Have fun.”
Bruce smiled. “Thank you.”

After Bruce left, Dick focused back on his homework and Barbara her phone. After a few minutes of intense work Dick asked without looking up. “You ever think of getting out on the streets in uniform instead of sitting behind in the cave stuck behind a computer screen? I asked Alfred once, but he said he was too old.”

Barbara glanced over at him and shrugged. “I’ve thought about it, but I don’t think Bruce would want more than one partner.”

Dick set his pencil down as he sat up. “What if I was gone?”

Barbara frowned. “Whaddaya mean?”

Dick shrugged. “I don’t know, what if something happened to me and I couldn’t fight crime with Batman anymore, I was paralyzed or dead…”

Barbara frowned. “Don’t be morbid Dick.”

“I’m not, just curious.” He said watching her.

Barbara frowned and shrugged. “I don’t know, I suppose if you were gone and he asked me…”

“What if he never asked you?” Dick asked.

Barbara made a face. “Then I definitely would. I think Bruce needs a partner. I mean I didn’t know him before but from what Alfred said…he needs someone around to keep him human. If you weren’t there then yeah, I would get myself a costume and hit the streets.”

Dick smiled. “I’m glad. I hate to think of Bruce alone. I don’t think he would do well...especially after everything with his brother.”

Barbara smiled then gestured at his homework. “You should finish up, especially if you want me to beat your ass on Call of Duty.”

Dick chuckled and picked up his pencil as he replied. “You wish.”

*

Across town the sounds of Jules Massenet’s Elegie for soprano, cello and piano played loud enough that Crane’s neighbors below him would occasionally strike the floor followed by muffled yells, but Crane simply ignored them.

He stood silently in the middle of his kitchen, dressed only in a pair of dark slacks with his eyes closed as he listened to the music. Crane imagined his Harleen singing, his Lady Crow finally fully formed and his...his lady. He smiled softly and opened his eyes.

Across from him sat a man, perhaps around Crane’s age, though he was duct taped to a chair. The man was naked except for the white briefs he wore and the tape which was wrapped around his entire body, but leaving his head free with only a piece of duct tape across his mouth. The man was attractive, like Crane, but while Crane was lighter, this man was darker, with dark brown hair and eyes, skin that showed this man had spent either a lot of time outdoors and in a tanning booth. He had the muscled physique of someone who spent enough time in the gym to stay fit, but not so big he could be called a bodybuilder.
Crane smiled at the man as he stepped closer. “I do so love this piece, don’t you Dr. Hammer?”

The duct taped man struggled against the tape, but to no avail; he was stuck fast with no hope of escape.

Crane nodded. “Yes, it is a beautiful piece, but the singer is only sub-par. Now once my Lady Crow is with us, she will sing like a nightingale. She is beautiful, an angel, my perfect nightmare with the eyes of a angel, her hair like the...no.” He tilted his head to the side in thought. “It was like the sun, but now...she is like a ghost, an image of beauty and death. Her soul is like mine and her wings are the black ink of a crow’s wings.” Crane smiled as he turned and walked over to the kitchen counter. “She is everything to me. I would do anything to have her for myself.” He sighed as he stopped at the kitchen counter where he picked up a bottle that contained a bright yellow liquid. Next to the bottle was a syringe. Crane used the syringe to break the seal, plunging the needle into the yellow liquid and then slowly filled the syringe. He set the bottle down and held up the syringe to examine the contents before he flicked the cylinder with a satisfied smile.

He set the syringe back down on the counter and turned toward his guest. “You really should have agreed to the drug trials Dr. Hammer. It would have been so much easier, but I do understand, being a professor of neurobiology and all I’m sure you think you know all there is to know about the workings of the brain. But you really should be more open minded to other fields, such as mine. However, you are fortunate I have seen your rejection as just a challenge.” Crane smiled while Dr. Hammer struggled, his cries muffled behind the tape. “I aim to bring Gotham to its knees with fear...to let their fears kill them...and I will do it all with my Lady Crow at my side.” Hammer continued to struggle, but Crane ignored him. “Did you know? I’m sure you do, that the brain itself feels no pain? So interesting isn’t it, but fear...hmm...fear is so different. Fear is a driving force in so much of what we do.” Crane walked back over and picked up the syringe. “Some say fear is the price of imagination, fear’s purpose was to protect us, but for many fear has become a prison. I think we should open that prison and let the fear escape!” Crane turned around holding the syringe up as Dr. Hammer began to struggle more.

Crane smiled softly. “Let us see how good your imagination is Dr. Hammer.”

*

The Gotham night was chilly.

Harley was bundled up in a plush pale pink coat and her white candy colored dipped hair spread down the back of her coat from under the flopping pink and white knit cap she wore. The colorful woman giggled as she blew out her breath watching as the warm air from her lungs turned to mist. She smiling looking up at Jack, the dark framed glasses she wore did little to distract from the light blue of her eyes as she wrapped her arms more snugly around Jack’s arm as he led her down the street. Wearing a dark grey overcoat, black gloves and a dark grey ivy cap over his green hair and a pair of tinted lenses glasses, Jack returned her smile as they strolled down the sidewalk toward an old restored theater where several people were milling about outside or going inside, talking and laughing.

They were both “in disguise” which consisted of just the glasses (while their milk white skin might have drawn attention other places, this theater had enough “odd” looking people working or coming to the show that Jack and Harley blended into the crowd) and they headed into the theater to enjoy a night together, a simple night that lacked plots to take over Gotham or thoughts of revenge; just a night together, enjoying the company of each other.

They were here to see a musical comedy call Imbible: A Spirited History of Drinking (which included three free cocktails). Alex had bought them tickets for tonight since he was friends with the director of the little production and had helped with some of the songs since, as he told Jack, he had an intimate relationship with alcohol.

*

Nikolai Davidovitch was leaning against the wall near the bathroom waiting on his girlfriend. She had dragged him to this show, which he had only agreed to see because she had said there were free drinks involved. He sighed, running a hand over his bald head as he waited for her, eyeing a few of the other women. He grinned when he saw the one in the pink coat with the porcelain skin. She had slipped her coat off which gave Nikolai a great view of her ass. She had white hair, the ends of which were dipped pink and blue making him think of marshmallow sweets. She was wearing a pair of tight white pants that hugged her ass and legs nicely, with a pair of knee high white heeled boots, and a cute pink sweater that hugged her breasts nicely too. He grinned in appreciation as she made his groin tighten and his mouth water, a sweet little frosted package. The man the little pink confection was with, Nikolai noted, was pale like her, slim, though there was something about the way the man moved that set off his alarms. He had the moves of a predator, a man who knew how to handle himself. Nikolai recognized that in the man’s walk, the way he looked around and the possessive way he kept a hand always on his woman...Nikolai dealt with men who were predators like this man all the time in his line of work, but as the man put his arm out to the woman, Nikolai realized that the white of their skin wasn’t a trick of the light, the two were more than simply pale, their skin seemed luminous in the theater lights. And as the man and woman moved into the theater Nikolai caught sight of the man’s dark green hair under the hat he wore, the light had caught the hair just right.

“No…” he whispered in surprise. Nikolai might not have taken notice of the man’s hair since there were many people in Gotham with unusual hair colors, but that combined with the white skin....the predator vibe he was getting from watching the man...

All of them, what was left of the Odessa mob, The Hammer, the Ivgene Clan as well as all the other clans and families that fell under the umbrella of the Falcone family, had been given an image of the man that was harassing The Roman, the man who had attacked The Roman without fear of reprisal, the man who had appeared on TV threatening The Roman and the Batman. A man who clearly wished for a early death...a green haired clown named the Joker.

Nikolai could be wrong, but he didn’t think he was...this man had to be the Joker...Nikolai pulled out his cellphone and quickly brought up his brother’s number. The phone rang twice before being answered.

“Vassily here.”

“Vass--it’s Nikolai. Remember that man, the one Falcone offered a million for anyone to bring him? The one who calls himself the Joker? Well brother, I think our luck has just changed!” Nikolai chuckled watching as the Joker and his woman disappeared into the theater.

*

Jack spent much of the show simply watching Harley. The show was fun and the drinks were good, but watching his girl’s reactions, watching every expression cross her face, the sound of her laughing so hard that tears were running down her cheeks, and just the way she held his hand, turning to look over at him, that was the best show on earth. He grinned, chuckling when a particular line in a song had her laughing so hard she couldn’t seem to stop, even looking over at him had her breaking down into a fit of giggles. She pulled her glasses off trying to wipe her tears without smearing her makeup, turning to smile at him, a smile that reached her eyes. She was so damn beautiful, he thought.
Jack felt his heart speed up each time she smiled, when she turned and looked at him with those eyes. He wanted to pull her onto his lap and kiss her, to run his hands over her body, to feel that soft skin of hers under his hands, to hear her laugh while he was inside her, to feel that ripple run from her into his body, just to hold her and gaze into her eyes. She never judged, she understood him like no ever could...from the moment they met, she was his girl. She was so beautiful, every part of her and she was his...his girl, his partner, his lover, his friend. He grinned holding her hand up to his lips and kissed her knuckles. Harley turned to look at him tilting her head as he kept staring at her.

She blushed and leaned closer whispering. “What are you doing?”

“Admiring you.” Jack grinned wide at her.

Harley reached out and brushed a fingertip over his red lips. “I love you Jack. I love you so much.”

Jack kissed her finger. “Wanna go for a walk after this? I saw a late night coffee shop down the street.”

Harley giggled, blushing and feeling like she did when they first began to date. “I would love that Jack.”

Jack’s smile spread across his face.

*

Outside one of the main homes of Anatoli Knyazev, a man with a knit cap pulled low over his thinning hair, Mikey Sullivan sat in a snow frosted car chewing on the end of a cigar that he couldn’t light. He was freezing, tired and bored. He was on day five of watching Knyazev’s home, (he had drawn the short straw) waiting for any sort of movement, something that the Sullivans and Rileys could use. The only thing that gave him any comfort was knowing that Nick, Pat and Oscar were all in similar positions, sitting in frozen cars watching the main movers in the Russian gangs.

Mikey was a member of the Sullivan gang, one of two Irish gangs who were under Falcone’s thumb. The Irish families had decided they were tired of being treated like shit under Falcone, no better than dogs, made to do his dirty work, fetching and killing at the Roman’s request. The families had been treated like shit since the day The Roman took over, making himself not just head of the Italians, but of all the mob families in Gotham. He had taken control of the Irish by killing Sean Riley, the head of the Riley family, and forcing two of Gotham’s biggest Irish crime families into service to him, one by getting Michael Sullivan to kiss his ring and by making Johnny Sabatino married Peyton Riley, Sean’s daughter. The whole thing had been a mess.

The worst of it was poor Peyton. She was stuck in a loveless marriage with that fucking Johnny Sabatino when she should have been Mikey’s wife...she was his girl...but to save lives they had both given up on what they wanted.

Mikey fucking hated Carmine Falcone with a passion.

But when word of this man calling himself the Joker was messing with Falcone, threatening to take him down, well the Rileys and Sullivans sat up and listened. It meant Falcone was weak, that someone was taking a stand against him and it meant there might be a chance for some revenge. It had been Mikey’s brother Ryan who had come up with the idea that this might be the time to get themselves out from under Falcone...by starting with the Russians because it had been them, under the leadership of Knyazev, that had helped Falcone take out Sean.

So now, the Irish were looking for a chance, a chance to stick to the Russians, to Falcone, to all the fucking families that served under Falcone...

Except so far, all they had done was sit outside Knyazev’s home and hope for something to happen.

Mikey sighed sticking his hands under his arms for warmth when he saw the front door to Knyazev home open up, the man running outside with a three of his men. A moment later a car came screeching to a halt in the driveway and Knyazev and the three men hopped inside and took off. Mikey frowned in confusion for a moment before he turned the key in the ignition and took off, following Knyazev at a safe distance. He pulled his cell phone out and hit a number. After a couple of rings the phone was picked up.

“Aidan here.”

“Aidan, it’s Mikey. The Russians are on the move, we are on Harrison Street heading south,” Mikey gritted through clenched teeth trying to keep his teeth from chattering.

Aidan sounded confused. “What’s going on?”

“Fuck it Aidan, I don’t know, just that Knyazev left with three of his men. Something’s up and I want a few of our guys just in case this is the opportunity we’ve been waiting for! That okay with you Father Aidan??” Mikey snarled into the phone.

Aidan pouted. “Geez Mikey, ya don’t have to be like that. Calling the boys now.”

“Good!” Mikey tossed the phone down and muttered. “Stupid bleeding thick Geebag.”

* * *

After the show, Jack and Harley strolled down the cold street together. A few light flakes of snow were in the air falling lazily, more like tiny bits of glitter than snow. Jack had a cigarette dangling from his smiling lips, one arm around his wife’s waist while smoke lazily drifted from the cigarette. Harley was giggling as she sang a part from one of the many songs in the show that she particularly liked, before dissolving into a fit of giggles that had Jack smiling when he had a strange sensation crawl up his back. He glanced over his shoulder, but he didn’t see anyone, just a few random people from the show spreading out from the theater as they all went their separate ways. He frowned, taking a deep drag on his cigarette before taking the cigarette out from between his red lips and letting the smoke drift lazily from his nose. His eyes narrowed as he continued to look around, unable to shake the sensation of being watched. He felt as if something slimy was oozing over his skin, but he didn’t see anything unusual.

Harley glanced up at her puddin when he stopped moving.

“Puddin? Something wrong?”

Jack took another drag on his cigarette and when he spoke, smoke oozed from between his lips

“Don’t know, just...feel like something is off.”

Harley looked around, but saw nothing usual. “Do you want to go home?”

Jack frowned tossing the but of his cigarette down, stamping it out with the toe of his shoe. “Nah, come on.”

They continued to walk, stepping past an alley when someone reached out and grabbed Harley by her arm, yanking her away from Jack and into the darkness of the alley. Harley let out a yelp followed swiftly by the sound of her breath being knocked from her as she was slammed against a wall. Jack had moved after her in the same instant, but that was when a man stepped out, the barrel of a gun held at Jack’s head before slowly being aimed at Harley. The man smiled cheerfully.

“Privet, droog moy. You would be wise not to do anything stupid or your pretty girl will get a bullet in her chest and you will have to watch her die slowly.” The man who spoke was tall with blue eyes and not an unkind smile—despite the situation—with thinning blonde hair and wearing a simple blue suit and matching overcoat. He had causally turned the weapon from Jack to Harley then back to Jack. Jack could see Harley being held against the brick side of the building, her arms over her head as a man on each side of her held her in place. Jack could see the fury in her eyes and that the only reason his pumpkin had stopped struggling was the gun.

The Russian who spoke shrugged. “She is not necessary, no matter how lovely she is, but you--Falcone wants you alive. You are worth a great deal of money and favors for you being brought in alive.” The Russian gestured with the weapon. “I would prefer not to shoot the pretty woman, but it is completely up to you...Joker.” Joker smiled slowly removing his glasses as he glanced at Harley who still didn’t look the least bit scared, though she looked angry enough to bite the throat out of either of the men holding her. Joker smiled winking at her before he brought his attention back at the Russian.

Joker folded his arms slowly across his chest, his gaze taking in that there were at least a dozen men, maybe more, altogether. Either way, it was a lot for the two of them, mostly unarmed, to take.

Joker smiled seeming relaxed, as if this were a simple conversation between friends. “Oh so this is all about Falcone, hm? Did he put a price on my head? Fantastic. And you are?” Joker stood still looking relaxed, as if he were simply having a conversation with a friend. Joker tilted his head. “Mind if I smoke? I’ll move slowly.”

The Russian narrowed his eyes, then nodded with a smile. “Go head, though no funny business.”

Joker smiled and slowly pulled his coat open, he delicately removed the lighter followed by the cigarettes. He went through the ritual of lighting the cigarette slowly, calmly. While he lit his cigarette he noted the men behind their leader. Not good odds when he knew Harley only had a hard plastic baton clipped to her back and he only had the one punching knife in his pocket. The only two things in their favor were the element of surprise and the fact that the man speaking looked to be the only one with a gun, which made sense. Gunshots brought the police, fist fights were less likely to end up with the cops involved, especially when the numbers were in your favor.

Joker took a long drag on his cigarette, letting the smoke out with a sigh before he re-folded one arm across his chest, the other elbow resting on top of his hand. The fingers of one hand very slowly edged into the depths of his coats inside pocket where he kept his cigarettes, touching the knife that rested in the coat inner pocket.

“So who are you? Clearly Russian judging by your accent, but what do you have to do with Falcone?” Joker asked, trying his best not to look directly at Harley, but hoping she knew what to do.

The Russian smiled. “I am Anatoli Knyazev, head of the Russian mob families here in Gotham.”

Jack smiled then, blowing out smoke. “Under Falcone correct? Not really much to be proud of there.”

Anatoli laughed. “Do not think you can convince me to switch sides Joker? I and my men are loyal to Falcone. He has treated us well and is deserving of our loyalty.”
Joker shrugged. “That’s nice, though you will always be what? Number two, three…lower? I mean, Gotham is never going to be yours now is it?”

“Perhaps I do not want Gotham? Is a headache.” Anatoli laughed which caused his men to laugh.

Joker smiled. “Well I suppose someone always has to be in place to do the grunt work.”

He glanced at Harley.

Harley smiled.

She moved swiftly. Her right foot came up off the ground, she kicked up which would have been nearly impossible for someone without gymnastics training and brought the heel of her foot down just as swiftly. The heel of her boot connected to Anatoli’s wrist holding the gun with a hard smacking sound that made Joker wonder briefly if she might not have broken the man’s hand. Anatoli dropped the gun with a yelp of pain. The pistol hit the asphalt and skittered across the lightly snow covered pavement and continued to spin out into the street. Joker didn’t see where the weapon went, but it didn’t matter. The gun was far enough away that it wasn’t going to be useful to Anatoli and was thus, for the moment, out of play. Harley followed her disarming kick by swinging her leg out with a hook kick and catching Anatoli across the ear.

Joker grinned, throwing his cigarette at one of the men holding Harley, pulling his knife out at the same time and feeling a swell of intense love for his girl. She was beautiful to watch and he was proud that she was his girl.

One of the men holding her yelled at his companion, “HOLD HER!!”

He dropped her arm and rushed toward Joker.

The other man, taller than Harley, lean with a tattoo running up the side of his left temple, attempted to grab her other arm, but Harley moved quickly, twisting her body to the side, dragging the man around with her sudden shift. She yanked on the arm that he held with all her strength. She freed herself though the man’s grip caused her shoulder to feel like it was about to be yanked from its socket when he struggled to keep a hold of her. Once she freed her arm, Harley flipped herself backwards onto her hands, her body arching back in a smooth curve, her booted feet coming up and catching the man in the face, breaking his nose and bloodying his lips.

* * *

Jack rushed forward, a large wide smile on his face, his eyes flashing, slightly crazed as his coat flared out behind him. He slashed with the knife, held firmly between his gloved fingers. The Russian leaned back avoiding the quick slashes, through it almost felt to him as if the air left in the wake of the knife was sharp enough to cut through his skin. He twisted to the side and yanked out his own knife.

The man facing Joker grinned. “Hooyesos…”

Joker chuckled. “Ootebya nyet yayeesav.”

The man looked momentarily surprised and confused.

Joker grinned and shrugged. “I had a good education.”

The Russian snarled and slashed at Joker.
Joker threw his left arm up blocking the man’s knife while taking a slash at the Russian’s midsection.

*

Anatoli stood up, blood running down from his ear and nose, holding his wrist against his stomach. He turned to his other men which were simply watching the two fights unsure what to do.

Anatoli snarled. “Govno! Chertovski Zhopy!!! GET HIM YOU IDIOTS!”

Harley threw a couple of hard punches at the man she was facing, her fist creating mush of his already broken nose, her knuckles cutting across his teeth leaving the knuckles of her right hand cut and bloody. The man howled in pain stumbling backwards only to be replaced by another Russian. This one lunged at her, throwing a right hook that caught her across the jaw and knocked her glasses free, breaking the frames. She gasped as pain exploded across her jaw, sending her stumbling back. She tasted the hot, slightly coppery flavor of blood in her mouth. She reached up with her left hand and wiped the drop of blood at the corner of her mouth with a glare that made her attacker take an involuntary step back. Harley grinned and yanked her baton out, flicking her wrist to make the weapon slide out to its full length.

The man facing her snarled. “Cuchka derganaya!”

A couple of his friends rushed over to help their friend, clearly thinking to use numbers to overwhelm her. Harley tightened her grip on her baton with a glare at her opponents. She wasn’t going down without fight and she planned on leaving her mark on every single one of them.

Harley spun, swinging her arm out with the baton as she did, the hard plastic caught two of the men, one across the face and another across the shoulder. She snapped her leg out and kicked another in the chest before she twisted her entire body around to avoid the grabbing hands of another Russian only to shove her elbow into the man’s diaphragm. She grinned, pleased with herself, swinging her body back around as they man fell away to do a hook kick. But this time one of the men was ready for her; he grabbed her calf with both hands stopping her heel from connecting with his face. He sneered at her as Harley looked at him momentarily shocked. That precious second was all that was needed for the other men to grab her, overpowering her.

*

Joker twisted to the side barely avoiding a deep puncture, instead the blade nicked him, cutting through his vest and dress shirt leaving a thin line of red behind. He brought his elbow down on the man’s extended arm, not hard enough to cause any real damage, but enough that the blow prevented the man from getting a deep cut. Jack lashed out with his blade, aiming for the man’s neck. He missed with a killing blow, but at the same time Jack spun to the side delivering a hooked kick that knocked the Russian with the knife back.

A couple of men tried to rush Joker from the side. He thrust out without looking, puncturing the throat of one of the men, his blade slicing through flesh easily, the blade so sharp that it slid into the man’s throat like a sheath. The man’s eyes bugged out in shock at the blade that punctured the side of his throat. He mouthed a few words, but without a sound, as if the Joker had severed his vocal cords. Joker grinned viciously at the man and yanked the blade out, which allowed a waterfall of almost black blood to flow down the man’s front.

Joker chuckled having only started to turn away when a couple of Russians tried to swarm him. Joker leaned forward as he moved, at the last second dropping to a light crouch from which he spun on the balls of his feet, his arm holding the blade flung out from his body cutting through the thigh of one Russian and the groin of another. None of the cuts were deep enough to kill, but it did force those particular men to stumble back.

Joker rose back up on his feet, but he was quickly becoming surrounded. He brought his knife down and held it ready when one of the Russians, armed with his own blade lunged, aiming for a stab in Joker’s shoulder. Joker snapped his free hand up to lift the attacker’s weapon arm up while he stabbed with his punching blade and pushed his small knife into the soft spot of the man’s armpit, burying his blade as deep as it would go before yanking it out in the same breath and shoving the knife blade into the man’s throat, pulling the blade out with fountain of blood following.

One man grabbed Jack’s knife arm and hauled backwards at the same time another grabbed Joker’s other arm and a third Russian grabbed Joker around his neck, all three hauling him backwards. The three men were struggling to keep a hold of Joker when a fourth was forced to help with the surprisingly strong target; the fourth man wrapped his arm around Joker’s waist and pulled Joker backwards. Joker snarled struggling, all four men barely keeping their hold.

Anatoli walked forward, his eyes cold as he glared at Joker. “You should know when to quit govniuk.”

Joker chuckled and said loud enough to make sure everyone heard. “Ebis’ konyom.”

Anatoli snarled and punched Joker across the face. Joker’s head snapped to the side, the impact splitting his lower lip.

Joker laughed. “My girl hits better than you.”

Anatoli scowled and yelled. “Kill the woman and bring the clown!”

Joker looked over to see Harley struggling. One man had his arms around her neck, pulling her backwards, another two held her arms. She was making the three Russians struggle to hold her. One of the men pulled out a knife and stepped toward her, brought the blade up to Harley’s throat, placing the tip just under her left ear.

Joker snarled, his eyes wide and crazed. “NO!”

The sounds of revving engines and screeching tires drew everyone’s attention. The Russians, Harley, and Joker looked to see three large cars pull up near the alley, each one a black sedan, and, almost like clown cars, several men, numbering more than a dozen in all piled out of the cars.

Anatoli muttered. “Ahueyet, what now?”

The men didn’t do anything except spread out blocking the alley from the sidewalk. A couple of them had bats, one even held a shillelagh which would have made Anatoli laugh under different circumstances. One of the men muscled his way to the front of his small group and grinned at Anatoli. He was dressed in a dark blue jacket with a dark blue knit cap pulled low over his unshaven face. Anatoli narrowed his eyes.

* *

Joker glanced over at Harley. She was still being held tightly by the two men holding her arms and the third who had grabbed her around the waist. It was clear they were just barely keeping her under control, which made him hot for her even under the circumstances they were currently in. The man who had been about to hurt her had stopped, dropping his knife and turning his attention, along with the other Russians (well, those still breathing he thought with a grin), to look over at the new arrivals.

Harley’s wide blue eyes met Joker’s and he mouthed, “Wait.”
Harley nodded, her body relaxing just enough that the three men holding her, with their attention also now focused on the newcomers, relaxed their hold. She trusted Joker with her life, and if he said wait, she would wait.

Harley kept a death grip on her baton, the men holding her hadn’t tried to take it from her yet and she noted that Joker still had his knife.

He gave her a quick grin and a wink. He wanted to wait and see how this scene would play out...he had a hunch the cavalry might have just arrived.

*

“Annie.” The man in the knit cap stood a step out from the group of new arrivals, his Irish accent still thick enough to make his speech have a lilt to it. The Irishman smiled as he nodded toward Anatoli’s broken wrist. “Looks like you got a bit of trouble there.”

Anatoli groaned, curling his lips at the nickname Mikey Sullivan always insisted on using and muttered. “Mikey.” Then louder. “What are you doing here? We have this under control, as you can see.”

Mikey smiled, his eyes going to Anatoli’s bleeding ear and broken wrist before switching his gaze to the men who were down, bleeding on the pavement. “You sure mate? Your wrist looks broken, couple of yer men look a bit unwell there.”

Anatoli smiled and shrugged. “Ah you know friend, just a little mishap. We are fine here.”

Mikey smiled and pulled his cigar out of the pocket of his jacket along with some matches. (The Russians and the Irish all tensed, but when Mikey pulled out the cigar everyone calmed. He gave everyone a grin knowing exactly the tension his movements would have caused.) He’d been waiting all night to light this thing. Everyone watched as Mikey lit the cigar he had been chewing on all night. Mikey look a long drag on the fat cigar and smiled as smoke leaked from between his lips.

“I see that--you look in control mate. Don’t he look in control?” Mikey looked over at his men who all laughed in response.

Anatoli narrowed his eyes. “What are you doing here Mikey? No one called Falcone so I know you are not here at his request. So why are you here my friend? Just cruising for a date?” Anatoli’s men, who were holding Joker and Harley gave offhanded laughs, though the tension in their laughter was clear.

Mikey smiled, smoked slowly flowing from his nostrils. “Nah, Falcone don’t know anything about this, and you know an Irishman never has to go looking for a date, the ladies just come to him.” He chuckled before he pointed at his group, Anatoli’s men and Harley and Joker. “We were just out for a ride.”

Mikey took another long drag on his cigar before he spoke. “You see Annie, me and the boys…” Mikey pointed at himself and his men with the cigar. “We been thinking, we aren’t real happy with how Falcone’s been treating all of us. His killing Sean never sat well with any of us.” His men made murmurs of agreement. “Then his going and making poor Peyton marry that asshole...well, we are looking for new management and we have decided to let Falcone go. We want to go in a different direction, looking for a new boss, someone we can respect.”

Joker let out a laugh. “Oh you’re funny!! I like you.”
Mikey grinned at him before returning his attention to Anatoli. “You see Annie, we’ve lost our respect for Falcone, lost it a long time ago and now, we’ve seen the way this clown…” Here he pointed at Joker. “We’ve seen how he’s made a fool of Falcone, so, since we are shopping for a new boss, Joker there seems like a good fit. He’s got the stones to do what needs doing and he ain’t afraid of Falcone.”

Anatoli looked confused. “What are you talking about Mikey? We have him, him and his woman! We are about to take him to see The Roman now! How can you respect that? He let himself be jumped. A clown and a little girl.” The Russian snorted.

Mikey shrugged. “He still killed what…” Mikey straightened up and looked deeper into the ally. “It looks like he and his girl killed, what, three--maybe four--of your men by themselves and unprepared? Plus he has the stones to just walk around Gotham without his gang constantly guardings his ass like Falcone? I respect that, I respect power...besides, Gotham needs a change, we need a change and he…” Mikey pointed at Joker. “Is it.”

Anatoli narrowed his eyes. “So, is that how it’s going to be?”

Mikey shrugged. “‘Fraid so.”

“Eede vhad e sgadie kak malinkey suka.” Anatoli muttered before he snarled. “Fine, I’m sure Falcone will be happy to have you along with this Gad!”

Mikey snarled. “Take ‘em boys!”

Chaos broke out.

Two of the men holding Joker let go to throw themselves at the Irish who suddenly rushed forward, a handful of whom moved to free Joker. Joker grinned and yanked his arms forward surprising the men holding him. They were not only thrown off balance, but they were hit by a couple of incoming members of Mikey’s gang, ripping the two Russians off of Joker’s arms. He stumbled backwards a few steps, slamming into another Irishmen who gave Joker a wide grin and a salute. Joker laughed and saluted right back.

Joker hurried over toward Harley. He could see her for a moment before she was swallowed by the crowd of people in the alley. He kicked a Russian in the knee cap and was rewarded with a cry of pain, then followed that by punching his blade downward in a vicious stab after catching the man by the scruff of his coat, yanking the man down and thrusting his punch blade down into the back of the man’s neck. Joker giggled as the man made a gasping choke before Joker yanked the blade back out in a swift backward thrust of his arm. Drops of bright red blood followed the knife blade out of the body. The liquid red jewels caught some of the lights from the street lamps before dropping down to sprinkle across the slight accumulation of snow, looking like cherry drops against the white. Joker grinned brightly turning his attention back to getting his Harley.

* Once the fighting started Harley lunged forward, taking the two men who held her arms and the one with a hold around her waist, forward with her. The man who had a grip around her throat choked her, but it wasn’t enough to stop her. The sudden shift in her weight caused all of them to stumble. Harley kept her balance only barely, at the same time she threw her elbows back trying to hit the two holding her arm in the chest though the way to two men were holding her arms she barely made any impact on them, definitely not enough to get them to let her go. At the same time she threw her head backwards, though, and she felt the sharp spike of pain as the back of her skull impacted with the man’s nose and his front teeth. The man let out a scream that was followed by a gurgling sound and the loosening of his grip.

She didn’t get a chance to see what had happened as one of the men holding her arms was hit with a bat from a member of the other gang which gave her one focus for her anger. She yanked the other Russian still holding her arm toward her. He let go of her arm with both hands, keeping a painful grip with one hand, his fingers sinking in and pressing painfully against her biceps while he lashed out with his other hand. His fist caught her across the cheek. Harley gasped at the shock of pain.

Her head snapped to the side with a fresh taste of blood in her mouth. She still had her baton which she used to slam down on the hand that still held her arm. He screamed as the durable plastic weapon slammed against his fingers with enough force that Harley felt at least one finger break. She yanked her arm free and swung, the baton catching the man across the face. He snarled in pain, but reached out to grab her around her throat with both hands. Harley hit him hard and fast with her baton, her knuckles bloodless with the effort of keeping a hold of it this entire time and her anger at having her date night with her puddin ruined as she hit the Russian in the face again and again. Despite her vicious strikes, the man kept his hold on her.

Harley finally brought her knee up, the impact of her knee with his groin was enough for force his hands loose. With his grip weakened, Harley brought her arms up and between his to snap her forearms out, breaking his hold on her throat. With a bright sunny smile she placed her hands on his shoulders, her free hand gripping his shoulder in a painful grip as she pushed herself up and over him, landing on her feet and spinning around. She brought her leg up as she dropped down to one hand, the heel of her boot slicing across the man’s cheek. She pushed herself up with her hand, doing a back flip to her feet only to spin her body again, extending the hand with the baton and slamming it across his face again, this time breaking his nose. She grinned at her handiwork, giving him a hard kick to the chest which sent the Russian flying backwards into the crowd.

Joker started to clap. “Oh bravo!! Now that was beautiful!”

Harley spun around to see Joker and squealed. “Puddin!!”

She raced over to him and threw herself into his arms. Joker laughed catching her, wrapping his arms around her and held her close as she pressed her mouth down on his, her tongue immediately sliding between his lips. Joker chuckled, happily holding her, for the moment ignoring the fight around them, his complete attention on kissing her, feeling her body wrapped around his and tasting the blood on her lips.

“Hey, ah Joker.”

Joker sighed breaking his lip lock with Harley though he didn’t let go of her; he continued to hold her unwilling to set her down. Harley didn’t release him either, but kept her arms and legs wrapped around him, occasionally swinging her baton if anyone came too close. Joker laughed swaying a bit as he kept a hold of her.

Mikey smiled, his cigar in the corner of his mouth. He had a black eye forming and a bloody lip, but otherwise he seemed fairly happy. “So ah, Joker sir, you recruiting?”

Mikey ducked as a man, not one of his, went flying over his head.

Mikey took his cigar out and blew out a line of smoke. “You say the word and you have both the Sullivans and the Rileys on your side.”

Joker shifted Harley a bit, nearly toppling over as she hissed and swung at one of the Russians. “You have me at a disadvantage…”
Mikey took Joker’s offered hand. “Mikey Sullivan.”

“Mikey.” The pale man chuckled. “I like it. Well Mikey, you and the rest of your merry group are more than happy to join us.”

Joker and Mikey both twisted out of the way as several men came too close. That was also the moment they all hear the sound of distant sirens.

Joker laughed. “Well it seems our party is about to be broken up. Well Mikey, if you don’t get yourself arrested, get a hold of One-armed Alex, you know who that is?”

Mikey grinned. “I sure the fuck do, everyone knows One-armed Alex, best information man in Gotham.”

Joker chuckled. “He’ll get any messages to me, but consider yourself part of the gang.”

Mikey put his fingers to his knit cap and tipped an imagined brim. “Thank you. You and your lady better get going before the cops get here. I hope the rest of your evening is pleasant.”

Joker laughed. “Same to you my friend, same to you.”

Joker adjusted Harley and took off at a jog, dodging his way out of the alley. He saw Anatoli hurrying off down the street in the opposite direction and smiled, but he didn’t bother going after the man; it was more important for Harley and him to get away. He could settle his debts with the Russian another day.

“Come on Harls! Let’s go home!” Joker grinned hurrying away from the fight, carrying Harley with him. She held on tightly, smiling.

*

They didn’t make it home until late. Jack drove around a bit, taking a long way home just to be on the safe side.

Now they were upstairs, the house lit only by candlelight. Harry Connick Jr.’s voice drifted on the air, singing in a warm mellow voice.

“Yes, you’re lovely, with your smile so warm
And your cheeks so soft
There is nothing for me but to love you
And the way you look tonight.”

Harley sat in the bathtub picking up a handful of bubbles and with a sullen look she blew off them watching some of the soap bubbles float away catching the candlelight before they popped. She licked her wounded lip, and noted her jaw still smarted a bit from the fight.

“Stupid Russian gangsters,” she muttered.

Jack came into the bathroom dressed only in a pair of red and blue striped boxers, carrying a tray with two cups and a plate filled with cookies. “I made chocolate milk instead of coffee and I brought cookies for my sulky girl.”

Harley smiled. “Thank you puddin.”
He grinned and set the tray down on a small stool before he slipped off his boxers and got into the tub with her. He sat down on the other end with a contented sigh, his wound stung in the water, but it was nothing bothersome. “Oh that feels wonderful.”

Harley giggled and blew some bubbles at him. Jack smiled draping his arms along the back of the tub. “Sorry we didn’t get to go out for coffee.”

“It’s okay puddin...you got more men and that’s a good thing.” Harley picked up the soap and motioned at him to turn around. Jack did as she indicated shifting around until his back was to her. Harley soaped up her hand and began to wash his back, alternating the rubbing of soap with massaging his muscles. Jack groaned softly leaning into her touch.

“Are you going to have them come to the park?”

Jack shook his head as he gingerly touched his split lip. “Nah, that’s for family, and they haven’t proven themselves to be family yet. No, they can meet at our little guest location where Falcone’s ex and lawyer are staying.” Jack chuckled.

Harley pushed herself back and gently reached up to guide Jack’s head back. He leaned back holding onto the sides of the tub as she picked up a small plastic cup from the side of the tub and began to pour water over his green hair. She ran her fingers through his hair smiling, enjoying the way his green hair looked running between her fingers. She reached for the shampoo and poured some into her hand, rubbing her hands together before she tenderly began to run her fingers through his hair, her nails gently scratched across his scalp before pressing her fingertips against him.

Jack had his eyes closed as he groaned softly enjoying the feel of her touch.

Harley rubbed his temples. “So what are we going to do next puddin?”

Jack sighed contently. “Not sure sweets, not sure. So many people to play with…” He smiled.

Harley poured water over his hair, rinsing away the shampoo, his green hair shining brightly. She applied conditioner, once more massaging his scalp. Jack groaned softly. “But I think I want to play with Falcone a little more before Bats...I want to topple Falcone for good, make us the king and queen of Gotham...Old Batsy would have a hard time touching us when I have an army behind me.” He chuckled as Harley rinsed his hair. “Can you see him Harls? Bats trying to intimidate me knowing I own Gotham. Then we can do whatever we want...like blow up every piece of property owned in the Wayne’s name.” He chuckled.

Harley smiled caressing his throat with her fingers, then slowly tracing the muscles of his arms and back. “That would look lovey, a series of explosions going off at the same time, can you imagine?” Jack laughed. “That I can sweets, that I can!” He sat up and motioned for Harley to turn. “Your turn pumpkin.”

Harley smiled and turned, grabbing the sides of the tub and leaning back as Jack tenderly ran his fingers through her white hair. He carefully poured shampoo on the hair that he held in his hand before working it into a lather. Jack ran his fingers through her hair several times before he focused on her scalp, massaging his fingers tenderly into her scalp, smiling bright when she made tiny contented moans, always one of his favorite sounds. He repeated the process of rinsing her hair of the shampoo to replace it with conditioner.

Once that was done, leaving the conditioner in her hair, Jack took the soap himself and rubbed it over her back and arms massaging her like she had him except he slid his hands over her hips under the water, his fingers slipping between her legs. He caught her ear with his lips, then his teeth as he fingers slid against her clitoris. Harley leaned back against him, a soft moan escaping her lips as she closed her eyes, enjoying the slip and slide of his fingers against her. With his other hand he grabbed a nipple, rolling and lightly pinching the sensitive flesh, causing Harley to arch, her breathing coming quicker. He licked her ear and whispered. “Come for me sweets, let me hear you.” Harley groaned, her hips moving with the slide of his fingers. He stroked her nipple with the pad of his finger, licking and biting her throat until Harley’s body jerked, tightening and released as her orgasm washed over her in a warm wave.

Jack smiled and continued to casually caress her, grinding each time she jerked in response.

“There now, that’s better.” He whispered before removing his hands and gently began to wash out the conditioner from her hair. He caressed her shoulders, her arms, his soapy hands followed the line of her back.

He gently turned her back around. “There, all better.”

Harley smirked as Jack leaned back onto his side of the tub. Harley shifted over to snuggle up under his arm. Jack pulled her close, some of the water sloshing out of the tub.

Harley gazed at him, her gaze tender and loving. “I love you so much puddin,” she whispered.

Jack smiled reaching out the caress her jaw, his thumb caressing the corner of her mouth then slowly down, tenderly pulling her bottom lip as he gazed at her.

“Be my Queen?” he asked, his blue eyes searching her face.

Harley kissed his thumb before she moved closer, her lips playing over his, her tongue teasing, flicking out to brush his tongue before she murmured. “Yes my King, yes.”

Jack’s hand slid along her jaw and guided her closer, his fingers wrapped around the back of her neck, her long wet hair clinging to her shoulders and his fingers as he gently pulled her closer still.
He kissed her with a low burn that she felt flow throughout her body, his lips moved over her, his teeth brushed against her tongue, her lips as he kissed her passionately.

Harley rolled over on top of him. Jack spread his legs as far as the tub would allow so she could rest between them. She grabbed the back of the tub and leaned into him, sliding her wet breasts against his chest as she leaned down to capture his mouth. Her kisses became more demanding, her wet, soapy body sliding against him, caressing, teasing. She could feel his quickly growing erection between them, which only encouraged her to slide against him more enjoying the fact that she was arousing him. Jack leaned his head back against the rim of the tub, his hands sliding down to her rear, gripping and squeezing as he pressed his hands into her soft skin. He slid his hands up and down her back just to feel the curve of her body. She was so soft, so strong. He loved the way her body fit against him as he wrapped both hands around her rear, pressing her down on him. Her wet body sliding up and down on his erection had him growling against her lips.

Harley’s mouth moved over his, her tongue exploring, caressing. She glided from his mouth to kiss his face, her lips and tongue licking the water from his cheeks and eyes. She dragged her tongue along his throat down to his shoulder. She pressed her teeth into the back of his neck, biting with that tantalizing mix of pleasure and pain; Jack inhaled sharply, his eyes fluttering in his ecstasy. Harley smiled against his skin, moving lower to his nipple. She licked, tracing the hard nipple with her tongue before she bit him again.

Jack growled once more, his fingers sliding down, seeking her intimate softness as she arched, her breasts riding up to his mouth. He wrapped his lips around her nipple, sucking while his seeking fingers found the soft warmth of her, caressing with one hand while the fingers of his other hand slipped into her.

Harley moaned, the sound deep with pleasure, sliding against him, the heat from his erection burned against her stomach and his fingers slowly thrusting inside her had her moaning with need, with the desire for more.

Jack began to rock her against him, the long fingers of one hand sliding against her, caressing every sensitive inch of her while he pressed her body against him, her slick wet body continuing to slide up and down against his erection pinned between their bodies. The sensation made him weak, ripples of pleasure that made him want to roll her over and pound into her, to hear and feel the slap of flesh against flesh, but there was something alluring about drawing their pleasure out, teasing and waiting until he thought he would burst. She felt so good, soft, warm, wet, his girl, his Harley, the only person in all the world that he belonged to.

He licked her nipples, slowly sucking on one before switching to the other, burying his face between her breasts while Harley caressed his face, her fingers slipping through his damp green hair.

Jack growled softly. “I need you Harley.”

She ran her tongue over his lips. “I need you puddin.”

Jack pulled his fingers away and grabbed her waist, sitting himself up and lifting her while he brought his legs down. Harley straddled him, reaching down between them, her hand stroking him once as she held him ready. Jack groaned watching her, his heated gaze on her face as she lowered herself down on him.

She groaned, feeling his erection push into her, burying deep inside her as she lowered herself, feeling every inch of him. She gripped his shoulders, pressing her nails into his skin as she held herself unmoving for a moment, just feeling him inside her, the water settling around them. She flexed her muscles around him, embracing him.

Jack grunted, wrapping his arms around her, tugging her against him, followed by him dragging his tongue across her breasts which made her shiver.

Harley loosened her grip, her hands sliding down from his shoulders to his chest, caressing him gently before she began to rock her hips. She move slowly, both to extend the pleasure of having him inside her and to prevent sloshing too much water out of the tub. She forced herself to move slowly, to take her time, but it was so very difficult she thought, because all she wanted was to take from him, to pleasure herself with him, and to pleasure him with her body. She giggled at her wanton thoughts while tightening her muscles around him.

Jack’s lips glided up the column of her throat, his hands sliding up her back.

Harley caressed his throat, leaning in to kiss him deeply, her lips tugged on his upper lip before she once more plunged her tongue into his mouth while she ground and rolled her hips, the water rolling and splashing lightly over the rim of the tub.

Jack leaned back against the tub, his kisses more heated, became punctuated by groans and growls while she moved, sloshing water out of the tub as her rolling hips picked up speed.

Jack gasped her name between kisses that Harley answered with her own groans. He thrust up to meet her, the tension between them building, the water splashing until Harley broke free of his kiss to cry out, her long white hair slicked back from her face, her plump lips parted as she moaned. She dropped her hands to grasp the sides of the tub, her rolling grinds becoming faster and harder, her body bowing as she climaxed.

Jack grabbed her hips, pressing her down on him and watching her orgasm. He groaned, furrowing his brow, locks of green hair stuck to his forehead and cheeks as he watched her, thrusting up into her until he cried out, his hips thrusting up as his orgasm broke over him. He gasped for breath, thrusting hard while at the same time holding her down on him.

Harley grasped his face between her hands, kissing him as if their lives depended on the meeting of their mouths. She moved with him until Jack seem to collapse, all the energy drained from his body.

Harley’s kisses slowed to something sweet, tender as Jack wrapped his arms around her and held her tightly. Jack returned her kisses just as tenderly, his pale fingers caressed her hair and over her back as he pulled her closer, wrapping his arms around her and held her snugly against him.

Soon, their passion cooled to its usual simmer. Jack stroked his fingers along her upper arm with a content smile.

Harley had closed her eyes, her head on his shoulder.

After a few moments of quiet Jack said softly. “You know what sweets? I think we should get crowns.”

Harley started to giggle.
The room was lit by the warm buttery glow of an overhead light. A small group of people were sitting around the large wooden table that sat in the middle of the garage where several bottles of beer sat in various stages of emptiness scattered across the table and floor. The garage was more of a shop. The walls were lined with boards that held so many tools that Harley could only guess what half of them were. Behind them sat a 1968 Chevrolet Corvette in several stages of repair. The sounds of the Rumjacks “Irish Pub Song” played in the background.

The some members of the Irish gangs of Gotham sat around the table. Mikey, dressed in a crisp white shirt and black slacks picked up his beer and took a long swig from it while staring at his cards. Next to him sat his cousin Ryan, her hair dyed bright, a neon pink and green mohawk, dressed in a black t-shirt and ripped up jeans sipping her beer and holding her cards like she hadn’t a care in the world, a very large cigar in the corner of her mouth. She shifted her cards around looking over at Alex and winking at him. Alex paled and picked up his beer. Next to her sat Shannon whose blonde hair was so light it was almost white, wearing a black turtleneck and jeans, his cards held so close to his nose that it was a wonder, Harley thought, that he could see them. Shannon also kept peeking over the top of the cards in such a way that it was taking all her effort not to giggle. And lastly was a man named Connor, who looked as if he were in desperate need of a sandwich and clearly had no idea how to play since he kept forgetting not to hold his cards so everyone could see them.

Across from them sat Jack, dressed in a dark green three piece suit with white shirt and gold tie. He had his jacket off, hanging on the back of his chair, the sleeves of his shirt rolled up his forearms (which made Harley all warm and achy...his arms were so sexy...like his long fingered hands, his chest, his stomach...she giggled but quietly lusted after her puddin.) His green hair was slicked back from his snow white face, and Harley sat on his lap, dressed in a little red knit tank dress that came to just above her knees. She had started out with black tights underneath but the pouty face that Jack had made when he realized he couldn’t touch her bare skin had made Harley discard the hose for simple black thigh high boots. Jack happily now had his free hand under the skirt of her dress while he gazed over the top of his cards at the other players. Next to them sat Frost on Jack’s right, his jacket on the back of his chair looking annoyed and Alex on his left wearing a Christmas themed Hawaiian shirt with palm trees and Christmas lights and a t-shirt and jeans, his cards currently face down so he could drink his beer. Agatha was sitting next to Frost, wearing a dress of deep blue that highlighted all her curves. She held her cards close to her chest with a small smirk on her lips. Harley had a feeling if Jack or Alex didn’t clean everyone out, it was going to be Agatha. She also noticed that Mikey couldn’t take his eyes off of Agatha, and Frost, judging by the furrow of his brow and the murder in his eyes, had noticed.

Harley giggled silently to herself. Not playing had its advantages, because watching everyone was a great deal of fun.

They were playing for money, but instead of using actual money on the table, they were using some old, beat-up poker chips that Shannon had brought with him in a cardboard box. Harley wasn’t exactly sure what the pot was at the moment because when everyone had been discussing the worth of each chips...blah blah...Harley was more interested in watching the players and had simply tuned out listening to the logistics of the game.

Conner grinned and set his cards face up on the table. “I got a pair!”

Mikey sighed while Ryan snorted around her cigar.

Shannon glanced over from his cards to Conner’s. “Buddy, you just got one pair.”
Conner frowned. “Isn’t that good?”

Shannon shrugged. “Better if you had three of a kind, two pair, anything else really…”

Conner frowned deeper. “But I thought…”

Mikey chuckled. “Conner, I think you need to let Shannon there go over the basics with you again.”

Connor sighed. “I suck at this. I’m better with guns.”

Ryan snickered and Mikey elbowed her hard in the side.

Jack grinned giving Harley’s knee a squeeze. “So, what happened at the dock again? You were in the middle of explaining?” He glanced at Conner, but with a friendly smile. Mikey took another sip of his beer. “The Russians were supposed to be picking up several crates of weapons. I heard about it from Joy--she works down on the dock but I pay her to keep her eyes and ears open for me. I got her little brother out of some trouble with the Russians and Falcone a few years ago. Anyway, she calls me, so me and about twenty others went down there and…” Mikey did air quotes with one hand. “…relieved them of their burden…and a few of them of their lives. The weapons are now at your warehouse.”

Jack chuckled glancing over at Frost who nodded. “The crates were filled with assault rifles, some light machine guns. Anything we don’t keep, we can sell.”

Alex picked up his cards again. “Yep, I have some buyers lined up already outside of Gotham.”

Ryan puffed on her cigar, her gaze directed at Jack and Harley. “We also took care of the human trafficking like you asked us to Boss, with Frost’s help…” She nodded to Frost. “And that Red Hood gang. We left a trail for the Gotham PD that even Hansel and Gretel could have followed. Got half the guys involved arrested.” She grinned. “Proud day, proud day.” She puffed on her cigar with a grin.

Jack chuckled. “Good work boys and girls, good work. Santa is going to leave you all gifts of money in your stockings! Now we just need to work on our next and hopefully final move against Falcone. I’m ready to make a major play for Gotham...take that bastard down. I have two pawns, but I’m becoming bored with having them, feel like blowing the whole wad at once!” He laughed as Harley gasped in pretend shock and smacked him lightly on the chest. Jack grinned back at her, pulling her close to cover her mouth in a kiss passionate enough that the Irish, who were not accustomed to the graphic displays of affection from their new boss and his lady, turned away blushing.

After a bit Mikey felt he should break the Boss and his girl up as he looked over at Ryan and motioned at her with his elbow. “So, you wanna tell him?”

Jack lifted his hairless brow at her. “Tell me?”

Ryan puffed on her cigar. “I met with your other associate, the Red Hood and with Alex’s introduction, we got just the thing for you. We got a hold of a helicopter, a retired UH-1Y Huey.”

Jack’s face lit up. “You what? A helicopter?”

Ryan nodded. “It’s a eight seater, and it would be more than big enough to hold a couple of miniguns…” She made a motion with her hand. “We can fly on in there and rattatatatat…” she motioned shooting with both hands. “Shoot up his windows in his office building like you suggested!! It’ll be like something from an epic gang flick!! All of Gotham will sit up!!” She grinned and Jack laughed. “Perfect!!! So when will we have it?”

Ryan grinned sharing a glance with Alex who nodded. “Right after Thanksgiving sir,” she confirmed.

Jack laughed and clapped his hands. “Perfect!! This will be not just spectacular, but brilliant!! Put the fear of death into the hearts of every one of those dark hearted villains who are standing in my way...and Batman! Especially wanna scare Batman...gotta make sure old Batsy remembers, I’m the real threat, not some old has-been gangster!”

The Irish all exchanged a look but shrugged. This was what they had signed up for, even if the Joker was a bit...strange.

Jack’s smile was radiant as he set his cards down. “Oh, by the way--straight flush.”

Everyone made a sound as if they had been shot except Agatha who chuckled. “Oh dear, but I’m afraid my royal flush beats that.”

Jack stared at his aunt before he broke down into peals of laughter.

*

Later that night, after they had returned home, having set up a meeting with Ryan, Frost and Alex to go inspect the helicopter, Harley, her white, candy colored dipped hair pooled around her shoulders, was lying in Jack’s arms, her head resting on his chest. She smiled contently listening to the beat of his heart. A warm golden glow fell over them from the single lamp lit in their bedroom. They were both naked and cuddling under the sheets. Harley closed her eyes with a soft smile. She was never happier than in these moments, moment of quiet, just the two of them, no Bruce, no Batman, no Gotham, no gangs, no violence, just her and Jack wrapped in a bubble that held only the two of them.

She wrapped her leg around his waist, sliding the limb over him. She smiled when she felt his body respond, growing slightly hard under the caress of her leg. Jack lazily ran his fingers down her arm as he blew a soft billow of smoke into the air from his cigarette. Harley wrapped her arm around his waist and squeezed, holding him tightly. Harley kissed his chest, moving to press her lips against his nipple. Jack jerked slightly and Harley giggled before she said softly. “Tomorrow is Thanksgiving.”

Jack took a drag on his cigarette and smiled as he said around a cloud of smoke. “It is isn’t it!”

“Your aunt invited us over when she said her goodbyes tonight. If you want to go that is?” Harley asked softly, her fingers tracing the hints of his tattoo, following down his chest to his stomach. He twitched slightly at her touch, bringing a smile to her lips.

“Sure why not? It would be nice.” Jack gave her shoulder a squeeze before he leaned over to put out his cigarette on the ashtray beside the bed. “Something a little normal for a change.”

Harley smiled. She hadn’t thought of it in those words, but that was exactly what she was feeling...normal for a little while at least, though she knew normal was not something people like she and Jack got...normal was always for other people.

Harley looked up when Jack didn’t say anything else only to find him watching her with a smile.

She pushed herself up on her elbow. “What?”

Jack grinned, the light from the lamp made his teeth seem brighter. “Nothing, just thinking about you and me...King and Queen of Gotham...wondering if I should get us a couple of thrones.”

Harley chuckled. “You are silly.”

Jack shrugged. “Maybe. I think when this is over, when we’ve put Falcone in the ground, you and I should renew our vows. I know I mentioned it before, but I think we should get married again. As Joker and Harley. We could do it here in the park with all our real family around us...no Bruce coming in to spoil everything...just you and me and our real family.”

Harley smiled as she rested more heavily on her elbow her voice slightly dreamy. “I could have all the girls be my maids of honor.”

Jack grinned. “I could have Alex as my best man and Bane and Jason, maybe Zsasz as my groomsmen.”

Harley giggled. “Means everyone at the wedding would actually be the wedding party.”

Jack laughed. “True, but it could be fun! We could go all out.”

Harley grinned. “I think we should do it puddin! I think we should have a wedding!”

Jack reached over and caressed her face. “I love you pumpkin.”

Harley smiled pressing her teeth into her bottom lip, her cheeks rosy against her pale white skin. “I love you too puddin.”

Jack pulled her close for a deep kiss, his hand sliding against her face. Harley made a little sound of want, reaching up to grasp the back of his neck, her fingers grabbing at the short green hairs there, her tongue diving deep into his mouth, her tongue gliding over his accompanied by the soft whimper of need.

Jack's hand glided down her throat, following the smooth curve to her shoulder then over her breast. He pressed her back until she laid back against the pillow. Jack squeezed her breast gently, while Harley made a soft muffled moan against his lips. He smiled, loved hearing the little sounds she made when she was pleased, when she wanted more from him, when she desperately needed him. Those little sounds Harley made did more to turn him on than anything else, made him feel needed and wanted. Jack rolled on top of his wife, continuing to kiss her before he dragged his lips over her chin, planting soft butterfly kisses along her throat, the smooth curve of her collar bone, following her smooth skin and curves down between her breasts. He held himself up on his hands so he could look at her, take in just how beautiful she was with her milk white skin, her white hair and her eyes, her incredible, gorgeous and sexy blue eyes. As he gazed at her lovingly, Harley smiled shattering everything in him; his love for her welled up and flowed over him creating a tingling warmth throughout his entire being. He was so much in love with her that he would move heaven and earth and hell to make sure she was happy. Jack kissed her nipples, enjoying the way Harley made a soft urgent moan of pleasure. He sucked at her nipple, his tongue flicking over the surface until Harley was writhing under him. He grinned and switched breasts repeating the same flicks and sucks, making her moan and hiss with pleasure.

Harley sucked in a shuddering breath. Jack’s lips were warm and soft as he kissed her sensitive nipples. He rubbed his cheek against her skin when he switched breasts, the kisses being accentuated by the feel of his tongue, warm, wet, licking her nipples slowly, carefully. His slow sucks and licks sent indescribable ripples through her, as if she simply couldn't stand any more, but then he switched nipples and started again. The feeling pooled between her legs into a throbbing ache. When he switched breasts, her hard nipples made her shiver as the saliva he left behind chilled the nipple. She

Harley sucked in a shuddering breath. Jack’s lips were warm and soft as he kissed her sensitive nipples. He rubbed his cheek against her skin when he switched breasts, the kisses being accentuated by the feel of his tongue, warm, wet, licking her nipples slowly, carefully. His slow sucks and licks sent indescribable ripples through her, as if she simply couldn't stand any more, but then he switched nipples and started again. The feeling pooled between her legs into a throbbing ache. When he switched breasts, her hard nipples made her shiver as the saliva he left behind chilled the nipple. She moaned long and loud, brushing her fingers through his thick green hair. Her body shifting under him, she wanted and needed more.

Jack made his way down her torso with butterfly kisses, licking his way to her pelvis. He kissed her hip bones, then slowly down along the line of her stomach before leaving a longer, lingering kiss, his tongue rolling against her skin just above her sex before he sat up on his knees. He lifted one of her legs and grinned down at her.

Harley watched him with a smile as he kissed her ankle, his fingers caressing down the side of her leg as he kissed his way to her knee, a biting kiss at the inside of her thigh before he switched legs and worked his way back up, a sucking kiss at her inner thigh, sucking on her until he left a purple bruise in his wake before his lips traveled up to her knee. He pressed his warm lips to her knee, lifting her leg to find the tender place behind her knee where he dragged his tongue against that soft, sensitive spot.

Harley giggled, gazing up at him loving the way he looked, fully erect, the light dancing over his milk white skin. Her husband was so alluring and sensual, he made her ache so much for him. She wanted him, wanted to feel him pressing into her, to fill her, but when he kissed her behind her knee she squealed. “That tickles!”

Jack smirked. “Good...now let’s see if I can tickle you someplace else.”

Jack dropped down to his hands over her, reaching down to stroke his fingers against her clitoris. She was wet, slick and soft. Harley groaned when he touched her, rolling her hips to push against his fingers. “Oh puddin...yes...I want you.”

Jack smiled. “Mmm...I can feel that…”

Jack held himself for a moment before he pushed, feeling the exquisite sensation of sliding into her, his shaft being surrounded by her warmth, the soft firm hold of her body against his, her muscles wrapping around his erection at the same time that her arms wrapped around him, holding him, loving him, keeping him safe. He groaned as he thrust into her, driving his erection into her waiting body, losing himself in her.

“Harls…” He growled her name just before he leaned in to kiss her, his mouth moving over hers, his tongue lingering against hers while he thrust into her, each time her pelvis rose up to meet him.

Harley captured his mouth quickly, reaching to grab his rear, her fingers digging into the pale flesh of his backside, drawing his hips down to her while Jack began to thrust harder and faster, grunting with the sensation of thrusting into her. He moaned softly, licking the corner of her mouth, then across her tongue. “You’re so wet pumpkin.”

Harley dug her fingers into his rear. “That’s all your fault,” she answered with a giggle.

He chuckled while he thrust, the bed bouncing with them; e could feel the bounce of her legs as she held them up and spread wide for him. He thrust deep into her as if he was trying to bury more than simply his erection into her.

Harley groaned against his mouth, her fingers squeezing his rear tighter before she threw her head back and cried out. “Uh...Puddin!!”

Jack ground his teeth to stop himself from climaxing at that moment. He had to still his movements just a little, instead going for long slow thrusts in contrast to the hard pounding thrusts he wanted to give in to. He leaned into her as he slowed down, each thrust was a careful movement to prevent his orgasm while still enjoying her. But the flood of her orgasm washed over him, making him want to fuck her like his life depended on it. He dug his fingers into the sheet, tightening his muscles to stop his responding climax...for now...he needed her to hear her cry out again before he would be satisfied.

Harley gasped holding on as Jack picked up his rhythm again, but then stopped. Harley wiggled in protest. “Puddin!”

Jack laughed at her pout, kissing her lips and the tip of her nose. “Roll over you silly little minx, I’m not done, I promise.”

Harley beamed at him as Jack pulled out of her with an agonizing furrow on his brow, leaving her warmth was so hard even if he was going to simply plunge in again. He moved out of her way, sitting back on his knees as Harley rolled over, coming up on her hands and knees. Jack licked his lips looking at her. He walked on his knees closer to her, running his hands over her rear and along her hips gazing at her. She was so beautiful, porcelain white, smooth rolling softness. He used his leg to make her spread her legs more which she did, gazing over her shoulder at him with a wicked little smirk on her perfect mouth. He grinned at her while he caressed her, enjoying the feel of her silky skin under his hands. He reached between her legs, sliding his fingers against her clitoris before sliding his middle finger into her. Harley gasped, her body tightening around his finger. Jack licked his lips, thrusting gently with his finger while Harley thrust back groaning. He thrust his finger rubbing his thumb over her at the same time, caressing her while he rested his free hand against her rear, watching each time his finger disappeared into the wet warmth of her body, the way she curved her back, her hair falling in soft waves...she made him hungry for her, his erection throbbed with the need to be in her again.

Harley arched as he slid another finger into her, thrusting harder. She rocked back against his fingers, her eyes screwed closed, arching her head back with a cry of pleasure.

He grinned the moment she became wetter, thrusting in time to her cries and the rocks of her body before he removed his fingers and came up behind her. His erection slid into her; she was so wet that it sent chills up his body.

Harley cried out again when he thrust into her, feeling the hard width of him inside her; she arched and rocked back against him. “Uh puddin...uh…” Harley moaned. “Yes...oh yes…”

Jack caressed her rear and hips, watching as his erection disappeared into her, the way her rear pressed up against him, the smoothness of her skin, how wet they both were as he pulled her back against him. He grasped her hips and leaned forward, brushing her hair aside to press a kiss between her shoulders with a whispered, “My girl,” tickling her skin.

Harley felt a shiver run over her when he said, “My girl.” Nothing in the world was sweeter than to know she was his girl and he was her puddin, together, forever. She glanced behind her with a smile. “I love you puddin.”

Jack beaned back a little, pulling her against him, her hips bouncing as he thrust into her. “I love you too pumpkin.”

He brushed several more kisses against her spine before straightening up and grasping her hips firmly in his hands and began yanking her back against him with each of his thrusts.

Harley dropped to her elbows, forcing her hips higher as Jack’s thrusts became harder. He pressed hard into her, holding her hips up against him when she came again. She gasped, thrusting back hard, tightening her hold around him, her fingers digging into the sheets as she dropped her head down against the pillows. Jack pushed forward and Harley let her legs slide back and closed with Jack sliding down at the same time. Feeling his weight against her back was delicious. She brought her legs up as Jack spread his legs and thrust deeper, his hand pressed against her rear as he moved. He grunted, squeezing her rear before he dropped down to lay against her, kissing the back of her neck as he did so.

She groaned with delight, loved the way he felt, so deep inside her, his body pressed completely against her, so close their contours were perfectly matched. He reached for her hands. Harley extended her arms up and Jack’s hands flowed up her arms, reaching up to intertwine his fingers with hers. He continued to thrust at a slower pace, kissing her ear through her hair, then down to her shoulder.

When Harley climaxed with another cry, her fingers tightening around Jack’s as her body rocked with her orgasm.

Jack let himself go. He thrust in short quick bursts, drawing out her orgasm until he came, his own orgasm bursting over him, causing him to groan loudly leaning hard into her. He released her hands to wrap his arms around her, sliding them under her arms and holding her close while he pressed his cheek against ear, continuing to thrust, both of them sharing a cry, then a kiss as Harley turned to kiss him.

Jack kissed her softly, tenderly, holding her close.

“My sweet girl,” he whispered.

Harley giggled softly closing her eyes. “Mm...that was nice.”

Jack chuckled and sighed happily. “Yes it was.”

They were both quiet, just lying together, their bodies joined which Jack whispered. “I just thought of something awful Harley.”

Harley opened one eye to peer at him. “Mm? What?”

He smiled and whispered. “Whatever are we going to wear tomorrow?”

* * *

Jack stopped outside the apartment door and released Harley’s hand to run a long-fingered hand over his suit. He was dressed in a dark navy blue suit with a white and blue vertical striped shirt, a yellow double breasted vest and black tie with tiny polka dots. Harley stood next to him wearing a white tulle skirt and little bright green sweater (that almost matched Jack’s hair) with a lace Peter Pan collar and glittery silver pumps, her white hair pulled back into a high ponytail and tied off with a matching green ribbon. Right now she had a fuzzy white coat over her outfit while Jack had on a long black trench coat. Jack’s black gloved fingers brushed over his hairless brow. “You think so?”

Harley frowned. “Why so uncomfortable puddin? It's just your aunt and Frost.” Harley reached up and cupped his face between her hands. “Jack, it’s all right. I’m here. I’m not going anywhere, you will never spend a holiday without me with you, and you are never silly--except when you need to be.” She smiled into his eyes. “I love you with all my heart.”

Jack looked back at her, his eyes searching her face for something, but then his red lips pulled back into a bright smile. “I love you Harls--you’re my heart.”

He wrapped his arms around her waist and pulled her close to kiss her. He kiss her deeply, dipping her back slightly. That was the moment the door opened. Agatha was standing there in a sleeveless black dress trimmed in lace, her hair perfectly styled, diamonds in her ears. She smirked when she saw her nephew and Harley.

“I thought I heard voices out here and then I see these two young’uns making out on my doorstep...what is the world coming to?” Agatha asked over her shoulder at Frost who looked up from setting the turkey on the table.

Jack broke the kiss with Harley to reach for his aunt. “Haha, very funny.”

Jack’s aunt grinned wrapping her arms around the two of them. “Let’s get you inside before someone realizes the Joker is coming for Thanksgiving. Oh and by the way, I hope you don’t mind dear, but I invited a few more people.” Agatha smiled and stepped aside.

Jack and Harley stepped in and Harley made a little gasp of surprise. Inside the small apartment Jack saw Jason, Thea, and Trope helping Frost set the table. Bane sat on the couch with his arm around Viktoria’s shoulders watching the parade in downtown Gotham on the television. Bea and Zsasz were leaning against a wall talking together and lastly, Alex sat in a fold out metal chair next to a recliner that held his very pregnant, looking like she was about to burst, girlfriend, Alice. Everyone called out a greeting.

Agatha grinned. “I didn’t think you would mind having your family here Jackie.”

Jack was quiet for a moment. Harley turned to look at him. He was hiding it well, but she could see it, the emotions in his eyes as he smiled and murmured. “My family.” He looked down at Harley grinning. “Let’s go have dinner shall we?”

“Of course puddin.” Harley smiled at her husband.

*

A set of drones zipped over the dark Gotham streets flying high enough up that they would not be easily detected. The set of drones turned a corner and rose up into the air going up several floors of a building before stopping near the top and hovering outside the large glass windows of an office where the curtains had been pulled back to reveal an expensively furnished office.

*

Falcone sipped gingerly at his drink, one elbow resting on his desk as he listened to Tallyman give him a rundown of what he had learned about his son’s disappearance and murder, the murder of Gigi and his still missing ex-wife and lawyer, which was pretty much nothing...except that Bane was involved...other than that, nothing.

Tallyman stood with his arms behind his back as he spoke. “Since the trail has currently run cold I have taken it upon myself to increase security at your home and here. I have also seen to it that your regular security detail is better armed.”

Falcone looked at Tallyman over the top of his glass. “You don’t have that sort of authorization Tallyman.”

Tallyman nodded. “Agreed, but sir, you are paying me for a job and have given me free reign to perform this job anyway I see fit, and that is what I have done.”

Falcone sighed and shrugged. The man made sense. “Fine.”
The two men continued to talk though the drones couldn’t pick up what was being said. The two drones turned and headed back along the path they had approached the building, flying swiftly back across the city to the small airport mostly hidden along the edges of Gotham by overgrown trees and bushes. The airport had once been a private place where the rich would keep their personal planes and helicopters, but mismanagement and tax evasion had closed the place more than a couple of decades ago. Now the only aircraft here was a dark Huey helicopter and several members of Joker’s gang.

Trope sat next to her girlfriend Thea on the overgrown pavement just on the inside of an abandoned hangar that sat behind the helicopter, both women with matching aqua colored hair. Each held what to Harley looked like a complicated mess, but were in fact the transmitters for the drones. Trope smiled as she looked up at Joker. “He’s in there with some black dude, but he is there and drinking so I don’t think he is going anywhere right away.”

Joker chuckled and turned, running his hands down the front of his dark evergreen suit, touching the chain that ran across his stomach. His fingers, covered in dark purple gloves, touched the bottom hem on his vest before he reached up and touched the top of his purple and mustard striped tie that stood out against the light purple dress shirt he wore, his twin shoulder holsters visible. He removed his wide brim fedora and ran his hand through his green hair which was brushed back, one curl having come free of the severe hairstyle to curl seductively on his forehead. It made Harley want to run her fingers through his hair. He wore a pair of green suede and black leather oxford style boots, the green looking like spats with the large buttons that ran along the side. Harley gazed at him with a soft, loving smile. He looked so good she thought, ready to take over Gotham…ready to make his big move tonight. She was so proud of him.

Harley had dressed for the occasion in her own suit, with wide legged red slacks, a dark blue dress shirt with a red tie, a red and blue striped jacket, and her own pair of matching low heeled oxford boots. She had pulled her hair back into a high ponytail, her own twin holsters that held her guns loaded and ready. Everyone else was there as well and several cars. Everyone who was actively participating in tonight’s assassination attempt was armed, the others, like Trope, Thea and Alex were ready to do their part by watching out for the GCPD and Batman.

Joker grinned and clapped his hands together. “All right boys and girls, are we ready for some fun??”

A murmur of assent went through the gang. Joker grinned wide motioning for Harley who walked over to Joker. He took her hand and began to walk closer to the helicopter. Inside the helicopter the minigun was mounted and ready. Mikey and Ryan, her cigar in the side of her mouth, were here representing the Irish gangs, armed and on the helicopter with the two pilots. Jason was acting as copilot to a man named Boxer who had worked with the Irish in the past. Inside, bound, bloody and looking terrified was Falcone’s ex-wife, tied up tight in duct tape next to a box of grenades. The rest of the gang were heading off to various locations to cause their own kind of mischief, but Joker and the rest on the helicopter were heading straight for the serpent’s head, Falcone.

Joker tossed his hat inside just as he handed Harley up into the helicopter where Mikey handed her a Norinco Type 56. Harley grinned as she took the weapon, turning to watch Joker, who hopped inside after her, then turned to lean out.

“All right, you all have you assignments. We are going to hit Falcone hard, kill as many of his men as you can, but the most important part is that you don’t get yourself killed, or captured; if you have to choose getting out, then get out. I want everyone back alive. We are going to take care of the big stuff!” Joker chuckled “This is going to be epic my little chicks! Just epic!”

Joker stepped closer to Harley taking her by her upper arms and pulled her close and to the side, a small area providing a tiny moment of solitude.

“You ready for this Harls?” He smiled and stroked his gloved fingers over her cheek, his blue eyes taking in every detail of her face. His fingers slide down to her chin which he lifted up, leaning in his softly brush his lips against her. Harley smiled, her eyes fluttering closed for a moment as Joker deepened the kiss from a brush of his lips to something soft and sweet. His tongue caressed hers tenderly before he pulled away.

“You know I’ll go anywhere with you puddin, to hell and back.” Harley smiled, holding his gaze.

Joker brushed his nose against hers. “I know you would pumpkin pie, I know you would.”

Harley murmured as she stared into his eyes. “I would die for you puddin.”

Joker laughed softly. “No sweets, no...live for me...always live for me.”

Harley smiled “I’d live for you puddin...always.”

“That’s my girl.” Joker kissed her again, dropping his hand to wrap his arm around her waist, pulling her up against him, pressing her body against his as he leaned her against the interior wall of the helicopter, for the moment, everything was forgotten as he kissed her.

Harley wrapped her arm and the gun around his waist and held onto him tightly with all her strength, returning his kiss with every ounce of her love for him.

*

Outside Frost turned to Agatha and gave her a deep kiss, pulling her tight against him. Agatha wrapped her arms around him and smiled. “See you soon.”

Frost grinned. “You be careful.”

Agatha snorted. “Pfft, taking out a few mobsters is nothing. Besides, I’m with Bane sweetie, that’s like having a walking mountain with me.”

Frost chucked. “Just don’t get yourself shot.”

Agatha laughed. “Oh you like the scars.”

They kissed one more time before Frost turned and headed toward the helicopter just as Boxer turned the engine over.

Joker leaned out as the blades above began to rotate. “Okay, see everyone later for our celebration party!” He waved, as did Harley. “Good luck everyone!!”

The rest of the gang scattered quickly getting out of the way of the lifting helicopter. Agatha watched with a mix of pride that Jack...Joker, was finally going to take out Falcone. She just hoped that the shift in power didn’t bring anything else out of the woodwork of Gotham.

*

Batman, with Robin beside him, was driving through Gotham. Batman’s mind was wandering a little, his mind on Selina. He was deciding whether to tell her about Batman...he felt as if there was a large divide between them, his secret heavy, especially since he knew hers. He frowned in thought. Next to him, Robin was looking down at the small portable laptop on his knees which was connected to various cameras throughout Gotham. The system was still in its infancy and they were still having issues with connection, but the newer systems designed by Barbara were showing promise. Robin was currently scanning through some of the traffic cams that they had hacked into that were located around Falcone’s office building, an area that Batman had wanted to keep an eye on after Joker’s threat. The young man frowned and said softly. “That’s weird.”

Batman glanced sideways at Robin. “Weird?”

Robin nodded. “You know how you had us put some extra surveillance on Falcone’s home and his main office because of Joker?”

Batman nodded. “Yes.”

“Well, the cameras picked up two drones, which I wouldn’t really have normally worried about, but they were hovering around Falcone’s office and then took off. They were flying strange too, like they were trying not to be detected.” Robin looked up and shrugged. “I’m not sure how else to describe it...just felt like they were...checking.” He looked over at Batman who frowned deeper. “We need to get over there and check it out,” Batman murmured.

*

The helicopter was making its way toward Falcone’s office, the side doors open. Joker stood in the doorway, one hand up and holding one of the handholds as he leaned out dangerously, his eyes closed and a smile on his face as the wind blew over his face.

Harley was standing beside him holding onto her handhold and watching him. “Puddin, you all right?”

Joker opened his eyes slowly, his smile spreading across his face. “Yes my sweets, just fine. You ever have that feeling of contentment, that divine sense of rightness when everything's coming together the way you hoped it would, all your plans and suffering coming to a head in the most perfect way?”

Harley smiled at him as she reached over and took his free hand. “Yeah, I have.”

Joker grinned brightly giving her hand a squeeze. “I'm feeling like that right now, as if everything is working out, just like I planned.”

Harley leaned over and kissed him. Joker reached up and placed his hand against her cheek as he kissed her.

*

Falcone was alone in his office now. He had sent Tallyman off, the man doing whatever it was he was paying him to do he supposed. He filled his glass to the brim with amber liquid and frowned as he stared into the glass, wondering for a moment if he was becoming an alcoholic. This Joker was getting under his skin.

He sighed and stood up, walking over to the window to gaze out at Gotham. Gotham was his city and he was going to be damned if he was going to let some clown who had gotten too big for his britches come in and try to destroy everything he had built, and for what? Shits and giggles? For some perceived slight? He sipped his drink. He wasn’t even sure what the fuck this clown really wanted, or what he hoped to accomplish, but he was going to be damned if this asshole was going to get to him...He sighed, then frowned slightly when he thought he heard the sound of a helicopter, which in and of itself wasn’t that unusual, but it was really close...

For a moment he wondered if someone had a television or a computer on, watching a movie or something far too loudly, but he was sure he was alone on this floor except for his guards. He stepped closer to the window turning to look up just as something large came rushing out of the darkness.

Falcone let out a startled yelp and staggered back from the window just as a body hit the glass. The window didn’t shatter on impact, but fractured, spider webbing, cracks rushed out from the impact. Falcone stared in disbelief as he saw for a moment, the bloody and terrified face of his ex-wife pressed against the glass of the now cracked window. Her eyes were wide and she was clearly alive. He only had a moment to register that she was wrapped in duct tape. When her gaze met Falcone’s she screamed.

“CARMINE!”

But in the next instant, whatever had been holding her was cut loose and her body plummeted away. Carmine dropped his drink, the glass shattering as it fell, he pressed his hands against the glass and shouted. “LOUISA!!”

He stared down, but she was gone, vanished in the darkness below, but his attention was yanked back as a helicopter lowered itself down, hovering in front of the window. Falcone stared in disbelief as he saw Joker and his woman, Harley, standing in the open frame of the helicopter waving at him.

“Hey Falcone, didn’t think you would see me again so soon did you?” Joker’s words and laughter were barely audible through the cracked window and over the sound of the chopper, but Falcone shouted. “I’ll kill you!!! I’ll fucking kill you and put your head on a spike on CROWN POINT BRIDGE!!!”

Joker and Harley laughed together. Joker yelled out. “So medieval? Are you mad at me?” He looked at Harley and chuckled. “I think he’s mad at us cupcake!”

Harley turned to Falcone and pouted. “Aww, we’re such nice people too puddin.”

Joker shrugged. “Well you know what they say--can’t please everyone.”

Joker brought his weapon up, and all Falcone registered was the barrel of a gun as Joker grinned at him with a bright smile. “Bye Camrine!”

Carmine barely had time to throw himself out of the way as Joker and Harley both opened fire on the window. The bullets hit the glass, shattering it into a million bright tinkling pieces.

Joker yelled and motioned with his weapon. “Turn her around darlings!!”

When the shooting stopped, Falcone, who had thrown himself back behind his desk, his arms over his head stood up just in time to see the helicopter turn, twin barrels aimed at his office.

*

Tallyman was leaning against the wall not too far outside of Falcone’s office looking at his phone when he heard one of the guards yelling something about a helicopter, which was followed by the sounds of shouting and gunshots. Everything was happening so quickly that Tallyman wasn’t sure what was happening, but he did know what he was going to do. He took off, heading for the roof, pulling his twin desert eagles out as he did, shouldering a couple of men out of his way as he headed toward the stairs.

*

Falcone cursed and ran as the helicopter opened fire, the bullets began to take out the entirety of the windows, glass imploding inward as the bullets ripped through the glass and into the office, tearing apart the desk, ripping into the floor and walls, shattering, exploding everything and anything in the office. Falcone ran for the door but was stopped short, a gasp of pain escaping his mouth as he stumbled forward and slammed into the floor; a bullet had ripped through his calf. He hit the floor hard, slamming his chin against the wood, but pulled himself up with a cry of pain and anger, limping as fast as he could toward his escape. He reached out for the door just as another bullet ripped through his shoulder, causing him to slam into the door just as one of his men pushed the door open. Heavy rounds tore into the man who opened the door, spraying him in the chest and stomach, riddling him with holes and splattering blood across Falcone and the walls and floor. The man jerked, the force of the bullets keeping him standing in place for several seconds. Carmine crawled by the man’s legs and out into the hall.

*

Joker was laughing so hard that he nearly fell out of the helicopter. “HAHAHahaha!!! Did you see him crawling across his office Harls?!”

Harley giggled. “I did puddin.”

Frost turned, he had the door open on the other side, his hands on the minigun trigger and looking down as he yelled. “BOSS!! I see the cops!”

Joker giggled. “Well Frost my love, give them a proper greeting!”

Frost frowned, but he aimed the weapon and started firing.

*

The GCPD had been called on a report of gun fire. Gary Reese and his partner Linda Dole were in the area, patrolling in their car when they got the report.

Gary grinned at Linda. “Gunfire?”

Linda smiled back. “Tense situation handled well could mean that promotion you’ve been aiming for Gary.”

Gary grinned. “That’s what I was thinking.”

She reached over and patted his knee. “Then what are you waiting for?”

Gary’s smile widened and he turned their patrol car around. They drove quickly, speeding through lights and signs headed in the reported direction of the gun fire, hoping to get there first before any of their brothers and sister in blue arrived.

Linda frowned looking out the windshield as they came closer. “Gary, did you see that? Up in the air there, like an explosion or something.”

Gary frowned. “No I…”

They came driving around the corner just in time to see the helicopter stop firing on the building.
“Oh shit!” Gary gasped.

Linda, her voice soft in shock. “Isn’t that Carmine Falcone’s building?”

Gary began to answer when bullets started to rip into the asphalt in front of them. Linda screamed. Gary knew he should back the car up, or jump out, something, but he was frozen for a second, a second too long...

*

Robin yelped, his eyes on his computer and the traffic cameras, which he was periodically moving around, checking the area around Falcone’s when he yelled. “Batman there’s a helicopter firing on Falcone’s building!”

Batman hands on the wheel tightened as he hit the gas with a hiss. “Joker, it has to be.”

Robin muttered. “Where did he get a helicopter?”

*

Joker leaned into the body of the helicopter and yelled at Boxer and Jason. “Keep firing until we’re out of ammo, I want that building destroyed!”

He turned to Ryan. “Toss me some grenades, let’s make this even more fun!”

Ryan chuckled around her cigar and began tossing grenades at Joker and Harley, who caught them, pulled the pins, and tossed them out of the helicopter toward the building.

Joker smiled at his girl. “Wanna wager on who can take out say…” He narrowed his eyes and pointed at a sculpture deep inside the office, just barely visible through the now flickering lights, that the bullets of the helicopter had miraculously somehow missed. “That!” He pointed giving her a cheerful grin.

Harley giggled. “You’re on! Better think of something good to give me when I win.”

She gave Joker a saucy wink which had him laughing.

She threw her grenade, leaning out of the helicopter, tossing the explosive weapon just as someone tried once more to open the office door, but her attention was dragged from the explosion to the ground. She gasped as she saw some movement below, something long and black...the Batmobile came rushing down the street. Mentally she snarled to herself, Bruce.

The grenade exploded, but Harley wasn’t paying any attention to it as she pointed below them, the helicopter rocking slightly from the explosion. “PUDDIN!! Batsy’s here!”

Frost had stopped firing at the police car turning to look at Harley before he looked down to see the Batmobile, anger welling up hot and fast at the sight of Batman.

Joker, leaned out, his gaze fixed downward as the helicopter shifted in the air until he caught sight of his brother’s unique long, black car. Joker grinned wide, his blue eyes slightly wild as he murmured. “Batman.”

*

Tallyman made it to the roof, stopping along the way to grab a couple of Falcone’s better armed men. They had all felt the shift as something exploded in the building, all of them stopping for a moment to hold on to the handrails in the stairwell where they were currently located, trying to get to the roof. Whatever had caused the explosion hadn’t reached them as Tallyman motioned for them to keep moving. He could only hope the building didn’t collapse.

Tallyman hit the door to the roof, getting Falcone’s man Loubo to hold the door so that the group of five men could rush out onto the roof. Immediately they could hear the sound of the helicopter close to the building as they all rushed to the edge to look down. The helicopter was hovering below them.

Tallyman smirked. Perfect, he thought. He got to the very edge and took aim at the helicopter’s blades while the rest of the men with him did the same.

*

Joker laughed as Harley leaned out as far as she could, a grenade in her hand ready to drop it straight down on the hood of the Batmobile (if her aim was good), when suddenly the sounds of several things hitting the helicopter could be heard over the engine and blades. For just a second it sounded like a ping, just barely heard over the sound of the spinning blades, but that sound was quickly followed by several others, slamming into the helicopter from above. The impact of the bullets caused the helicopter to begin to lose height. The sudden shift was enough that everyone in the helicopter (except the pilots) lost their balance. Joker grabbed Harley, pulling her back as she dropped the grenade. (She didn’t get to see where her grenade landed a few seconds later, but it hit one of the cars parked below, not close enough to hurt Batman, but the bright explosion temporarily blinded the Bat and his sidekick) as another set of pings hit the helicopter, raining down on them in rapid succession.

Boxer turned and yelled. “Someone is shooting at us. I think they hit the the rotor!”

Joker snarled. “Fuck, get us out of here.”

He growled in annoyance, they didn’t get to destroy the building and he didn’t know if Falcone was dead...but at least the message was clear.

His smile was followed by a laugh. Sometimes you gotta take what you can get, he thought.

*

Down below, Batman had just gotten out of the car, giving the area a quick scan when he stood up beside the car. There was a body on top of one of the cars, the roof of which was smashed in like a pancake from the body’s impact. Batman couldn’t be sure until he went over there, but his gut told him the body was either Falcone’s ex-wife or his lawyer, the only two people still missing that the Joker had kidnapped. Logic said, if that was Joker up there in that helicopter, the body was most likely connected; but at the moment that didn’t matter. His gaze was drawn upward toward the helicopter. His gaze caught something, illuminated by street lights, something falling. At first he didn’t quite realize what it was that was falling swiftly down, but at the last second he realized what he was seeing.

The grenade hit the top of one of the cars near the body, it bounced down to hit a windshield before it rolled along the hood of one of several park cars and exploded, throwing metal fragments and glass everywhere. Batman had only just enough time to register that a grenade had fallen before he had propelled himself over the hood of his car, grabbing Dick and yanking the young man to the asphalt, throwing his cape over them both just as the explosion erupted.

*
Joker looked down with a laugh. “Damn Harley, that was great!”

A few more bullets hit the helicopter causing the pilot to lurch violently to the side.

Boxer yelled. “I’m gonna have to fly up and get us out of here.”

Joker nodded. “Go!”

The helicopter began a quick ascent.

*

Tallyman grinned. “They’re coming up, get ready.”

The helicopter rose up, shifting and turning as it lifted past the roof of Falcone’s building. Tallyman took aim, waited as the helicopter rose, turning slightly, the cockpit facing him.

There was a moment where everything slowed down. Tallyman brought his weapons up, he could see the expression of both the pilot and the co-pilot, no one he knew...he smiled as he pulled the triggers on his weapons.

*

Boxer looked up and saw the man standing on the roof with his weapons aimed at the cockpit.

He yelled. “FUCK!”

He started to pull away as Jason caught sight of the man too. Jason’s eyes widened in surprise just as fifty caliber rounds hit the windshield of the helicopter. Jason threw himself down, his arms over his head, but Boxer wasn’t as lucky. A bullet broke through the glass and slammed right between his eyes.

The helicopter spun in a crazed circle at the same time rising higher as Boxer fell forward, his body slumping over the controls.

Inside the helicopter, Joker reached out to grab Harley who was struggling to hold onto to her hand just as the tail of the helicopter spun around.

Tallyman’s eyes widened as he realized the helicopter was going to hit part of the roof, the tail spinning wildly toward them.

“RUN!” He yelled at the handful of men who were up here with them.

The tail of the helicopter hit the edge of the building, the sound of metal scraping against concrete was loud, a strange high pitched whine.

Inside the cockpit, Jason unbuckled himself, yanking Boxer’s body out of the way in order to grab the controls. The helicopter spun a few inches from the building. Mikey lost his grip and fell out. Ryan screamed. Frost was holding on, his arms aching with the effort. The helicopter swung Harley around hard enough that she lost her grip and started to fall backwards out of the helicopter.

Joker’s hand snapped out and grabbed Harley’s hand as she screamed, her body coming dangerously close to the open side. He held onto her, his hand tight enough that he wouldn’t be surprised if he had broken one of her fingers, but he wasn’t going to lose her, not again. Joker’s blue eyes were wide as he struggled to pull her back against the force of the helicopter trying to fling her out. His grip on her hand was firm, his arm locked as Harley stared back at him, her eyes filled with fear.
Joker yelled over the helicopter. “I won’t let go Harley!! I won’t ever let go!!”

Harley nodded back, though she still looked terrified.

Jason was struggling with the helicopter as the tail spun around again, a few feet lower, and smashed through glass. Jason jerked the controls and pulled them back, smiling as he started to gain altitude.

* *

By this time more police had arrived, their weapons outs, cars blocking off the area, they watched the helicopter wildly struggled for control.

Batman was the one to yell. “CLEAR THE AREA!”

* *

Jason had just gotten the helicopter under control, though how long he could keep it airborne was questionable. The helicopter had risen further above the building, Jason trying to turn her, but the controls were not cooperating easily.

Joker was still holding on to Harley who was still far too close to the edge, when another bullet ripped through the interior, hitting Harley in the shoulder of the arm that Joker was holding on to. Harley cried out in pain as the bullet ripped an exit wound out of her shoulder only to slam into Joker’s shoulder. All the strength in the arm that held his wife fled as the bullet tore through his shoulder. His fingers went numb and his hand opened, releasing Harley who fell backwards out of the helicopter.

Joker roared as his arm dropped dead at his side and he watched in horror as Harley fell backwards out of the helicopter leaving a trail of blood in the air.

“NO!!”
Heartache Every Moment

As Batman looked up, he could see the helicopter struggling for control, illuminated by the city lights and the flashes of gunfire at the top of the building. He had just begun to move toward the building when he saw someone fall from the struggling helicopter. He turned, for a brief moment thinking to go and try to catch the person, but in the same instant he knew there was nothing he could do—it happened too quickly and suddenly the body was crashing to the ground. Batman spun around fully when the body hit, saw the burst of blood as the body slammed against the roof of a nearby parked car smashing in the roof of the car and shattering the windows with an explosion of glass. He didn’t bother moving closer to see whoever that person was...he or she was dead. Instead he moved closer to Robin yelling over the sounds of the helicopter, the police and the gunfire.

“Get over to the police, see what you can do to help. I’m…”

That was when he heard a woman’s scream. He wasn’t sure what it was that made him react the way he did when he heard the scream. It wasn’t like there was something distinctly familiar about the sound. No, Batman would realize later, that wasn’t true, he would be lying to himself, there was something familiar about the sound, and his gut told him exactly who it was that screamed. Batman looked up. He saw the streetlight catch the glow of white hair, dipped pink and blue and knew it was Harley Quinn, just as he had known it was Joker--Jack--in that helicopter making his attack on Falcone.

Batman only had a moment to decide what to do or Harley was going to hit a car or the street. The chances of her surviving such an impact were zero, just like the person who had fallen only seconds before. He could only imagine how Joker would react to Harley dying, what his brother would do to Gotham if Harley died. For a moment the thought of letting her go, letting her die, flashed through his mind. It was a brief thought, barely fully formed, but it was there, let her die, let the woman that he felt had ruined his brother--who had taken his brother’s hand and led Jack the rest of the way down the path of complete madness--just let her die, be done with her. But he realized in the same breath that he couldn’t do that, he couldn’t give in to his darker thoughts, because if he did, then he would be exactly like Jack, mad, angry...lost.

Batman wasn’t sure if he was doing this for her, for Joker, for Jack, or for himself, but Batman yanked a large capsule from his belt, and threw it to the ground. The capsule was about the size of his fist and he only had the one. It was still experimental, something Fox had come up with just in case something were to ever happen to the grappling hooks that the crime fighters used. While that had never happened because of Fox’s excellent design work, there was always the possibility that Batman or Robin could fall, a bad hand hold, a cut line, a miscalculated jump, there were numerous ways that either of them could end up falling to a grisly death. The substance in the capsule had worked well in the lab, but Batman had never tested it in the field...until now and he wasn’t even sure he had activated it quickly enough to save her.

The large dark yellow capsule hit the asphalt and exploded, the sound more like the pop of a high powered air gun than an actual explosion. The white form that erupted from it spread swiftly. In the blink of an eye there was what looked like an extremely thick, dense king size mattress made of some sort of foam-like substance. No sooner had the thing sprung to life, than Harley landed on the padding, her scream suddenly cut off as her body collided with the strange foam-like substance.

Batman raced over to her and stopped for a moment in shock.

She was lying on her back, her arms out from her body, one of them, her left, at an awkward, unnatural angle. He saw a bullet hole in her right shoulder, her front torso covered in blood. Her face was turned slightly away from him, her white hair spread out under her, a broken hair tie tangled in her hair. She looked so young, so innocent, her features beautiful, at this moment Batman had to admit, she was beautiful. She looked like a broken fairytale princess with her pure white porcelain skin and hair freckled with specks of blood, but her face looked soft, delicate, her lips slightly parted, stained red with blood. Broken and beautiful. Batman took a deep breath before he reached out and touched the exposed side of her throat. He waited silently, ignoring everything else around him and focused on the beat of her heart. After a few tense seconds he let out a sigh of relief when he felt the beat of her heart, against the tip of his gloved fingers.

Harley Quinn was alive.

*

Joker started to throw himself out of the helicopter after Harley, his hand reaching for her even though she wasn’t there. “HARLEY!!”

Frost threw himself across the helicopter and grabbed Joker, yanking him away from the open door while Jason pulled the helicopter away from the building, turning and heading away from Falcone’s tower.

Joker struggled, fighting to free himself, screaming himself hoarse. “HARLEY!! WE CAN’T LEAVE HER!!!”

Frost held on as tightly as he could, his arms around Joker’s waist, but the man was strong, maddened with fright, grief, anger, and Frost couldn’t hold him much longer. Suddenly Joker turned on Frost, the large hole in his shoulder doing nothing to slow him down. Now he was running on pure fear and raging madness. Joker slammed his elbow back, his elbow connecting with Frost’s nose. Frost cried out, his head snapping back and his grip on Joker loosening when his nose broke. Joker spun around and slammed the flat of his hand into Frost’s chest with enough force that he knocked the air out of the larger man’s lungs. Frost choked, his breath suddenly forced out of his lungs. His heart felt like it had stopped momentarily as he stumbled back, making croaking noises and struggling for his breathe. He couldn’t be sure yet what Joker had done to him, all he knew was that he was in pain.

Ryan was in a corner crying as the two men struggled.

Frost, still struggling with his breath, tried to grab Joker again, but Joker wrapped a hand like a vice grip around Frost’s arm, yanking him forward, while at the same time Joker jumped up and wrapped his legs around Frost’s waist, twisting and bearing Frost down to the floor of the helicopter. The impact made the helicopter tilt dangerously. The two men rolled toward one of the one doors.

Jason looked behind him and yelled as he struggled with the controls. “STOP IT! Someone close those doors!!”

Ryan’s head came up, her eyes bloodshot, but it was only now that she realized what was happening. She had seen Harley Quinn, the Joker’s girl, fall out of the helicopter right after Mikey fell, and by the way Frost and Joker were going at it, she was going to assume Joker was trying to go after his girl. She couldn’t blame him, but he was putting them all in further danger with his insane behavior.

Joker and Frost rolled closer to one of the open doors. Ryan was up, pulling the opposite door closed. It took all her strength, but she got the door slammed shut cutting off one way for the two men to kill themselves she thought. She looked around and picked up one of the rifles that miraculously was still in the helicopter and took a lurching step over to the two men fighting.
Joker had gotten Frost on his back.

Joker straddled his friend, his hands around Frost’s throat. Joker’s eyes were wild, the blue seemed to glow eerily, his teeth were bared in a vicious bloody smile,. His usually white teeth were now stained red while blood dripped from his nose across his lips and down his chin as he choked Frost.

What really frightened Frost was when Joker began to laugh while continuing to choke him.

Frost grabbed at Joker’s hands, pleading with him while he still had breath. “Boss, Boss please...can’t...can’t breathe…”

Joker giggled, his grip tightening, his thumbs pressing into the soft flesh under Frost’s jaw, letting a steady trickle of blood to run down Joker’s arms from the wound in his shoulder, staining his white fingers red while he giggled maniacally.

Ryan wasn’t sure where the man was finding the strength with that hole in his shoulder, but it didn’t matter, she needed to stop him. She raised the rifle, for a split second she thought about shooting him. It was his fault Mikey was dead...but her common sense quickly asserted itself, it wasn’t his fault, he had lost his girl too. She sighed flipping the weapon around and with the butt of the rifle, she slammed it down on the back of Joker’s head.

Joker didn’t react to the first hit except to blink as his head snapped forward a few inches, continuing to choke the life out of Frost, but the second hit caused him to slump forward a little, loosening his grip on Frost. Joker looked confused. “What…” Blood appeared on the back of his head, staining the green locks with red.

Joker stared down at Frost as if just seeing him for the first time, his grip on Frost’s throat loosening.

Joker frowned. “Frost?”

Frost choked struggling to breathe, his hands on Joker’s shoulders.

That was when Ryan hit him again with the butt of the rifle, this time the impact was hard enough that Joker slumped forward, dropping against Frost unconscious. Frost reached out and wrapped his arms around Joker’s unconscious body with a gasp as he sucked in air. He held onto Joker, hugging his unconscious body to him as Ryan dropped the gun and pulled the door of the helicopter closed before she dropped to her knees next to them.

Jason looked back at them with a sigh of relief.

*

Harley was screaming, reaching for Joker, her fingers brushed against his fingertips, she could feel the leather of the glove he wore, see the panic in his eyes as he reached for her...

She was falling away, it felt like she fell forever...watching him recede into the sky away from her as he continued to call for her. She heard his voice, his roar of agony, but just as quickly the sound was gone, fading away only to be replaced by other sounds, other voices, gunfire and the feel of air rushing past...

She was going to die...the thought hung in the air around her, she was going to die...JACK!! NO!! She screamed again, tears rushing down her cheeks only to be whipped away by the wind rushing past her...PUDDIN!! She didn’t want to die, she wanted to be with Jack, Joker, puddin, her lover forever, always by his side. Harley choked on a sob, she didn’t want to leave him, she didn’t want to be without him, not again. Oh please not again, she silently pleaded. She knew the ground was rushing up to meet her, she was going to die and there was nothing she could do to stop it. She didn’t close her eyes, she wanted to keep looking at the helicopter as it pulled away. At least he was alive...her puddin...then...nothing.

Harley woke with a start, trying to sit up in her panic. She gasped in pain, jerking her arms up at the same time. Pain grabbed hold of her, threatening to pull her back down into her nightmare, but she continued to struggle against it as her brain began to take account of her situation.

One arm wouldn’t obey her; it was too heavy. Though she tried to move it, lifting it was a chore, and it hurt, a deep ache, while the other arm was accompanied by the press of metal into her wrist and the sound of metal clanking against metal. Harley gasped for breath. She could feel the nasal canals in her nose and the sudden pain that rippled through her as she struggled, in her arm, her shoulder and her sides. Breathing was a chore and the pain made her feel for a moment as if her arm was being pulled from its socket. The pain was a brief, terrible flash before she was falling back again, once more losing the fight to stay conscious.

Later…

She had no idea how much later it was, but she could feel the difference. The room felt darker, heavier, that strange quiet that came with the night, like a comforting blanket wrapped around to keep one safe and warm. Everything in the world seemed to be muted once the sun was down.

She couldn’t seem to open her eyes, it was just too difficult, her entire body felt heavy, as if something was holding her down against the bed, but it was also strangely nice, as if her entire body was numb. She laid still, unable to move, letting that numbness wash over her, comforting in a way. After a little bit, her body began to feel as if she were floating. It was a strange combination, both being held down, while floating, but she didn’t give it much thought; everything was hazy. After what felt like only a short amount of time, she realized that she could hear voices…whispers that at once seemed distant and close. She was sure she hadn’t heard them before, it was as if they had simply come into being in the room. At first she wasn’t interested in hearing what they said, but she heard her name, she was sure she heard her name. With effort she focused on the voices.

“She has a broken ulnar, three broken ribs and a concussion. That is in addition to the bullet wound in her shoulder. I’m shocked she’s alive, after that fall she took. If it wasn’t for you she would be dead, she’s very lucky.” The voice wasn’t one she recognized. It was male, educated with the certain way of enunciating words that reminded her of her college professors. Another voice joined the first. This other voice sounded familiar, but rougher, deeper, darker.

“I want her kept away from the other prisoners. Not only is she dangerous herself, but Carmine Falcone will be after her and I know he has men in Blackgate. She needs 24 hour protection.” The voice was gruff. The speaker expected to be obeyed without question, clearly accustomed to only have to state his needs and have them fulfilled.

The professor voice sighed. “Batman, you have no jurisdiction here. I cannot go against Blackgate policies just for you, but...I will keep her separated. I can use my physician's status to say that she cannot be in the general population while she is recovering. It will work for a few days, but not forever. She’ll be in the hospital wing of the prison for at least another few days, five maybe, then we can move her to isolation for the week or two she will be with us beyond that, before she is transferred to Arkham for observation. I will talk to the warden about keeping her safe. But once she is outside these prison walls there isn’t much I can do for her Batman. Once she is moved to Arkham, she is out of my hands. You’ll have to speak with the warden of course...”

Harley tuned the voices out as her mind processed what she had heard: prison...Blackgate Prison? Batman? Harley frowned...Batman...Batman...for a few seconds she couldn’t quite grab onto why Batman meant something more...Bruce? Bruce Wayne. Bruce!! She struggled to open her eyes, to make her body move, but she couldn’t make her body obey, she couldn’t do anything but lie on the bed and listen...but even that was beginning to fade. It was too much effort to stay focused. She was just so tired.

Harley heard Batman say softly. “Just have several guards on her. I want her under guard as often as possible. I don’t trust Joker not to try and get her once he realizes where she is and if he does come for her, it will be bloody. But Joker isn’t the only one who will be after her, once Falcone knows where she is I have no doubt that he will bend all his will to getting to her, especially since he will want to hurt Joker. To hurt Joker, the easiest and fastest means will be through Harley Quinn.”

The doctor said softly. “You really think this Joker person will risk his life to come after this woman?”

Batman’s voice was soft but firm. “I know he will. He is obsessed with her. He will do anything to get her back, of that I have no doubt.”

Harley continued to struggle harder as the voices faded away...Joker...Jack...PUDDIN!! She wanted to scream at Batman, to cry for Jack, to plead to see him. At this point she would do anything to be with Jack, even deal with the devil. She fought to get her eyes open, she had to talk to Batman, to tell him what she would do if he hurt her puddin. She needed to tell Batman--Bruce--how much she hated him, how much he had hurt Jack. She continued to struggle for what seemed hours to open her eyes, but when she was finally able to get her eyes opened, she was alone, in the dark, the room was quiet, and the only sounds were the soft beeps of the monitors in the room.

When Harley woke again she was able to open her eyes normally, though she couldn’t seem to make herself focus. Her eyes fluttered but the room she was in refused to come into focus. She pulled up but she couldn’t move and her head spun every time she shifted until she gave up and dropped back onto the pillow with a soft groan.

She lay still for a long time focused on her breathing. She could hear the low, steady beeping of machines in the room with her. She turned her head toward the sound to see a monitor that displayed the beat of her heart. There was an IV stand next to that with tubes that led into her arm. She frowned slightly in thought. She remembered the gun shot through her shoulder, the sudden burst of pain followed by seeing Joker’s shoulder burst open in a shock of red, like a flower opening its petals. They had both let go. No, that wasn’t right. They hadn’t let go, their hands were forced open, the bullet ripping through their bodies, her hand had gone numb and she lost her hold on him, then she was falling.

Harley made a soft whimper. She couldn’t remember anything after the gun shot. Trying to remember made her want to vomit. It was like her mind was blanking out what happened next and maybe that was for the best she thought. Reliving the moment of impact with the pavement probably was not something she wanted to do.

Harley laid back and looked up at the ceiling. She could see a crack that ran along the ceiling and spiderwebbed from there. She frowned in thought then bit her bottom lip to stop herself from crying. Joker...Jack...where was he, was he safe? Alive? Please let him be both she thought as tears rebelliously slid down the sides of her face.

She sniffed, trying to ignore her tears and take stock of her situation. She moved her head slowly, finding that the slow movements made focusing easier. She saw that her left arm was in a cast from her wrist to just above her elbow. She turned to look at her right arm and saw her wrist was handcuffed to the side of the bed. She was obviously in a hospital bed. As she became more capable of focusing, she looked around the room.
It was nighttime and the room was dark except for the lights given off by the monitors and some dim lighting outside the window at the far end of the room. There was a window, no curtains, and she could see that it was covered in bars. The walls were painted a dull white, there was one chair, a table, the monitors, a moveable curtain, and the bed, but nothing else. It was dark but the walls looked to be painted a light color, maybe beige (it was difficult to determine in the blue and green lights of the monitors), but it was old and dull.

She took a breath and tried to sit up a little, but it was difficult and her sides hurt when she moved. Pain lanced through her side, from front to back. Broken ribs, she realized as she sucked in a breath and felt the pain spike higher as her lungs expanded. She saw a door with a small window...which also had bars across the glass.

Harley’s bottom lip began to tremble again as the reality of her situation came crashing down on her. She was locked away from her puddin with no idea how she was going to get to him.

*

Joker’s eyes flew open. His green hair was a mess, curls everywhere making him look crazed, some sticking to his forehead as he sat up with a snarl. “WHERE’S HARLEY!!! WHO FUCKING HIT ME??!!!”

Agatha was sitting beside his bed. She didn’t jump when he sat up, but she did reach out and laid her hand on Jack’s bare chest. “Jackie, settle down or you’ll pull your stitches.”

Jack turned to look in confusion at his aunt. “Auntie?”

She frowned reaching out to lay her hand against his pale cheek. “Jackie, you’ve been shot and you have a concussion. Now lie down.”

Jack hissed as he breathed through his teeth, in a combination of both mental and physical pain. His fingers clawed into the sheets and for a moment Agatha was scared he was going to attack her. His blue eyes looked mad, full on mad hatter type of mad like she hadn’t see before and it scared her—he scared her. She didn’t want to hurt him, but she would if she had to... In the next breath though, all the strength went out of him and Jack dropped back against the pillows. He took a breath looking around slowly to see that he was in his own bedroom, and somehow that hurt more than if he had simply been in the hospital because this was his place with Harley, his safe place with his girl, their place, their sanctuary from the world...

Harley wasn’t here.

Jack felt his heart twist in his chest. He fought the despair, the feeling of desolation. He took a slow breath and looked around the room, fighting to keep his emotions under control as he studied his surroundings again, distancing himself from thoughts of Harley so he could understand what was going on.

He could see that an IV stand rested next to his bed and connected to his arm, but other than that, there was nothing else in the room except him and his aunt. Jack turned his attention back to his aunt. He only said one word, his voice rough and dry.

“Harley.”

When he spoke her name, his voice sounded strained and hollow in the room, as if the life of the room was gone now that Harley wasn’t here.

Agatha reached out and laid her hand over his. She could feel the tension in him, he was holding himself so tight, expecting the worst. Agatha hurt for him. It had to hurt she thought, holding himself like that, but she gave his hand a squeeze. “She’s alive.”

Jack sank back against the pillows, the tension of his entire body flowed out at the same time he let out the breath he had been holding. Tears began to run down the side of his face against his will, but he simply couldn’t hold them back any longer.

His voice cracked as he asked. “She’s alive?”

Agatha nodded. “Yes Jackie, she is alive.”

Jack made a choking sound, and at the same time he curled onto his side. Agatha moved from the chair where she had been sitting to sit on the side of the bed next to him. She gently pulled his head onto her lap and held him, stroking her fingers through the tangle of green curls. She could feel him crying, though he didn’t make a sound. She could only tell he was weeping by the soft vibrations against her lap and the dampness against her thighs. She pressed her lips together holding back her own grief. Harley was alive, but where she was...she didn’t know what they were going to do, or how Jack was going to survive without her. They had already been apart once...

After a few minutes of silent crying, Jack’s voice was soft, muffled against his aunt’s lap. “Auntie...where is she?”

Agatha gently eased him up, her hands on either side of his face so she could look him in the eyes when she told him about Harley. His blue eyes looked feverish, as if he would lose his control at any moment, madness consuming him, which was just what Agatha was worried about. Jack’s balance was precarious, had grown less steady over the last few months, especially since his brush with death in the chemical plant...Harley being out of his reach might tip him over completely.

“She’s in Blackgate prison at the moment,” Agatha said softly.

Jack pushed himself up further. “What?”

She sighed. “Let me go get you something to eat and drink, then we can talk further…” She started to get up, but Jack grabbed her wrist. Though he seemed weak, the grip on her wrist said the opposite. She could feel that it would take very little for Jack to break her wrist...

Agatha sat back down with a sigh. “Batman caught her. I’m not sure how, but he did it--that’s what everyone is saying. All the stories have said Batman caught her, saved her life. She was taken to Blackgate in bad shape, broken arm, broken ribs, a concussion plus the bullet wound. She is being held in their medical ward until she can be transferred to Arkham for a mental evaluation to see if she is stable enough to stand trial.”

Jack asked in a whisper. “Falcone?”

“Still alive. He’s at Gotham General,” Agatha replied.

Jack growled laying back on the bed and staring up at the ceiling. After a couple of seconds in which Agatha didn’t dare move, he finally asked. “How is Frost?”

“He’s fine. Some cuts, as well bruises on his throat,” Agatha said softly with a hint of tightness in her tone.

Jack sighed, dropping an arm over his eyes. “Tell him I’m sorry.”

Agatha reached out and patted his hand. “You can tell him yourself. He’s downstairs.”
Jack frowned. “He’s still with me?”

Agatha nodded. “Sweetie, he understands.”

Jack closed his eyes with a sigh. “We lose anyone else?”

Agatha frowned. “Mikey died, but the Irish are still with us. Ryan wants revenge on Falcone. She is ready to tear Gotham down to get to him, but no, we didn’t lose anyone else that night. Bane, Bea and I were able to destroy some of Falcone’s warehouses. You would have loved it Jackie, the fire was spectacular! Zsasz took out several close family members, enough that Falcone is going to feel it. Everyone else inflicted some damage that Falcone is going to be hurting. He may not be dead, but he isn’t going to recover from this quickly. He’s a dying man in the desert and the vultures are circling.”

Jack smiled then, a bitter twist to his lips, his eyes still closed as he spoke. “That’s good.”

He opened his eyes slowly to look at his aunt again. “I’m starving…”

Agatha patted his hand as she stood. “I’ll go get you something to eat.”

Jack gave her a wan smile as he watched her go. Once she had shut the door he rolled over onto his side again, pulling one of the pillows close. He could smell Harley on the sheets…his Harley.

He squeezed his eyes shut, but he didn’t cry. Instead he giggled into the pillow.

“I’ll get you back pumpkin, just hold on, I’m coming for you. There is going to be a bloody bath in Gotham until I have you back…you just hold on pumpkin…just hold on.”

*

Crane sipped his tea as he watched the news, one brow quirked in interest as news reporter, Chester King, delivered the top news in Gotham.

“Harley Quinn, known associate and paramour of the man calling himself The Joker, has been taken into custody after a dramatic attempt on businessman Carmine Falcone’s life. Witnesses state that Joker and Harley Quinn threw Falcone’s ex-wife out of a helicopter at the building where Falcone keeps his offices. A shootout erupted and Harley Quinn was thrown from the helicopter. She was rescued by none other than Batman. At this time Harley Quinn is being kept at Blackgate Penitentiary hospital wing. From there, it is likely she will be relocated to Arkham Asylum where doctors will determine if she is mentally stable enough to stand trial.

Harley Quinn, once known as Dr. Harleen Quinzel began her career at…”

Crane smiled, tuning out the history lesson on Harleen; he knew her past well. He stood up and began to pace his apartment. This was perfect, he determined, thinking quickly. He knew for a fact that Blackgate’s medical staff was always understaffed and underpaid, but most importantly, they didn’t do background checks...not as they were supposed to--too time consuming for a place that had such a high turnover rate in staff, especially in the medical wing where doctors and nurses seldom lasted more than a month or two. If you had a degree, you were hired. Perhaps he could even get himself assigned as her court appointed psychiatrist, it really wouldn’t take much at all...not much at all he thought as he paced. He would simply take some leave from the college, change his name, a few clicks of a computer and voila, he would be a new man! Getting closer to his Lady Crow would be simple from there and they were even providing him with the perfect moment to take her back...the transport to Arkham. He just needed to be able to time this...and she would be all his once again.
Crane moved over to his laptop, picking it up as he walked into the bedroom. Time to apply for a new job.

*

Falcone was sitting up in his hospital bed in his private hospital room, hooked up to what felt like a million machines monitoring everything he did, from breathing to pissing and he hated it. He was ready to go home, but they wanted to keep him for another couple of days.

He had already heard the news, Harley Quinn had been captured. He smiled. It wasn’t the Joker, but perhaps this was even better! It was perfect, just perfect he thought. He may not be able to get to that fucking clown, but he could get the next best thing--his girl. And sometimes the best way to hurt a rival was through someone they loved. Joker even knew that as Falcone’s memory flashed on Gigi’s death. Falcone smiled with a derisive curl to his lip. Every man had an Achilles heel and Falcone was willing to bet real money that this dame was the Joker’s soft spot. Killing her would be just the statement he needed to make to let the Joker know that there were no more games, this was all out war...and in war, there were casualties. He chewed his bottom lip wishing he had a drink as he contemplated what to do. Did he just want to kill her outright, or torture her? Maybe provide that punk Joker with some video of his girl getting hurt, maybe even raped? He would have to think about it. He didn’t just want to hurt the Joker; he wanted to destroy him utterly.

He glanced over as his hospital door opened and his daughter Sophia walked in. She looked lovely he thought, dressed in a black suit and heels, her hair done up high on her head making him think of Audrey Hepburn in Breakfast at Tiffany’s and in a lot of ways she looked like her mother, that same effortless elegance. She walked over, her heels making a crisp click against the floor as she leaned over and kissed his cheek.

“Daddy,” she said softly before moving to the other side of the bed and taking the chair. Her own bodyguards followed her in, two people that Falcone knew well, Angelo Mirti who had been with his daughter since she was quite young, and Lucia Viti, a woman a few years older than Sophia and as cold-blooded as they came. The two guards took positions near the door. Falcone smirked a little. His own guards were on the other side but his little girl had to have her own. He wasn’t sure if it was habit, or if she didn’t trust his bodyguards. He was beginning to wonder how much he could trust his own bodyguards after recent events...incompetence or failure were nearly as bad as treachery.

“So, how are you doing?” Sophia asked. Her father, oddly for a man who had been shot twice, looked robust, as if a murder attempt was just the sort of pick me up he had needed.

“I’m ready to get out of this joint,” Carmine muttered before he sighed. “I’m fine. How are you doing?”

Sophia frowned wrapping her arms around herself as she spoke. “I’m all right I suppose, though I had to go to the morgue to identify Momma’s body.”

“Oh honey, I’m so sorry.” Carmine frowned. He would have reached out to her, but he could tell that was not what Sophia wanted.

Sophia looked over at her father. “So now what?”

Carmine smiled, though the smile was cold. “We get our revenge. You heard on the news, they have that clown’s woman in Blackgate? Harley Quinn is like a spider trapped in a web now, getting to her in that prison will be easy.”

Sophia nodded. “Yes, she is in the hospital ward at the jail, but it’s only temporary. After that they will be moving her to Arkham.”

Carmine nodded. “Yes, we are going to get her before they can move her.”

Sophia’s brow furrowed in confusion. “But how? She is under heavy guard at the moment.”

Carmine leaned back against his pillow. “I have men everywhere Phia, there is no place they can put that bitch that I won’t be able to get to her.”

Sophia’s frown deepened. She understood the necessity of a show of force, of going after the current weak link the the Joker’s family, but it still didn’t set well with her. The thought of going after a woman while she was down, injured and not in a position to defend herself made her uncomfortable. It wasn’t that Sophia wasn’t above taking advantage of a foe, but there was just something about what her father was proposing that got under her skin. She kept her thoughts to herself; if she voiced them, her father would simply say that she was showing weakness. Sophia schooled her features as she listened to her father talk about his plan to torture and kill Harley Quinn...But maybe there was a better way, she thought, a way to get what she wanted, which was her father out of the way.

*

Frost and the others were waiting downstairs for Joker. Frost hadn’t seen him since the helicopter, the loss of Harley and his Boss’s mad attack on him. Frost reached up unconsciously and rubbed at the bruises on his neck, mostly hidden by the shirt and tie. If it hadn’t been for Ryan, he had no doubt that Joker would have killed him. He frowned and reached out for his cup of coffee that was sitting on the table in front of him. He wasn’t sure he would have blamed Joker either. He understood how close Joker and Harley were, what they had been through together. It wasn’t that long ago that Jack...Joker, thought he had lost her, that she was dead. Frost could only imagine what Joker was feeling now. Harley was alive yes, she was far, far out of reach.

Across from Frost, Alex took a sip of his own drink. Frost glanced over at the one-armed man, he wasn’t sure if it was coffee with bourbon or bourbon with coffee that Alex was drinking. Frost had watched him pour what looked like half the bottle of bourbon into the mug and take a sip without flinching. Next to Alex, Zsasz leaned against the wall. The pale, bald man had a bottle of water in his hand. On Zsasz’s right, Bea leaned against the wall next to him. She was speaking quietly to the bald man, the two of them practically had their heads together. Frost couldn’t be sure, but he thought something might be going on with those two.

Frost turned to look over to where Trope and Thea were sitting on the floor with their computers. He knew the girls were studying Blackgate blueprints they had found online. How, he wasn’t sure, but the lovers had been studying everything they could about Blackgate. Both had been devastated when they heard that Harley had been taken and they had set themselves to trying to find a weak spot in the prison, something that could be used to get Harley out. As far as he knew they hadn’t found anything--yet--but the two women were working nonstop to find something they could present to Joker.

Bane and Dr. October were sitting on the couch, both quiet. Bane didn’t look too good to Frost--might be the drugs, he couldn’t be sure. Lastly Frost looked over at Jason who was worrying at a fingernail as he paced in the space between the kitchen and the living room. The young man looked angry. Frost knew he blamed himself for losing Harley, he felt that his struggle for control of the helicopter had been what caused them to lose her, but Frost knew it wasn’t his fault. It was whoever had shot Harley and Joker...that was where the blame laid, but Jason couldn’t stop blaming himself.

Everyone heard movement upstairs, and a couple of seconds later Agatha came down the stairs. Frost frowned watching her. She looked to have aged again, first when Jack and Harley were thought dead, and now this. Frost worried that being part of the gang wasn’t good for her, either mentally or physically. No one knew just how much Agatha loved her nephew and Harley, and no one but him knew how much guilt she carried around with her for how things turned out between Jack and his brother. And he knew that Agatha did blame herself. Frost sighed quietly. It didn’t matter what he said, Agatha wouldn’t completely open up to him, about her feelings, about her past, but as her lover, the man who held her at night, he knew it was all taking a toil on her.

Agatha smiled at everyone. “He’s on his way down. I’m going to make a fresh pot of coffee, anyone need a refill?”

There were affirmative murmurs in the room with Alex piping up. “You got any more fucking bourbon in there, maybe something stronger?”

Agatha chuckled. “Why don’t you come help me?”

Alex smiled and stood to follow Agatha into the kitchen. A few seconds later everyone’s attention was drawn to the stairs again as Joker came into view.

His hair was slicked back once more, his lips were painted a bright red, the painted smile extended pass his lips slightly which made the smile look wider, slightly more sinister. The shadows around his eyes made the vivid blue eerie and hypnotic. He was dressed in black slacks, a dress shirt that was a shade of red so dark that it almost looked black itself; only when the light caught it just right was the color truly visible. He didn’t wear a tie, leaving the hollow of his throat visible where the shirt lay open, revealing a hint of the cards tattooed on his throat. He wore a pair of suspenders, dark green with a faintly visible diamond pattern, and a pair of sharp toed black ankle boots with monk straps. His underarm gun holsters were clearly visible, both held two pistols along with the four knives he was carrying along the belt at his waist.

Joker hopped down the last step and turned to the living room with a smile.

“Now, let’s discuss how we are going to get Harley back, shall we?” A couple of days had passed. The doctors at Blackgate had reduced the amount of pain medication they were giving Harley which allowed her to feel less foggy and more clear headed. Today they were going to be moving her out of the hospital wing and into a cell, but first, she was being required to have the first of several “evaluations” before she was going to be allowed to speak to an attorney.

Harley closed her eyes and let the warm water of the shower run over her. She was being allowed a shower before she was to go to her new cell. A nurse, a young woman no more than Harley’s age, along with a female guard, were here with her. The guard simply watched her bathe while the nurse helped Harley wash.

Harley sighed. Her cast was wrapped in a plastic bag and the nurse was currently helping Harley with washing her hair. Harley turned to lay her head back into the running water, glancing briefly at the guard. The guard looked back at her without an expression in her eyes. She was a large woman, with broad shoulders that would have made her a great football player and surprisingly long blonde hair that was braided down her back. Harley thought that the hair would have been a liability in the prison, but maybe no one had decided to exploit it. Harley smiled knowing exactly what she would go for when she got into a fight with that guard. Harley had no doubt at some point she would be fighting that guard, as well as a few others.

Harley sighed again and tried to ignore the fact that she was naked with two strangers (especially the fact that she was being assisted with her bathing by a stranger) as the nurse used a plastic cup to help Harley rinse her hair. The woman was being surprisingly gentle and kind, which made Harley suspicious.
The nurse, whose name tag read, Phillips, finished with Harley’s hair and had turned off the water, quickly retrieving a towel and began to help Harley dry herself off while the guard watched, still expressionless. Harley winced as the nurse dragged the towel over Harley’s bruised, broken ribs.

Phillips said softly. “Your skin is so white, it’s so strange. He has white skin too, perfect. I wonder if he’s hairless? I bet he is...I mean Joker right? That’s what he’s calling himself, the Joker right?”

Harley frowned as the nurse directed her to raise her arms.

“Yes,” Harley replied as Phillips wrapped the towel around Harley’s middle, tucked the towel’s end between her breasts.

Phillips smiled. “He’s very handsome in a weird way isn’t he?”

Harley narrowed her eyes. “Yes he is.”

Phillips smiled. “What is he, some sort of nouveau goth? You know I think I might be into gothy bad boys. I bet he is an animal in bed and now he is all alone...” Phillips chuckled. “Guy like that needs a woman in his bed all the time. I bet he is looking for someone new right now. I bet I could make him real happy.”

Harley’s eyes widened, her voice dropping to a whisper. “What did you say?”

Phillips smiled at her. “I said, I bet I could make him real happy. Since you’re in here I bet he needs a new woman in his bed.”

Harley hissed. “You bitch.”

She moved swiftly, grabbing the nurse by the front of her uniform with her one good hand, yanking the nurse forward and slamming her forehead against the nurse’s face. Phillips screamed along with the sound of a crushing snap as her nose broke. Harley shoved the nurse back and threw her fist, hitting Phillips across the face and knocking the nurse to the shower floor before the guard rushed forward to grab Harley around her waist, lifting her off her feet.

Harley screamed, struggling against the guard. “You bitch!!! Joker would never touch a cunt like you!! He’s mine!! If you try to get anywhere near my puddin I’ll cut your fucking breasts off!!”

The guard growled. “Calm the fuck down!!”

Harley twisted around fighting with the guard as the woman struggled to hold Harley while at the same time trying to grab her free arm and pin it to her side. The guard yelled at the nurse who was crying over her broken and bleeding nose.

“You stupid bitch!” Phillips gasped, staring at her bloody hands.

Harley screamed at Phillips while trying to break free of the guard. “This is where if I had a dick, I would tell you to suck it!!”

The guard hissed and threw Harley to the wet tile floor. Harley gasped in pain when she hit, landing on her broke arm. The guard yanked her taser free, aiming it at Harley as Harley tried to get to her feet. The prongs hit her and Harley cried out, jerking and dropping to the shower floor again. Nurse Phillips ran out of the shower, screaming for help.

The next few minutes were chaotic as four more guards, two men and two more women, came rushing in grabbing Harley and trying to hold her down while she fought with all her strength. She ignored the pain in her side and the pain from her broken arm as she screamed.

“I’m going to kill all of you!!! Just you wait!!! My puddin is going to come for me!!! Just you wait!!!
He’ll come for me and you’re all DEAD!!!” Harley was tasered three more times, as well as hit with several batons before she calmed enough that the guards could get her under control.

Harley was lifted up, all of the guards had a hold of her in some way. During the fight she had lost her towel, but no one bothered to cover her as she was carried naked out of the shower. Instead of being taken back to the hospital room, she was taken to her cell. Two of the female guards roughly dressed her, putting her in a pair of orange pants, white t-shirt and orange overshirt.

She was then handcuffed to her bed, a flat shelf that extended out from the wall with a thin mattress over simple metal strip frame.

Harley laid there for a long time, long enough that her pain medication had worn off. She didn’t move, staring up at the ceiling and struggling not to cry. She wanted out of here so much, she wanted to be in her puddin’s arms. She bit her bottom lip hard, fighting not to cry until she tasted blood, but the tears came regardless of her efforts.

It had grown dark by the time someone came to her cell. She couldn’t sit up; her good arm was handcuffed to a metal hoop at the head of her bed, her arm over her head. She tried to lift her head and watch as two guards came in, both male. One had both his taser and baton out, as the other guard uncuffed her from the bed and stepped away.

As Harley sat up, she saw the other man standing in the cell’s doorway. He was a tall black man in a grey suit with an eyepatch, short cut hair and one stern dark eye. He stared at her in silence for a few moments before he spoke.

“Dr. Harleen Quinzel, I’m Warden Martin Joseph of Blackgate Prison. I’m very upset by your behavior today. I expect all inmates to behave in a responsible, non-aggressive manner. Now usually you would be put in solitary to think about your actions, but since it was requested by Batman that you be put in solitary in order to provide you with a certain level of protection, he seems to believe that Falcone would be interested in hurting you. Putting you in solitary would not serve any purpose in teaching you a lesson.”

He smiled at her. “But, I have also been paid handsomely to put you in the general population, so, after your actions today, I think I can see my way to letting you mix with the others. Everyone here at Blackgate needs to learn their place, to learn how things work, and you Dr. Quinzel have already shown that you suffer from defiant obstinate disorder--let’s see if we can fix that.” His smile was definitely unpleasant, Harley thought with a dark scowl.

Warden Joseph motioned at the two guards. “Take her to her new cell.”

Harley was grabbed under her arms, and dragged out of her cell. She didn’t struggle, she hurt too much and at the moment didn’t care where they took her.

The prison was mostly quiet, the lights were out, and as they passed several cells all she saw were dark shadows in bunks. She didn’t bother to look more and she didn’t care.

Finally they arrived at a cell like any of the others. The door was unlocked and opened with a loud bang. Harley was then unceremoniously thrown inside. She stumbled and slammed against the cement floor. The cell door was closed behind her with another loud bang of metal, followed by the sound of a lock clicking into place.
Harley lay on the floor, her white hair covering her face, when a soft voice whispered,

“Hey Harley.”

Harley lifted her head and pushed her hair out of her eyes to see Barbara Kean sitting up on the top bunk of the two beds.

Barbara swung her legs giggling. “Well, there goes the neighborhood!”
Clawing at the Edges

The first night Harley cried herself to sleep.

Barbara had been quiet when she realized just how bad off Harley was, not just with her physically injuries, but emotionally as well. Harley had simply crawled onto the bottom bunk and cried until exhaustion took her. Barbara had sat on the side of her bunk and stroked Harley’s hair gently while the other woman fell into a deep despair.

The next morning Barbara had hopped down from her bunk with a smile. “Rise and shine, time for breakfast.”

Harley didn’t answer her.

Barbara sat down on the side of Harley's bunk. Harley’s white hair was completely obscuring her face. She looked really small huddled in on herself Barbara thought. She reached out and very gently pulled Harley’s hair from her face only to see that Harley’s eyes were open, staring off into nothing. Her eyes were bloodshot and puffy from crying. Barbara could see where Harley had started to bite at one of her fingernails; the nail was torn down, bloody.

Barbara frowned. “Hey kiddo, time for breakfast, you need to get up. Believe me you want to go to breakfast willingly. It’s really no fun if the guards are forced to come and get you. They will hurt you if you give them a reason and they don't care if you’re injured…”

Barbara continued to stroke Harley’s hair. “You’ll feel better once you have something on your stomach. The breakfast isn’t great, but I’ve had worse.”

Harley didn’t say anything, just simply continued to stare.

Barbara glanced over at the cell door. Any minute they would start opening the cells and herding them all out to the prison cafeteria. If Harley wasn’t on her feet, the guards would make an example of her. There was nothing they loved more than to hurt the inmates, made Arkham look like a day spa.

Barbara tried again. “Come on Harley, you need to get up.”

Harley said nothing.

Barbara started to reach for Harley’s arm when she heard the bell go off announcing breakfast. “Shit,” she muttered. “You gotta get up.”

Harley didn’t refuse to move, she simply didn’t. It was strange Barbara thought as she tried to pull Harley out of the bunk. Harley wasn’t fighting her, but she simply didn’t seem to care.

“Come on!” Barbara tried yanking on Harley’s good arm when she heard a familiar voice that made her cringe, followed by the sound of the cell doors opening.

“Well, look here Ginty, looks like we got a prisoner who doesn’t want to get out of her bunk.”

Barbara turned to see Mike and Ginty, a couple of the worst guards in Blackgate, and Blackgate had a variety of bad guards to choose from.

Mike was a slender man with black eyes, slender in a way that made Barbara think of snakes, with the same flat black eyes and Ginty was a big woman with hair dyed a shade of red only seen in a crayon box. Both of them were mean and if they set their sights on you, they would make your life hell.

“So what’s seems to be the problem Barbara?” Mike stepped into the cell with his hand on his baton.
Barbara smiled. “No problem, just getting the new girl up.”

Ginty grinned. “New girl? Oh yeah, I heard about her. Isn’t she supposed to be the girlfriend of that clown that was on the tv? What did he call himself?” Ginty turned to Mike.

Mike sneered. “Called himself the Joker. Tried to kill Falcone from what I hear. Idiot and his bitch got taken. Typical. He probably used this as way to get rid of the trash.” Mike chuckled. “Get himself a new bitch maybe. Though I’m willing to bet an idiot like that got himself killed already.”

Ginty laughed along with Mike. “Yeah, stupid asshole clown.”

Mike snickered. “Yeah, I bet Batman beat the shit out of him too.”

That made Harley look up. In a hoarse voice, she asked, “What did you say?”

Mike grinned. “I said, your boyfriend is a fucking asshole idiot. You got a problem with that sweetheart?”

Harley, her pale white complexion making her look like a fragile porcelain doll, her bloodshot eyes, broken arm and ribs, all made her look weak, small, delicate, but the look she gave Mike was frightening. “Don’t you ever say anything about my puddin.”

Mike grinned. “Oh, you gonna do something about it?”

Harley moved swiftly, pushing past Barbara and leaping off the bed so fast that Barbara hadn’t realized what had happened until Harley had flung herself at Mike with a scream. She hit the slender man hard enough with her body that he stumbled back, slamming against the bars of the cell. Harley only had one hand, but with it she clawed at Mike’s face leaving bloody lines down his cheek as she screamed at him.

“DON’T YOU EVER TALK ABOUT HIM!!!”

Barbara yelped and grabbed for Harley as Ginty cursed, fumbling for a moment as she pulled her taser free and aimed at Harley, the twin prongs striking Harley in the side. Harley brushed off the taser like it was nothing as she continued to try to claw out Mike’s eyes with one hand, using her cast to press all her weight against his throat while she hissed.

“Don’t you ever talk about him!! My puddin will kill all of you!!”

Barbara stumbled to the back wall as Ginty yelled at her to get back. In moments, four more guards showed up; it took all four of them shooting their tasers at Harley until finally Harley gasped, fell to the floor, and blacked out.

*

When Harley was conscious again, she found herself in a different cell lying on a hard metal bed without a mattress, no pillow and no blanket. This cell was much smaller than the one she had been in with Barbara, with only barely enough room for her to move around. There was a bed, if it could be called that. It was more like a metal slab that jutted out from the wall, and a stainless steel toilet with a sink. There was an overhead light that was well out of reach overhead that put out a harsh white light. The walls were a smooth uniform white, as was the door which held a small window that she couldn’t reach even if she had stood on her tiptoes.

There was a tray of food on the floor near the door. She could see what looked like a slot that could be opened at the bottom of the door near where the tray lay. The tray had a small carton of milk, a styrofoam bowl with what might have been cornflakes and a plastic spoon.

Harley looked at the food before she simply rolled over onto her side, pulling herself into a fetal position and softly cried.

A week and a half went by with Harley being left in the tiny cell alone. She saw no one, had no contact. The only interaction with anyone was when the tray of food was pushed through the slot. She never ate it. Occasionally she would pick up the food and throw it at the door with a scream, but mostly she left it untouched, lying on her side on the metal bed, unmoving, staring at the white wall. She would drink a handful of water from the sink now and again, but that was the only time she would move. Otherwise she simply lay on her side on the metal bed and stared at the wall as her despair consumed her. While she had no doubt that her puddin would come for her, she had no notion of when that would be. Until then she was in this hell, alone without him, without her puddin...her Jack...her Joker.

Harley covered her head with her arms and sobbed until she was sick.

Harley lost track of how many days she was left alone in the cell or how long it had been since she had eaten anything—not that she really cared, she was empty inside, dying. She allowed herself a small smile. At least the walls looked better with food smeared on them providing some color she thought. She had even written on the walls with the food, writing Harley and Joker, H + J, she had even drawn hearts and smiling faces, covering one section of wall with the smeared food of meals she hadn’t eaten.

Harley sighed softly, tears pricking her eyes again. She didn’t know how much longer she could stand to be without her puddin...there was nothing they could do to her that could be worse than being alone without him.

She had just closed her eyes when her cell door suddenly opened. Harley pushed herself up in surprise as two guards dressed in full riot gear rushed into the room. The two men grabbed her arms and hauled her to her feet, their fingers pressing into her arms sure to leave behind dark bruises. Harley tried to struggled, but she was weak from malnourishment and these men were trained in how to handle difficult prisoners. She was hauled to her feet and dragged from the cell to find that there were two more guards waiting outside.

Harley snarled, screaming and kicking despite her weakened state. Despite her struggles, she was unable to resist the prison guards. They slammed her down into a wheelchair that had a strange high back to it. Within seconds the four men had her strapped down, arms buckled to the arms of the chair, her legs held back against the chair with more straps, and her head was strapped tight against the back of the chair with a strap around her forehead that also came around to circle her jaw, holding her head firmly back. She screamed, struggling when one of the guards produced a ball gag. He came at her with the gag in his hand a nasty smile on his face.

“Time to submit.” He chuckled, and the other men with him laughed in response.

Harley screamed and bared her teeth. “I’m going to kill you all!!! Just you wait!! When my puddin... comes for me you’re all DEAD!!”

She couldn’t move her head at all as the guard sneered at her and shoved the ball gag in her mouth, skinning her dry lips. He brought the straps around and buckled it in place, pushing her forehead against the straps until Harley was whimpering against the pain.

Once she was secured, the men marched on either side of her while one of them pushed the chair down the halls. Harley saw the prison cells as they moved past. She could see some of the prisoners milling about. They passed what she guessed was the cafeteria, and a room where a few prisoners were playing cards until she thought she recognized where they were heading--the medical ward.

She was wheeled into a medical room, smaller than the one she had woken up in when she first arrived here, where three people waited, all dressed in white coats; Harley assumed they were doctors. Two of them were hovering around a metal tray, one of them was preparing a large syringe on the tray while another was laying out some tubing on the same tray along with a heavy white container that looked like something powdered protein would come in. The third white coated person was an older woman, slim, bordering on skinny, her hair dyed black and pulled back in a severe bun. She had a hooked nose and wore a pair of cat eye black framed glasses. Under her white doctor’s coat the woman was wearing a long brown pencil skirt and a beige blouse, sensible shoes. She wore no jewelry, though a stethoscope hung around her neck.

The woman stepped over to Harley. She smiled but it didn’t reach her eyes.

“Dr. Quinzel, I’m Dr. Gretchen Whistler. I’m the prison psychiatrist. I’ve been told that you have been refusing to eat. I’m so sorry, but we simply can’t have that. It wouldn’t look good if one of our prisoners died of starvation, no matter that it’s self inflicted. So…” She smiled and hooked her finger toward the two other people in lab coats. One of the two people came over to Dr. Whistler pushing the tray over with her partner walking behind them.

Dr. Whistler continued to speak to Harley like she was a new patient. “We are going to insert a tube into your stomach through your nose. We will continue to do this daily until you willingly begin to eat. Even when you agree to eat we will continue the procedure until we are sure that you were not lying to us. Do I make myself clear?”

Harley glared hatefully at the woman.

Dr. Whistler smiled. “Good, now, let us begin.”

One of the technicians stepped closer to Harley, the tubing in his hands. He motioned at one of the guards with his head who came over to stand behind Harley, putting his hands on either side of her head. Harley cried out behind the gag, struggling, but she couldn’t move as the technician began to insert the tube through her nose, causing her to choke while she struggled.

Dr. Whistler sighed. “Really Dr. Quinzel, do stop struggling, that only makes this more difficult.”

Harley struggled despite the futility, tears running down her cheeks.

*

Another week went by, and Harley had also been forced to start seeing the prison psychiatrist, Gretchen Whistler on a daily basis.

Harley hated the woman with every fiber of her being.

Today it was raining, so hanging out in the yard had been canceled for everyone. Harley didn’t care, she didn’t care about anything.

She sat on the floor of the cell she shared with Barbara, wearing only her white t-shirt, her panties and some sloppy white socks. Her pants were on her bunk and her slippers were underneath. Barbara was playing cards with one of the other inmates, and so far Barbara owed the other woman a billion dollars, while Barbara’s opponent had bet her unborn child. It was an interesting card game, the bets becoming more and more outlandish. Harley would usually have enjoyed it, but she simply couldn’t, which was why she had left.

She was using the extremely sharp tip of a plastic spoon that one of the other women, an older lady named Maria, had given her a few days ago and some makeshift ink that Maria had put together using melted styrofoam, baby oil and some other ingredients that Harley didn’t like to think about and honestly didn’t care.

Harley’s bottom lip was trembling as she worked, tears running down her cheeks and blurring her vision as she slowly used the sharpened plastic dipped in the makeshift ink to cut into her thigh. She finished the last two letters of puddin in her Harley + Puddin tattoo, one of several tattoos that she had cut into the skin of her thighs. The pain gave her something to focus on besides her breaking heart. She had already written all over her cast, little private love notes to Jack, to Joker. She had even carved a heart with an arrow through it that held her and her puddin’s initials in her other thigh. The makeshift tattoo was healing surprisingly well, but the pain had faded too quickly, she needed the pain to make her feel something else besides her despair.

Harley finished and dropped the sharpened spoon onto the floor and brought her legs up, wrapping her arms around her knees, laying her forehead against her cast, her hair acting like a curtain. For a moment at least, it made her feel both safe and alone as she broke down. She let herself go and cried until she didn’t think she had any tears left. She cried until she couldn’t breathe and her entire body hurt. She didn’t think she would ever stop crying. That was the moment when she heard the sound of someone knocking against the cell bars.

Harley looked up to see one of the guards, a man named Ian.

“Dr. Quinzel, you are wanted in Dr. Whistler’s office.” Ian said without any inflection in his voice. His eyes went to the styrofoam bowl with ink in it and the sharp plastic utensil beside it, but he made no comment and didn’t step into the cell to take the items away from her. Ian was the type of guard that came into work, did his job, the bare minimum that his job required, nothing more, nothing less. He didn’t go out of his way to cause the prisoners any problems as long as they didn’t do the same to him. Ian couldn’t be bribed either, but he didn’t have a problem looking the other way, simply because he didn’t want to get involved.

Harley frowned. “I told you to call me Quinn, Harley Quinn.”

Ian just gave her a look that clearly indicated that he didn’t care, before saying without emotion. “You coming or do I got to get help?”

Harley wrinkled her nose at him and wiped her eyes with the heels of her hands before she grabbed her pants off the bunk and slid them on. The cloth stung where it brushed across her fresh tattoos, but she didn’t care. It was something she could feel. She stepped into her slippers staring down at her feet, her hair hanging down, hiding her features like a white curtain. She thought briefly about fighting, attacking Ian, but all that would’ve happened would be she would end up back in solitary, force fed and forgotten, alone with her thoughts.

After she dressed she stepped forward, her arms held out, wrists together. She waited patiently as Ian handcuffed her wrists then followed the chain down to cuff her ankles together to her hands.
Once he was finished, Ian turned and began to lead her toward the offices. Harley’s chains rattled softly as she walked.

They made their way through several locked gates, some that needed keys to get past them, some that needed to be buzzed by a guard sitting in a tiny booth.

They walked for what seemed forever making their way down neutral, sterile halls until they came to a door with a metal plate on the front that read: Dr. Gretchen Whistler. Harley sighed. Dr. Whistler was her court appointed psychiatrist until she was moved to Arkham and Harley hated everything about the woman. Everything.

Ian knocked on the door and waited. They both heard Dr. Whistler’s muffled voice. “Enter.”

Ian opened the door, pushing it open before he stood back and waited for Harley to enter the room. Harley shuffled inside to see Dr. Whistler at her desk, but there was someone else in the room. The man, dressed in a black and red checked suit, wearing a pair of round glasses, was Jonathan Crane.

*

Jack lay in the middle of the floor of the bedroom he shared with Harley, completely naked. He was on his side, his legs curled into his body, his arms over his head. His fingers were tightly woven into his green hair. He held his hair so tightly that it was a surprise he had not made himself bald.

He had ripped everything from the room until it was nearly empty, the bed that he shared with Harley was up and leaning against the wall. It had fallen to the side, the frame broken, the mattress looked torn underneath it. The other furniture was either missing, destroyed or pushed to the edges of the room. It looked as if something had exploded in the middle of the room. Jack had destroyed the walls as well. It looked as if he had taken a hammer to them, but where the holes in the wall didn’t exists, Jack had spray painted the walls writing “Ha! Ha!” over and over again. This had all happened in the first days that Harley was gone after Jack learned they couldn’t simply storm the prison and take her back. Jack had become completely unhinged, but now he was calm, dangerously calm many of the gang thought.

Jack laid still and naked on the floor. The only light came from one lamp casting a soft mellow glow over his still, milk white form, making him resemble a corpse since he barely looked to be breathing, his eyes closed. Around him in a perfectly arranged circle that surrounded his body was a display of weapons; every knife, every gun that he and Harley had accumulated in their time together, all neatly arranged around him. Outside of that circle was another circle, this one made up of drinking glasses, bottles of liquor that caught the dim light, casting it back in jewel tones along areas of the floor. Next was a circle that consisted of her shoes, all of Harley’s shoes set carefully around him followed by a layer of Harley’s clothes, each arranged lovingly around him. This row was followed by a mixed circle of Harley’s jewelry, mixed with the ties she used in her hair and her brushes mixed with her makeup, each circle spread out neatly around in an ever widening circle. At the very edge of the circle were playing cards, not an entire deck, only several queen of hearts cards repeated, over and over again...

Joker had built a shrine to the woman he loved, the woman he felt lost without.

There was a soft knock at the door followed by Frost’s voice. “Boss? Joker? We have him.”

Joker finally moved, sitting up. He had drawn a smile across with face with a deep red lipstick. The smile was over his own red lips, drawn to stretch across his face, the ends of the smile curling up the sides of his cheeks. When Joker smiled, the effect would be disturbing to his viewers.
“Where is he?” Joker growled from the dimly lit room.

Frost said softly. “We have him at the warehouse Boss.”

Joker chuckled darkly. “I’ll be right there.”

*

Frost was pacing in the living room waiting for Joker and he was nervous. The Boss hadn’t been the same since Harley was taken...he was becoming more erratic, more unstable. During the first week Harley was gone, the Boss’s violent outbursts were focused on objects. Frost had seen what had happened to their bedroom. The living room didn’t look much better. In the last couple of days, Joker’s temper was more on edge. Any little thing could cause him to lash out, drawing his weapon and snarling at whoever had upset him. Last night it had been Trope when her latest effort to get into the computer system at Blackgate prison had failed. Joker had pulled his gun on her, his arm shaking, his teeth bared, the barrel of the gun pointed at her. Bane had put himself between Joker and the young woman, trying to calm Joker. Trope had broken down crying. Last night Frost had been able to talk him down, but he didn’t know how much longer he would be able to do it before Joker killed one of them.

Hell, Frost was surprised that the gang was still together. Each of Joker’s outbursts was more violent than the last. But this group was loyal—even Trope hadn’t been angry with him, just scared. She had said she understood the Boss’s behavior, she would be the same way if Thea was out of her reach. Frost just wondered how long it would last before things were past the point of no return. He sighed. They needed a plan to get Harley and soon, or the Boss and the gang weren’t going to make it.

Hopefully the man they had picked up, Carlson Grey, would change all that. Hopefully he was the in they needed to get Harley back. Mr. Grey was the assistant warden at Blackgate. Alex had found him and it was through Alex that the Boss learned that Grey wasn’t just the assistant warden, but the man was in bed with the Russians. Grey was helping them with everything from a prostitution ring that also dealt in underage girls and using the female prisoners at Blackgate, to selling drugs, guns, and a profitable black market that ran inside Blackgate prison. Grey was a very bad man, but a man with information that they needed.

Frost turned when he heard footsteps. Joker came down the stairs dressed in a black on black three piece suit. The only variation was that Frost thought there might be a diamond pattern on the vest, a deeper black within the black. Even his shoes and gloves were solid black. The Boss had his green hair slicked back, his lips painted red, the smile painted just a little way out the edge of his lips. As he came down the stairs Frost thought that the Boss looked like death come to visit. He shuddered at the thought.

Joker smiled. “Ready darling?”

Frost nodded.

Joker laughed. “Well, what are we waiting for? Let’s go meet our new guest!!”

*

Carlson Grey sat in a chair with his hands tied behind his back while his feet were taped to the legs of the hard metal chair he sat in. His glasses had fallen to the edge of his nose, driving him crazy since he needed and wanted to push them up his nose. The room he was being held in was mostly dark, only a singular light was on directly above him, a harsh white light that made it impossible to see the rest of the room. The shadows around him felt like they were watching him, moving, but he couldn’t tell if he was alone or not.

He had been grabbed when he was leaving a building owned by one of the Russian gangs that worked with Falcone. The building looked like a typical rundown apartment building that was littered all throughout Gotham, except this one had girls in nearly every apartment. The place was a cornucopia of sexual appetites; anything and everything was available for a price. Carlson had been leaving after visiting Trisha, a young woman who was very, very good with her hands.

“Look, if it's money you want I can get you as much as you want? Drugs? Guns? Women...something else? I can get a hold of anything you want, just tell me! I’m sure we can work out something.” Carlson looked around trying to see someone when he heard a soft laugh.

“Blah, blah blah….all that chit chat is going to get you hurt.”

Carlson looked around quickly, trying to find the source of the voice. “Look I know people…”

“I’m sure you do...I know people too.” The voice was soft, mellow, like warm honey slowly oozing down his spine. The laugh was soft, low, but there was no humor in it and something in that voice also made Carlson’s skin crawl. “But you know Carlson, I have someone very special that I’m interested in.”

A figure slowly formed out of the shadows. Carlson watched in horror as the man stepped closer, the light dancing across pale white skin, red lips and electric blue eyes.

The Joker smiled slowly as he came to stand in front of Carlson. Carlson sat transfixed, simply staring back at Joker and trembling in his chair.

Joker smiled wider before he dropped forward, his hands landing on Carlson’s shoulders with a hard smack that startled the other man so much that he let out a yelp of surprise.

Joker growled softly, leaning in close enough that his nose was almost touching Carlson’s. The growl sent a shiver down Carlson’s spine as he stared back at the softly growling man.

Suddenly Joker laughed. Carlson jumped in fright, followed by Joker straddling his lap, forcing the two men into an extremely intimate position. Joker smiled and gently caressed Carlson’s hair and face. “Now Carlson, Carlson, Carlson, you gonna be my friend?”

Joker frowned and tilted his head to the side, sticking out his bottom lip as he held Carlson’s face between his hands.

Carlson stuttered slightly when his spoke. His heart was beating hard, hammered against his sternum, making him feel as if his breastbone was going to be back bruised.

Carlson swallowed. “Uh...yeah? Sure.”

Joker chuckled and smacked Carlson on the cheek. “I just can’t wait to show you all my toys! We are just going to have so much fun together. And you are going to tell me exactly how I can get my Harley Quinn back.”

Carlson’s eyes became larger in fear. “What?”

Joker leaned in closer. “Now…” He released Carlson’s face which was followed by the sound of of metal sliding against leather. Joker smiled and held up the blade of a knife barely a inch in front of Carlson’s eye. “Let’s play.”
Joker slid off Carlson’s lap and before Carlson could respond, Joker drove the knife into Carlson’s thigh, just above the man’s kneecap. Carlson let out a scream.

Joker smiled sitting down on a chair that was produced out of the darkness by another shadow. Joker smiled, running a hand over his hair and taking a deep breath. “Now, let’s start again. You focus all your attention on me Carlson.” Carlson was crying as Joker grabbed his chin, forcing the man to look at him. “Eyes up here buddy.” Joker smiled, pulling Carlson’s face closer and kissed his forehead. “There, there sweetheart, you give me what I want and this will all be over soon.” Joker rubbed the tip of his nose against Carlson’s like they were old lovers or deep friends. “Now, you are going to tell me everything I need to know about Blackgate prison, about how my girl is being treated, and then you are going to help me by telling me the best way to get Harley out, okay?” With tears running down his cheeks, Carlson nodded. “I...I can tell you that now…” He was shaking as he spoke. Joker released his face with a smile, crossed his legs, and rested his gloved hands on his knee. “I’m all ears Carlson.”

Carlson’s chin was shaking when he spoke. “She was pretty banged up when she was brought in, concussion, broken ribs, arm...they had her in the medical ward for a while. I heard Batman even showed up to look in on her. He wanted her kept out of the main population, but they put her in general first. But...but then she attacked some guard and they stuck her in solitary. She didn’t handle it well...she refused to eat and they ended up force feeding her. Last I heard she was back in the general population again…”

Joker listened and his eye twitched slightly. His smile became flat, frozen on his face as Carlson spoke. Joker pressed his lips together before he asked his next question. “So, she is all right?”

Carlson shrugged. “I guess so.”

Joker’s hand came out so quickly that Carlson didn’t see the man move until Joker’s hand was holding his face in a painful vice like grip. “You guess so?”

Carlson whimpered. “I don’t know okay! I just know she was put back in general a few days ago!”

Joker narrowed his eyes. “So how do I get her back?”

Carlson stared back at Joker trembling. “I don’t know…”

Joker again moved with the speed of a striking viper, wrapping his hand around the hilt of the knife in Carlson’s knee and yanked it forward, the flat of the blade riding against the man’s kneecap. Carlson’s scream was high pitched and painful to hear, though Joker didn’t react at all, his blue eyes continued to stare at Carlson expectantly, his hand wrapped around the knife hilt.

“Your best chance is going to be when they transfer her to Arkham!!! They will have her in a meat wagon!! It’ll just be her and maybe a handful of guards, three at the most, the driver and her psychiatrist!!!”

Joker tilted his head with a smile. “And when will this be?”

Carlson was sobbing. “I don’t know!!! She has to show up in court first!! It’ll depend on the psychiatrist at the prison and whoever it is they send from Arkham!!!!”

Joker frowned, releasing his hold on the knife. “When will she appear in court?”

Carlson was panting, tears and sweat rolling down his face. “I...I don’t know...I would think soon...”

Joker smiled as he stood. “Thank you Carlson, you’ve been a very big help.”
Carlson giggled hysterically. “I...I’m glad I could help...you...you going to let me go now?”

Joker smiled. “Of course.”

Joker snatched the knife, yanking it out of Carlson’s knee and across the man’s throat so swiftly that Carlson didn’t realize his throat had been sliced opened for a few long seconds. He made a gurgling noise as he stared at Joker in confusion. Red lips smiled sweetly at the dying man.

“See how nice I was...gave you a quick death Carlson old buddy.”

Joker began to laugh softly, just a giggle that slowly grew and grew until his laugh was echoing off the walls.
Fear and Loathing in Blackgate

When Harley saw Crane, her eyes widened in shock; the glasses he wore did nothing to hide his identity from her. She remembered every little thing about him, the way he combed his hair, the suits he wore, the twitch around his mouth when he was angry, the way something dark lurked behind his eyes...Harley saw him in her nightmares. Every so often Crane would be lurking in the shadows of her dreams, standing on the sidelines, watching, observing, taking notes, all while whispering to her. She didn’t have the nightmares now as often as she did after her escape from Arkham, but Harley knew Crane was always lurking, waiting.

She began to shake with a combination of fear and rage, a burning anger that this man who had tried to take her from Jack, who had tried to hurt her, dominate her; he tried to change her into something for himself, treating her like an object, a doll to be dressed up for his pleasure. He had tried to scramble her mind, tried to twist her away from Jack in order to fit his delusion of who and what she was. The memories of everything that he had done to her in the asylum, those horrible moments in his house...Harley wanted to scream, she wanted to tear this man’s throat out, to rip out his heart and stomp on it. She wanted to make him hurt the way he had hurt her, the way he had hurt her and Jack. She had never wanted to hurt someone more in her life. This monster had wanted to destroy everything she had, everything that made her who she was, he had wanted to destroy her life and turn her into someone, something else entirely. The rage and adrenaline made her limbs tremble and override the fear Crane had instilled in her. She knew exactly what he was here for! He was here to take her from Jack, from her puddin, from herself! Nothing and no one was going to do that...never again was she going to let herself be a victim...

The scream that issued from Harley’s mouth was startling, filling the small office space, echoing off the walls, laced with an almost animalistic rage that, if Harley had been more herself, would have shocked herself by the sound that issued from her throat. It was pure rage fueled by fear and hatred that ran deeper than she would have thought possible before this moment. Jack would have been both shocked and thrilled with her if he had been there to hear and see her; not that he wanted his girl in pain, but because she could let go of convention and embrace the violence. Harley raced away from Ian and threw herself at Crane, her fingers bent like claws and her mouth open, giving the impression that given a chance, Harley would rip Crane’s throat out with her bare teeth. Crane clearly had been expecting a response like this and easily caught her, grasping her one good wrist, surprising her when he yanked her forward, then spun her around. The feel of his hand wrapping around her handcuffed wrist, the press of his fingers against her skin surprised her enough that she didn’t respond in time before he yanked her toward him, released her wrist after he twisted her around, and wrapped one arm around her throat, the other around her waist, pinning her already cuffed arms against hers sides and her back against his chest. She felt a mild jolt of pain from her still healing ribs and her broken arm, but it wasn’t enough to distract her as he pulled her up tightly against him. She struggled against Crane’s grip, but he had her caught, his strength surprising, perhaps even equal to her improved form after the acid bath and Ivy’s particular brand of aid. Regardless, he had her pinned and at his advantage.

He leaned close, pressing his lips and nose to her hair. His voice was soft, melodic, almost hypnotic and terrible as he whispered for only her to hear.

“There, there my little crow, don’t hurt yourself. I’ve come to bring you home.”

Harley growled followed by a scream of frustration while she struggled against him, angry that she was so easily caught, angry that he had his arms around her, and angry that she was starting to cry. She couldn’t stop the tears of fear, anger, and frustration that rolled down her cheeks as she fought against Crane’s hold, but the man was surprisingly strong despite how he may have looked.

Dr. Whistler stood in shock and to Harley’s dismay it was clear that she hadn’t heard Crane’s whispered words to her. “Dr. Sykes, are you all right?”

Crane smiled looking up. “I’m just fine Dr. Whistler.”

Whistler looked shocked at Harley, but hurried to her door pulling it open and yelling. “I need a couple of guards and a sedative!”

Harley struggled. “Let me GO!!! I know who you are!!!” She turned her attention to Dr. Whistler while Crane continued to hold her against him. “He isn’t who you think he is!!! He’s Dr. Crane!!! Dr. Jonathan Crane!!”

Whistler stood by the door turning to look at Harley with a frown, her voice contemplative. “They didn’t say you were delusional too--or this violent.” Her eyes moved from Harley to Crane. “Dr. Sykes can you hold her? I’m…” Whistler didn't finished her sentence before Harley attacked again; she wasn’t going to let them sedate her!

She threw her head back trying to break Crane’s nose, to hurt him any way she could so she could get free. She tried to stomp on the bridge of his foot at the same time, but the man was ready for her. Having worked for a long time in Arkham Asylum had helped Crane’s reflexes and his abilities to handle unruly patients. His use of various formulae on himself had also lent him additional strength and faster reflexes; the Scarecrow had to be a step above the common people. Crane smiled as he held her, deftly avoiding her attempts to hurt him while Dr. Whistler stepped out into the hall and continued to yell for help.

Crane purred against her ear. “It’s so nice to see you again Harleen. You look more beautiful than the last time we saw one another. I do like the change, the porcelain white skin, the starlight hair. It’s like you took another step toward becoming my Lady Crow without my help. I’m quite pleased.”

Harley snarled and screamed, fighting with renewed vigor, and this time her thrashing was rewarded when she flung her body back with all her strength, surprising Crane with the strength of her renewed attack. They both stumbled backwards, slamming into Whistler’s desk with enough of an impact that Crane’s hold on her loosened. Harley flung herself forward breaking out of the cage of Crane’s arms.

She stumbled away from him a step or two before Harley spun around and attacked again. This time she thrust her arm with the cast to the side, using the cast as a weapon and smacked Crane in the face with it. She grinned with wicked glee when the impact of her cast struck his face with the sound of a crunch. She was sure she didn’t hit him hard enough, restrained at she was, to break his nose, but she did some damage regardless. Crane gasped in shock, blood flowing from his nose. The vibration of the impact made Harley’s arm flare with pain, but she ignored it; her chance to hurt Crane was far more important to her than simple physical pain.

The handcuffs made it difficult for her to move, she couldn’t lift her legs or move them more than a shuffle, or bring her arms up higher than her chest (the only reason she could move them that much was because Ian didn’t bother to secure them as tightly with the chain that ran to her ankles as most of the guards did.) She came in close to Crane, ready to use her head to headbutt him, ready to do anything she could to hurt the man, when she suddenly felt the grip of hands grabbed her shoulders.

“Settled down Quinzel!!”

It was one of the guards. Harley wasn’t sure who it was, male or female, but she didn’t care--she would be damned if anyone was going to stop her from her revenge. She dropped into a crouch, yanked herself free and spun around. She didn’t actually “see” the guards, all she saw were five shadows, five figures stuffed into the tiny office here to stop her, stop her from doing what she needed to do— to hurt Crane.

Harley let out a scream and surged forward and upward, her shoulder impacting with the chest of the guard who had called her name. She grinned when she heard and felt the guard gasp in pain.

Harley followed her shoulder strike with a head butt, bringing her head back and slamming it into the mouth of the guard. She felt the cut of teeth across her forehead, a quick, sharp pain that meant nothing to her at the moment.

Someone else grabbed her, spinning her around. She didn’t see what hit her, but something slammed across her face, her mouth immediately filling with the taste of blood as pain lanced across her face. She could hear shouting, the words meaning nothing to her, though she heard her named peppered throughout. Hands continued to try to grab for her, but she twisted and fought, refusing to let herself be taken down.

She swung herself to the other side, trying to use her body as a weapon since she couldn’t use her hands or feet effectively. She hit someone, the gasp of her impact made her smile. Another set of hands grabbed her, yanking her forward. Harley snarled and bit, her teeth sinking into the cheek and jaw of the guard unlucky enough to have grabbed her. Harley grinned when she heard an ear piercing scream and tasted the blood in her mouth. She yanked, tearing a chunk out of the guard’s face and spat, blood running down her chin, covering her teeth as she laughed. She couldn’t help it, the laugh seemed to bubble up out of nowhere!

That was when the first taser hit her in the back. Harley jerked slightly, but she didn’t fall. A second taser hit her, followed swiftly by a third.

Harley snarled, her teeth clenching when a fourth taser hit her, but still she didn’t go down. That was when the first blow came, a baton struck her in the face, and another in the side. Harley gasped as she felt one of her healing ribs snap under the impact. Another strike came from behind to smash across her back. She dropped to a knee only for someone to punch her, the hit coming from above, slamming into her cheek and forcing her down to the floor. Once she was down, the guards rained blows and kicks on her. Harley curled into as tight a ball as she could, weathering the assault, but she continued to laugh, the laughter mixed with sobs.

Whistler pushed her way through the guards. “Stop it!! Let me through!!”

One of the nurses had brought her a syringe with a sedative, a strong sedative. Whistler made herself an opening and dropped to her knees behind Harley, shoved the needle as quickly as she could into the back of Harley’s neck and pushed the plunger before she jumped to her feet and stepped back next to Crane who was holding a handkerchief to his bleeding nose.

The guards all stepped back, but Harley had stopped moving. She was bloody and beaten and unconscious, the sedative working rapidly to render her unconscious.

Whistler sighed in relief before she turned to Crane. “I am so sorry Dr. Sykes. I’ve seen Dr. Quinzel a handful of times since her incarceration and she never gave me any inclination that she would be react this way. I determined she was non-violent based on my interactions with her. Depressed yes, very depressed, but violent? I am so sorry.”

Crane smiled. “No need to apologize Dr. Whistler…” He smiled. “Gretchen, patients like her are unpredictable. They can lull us into dropping our guards. I am sure she is only reacting to the new stimuli of another doctor. Perhaps I could have some time alone with her, to build a relationship of trust with her?"

He smiled, tilting his head slightly as he dabbed at his nose, the bleeding having stopped. Dr. Whistler smiled. “Of course Dr. Sykes. I think that would be a good idea. She won’t be appearing in court for at least another week, so we have her until then. I’m fairly confident she will be moved to Arkham on a permanent basis regardless.”

Crane nodded. “Well, perhaps before that time I can build a relationship with her in order to help her. I am sure she is not responsible for what the Joker has done. She is surely a simple victim of a master manipulator...some people have very weak minds when faced with a stronger mind,” Crane said softly, a smile dancing across his face.

*

When Harley worked her way back to consciousness, she found herself back in solitary confinement. She was lying on her back, the thin mattress barely separating her from the metal frame underneath. Someone had changed her clothes, putting her in a clean prison uniform. Harley could feel bandages on her legs, probably covering the self-inflicted tattoos she had carved into herself. She could also feel her ribs. They ached deeply, as did her arm, and she could feel places across her body and face where she was going have bruises after the beating she took at the hands of the guards. She closed her eyes against the pain; it was a deep, bone deep ache that throbbed through her entire body. She was sure her ribs had been re-broken or at least cracked from the kicks she had received. Her arm probably hadn’t been re-broken, but it had to be at least bruised if the pain was anything to go by. She ran her tongue over her lips, worrying at the wound on her lips, though the constant touching stung. Tears slowly welled up in her eyes and gently spilled down the sides of her face. She wanted Jack so much, wanted to feel his arms around her, holding her safely in his arms, to hear his soft voice, his lips on gentle hers, his hands caressing her. She began to tremble, struggling to control her tears until she finally gave up, rolled onto her side, and held herself as tightly as she could while she began to cry, sobbing for a long time until she fell asleep.

*

When she woke up again Harley realized her entire body was chilled. Her muscles ached, her eyes felt swollen, grainy, and her throat was scratchy and dry. She couldn’t tell what time it was, but it felt late, as if darkness had fallen. She pulled herself into a tighter ball, trying to chase sleep when she heard a voice.

“My poor love, my poor Lady Crow. I really do hate to see you like this. You should be dressed for the night, dancing in my arms while we plunge Gotham into endless nightmares...”

Harley shifted slowly, turning her head to look at the window that was in the door to the room only to see Crane looking back at her with a smug expression on his face; a smug, obsessed expression. She wanted to throw herself at the door, to try to claw her way through the window, to rip his eyes out, but she didn’t move. She wasn’t a fool, she knew there was no way she could get to him. And even the thought of moving made her tired. Harley stayed where she was glaring at Crane.
“Go away,” she hissed into the chill air.

Crane smiled. “Dr. Whistler has decided that she will give you over to me. It took a great deal of convincing after your performance this afternoon to convince the warden, but I was able to have your care transferred to me.”

Harley’s eyes widened in horror, her lips pressing into a thin line as she stared back at him fighting not to cry, fighting not to give into her fear, her rage, her desolation. She was not going to give him that part of her—she would give him nothing. He continued to smile gently at her. “Don’t worry my love, I have a plan to get you out of here so we can be together. It will be soon.” Crane smiled at her. “I promise. But for now I am allowed to come visit with you and to bring you in for private visits. I will let you rest until then. Our first session will be in two days.”

Harley growled out, “I hate you.”

Crane smiled. “I know my dear, but I have no doubt that soon that will change, you’ll see.”

Harley waited until she was sure Crane’s footsteps had taken him far away from her. She lay still for a moment, once more fighting with herself before she gave in to her tears.

*

Back in the heart of Gotham, Falcone had been allowed to leave the hospital after a few more days of observation and was now back home. Sophia was sitting on her father’s couch nursing a coffee while her father paced back and forth in front of the glass windows that let out onto a balcony that look down over Gotham. Sophia watched him as he paced, his phone to his ear. He was on a call with an hired assassin, a woman who went by the name Lady Vic, though her full name was Lady Elaine Marsh-Morton. Sophia’s father was paying a large amount of money to have Lady Vic inserted into the Blackgate prison population in order to murder Harley Quinn, as retribution on the Joker for everyone the clown had murdered to get at Falcone. Falcone didn’t want to leave the killing to a convict in the prison, opting for a professional killer.

Sophia had tried to talk her father out of this madness because there was a very good chance that the murder of Harley Quinn would be traced back to them, or at least suspicion would fall squarely on their shoulders, but her biggest fear was that the murder of the Joker’s lover might provide the psychotic clown the reason to do worse than he had already done to the Falcone family.

And no matter what her father might think, there was worse that could be done.

But her father wouldn’t listen.

Sophia sighed and took a sip of her coffee.

*

Harley didn’t fight when the guards came to collect her to take her for her first session with Crane. She had been told if she behaved herself that she would be moved back to her regular cell with Barbara. After two days alone with her thoughts, Harley wasn’t sure she could take much more solitary confinement. Barbara at least helped her to focus on other things besides her despair. So for now Harley was going to play nice. She refused to let Crane break her. She allowed herself a little smile. She was a completely different person than the Harley that Crane had encountered in Arkham…

The four guards that accompanied her to the office walked silently, one on either side of her holding her arms, the other two in front. They walked through the plain halls at a measured pace while the only sounds were the low rumble of the prison, the mix of voices, the sound of cells and the hum of the power that ran through the prison like blood, keeping everything going, the doors locked, protecting the world outside from the evil within.

When they arrived at the office, one of the guards knocked on the door politely. Harley could hear the muffled response from the other side from Crane. “Enter.” The guard opened the door and stood aside to let the rest of them enter.

Harley was brought into the room where Crane sat behind a plain metal desk. The place reminded her of an interrogation room in many television dramas with dull grey walls, grey metal chairs and desk, and nothing else. The only thing that was missing was the two way mirror.

The two guards that had held her arms though the halls, walked her over to the table. Her hands were uncuffed from the chain that connected them to her ankles and were chained to the desk while her ankles were cuffed to the chair.

Crane looked as he always did, calm and in control. Today he wore a mustard colored suit under his white doctor’s coat, the glasses she knew he didn’t need were perched on the tip of his nose. Crane paid no attention to her as the guards cuffed her, holding his forefinger and thumb to his glasses as he pretended to read her file. When the guards were done he looked up. “Thank you, you can wait outside.”

One of the guards, a woman named Brenda, frowned. “Ah Dr. Sykes sir, Dr. Whistler said we were supposed to stay in the room.”

Crane smiled. “She is chained down and she is one, tiny woman. I think I will be fine. Now please, outside.”

Brenda frowned, but then shrugged. “Okay doc, call if you need us. We’ll be right outside the door.”

Crane nodded as the guards left, shutting the door behind them.

Crane smiled looking over at Harley. “How are you feeling my dear?”

Harley narrowed her eyes at him, but said nothing.

He set the papers down turning to face her fully. “Your first hearing is next week. It’s a simple thing, simply me going in with you to agree with your attorney that you should be moved to Arkham. It’s a formality really. I’ll be going with you as your doctor.”

Harley narrowed her eyes. “I’ll tell them who you really are.”

Crane laughed. “Oh my dear Harleen. Do you really think they will listen to you? A known associate of this Joker person, a killer? A psychopath? Besides, there are drugs I could give you that would render you unable to speak--as you well know. Do you really want me to do that? What is that charming phrase, the thorazine shuffle?”

Harley said nothing as she struggled with her emotions. She could feel the sting of tears in her eyes and it made her angry. She felt lost and defenseless against Crane and that made her even angrier. Crane simply continued to smile at her. All Harley wanted to do was take a knife and carve that smile off his face, to pull his lips off, to stab him in the eyes. She balled her hands into fists, her nails biting into her palms.

Crane picked up her file. “I would prefer not to have to drug you Harleen. I do not want my love to be soiled with pharmaceuticals, but if you force my hand, I will.” He glanced over at her smiling as he watched the struggle in Harley’s expression, the tears gathering in the corners of her eyes. And the fear. He could see the fear in her bright, light blue eyes. He shifted in his seat. Harleen’s fear was intoxicating and he wanted it badly. He wanted to push her, push her fear, push her over the edge until she was his...and only his. Crane felt his body react to her and he smiled. “Good, I’m glad you are seeing things my way. Now...” He opened her file. “I have written down here--and Dr. Whistler agrees with me--that you suffer from borderline personality disorder.” He looked up over the top of his glasses. “We had your file from Arkham sent over so we could look over Dr. Crane’s notes, a brilliant man,” he said with a wink at Harley as if they were sharing a secret between two friends, lovers, before he continued. “I have added hybristophilia to your list of conditions…”

Harley interrupted him. “What?”

Crane smiled. “Now please Harleen, you are a doctor, so I shouldn’t have to explain…”

Harley snapped at him. “I know what hybristophilia is, it’s also known as the Bonnie and Clyde syndrome where one partner finds the other attractive because they’ve committed crimes.” Crane smiled, dropping her files back on the desk. “I do so like that one myself...” He stood and walked around the table to her. Harley tensed when he came over to her side of the table and sat on the edge next to her. “Though I do wonder...is it still hybristophilia if both parties commit crimes?”

Harley glared at him, not trusting herself to speak. The less that she gave this man, the better. Crane reached over and ran the side of his fingers along her cheek.

He ran his finger along her jaw whispering. “My lady…”

He brought his thumb up, dragging the pad of his thumb along her lips, the look in his eyes was clearly lustful and possessive. Harley stared hatefully back at him as he brought his thumb back across her lips again, but that was the moment that Harley snapped at him catching his thumb between her teeth and bit down as hard as she could. She tasted blood on her tongue and smiled.

Crane’s reaction was swift. He snarled in pain and backhanded her hard across the face, hard enough that he reopened the wound on her lip and left a red mark on her cheek, at the same time he yanked his now bloody thumb free.

Crane stood glaring at her. “Fight me all you want Harleen, but this time you are not going to get away from me. This time you are mine! And I will make you afraid! I will teach you what real fear is and it shall free you!”

Harley hissed right back, a couple of tiny drops of blood ran slowly down her lips and chin. “I’ll never be yours and I’ll never be afraid of you! NEVER!”

Crane had backed away from her, pulling out a handkerchief from the breast pocket of his suit jacket to wrap around his thumb, but he chuckled, smiling. “Never? You’re afraid of me now Harleen, I can see it in your eyes. You think you can hide it, but you can’t hide your fear from me. I know fear--and you are afraid.” He smiled, tying off the kerchief before he put his good hand into the pocket of his doctor’s jacket and pulled out a capped syringe.

He held it up for her to see. “I really was hoping not to do this right now, right here, but I was prepared for you being difficult. You know, that has always been one of your qualities that I admired, that streak of stubborness.” He smiled as he flicked his finger against the glass of the syringe. “This is just a small dose of my fear toxin. Not fatal of course, this is only a very small taste, just a little to start you back on your path to me.” He frowned at her. “I am sorry I hit you my dear, but you really are quite rude and you simply need to learn your place.” His smile became oddly tender. “Now...”
He stepped closer. Harley started to struggle against her cuffs. She screamed and thrashed, even going so far as to call for help. She was scared and it made her angry. She didn't want him to know how much he scared her, how scared she was that she was trapped. Crane stepped around behind her, removing the cap before his other hand grabbed Harley around her forehead and pressed her head back against his stomach.

Crane cooed softly. “My dear girl, my lady…”

Harley screamed, trying to move, trying to break free, but she couldn’t move. His fingers pressed painfully into her forehead as he held her steady, bringing the needle to the side of her throat. She gasped when she felt the needle pierce her skin, going deep into her neck. Tears ran down her cheeks as she fought him. Crane smiled, holding her steady as he pushed the plunger down and she felt the sting.

He continued to hold her head against him until she stopped struggling. When he felt her relax, Crane began to stroke his hand back along her hair. He leaned down to lay his cheek against one tear damp cheek and whispered.

“There, there, my dear, have pleasant nightmares.”

He walked around to face her. Harley’s eyes were rolling, the pupils dilated, her mouth slightly open, a little bit of blood spread across her bottom lip. He caressed her face, dragging his fingertips along her cheek and along her chin before he leaned in and kissed her. He grabbed her jaw, holding her steady, thrusting his tongue into her mouth. She didn’t respond, the drug working through her system as he kissed her. He smiled, leaning back watching her.

“Soon,” he whispered.

*

Harley was lost. Everywhere she looked was darkness, yet she felt compelled to move. She kept walking, slowly, the darkness dragging her forward—or what felt like forward—while her heart slammed hard inside her chest. She felt as if she had walked forever, following the darkness’s pull when she heard a voice, a voice she knew well.

“We really need to stop running into each other like this.”

Harley turned to see a dim pool of light where Harleen stood. She was holding a clipboard, dressed in her black pencil skirt and red blouse, her white doctor’s coat sporting a nametag with her name spelled out on the breast, Quinzel, in big letters. Her golden blonde hair was pulled back tight in a no nonsense bun, her glasses perched on the tip of her nose. Dr. Harleen Quinzel, her previous incarnation.

Harleen smiled gently. “Don’t worry, this is just a dream. I can’t stop the dream, but I thought I could help you through this, because you are not going to like what you see.”

Harley frowned. “What do you mean?”

Harleen snarled in sudden anger. “Crane, that drug he gave you, more of that fear toxin of his, though this one is a lot different than last time you encountered him. He has streamlined it.” She walked over to Harley, her heels making a sharp click against the floor. She put her arm around Harley’s shoulders. “I figured together we could handle whatever Crane threw at us. That’s why I’m here—to help.”

Harley glanced back toward the darkness that had been pulling at her. “What do you think it is?”
Harleen stared in the same direction. “I think it's something that is going to hurt us.”

She gave Harley’s arm a squeeze. “Let’s get going. Better to get it over with than to fret in anticipation.”

Together the two of them began to walk together. As they made their way through the darkness, they both heard the sounds of a beating, the unmistakable sound of a fist smacking against flesh followed by gasps and grunts of pain mixed with the snarls of someone else.

A light slowly began to bring something into focus in front of them and the two women saw Batman. He was holding Joker by the front of the clown’s ripped shirt. Joker’s face was a bloody mess, the teeth in his perfect smile were broken and missing, blood dribbling down his lips. Harley’s eyes roamed over her lover’s face. She could see that one of his eyes was swollen shut, his nose was clearly broken and his lips were split into a ruin of flesh as well. Her heart hurt. She tried to take a step toward him, but Harleen tightened her hold on Harley’s arm. Her grip was painful, her nails digging into her skin. For a delusion, everything felt completely real.

Joker had a hand on Batman’s shoulder, one finger clearly broken, the strange angle a testament to that, and he was laughing, laughing, and laughing until Harley was in shock that Joker had any voice left.

Joker laughed in a rasping tone, the sound was rough as he stared up at Batman. “Oooh look at you go Brucie!! Hit me again!! Get that anger out!! Show me how much you hate me. Bats are so small, they can only feel one emotion at a time and hate’s the only emotion you have!!!”

Batman growled and hit him again, but Joker simply laughed. “All this rage directed at me and for what Brucie?! We are more alike than you want to admit!!”

Batman hit Joker again and again. Blood flew from Joker’s mouth as Batman’s fist struck him. Joker didn’t defend himself, didn’t fight back, he simply laughed. “Who’s this for Brucie? You or me?”

Joker snickered, but Harley could see the tears in his eyes, stained pink with blood, rolling down the pale man’s cheeks. “You hate your own brother so much because you know you are just as crazy as I am!!! We were both born that night!! We both exist because of them!! Their murder created us!! Created what we are!!” Jack laughed.”Then you killed me and created me again...I rose from the dead into this and now you hate me because I am a reflection of you!! I’m a reminder that deep down you are a murderer!” Joker giggled.

Bruce snarled. “Shut up!! I’m nothing like you!!! I don’t kill!!!!”

Jack snickered. “You killed me, remember? Your own baby brother. That was the first, but who’s next?”

Bruce sluged him in the face. “You were an aberration! I never kill! I never kill anyone!”

Jack giggled. “Oh Bruce, what you do is worse...at least I end their suffering, but you--you prolong it, make it linger. You leave them in pain...you scar them Bruce, like you scarred me...like you scarred her...”

Batman snarled. ‘I’m not responsible for either of you…”

Batman grabbed his brother around the throat with both hands and squeezed. “You are not my responsibility!”
Jack laughed at the same time he grasped his brothers shoulders with both hands, his fingers digging into the cloth of Batman’s cape, his laughter slowly turned into more tears, rolling down his pale cheeks as Bruce choked him to death.

Harley screamed.

She tried again to race forward one hand stretched out, her fingers grasping, trying to reach for Jack, but Harleen held her back, preventing her from racing toward the image as Jack’s body went limp in Bruce’s arms. Bruce released his brother’s throat, dropping Jack to the floor and the nightmare began to pull away, to fade.

Harley sobbed. “He killed him!! Oh my god he killed him!!! Bruce killed him...”

She sank to the floor. Harleen wrapped her arms around Harley, pulling her close. “It’s just a dream Harley, just a dream...it’s one of your worst fears, but it’s not real. It’s just a dream,” she repeated. “I promise...”

Harley turned to look at Harleen. “But he’ll kill him...he will...”

Harleen brushed Harley’s hair back and held her face between her hands. “Harley, it’s just a dream. A terrible dream, but only a dream.” She leaned forward and kissed Harley on the forehead before she whispered.

“It’s just a dream. Go to sleep now Harley. Let me protect you for now.”

Harley stared into Harleen’s blue eyes before she crumbled.

*

Harley woke when her breakfast was shoved through the slat at the bottom of the door. She jerked awake when the metal tray clanged against the wall. She gasped, sitting up and looking around the tiny room, her heart racing. It took her several minutes to settle down, her situation slamming down around her, reality sucking the breath from her. In the back of her head she could hear the soft whisper of Harleen telling her it's just a dream...just a dream...that she was there for her, that she would protect her, help her until Jack found her again.

Harley fought back tears, wiping at her eyes angrily, wiping tears that had dried on her cheeks during the night, and banishing the fresh ones that wanted to come. She took a deep breath trying to steady herself before she tossed her legs over the side of the thin bed. She was not going to break she told herself. Crane would not break her and this place would not break her. She wrapped her hands around the edge of the bed, holding on tight until her knuckles ached and her broken arm throbbed. Her hair hung around her, hiding her face, hiding the room from her. Harley took several deep breaths, releasing the tension from her shoulder.

“I can do this,” she whispered to herself. “I can survive this.”

She had finally felt calm enough, her stomach settled enough that she might tackle her breakfast when she heard a voice that made her shiver.

“Good morning my dear.”

Harley turned, looking through the curtain of her white hair to see Crane’s cool, collected gaze on her. His eyes moved over her, making her uncomfortable, like he was undressing her with his eyes. She resisted the urge to wrap her arms around herself, but instead her grip on the bed tightened. She would rather kill herself that give him the satisfaction of knowing he was making her uncomfortable.
She glared at him without answering or moving.

“Tell me...how did you sleep?” Crane smiled at her in such a way that Harley wanted to jam her fist down his throat and watched him choke. She smiled just a little at the thought of him dying by her hand.

Harley snarled with a slight grin. “Like a baby.”

Crane narrowed his eyes at her. It was clear from his expression he thought she was lying, but after a moment of the two of them glaring at one another, he smiled. “I do like your spirit Harleen...I do so like your spirit. You are the perfect woman for me: spirited, intelligent, passionate, all the qualities I enjoy.” He smiled softly then sighed. “You’ll be moved back to your cell today, but our next session will be tomorrow. I really am looking forward to our session, my lovely girl,” Crane purred softly as his eyes moved over her in a caress that made Harley feel sick, but she didn’t move. They stared at each other until Crane blinked. Harley couldn’t stop herself from sneering at him. Crane didn’t say another word before he turned and disappeared.

Harley’s whole body deflated, her shoulders dropped, her her head fell forward, her her head once more becoming a curtain around her. She bit down hard on her lower lip, fighting the tears that threatened to flood. She was not going to cry, she told herself, but the stupid tears came anyway making her furious with herself. She stood up swiftly, walking over to where the tray lay. She grabbed it up and held it so tightly that the tray vibrated in her hand before she finally threw it across the room with a scream, but no sooner had she let herself feel, let herself give into her rage and fear, than the door to her cell was flung open.

Harley looked around in a panic looking for something, some way to defend herself, but there was nothing she could do. Four guards dressed in helmets and padding barreled into the room and slammed her up against the back of the wall of her cell knocking her face into the plaster. Harley screamed and struggled as the two men grabbed her arms and pinned her wrists against the wall over her head. She continued to struggle and scream, kicking and twisting.

“Let me GO!! LET ME GO!!!”

Her eyes bugged when she heard Crane behind her. “See gentlemen, just as I said. She would have a fit after our visit.”

One of the guards laughed. “You were right Dr. Sykes. What do you want us to do?”

“Secure her to the bed please, I’ll administer the shot once you have her down.” Crane’s voice was soft, smooth, and it made her skin crawl.

The guards lifted her up and carried her over to the small cot and flung her down. Harley fought back, but there were too many of them and she felt weak. Her arms were yanked over her head and held by two guards while the other two grabbed her ankles and held her down. Crane made his way through the small crowd to sit down near the side of her head.

“My poor dear,” he said as he held up the syringe.

Harley’s eyes widened until the white nearly devoured her entire eye. She screamed. “NOOO!!!!!”

Crane brushed her hair back only to have Harley try to take a bite out of his hand. Crane snatched his hand back with a soft laugh. “She certainly is feisty.”

One of the guard’s struggling to hold her down glanced up at Crane. “You want us to get the muzzle for her doc?”
Crane shook his head. “That won’t be necessary. Please hold her steady.”

The guard who had spoken grabbed her head, his fingers wrapping tight around her forehead as he held her head steady with one hand, the other hand gripping her broken arm until Harley was sure it would snap. Crane leaned in close, she could see the silver tip of the syringe, the liquid beading from its tip.

“Now now, Harleen, this won’t hurt a bit.” He eyed her neck for a moment, then plunged the needle into a vein in her neck, the sting of the injection burned as it entered her blood.

Harley screamed, arching her body off the bed trying her best to break free, but it was no good--she was trapped and the drug had already entered her system.

Crane stood. “Just hold her for another minute. Once the sedative takes effect she’ll calm on her own.”

Harley tried not to cry, but the tears came anyway, angry tears, tears of fear, frustration, helplessness, and pain. She wanted Jack, she wanted this nightmare to be over...she felt the warm burn of the drug take effect and there was nothing she could do to stop it.

Crane and the guards watched her for a few more seconds before Crane nodded. “She’ll be fine now. I’ll stay with her for a little while. Thank you all for your help.”

“Sure thing doc--call us if you need anything.” The guards nodded their goodbyes to the man they thought of as Sykes and left, leaving Crane alone with the prisoner. He smiled waiting until the guards shut the door, counted to twenty before he walked over and opened the the door a crack, looking out into the hall, but no one was there.

As Harley lay on the cot, her eyes rolling with the drug, Crane pulled out his phone from the pocket of his coat along with a roll of duct tape. It took him several minutes to find the perfect spot to secure the phone, angling the camera to take in his Harleen and himself.

Once he was satisfied with the phone’s position Crane moved closer to her. He reached out and lightly caressed her jaw, his fingers tracing down along her throat as Harley twitched, her body jerking, her mouth moving as fear began to manifest in her, etching itself across her delicate features. Crane’s fingers slid down her throat, along the t-shirt she wore. He dragged his fingers between her breasts and along her stomach before he snatched his hand back, not trusting himself further. He didn’t want to take her until she was fully his...

He hissed low, his voice a sing song when he spoke to her. “Tell me what you see Harleen, tell me, my lady, what is it that scares you?”

He smiled when he saw the beads of perspiration appear on her forehead, her fingers clawing at the mattress beneath her, and she began to rock back and forth. She was so beautiful he thought, his entire person in need of her. He leaned close and pulled open one of her eyes. The pupils of her eyes were dilated fully, nearly engulfing the blue of her eyes. The initial effect of the drug was fading to be replaced by the fear. He checked her pulse to find her heartbeat was rapid. Crane felt his own reaction, his erection becoming harder, unbearably hard watching his Harleen twitch, the little gasps she made as her fear washed over her.

He put his free arm around her, leaning down close, his lips nearly touching hers, his chest pressed against hers. “What do you see?” he asked in a whisper. “Tell me what scares you Harleen.”

“Darkness,” she whispered back her voice filled with fear. “There is darkness everywhere and I can hear the sounds of wings...bat wings...they are coming for me...no...please...”
Crane kissed her, his tongue tracing her lips as she fought her nightmare, while at the same time he could feel his erection swelling painfully against his slacks. He groaned against her mouth while heat and lust raced through his body in a toxic mix that made his erection press tight against his pants. He hissed, struggling for restraint as he leaned his cheek against hers, his forehead pressed against Harley’s, his lips against the corner of her mouth. His body trembled with need.

“Tell me what you see...tell me...” He moaned. He was losing the struggle. He pressed his hand against his painfully hard shaft, trying to will his desire away, but he couldn’t. Harleen’s fear, her struggle within the fear was pulling at him, exciting him.

Tears began to roll down from her eyes, her voice a soft whisper as her body twitched, becoming more and more frightened by whatever it was she was seeing. “The bats...they’re everywhere...they’re going to kill him...please...no...”

Crane groaned pressing down harder on himself, but it was doing no good; his body disobeyed him. Crane’s breath came quicker. He dragged his tongue across her mouth, his free hand grabbed her upper arm and squeezed as his orgasm built in time with the building of her stress, her fear. Harleen cried out, her hands gripping the blanket, digging into the mattress, her body covered in sweat and her eyes flew open, seeing something terrifying that only she could see.

Crane muffled her cries with his mouth at the same time muffling his own cries when he came.

Crane groaned low and deep, nearly collapsing on top of her. He bit down on his bottom lip, his hand pressed down on his confined member as wetness soaked his slacks at the same time, his forehead pressed against Harley’s as he struggled to bring his breathing under control. He sat up slowly, pulling the handkerchief from his breast pocket of his jacket, but as he looked down at himself he realized it would be no help. He was thankful that he always brought an extra suit with him to work. (There was always the possibility of a suit becoming ruined while working with volatile patients). Harley continued to cry and shudder, lost in her nightmare.

Once he had himself in order, buttoning up his doctor’s coat to hide his lack of control, Crane walked over and pulled the phone down. He checked the video, a smile spreading across his face. He brushed the tips of his fingers across the screen and whispered.

“I’ll cherish this my dear, until we can be completely together.”

With that Crane slipped his phone back into his pocket, walked over to press one last kiss to Harley’s lips before he left the room, locking the door to leave her alone with her nightmare.

*

When Harley finally broke through the nightmare, she rolled onto her side and sobbed. She felt so lost, alone, violated. The fear serum that Crane kept feeding her pulled out her darkest fears and made her relive them...she shuddered, quickly turning to vomit over the side of the bed. She curled in on herself and laid there, waiting.

Later that afternoon Harley was escorted under guard back to her cell where Barbara sat on the floor with a deck of cards playing solitaire. When she saw Harley, the other blonde gasped, leaping to her feet, playing cards scattering everywhere as she threw her arms around Harley.

“They brought you back!”

Harley smiled, hugging Barbara in return. “Yeah, they did.”

Barbara held Harley out at arm’s length, her gaze intense, a frown playing across her lips. “Did they hurt you?”

Harley shook her head. “Nothing I couldn’t handle.”

Barbara grinned hugging her one more time. “That’s good to hear.” Barbara glanced over at the cell door with a slight frown before she said quietly. “It’s almost lunch time--ready to face the lunch crowd?”

Harley made a face, she could stay here and refuse to eat, but her stomach made a loud sound telling her that she needed to eat. Harley chewed her bottom lip for a moment as she quickly went over her options. She could refuse to eat, but that would only mean they would tie her down and force feed her again. Besides, she needed to keep her strength up if she was going to escape. Damn it, she thought furiously at herself, she was going to find a way out of here, she had to...Harley closed her eyes on a fresh wave of despair. She balled her hands into fists fighting the wave of despair that rolled over her, crashing hard down on her. She needed Jack, she needed him soon; she felt hollow, half a person without him. At the same time she couldn’t give in to Crane, she couldn’t let Crane win...she would not let him break her.

She forced a smile onto her lips. “Sure. What’s on the menu?”

Barbara smiled putting an arm around Harley’s shoulders. “That’s my girl.”

*

The prison lunchroom was a large open space with grey walls and a cheap white tile flooring with rows of plastic tables (all bolted to the floor) not too dissimilar from the ones that Harley remembered from high school. Both men and women used the cafeteria at the same time, just like one or two of the recreational areas in the prison. The set up was supposed to encourage better behavior--Harley had read an article about it when she was in college. The idea was that the interaction would cut down on the violence, and it did. But the same article speculated that the prison had simply replaced one problem for another. Though the statistics supported the fact that co-ed areas actually reduced incidents of rape, the purchasing of sexual favors had increased in such prisons. Standard practice was to assign twice the number of guards when anyone was in a co-ed area of the prison. Blackgate was far more careful than a lot of prisons because of the co-ed rule. If anyone abused the co-ed privileges and was caught, everyone--that meant everyone on both sides of the prison--lost their privileges for however long the warden decided was appropriate, so everyone was careful, keeping an eye on everyone else. No one wanted to lose their co-ed time.

The lunchroom was crowded as usual, a sea of orange and brown prison uniforms mixed with the blue and grey of the prison guards. Barbara led Harley over to line to get their lunch. As she was being guided to the line, Harley’s eyes wandered over to the bench near the back, the place where Barbara and her friends usually sat. The bench held three women that Harley had met through Barbara and one man. There was Angie Chen (robbery), Byrna Brilyant (robbery and murder), Gemini De Mille (kidnapping, murder) and Charlie Bullock, who as far as Harley knew, was in here for a variety of crimes that he didn’t like to talk about. Harley frowned. There was someone new sitting there, a blonde woman who she hadn’t met before she had been hauled off by Crane. There was something about the woman that set Harley’s senses on alert. It wasn’t just that she didn’t know the woman, but there was something about the set of her shoulders, the line of her back...it all put Harley on alert.

Harley and Barbara picked up their lunches. (Harley made a sour face, the smell made her stomach turn, but she promised herself she would try to eat.) Today’s lunch was meat and rice, cornbread, baked beans and something that looked like a sponge, but she figured had to be a slice of cake. Harley glared at the food, her stomach both desiring it and revolted by the sight of the food at the same time. She was going to force herself to eat, she had to keep her strength up. She knew her puddin would come for her, he would…and she needed to be ready. Harley frowned as she and Barbara made their way over to the bench where the small group of criminals were laughing about something when Byrna, a woman with short black hair that was shaved on the sides, and model good looks, waved with a bright grin.

“Hey Harley! Nice to see you back again! How was solitary?”

Harley made a face as she took a seat. “Noisy,” she answered deadpan which had Byrna laughing so hard she nearly snorted her juice out her nose. The others laughed, pointing at Byrna while Angie slid out of the way, forcing Harley to sit by the new girl.

Harley set her tray down and took her seat. “Though I will say the food is better in here.”

Angie shrugged taking a bite of her green beans. “That wouldn’t take much,” the redhead replied. “Licking the walls would taste better.”

Harley chuckled in response. “No doubt.”

Charlie smiled motioning to the woman sitting next to Harley. “Harley, this is Vic. She arrived yesterday, in for murder, kidnapping and robbery.”

Vic turned and put her hand out. “Nice to meet you.”

Harley frowned slightly, taking Vic’s offered hand. She could feel calluses and the strength of this woman. Harley wouldn’t be surprised if this Vic could choke someone with one bare hand. “Nice to meet you Vic.” Harley gave her a smile, hiding her misgivings from the other woman.

Vic smiled, turning back to her lunch, but Harley watched her from the corner of her eye. There was something about the new woman that bothered her. This close to her the uncomfortable feeling intensified. Harley shrugged it off, maybe she was just being paranoid because of Crane and his damnable drugs.

*

When lunch was almost over Harley needed to excuse herself.

The lunchtime conversation had mostly revolved around Christmas and family, which only made Harley’s chest hurt as she struggled with her emotions. The fact that she wasn’t going to be with her puddin for Christmas, that she wasn’t going to be with her chosen family and was instead stuck in here, alone with Crane at her heels like a dog in heat only made her isolation that much more unbearable. Harley stared at her food, moving bits of it around with her plastic fork, having only taken a bite or two. She simply couldn’t stomach anything more. She felt a little sick, had tried to eat, but her stomach rebelled against the food. The few bites she had taken were threatening to come back up. She wanted to be strong, but it was so difficult when all she wanted to do was close her eyes and fall into oblivion. Being without Jack…it felt like she was dying slowly.

She stood up abruptly without looking at anyone at the table and muttered. “I need to use the bathroom,” before she turned and hurried away.

Barbara watched her go with a frown. “Well, guess when you gotta go…”

Angie laughed. “Oh Jurassic Park, right?”

Barbara turned back around and winked at Angie. “You got it.”
Vic narrowed her eyes ignoring everyone else at the table until their voices had faded into the background. She watched Harley make her way across the lunchroom before she turned back to her own lunch with a smile.

*

Harley made her way through the lunchroom crowd, pushing her way toward the bathrooms. The jail had several bathrooms, one in the showers, another for the rec areas and one in here. A few of the newer cells had toilets in them, but most everyone preferred to use the public bathrooms because the stalls had doors and no one could watch you take a pee. The pregnant inmates tended to like the new cells that had toilets in them since running to the bathroom whenever you needed to go (such as the middle of the night) wasn’t an option and a convenient toilet, despite the fact that everyone could see you use it, was better than waiting on a guard to escort you to one of the bathrooms.

The bathroom here in the lunchroom had one guard standing outside the door, a large dark skinned woman who went by her last name Meethers—no one knew her first name. Meethers was a tall woman with a hard face and heavily muscled arms, but she smiled and nodded her head at Harley when she saw her approach. Harley smiled in return and started to push the door open to the bathroom when Meethers reached out and gently laid her hand on Harley’s arm. Harley frowned in surprise and looked at the guard.

Meethers smiled. “I heard about what happened in the doc’s office, you okay?”

Harley tilted her head in surprise. “Ah...sore...I think they rebroke one of my ribs.”

Meethers glowered. “I’m sorry honey. I mean, I know you shouldn’t have done what you did, Chris is going to have to have surgery to fix what you did to his face, and attacking the doctor like that was wrong, real wrong, but...beating you like that was wrong too. Us…” Here Meethers pointed at herself then out at the other guards. “We are supposed to be better than that. I just wanted to tell you I was sorry.”

Harley frowned in confusion. “But you didn’t…”

Meethers smiled. “I know honey, but...well it reflects on all of us and I wanted to let you know not all of us guards are like that. You may have committed a crime, but you’re still a person.”

Meethers shrugged. “And while biting a hole in Chris’s cheek was gross, I can’t find any tears for that man.” The guard scowled. “Just, uh, don’t do it again okay?”

Harley gave the guard a genuine smile and nod. “Okay, and ah... thank you.”

Meethers nodded and pushed the door open for her.

Harley smiled softly and headed into the bathroom.

There were a few other women in here; a couple were smoking in one of the stalls (against the rules, though no one really cared), another couple were making out in the corner (also against the rules, but no one stopped anyone and privacy could be bought with a pack of cigarettes). Harley ignored them all and pushed open one of the stalls at the far end of the bathroom. She turned and locked the door before she sat down on the toilet and dropped her elbows to her knees, covering her face with her hands as she fought, both tears and the urge to vomit, wondering how she was going to get through this without her puddin.

She squeezed her eyes closed, trying to ignore all the sounds around her. She didn’t hear the door to the bathroom open or a low woman’s voice tell the others in the bathroom to get out. Distracted by her upset stomach and her fear of never being free to see Jack again, Harley was unaware that she was alone in the bathroom except for the one woman until her stall door was slammed open, proving the locks on the stalls were flimsy. Harley’s head snapped up to see Vic standing there, her hands on either side of the stall door. Now Harley could see just how tall Vic was, easily a few inches taller than Harley, which wouldn’t be that big a deal, but Vic had removed the orange shirt of her uniform wrapping it around her waist to reveal a sleeveless white t-shirt underneath that highlighted Vic’s muscles. The woman’s arms spoke of strength and the way she held herself told Harley this was a woman accustomed to fighting.

The other woman smiled with a dangerous look in her eyes. “Hello Harley Quinn. I was hired by Carmine Falcone to give the Joker a message: no one messes with Falcone.”

Harley hissed. “Shit.”

Vic reached in and grabbed Harley by the front of her prison uniform and yanked the smaller woman out of the stall. She pulled Harley out and flung her. Harley slammed up against one of the sinks.
The pain that shot through her side was intense, nearly dropping her when her ribs screamed in protest. The pain made Harley dizzy, but she ground her teeth and turned, pushing herself away from the sink and ducked under Vic’s first swing. The woman’s fist hit the wall hard enough that she broke through the thick plaster, leaving a hole behind.

Harley spun around and launched herself at Vic, grabbing the other woman around the waist, both women slamming to the floor, sliding a little against the slightly slick surface. Harley gasped in pain; her arm in the cast protested the fall as did her ribs. Harley pushed up and Vic, who had rolled onto her back, slammed her elbow into Harley’s chin. Harley’s jaw snapped shut hard enough that she wouldn’t have been surprised if she had cracked a tooth. She gasped in pain, rolling herself out of the way and getting to her feet trying to put some distance between her and her attacker. Vic had already gotten to her feet and pulled out something from the pocket of her prison pants. Harley couldn’t see exactly what it was, but she didn’t need to because the glimpse Harley did get told her that whatever it was, it was sharp. Vic took a couple of quick swipes at Harley, the smaller woman scrambling back. Vic sneered and swung again, but this time she managed to cut Harley across the cheek before Harley was able to get out of the way. Harley brought her fists up to try to block. Vic took another swipe at her, but Harley leaned to the side, avoiding the stab and grabbed Vic’s arm with both hands.
Even with the cast preventing her from gaining the best hold, Harley grunted and flung the bigger woman across the bathroom and into the door of one of the stalls. Vic crashed through the door, falling head first into the stall.

Harley turned and started to go for the door to get herself out of the bathroom, but Vic moved quickly. The woman burst from the stall and grabbed Harley by the back of her shirt just a half step from the door and yanked her back before fully throwing her backwards. Harley’s feet went out from under her and she fell, slamming to the floor on her rear. The impact was jarring, stunning her and caused Harley to bite her tongue. The sudden taste of blood in her mouth was sharp, snapping her out of the momentary daze when Vic charged her.

Harley spun, pushing herself to her feet, but there was nowhere to go. She spun around only to see Vic was in her face. The other woman surprised her, backhanded her across the face. Harley gasped in surprise and pain. Harley responded back hooking her foot behind Vic’s left calf and yanking forward, pulling Vic’s leg, not quite out from under her, but the move threw Vic off balance. Harley followed that move by slamming her right fist into Vic’s stomach as hard as she could, then hitting the woman again with her left fist across the cheek. She followed this by grabbing Vic and throwing her again, this time into one of the sinks.

Vic’s head hit the sink and she slipped, falling to the floor. Her head hit with a heavy thud, but the woman still pushed herself up partly, taking a swing at Harley’s legs.

Harley felt the cut of something slicing through her pants leg and into her skin, but it wasn’t deep, just enough to sting. Harley kicked, her foot slamming into Vic’s arm, the strike hard enough that whatever it was that Vic had been holding went skidding across the bathroom floor.

Vic cursed, hopped to her feet in an impressive move that showed her skill, but Harley was ready for her. Even though her broken arm was aching and her ribs were screaming at her, Harley grabbed the woman’s arm when her opponent took a swing at her the moment she was on her feet. Harley jumped up, spinning herself around the woman’s shoulders and down, wrapping her legs around Vic’s throat using her body’s weight to haul the other woman off her feet. Harley hit the floor in her controlled fall while Vic landed hard, the air forced from her lungs. There was a second when she looked up to see Harley’s vicious grin before Harley’s fist slammed into her throat leaving Vic choking, her hands reached to her throat as she struggled to make a sound. Harley grinned and took back a little of her lost power.

She straddled the other woman before sitting down slowly on Vic’s chest. Harley panted, her already pale white complexion was ashen looking, and the pain she was in clear around the corners of her eyes.

Still, Harley smiled down at her would be assassin. “Well, I have a message for Falcone...He can keep sending as many people as he wants to try and kill me, but they are all going to end up the same way--dead.”

Vic’s eyes widened when she saw that Harley had her knife.

Harley’s smile widened and her blue eyes looked wild when she hissed. “I’m just afraid that message is going to be fatal for you.”

Harley plunged the knife into Vic’s right eye, slamming it down hard enough that the hilt of the blade went part way into the woman’s eye socket. Harley slammed the heel of her hand down on the hilt, sending it further inside Vic’s skull. Vic didn’t fight back, her heels drummed against the floor for a couple of seconds while a strange gurgling gasp issued from her throat, then nothing.

Harley sat still glaring down at her, her own pain a dim shadow. She heard a creak and looked up when the door to the bathroom opened to see Ginty.

Ginty started speaking before she saw Harley. “Vic, you done?”

When she saw Harley sitting on the dead woman’s body, the guards eyes widened before they narrowed and she turned and yelled. “PRISONER DOWN!! I NEED HELP!!”

Five guards rushed into the bathroom in front of Ginty.

Harley stood, her arms up, though it didn’t matter. One of the guards grabbed her unbroken arm. Harley yanked the man towards her; she knew how this was going to go...solitary again. Well, she decided, if she was going into that box anyway, she was going to make sure she had earned every bit of time in it. When she yanked the guard forward, she used the elbow of her broken arm to slam down on the man’s exposed neck. The guard fell only to be replaced with another. She threw herself forward flipping on her good hand, her legs coming up to kick the guard in the face knocking him back as she landed on her feet. Harley giggled at the same time Ginty screamed.

“Light her up!”

Harley spun just as four of the guards and Ginty shot her at the same time with their tasers. She gasped in surprise and pain as the electric shocks all hit her at once. She jerked and dropped, hitting the floor hard. At the same time, what little lunch she had eaten, finally found its way out of her stomach.

*

Harley had no idea what time it was. After the round of taser tag with the guards, a doctor had been called in to give her a sedative. That bastard Crane had answered the call and had loaded her up with enough sedatives she was sure she had been out for hours, maybe a half day. The room had that heavy feeling that usually came when darkness fell. Of course, without windows she couldn’t be sure, but it felt late, though for all she knew it had been a few days instead of just a few hours.

She sighed as a shiver coursed through her, pulling up the thin blanket and wrapped it around herself. Every part of her ached; her entire body was sore, her face hurt, ribs, arms. The word ‘miserable’ came to mind, maybe even ‘wretched,’ she thought. She squeezed her eyes shut trying to pull up images of Jack when she heard the door to her cell open. Harley sat up quickly, scooting herself to the end of her bed as a shadow filled the doorway of her room.

For a moment her eyes widened in fear, it wasn’t Crane, but rather a monster, a huge black shadow with long pointed ears…

“Dr. Quinzel.”

Harley frowned in confusion. “Batman?”

The darkness took shape and her eyes adjusted to see that it was indeed Batman. He stayed standing in the doorway, a great looming shadow. She could barely see the soft glow of light on his mask where his eyes would be, staring at her.

“What are you doing here?” Harley asked wearily. She would have preferred to be snappy with him, throw some sarcasm and hate at him, but she was too sore and too tired to care. She leaned against the wall, drawing her legs up and wrapped the blanket around herself as best she could.

Batman frowned studying her. She looked…bad, weak, paler, a shadow of herself. He could see the fresh wounds on her, dried blood around her mouth, new bruises, the old ones along her jaw having turned dark yellow and a deep bluish purple were overlapped by fresher ones.

“What happened to you?” he asked softly.

Harley narrowed her eyes. “Like you care.”

Batman was silent, waiting until Harley finally sighed. “Let’s see, I attacked a guard, then other guards beat me up after I attacked a doctor and then Falcone sent someone to kill me, who I killed instead.” She thought briefly about telling him about Crane, but decided against it. He would probably go and talk to him which would only mean Crane would show up here and she didn’t want that if she could avoid it. No, she couldn’t trust Batman she told herself, wrapping her thin blanket tighter around herself.

Batman nodded. “That must be the reason they are moving you.”

“Moving me? Where?” Harley asked in confusion.

Batman frowned. “I received a message from the warden; they want you moved to Arkham. He told Dr. Arkham that he couldn’t have you in his prison, you were too disruptive.”
Harley giggled. “That’s funny.”

Batman didn’t say anything in response to that, but he did ask. “Where is Joker?”

Harley sneered. “Like I would tell you if I knew.”

Batman moved closer. His size was intimidating, especially in that suit, but she knew who he really was, knew what he really was, so she simple glared back at him.

“You can’t scare me,” she hissed though she struggled to control her shaking. After the dreams, the nightmares that Crane had forced on her, she was scared of Batman, scared of what he would do to Joker.

“You’re going to get him killed,” Batman said softly.

Harley laughed. “Me? You’re the one that tried to kill him.”

Batman ignored her. “You should tell me where he is, let me help him, let me help you both.”

Harley snorted. “You’re idea of helping is to ignore or to destroy. I’ll never tell you anything.”

Batman took a steady breath. “I came here to give you a chance Dr. Quinzel, a chance to try and do the right thing, a chance to save him.”

“You know what B-man, you can take your chance and shove it up your ass. Now leave me alone.” She turned away from him, her forehead against the wall.

Batman sighed. “They are going to be moving you tomorrow night. I will be following. If Joker shows up, I will stop him.”

Harley elected not to respond, but her heart began to beat faster when he mentioned Joker. Would he know they were moving her? Would he come? She pressed her teeth into her bottom lip; the pain was quick and sharp. She didn’t want to hope because the chances that Joker knew she was being moved were thin...but maybe...maybe...She struggled to control her trembling, she wanted her lover to save her because she was terrified she couldn’t save herself. She looked back at Batman, thinking to say something nasty to him, something to make her feel in control, but he was gone, vanished as if he had never been there in the first place. She shivered. Arkham. She didn’t want to go back, but she supposed it was better than here. There was no way Crane could show up at Arkham without someone recognizing him. Maybe she would be safer there, safe from Crane...

Harley laid back down pulling the thin blanket tight around her and closed her eyes trying to clear her mind of any thoughts other than Jack.

*

She supposed that the reason she wasn’t forced into a session with Crane the next day was because of the transfer that was coming up. She had to smile/ The transfer had to have thrown Crane off; now he wouldn’t have access to her. She wasn’t looking forward to see Arkham Asylum again, but if being locked away inside that nuthouse got her away from Crane, she was happy--or at least as happy as she could be...

No one came to speak to her all day. Food arrived, three meals, but she never saw who brought them. The slat under her door would open and a tray would come flying into the room. She was beginning to think that Batman had lied to her about the transfer. It was late and no one had said anything to her. She hadn’t seen anyone either. If the meals hadn’t arrived when they did, she would have thought she had been forgotten about. She was lying on her side, wrapped in her thin blanket, staring at the wall when she heard the door to her room open. She had no idea what time it was, but she would have guessed it was near midnight, maybe later. The door was pulled open and she was surprised to see the warden himself standing in the doorway.

He didn’t look happy as he glared at her with several armed guards surrounding him.

“Dr. Harleen Quinzel, you are to be transferred to Arkham Asylum immediately. I want you out of my prison.”

Harley sat up with a giggle. “Awww...you don’t like me?”

The warden glared at her before he stepped aside. “Take her.”

The guard rushed in, only two of them could get into the room, but Harley didn’t fight them. She let them yank her from her bed and spin her around, shoving her up against the wall. She winced as her arms were pulled forward and cuffed, neither guard being careful of her broken arm as she was cuffed and chained.

Harley giggled. “You guys scared of little old me?”

None of them spoke as they finished cuffing her, yanking on the chains to make sure she was secure before she was shoved forward.

Out in the hall there were another four guards along with the warden. The warden gave her a disgusted look before he turned and set a brisk pace down the hall. Two guards turned to follow him while the rest stayed with her, shoving her forward. The chain that connected her wrists to her ankles forced Harley to shuffle as she walked, only able to take baby sets. One of the guards behind Harley was constantly shoving her in the back, pressing something hard and sharp into her lower back as they hissed at her to keep moving. Harley smiled, shuffling along as she imagined herself breaking the wrist and fingers of the guard who kept shoving her.

The prison was currently. Harley could tell by the dim lighting that it was indeed after dark, and after lights out which meant it was at least past eleven at night, possibly later. She was moved down several halls and through several locked gates and groupings of guards until their small procession arrived at what she thought might be the back of the prison. The room they stepped into was large with empty laundry carts, and several crates piled around the room. There was a large metal door at the far end of the room that rolled down from the ceiling. One of the guards moved towards that door and unlocked it before rolling it up to reveal a docking bay beyond the door. Waiting for them on the other side of the dock door was a small armored truck along with three waiting police cars. Two guards walked forward and opened the back of the armored trunk. Inside, Harley could see four more heavily armed guards on the inside of the transport waiting for her. Harley’s heart was beating hard. She was scared, but she wasn’t going to show it. Instead she glared at the guards on the inside of the truck before she gave them a sunny smile and said, “All this for me, guys. Aw, you shouldn’t have.” It sounded to her ears like something Jack would have said. The guards behind her pushed her forward nearly causing her to trip as she was shoved into the back of the trunk.

Two of the guards on the inside of the truck grabbed her upper arms, turned her around and sat her down on a metal bench that ran along the inside walls of the truck, one guard on each side. One of the guards, a young man who looked at her nervously, made sure to secure her to a metal post once they had her seated.

Harley grinned. “Hey, can we stop and get ice cream?”
None of the guards said anything in response. After she was secured, the guard stood and gave the warden a thumbs up. The warden nodded and moved out of the way, looking back behind them. “Are you ready Dr. Sykes?”

Harley’s eyes widened in horror as she saw Crane step forward with a smile. “Yes I am, thank you sir.”

Crane, dressed in a tailored grey suit, stepped past the guards giving them all a nod as he stepped into the back of the truck and sat down, giving Harley a smile. “Good evening Dr. Quinzel.”

Harley turned back to the warden and screamed. “NO!!! YOU CAN’T LEAVE ME WITH HIM!!!”

The warden ignored her and motioned. “Gag her and get her out of here.”

The doors were slammed shut and locked.

Harley yanked against her cuffs with a snarl. “Let me go!! He can’t be in here!!”

One of the guards pulled his handgun and held the weapon’s barrel in front of her face. “Go ahead and give me a reason.” The other guard pulled something that was hooked to his belt. He held the contraption up and Harley saw it was some sort of mask. The thing made her think of a medieval torture device; all she could see of it was that it was made of leather straps with metal buckles. She screamed and tried to fight, but she couldn’t move much. The guard with the gun grabbed her by her hair and yanked her head back painfully. Harley cried out in pain, but she tried to bite at the other guard as he pulled the thing over her head. A thick leather strap ran over the top of her head, while two other straps rode along her cheeks with the bottom half of the mask, which smelled of sweat and fear. It was brought tight against her mouth and chin, the leather pressing in just under her nose painfully while the guard buckled it tight behind her head. Harley’s cries were muffled, the thick leather reducing her to sounding like an animal. She thrashed her head, but it did no good. She was cuffed, virtually silenced, at Crane’s mercy, and on her way to Arkham.

Crane laughed softly glancing at the guards, the one with the gun out still held it on Harley. “Now now, gentlemen, let’s all behave ourselves. This is the reason our lovely Dr. Quinzel is being moved—she is unstable, sick. She can’t really be held accountable for her actions. If she becomes too unruly I have a sedative with me.” Crane turned his full attention on Harley. “Now, you wouldn’t want me to have to sedate you, now would you?”

Harley’s eyes were an icy blue glare over the top of the mask, but she could say nothing in reply.

*

The convoy took off from the jail without incident. Batman was waiting outside the prison for the convoy, falling in behind the police car that was behind the transport. He had come alone tonight without Robin. He needed to see Dr. Quinzel safely in Arkham, but he wanted to be here in the event Joker...in case his brother showed up to try and get his...Batman pressed his lips together. In case Joker tried to get her back.

*

Inside the truck, Crane kept smiling at Harley.

Harley shivered. Something was wrong, she could feel it. Crane looked too confident for a man who was about to lose the focus of his obsession. Arkham would put her out of his reach, but he was acting like everything was going his way, as if this was a joyride. She just knew Crane was going to do something...but she could do nothing to warn the guards. They would never believe her if she could speak to them; hell, she couldn’t even imagine what he might do...

They were driving along when Crane said softly. “I think it’s time we find out what everyone is scared of, don’t you think Harleen?”

One of the guards frowned. “What was that Dr. Sykes?”

Harley started to thrash against her bindings, making muffled protests, her blue eyes wide.

Crane smiled. “Oh, just curious: what are you afraid of?”

The guard looked confused, but just as he opened his mouth to answer, Crane thrust his arm forward, a thick yellowish gas sprayed forth to blast the guard in the face. The other guards began to shout, to respond, but it was already too late.

Harley screamed behind her mask, the gas quickly filling the small space. Shadows were moving...something was coming closer to her. It was Crane’s face, distorted, frightening with a mouth full of razor sharp teeth as he grabbed her face one hand on top of her head, wrapping around the strap while his other hand grabbed her jaw holding her steady as he stared into her now wild eyes.

“Sorry my dear for the concentrated exposure to my gas, but it simply couldn’t be helped. You see, I can’t let you end up in Arkham. You belong to me and if you end up there, I doubt Jeremiah would understand my sudden resurrection.” He shrugged. “But that’s fine, because it just means you get to come home with me that much sooner.”

Harley screamed, struggling pointlessly against him when suddenly there was the sound of an explosion outside. The truck weaved hard enough that Crane was nearly thrown into Harley. The sound of gun shots followed, slamming into the front of the truck.

Harley, though still looking terrified, began to giggle behind her mask.
Sublimation

Frost sat on the couch downstairs in the home that Jack and Harley shared in the abandoned amusement park. He nursed a cup of coffee that had long ago gone from hot to lukewarm, when he jumped and winced, his frown deepening when he heard the sounds of gunfire followed by the now familiar fall of plaster against the floor coming from overhead. Frost glanced over at Agatha who looked upset, her gaze on the ceiling. Upstairs, Jack was in the throes of another violent outburst, tearing the bedroom that he shared with Harley into pieces. The room looked as if a bomb had exploded, destroying nearly everything and leaving very little for Jack to destroy, but he continued to find things to take his rage out on.

They both shared another look before their eyes moved upward again. Jack had been increasingly shutting himself away in the room, refusing to come out unless it was to discuss another plan to get Harley free. He wasn’t eating much and barely drinking. He had lost a great deal of weight, looked haunted, lost, his blue eyes wide and feverish. He was wasting away and everyone was worried.
Agatha sighed, in pain for her nephew. The worst part was that Alex had someone on the inside of Blackgate who was keeping them up to date on Harley, but he hadn’t brought them any good news, not about Harley’s care, which had Agatha sick with worry. (It was nothing they could tell Jack either. If he knew what was happening to Harley, the beatings, the solitary, he would lose what was left of his mind in a burning rage. Besides, Alex’s inside man hadn’t been able to help them with any plan that would get her out without all of them ending up in Blackgate themselves, so Agatha had made the decision withhold from Jack the details about the man Alex had on the inside.)

Their latest plan to break Harley out of Blackgate fell apart almost as soon as they had conceptualized it and the boss of their gang wasn’t taking it well. Harley had been gone roughly three weeks and Jack had become more and more unstable with each passing day. Frost was actually worried that Jack might take his anguish out on one of them soon. It hadn’t happened yet, but he felt it was only a matter of time.

Frost set his cup of coffee down. “Maybe I should take him out of here? Get Alex, maybe Jason, and Zsasz, take him out for a drink?”

Agatha frowned leaning back against the couch cushion. “What about Bane?”

Frost slid the pad of his thumb along his forefinger as he spoke. “Bane’s going to be down for a day or two. His girlfriend was going to be trying some new drug on him to break his dependence on the Titan toxin, though she didn’t sound hopeful. Regardless, Bane insisted that they try. He’s recovering; at least that was what Viktoria said when I spoke to her yesterday. I don’t think taking him out to drink would be a good idea—despite how he could help us keep Jack, er, calm if things get out of hand.”

Agatha nodded her understanding. “You sure taking Jack out is a good idea? He’s not...stable.”

Agatha wrapped her arms around herself, rubbing her upper arms. She looked as if she had aged again, worried, with fear laying heavily on her shoulders. Frost reached out and gently ran his fingers through her hair, tucking her blonde hair behind her ear.

“I know, but once we get Harley back...” Frost started, but Agatha cut him off. “What if we don’t get her back? Falcone is going to try to kill her, you know he is. What if she never gets out Jonny?
What if...” She began to tear up. His tough as nails, kick ass girlfriend was breaking in her fear for her nephew and his wife. Frost moved closer, putting his arm around her shoulder and pulled her closer. Agatha laid her head against his shoulder.
“I’m going to lose them both,” she said softly.

Frost frowned. “We won’t let that happen Agatha, I promise.”

*

Jack came down the stairs dressed to go out. He was wearing a black suit, black vest, gloves, and even his shoes were black. The only variation in color he wore was the tie, a deep shade of crimson held in place by a silver tie clip that matched the silver chain that hung from the middle of his waist and disappeared into the pocket of his slacks. He stopped at the bottom of the stairs to pull a package of cigarettes out, taking his time to light one. The suit hung a little loose on him, slightly big, but not too much—not yet.

Jack had his green hair slicked back, his lips painted a deep, bloody red. Agatha and Frost both noticed that he had extended the lipstick past the corners of his lips to curl slightly into his cheeks making his smile look frighteningly wide. He didn’t look well, the now natural milk white of his skin looked ashen and the darkness around his eyes was deeper, shaded enough to make his blue orbs look more crazed, unstable.

Jack took a deep drag on his cigarette and slowly blew the smoke out between his lips watching the way the white cloud of smoke drifted away from him. He turned to look at Frost and smiled. The smile made Frost shiver.

“All right Frosty my love, I’m ready.” Jack chuckled. “A night to clear my head.”

Frost swallowed and nodded. This had been his idea, now he would have to stick it out. He kissed Agatha on the cheek. “See you later.”

She smiled and nodded. “Be careful. You too Jackie.”

Jack smiled showing all his teeth, bright white against the red of his lips. “Of course Auntie. I promise to be a very good boy.”

Agatha nodded though she didn’t look convinced. She didn’t think this was a good idea—not at all—but they needed to do something to calm Jack down. Another failed plan might end up with one of the gang ending up dead and that was exactly what they didn’t need. The Irish were still with them, but Agatha could tell the thread holding them together was thin. It wouldn’t take much for the Irish to leave, especially after what happened with Mikey and the attack on Falcone. They needed Jack to hold it together and that meant getting Harley back, soon.

*

While Frost drove quietly, music from the car’s stereo played softly in the background. Jack had said nothing else, only stared out the window watching Gotham’s sights go by as he smoked another cigarette. Frost frowned looking sideways at Jack’s profile, the lights catching Jack’s blue eyes making them seem almost white, fading the blue until his eyes were feverish, glowing with manic, pent up anguish and rage.

Frost turned his attention back to the road, concern pinching his features.

*

When they arrived at Big Mama’s, Frost could see Jason, dressed in jeans, t-shirt and biker jacket, was standing outside the bar with Zsasz in his regular black suit and Alex, wearing holey jeans, t-shirt and unbuttoned Hawaiian shirt. He was the only one not wearing a jacket against the chill, the three men on the corner of the building smoking and talking, huddled against the drizzle that had started only an hour or so ago. As Frost turned the corner they all turned to look over at the car. Jason raised his hand when he caught a glimpse of Jack, but Jack didn’t respond.

Frost found a place to park, and then the two of them heading over to the others.

Alex frowned when he saw Jack. He didn’t look well at all, worse than the other day and he had looked pretty damn bad that day too.

“Hey buddy--how ya doing?” Alex asked as Frost and Jack came closer.

Jack smiled, his hands in the pockets of his slacks, his mouth a little too wide when he replied. “I’m great Alex dear, why wouldn’t I be?”

Alex frowned, but said nothing.

Jason reached out laying a hand on Jack’s shoulder. “You look good,” Jason said with a small smile.

Jack narrowed his eyes. “Do I?” Jack tilted his head, the strange smile still on his lips. “Really?”

Jason frowned removing his hands. “I just meant…”

Frost frowned. “Why don’t we head on in and get something to drink.”

Jason nodded. “Yeah, I think that’s a great idea.”

Jack smiled. “A drink sounds fantastic, just what I need to drown out the thoughts that keep dancing through my mind.” He giggled softly, the sound strange and sinister. He took off at a crisp walk toward the doors.

Their small group glanced at one another before they followed Jack inside.

*

Eivor’s “Undo Your Mind” was playing loudly in the bar, with dancers on the floor moving slowly to the slightly eerie music when Jack pushed open the doors and walked in with his friends behind him. He frowned looking around. The place was filled with shadows, highlighted with lights in pinks, purples and greens. The lights danced and flashes throughout the room, the dancers and patrons becoming shadows, monsters, visions that moved across his vision. Jack closed his eyes letting the world fall away, letting the humanity that filled the room drift away from him. He focused on the words and the music of the song, letting that wash over him instead. A soft smile danced on his lips. He stood still, listening, his body gradually swaying to the music. (Frost and the others had fanned out around Jack in a protective circle without realizing they were doing so. Each one of them subconsciously protecting Jack, but also protecting the people around them from Jack.)

“Heard the whisper in your ear
I’m in love
I do not fear inside your heart beneath your skin
it's in the dream
you're living in…
undo your mind…”

Jack smiled broader, swaying gently like a snake being charmed, his eyes closed as he whispered to himself. “Undo your mind…”

Frost touched Jack’s back, a light pressure, breaking the spell. “We have a booth over there. I had Big Mama put it aside for us.” Frost pointed along the way near the dance floor, but set back enough to provide an illusion of privacy.

Jack opened his eyes glancing at Frost and smiled wide. “Of course, dear friend, lead away.”

Frost frowned, but said nothing as he moved toward the booth with the other men following close behind.

The five men sat, with Jack on the end, when Big Mama came over with a tray. She looked nice with a beehive pink wig and a tight yellow dress covered in sparkles. She smiled as she set the tray down.

“Nice to see you boys,” she said, her voice just as gruff and deep as ever. She began setting four tall glasses on the table; the drinks were almost neon pink. “This is a new drink we are introducing tonight I thought you boys might like to try it. I call it the Pink Bottom.”

Jason laughed picking up one of the pink drinks. “Okay, now I’m scared.”

Big Mama grinned. “Don’t worry honey, if the drink’s too much for you, I’ll get you home safe.” She winked at him and Jason blushed.

Big Mama turned her attention to Jack. “I heard about Harley. I’m so sorry.”

Jack frowned, closing his eyes for a moment. Frost knew he was struggling to control his reaction, he could see the tension around Jack’s eyes, the vein under his left eye twitched as did the corner of Jack’s mouth before he spoke. “Can you bring me a bottle of Fireball whiskey and an Everclear chaser.”

Big Mama’s eyes widened a little at the request, but she nodded. “All right, I’m guessing you ain’t driving tonight?”

Jack smiled. “ Nope.”

Big Mama nodded. “Well then, all right. I’ll be right back.”

The music changed, playing some old ‘80’s song. A few people had headed out to the dance floor for the song while a few other retreated, the softer music over now. Big Mama returned with the drinks that Jack had ordered, setting them down in front of him. Jack gave her a smile that made the older woman shiver.

Jack promptly poured the whiskey into the glass and tossed back the shot without any reaction whatsoever.

Frost frowned, but turned his attention to Alex. “So how’s Alice doing?”
Alex smiled. “She’s doing good, due any day now in fact. I’m looking forward to being a father.”
He pulled his phone out and held it. “I’m on alert in case she goes into labor.”

Jack snorted and muttered under his breath turning to look away, his eyes on the dancers on the dance floor. “So was I once--going to be a father.”

Alex glanced over at Jack, the pain he was going through was so clear that Alex did something he knew he shouldn’t. “We’ll get her back Jack, we will.”

Jack turned back, pouring another shot and chuckled darkly, his voice was low, but clear. “I don’t know how much longer I can last gentlemen. I can’t live without her you know--she’s everything to me...everything...” He giggled softly. “She holds my heart, my sanity in her hands…” He closed his eyes, his chin trembling for a moment. “I love her, I need her, and it’s breaking my heart to be without her. Without her…” Jack shook his head and took a deep breath. “She is everything I’m living for...without Harley, all I have is my rage…”

His voice was barely audible over the sounds of the music and the crowd in the bar, but all the men at the table heard him. “All I have is my need to destroy, the need to tear Gotham down, to tear this world down around me...to watch everything burn. Without her, nothing has any meaning...”

Jack turned his attention to the dance floor again, took another shot. The whiskey burned on the way down, but it was as if his body was numb. He could feel the burn, but only as a distant feeling, as if he couldn’t feel anything at all, nothing. It was as if his body, Jack, no longer existed. Only the Joker remained, only Joker was awake, and he had no emotions other than anger, rage and need to make everyone hurt like he did, to make other feel his loss as deeply and horribly as he felt it. There were no longer any physical feelings either, no pain, no pleasure...he was a ghost, drifting through Gotham until he had her back, until Harley was in his arms again. He needed her, she was everything to him, his lover, his partner, his friend, the only person in all the world who understood him, accepted him.
He didn’t exist as anything but a shadow of himself without her. If he didn’t get her back, then he was going to burn the world to the ground. As his gaze lingered on the dancers, Jack saw a shadow move at the edges of the dance floor, a figure drifting across his vision. He leaned forward, his grip on the glass in his hand tightened. The shadow seemed to melt into an image that made his heart constrict--it was Harley.

The music, the voices, everything else fell away, crumbling to dust as he focused on the illusion.

When he saw Harley moving through the dancers Jack’s entire body began to tremble, a small quake that ran through his core. She wore a short black and red halter dress that showed off her long, white legs. Her snow white hair flowed down along her shoulders and down her back. Harley smiled at him, her blue eyes sparkling in the shifting lights of the club. She brought a finger to her mouth, her smile widening as she held her red nail between her teeth while with her other hand she beckoned to him, like a siren luring him to his doom. As Jack stared at her, Harley’s smile expanded, looking unnaturally wide, too many teeth in her grin and her eyes were too big as well, distorted. He heard her laugh in his ears becoming unnaturally high, but then the image snapped back into place and it was his Harley once more, his Harley, dancing, moving her body to the music with her eyes on him, moving like a shimmering angel. She turned slowly, her eyes never leaving his while she danced.
Jack leaned forward, knowing full well he was hallucinating her even as she winked and gave him another come hither crook with her finger.

His entire being ached at seeing her. His body tightened with need, his heart slammed inside his chest, emotion bubbling up and threatening to send him into hysterical laughter. He was losing his mind, bit by bit; more and more of him was crumbling away to leave only...the Joker. Madness incarnate.
Jack knew she wasn’t here, that he was seeing something that wasn’t there, her ghost dancing at the edges of his sanity, but the sight of her made his heart ache, his chest heavy and the pain radiated through his body. His grip on the glass was becoming tighter, the glass whined in protest, when a rough, slightly drunk voice broke the spell Jack was under.

“Hey twink, what’s with the green hair? You think you look like that Joker clown the TV keeps talking about?” This was followed by a laugh. “That Joker guy isn’t so tough. You’ve seen him, skinny little shit, pasty skin freak. If the cops don’t get him, Batman is going to beat the shit out of him. Skinny freak like that won’t stand a chance against Gotham’s caped crusader, Batman. Nothing wrong with a little vigilante justice.”

Jack’s eyes snapped back into focus. He looked up to see a man, holding a bottle of beer, dressed in a t-shirt that read Gotham’s Most Wanted across the chest, standing in front of him with five other men flanking him. They all looked to be muscle heads, muscles more for looks than actual strength with the same short haircuts, the same style of clothing. They all could have been copies of each other. Idiot clones Jack thought with a giggle.

The one who had addressed him frowned looking down at Jack. “What you laughing at freak?”

Jack smiled turning to pour himself another shot. “Pasty skin freak? How original. I’m sure your mothers are very proud and your fathers, if any of you knew who they were.”

Jack downed the shot and poured another with a giggle. “Life is hard, but it’s harder when you’re stupid, so you have my sympathy.” Jack snickered taking another drink.

Frost stood up and addressed the half dozen men. “Look, just go. You’re drunk, my friend’s drunk. You don’t need to be looking for a fight for no reason.”

The man who had spoken to Jack laughed. “Hey, I ain’t picking a fight for no reason. This guy comes in here trying to look like that freak the Joker? That’s enough of a reason to kick his ass.” The man’s friends behind him all muttered their agreement. The man, emboldened by drink and his friends jeered. “So, you gonna make us go? You don’t look so tough.” The man looked Frost up and down. “You some sort of mortician? Wearing a suit to a club?” The man and his friends looked at all of them at the table and laughed. “That’s what this is, a mortician gang.” He laughed at his own poor joke, his drunken friends laughing along with him.

One of the other men in the back laughed, speaking loudly to be heard over the music. “Sorry chump, Richie here has a bucket list before he heads back to Metropolis, one is to get in a bar fight in Gotham!”

The other men laughed. “You tell ‘em Tony!”

One of the men in a bright red shirt chuckled. “Let’s see if these Gotham girls have any real fight.”

Frost sighed. “Look, you should find another group to have your little Gotham fight with. You do not want to fight with us.”

Zsasz stood, along with Jason and Alex. Richie laughed looking back at his friends. “Oh look at these guys, think they’re all tough and shit wearing suits. A bunch of mobster wannabes! And that one is missing an arm. He must be their mascot, half a man.” The group laughed more. “Hey one arm, I hope that wasn’t your masturbating arm that you lost!”

The six young men were pleased with themselves, laughing and slapping each other on the shoulders like they were comic geniuses.
Alex narrowed his eyes. “Look gorilla dick, I’ve never lost a fight.”

Jack, who was still sitting, poured himself another shot and giggled. “Gorilla dick? Hehehe…” Jack downed his shot before pouring another. “You know, stupid isn’t a crime, so you and your buddies are free to go. Why don’t you little boys go play somewhere else? You don’t really want to play with the big boys because this is a fight you won’t walk away from.”

Jack lifted his drink and smiled. “You know, being stupid is a danger to you and everyone around you, and in your case, it’s going to be fatal.”

Richie laughed again. “Oh, watcha gonna do buddy? Call your girlfriend? Or is she too busy on a street corner right now to come rescue you?”

Jack’s smile slowly fell and his entire body went still, very still.

Frost noticed the change in Jack’s entire demeanor and cursed. He snarled at the drunks from Metropolis. “Look, get the fuck out of here now while you still can.”

Richie snorted. “Oooh, I’m so fucking scared. What’s that green haired twink gonna do?” He stepped forward and poured the rest of his beer onto Jack. “There, will that get you to fight ya little pussy?”

Jack downed his shot, beer dripping from his hair and down his suit. He chuckled softly, his green hair wet and dripping down his forehead. The laugh started low, then slowly became more and more hysterical until Jack was laughing loudly, the sound sending shivers of discomfort down everyone’s spine. Frost and the others shared a look, each one of them looking slightly frightened by the sound. Before anyone could truly process the off kilter laughter, Jack was on his feet so quickly that no one had seen him move. One moment he was sitting, laughing while beer ran over his face and suit, in the next blink of an eye he was on his feet. His fist shot out, hitting the drunk that stood in front of him in the face, snapping the man back a step. Jack lunged forward, grabbed his tormentor by the back of his neck, and in a swift movement, Jack slammed the man’s face down into the table. The man cried out stumbling backwards when Jack released him, blood covering the man’s face and gushing from his nose.

Jack laughed loudly, tears in his eyes as he slapped his knees in hysterics. The man he assaulted swung and caught Jack in the face snapping his head to the side, blood smearing Jack’s lips and down his chin from the hit.

The two groups erupted into action.

Alex leapt across the table, dropping to his hip and slid to the other side to land on his feet, his fist finding the face of the nearest drunk, a man named Lee. The force of his fist drove Lee to the floor, his head bouncing with the impact. Before he could react, Alex straddled him, continuing to slam his fist into the man’s face, not giving the musclehead a chance to hit back and said, “How you like that shithead! Getting beat up by a fucking one armed man!”

Zsasz moved with the grace of a skilled predator and used his elbow to catch one of the men in the chest, a man named Lucas who hadn’t actually wanted to come out tonight, a sandy hair blond with the looks seen in a teen romance movie. Lucas was knocked back a few steps, coughed, the air rushing painfully from his lungs. Zsasz followed that elbow with a spin, his leg snapping up to catch the man across the face. Lucus’s head snapped to the side, the multicolored lights of the dance floor caught the spray of blood and a couple of teeth flying out of the man’s mouth.

Jason’s leg snapped out to smash a man named Shawn--wearing a t-shirt that read ‘Metropolis or bust’ across the chest. Jason figured his opponent was around his age, with a crew cut and the chiseled features of someone who had money to take care of himself. The teen heartthrob gasped when Jason’s foot connected with his chest, but he didn’t go down. Instead Shawn took a swing at Jason. Jason ducked the swing, turned, used the full force of his body to slam his elbow into Shawn’s chest, followed by the fist of his other hand catching Mr. Crew Cut in the chin. Shawn took the hits replied with a couple of swings at Jason.

Jason leaned out of the way, the clumsy swings missing him. Jason reached out and grabbed Shawn by the collar of his t-shirt to yank him close, followed by several hard, quick punches to the man’s upper chest, releasing him to allow Jason to swing one fist, then the other into Shawn’s face.

Shawn dropped to the floor and stopped moving while Jason grinned.

Frost grabbed a beer bottle off the table and smashed it against the side of the head of the man that charged him. The man was tall, taller than Frost and more heavily muscled with what Frost assumed was his name across the chest of his t-shirt in big block letters that read JIMMY. The glass made a heavy thunk sound against Jimmy’s head, but the man didn’t go down.

Frost muttered, “Fuck.”

Jimmy blinked in pain, one eye nearly screwed shut, and threw a fist at Frost, but the older man ducked the fist. He wasn’t quick enough to avoid the second fist, however; Jimmy’s thick knuckles caught Frost in the mouth. Frost gasped in pain, but at the same time he caught the man’s arm and yanked the bigger man forward. The sudden forward movement caught the muscled jerk by surprise. Jimmy stumbled forward and Frost hit him in the face. Jimmy gasped and shook his head in surprise.

Frost groaned. “Please, just get your friends and leave before someone gets killed!”

Jimmy narrowed his eyes. “You fuck head.”

Frost rolled his eyes. Damn it, he thought, ducking the next swing of the man’s massive fists.

* Jack giggled as Richie in the Gotham t-shirt and one of his friends, a slender man with dark brown hair, this one wearing a shirt with a couple of naked girls on it kissing, named Tony, rushed to his friend’s side.

Jack laughed. “Oh look! It’s Dumber and Too Stupid to Live! Let’s see if I can help you with that!”

Jack threw a right hook, catching the lesbian t-shirt wearing Tony across the face. Richie took a swing at Jack, but Jack ducked under the sloppy swing to come up and grab the man’s arm. He spun around with a heavy grip on his opponent’s arm and yanked Richie over his shoulder, to throw him to the floor. Jack followed this by a hard downward punch to the drunk Richie’s face. He hadn’t broken the drunk’s face on the table when he had slammed Richie’s face into it, but this time Jack shattered the man’s nose with the punch to his face.

Jack laughed. “Oh, much better!!”

Tony jumped on Jack’s back, trying to wrap his arms around Jack’s throat in a choke hold, but Jack moved swiftly and gracefully, slithering out of the man’s grip and spinning around to face Tony catching the dark haired man by surprise. Jack slammed his hands against Tony’s chest. Tony stumbled back, but not enough to put any real distance between the two men. Tony mirrored Jack’s move to slam the flats of his hands against Jack’s chest, catching Jack by surprise with the force of the thrust.
The shove was hard enough that Jack stumbled back up against the wall beside the booth where Jack’s head hit the wall. Momentarily stunning him (though the drinks Jack had been consuming in conjunction with the fact that Jack hadn’t been eating, helped to make him less than resilient). Tony attacked Jack with a series of jabs, striking him in the chest and across the face, followed quickly by hitting Jack in the face with two solid, downward punches.

Giggling, with blood flowing from his nose, and his lip split with more blood dripping off his chin and staining his teeth, Jack blocked the third punch with his arm. As Tony’s attack went wide, Jack slammed his foot down on Tony’s instep and threw a hard left hook, catching Tony in the face and dropping him to the floor. Jack proceeded to kick the man in the ribs several times until he felt bone snap under the point of his shoe, but then he continued to kick, each kick punctuated by a laugh.

Jack was laughing loudly, gasping a few times to catch his breath. Tony had stopped moving, but Jack didn’t care. He looked like a maniac, blood dripping from his nose across his lips and down his chin as he turned his attention back on the man who had originally assaulted him. Richie was pulling himself off the floor, his face a bloody mess.

Richie, the instigator of this entire fight, put his hands up when Jack turned on him. He could see his friend on the floor, not moving, his other friends were in the process of having their ass’s handed to them. It was only now that the alcohol had burned away enough for Richie to realize what a horrible mistake he had made.

“Look man, I’m sorry! I’m sorry!! I’ll...I’ll buy you all a drink? We can call it even okay?” Richie’s eyes were huge, the whites dominating and drowning out the color of his eyes. It was clear, the man was scared, very scared.

The entire club was now focused on the fight. Big Mama was standing by the bar, holding a tray against her chest. She looked conflicted. She could stop the fight and risk upsetting Joker who had done nothing but help her. And for a person like herself, someone willing to help, willing to stand by hers, was rare. She also knew he was hurting. Harley falling out of that helicopter had been all over the news, played on a loop. Big Mama knew that the man was broken right now, and if he needed to take that pain out on a few thick-headed fools, then she was good with letting him do that. (She didn’t care about these particular patrons of her bar because they had drunkenly called her both dike and tranny. They could get hit by a car for all she cared.) No one attempted the call the police. Most of them didn’t realize who was involved and others simply didn’t care. The music kept playing and some patrons simply kept dancing, ignoring a situation that didn’t involve them. Jack laughed, laughed with so much gusto, with more than a hint of insanity, that he leaned forward grabbing his knees, tears mixing with the blood on his face. He reached up once to wipe at the blood on his mouth, smearing it across his cheek before turning his attention toward Richie. “You think I’m simply going to let you walz out of here Richie? Isn’t that what your friend said your name is-- Richie?”

Richie nodded, holding his side. “Come on man, we were just looking for a bit of fun. We didn’t mean any harm!”

Joker grinned, his smile spreading across his face. (Frost saw the transformation, that moment when all of Jack was gone.)

Joker grinned at the man and spoke, his voice holding a hint of a rasp, an unhinged gravity. “Well sweetie, you wanted to pick a fight with the Joker and that is exactly what you got. Now you have to pay for everything you said, every single word you uttered in ignorance. As they like to say, you have the freedom to say whatever it is you want, but that doesn’t save you from the consequences of your words Richie.” Joker snickered. “Part of your consequence isn’t that you picked a fight with someone that looked like the Joker--it’s that you picked a fight with the Joker.”

Joker laughed bringing up his fists.

Richie panicked and took a swing. His fist landed, striking Joker with a dull thump in the chest, but Joker didn’t react other than to simply chuckle. Richie threw another swing, his fist hitting Joker in the face, followed by another swing that knocked Joker’s head to the side. Joker took a step back with a laugh, widening his eyes at Richie as he licked the blood from the corner of his mouth. Richie realized that the pale man before him had allowed him to get in those strikes and that frightened him.

“Oh, good one little man.” Joker sneered. “My turn.”

Richie swung in panic, missed the faster, leaner man. Joker slammed his fist into Rickie’s side with enough force that one of the man’s ribs snapped. Joker followed this by an under swing that caught Rickie in the chin and snapped his head up and back. Richie stumbled, his feet catching a wet place on the floor, damp from spilled beer. His legs went flying out from under him and Richie hit the floor, his head bouncing with a sickening thud that was audible to the nearby patrons over the sound of the music.

Joker walked over slowly and lowered himself down until he was sitting on the stunned Richie’s chest. Richie gasped in pain when Joker sat on him, pain radiating through his body, but he didn’t react to Joker. His eyes were rolling and he reached up feebly. Joker smacked his hands away with a grin, followed by smashing his fist down into the man’s nose. Richie gasped as the pain blossomed like a white flash across his vision. Joker wrapped his hands around Richie’s throat and leaned down, his blood covered lips almost touching Richie’s own bloody lips.

“The worst mistake you made my dear fool, was bringing Harley into it. If you hadn’t done that I just might have let you go, simply ignored you. But you didn’t and now you are going to die.” Richie couldn’t respond, choking while Joker’s fingers pressed in tight on his throat cutting off his air. Suddenly Richie gasped, air rushing back into his lungs when Joker released his hold on his throat, but before he could enjoy that fresh rush of air, Joker wrapped his long fingers around Richie’s head and began to pounded his head into the floor, hard and fast, laughing the entire time. Joker kept smashing the man’s head into the floor, giggling even when it was clear that Richie was dead, an ever widening pool of thick red blood spreading out under the man’s heads. Screaming started as someone realized what was happening. The first scream was followed by another, then there was a series of shouts.

Joker laughed loudly continuing to smash Richie’s head, the back of the dead man’s skull a grisly pulp when a pair of hands grasped his shoulders.

Joker released the head and spun up onto his feet, his blue eyes flashing with an unnatural shade of whitish blue, his bloody teeth exposed in a snarl, ready to kill the next person, ready to really enjoy it, but when his eyes focused on the person who had touched him, he saw that it wasn’t an enemy, but Frost.

Frost had taken an involuntary step back when Jack spun on him, but he remained still. He felt as if he moved Jack was more likely to hurt him than if he remained still. Frost’s voice was tight when he spoke. “Boss, we need to get out of here. NOW!”

Joker looked around, only now noticing the change in the people around him. Most were staring in horror, a few had gotten their phones out and were taking video.

Joker chuckled with a simple shrug and a lift of his hairless eyebrows. “Well, I suppose we have overstayed our welcome, though it’s a shame nobody’s smiling.” He shrugged again, letting Frost and the others drag him from the bar. Joker waved at Big Mama as they moved past.

“Bye my dear!! Sorry about the mess!!!”

Big Mama stared in horror, watching them leave.

*

Agatha, dressed in a pair of wide legged dark grey pajamas with large pink flowers printed on them, was curled on the couch with a blanket around her legs and a mug of hot tea in her hands watching a movie. She wasn’t even sure what the title of the movie was, but it was something violent and romantic to distract her. She sighed taking a sip of her tea when she heard the sound of Jack’s laughter outside, followed by the door opening.

Frost came into the room with Jack at his side, his arm around Jack’s waist holding her nephew up. Agatha set her tea down and quickly rose to her feet. She could see that Jack was covered in blood, his face a mess.

Agatha looked Jack up and down. “Jackie? Oh my god, what happened?!”

Jack laughed waving a hand at her, the glove of which was missing. “Oh nothing really, just a little misunderstanding! A group of idiots were under the assumption I wasn’t the Joker! So we had to correct them.” He giggled and patted Frost on the chest.

Agatha frowned looking to Frost who looked pale and uncomfortable.

Jack chuckled, pushing away from Frost. “I’m gonna go upstairs and get as drunk as I possibly can!” he announced throwing his arms up with a grin before walking away and into the kitchen. Agatha could hear Jack moving around in the kitchen. It sounded like he was opening every cabinet and the refrigerator. There was a clattering sound followed by Jack’s giggle. A few seconds later

Jack came back into the room, a bottle of alcohol under each arm and a bottle of wine, and a bottle of whiskey in his hands.

He waved the wine bottle around. “Good night!”

Agatha frowned watching Jack go up the stairs before she turned to Frost. “What the hell happened?”

They both jumped when the door upstairs slammed shut.

Frost sighed, walking over and dropping onto the couch, looking exhausted. “Well, he killed someone at Big Mama’s.”

Agatha blinked. “What?”

Frost shook his head and waved a hand at her. “This group of guys from Metropolis came over looking to start a fight. A group of drunk idiots. They noticed his hair, the way he looked, said something to Jack about trying to look like the Joker...apparently getting into a fight in Gotham was on the bucket list for one of them.” Frost sighed. “Jack pretty much ignored them until the one with the bucket list made some crack about Jack’s girlfriend...and that was it. Jack smashed the man’s head in.” Frost closed his eyes. “In front of the entire club.”

Agatha sighed, rubbing the bridge of her nose. “I’m guessing you got out before the police arrived.”
Frost nodded before he said softly. “Agatha, he’s changed. I mean, I know we’ve seen him change before...become the Joker, take on that persona, but tonight was different. He scared the shit out of me. He really scared me, Agatha. It was creepy as hell, like he was a totally different person. He wasn’t Jack.” Agatha opened her mouth to reply, but Frost held up a hand to forestall her comments until he had this all out. “I know we’ve seen him kill people before and I know Jack has always been a little unstable, but tonight...it wasn’t Jack at all. It was the Joker, completely the Joker in a way that I can’t describe.” Frost shook his head. “I’ve never really been scared for myself before, but tonight I wouldn’t have been surprised if Jack had attacked one of us. Fuck, I’m not even sure why he didn’t.”

Agatha glanced up the stairs then back at Frost. “I’m going to go talk to him.”

Frost sat up straighter, his worry clear in his features and tone. “I don’t think that’s a good idea. I mean, he was fine--relatively speaking--on the way home, especially after I stopped to get him a bottle of rum to drink on the way back, but the way he changed...I just--I don’t know. Maybe you should let him be for now.”

Agatha frowned, folding her arms around herself and rubbing her elbows. “He is going to self-destruct Jonny. I just can't stand here and let it happen. I need to do something, talk to him.”

Frost dropped back against the couch again. “I don’t see what we can do. Unless we can get Harley...He is going to kill himself and take all of us with him.”

She started for the stairs.

Frost stood up, moved over to take her hand. “Agatha.”

She smiled. “I’ll be fine.”

“What if he...” Frost began, but Agatha patted his arm. “I’m a trained killer Frost. Don’t forget that. I might be retired, but the Owls trained me well. I can handle myself. Besides, Jackie won’t hurt me.”

Frost didn’t look sure, but he nodded.

*

Agatha knocked on the door lightly and waited a few heartbeats before she pushed the door open.

Jack was sitting on the middle of the bed wearing only his boxers, his clothing littered across the floor. He hadn’t bothered to wipe the blood from his face, leaving the drying mess on his lips and smeared across his chin and cheeks. He had the bottles he had pilfered from the kitchen lying on the bed with him, one open and resting between his legs, a cigarette burning between his fingers. He glanced over at her, picked the bottle up and took a long drink from it. Agatha watched him with a frown, her arms crossed over her chest.

“Hey Auntie, wanna drink?” Jack grinned and waved the bottle at her.

Agatha’s frown deepened as she walked over to sit on the side of the bed. “Jackie, you have got to stop this. You’re killing yourself. You’re not eating enough, you’re drinking too much, and killing that man tonight...” She shook her head.

Jack took a drag on his cigarette and smiled. “So, I’ve killed lots of people. Who cares? And why should I not kill myself? Why? Why should I stop??” He took another drag and grinned wide, smoke flowing between his teeth. “Besides, I didn’t kill anyone important, like Falcone, the mayor...Bruce Wayne.” He chuckled at his Aunt’s shocked expression before he answered. “Besides, that man tonight deserved it. You should have heard what he said about Harley.” Jack’s eyes looked haunted.
“Harley...” He swallowed, took a quick drink, his chin trembling as he stared down at the bottle between his legs, and the jovial manner of his speech changed immediately. He wasn’t speaking to his aunt so much now as he was speaking to himself. “I can’t do this alone. I need her. You don’t understand...every moment without her is torture...”

She reached out to lay her hand on her nephew’s knee. “Jackie...”

Jack smiled and took another deep drag from his cigarette. He held it, letting the smoke burn before he let it out slowly, flowing from between his lips. “I feel like I’m buried alive...suffocating slowly without her Auntie...I can’t...I just can’t breathe.” He closed his eyes. “I can’t focus, or make sense...there is this fog that’s slowly engulfing me. I love her so much. I need her.” Agatha watched as tears slowly flowed out from under his lashes and slid down his cheeks, cutting a line through the dried blood.

“Jackie, please...You need to stop this self-destructive behavior,” Agatha said softly, but Jack rolled away from her throwing his legs off the other side of the bed and stood, taking the bottle with him.

He laughed. “Why?! Why should I?!!! She’s beyond my reach Auntie.” Jack turned toward her, squeezed his eyes shut as his entire body trembled. “She’s where I can’t get to her!!! Every plan has fallen apart!! We can’t get to her!! I CAN’T GET TO MY HARLEY!!!” His eyes flew open, the crazed, manic gleam creeping slowly into them like a film flowing over the bright blue. He glared at his aunt. “Don’t you understand?? And you want me to be a good boy?? To calm down? To not ‘self-destruct’? That’s what’ve I’ve always been doing, self-destructing, dying inch by inch–until she came into my life Auntie. She’s my everything...everything...” His voice broke, a sob turning into a scream. “I CAN’T!!! I CAN’T!!! I CAN’T BE WITHOUT HER!!” He dropped his cigarette and threw the bottle across the room where it smashed, staining the wall red with wine. Agatha jumped though she tried to control the reaction while Jack continued to scream. “DON’T YOU UNDERSTAND!! I love her!!! She’s my soul...without her nothing means anything...”

Agatha stood quickly and took a couple of steps back.

Jack screamed until his lungs had to hurt. He knocked a few things that were somehow still miraculously on the dresser to the floor, brushing his arm across it in a vicious sweep, then slammed his fists against the wall, holding his fists so tightly that his nails cut into his palm causing the already pale knuckles to turn corpse white, but he felt nothing. He slammed his fists continuously into the wall. He only felt a wide chasm of nothingness, cold emptiness along with clawing and consuming rage...and laughter. It was so funny, a fucking joke he kept falling for. He couldn’t protect her, they kept taking her...Batman kept taking her, his brother...Bruce kept taking her from him...Bruce wanted to destroy him, had always wanted to destroy him, to take anything that meant anything to him away...Bruce, the Batman wanted to tear him down, to tear Harley away from him, the only person in the world that loved him for who he was. And Bruce wanted to take that away. This time he had succeeded. The Batman had stepped in and took her away from him.

Jack screamed until he was hoarse, beating his fists against the wall, his body shaking.

Agatha watched helplessly. She wanted to take him into her arms and hold him, but she couldn’t, not yet. So she watched as Jack let all his pain and rage out before he dropped to his knees and grabbed his head, his green hair sticking up around his fingers as he held his head like it might fly apart. He screamed again and choked, leaning forward until his head touched the floor. He squeezed his head as if trying to crush the thoughts that wouldn't leave him alone. Tears streamed from his eyes, dropping onto the floor. He rocked slightly continuing to press his head against the floor while muttering to himself.

“I need her, I need her...I love her...I love her so much...” Jack took a shuddering breath. “So much Agatha came around slowly. She eased herself down onto the floor next to him and very slowly, very gently pulled his head onto her lap. Jack wrapped his arms tight around her waist. He grabbed hold of the hem of her shirt in his hands, holding on as if he were afraid if he let go he would fall forever.

He whispered painfully, choking out the words. “What if I’ve lost her forever Auntie? What if I can never get her back? What if I’ve led her into a place I’ll never get her out of?” He choked. “What if she never forgives me for not getting her back? Auntie...I would give it all...all to have her back...my life, anything for her...”

Agatha rubbed her hand down his back while Jack’s breath stuttered. His sobs had reached a point where he could barely breathe, he was holding himself so tightly. She didn’t know what to say because she wasn’t so sure they were going to get Harley out either, but she didn’t want to voice her fears because she knew Jack couldn’t handle them. She closed her eyes, continuing to rub his back slowly, her own fear and despair at the state of her nephew falling down around her like a black cloud.

After a few minutes Jack grew quiet, his grip on her eased just a little and his breathing regulated into something more normal. Agatha continued to stroke his back gently.

“Jackie, let’s get you into bed. Things will look better in the morning,” she said softly, trying to coax him up.

Jack whispered back, his voice strangely flat after the outburst of emotion just moments before. “If I don’t get her back, you should leave the city.”

Agatha frowned, her hand on his back going still. “What are you talking about Jackie?”

“You won’t want to be here, in Gotham,” Jack said softly. “If I don’t get my Harley back, you are not going to want to be here.”

Agatha bit her bottom lip looking down at his still form while Jack whispered. “I’ll burn it all to the ground. I’ll make Gotham feel my pain.”

*

The following night, across the city, Batman, along with Robin and Barb, were looking over the story of the attack at a small club in Gotham. Batman had learned that the bar had once been owned by a woman named Fish Mooney who had connections with the Falcone family through the now in-shambles Panessa family and Sal Maroni. The bar fight had turned into a murder, but the reports were inconsistent. The owner, a transwoman by the name of Big Mama had claimed not to have seen anything. All her employees backed up her statement. Half of the patrons agreed with Big Mama’s statement, but the other half claimed that it was the Joker who had committed the murder.

There was a poorly shot phone video which really would not hold up in a court of law, the quality bad, the lighting in the bar distorting the view, but Batman knew. It was the Joker. He had the video playing right now on the Batcave computer screens, freezing it on an image of Joker.

Robin frowned, staring at it. “Sure looks like him, but...there are a lot of people with green hair nowadays.”

Barb’s fingers flew over the computer before she shrugged. “That’s the best quality I can give you.”
Batman nodded. “It’s fine. I can see it’s him.”

Robin frowned. “Why would he kill some random guy in a bar?”

Batman frowned. “Because he’s unstable, but this is sloppy, foolish even. This killing had no agenda attached to it. These men were from Metropolis, no one of importance in Gotham, just here for a good time…” He rubbed his chin. “This was a spur of the moment, emotional killing.” He turned to Barbara. “His friends, what did they say happened again?”

Barbara looked at the police report and said out loud. “The survivors stated that their friend, Richie Rice, 24, was drunk and wanted to start a bar fight as part of a bucket list before joining the military. Richie approached the suspect and started to make comments about the man, who had green hair, was pale and thin, pretending to be the Joker. He then used homophobic language and made some remarks about the man’s girlfriend being a hooker.” Barbara looked up to see Batman sigh.

“It has to be him. He’s been lying low since Harley Quinn was arrested, which surprises me. As much as he lo--” Batman stopped himself from saying love. Instead he said, “As much as he is obsessed by her, I’m surprised he hasn’t stormed Blackgate Prison. This may be a sign of worse of come. If he is becoming even more unstable, we may stand a chance of catching him.” Batman rubbed his thumb along his bottom lip in thought.

*

It had been well over a week since the incident at the club. Batman stayed on alert waiting for another incident, another moment of Joker losing control, a chance to take him down, but no signs were available yet. Batman was hoping to have Joker behind bars at Blackgate, maybe Arkham at least before Harley Quinn was to be moved, but Joker never appeared again in the days following the murder of Richie Rice.

Instead, Jack had taken to practically barricading himself in his lab all day and all night. He only emerged when he needed something, when he needed Frost to fetch him some chemical or weapon.

Agatha wasn’t sure if Jack’s one-minded focus on his lab was any better than his break down. He still continued to eat and drink very little, just enough to keep himself going and usually only if she stayed to watch him eat and drink. The moment she left, he would throw himself back into his work. Worse, Jack slept even less than he ate or drank. He had lost a disturbing amount of weight and his eyes had taken on a feverish focus. He had decorated the lab with images of Harley, creating a strange sort of shrine to his lost love. Agatha tried to see this as an improvement over the endless violence and drinking from the weeks before, that he had found a way to put his crippling rage and despair into preparing for something, but she also knew he was preparing for a war--a war on Batman, a war on Gotham.

Jack’s focus was on revenge now. If he could find no way to get his girl back, then he was going to torture Batman and Gotham, he was going to burn it all to the ground. He would decorate Gotham in ribbons of blood, the streets would run red because none of it mattered to him, none of it. It could all burn to ashes because nothing had any meaning...not without Harley. They would feel, they would understand exactly how he felt...Batman would know exactly how it felt to lose someone precious. While Jack focused his energy on making bombs, gas grenades and anything else he could think of, he also thought about what he was going to do to Batman, to Bruce. He was going to hurt someone special to Bruce...take them away from him just like he had taken Harley...

*

Agatha was in the kitchen making a couple of cucumber sandwiches in the hopes of getting Jack to
She frowned in surprise, her body tensing as she went on full alert, only to relax in the next moment. It had to be one of the gang—there was no one else who would even come onto the property, unless it was a few stupid teens and they wouldn’t bother knocking. Frost was hanging out with Jack at his lab, mostly there to keep an eye on Jack. There was no one else on the park grounds but the three of them at the moment. She sighed and went to the door, but not before she grabbed a steak knife out of the drawer, hiding it behind her back as she went to answer the door.

She pulled it open and lifted a brow in surprise when she saw Alex standing there.

He was dressed in his ripped up jeans, a t-shirt with BTW in big green letters with (Bring the Weed) in smaller letters underneath and a Hawaiian shirt with loud colored parrots across it. As soon as Agatha opened the door, Alex nearly shouted. “Where’s Jack?”

Agatha frowned. “In his lab, why? What’s wrong?”

Alex grinned. “I might have some good news about Harley. My contact on the inside got a hold of me. They are planning on moving Harley to Arkham early. They are moving fast to transfer her to Arkham, so it’s going to be tomorrow.”

Agatha dropped her arm holding the knife to her side. “What?”

Alex frowned at the sight of the knife, but he kept going. “Yes. they are moving her at night hoping to get her to Arkham without a media circus and to keep anyone—like Falcone for example—from knowing. This might just be our chance to get her, our only chance.”

Agatha smiled and tossed her knife aside. “Come on.”

Frost was leaning against the wall, his eyes partly closed as the music drummed loudly from Jack’s lab. The sounds of Sympathy for the Devil was playing loudly with Jack singing along with Mick Jagger while he worked inside.

Frost barely heard the sounds of footsteps running toward him over the sounds of the music. He opened his eyes to see Agatha and Alex coming down the tunnel toward him.

Frost stood up straight. “What’s wrong?”

Alex took a breath. “I think we might have a chance to get Harley!”

Frost frowned narrowing his eyes. Alex started to move past him, but Frost stopped him with a hand on his chest. “Wait a minute…” He glanced at Agatha, then back to Alex. “Is this a real chance? Not a maybe? I don’t want you telling him anything that…”

Alex swatted his hand away. “No man, it’s real. And if we are going to take advantage of it we need to move quickly. They’re moving her to Arkham under cover of dark tomorrow night!”

Frost looked to Agatha who nodded. “He’s serious,” she added.

Frost didn’t look convinced or happy, but he nodded and let Alex hurry by him. He looked to Agatha. “Are you sure about this?”

She nodded. “If they are moving Harley and trying to do it secretly, this will be the best chance we are going to have to get her back. We have to try.”
Frost nodded turning to look into the lab.

*

Jack, wearing nothing but a pair of dark purple slacks and some green suspenders, shirtless, his feet bare, was grinning while he worked. The liquid that was boiling in a beaker was a bright neon green; the one next to it, also boiling, was a strange milky white. He chuckled bouncing his head to the new song that was playing as he wrote something down on the paper in front of him, which already had a series of calculations and graphs on it.

Alex hadn’t seen Jack in a few days and frowned in surprise. Jack’s usually perfectly groomed hair was loose, falling around his face, some of it tucked behind his ears. He could see how thin his friend had become, his eyes looking slightly sunken in his deathly white skin, his cheekbones standing out, the shadows making his cheeks look hollow. The slacks he wore hung on him, a little too big on him and his ribs were beginning to show. It pained Alex to see Jack this way.

He stepped closer, being careful as he said his name. “Jack?”

Jack frowned turning in surprise, but followed by a wide smile. “Alex, what are you doing here?”

Alex smiled. “I got news buddy, good fucking news.”

Jack narrowed his eyes. “News?”

Alex nodded. “I think we have a way to get Harley, tomorrow night.”

Jack stared at him, his eyes widening. “Are you serious?”

Alex nodded. “Yes, we are going to have to move fast, but yes.”

Jack reached out for his friend, wrapping his long fingers around Alex’s shoulders. The strength in Jack’s grip hadn’t diminished as he squeezed hard. Alex winced (in no small part from the constant pain in his right shoulder) he could feel a slight tremor in Jack’s grip.

Jack stared at him for a long time, his blue eyes looked frantic, circled with shadows, searching Alex’s face before he started to laugh. Jack’s laugh gained volume becoming louder than the music as he reached up and grabbed the side of his head with one hand, holding onto Alex with the other as his laugh echoed through the lab and tunnel.
Detours

Alex, Frost, Agatha and Jack all sat at the kitchen table back in the main house, a pot of coffee between them, and each of them holding a mug filled to the brim with the rich dark liquid. Jack sat with his arms through a rumpled, dark mustard dress shirt that hung on his thin frame, the buttons only haphazardly fastened. He nursed his coffee, both his hands wrapped around the mug as if trying to ground himself in reality. He only occasionally took a sip of the dark liquid, more an automated response to the mug in his hand than any desire to drink the coffee. Otherwise Jack seemed strangely out of focus. His blue eyes looked dull, he never looked any of the other people gathered here in the eye, his focus somewhere else entirely even when he spoke to them. Agatha frowned watching Jack. Her heart sank a little lower every day, worried that she would never have anyone resembling her nephew back. The longer he was without Harley, the less of Jack there was with them. She pulled on her bottom lip with her teeth, feeling completely helpless.

Since Alex had told him about the plan to transfer Harley to Arkham, Jack had been quiet after his initial reaction, shutting down like a wind-up toy with stripped gears. Alex wasn’t sure what the silence meant—if Jack was thinking of a plan, or if he was too far gone to really compute what moving Harley meant. Either way Alex went ahead and gave their small group the details as he had received them, and although they were not as much as he would like, after weeks of little to nothing, this information was a bounty.

Alex looked around the table, his one hand wrapped around his cup of coffee before he continued. “My source says that they are going to use a fucking armored truck to move her! Which tells me they are a little scared, and not just of us either.”

Agatha snorted. “They should be. Falcone wants her dead, or at least in his hands. I wouldn’t put it past him to try to take Harley. And if Falcone wants her, he is going to bulldoze through the GCPD.” Agatha looked thoughtful for a moment before she added. “She would be a valuable hostage and not just to use against us, to use against Joker’s gang. I think she would be valuable to Batman as well.”

She glanced at Jack as she spoke, but he didn’t react. He was staring into coffee cup, his gaze as unfocused now as it had been for a while now—even with the mention of Batman. Here was a chance to get Harley back and he only seemed to be half-listening to the information that Alex was giving them. Agatha’s frown deepened as she sipped her coffee.

Alex continued. “They’re not just using an armored truck, they are going to have a fucking police escort consisting of at least four cars. My source wasn’t real sure, but two in the front and two in the back is pretty standard, and the more fucking cars they use, the more fucking attention they are going to draw to themselves, though there is a rumor that the fucking Batman will be tailing behind the entire thing.” Alex took a sip of his coffee. “Guess the police are in bed with the Bat now.”

Frost shook his head and muttered, “Batman?”

Alex glanced at Jack, who still wasn’t reacting, before he continued. “Yeah, not sure if he is coming the fuck along on their request or he is just fucking bullying in on the transfer, but that’s what my source says he heard.” Alex shrugged. “Though I’m gonna say it’s a fact. I can see that fucking Bat wanting to make sure Harley gets to Arkham.” Alex made a face. “They are moving her in the middle of the night, or really early morning; I’m guessing in hopes of avoiding the press and a possible attack from Falcone and probably from the Joker. I think one of the doctors from Blackgate is coming with her in the back, and some guards. I’m not sure what we can do to get her, but…”

Alex trailed off looking around at everyone, waiting for ideas.
Jack stared at the table surface though it was clear to anyone watching him that he wasn’t actually focused on the table. His blue eyes had a far away look, his gaze vacant. It seemed to the three of them that Jack was working on a plan.

Agatha glanced from Jack to Alex. “We are going to need at least a couple of cars…”

Jack spoke up. “No, we are going to need our own armored truck and a semi.”

Frost frowned, sharing a look with Alex and Agatha. “A semi?”

Jack looked up, a smile spreading across his pale face, his attention turning to Alex. “How fast can you get me a rocket launcher?”

Alex frowned in thought. “I’ll get a hold of Anderson, but I think I can get you a fucking rocket launcher by tomorrow night, maybe sooner.”

Jack grinned. “Good. This is going to take the entire gang and I want the Irish with us too. We are going to need to make the cops follow our route.” Jack looked up, his blue eyes meeting each one of them. “We have to make sure they follow our route…” He repeated. “Which means we have to direct the GCPD until we get them into the place where we are going to take the truck. Kill every single one of them and bring Harley home.” His voice was quiet, but all of them could feel a sort of vibration emanating from Jack, as if his body was being held tight, ready to spring forth into violent action at any moment. Agatha glanced at Frost, then Alex--they all felt it and it was unsettling.

Jack continued, his voice softer. “We are going to bring my Harley girl home.”

A smile spread further across his face as a violent, manic twinkle appeared in his eyes. He whispered. “Oh, this is going to be so much fun!” He laughed out, but in the next moment he dropped his voice, it was filled with so much emotion that hearing him speak was almost too much for any of them sharing the table with him, the emotion was too raw. “Then Harley will be back in my arms...my girl will be home and all will be right with the world again.”

*

Across Gotham, that same evening, secure in his apartment, Falcone sat with his family eating dinner. He had a chef brought in special tonight to make Caponata, just like his grandmother in Sicily used to make. He had even opened one of his prize Antinori Marchese Antinori Chianti Classico Riserva to share with his daughter and youngest son.

Across from Falcone, his daughter Sophia sat, dressed in a dark evergreen stereo flower, sleeveless, tulle evening dress, her hair done up in a soft, but elegant bun. She looked ready for a night out in one of Gotham’s best restaurants followed by a play or the opera instead of having dinner with her father. Next to her was Falcone’s youngest son, her little brother, Alberto, wearing a pair of black skinny jeans with suspenders and a short sleeve dress shirt, buttoned up to the collar with a bow tie in place of a regular tie. Their father had glared at his outfit, but had said nothing about his son’s attire; had not said anything to his son at all, in fact. Sophia had thought her brother looked adorable. He looked innocent, free of Gotham’s claws instead of dragged into the muck like the rest of them.

Carmine had insisted on a formal dinner tonight. He had the best silver was out, the table set as if they were planning to have a large party, table cloth, center piece; the whole nine yards. Their father had even gone so far as to have a violinist, who was currently playing some Vivaldi, stand in a corner of the dining room and play while they ate. Sophia thought the entire enterprise was just her father flexing his muscle for no other reason than for show that he was still in control. She wasn’t sure who the show was for exactly, though knowing how things worked in Gotham, word of Falcone’s dinner would make the circuit of the families and everyone would know that Falcone was unfazed by the attempt on his life, the murder of his girlfriend and ex-wife. Falcone had it all under control.

Sophia sighed and glanced up from her plate to look at her father. He still looked pale and he had lost some weight recently, a lot of weight. Someone else might not see the shadows under his eyes or the way he had aged around his mouth and the corners of his eyes. The Joker had taken something from her father and she didn’t think it was something he was going to get back, no matter how many people he killed, no matter who he destroyed. That core of strength that her father had always possessed had been shattered.

Her attention moved from her father to Alberto who looked sullen as he moved his fork around his plate. Alberto had done his best to separate himself from this life, from the family, from all of Gotham and its stink, even moving away from Gotham. But father had insisted he return after Mario died. Sophia wasn’t sure why, but she had a feeling Alberto wasn’t going to like it; she didn’t think she would like it either. She hoped her father wasn’t foolish enough, or stuck in tradition so much, that he would try to make Alberto the head of the family. She narrowed her eyes in thought. She would fight him if he tried. It wasn’t just that Alberto was not suited to the job, oh no. Sophia had earned it. She had worked her ass off to show her father that she deserved the position of heir even over Mario, but because she was a daughter, her father hadn’t given her any consideration, until now. Except she didn’t trust him to make the right decision. He was still ruled by his old prejudices, his old misogynous way of looking at the world. She didn’t think her father was that foolish, but now that she really examined the idea, she began to get this sinking feeling in her stomach that maybe, she might be wrong about her father.

She knew a lot of the families wouldn’t except her as the head of the Falcone family. A woman could not be the head of a family, especially not THE family of Gotham. It didn’t matter that the Russians, that the Odessa family was led by a woman, the Falcone family was different. She glared at her father from under her lashes. If he passed her over in favor of Alberto, she was going to make him pay. If Carmine Falcone thought the Joker was bad, he hadn’t seen bad, not yet.

She schooled her features despite her growing irritation, her own dark thoughts distracting her while she took a bite of her steak, chewing thoughtfully when they all heard the knock at the door.

Carmine glared at the two men standing on either side of the door. There were two more guards on the other side, along with guards scattered throughout the building, guarding entrances into the building, windows, stairways, elevators. In a lot of ways, Sophia thought, this place had more guards than Blackgate. Her own personal bodyguards were outside, her father having refused to let them stand in the dining room. She picked up her wine taking a sip. She knew why he had been so insistent on them standing outside--again, it was a show of power, of disrespect to her. She was the daughter--just the daughter--and he was the father, he was letting her know that she had a “place” in the scheme of things.

Sophia watched as her father glared at the guards, but completely unaware of her own glare, the slowly developing hate in her gaze.

“I thought I said that I was not to be disturbed?” Falcone set his silverware down with a narrowed gaze.

The two guards exchanged a look before one of them, a tall blond that Sophia knew was named Reno swallowed nervously. “I’ll check sir.”

He turned and opened the door to slip outside to leave his fellow bodyguard alone in the dining room under the intense glare of Carmine “The Roman” Falcone. After a couple of minutes, Reno stepped back in.

“Sir, there is a man out here calling himself Tallyman who wants to speak with you. He says he has information about Harley Quinn.” Reno looked nervous as he delivered his information.

Falcone’s eyes lit up and his tone changed. “Send him in.”

Sophia sighed taking another sip of her wine. She had thought going after Harley Quinn was a bad idea. She knew her father was all about revenge, but she just didn’t think killing off the Joker’s lover was the correct course of action. Killing the woman in Blackgate would immediately throw suspicion on the family. Who else could have gotten to her in prison and who else would want her dead? Her father. That was trouble they simply didn’t need. She had felt it was best to let the little blonde get her ass locked up on Arkham, of which she had no doubt would be the outcome of all this, but Daddy had insisted on revenge, on sending a message to the Joker. Of course that had ended with the assassin dead by Harley Quinn’s hand. A complete waste of time and money as far as Sophia was concerned.

A few seconds later Tallyman entered. The man was dressed in a entirely in white, which looked quite handsome against his dark skin she thought as Tallyman stepped over and stopped at the corner of the table next to her. He glanced down at her and inclined his head toward her. She smiled at him with a small nod of her head as well. Sophia smiled taking a sip of her wine watching this man who called himself Tallyman. He was very interesting, and not just physically. She glanced sideways at her father and settled back in her seat to listen.

Alberto ignored everyone slouching in his chair drinking more of his dinner than actually eating it.

Falcone examined Tallyman quietly before he motioned at the man with his glass of wine. “So, what is so important that you had to disturb my dinner with my children?”

Tallyman smiled. “My source inside Blackgate just informed me that Harley Quinn is going to be moved, under cover of night, to Arkham, tomorrow.”

Falcone went still. “What?”

“After her killing of your assassin she has also been causing trouble for some of the doctors, the guards. She has made herself enough of a nuisance that the warden wants her out of the prison. So they are moving her, tomorrow.” Tallyman smiled. “I thought you might like to know that, sir.”

Falcone grinned rolling his glass between his hands. “Is that so?”

Tallyman nodded.

Falcone grinned. “I think we need to arrange a pit stop for Miss Quinn.” He smiled at Tallyman. “We are going to arrange a roadblock.”

Tallyman smiled. “Good idea sir.”

*

The streets of Gotham were quiet as the caravan entered the city limits. This late, the traffic in Gotham was usually still light, but here the streets were unnervingly quiet as the main lanes of traffic through this particular section of the city were blocked off and redirected along other routes. A few ‘detour’ signs and indications that road work was being performed cleared traffic better and quieter than a massive police escort. The evening air was chilly and no sooner had the vehicles left the prison than a light drizzle had begun to fall. The two police officers in the first vehicle of the transport group frowned into the darkness as they kept the caravan moving at a steady forty miles an hour as they cruised into the city limits.

Chloe Decker, a well-built blonde with a buzz cut, was sitting in the passenger seat next to her partner, James Barnes who looked like he should be a librarian more than a cop with his slicked back brown hair, doe brown eyes and a smattering of freckles over his nose. Chloe glanced at James, than back out the window, a slight glower on her face. James gave her a sideways glance before he asked. “All right, what’s got you making that face? And I know it can’t just be because you quit smoking.”

Chloe frowned at him crossing her arms over her chest. “Just all this...this special treatment that we are giving that bitch just to move her to the nut house. Who cares if Falcone offs her, it ain't like she is some special witness or anything even remotely important. I say let him take a crack at her.”

James chuckled. “She’s the Joker’s girlfriend, that makes her important. She is a link between us and stopping that clown.”

Chloe snorted. “So, he’s a whackadoo who is taking out mob types. I mean who cares? Let them kill each other I say, makes our job easier. Besides, I’m sure Batman will have him tied up and on our doorstep in no time, and if not him, Falcone will take him down. Better the criminals you know than the crazy clowns you don’t.”

James sighed. “Chloe, we are police officers, our job…”

Chloe snorted again. “Yeah, yeah I know…”

James frowned. “Huh?”

Chloe, who's attention had been on him and not in front of her frowned. “What’s…” She turned to look out the window where James had been staring to see a road block ahead of them.

Chloe frowned in confusion too. “I thought…”

James muttered and shrugged. “Me too. Maybe it was a last minute change...you know, in case any of us gave out the information they decided to switch it up at the last minute. I just thought we were going to stay on the single lanes, not any of the double lanes. This route is going to force us closer to Robinson Park rather that around it. I thought they couldn’t block off the streets by the park...but what do I know?”

“I guess.” Chloe said then yawned. Briefly, she wondered if she should call it in, but then dismissed that idea—if they were to keep their potential trouble to a minimum, then giving out information over the radio would be counterproductive. With a small mental shrug, she completely dismissed James’ worry. “I hate night shift.”

James smiled. “How are your boys?”

Chloe giggled. “All of them are fine. Roger got that promotion.”

James shook his head. “I bet he wouldn’t like being grouped with your sons as one of your boys.”

Chloe smiled. “He loves it.”

*

In the last police car of the caravan, Johnny Kitch frowned, following the car ahead of them, turning to the right.
“Weren’t we supposed to go straight ahead?” Johnny asked looking at this partner Willy Ferrazo and glancing at the roadblock sign and fence.

Willy shrugged. “Last minute change to the route maybe?”

Johnny chewed on his bottom lip. “I don’t like it.” He glanced at his rearview where he could see the Batmobile following behind them. Johnny’s frown deepened as a light fog began to roll in with the rain. He sucked on his lip glaring at the car.

Willy turned to look out the rear window. “Still think it’s weird they let the Bat follow.”

Johnny nodded. “Yeah—he gives me the creeps.”

Willy turned back around with a shrug. “He’s fine. I mean yeah he’s a criminal, technically, but he helps us out.”

Johnny shrugged. “I suppose. The commish likes him well enough. I heard he was going to put some sort of signaling device on the roof of the precinct.”

Willy frowned. “They gonna let him do that?”

Johnny shrugged again. “I guess, I don’t know.”

Willy sighed. “Gotham is getting weird man.”

Johnny laughed. “Getting weird?”

* Batman was keeping his distance, close enough that the police could see he was following, but not so close that any of them would get upset. It was frustrating that he did not have a better working relation with law enforcement. He was on high alert, ready for anything (he hoped) because he was certain something was going to happen.

Robin sat next to the caped crusader, quietly watching the police car in front of them when he glanced sideways before he said softly. “I heard she got attacked in Blackgate.”

Batman grunted in response.

Robin frowned feeling the need to explain where he had gotten his information. “I read up on the stuff that happened at Arkham, I mean before she and your brother became criminals.”

Batman turned to look at him with a deeper frown. “How did you get…” This was followed by a sigh. “Barbara.” Batman turned his attention back to the road, the annoyance clear in the set of his jaw and the thin line his lips became.

Robin nodded. “Yeah. Just...I don’t know...you put him in Arkham over something kind of minor and then she…”

Batman cut him off. “It wasn’t minor and Jack had been heading that way for a long time. What Dr. Quinzel did after my brother was committed was her own doing…”

Robin murmured quietly. “It just seems like all of this could have…”

Batman held up a finger to stop the young man. Robin’s jaw snapped shut, his eyes glued to Batman. Batman had his eyes on the car ahead of him, focused on the turn signal followed by the police.
cruiser turning.

Batman said softly, more as if he were speaking out loud to himself than talking to Robin. “The route just changed,” he said softly. “We were suppose to continue straight, head through Old Gotham but we just turned and are now heading closer to the Fashion District which will bring us closer to the park…” He was speaking out loud trying to figure out why there had been a change in the route and with no communication from above, Batman’s suspicions were nearly in overdrive. Robin didn’t reply, instead staying quiet and letting Batman work out the problem.

Batman frowned, his eyes narrowing behind the mask. “Something is wrong…”

He looked over at Robin. “Be prepared, I think we are going to have a problem.”

Robin nodded, shelving his discussion about Joker and Harley for another time.

*

James frowned in confusion. Up ahead he could see what looked like a dumpster fire. Someone had moved a dumpster out into the middle of the street, the insides burning a bright, cheerful yellow and orange in the damp Gotham night. He sucked on his bottom lip. Dumpster fires in Gotham weren’t that unusual, they got a call on one or two a night, usually redirected the callers to the fire department, unless the caller reported anyone in the vicinity. The fires were usually caused by some bored teenagers, sometimes a rival gang would start one in a neighborhood that didn’t belong to them, or sometimes someone was trying to hide a body. Every once in a while a homeless person would hide inside a dumpster to keep warm during the winter and do something stupid like start a fire, which they could swiftly lose control of. He had seen more homeless burned up in fires they had started than he cared to remember. James recalled that he had even seen dumpsters pushed out into the middle of the street when they were burning to fuck up traffic. Shoving burning dumpsters into the streets usually occurred during riots (such as when the Gotham Knights lost that big game last year, or when the trash collectors went on strike a couple of years ago), but tonight, a lone dumpster burning along the path they were taking to transfer a dangerous prisoner to Arkham was just too much of a coincidence for him not to think that something was up.

“Chloe, can you put a call in to headquarters and ask about the change in the route for me?” James glanced at his partner who was staring at the burning dumpster with a frown on her face. The turn they had taken to avoid it had forced the caravan to make another, bringing them even closer to Robinson Park.

“Sure thing.” Chloe reached out for the radio, picking up the handset and pushing down the button just as a dump truck pulled out in front of them. The truck didn’t stop, but was going at a fairly fast clip down the street. James immediately noted that there was no plate on the six wheel dump truck, nothing unusual about it except that it was on a street where it shouldn’t have been. There was no nearby road construction, no reason for such a truck to be out here at this time of night, especially on this route.

Chloe jumped in surprise when the truck rolled in front of them. “What the fuck?”

James hissed. “I have a bad feeling about this.”

He turned to look over his shoulder at the police car that was following them, then back ahead. “We are going to be hitting regular traffic soon…” James muttered.

Chloe looked confused. “But I thought the route was blocked off?”
James glanced in her direction. “It was, but I think we’ve just been fucked with…”

*

Agatha grinned as she spun the wheel, driving the Gotham City dump truck like it was a slick sports car. Bea was riding beside her, a strange little device that resembled a walkie talkie in her hand with a long, thick antenna sticking out the top. She had just put in the combination on the front buttons that Trope had made her memorize, followed by a series of dim blue lights rippling across the black surface of the device.

“Okay, their radios and cell phones should be jammed.” Bea held up the device. “At least for the next few minutes.”

Agatha grinned. “All right, let’s give our boys in blue a bit of a bumpy ride shall we?”

Bea laughed and reached forward to hit the button that made the dump chassis rise and dump its contents—a full load of big rock gravel—onto the street.

*

James was driving close behind the truck while Chloe cursed. “I can’t get through!” she snarled. “That damn radio isn’t working!”

James opened his mouth to make a remark at the very moment that the dump truck’s chassis began to rise.

“What the hell?” James eyes widened in surprise as the chassis rose, the back beginning to open. He hit the brake, tires screeching on the pavement only to have the police cruiser behind them slam into their rear end just as the gravel came flying out of the back of the truck. He tried to swerve around the oncoming gravel, but there was too much of it coming too quickly. The wheels of the police car hit the gravel and spun, at the same time the bouncing gravel slammed into the windshield causing the glass to spiderweb. The car spun even as James struggled to control it. The car behind them, which held two more officers, Martin Land and Randell Moses, slammed into Chloe’s side of the vehicle, their front already crushed from James slamming into them. The additional crash had Randell’s head bouncing against the glass leaving red smears in his wake. James was thrown into his door hard and looked over only to see that Chloe was out or dead, her face a bloody mess from smashing into the dash. The window of her door was shattered, glass was littering her lap and face like twinkling stars. The police car spun and slammed into the back of the dump truck; James’ head smacked against the steering wheel, then door window, then the back of the seat. The last thing James was aware of was the splitting pain in his head he had before he passed out.

*

Martin Lane was driving the police car behind James Barnes when the dump truck in front of James started to dump gravel. He saw James’ brake lights flare, his rear of the police car slamming into the front of his car. James then gunned the gas, pulled away and spun. Martin was struggling to keep his car out of the way as he watched James try to stop himself from plowing into their car, but Martin hadn’t been able to react in time, plus being pinned between the armored car and James gave him no room to maneuver. He had tried to spin the car out of the way but the front of his police vehicle still slammed into the passenger door of James’ car, giving him a perfectly clear view of Chloe Decker’s head slamming against the glass leaving a splatter of blood against the cracked glass before he lost control. His cruiser spun, fishtailing into several parked cars along the sidewalk. He caught a glimpse of his partner covered in blood before their car slammed into the parked vehicles and flipped, turning to land on its roof, but by then Martin was unaware of anything.
Agatha looked in her side mirror with a grin and a mock wince of pain. “Two down.”

Bea smiled with a chuckle.

Joker, his green hair slicked back except for one stubborn curl that stayed lose along his forehead, was dressed in a traditional black and white tuxedo looking perfectly groomed, even down to his black and white oxfords, purple and black striped socks with a white carnation in his lapel. He turned out onto the road the minute he saw Agatha in the dump truck go barreling by, followed by the caravan. He giggled spinning the wheel of the purple long nose Kenworth easily. He shot out onto the two lane road with a laugh running alongside the police cars following the armored truck.

“Here we go!” he yelled with delight, his grin nearly maniacal.

Frost was beside him holding the promised rocket launcher that Alex had gotten for him only hours ago. Frost sighed, and not for the first time tonight. The rocket launcher was the last thing he thought Joker needed, but who was he to judge the man? And he had to admit—at least silently—the damn thing did look like it might be fun to shoot.

Joker grinned at Frost. “Hold onto your butt!”

He hit the gas and the truck shot out, slamming into the side of the police car that was directly behind the armored truck, sending it careening off the road and onto the sidewalk. The two cops inside, Lisa Murphy and Helen Mock, both long time members of the Gotham police force, screamed in shock as the truck barreled into their side, shoving them out of the way and taking their place in the caravan line.

The police car went head first into a lamp post, the front caving in, the front of the car wrapping itself around the pole in an intimate hug. The two officers were either dead or unconscious, it was hard to tell.

Joker laughed loudly before he suddenly let go of the wheel. “Frost take over!”

“What?” Frost lunged for the wheel at the same time that Joker crawled over him grabbing up the RPG before it fell to the floor of the truck. Joker held up the weapon and leaned out the window, pulling the weapon with him. Frost gasped, seeing Joker practically falling out of the window. Frost leaned over and grabbed the tails of Joker’s coat, pulling back trying to pull the Boss back inside, but when that didn’t seem possible, Frost simply held onto the clown’s coat tails for dear life and prayed the material didn’t rip.

Joker laughed, grinning brightly at the police cars behind him. He gave him a cheerily before he shot the weapon.

“WOOHOO!” Joker yelled with delight.

The police car carrying Johnny and Willy was cutting the distance between them and the truck. Johnny wasn’t sure what they were going to do when they were close enough, but he had his police issued weapon on his lap, and his partner, Willy Ferrazo had his weapon in his hand. Johnny thought that maybe they could shoot the tires out, or get off a lucky shot; firing while driving wasn’t standard procedure or part of their training.
Willy had dropped the radio handset, which wasn’t working anyway, when he saw Lisa and Helen crash into the lamp post only moments ago. Their car zipped past the crashed police car, Willy caught a glimpse of the women inside, neither of whom were moving.

“Shit! You think the girls are…” Willy started turning around to look back at the crashed police car as they zipped by when Johnny hissed. “Oh fuck me!”

Willy turned his attention back to the front to see not only had the semi truck cut in front of them, but his gaze focused on the clown leaning out of the passenger window.

Willy gasped. “Is that…”

Willy’s eyes widened in horror as he realized not only was it the Joker leaning out of the truck window, but that the clown was holding a rocket launcher. Johnny was cursing up as storm as he tried to turn the car out of the way, but he just wasn’t quick enough. Joker, his mad laughter audible over the sound of the car engines, fired the rocket at them. Willy cursed just as the rocket hit the front of their car.

*

Joker let out a triumphant laugh as the rocket slammed into the police car and flipped the entire front of the car up into the air.

He spun around giggling at the same time as he yelled at Frost. “Where are the others rockets!?”

Frost, his face having gone completely pale, pointed to the floor. “Down there Boss!”

Joker chuckled reached down to the floor of the cab to grab another.

*

Batman hissed, gripping the wheel and spinning the car out of the way as the police car was blasted up and rolled out of the way flipping several times before it landed against the side of a building.

Robin cursed. “Oh hell!”

Batman growled with annoyance and said in near disbelief, “He has a rocket launcher.”

*

Two more cars came running out of the darkness to take up positions alongside the armored car. In one car was Jason, driving a grey and red trimmed Dodge Challenger GT while in the vehicle on the right was Alex in a jeep with Bane in the passenger seat next to him.

Jason grinned as he aimed his weapon, an Uzi, and began firing at the driver of the armored car. The bullets were only denting the door and window; the armored car, being bulletproof, wasn't taking much damage.

The driver inside, Toby Mountain, a heavily muscled bald man snarled. “I did not fucking sign up for this!!”

His partner, Leon Rhodes, a black man with close cropped hair, winced when bullets slammed against his side of the truck. He looked out his window to see a one handed man in a jeep driving with his knees while shooting at his door. Next to the one armed man could only be what Leon would describe as a fucking giant! The man was huge, with skin just a little lighter than Leon’s, and as Leon stared at the large man, he would swear that the man’s veins were glowing green under the man’s skin.

“What the fuck?” Leon hissed.

*

Joker grinned, sticking a hand of the truck and waved Batman. “HIYA BATS!!!”

He giggled while he rearmed the RPG again. “Let’s see how good that little toy of yours is…”

He leaned back out the window, smiling at the Batmobile as it approached closer to their rear. He wrinkled his nose with a whispered. “Here’s a great big hug big brother.”

Joker aimed and fired the rocket at the Batmobile.

*

Robin gasped. “Oh shit!!! He is going to hit us!”

Batman snarled. “Not if I can help it.”

Batman tightened his grip on the wheel, his eyes narrowed in concentration.

Batman swerved just as the rocket hit in the space where the front of the car had been only a moment ago. Chunks of asphalt and pavement flew into the air with the explosion, momentarily cutting off their view of the truck, reducing visibility to smoke and dirt.

Joker, who was still leaning out the window to watch the Batmobile explode, blinked in surprise. He turned back to Frost the look on his face incredulous. “I can’t believe it! I fucking missed!!!”

Frost looked confused. “You missed?”

“He fucking dodged!!! Can you believe that? How do you fucking dodge a rocket?” Joker narrowed his eyes before he asked. “How many more do I have?”

Frost glanced at the floor. He wasn’t sure right now how many of the rocket he had brought with him and he couldn’t see what was down on the floor near Joker’s seat.

He counted in his head trying to remember what he had brought with him. “I think you have two, maybe three more Boss.”

Joker felt around on the floor, his white gloved fingers brushing across one of the rockets. “He can’t dodge them all,” he muttered as he reloaded the weapon before leaning out of the window again.

He narrowed his eyes, smiling and taking aim at the black car behind him. “Let’s see how good you are Brucie.”

*

Inside the Batmobile Batman flipped a cover off the gear stick to expose a small red button. Robin looked over and gasped. “What is…”

Batman hit the button and flares shot out from the front of the Batmobile. The flares were bright red, bursting into a flash of color so bright that Robin had to shield his eyes.

*
Joker yelped in surprise as his view was filled with red. He squeezed his eyes shut seeing bright spots against his lids, suddenly blinded by the bright light and ducking back inside as the flares zinged off the sides of the truck. The sudden sound of the flares coursing along the truck’s sides, along with the burst of light had Frost wrenching the truck to the side for a moment before he brought the truck back under control.

“He shot flares at me?” Joker looked over at Frost blinking several times as he tried to clear the sudden bright spots from his eyes. “He shot flares at me!”

Frost made a face. “I’m surprised he isn’t shooting at us.”

Joker grinned, his bright red lips emphasizing his perfectly straight white teeth. Joker had drawn the smile past the corners of his lips giving his grin a wider, more menacing appearance. Right now in the light dancing across his too white smile, Frost felt a shiver run down his spine.

Joker laughed. “Remember, the Bat supposedly doesn’t kill! I’m just going to have to see how far I can push him before he breaks his one rule. Oh, won’t that be fun!!”

Joker leaned back out of the window, his eyes narrowed while he continued to talk to Frost. “See, the only problem with the Bat’s one rule is that I don’t have that rule. I do like to kill people!!”

He giggled manically leaning out the window with the reloaded rocket launcher. This time he didn’t bother to aim before he let the rocket fly at the Batmobile.

Even with the flares still making his vision spotty, Joker’s shot raced directly at the Batmobile to strike the front of the car before Batman could swerve again. Robin yelped throwing up his arms even as the rocket burst across the hood, doing little damage, though Batman swerved anyway (he couldn’t be certain how effective the vehicle’s armor was in the field, even with all the testing that he had performed.) The rocket and Batman’s overcompensation forced the vehicle to the side, almost losing control and careening off the road.

*

On the passenger side of the armoured truck, Alex, his one hand spinning the wheel with the expert experience of a man who drove with one arm all the time, muttered while bringing his knees up to hold the wheel as he reloaded his gun and shot at the armored truck. “I can’t fucking believe I’m fucking doing this! I’m going to be a fucking father soon!”

He fired off a couple of more shots, at the same time trying to get the jeep as close to the armored car as possible. He glanced sideways at Bane who was laughing softly.

“You are going to make a great father.” Bane grinned.

Alex sighed. “Well if I don’t fucking die doing this fucking shit.” He glanced at the truck beside them. “I don’t think I can get any closer without wrecking!”

Bane grinned. “It’s close enough.”

The jeep had a canvas top which Bane simply shoved off, his large hands becoming larger by the second as the Titan pumped through his veins. Alex tried not to be distracted as the man grew in size, standing up in the seat of the jeep. With a roar, the large man launched himself at the armored car.

Alex yelped, dropping his gun to the floor and grabbing the jeep’s wheel with his one hand when Bane jumped, shoving the entire jeep to the side. Alex barely pulled the jeep back before it would have crashed into a parked car.
Bane slammed into the side of the armored truck. The truck tilted for a split second, but the driver somehow righted the truck before they spun out of control.

The man in the passenger side of the truck looked out at Bane, his eyes going wide in horror. (The fear gas had started to leak into the front of the truck, slowly making its effect felt by the passenger and driver.) Leon saw a man hit the side of the truck at first, but as he looked out of his window the man twisted and morphed into a gorilla-like monstrosity from his nightmares. Bane grinned back at Leon and grabbed the handle of the door. He pulled his arm back and began to hit the window with his unnaturally large fist. Bane hit the bulletproof glass, one, two, three times. Leon scrambled to Toby’s side of the car. Toby yelled at him, the gas not quite affecting him yet and shoved his partner back to his side of the truck.

“Fuck Leon!! What the…” Toby turned to see the frightening large man slamming his fist into the glass, which was holding, but only barely.

Bane gave up on the glass and with a hiss grabbed a hold of the door’s handle and pulled, only to nearly fall off the truck when the handle completely ripped off—but not the door.

Bane frowned in confusion, staring at the handle in his hand. “Well...shit,” he muttered tossing the handle away. He flexed his fingers before he reached back and touched the pump that sent even more Titan into his bloodstream before he reached up and began to dig his fingers into the small space between the door and the truck.

Inside the armored truck, Crane’s fear gas was seeping into every open space. The guards in the back with him and Harley were screaming, trapped in whatever nightmares Crane had plunged them into, while the rocking and gunfire outside made the guards’ nightmares even more terrifying. One of the guards had already clawed his own eyes out and was lying in a pool of his own blood, twitching as the nightmares continued to plague him despite his eyes being nothing more than ruined balls of jelly on the floor of the truck.

Crane grabbed one of the three remaining guards in the back by his neck. Crane spun around to stand behind the man, at the same time with a flick of his wrist, he produced a thin blade in the palm of his hand. He wrapped his fingers around the fine blade and brought it across the guard’s throat, slicing a deep, clean line along the front of the throat.

Harley watched with a strange fascination when Crane stepped back. For a moment nothing happened; the guard’s throat even looked intact, but in the next instant dark blood poured out and soaked the front of the man’s shirt and vest. The other two guards seemed quite unaware of their counterpart’s death. One was sitting in the corner whimpering while the other was screaming at the wall next to Harley.

Harley was fighting the fear; she felt nauseous and weak. She kept see dark, bat-like shadows that flickered at the corners of her vision making her want to scream behind her mask each time one of the shadowy bats revealed its face to her, showing a mouth full of fangs, but she fought the urge as her will struggled with her fear. She would not give Crane what he wanted, even if it killed her. Her eyes stung with tears that rolled down her cheeks and along the edges of the mask where it pressed hard against her face. Her body was trembling, but she wasn’t going to scream. She wasn’t going to scream. She repeated that over and over again closing her eyes against the nightmares only to see the flicker of shadowy wings against the lids of her eyes.

The sound of bullets hitting the side of the truck sounded like the banging of a great hammer against the side of the truck. The guard that had been staring at the wall shrieked, a high-pitched sound that hurt Harley’s ears and forced her eyes open in time to see Crane puncture the guard’s throat. In the next instant, the truck was hit with something hard. The entire truck felt as if it tilted onto two wheels, threatening to tip over. Crane slammed into the wall along with the remaining guard. Harley, still cuffed to her post, fell to the floor her arms wretched tight, feeling as if they were going to be pulled from the sockets. The pain shot up her arms and cut across her wrists.

Harley’s blue eyes were wild and too wide. She laughed, giggled behind her mask, yanking her cuffs against the pole she was attached to making a loud clanking noise. Jack was here….it had to be him.
Her puddin had come for her!

Crane got back to his feet, and the expression on his face showed a hint of fear for the first time.
When Harley saw the fear in his eyes, she smiled behind her mask. He was scared! Crane was scared!! The master of fear was scared!!

Harley began to giggle like a maniacal animal, her eyes following Crane when he moved past her, weaving and lurching as the truck threatened to topple over again. Crane stopped next to the last guard huddled in a corner. The guard had been sprawled across the floor when the truck lurched, but had quickly scrambled back to the corner, trying to make himself small.

Crane dropped down next to the terrified guard and whispered.

“Here, let me provide you with a way out of your nightmare.”

He took one of the guard’s hands, pulling the fingers free from where the man was pressing them into his upper arms as if he were trying to hold himself together. Crane placed the knife he had just used on the other guards into this one’s hand.

“Now, you can escape,” Crane said with a soft, caring smile.

The guard looked up at him with such gratefulness that Harley wanted to vomit. The guard took the knife and immediately stabbed himself in the eye. He managed to pull the knife out and stab himself in the other eye, but he fell back, his body convulsing with the knife still embedded in his eye.

Crane searched the guard’s body and after a few seconds he stood up and held a set of keys up, jingling them for Harley.

“There now, let us get out of here my dear.” Crane purred.

That was the moment they both heard the sound of metal ripping, followed by something slamming into the back of the truck. Crane was knocked against the wall behind the cab of the truck.

Harley was yanked around, her cuffs cutting into her wrists, though she didn’t stop laughing. Crane pushed himself quickly to his feet and moved over to Harley.

He crouched down next to her, shoving his hand into the pocket of his jacket and pulled out a syringe. He sighed in relief when he saw it was intact.

He smiled at Harley. “Well, seems that some things are working in our favor dear.”

Harley’s eyes widened when she saw the syringe. She started to struggle, but Crane easily jabbed her in the neck. “Don’t worry dear, this isn’t my fear toxin. This is just something to make you more compliant with my wishes.” Crane stroked his fingers over her hair watching her while the drug quickly too effect. Harley went limp, her eyes fluttering. She was clearly having a difficult time focusing. Crane smiled and put the key into her cuffs.

“Now, let’s stop this truck my dear,” Crane purred, lifting her to her feet and putting his arm around her, holding her close.

Robin was breathing heavily. The rocket launcher had done little damage, but the hood was burning.

“What are we going to do?” Robin asked, trying not to yell.

Batman snarled. “We need to take out the tires.”

He leaned forward and touched something on his console before putting his hand back on the wheel. He didn’t look at Robin when he spoke. “Be ready.”

Robin nodded.

Batman hit the gas and the black car leapt forward. When he was close enough, he shot off one of several grappling hooks he had hidden around the large vehicle. He aimed for the wheels; if he could just blow out enough of the wheels to force the truck to a stop. He pushed the button and a large hook with a hard wire shot out from the Batmobile to slam into one of the tires. The tire was instantly punctured.

Batman smiled.

*

Joker looked out the window again and cursed. “SHIT!! He’s gaining! He shot out one of your tires out Frost. Ram it!!”

“Ram it? Ram what?” Frost looked over at Joker. “What?!”

“RAM THE TRUCK!! We have to get it off the road so I can get to Harley!! I can’t do that while that damn truck is still moving!!! RAM IT! THEY CAN’T GET AWAY!!!! I CAN’T LET THEM TAKE HER FROM ME!!” Joker’s voice was hysterical. He beat his fists on the dash willing Frost to move.

Frost slammed his foot down on the gas, twisting the wheel at the last second cutting to the left, clipping into the rear right corner of the armored truck. The force spun the armored truck to the side. Whoever was inside the armored truck was trying to compensate, but the Frost twisted the wheel the other way to smash the front of the semi against the back of the armored truck against the other corner, sending the vehicle spinning.

*

At the front of the armored truck, Bane ripped the door off, tossing it over Alex and the jeep. Alex cursed loudly. “FUCK ME!!” His eyes followed the armored door for a split second before he saw the passenger fly out and slam around the hood of the jeep before the man rolled away into the darkness.

Alex yelled again in surprise. “FUCK ME!! SHIT SHIT!!”

This was followed by the loud crash of metal hitting metal and the armored truck began to spin toward him. Alex frantically spun his wheel away from the truck, thanking whatever god was watching over him that when he was forced up on the sidewalk where there were no cars in his way, but he couldn’t keep control and the jeep clipped a trash can sending the plastic can into the street while Alex spun the wheel of the jeep trying to avoid hitting the steps leading up to a building. Alex overcompensated when he spun the wheel, causing the jeep to turn away hard from the building but in the next second slammed into a bike stand. For a moment, a split second, Alex thought the jeep might tip onto its side or flip over, but instead it bounced on its tires and stopped, a trail of smoke slowly oozing from the hood followed by what sounded like a hissing snake under the hood.

Alex gasped for breath watching while the semi that he knew held Frost and Joker spun the armored truck around, pushing it down the street before slamming into its other side and forcing the vehicle off the road toward the park where the armored truck went over a hill and vanished, while on the other side—barely missing being crushed—Alex saw Jason’s car zip out of the way. Jason turned, the tires of his car squealing loudly on the damp asphalt. In the next second he saw Jason hop out of the car.

At the same time, hot on the heels of the semi, was the Batmobile. Alex stared in wonder and horror as the slick black vehicle sped just past him, a shadow to the semi. Alex pushed his door open, stumbling out and grabbing his weapon. He wasn’t going to let Jack face his brother without backup damn it, he thought rushing across the street following the signs of destruction.

*

Inside the cab of the truck, the driver was screaming bloody murder when he saw Bane (or rather the nightmare that Bane resembled in the driver’s now fear drug addled mind, a great hulking monster with long, deadly claws and a mouth too wide for its face full of razor sharp teeth) crawling through the cab toward him. The man spun the wheel, but was too late, the semi slammed into the back of the truck sending Bane into the windshield with enough force that the bullet proof window spiderwebbed while the driver’s head struck the steering wheel hard enough that he blacked out.

Bane pushed off the windshield, practically into the lap of the driver, unable to get a hold of anything though his current size didn’t really give him much room to be tossed around. Bane gritted his teeth and rode out whatever was happening.

*

Inside the back of the truck, Crane and Harley were tossed around like rag dolls. Harley was only dimly aware that something was happening; the drugs that Crane had pumped into her system not only made her brain fuzzy, but her body felt disconnected from the rest of her. She knew she should be fighting, but it was so difficult to make her body obey her. She could hear Harleen’s voice in her head, screaming at her to move, to stop him, to do something, but she couldn’t obey no matter how much she wanted to. She just couldn’t seem to focus, to find her body or will herself to do anything. She blinked several times, struggling to focus, but her thoughts and will wanted to drift away.

An impact sent her flying into one of the benches, the air being knocked form her lungs as her world turned in several nauseating, dizzying circles, her body and head slamming against the interior of the truck and the bodies of the dead guards. She could do nothing as her drugged addled body wasn’t hers to command. She simply spun with the truck that came to a stop so jarringly sudden, with Harley and Crane slamming against the wall, that when the motion stopped, she didn’t immediately feel as if she had stopped moving. She lay against the cool metal of the wall of the truck’s interior, the drug and the impact making her unable to move. She could taste blood in her mouth, feel it rushing from her nose and some dripping into her eyes, but she was unable to do anything to stop it.

Crane came to his feet, wobbling for a moment, struggling to push the disorientation aside. Blood was oozing from a deep cut across his forehead. Blood stained his suit and his hands from unknown injuries or maybe simply from his victims, but he got to his feet and hurried over, grabbing Harley by her arm and yanking her to her feet. He wrapped an arm around her waist pulling her to the back of the truck, now on it’s side, reaching out to unlock the doors.
Harley’s head lolled to the side, her mind and Harleen screaming at her to do something, anything, but she did nothing as Crane dragged them both, stumbling out of the truck.

He looked around. It was very dark, but he could just make out that they were surrounded by trees.

Crane smiled and looked over at her. “Soon my love, soon my lady, we’ll be together again, alone…”
Crane began to drag her into the trees while Harley and Harleen screamed at herself to stop him.

Frost swung the truck to the side, following the armored truck as it rolled down the hill. He slammed on the breaks just before the truck would have followed the heavy, armored truck down the hill. He had turned to Joker to ask him what to do, but the Boss had already pushed the door open and was gone, Frost catching just a glimpse of green hair before Joker vanished.

Frost cursed, shoving open his own door and dropping out just in time to see Joker disappearing over the embankment.

“Shit!” He turned to look behind him, catching a glimpse of a long dark car as it sped past knowing full well that Batman would be hot on their trail. Frost pulled his gun and hurried down the wet grassy hill after Joker.

Joker raced down the hill, slipping and sliding in the damp grass. His heart was pounding so hard his chest hurt, the sound of his heartbeat drowning out everything else as he heard only the rush of blood in his ears. She had to be all right, he told himself, she had to be all right…

He saw the truck on it’s side down below, stopped by a large tree. As he approached, he saw Bane pulling himself free from the front of the truck.

Joker yelled. “WHERE IS SHE?”

Bane frowned shaking his head to clear it. “I don’t know.”

Joker rushed to the back fo the truck where one of the doors hung open. He stumbled, nearly falling as he grabbed one of the doors and pushed it up to look inside. It was hard to see the interior of the truck as there were no lights down here, but he caught glimpses of four bodies and lots of blood, but no Harley.

Joker stood there for a second staring into the truck. Tears slowly fell down his pale cheeks from his too wide, maniacal gaze as he stared wide eyed at the corpse-filled, bloody truck. He didn’t see or hear Frost coming up behind him or Bane coming around to the side.

Joker stood there taking a step backwards letting the door drop. “No...no no no no no! NO!!” he said in a harsh whisper. “No, no no no...she has to be here, has to be…”

Suddenly he screamed, his voice filled with rage, with deep unending anguish. “NOOOOOOO!!!”
Nestled in an alley close to where the police caravan was supposed to pass, sat a black Mazda 3 sedan with two heavily armed men in the front seat while two more sat in the back seat. They were not the only people on alert, watching for the police caravan; they were one of two carloads, put here by Falcone.

One of the men in the back was a large man, a wall of muscle, bald head and a face that had once been handsome before he had suffered several broken noses, lost all his front teeth and was forced to have reconstructive surgery on his left eye socket after the bone was shattered in a fight. Little Mario was currently drinking out of a fast food soda cup, sucking through the straw loudly enough that the driver, a man with thick black hair reminiscent of a young John Travolta, whose name was Roberto, was about to turn around and shoot him. He didn’t care whose cousin Little Mario was--the man was pure annoyance!

Roberto glanced at Stefano, a slender blond man with a ridiculous soul patch on his chin who sat beside him, his full concentration not on watching for the caravan, but on doing tricks with a lit cigarette, trying to suck it into his mouth while lit without hurting himself at the same time lighting another cigarette and...well Roberto wasn’t sure what the hell Stefano was doing, only that he was being an idiot as far as Roberto could see. Stefano claimed to have seen some comedian on YouTube, some guy named Tony Mullica doing these sorts of tricks, but Roberto was of the opinion that Stefano had been snorting drugs.

The last occupant of the car was Luigi, Little Mario’s younger brother and keeper. Luigi, his weapon resting on his lap, was chewing on one of his fingernails like a zombie trying to pull that last bit of flesh off a piece of bone, his eyes having that far away look, clearly contemplating something.

Roberto sighed thinking about calling the other car and speaking with StellaD for some intelligent conversation. StellaD was in the other car, parked further up the caravan trail with that rat Giulia, Jake and that scary bitch Valentia with the shaved head. He smiled resting back in his seat thinking about StellaD. She was a gorgeous woman, tall, wide shoulders and huge breasts. He smirked, thinking she was also a damn good shot with a gun--better than him--and she had a tendency to leave one button too many unbuttoned on her shirts. He secretly hoped she did that little maneuver for him because he had made it crystal clear that he liked her, even if he hadn’t asked her out yet. He hated to admit it, but he wasn’t as charming with the ladies as he pretended to be.

After tonight, however, he had promised himself he would ask her on a date, a real date.

He was lightly tapping out a tune on the steering wheel, unaware that he was tapping out the rhythm of song he had heard at a bar a few days ago, “I Love You Like an Alcoholic.” He couldn’t remember who it was by, but the song stuck in his head.

“Hey Roberto?”

Roberto sighed rolling his eyes slightly before he turned around to see Luigi looking at him with wide, slightly scared eyes. He knew he shouldn’t ask, shouldn’t engage Luigi because the dude was known for getting all weird during stake outs, asking weird questions, thinking about...stuff. But Roberto was bored, so…

“Yeah Luigi, what is it?” Roberto yawned giving Luigi an expression that conveyed both infinite patience and irritation.
“Do you believe in multiple universes?” Luigi asked, his face completely serious and his eyes slightly wide. “Like, do you believe there is a universe where we are the good guys, or like one where I’m a woman or you’re a woman? You know, stuff like that?”

Roberto sighed with a slow blink, turning back around and laying his head against the back of the seat. “I don’t know, maybe? Why does it matter?”

Luigi leaned forward. “Well, because. Don’t you wonder sometimes, like, about decisions you made in life where, like you had a choice? What would have happened if you had taken the other choice...and what if there is a you out there that did make that other choice?”

Roberto sighed glancing sideways at Stefano who currently had three cigarettes lit in his mouth and was trying to suck them into this mouth while not burning himself. Roberto narrowed his eyes. He had been about to tell Luigi that he was an idiot, but he had to wonder if there was a version of himself that wasn’t sitting in a car in Gotham waiting to attack some police caravan to grab some blonde bitch for a gangster. Did that other Roberto decide to go to college instead of working with his dad. Did that Roberto get the girl, get Angela to marry him? Roberto frowned deeper as he thought about it and it pissed him off to know that there might be a version of himself who got the fucking girl.

“No Luigi I don’t, because you know what? I don’t give a flying fluck what other Roberto is doing because other Roberto ain’t here helping with this job. Instead I’m stuck in a car with you bozos going after some blonde that I think Falcone should just leave in Arkham.”

Little Mario took that moment to suck hard on his now clearly empty soda cup causing a loud, rumbling squeak of a noise. Roberto bit down hard on his bottom lip to stop himself from yelling in frustration.

Luigi didn’t look satisfied with Roberto’s answer. He sat back crossing his arms over his chest. “I think about it all the time Roberto. Like, did I make the best choices in life?”

Roberto snorted. “Maybe in one of those multiple universes you’re Batman Luigi.”

Luigi gasped. “You think so?”

Roberto chuckled. “Sure Luigi, whatever…”

Roberto had glanced out the window just as he saw a large dump truck go speeding by, followed by two cop cars, then the armored truck, and two more cars.

“What the…” Roberto turned the key to the car starting the engine just as a semi came racing after the two police cars. By this point everyone in the car was leaning forward in shock.

Luigi hissed. “What’s going on? Are they with us?”

Roberto started to pull out, slamming on the breaks just in time to see the Batmobile speed past the alley. “Fuck me,” Roberto hissed and jammed his foot on the gas, the car leaping out of the alley. “I think someone else is making a try for the blonde!”

*

The second car full of Falcone’s people sat near Robinson park, a black BMW M5 sat, darkened and cold, waiting. StellaD was behind the wheel, her knit cap pulled low over her dark hair, her cigar in her mouth, but unlit since she knew Jake was trying to give up smoking. Jake sat beside her, his own knit cap over his white blond hair while he stared intently out the window. In the back seat, Giulia was filing her nails; the woman was more vain than anyone StellaD had ever met. Beside her sat Valentina, her bald head catching the streetlight and shining enough that StellaD worried someone would see them from one of the buildings. She had tried to convince her sister to wear a wig, but Valentina loved the bald look and had pouted like she would when they were kids. StellaD chewed on her cigar glancing in the rearview when she saw the dump truck race by. She turned fully in her seat looking behind her in confusion.

Jake frowned turning with her in time to see the police car flying off the street after the second car hit it, followed by the armored truck zipping past, but swerving in such a way that made her wonder if the driver was drunk. The cars moved by so quickly she saw the other two cop cars fly by with two other cars...wait...a jeep? She would have sworn she saw a man, a monster of a man, standing up in the jeep, but then they were gone. Just as she was wondering if she should follow now, a semi appeared that was in hot pursuit followed by the sound of a weapon being fired. Was that a fucking rocket launcher?!

The next series of events happened so quickly that StellaD wasn’t sure exactly what had occurred, only that she saw the armored car was slammed into by the semi, she saw the Batmobile (on fire) and then Roberto’s car sped by in pursuit of the Batman.

Valentina frowned watching the cars go by, the explosion from the fired rocket launcher all followed by the sounds of a crash that sounded for all the world like a fucking bomb had been dropped.

Valentina yelled at her sister, hitting the back of Jake’s seat. “GO!! WE ARE GONNA MISS OUT!! COME ON!!!”

StellaD started the car and roared out of the their parking space, accelerating up behind Roberto, following behind him. She gave her lights a quick flash to let him know it was her. He flashed his parking lights while he raced to the edge of the road, slamming on the brakes at the last minute before the front of his car would have been pitched over the hill after the armored car. StellaD pulled her car up close beside his, jumping out and looking over her roof. She could easily see the Batmobile, still on fire and much further away from them now. She guessed the old Batman wasn't as fast on the brakes sometimes, which was good for them.

By that time Roberto was out of the car. He glanced over at her then followed her gaze over the hill while the rest of their group piled out of their cars to the haunted sound of a man screaming.

“NOOOOOO!!”

*

A few seconds after the armored truck crashed, Crane got to his feet, swayed for a moment as he tried to orient himself. He reached up to gingerly touch a bloody gash across the middle of his forehead and he could taste blood in his mouth. He sniffed, reaching up and wiping blood from his nose and upper lip, blinking several times to clear his head. He looked around, his vision slightly fuzzy. His ears were ringing, but he was quickly regaining his faculties as he took in the scene. The guards were all dead, the last of the fear gas leaking out into the night from the doors at the back of the truck, which had been forced open with the crash.

He felt something in his hand and looked down. Crane smiled in surprise; he still had the keys to Harley’s cuffs.

Crane turned to see Harley was lying on her side, blood staining her face, smeared across her lips, chin, and hair. One hand was still attached to the cuff, pulled at an awkward angle still attached to the metal pole she had been cuffed to. He hurried over to her and dropped down to check her pulse, letting out a breath he didn’t realize he had been holding. Harleen was alive. He gently pushed her hair out of the way to see a long cut that ran from the edge of her hairline to her temple, shallow, but it seemed to be the source of the blood on her face.

“My poor Lady,” Crane said softly. “Let’s us get you home where you belong and I shall nurse you back to health my dear.”

He frowned as he checked her arm that was still cuffed to the truck, but it didn’t seem to be broken, though the skin on her wrist was torn and bloody. Otherwise she seemed intact, though he was sure she had a concussion—as he knew that he had as well. Crane worked quickly not sure how much time he had, but he knew he had to work swiftly to get her free and to get away from the crash with her before whoever attacked them showed up. He uncuffed her, picking her up and propping her enough that he could recuff her hands in front of her. He checked to make sure she couldn’t easily get free. He began to reach for the mask, but then stopped, his fingers inches from the buckles. He frowned, then checked his pockets for the syringe he had been carrying. Crane smiled in relief. The syringe had survived the crash!

“Ah, good luck seems to be with the Scarecrow tonight.” His lips twitched in a crooked grin, looking at the liquid still safe in the syringe.

He pulled the plastic cover off the end of the needle before he leaned forward, piercing her skin with the needle before pushing down on the plunger. He tossed the syringe then examined the mask covering her mouth. He thought again about removing it now that he was sure the drug in her system would keep her calm, but decided to leave it on her. He didn’t want her waking and calling for help, or biting him, even with the drug and the fear gas pumping through her system. Harleen was devilishly stubborn and strong willed, two things he liked about her very much. Additionally, with the chemical changes of her recent evolution he didn’t have any idea how she would react. Better safe than sorry, he decided.

Crane lifted her up, and carefully carried her out of the truck. Once he was outside of the truck he tossed her over his shoulder. Sparing a glance up toward the road he swiftly vanished into the park’s woods.

*

Harley regained consciousness only a few seconds later. The sedative that Crane had given her wasn’t strong, but rather it was supposed to be just enough to make her relax. She woke confused. She had been dreaming she thought, dreaming of Jack. Her husband had smiled at her, his green hair kept falling loose, framing his face and he continued to push his fingers through his hair, brushing it back. Her fingers itched to run through his hair, to feel the thick silk of his locks, to smell him, to feel him, taste his skin. He looked over at her, his blue eyes bright, his red lipped smile spreading across his pale face. He pulled his tie lose and the sound of the cloth sliding against the fabric of his collar made her shiver. She enjoyed that sound...He took a step toward her, slowly undoing the buttons of his shirt exposing more and more of his pale, lean-muscled chest. Harley felt her heart beating quickly. She licked her lips, but oddly, she tasted blood.

She reached up to touch her nose and her fingers came back bloody. Harley frowned in confusion, looking up again at Jack, who was now covered in blood.

Harley gasped. “Puddin?”

He smiled at her and continued to speak to her, continuing to walk closer, removing his shirt. She could see wounds criss-crossing his body. His voice sounded odd, muffled. She couldn’t understand the words he was saying. It was almost like they were speaking underwater. She couldn’t focus.
Just when Jack was within reach of her, she put out a hand to touch him when his chest suddenly exploded in a burst of blood and flesh, a bullet, bright silver, burst through his chest. Harley began to scream when she heard another voice...Harleen’s voice.

Harleen screamed. “WAKE UP HARLEY!! WAKE UP NOW!”

*

Harley jerked back to consciousness, her blue eyes wide and frantically rolling in their sockets. She blinked, but her vision refused to focus. Everything was bouncing and shifting in a way that made her head hurt and spin slightly. She felt nauseous and her entire body ached, but she couldn’t recall why. She tasted blood in her mouth, drying on her lips. She frowned, could feel the leather of the mask on her face rubbing against the skin of her cheeks, chin, burning where it had rubbed against her skin. The thing smelled of sickness, fear, but for a moment she couldn’t recall why she was wearing it or what had happened to bring her here—wherever here was. The nausea grew worse as she bounced against someone’s shoulder, all of which confused her more. As Harley tried to look around and focus her vision, she saw shadows all around her, darkness so deep she was scared she would become lost in it, lose herself and never been found as the darkness swallowed her up whole. The shadows began to move and shift along with the bouncing she was experiencing, morphing into nightmare shapes, claws, teeth, hideous faces that moved in and out of the shadows, at once becoming visible before they were swallowed again by the shadows. Harley’s eyes widened as the fear coursed through her, her heart pumping fast. She wanted to scream, but she couldn’t seem to gather enough effort or air to scream.

“You need to fight Harley...you need to get away from him or you’ll never see your puddin again.”

The voice startled her out of her building panic. She knew that voice...it was in her head...a voice she hated, but also had learned to trust...Harleen.

Harley whispered, her voice dry, small and strained behind her mask. “Puddin...my Jack...my Joker…”

Everything came rushing back to her. She knew what had happened; a crash...Joker...he had come for her...she just knew it, it had to have been him. But then she recalled...Crane!

Harley snarled behind her mask.

She began to fight and twist, trying to get free. Her hands were cuffed, but her legs weren't. Though her position was awkward, she began to struggle. Harley swiftly twisted her legs trying to bring her right leg up in order to force her knee into his chest or face while at the same time she reached down with her cuffed hands, grabbing a handful of his shirt, jacket and slacks, whatever she could get a hold of and pulled with all her strength. Her position wasn’t very stable and it didn’t give her enough balance or space to move, but Harley’s sudden shift brought her thigh up under Crane’s chin, knocking the surprised doctor’s head back.

Crane was so focused on making his way quickly through the dark park that he wasn’t paying attention to the shift in Harley’s body that would have told him she was no longer unconscious. When she moved, he was caught by surprise, letting out a startled grunt and stumbled, but he didn’t fall right away. He struggled to keep her steady on his shoulder.

“Harleen! Stop!” Crane hissed in a panicked whisper, but his captive yanked on the back of his jacket and pants at the same time.

Crane cursed as Harley’s shifting weight and her struggling made him stumble again. His foot came into contact with a rock, branch, something he couldn't see in the dark, pitching him forward, sending both him and Harley crashing to the ground.

Harley rolled away from Crane with a gasp, slamming up against a tree. The air wasn’t completely knocked from her lungs, but it was enough to stun her slightly along with her other injuries. She struggled to push herself to her feet, stumbling back and leaning against the tree when her eyes widened in terror. Crane stood up, but it wasn’t Crane she saw; it was something else entirely. He was too tall, too thin, his arms and fingers elongated in front of her. Where his face should be was blackness, oily, shifting features, a mouth too wide filled with razor sharp teeth, the eyes long, narrow slits. The shadows around him shifted too, twisting creatures that seemed to be waiting for him to command them.

Harley’s chin trembled and she pressed herself back against the tree.

Crane stood up with a slight groan, rubbing his hip. He turned to see Harleen pressed against a tree. Her blue eyes behind her mask were wide and looked feverish.

He smiled. “My Lady, come to me.”

He reached out for her, walking toward her.

Harley was so terrified she was rooted to the spot.

Harleen whispered to her. “Harley...it’s not there, that isn’t what you are seeing...it’s Crane...you can see him...”

Harley, her voice trembling, whispered. “I can’t…”

“You can...you have to...for him...for your puddin...see Crane...for Joker…” Harleen pressed.

Harley screwed her eyes closed, hissing to herself. “See him...see Crane...please.”

When she opened her eyes again, the rest of the creature was still there, but now she could see Crane’s face surrounded by the oily darkness.

Harley inhaled unsteadily and narrowed her eyes.

Crane saw the expression in her eyes change from fear to something else. He frowned, confused. She should have been so full of sedative and fear gas that she shouldn’t be able to...he didn’t get a chance to finish his thought before Harley moved.

Harley screamed behind her mask and charged him, but at the last second before she would have slammed into his body, she pulled up and did a little hop, her right leg coming up for a hard snap kick, her foot connecting with Crane’s chest.

Crane gasped in pain as the kick knocked the air from his lungs as well as pushing him back several steps. Crane coughed, his hand going to his chest.

Harley lost her slip on shoe when she kicked Crane. She kicked her other shoe off so that she was barefoot, her eyes blazing with hatred.

Crane narrowed his eyes. “Harleen, you don’t want to fight me. You are my Lady, remember.”

“I don’t belong to you! I don’t belong to anyone but myself,” she hissed, her voice muffled behind the mask.
Crane smiled. “You know that isn’t true my dear, you belong to me. You were always meant to be mine.”

Harley snarled. “Never!”

She rushed him again, wrapping her hands around each other forming one fist and swung her hands upward, the cuffs cutting into her skin. Crane wasn’t fast enough, unprepared for fury and speed. Her fists connected with his chin, knocking him backwards again. He hit a tree, but he rolled around the trunk disappearing out of her sight behind it.

Harley looked around in confusion. The shadows that had been moving and shifting along the edges of her vision seemed to swallow him whole, while the trees and bushes took on strange shapes. They seemed to move, shifting, stalking like monsters ready to pounce. She whipped her head around trying to find her foe, at the same time trying to keep the monsters that seemed to only pop into existence at the edges of her vision in sight. But the darkness that pressed in on Harley was almost complete despite the ambient glow coming from the lights outside the park and the various buildings that ran along the outside of the park that had given the wooded park some semblance of light only moments before.

She started to shiver as the fear toxin that still moved to her system began to reassert its control over her.

Crane purred, his voice coming from nowhere and everywhere. “Now, now my Lady Crow, this is really unbecoming of you...you are mine. You know you are mine...from the moment we met in Arkham, you have belonged to me...I just simply need to finish what I started there and then your transformation will be complete.” Crane’s voice lowered a half-octave and seemed to possess a whispering echo in the darkness. “You will be whole, you will be as you should be, don’t fight my dear...just come home…come home.”

Harley twisted around, her heart pounding in her chest until it hurt while she tried desperately to see him before he hurt her. She couldn’t figure out where he was, where his voice was coming from and the shifting monsters at the corners of her vision continued to move closer, the sounds of shuffles and whispers only adding to her building fear. She turned fully around just as Crane formed out of the shadows. He moved surprisingly quickly, his fist snapping out to catch Harley in the masked cheek, his knuckles leaving a small cut on her face. She gasped in pain, stumbling back bringing her cuffed hands up to her face. She could feel the bruise forming where he had hit her, followed by the sticky wetness of fresh blood. The mask burned against her skin where it had cut into her from the impact. Crane melted back into the inky darkness again.

Crane chuckled. “I really do hate to do this Harleen, my Lady Crow, but you really are not leaving me much of a choice.”

Harley spun around again, trying to lay eyes on the mad doctor, but the shadows were moving, shifting confusing in their roiling chaos. She was sure she could see “things” moving in the darkness, avoiding her direct gaze, but they were there, she was sure of it, terrifying things moving just out of her sight. Her eyes darted everywhere, but she couldn’t find him again. Panic was setting in and her heart was beating loud enough that she could hear the beat and rush in her ears, pounding, pounding, pounding...

Harleen’s voice whispered in her head. “Harley, come on, you can do this...don’t let him win...don’t let him win...don’t let him take you from Joker...”

Harley spun around just as Crane came out of the darkness behind her, surging toward her, the darkness washing away from him so that she could see him clearly. She snarled, bringing her cuffed hands up to her chest, throwing herself at him, slamming her entire body into him shoulder first. The sudden force of Harley’s weight slamming into him knocked Crane off his feet with Harley on top of him. Crane grabbed at her, both of them dropping to the ground. Harley snarled, spitting like a cat as she twisted herself around, reaching for his face. She wanted to hurt him, wanted to make him scared. She reached up with both hands and clawed at his face with her fingernails, struggling with her cuffed hands to hurt him in any way she could. Harley’s nails broke his skin, digging deep into his flesh. She felt the warmth of blood against her fingers and smiled with vicious glee.

Crane cried out in surprise as Harley’s fingers ripped across his cheek, gouging and tearing. He grabbed her upper arms, his fingers digging in painfully as he tried to yank her back. When that didn’t work, Crane slammed his forehead against hers.

Harley gasped in shock and pain and the wave of dizziness that dazed her allowed Crane to push her off. He got to his feet, his hand going to his face. He hissed in pain and his hand came back bloody.
Harley had left three deep marks down each of his cheeks.

Crane glared down at Harley who was struggling to her feet, gasping in pain, blood dripping from her nose and her now split upper lip. Crane felt his control slipping, his anger building. Why couldn’t she just cooperate?! Why couldn’t she just see that being with him was for the best?! Crane’s body shook with his barely contained rage before he kicked her hard in the side. Harley cried out in pain, falling back down to her side.

“You will learn your place!!” he snarled. “You will be mine!! It’s meant to be! You are to be the Lady Crow to my Scarecrow!!” Spittle flew from Crane’s mouth, his rage spilling over though he kept his tone tight and controlled. He didn’t want their fight to be heard by whoever had caused the crash.

Harley reached out with her cuffed hands, wrapping them around his ankle. She was trying to hurt him in any way that she could, then pulled with all her strength surprising the thin man when she almost succeeded in yanking him off his feet.

Crane hissed, kicking himself free before he dropped down on her. The two of them struggled, Harley kicking and snarling behind her mask while trying to break free of his grip. Crane pulled back and hit her across the face again. The thick leather once more burned where it rubbed against her face, his fist causing her vision to spin. The taste of blood in her mouth was sharp, but she didn’t top fighting him. Crane pushed himself up, straddling her. He grabbed her cuffed hands and forced her arms over her head. He adjusted his position pushing himself up so that he sat on her chest, straddling her, cutting off her air. Harley gasped; his weight against her chest hurt, all of it hurt. She struggled to pull air into her lungs, but Crane was pressing his weight down on her, holding her in place.

Crane wrapped one hand around her throat holding her down, his other hand holding the chain between her cuffed wrists. Harley tried to whip her body back and forth to break free, but she didn’t have enough leverage and she was worn down. She couldn’t get a full breath of air between him and the mask, the beating she had already taken, all of it conspired to bring her down. She could feel tears burning her eyes, but she fought against crying. She didn’t want Crane to see her break, didn’t want him to win, but the tears ran down the sides of her face regardless of her struggles.

Crane’s fingers pressed against her throat, making her already difficult breathing even more of a struggle. He hissed as he held her down. “Why are you fighting me??!!”

He looked at her with genuine confusion mixed with his anger.

Harley choked, her breath wheezy. She looked up at Crane and her eyes widened. With her defenses failing, Crane’s fear toxin was taking over once more. She stared in horror as Crane’s face melted, twisting and morphing into more and more monstrous forms. Tears flowed down the sides of Harley’s face, tears of fear and pain...

Harleen kept screaming at her in her head to fight, to not let him win.

Harley squeezed her eyes shut tight, listening to Harleen’s voice. She couldn’t let Crane win, she could die here or let him take her because she needed to get back to her puddin. She knew, deep in her heart, she knew if she failed here, she would never see Jack again. Harley swung her hips to the side, pushing Crane up. The movement startled him so much that he didn’t react in time before Harley--her gymnastic skills giving her the strength and flexibility--twisted her entire body, breaking Crane’s hold on her throat and tossing him off of her. She rolled away from him with a glancing kick to his temple and pushed herself up to her feet to break into a run. She ran as fast as she could into the devouring shadows.

Crane wobbled to his feet just in time to see her disappear into the darkness of the park with a hand held to his head. He wanted to yell, to scream her name, to demand that she come back, but he knew that would only draw the police or whoever had attacked the caravan to them. He hissed in frustration and took off after her.

*

Joker took a step back, his eyes wild. He continued to stare into the back of the truck as if somehow she would suddenly be there, that he had simply missed her somehow. But Harley didn’t appear; the truck remained empty except for the dead.

She wasn’t here...no, no, no, his Harley, his heart, his life...she had to be here, this was his chance to get her back. She had to be here!! He couldn’t fail...he couldn’t!!! Alex had lied...no...no. Joker shook himself, grabbing his head in agony, stumbling back from the truck. No, no, something was wrong, she was here...somewhere. He couldn’t lose her again, not now, not like this...he needed Harley. She needed him.

Joker held his head as if he were trying to prevent the thoughts that ran rampant through his mind from blasting his head apart. Voices were screaming in his mind, whispers that sounded like Bruce, like his father, hissing at him. “You failed her. You failed her again. You always were a failure, always the broken one, always causing trouble. No one wanted you, no one loves you. She won’t love you after this, after you let them get her...you let the Batman take her. You let the Batman take the only thing that mattered to you. The Batman will take, take, take until there is nothing left of you, of what you love...nothing for you, little Jack.”

Joker squeezed his eyes shut as if he were in pain, his voice coming out in a agonized howl. “NOOOOoo!!”

Frost reached out and hesitantly touched Joker’s shoulder. “Boss? Maybe she wandered into the woods. If she has a concussion, she might be disoriented...she...”

Frost didn’t finish. He heard voices. The big man turned to see the shadows of eight people, highlighted by headlights, coming down the hillside toward them. Frost felt a coldness in the pit of his stomach. He knew, without a doubt, these were not their people.

“Boss! We gotta move!” Frost was frantic.

Joker turned around and grabbed Frost’s arm, his grip tight as the voices in his head began a buzz of sound that suddenly receded when he saw the shadows coming towards them. He frowned and Frost hissed. “They ain’t ours Boss.”

Joker smiled glancing toward the shadows coming towards them.

Frost tried again. “I don’t know who they are, but we need to move Boss, now.”

Joker smiled watching the shadows. “I need to hurt someone.”

Frost frowned in confusion, but then it was too late. The group was on top of them.

Roberto, holding his gun loosely in one hand, was nearly down the hill. The lights that had been making it difficult to see now gave way to more shadows, but he could see the two men standing by the armored car that was lying on its side; it’s headlights were dim and shone into the woods of the park. Roberto frowned. He could have sworn one of two people down there had green hair. He couldn’t quite put his finger on what it was about green hair that was nagging him, and there was something about the guy, his pale skin and his stance, but at the moment the reason why green hair should be important was eluding him.

Roberto held his weapon up. “Step away from the truck,” he yelled.

The green-haired man put his hands up. “Oh, now who might you be? And I should warn you, I’m having a really bad night.”

Roberto was slightly confused by what was going on. This simple crash and grab wasn’t going as planned and it wasn’t just making him annoyed. In fact, it was weirding him out a bit. Plus, he wasn’t sure how long they had before Batman showed up; he wanted to get the bitch that Falcone had sent them for and get out of here.

“Where’s the woman?” he yelled.

The green-haired man narrowed his eyes. “Woman? Who might you be looking for friend?”

Roberto’s gut told him not to answer, but his mouth wasn’t listening. “We want that Harley Quinn chick--you give her to us, we’ll let you walk away.”

A laugh was what answered Roberto’s offer. “Well I have bad news, she isn’t here. Why are you lot after her?”

Again Roberto’s gut moved slower that his mouth. “Look buddy, Carmine Falcone wants her.”

The other man’s voice became softer, deadlier. “You don’t say.”

Roberto gestured with the gun. “You best get out of the way before you get yourself hurt.”

The pale man snickered. “Did you hear that Frosty. We might get hurt.”

Frost paled, but said nothing in reply.

StellaD came up alongside Roberto with the others, but Valentina rushed forward, looking for a fight.

“He said get away from there ya stronzo!!” Valentina grinned as she approached the pair. Unlike the others, Valentina didn’t carry a gun. She didn’t like the distance, the sterile kill. She liked to be up close and personal when she took someone down.

Joker laughed. “Asshole? Me? You just met me. People usually wait a few minutes before calling me an asshole, isn’t that right Frost.” (Frost just grunted.) “I think the stronza is you my friend, because I’m just here to get my girl and your little group is getting in my way.”

Luigi stopped short. “Did he just say he was here for his girl?”

Jake hissed. “Fuck me--that’s the Joker.”

Roberto turned to look at Jake, his eyes wide, a smile slowly showing. “You sure?”

Jake nodded. “Green hair, pale, red lips...fuck man, that’s him.”

Roberto grinned looking at each of his people. “Then we take him alive.”

“Can’t you see how happy The Roman would be with us if we brought him not just that bitch Harley Quinn, but the Joker too?” Roberto was practically giddy with the idea of having Falcone pleased with him, giving his Boss the best gift ever.

Giulia answered with a shake of her head. “I don’t know man…”

Roberto grinned. “No guns. I want him alive.”

Luigi mumbled. “This is a bad idea.”

Roberto turned, growling at the younger man. “Luigi, shut the fuck up.”

Valentina grinned happily. “Can I beat the shit out of him?”

“You can beat him as much as you like; just keep him alive.” Roberto smiled.

Valentina let out a yell half bloodthirsty cry, half gasp of joy as she went racing down that last few feet to meet Joker. Her companions decided to let the bruiser of a woman have her fun before they jumped in.

Joker stood still, waiting for the large woman with a wide smile across his face, his hands out at his side, loose, ready. He shook his arms a little, loosening them up, a giggle low on his breath. Once she was within range, Valentina swung her fist at him. Joker easily ducked, Valentina practically broadcasting her moves over a loudspeaker. He dropped to a knee, following that move by bringing his open palm up for a hard strike to the large, bald woman, catching her in the side of the knee. The blow knocked her off balance, pain radiating from the impact.

She cried out in surprised pain, just as Joker, in one smooth movement, was on his feet again standing in front of her and snapped his arm out. He grabbed her by her jaw and jammed his long fingers into her mouth to grasp her front bottom teeth, his thumb pressing painfully into the soft flesh under her chin. The move surprised her enough that she didn’t react quickly enough to stop Joker from using her jaw like a handle. Valentina’s eyes widened in surprise at the sudden pain. Joker yanked her forward using her jaw to fling her to the ground.

Valentina’s face hit the ground hard enough that her nose broke with a loud crunch. Her gasp came out more as a gargle, blood rushing from her nose. Joker dropped down on her back, wrapping both hands around her bald head and began to smash her face into the ground in a quick series of hard thrusts. The others yelled, rushing down the hill toward Joker and Frost. Joker laughed, getting his feet, his arms out as if he were about to embrace them. Frost pulled his weapon, but he was a half second too slow before Stefano barreled into him, the two men going down to the ground, rolling into the shadows. Frost rolled on top of Stephano, getting the upper hand for just a second and also realizing in that same moment that he had lost his gun in the struggle.

Frost grabbed the slimmer man by the throat, pushing himself up to his knee while at the same time choking Stefano, but just as he was about to stand, Stefano delivered a quick, hard snap of his fist, catching Frost in the throat. Frost gasped in pain, automatically grabbing for his throat, and stumbled off the gangster. Stefano surged to his feet, grabbing a hold of Frost by the front of his suit. Frost, still coughing, grabbed hold of Stefano and the two men spun in a circle, locked together.

*

Joker let out a bright, manic giggle, let a shiver run through his body and down his arms, glancing down once at Valentina’s now still form. “Oh that felt good!! A good way for me to work out my pain.”

Roberto, who was still a few steps away, hissed. “Someone get him!! Come on you assholes!”

Little Mario with Giulia and Jake, rushed down the hillside cutting the short distance quickly as they headed straight for Joker. Jake broke off to help Stefano while Luigi rushed to fill Jake’s spot next to Giulia. At the last second Giulia stepped ahead of the others, pulling a knife just before she was right on Joker. Joker saw the glint of metal reflecting light in the woman’s hand. Giulia led with the knife hoping to catch Joker by surprise with a fast, a quick stab to the chest or stomach that would make beating him easy after that. A good stab wound always put the odds of a fight in her favor. But when she stepped closer, she saw the Joker wink at her just before he moved, a graceful almost dance like maneuver, sliding out of the way of her extended arm. He easily grabbed her arm with both of his hands and spun Giulia around, twisting her arm up so that her knife was facing her. He forced her back a few steps before he flung the woman into Luigi. The man gasped when she hit him, both of them tumbling backwards.

Luigi grabbed Giulia’s shoulders tossing her out of the way before pulled his own knife. He thrust the weapon at Joker, the tip of his knife nicking the clown’s left cheek, leaving a thin, bloody line. Joker laughed and lashed out with his fist, caught Luigi across the chin. Luigi gasped in pain, but he followed with his own swing, landing a solid hit across Joker’s right cheek, snapping the clown’s head to the side. Joker snarled, responding by bringing his right elbow up for a hard crack to Luigi’s chin.

Giulia rushed forward, trying again to stab Joker. She came in low, trying to cut him across his stomach, but Joker responded by kicking her hard in the thigh with a pivot of his hips and throwing his weight behind the attack, then lunged toward her, using his elbow to hit her across the throat and chin. Giulia hissed as pain blossomed across her chin and throat. Joker turned his attention back toward Luigi, kicking the gangster in the side of his leg with his knee while slamming his elbow down on Luigi’s shoulder. Giulia tried to stab him again while he was turned away from her, but Joker snapped around, catching her from the corner of his eye. He lunged forward, dropping to a knee at the same time that he grabbed her around her waist throwing her and himself to the ground. Giulia hit hard enough that the air was knocked from her lungs in a burst of air. She gasped in pain, struggling to catch her breath.

Joker sprang to his feet, a bloody grin on his face, twisting around just in time to catch Luigi who slashed at him. Joker brought his right arm up, the blade cutting through his suit and into the flesh of his forearm, though he didn’t react to the pain. Instead he swung his fist to smash Luigi across the face with a hard right hook followed by a left hook that sent the man sprawling to the grass.

Giulia had regained her feet and lunged with her knife. Joker spun just in time to catch her arm with both hands in a vice-like grip. He grinned at her, his blue eyes too bright in his pale, blood spattered
“I really appreciate the dance my darling, but I have eyes for only one girl.” Joker spun her before he flung her to the ground, never letting go of her arm, and falling on top of her. He forced her hand back. Giulia’s eyes widened in horror. She brought her other hand up, grabbing at Joker’s face, before she tried to grab his arm as he forced the knife back.

Joker leaned in close. “Say nighty nighty.” He giggled before he forced the knife through her eye. Giulia screamed in agony. Joker let go of her arm and with his fist the slammed the blade the rest of the way into her eye socket, cutting off her screams.

*
Frost gasped, blood gushing from his nose. He glared at Stefano, whose nose was also bleeding freely and one eye was already swelling shut. Frost brought his foot up, kicking the other man in the chest, but Stefano only stumbled back a step. He lunged toward his opponent, his fist catching Frost across the jaw, following it with a hard backhanded fist that snapped Frost’s head to the side. Frost gasped, but kept his footing, grabbing Stefano’s next swing, holding the man’s arm while he punched the man in the face with three very quick punches. Stefano pulled himself free to kick Frost in the chest, followed by a right hook.

Frost stumbled, blood covering his face when his back hit against another man.

Jake wrapped his arms around Frost, pinning him as Stefano grinned.

“Roberto didn’t say anything about you coming in alive; just Joker.”

Frost cursed.

*
Joker turned his attention to Little Mario who had finally joined his friends. The man was big, but after seeing how big Bane could get, Joker wasn’t impressed. His face, teeth, and smile were a bloody mess; drops of blood were dripping from his chin.

He giggled. “Well, how did you get here? Did someone leave your cage open?”

Little Mario snarled and rushed Joker.

Joker threw a punch, but the big man twisted his torso to take the strike to his shoulder. Joker’s eyes widened in surprise followed by a laugh as Mario grabbed him, lifting him off his feet.

Joker’s surprise turned into a bright laugh. “Oh, I guess you aren’t as stupid as you look!!!”

He brought his hands down on Mario’s arm trying to break the big man’s hold on him while Mario began to squeeze his throat. Joker’s smile never faltered while he struggled for breath, blood running more freely down his lips and chin. Mario yanked Joker close, slammed his forehead against Joker’s with a hard ‘thwack.’ Joker’s blinked, slightly stunned. He didn’t get his arms up in time to block Mario from punching him in the face; a fresh bout of blood burst from his nose. Joker giggled manically as Mario threw him to the ground.

Joker gasped, but started to push himself up on his hands and knees. Mario grabbed him, beginning to yank Joker to his feet, but the pale man grabbed two handfuls of grass and slightly muddy dirt and threw it into Mario’s face. The big man let out a roar, his hands going to his face. Joker chuckled manically, slamming his fists into Mario’s gut several times, driving the big man back when suddenly a shot rang out.

Joker gasped in surprise more than pain as something hard and fast ripped through his right thigh in a burst of blood. Joker fell to the ground, his right leg giving out. He hit the grass hard, landing on his shoulder. He turned to look at his leg, at the same time seeing the man he had fought, Luigi, with a .22 in his hand, staring at him with a bloody face and wide, scared eyes.

Joker quickly turned back to Mario.

Mario chuckled. “Ora sei mio, pagliaccio.”

That was when everyone heard a roar.

Roberto turned to see a giant on the rise behind them. There was no other word to describe the shadow that was swiftly bearing down on them; it was a monster Roberto thought in shock. Three--no five times bigger than Little Mario and it was moving fast when the creature suddenly launched itself into the air with a roar, fists raised over its head.

Roberto pushed StellaD away from him just as the monster landed on him, crushing him with a shattering of bone and organs, killing him in an instant. StellaD screamed, but Bane simply backhanded her with his fist, breaking her neck and skull at the same time.

Racing down the hill behind Bane came Alex, Jason, Bea, and Agatha, all armed, with Bea holding a ball of fire in one hand.

Jason yelled. “JOKER!!”

He fired his weapon and several shots hit Mario in the back, ripping out through the man's chest. Joker threw his arms over his head, blood showering down on him before he rolled quickly out of the way as Little Mario fell like a dead tree.

Luigi turned his weapon on Jason, but before he could fire off a shot, a green ball of fire splashed against him. Luigi screamed as the hellish green fire consumed his flesh swiftly. Bea grinned in satisfaction.

Jake threw Frost to the ground and Stefano turned to run, with Jake following, but they didn’t move quickly enough before Agatha yelled. “Not so fast!!”

Two gunshots rang out, the two men falling to the ground for the last time.

Alex dropped down next to Joker. “Fuck!! You’ve been fucking shot!”

Joker groaned, grabbing a hold of Alex. “Help me up! Harley wasn’t in the truck!”

Alex stood, his one hand grasping Joker by the arm to help him to his feet. Joker limped, his right leg throbbing, but also partly numb and refusing to let him stand on it.

Alex hissed. “Fuck me. You think she got out? Maybe she is in the fucking park somewhere?”

Joker pulled away from Alex, forcing himself to stand (with most of his weight on his left leg) though the effort caused a flesh flood of blood to seep down his wounded leg.

“We have to find her!” Joker started to limp into the darkness.

Alex scowled with a shake of his head. “Fuck, fuck, fuck,” he muttered taking off after Joker.
Harley was lost.

The drugs continued to flow and linger in her system. Darkness and the shadows shifted around her, moved and undulated like living creatures. Sounds echoed around her, whispered voices, and Harleen continued to yell at her to keep moving. Sometimes she thought she heard her puddin, other times she was terrified when she thought she heard her stepfather yelling at her, all mixed with the soft whispers of Crane’s voice calling her ‘Lady Crow’ and ‘my dear one.’

Harley shivered. The night was cold and her prison outfit was thin; her bare feet felt frozen and every part of her was beginning to ache. Her mouth tasted like blood and her lips hurt. She kept worrying with her tongue at a large split in her lower lip.

Her head felt like it was spinning slightly, quick movements made her dizzy, and everything seemed to wobble slightly. While she moved, trying to keep up a run, the tree branches reached for her, pulling and tugging at her hair, tearing holes and rips in her clothing. She ran barefoot through the park, that to her still drug-rattled mind, looked like the vast, dark forest from a fairy tale, with a hideous monster on her heels. The only thing that Harley could keep straight in her mind was her prince, her lover, her friend... Jack...Joker...her puddin. She did her best to focus on him as she ran while tears that she wasn’t aware of ran down her cheeks, making her face even colder when suddenly her cold, wounded feet slipped on something and she stumbled forward, unable to stop herself with her hands cuffed. She tumbled headfirst down a hill. It felt as if she hit every rock on the way down until she plunged into ice cold water.

Harley went under the surface of the frigid water that seemed to swallow her. The mask felt like it was suctioned to her face, cutting off what air she had. The cold water surrounded her, swallowed her whole. She wanted to scream, but bit down hard, catching her lips. The water was black and she couldn’t see a thing for a heartbeat, but as she struggled, the drugs in her system showed her things lurking in the water--nothing concrete, just more shadows moving in the water around her. Harley’s eyes widened in panic, fear pumping through her hot and fast, but just when she was feeling that pressure building in her lungs, her body starving for air, begging her to open her mouth, she burst to the surface gasping in lungfuls of air. She coughed and sputtered, standing up, only to realize that the water only came up to her chest.

She couldn’t see much in the dark, but she thought she saw the edge of the lake she had fallen into and slowly trudged her way toward the shore, shivering uncontrollably. She dropped to her knees, struggling to get her breathing under control. Now her senses were filled with the scent of wet leather when she heard more voices, moving closer to her.

“Well, well, what have we here?”

Harley looked up, her wet hair falling into her eyes, combined with the drugs, made it difficult for her to see who or what was approaching her. At first they looked like long, too-thin shadows, but as they came closer the shadows shortened into more human shapes.

She thought she saw a man...no...two men? And a woman, forming out of the darkness. She frowned, confused and not trusting her eyes.

The man who approached her was dressed in grimy clothing--several layers of grimy clothes. His hair was dirty blond, half of it shaved away, the rest matted to his head. He wore a thin, wispy mustache and spotty whiskers spread across his face. He was dirty and missing two front teeth. He grinned, dropping down in a crouch beside her. Harley scrambled back a step or two away from him and her blue eyes were rounded in fear and pain, her pupils dilated.

He looked from Harley to the other two people with him. “Thought we heard something unusual. Hey my friends, look what the old lake gave us! A new friend.” The man who spoke tilted his head gazing at the woman on her knees, her cuffed hands pressed against her shivering body. She glared at him through the thick locks of her wet blonde hair sticking to her face.

The man chuckled. “Look, she even comes muzzled and cuffed! We are going to have fun with you, ain’t we Hardwood? Chelsea?”

The other two laughed. “Sure thing Bone.” Hardwood snickered and elbowed his companion. Chelsea laughed. “Hey, can I have first try? Last time it was Hardwood!”

Bone stood. “Get her up and let’s take her back to our camp and sure Chelsea, you get first go.”

Harleen hissed in Harley’s mind. “Kill them! They are monsters, here to take you away like Crane. They want to hurt you, keep you away from your puddin. They don’t want you to ever see him again. We can’t let them keep us from our Joker.”

Hardwood approached Harley first.

Harley was on her feet, moving quickly despite the cold, slippery mud, and her already weakened condition. Her rage burned through her, hot and savage. She kicked Hardwood as hard as she could in the middle of the man’s chest.

“Get away from me!!” Harley screamed behind her mask, her voice weak, rough, and with angry tears in her eyes. She kicked him again, hitting the man hard in the chest with her foot, hard enough that he was gasping and stumbling back away from her. The woman named Chelsea had moved as well, coming up on Harley’s side rather than a frontal assault while Harley’s attention was on Hardwood. Chelsea darted forward quickly, trying to get close enough to wrap her arms around Harley’s already restricted arms. Harley saw movement from the corner or her eye, a dark shadow darting behind her. Harley put all her power into throwing herself backwards into a mid-air somersault and at the same time her legs snap out, catching Chelsea in the face with her feet.

Harley landed easily despite the slippery surface of the mud. Bone let out an angry cry, rushing toward Harley. Harley, her hands pressed against her chest, threw herself sideways into a handless cartwheel, using her legs to smash the man in the face. Bone stumbled back with a pained grunt.

Harley landed, spun around, brought her elbows up, using her left elbow to smash Bone in the face when he tried to grab her again. She broke the man’s nose with a loud snap followed by the man’s almost hysterical scream.

Harley spun around just as Chelsea tried again to grab her. Harley grabbed the filthy woman by her chin, wrapping the fingers of one cuffed hand around the woman’s jaw. Harley pulled and pivoted at her hip to throw Chelsea forward and to the ground, spun around to use her balled hands to slam down in the middle of Chelsea’s back. Harley screamed, a savage almost mindless cry of rage, dropping down on top of the downed woman to continue beating at Chelsea with all her strength. Harley slammed her balled hands down on the woman’s head, hitting the side of her face with both fists and the metal cuffs until her hands became covered with both her own blood from the cuffs cutting into her wrists, and Chelsea’s blood. The cuffs split the woman’s cheek, shredding skin while Harley’s continued pounding at the woman’s cheekbone, eye socket and jaw.

Bone yelled. “You BITCH!”

He raced toward her, his face covered in blood, but Harley jumped up just as Bone was behind her. She again used her elbow to slam it back into Bone’s face. She quickly spun around him to bring her hands up and over the man’s head. She yanked back with all her strength and the chain between her cuffs cut into the man’s throat. Harley screamed behind her mask while Bone’s hands reached back trying to grab her, but switched tactics and struggled to yank on the chain that was cutting off his air. Harley snarled, pulling back until her muscles trembled, holding Bone against her.

The man kicked and fought, but Harley was angrier, mad with rage and fear, overpowering the man until he finally went still.

Harley dropped him and stepped back.

She heard a noise and turned to see Hardwood, staring at her with wide eyes. He turned and started to run, but Harley hissed, racing after him. He didn’t get far before Harley was on him. She leaped high into the air to land on Hardwood’s shoulders, wrapping her cuffs under his chin and pulling up with a grunt of effort. She leaned down, her voice frightening behind the mask.

“You’re not going anywhere,” Harley purred with savage delight.

She pulled back again with all her strength, the chain of her cuffs cutting into his jaw as she forced his head up and back. Hardwood stumbled around for a few seconds, reaching up until he finally managed to get a hold of her. He fell forward a bit, but he pulled her off of him, throwing her over his head. Harley rolled off, but landed on her feet. Hardwood stood up just as Harley kicked out, her foot coming up to catch him in the throat with enough force that she broke his adam’s apple. The man choked and stumbled, falling to his knees.

Harley let out a muffled scream, throwing herself at him, knocking him flat on his back. She straddled the man and began to beat him in the face with her joined, balled fists, screaming and pounding his face, over and over again until she only saw a red haze, aware of nothing around her as she continued to beat on the man’s face until there was nothing recognizable, cutting her hands on bone and teeth, but even then she didn’t stop.

*

Joker stopped and leaned against a tree, leaving a bloody handprint when he pushed away. His heart was slamming against his sternum and his breathing was shallow. He couldn’t have missed her!! She had to be here in the park somewhere, but the trees seemed too thick, as if the very trees were against him, causing themselves to become thicker, the darkness heavier. He could hear his people moving behind him.

Alex’s voice was a whisper. “Anything?” he asked.

Joker shook his head. “We need to split up—we have to find her!” he ground out between clenched teeth. “We have to find her before anyone else does….”

Alex looked back the way they had come. He wasn’t sure where Batman was, but he knew the vigilante couldn’t be far behind them, and more cops had to be here soon. (He could only hope that the Irish, who were supposed to be keeping any other police busy and away from them were doing their part of the plan.)

Alex frowned. He needed to get his friend out of here before they became trapped. It wouldn’t do anyone any good if they were all arrested. “We need to fucking hurry before the Bat or more cops show up.”

Joker pushed off from the tree, ignoring Alex. His limp from the bullet wound was becoming worse. He walked a few steps (Alex looked back at the rest of the gang) when Joker stopped in mid stride….he had heard something, he was sure of it. Picking up speed, Joker disappeared into the darkness.

Alex frowned, having not heard anything except maybe the sounds of sirens in the distance, and hurried after Joker.

*

Joker pushed his way through the park, following what he was sure were the sounds of a fight until he broke through into a clearing. He could see the city’s ambient light reflecting off the water of one of Robinson Park’s three lakes. His eyes looked over the water, and there at the side, near the edge...a figure...Then he saw her...

Joker’s eyes widened, his body began to tremble. He murmured softly, barely above a whisper. “Harley?”

His eyes focused more fully in the darkness (a gift of his acidic wrought reincarnation.) He could see her blonde hair, the way she moved. Louder he said her name, pain choking his voice. “Harley.”

Joker began to run as fast as his wounded leg would allow toward her. “HARLEY!!”

Harley had just pushed herself to her feet, leaving Hardwood dead under her, weaving a little as she stood up when she heard a familiar voice call her name through the darkness.

Harley turned toward the precious sound, the shadows at the edges of her vision still trying to get her attention, moving and shifting, but now, the fear she had been feeling started to recede as her focus zeroed in on a limping figure. The ambient glow brushed over green hair, pale skin... Joker...her puddin…he was here...he was here!

Her voice was rough and she was overcome with a mix of joy and fear that her mind was lying to her, her voice a whisper as tears spilled over to race down her cheeks under the mask. “Puddin?”

Joker lips trembled, tears cutting through the blood on his face.

“Harley…” His voice choked when he whispered her name. “My Harley…”

Harley was sobbing. “Puddin….PUDDIN!” she shouted from behind her mask.

She rushed toward him, Joker rushing toward her. Within seconds they slammed into each other's arms.

Joker wrapped his arms tight around her, lifting her off her feet. “Harley! Harley!!”

Harley sobbed, unable to speak. Her hands pinned between them, she curled into him, wrapping her legs around his waist. Joker held her close, slowly sinking to the ground, breaking down.

“Harley...my pumpkin pie...my girl.” His voice was deep with emotion as he held her tight, his face buried against her shoulder.

Sitting on his knees with Harley on his lap, Joker loosened his grip on her, reaching up to take her face between his hands, only now really seeing the mask that the Blackgate guards had strapped on her. More tears spilled over as he gazed into her eyes. “Oh Harley, what did they do to you?” His long, bloody fingers ran over the mask until he found the buckles. He moved as quickly as he could, fighting only a little with the buckles until he had them loose. He pulled the masked gently from her face, tossing it aside.

Joker hissed, seeing the places where the leather had cut into her face.

“Oh my girl,” Joker whispered touching her face tenderly, his eyes roaming over her features, his fingers caressing her cheeks, her lips, and around her eyes. “My precious, precious girl. I’m so sorry I was late.” He brushed her hair back tenderly.

Harley’s lips trembled as she stared into his eyes. “Are you real?”

Joker smiled, brushing his fingers across her split lips. “I’m real Harley. I’m real and I’m here.”

He cupped her face, his fingers brushing along her jaw guiding her close, his eyes never leaving hers, before he kissed her.

Harley choked on her tears when his lips touched hers.

That was the moment they both heard a deep, familiar voice.

“Joker, Harley Quinn.”

They both turned to see Batman and Robin standing at the edge of the trees.
Stitches

Batman took a step closer to Joker and Harley.

He moved slowly, taking careful steps. He held his hands out, showing himself to be unarmed (though Joker had no doubt Batman was, in fact, armed, but was simply trying to show he wasn’t ready to attack, yet.) The caped vigilante moved with the caution of someone approaching a wild animal. (Joker supposed he should be flattered that Batsy recognized that he was dangerous.) Next to Batman, one step behind the dark knight, was his sidekick, Robin, who was watching with his lips held in a thin frown. The eyes behind his mask darted from Batman to Joker.

“Jok…” Batman stopped moving, his hands at his sides, and stopped himself from finishing the name. He pressed his lips together on the word ‘Joker’ before he switched to what he hoped was a name that the Joker still recognized, a name that Batman hoped was still part of Joker’s psyche. “Jack…” Batman’s tone had switched from caped crusader of Gotham to older brother. “…turn yourself in. Let me help you…” He took a breath forcing himself to think of this man before him, this Joker as Jack, not solely as the Joker, though it was difficult. Looking at the man with too pale skin, green hair, blood red lips, and manic blue eyes, all Batman saw was Joker, the man who had killed too many already, the man who had killed just now to get that woman back.

Batman’s gaze shifted to Harley. He found it was an effort to speak when his gaze settled on her. He glanced over her, seeing that she had been beaten, hurt, her hands bloody and cuffed and he found that he had little sympathy left for the good doctor. His anger at this woman was intense, this woman whom he blamed for dragging his brother so far down the rabbit hole that Jack could no longer see the top. She had twisted his broken brother into a murderer. Bruce...Batman was sure of it, sure that with the right help, Jack would have been fine...His rage at Dr. Quinzel burned in him, deep in the pit of his stomach. He wanted to hurt her. He was ashamed to admit it, but he did. He wanted her to pay for what she had done to his brother, his fragile little brother.

When he had come to see her in Blackgate there was a part of him that hoped she would abandon his brother, give Batman the fuel he needed to break her hold on Jack. Batman’s jaw clenched. She had been meant to help, but now look at Jack...he was no longer Bruce Wayne’s brother, but some mad clown...someone that Bruce didn’t know or understand. A stranger. Batman thought of their parents, of how disappointed they would be in him for not protecting Jack like he was supposed to, for letting this happen. If only Jack hadn’t been so stubborn all these years, if only Jack had listened to him, obeyed him instead of constantly testing him, pushing against him, always being so damn unpredictable, unstable...why couldn’t Jack have just been normal?!

Batman cut off his train of thought. It would do him no good to go chasing that thread of regret, hate, and anger. He needed to focus on right now because there was nothing he could do about the past, about the mistakes that were made, when he had a chance to save Jack right now. If only Batman could get him back into Arkham, get Dr. Quinzel’s hooks out of the younger man, then maybe there was a chance to save Jack Wayne. Jack could never lead a normal life now, but maybe he could live a better life Bruce hoped.

Batman pushed past his own feelings to focus on what he could do now to save his brother. He took a deep breath through his nose. This was going to be hard, but, if he could get Jack to agree to Arkham, once there, separating him from Dr. Quinzel would be easier. Not like last time--this time would be different. Bruce would be there more, help his brother on his way to recovery, but first he needed to get his brother away from his drug of choice, Harley Quinn, the former Dr. Quinzel.

“Let me help you both. Get you to Arkham to get the help you need. Maybe you can find some semblance of a normal life Jack? You can’t keep living like this…” Batman stopped exactly halfway between the trees’ edge and his brother. He didn’t want to get too close, just in case things went sideways. Batman dropped his voice low, clearly trying to keep the conversation between the four of them.

“You are still my broth…” Batman hesitated for a second before he continued. “…my brother, let me help you. You are sick Jack, you are clearly sick and hurt. Let me help you, let me be your brother.” Batman stood still, his hands out. “Please, for our parents’ sake, you don’t need to be alone, let me get you both help. I will be there for you this time.” It was clear that these two had taken a beating tonight. Batman knew that if it came to a fight, he and Robin could probably overtake them considering the state they were in, but he hoped he could avoid an all out physical fight.

Batman watched his brother, his mask automatically changing the way he saw them in the darkness of the park and the ambient light from the city. He could hear the gentle hum of the tiny built in computer (thanks to Barb) that shifted the way his mask lenses absorbed and distributed the light, allowing him to see more clearly. It wasn’t much of a change, but it did allow him to see the discarded leather mask (he recognized it from Blackgate. The masks were used for particularly difficult patients.) He saw the wounds on his brother’s face and knuckles, the fact that Joker looked unhealthy, too thin for Jack’s slight frame, but Batman’s attention was drawn to Jack’s leg, the way he was awkwardly holding it out where he and Harley sat on the ground. There looked to be fresh blood there, soaked through the pants legs and continuing to run slowly down his brother’s leg, probably a bullet wound Batman surmised, though he was too far away to see what the injury was exactly. Batman transferred his gaze to Harley, noted that she looked to be just as broken and battered, maybe even more. She was thinner than when Batman had visited her in Blackgate, her skin grey-tinged and there was a strange light in her eyes. If he had to hazard a guess, Batman would assume she was high on something. It was clear she had been in a fight; several of her wounds did not look consistent with a car crash, but more like someone had punched her in the face. He noted that she was still handcuffed, there was evidence of fresh and dried blood on her wrists, along with ragged, painful looking wounds where the cuffs had cut into her skin.

Joker stood slowly with Harley’s help. He stared at Batman as tears slowly ran down his cheeks, cutting through the blood and revealing trails of snow white skin underneath. He wrapped an arm around Harley, holding her close to him, but, Batman noted, she was also helping him stand; Jack was favoring his other leg. Batman transferred his gaze once more to his brother’s leg...a bullet wound, now he could see it more clearly, a dark, nasty looking spot in his brother’s thigh was clearly caused by a gunshot.

Batman watched him, his eyes slightly narrowed behind his mask. He saw the wet glistening fresh blood on Jack’s leg whenever he moved in what the little light was available. His brother was hurt more than he had thought. Jack kept his hold on Harley who leaned against Jack, but her eyes were on Batman, her gaze cold. She was angry at him, maybe as angry as Batman was at her. She looked pale, drained, and on edge. For once she looked more insane than his brother...Batman closed his eyes, finding it hard to acknowledge that this man, this Joker was still his brother Jack. Joker stared at his brother for a long moment before he spoke, his voice pitched just as low. “You know big brother, it’s far too late for that--we crossed that bridge and blew it up!” He laughed softly adjusting his grip on Harley as if he were afraid she would vanish if he let go of her.

“Help me? By locking me away in that funny farm? Get me pumped full of drugs to keep me under control and compliant? Just like you always wanted--a good, quiet little brother who wouldn’t get in your way. Especially now that I know you are just as crazy as I am, but…” Joker lifted his hairless brows at his brother. “Your crazy is better than mine, isn’t it?” Joker shook his head. “Even when it comes to insanity, your brand is the more acceptable, isn’t it?” Joker’s brows lowered as he glared at Batman. “You are always trying to lock me away Brucie, like I’m the only one who needs help in this fucked up family of ours. As if getting rid of me would cure what ails the Waynes.” Joker leaned a little more heavily on Harley, his leg aching. “Anyway, haven’t we had this conversation before? You claim to care, claim you love me, and only want the best for me.” Joker laughed while he gestured with his free hand putting on a high pitched voice laced thick with sarcasm. “Oh Jackie, please stop hurting people and just being an all around bad guy. Let your big brother, who is just as crazy as you, help you get better while never admitting that I have a problem too. Because of course I’m always right and I would never be as unhinged as you.” Joker rolled his eyes. “You are such a sanctimonious bastard Brucie. Always were.”

Robin hissed loudly having walked to stand next to Bruce and pointed a finger at Joker and Harley. “Batman, you can’t help someone like him! He’s beyond help! They don’t need Arkham, they need prison. You need to send him to prison, you need to send them both to prison, lock them in a hole deep enough they can’t hurt anyone ever again. You can’t help people like that. They don’t deserve your help; they are a waste of time.”

Joker narrowed his eyes at Robin. “People like that? Wow, judgy much? At least I’m not the one running around in tights.” Joker grinned with a curl to his lips, but his eyes were cold. “You aren’t family kid, so shut the fuck up.”

Robin snarled back. “Well I guess I’m more family than you since he chose me over you.”

The moment the words were out of his mouth, Dick paled beneath his mask when he saw the way Joker’s face changed. It was a gradual shift in expression, like a ripple on the surface of water, but there was no mistaking the expression of pure hatred that crossed over Joker’s face. His blue eyes had a feverish cast, piercing the younger man. Robin sucked in a startled breath, as if Joker’s hate filled gaze was an attack.

Batman growled a command that was simply the young man’s name. “Robin.”

Joker’s tone was soft, with just a slight sing-song quality to it, but what made Robin’s blood go cold was the smile that spread across Joker’s face. The smile showed off all his teeth, stained with blood, the lips bloody red, and stretched almost too wide in a smile that didn’t reach Joker’s icy blue eyes. Joker laughed, a low, frightening sound that Robin could feel in every bone. Robin felt a shudder move through him, cold settling over him as he stared back at Joker, unable to break eye contact.

Joker sneered. “Oh, he did, didn’t he? Chose you over me, made you his little sidekick, made you the little brother he always wanted--obedient, compliant, docile. I bet you follow every order, every little command don’t you? You are such a good boy.” Joker laughed. “Well…you just remember that little Robin, because there is going to be a day when he isn’t there for you, when you don’t perform properly, when you fuck up, and he has no use for you.” Joker turned his attention back to Bruce, but this time it was Jack looking back at his brother, not Joker. The pain in Jack’s gaze was only there briefly, however before it was buried deep. Harley saw it, close enough to see the pain in Jack’s gaze, the hint of sorrow in Jack’s voice that quickly became Joker’s voice again.

“Brucie...or I guess maybe you’re more Batman than Bruce, hm?” He laughed, his grip on Harley tightening. “Though I suppose I’m more Joker than Jack too.” He chuckled lightly tilting his head, gazing at his brother, his enemy. “I will just have to work on my tactics, eh?” Harley felt a twist in her chest looking at Joker. She could see the hint of unshed tears in his blue eyes, but Joker smiled wider. “If you can’t love me Batman, if you won’t love me, I’ll just settle for hate.” Joker’s chin trembled slightly, though only Harley saw the tiny movement. “I’ll make you hate me so much that you won’t be able to control yourself Batman. I’ll make you want to kill me. I’ll make you lose control and really show me some emotion Batman, make you show me how much you really care.”

Joker giggled. “What’s hate but love with a little friction?”
Batman growled. “Joker…”

Harley had been fighting the fear toxin and the sedative’s effects to make her run when she saw Batman. The only thing keeping her from losing her control was Joker’s hold on her. His presence helped her fight the drugs in her system, but Batman still looked as if he were shifting from a black demonic monster, then into Batman, while Robin looked like a twisted creature with a mouth full of fanged teeth wanting to tear out their throats; the young man that he actually was would shine through the monster, but the images were becoming twisted in her drug-fogged mind. She shuddered, fighting the drugs’ effects, but when she saw the hurt, the pain in her lover’s face, that made her furious. No one, no one was allowed to hurt her puddin! She moved surprisingly quickly, so fast that even Joker didn’t react, his attention divided between Robin and his brother, when she reached under Joker’s jacket with her cuffed hands and grabbed the pistol she knew would be there from its harness under his arm. She spun around, shivering almost uncontrollably, but her focus was such that when she fired three shots in quick succession from the pistol, her aim was good. The sound of the gunshots was loud, shattering the silence. The bullets slammed into Batman’s chest, knocking the dark knight off his feet.

Joker started to laugh. “Oh you pissed her off good Batsy!!

Robin yelled. “BATMAN!!”

The young man spun around, smoothly pulling out and throwing his own version of a batarang, but while Batman’s were bat shaped, these, while similarly shaped, were rounder, more disc shaped. The edges were just as sharp and could wound just as effectively as Batman’s. He threw out three in quick succession, one cutting across Harley’s fingers, hitting the gun while at the same time slicing a deep wound across the back of her hand, knocking the weapon out of her shaking hands to send the gun flying away from her. The second disc-shaped weapon struck Harley in the forehead, cutting deep across her temple and into her hairline. Blood bloomed red across her pale skin.

The third was aimed at Joker.

Harley cried out, staggering back two steps. The impact of the disc weapon slicing deep into her head spun her slightly before she dropped to the ground.

Joker snarled, turning his attention on Robin, catching the third weapon out of the air before it struck him. Even with Joker catching it, the sharp edges of the weapon cut into his palm. But with a grin that would give Dick Grayson nightmares for a long time afterwards, Joker threw the ‘birdarang’ back at him. Robin attempted to duck out of the way, but his own device hit him in the thigh, buried deep into the boy’s flesh.

Robin cried out falling to the ground just as Batman got to his feet.

Batman yelled. “ROBIN!!”

Joker had dropped to the ground, nearly falling over as he fell to his knees grabbing at Harley. He gathered her up, tugging her onto his lap, pulling her against his chest. “Harley??!!”

Harley’s head rolled, her eyes glazed, blood covering the side of her face. “Puddin?”

Batman snarled. “That’s it Joker! You…”

Batman didn’t get to finish what he was about to say because at that moment everyone heard a voice yell from behind Batman.

“JOKER!! HARLEY!!”
Joker looked up, cradling Harley against him, quickly becoming covered in blood from her head wound. He knew that voice—it was Jason! Joker looked around trying to find Jason in the darkened wood just as two gas grenades flew over Batman’s head to hit the ground between Batman and Joker. The canisters exploded into twin bursts of thick green gas, dropping what little visibility there was in the small clearing to almost zero. The grenade attack was followed by the shadows of moving figures rushing onto the scene. A second later Bane’s roar rang out, recognizable to Joker, but sounding like some gargantuan beast to Batman and Robin. The sound of trees being knocked aside and breaking accompanied another furious roar.

Batman held a hand to his chest. Pain radiated throughout his chest despite the bullet proof weaving in his suit having absorbed much of the impact. He looked around trying to get a bead on who was attacking, but for the moment, the gas was obscuring his vision. He tried to adjust his mask’s visual properties, but nothing worked as he moved, reaching out for Robin. His hand connected with the younger man’s outstretched arm. Robin reached up and wrapped a hand around Batman’s wrist. Batman reached out with his other hand, wrapping it around the young man’s arm.

“Robin, can you walk?” Batman pulled the younger man to his feet. “We need to move!”

Robin groaned. “I think so Batman.”

Batman hissed, deciding he needed to pick up Robin when a fist the size of a medicine ball came out of the thick green fog. Batman almost didn’t move in time, but he heard something and turned, moving just a fraction of an inch; but it was enough to save his life. Instead of a possibly fatal blow to his already bruised chest, the massive fist made a glancing strike across Batman’s shoulder, though the impact was enough to throw Batman back several feet, ripping his arm out of Robin’s grasp.

Robin let out a startled cry.

Joker was struggling to get to his feet while pulling Harley up with him at the same time. Harley moaned softly, her head rolling on his shoulder while he tried to support her weight, but his leg was refusing to obey him. Joker tried not to panic, but he couldn’t get this close and lose her again. He couldn’t lose her. Not again. His heart pounded hard, the sound filling his ears. If he lost her, coming this close to bringing her home, he didn’t think he could survive it.

Joker got Harley and himself standing, barely, kept struggling to stay on his feet, his arm wrapped possessively and fearfully around her waist while shadows swam out of the smoky fog.

Jason came rushing toward Joker; the gas seemed to separate from him as he appeared breathing hard. Jason looked simultaneously happy to see them and a little scared when he saw all the blood covering both Joker and Harley. Jason looked back the way he had come before he reached out to lay a hand on Joker’s shoulder. “Joker! Come on, the cops are on their way.” Joker nodded with a smile that didn’t last but a moment. “Jason! I’m glad to see you! Help me with Harley. I’ve been shot in the leg—I don’t think I can move very fast and support her.” It pained him to say he couldn’t support her, as if he was failing her again.

Jason nodded, moving to take Joker’s right arm, putting the limb over his shoulders while Joker struggled to hold Harley up against his side just as Alex came rushing forward with Frost beside him. Frost moved with purpose, rushing to help with Harley without a word as Alex grimaced seeing Harley’s face covered in blood. “Fuck me. She okay?”

Harley made a soft moan, leaning into Frost.

Agatha’s voice could be heard yelling somewhere in the smoke. “Come on guys—this way! Get Joker and Harley and come on!!"

Joker sagged against Jason just as Bane appeared, the veins just under his skin glowing a soft emerald green clearly visible in the darkness and smoke. The big man was breathing heavily through his teeth, his eyes wild. He looked to be just barely keeping himself under control while he knotted his hands into and out of fists. A green flare sprang to life just off to Bane’s left showing Bea holding a small green flame in the palm of her hand allowing Joker to now see the faces of his gang, ghostly and haunted looking in the green fire’s glow against the equally green smoke.

Agatha motioned with her pistol. “Come on! Viktoria and Trope are waiting for us, but we need to move before the cops find either of them!”

They all looked up when they heard the beat of a helicopter. It sounded as if it was right overhead.

Alex put his arm over his face, looking up. He could see the helicopter. “Oh fuck me, it’s the press!! Worse than the fucking cops!”

That was the moment a spotlight started to erratically sweep over the smokey area.

Agatha hissed. “A police helicopter won’t be far behind--we need to move people!”

Jason narrowed his eyes. “Good thing I’m always prepared.”

Agatha hissed. “Jason, no!”

Jason let go of Joker, stepping aside and pulled a weapon that he had been carrying on his back, a Beretta PMX, and began firing at the helicopter. The aircraft wobbled in the air for a moment. Clearly the pilot was panicking.

Agatha yelled. “LET’S GO!!”

Bane stepped forward, and before anyone could protest, he grabbed Joker with one arm and Harley with the other, lifting them both off their feet. Agatha stared for a split second before she took off running, the rest of the gang following close behind, Jason periodically firing at the helicopter.

*

Agatha led them quickly through Robinson Park, clearly knowing the layout of the park better than anyone else here. She led them through the trees until they suddenly came out onto a street.

Joker looked around in surprise from his position in Bane’s arms. “The Diamond District?”

Agatha grinned and nodded at her nephew before she motioned for everyone to follow. “This way.”

Their small, unusual looking group raced across the street, Bane shrinking noticeably the entire time, but still able to carry Joker and Harley easily. Agatha led the group down an alley while the sounds of police sirens filled the night air. They could hear several helicopters overhead as she guided them down a few more streets until they arrived at an alley where two vans waited, one that was painted with the name of Funny Business Laundry, while the other van had Harlequin Floor Cleaners painted on its side. Behind the wheel of one van was Dr. October and behind the wheel of the other van was Trope, her hair streaked blue and green, sitting beside Thea, with matching blue and green streaked hair, in the passenger seat.

Joker laughed. “Hey, I didn’t know about these!”
Agatha smiled. “I thought an alternate escape plan might be a good idea. Come on, everyone load up. Meet back at the amusement park in an hour. I probably don’t need to remind you to make sure you are not noticed or followed.”

Agatha pulled open the back of the van with Trope and Thea, motioning for Bane to put Joker and Harley inside before he moved to get in the van with Viktoria. Bea and Jason got into the van with Bane while Alex, Frost and Agatha got in with Joker and Harley; Agatha turned around and slammed the doors shut.

“Go!” she yelled at Trope who nodded, giving Joker and Harley a look of concern before she focused her attention on getting them out of there before the police—or anyone else—found them and started asking questions. She knew it wouldn’t take long for the entire area to go under lockdown.

The two vans pulled out of the alley, first one, then a minute later the second. The plan was for them not only to drive away from the area, from each other, heading in two different directions, but to drive around for an hour or so before heading back to the amusement park where all of them would lie low. The Irish had their own escape plan, but they were supposed to send someone over to the park sometime tomorrow to report in and let Joker know what had happened on their end.

Trope turned the radio on inside the van, flipping through the music until she found something she thought would be soothing; the cheerful sounds of “Daydream Believer” by the Monkees started to play over the speakers. She also turned the music on as a way to keep herself calm. The amount of blood she had seen on Joker and Harley had scared her. The thought of something happening to either one of them frightened the hell out of her.

She glanced at Thea, who reached over and laid a hand on her girlfriend’s knee giving her an encouraging smile. Trope smiled back, her white-knuckled grip on the steering wheel loosening slightly. Joker and Harley, Thea, and the rest of the gang were her only family. They were the people she counted on, loved...she would do anything for Joker or Harley, anything they asked of her. Seeing them like this hurt her. Trope took a deep breath and focused on her driving and the music. Now that they had Harley, she would get them home safe, all of them.

Inside the back of the utility van that Trope was driving there were no seats; the entire space was open, but the floor had a cheap beige carpet laid down throughout the interior which was now quickly becoming stained a dark red as Joker bled all over it. Alex had taken a seat on the floor behind Trope, his head back against the wall. In his one hand, he still held his gun resting on his bent knee. He let out a loud sigh, his eyes closed. “God, I need a drink.”

Frost sat down on Joker’s other side. The big man looked at Alex, his lips bloody and slightly swollen, and he sported a nasty pressure cut along one cheek. A dark purple bruise was forming along his cheek mixing with the purplish swelling around one eye.

Frost muttered. “Several drinks.”

Joker glanced up at Alex, then at Frost, and chuckled weakly. “You look how I feel Frosty.”

Frost chuckled. “You look worse than that.”

Joker giggled. “Oh thanks.”

Frost grinned though it was clear smiling hurt him. “You’re welcome Boss.”

Thea looked around her seat at their little group. “You all look like you just got back from hell.”

Alex laughed. “I think we were just on the fucking toilet seat of hell. One wrong move we would Thea shared a grimace with her girlfriend. “Well that’s a charming analogy.”

Alex grinned. “Only the fucking best from me.”

Joker’s laugh turned into a cough, making it difficult to speak for a moment. “That’s Alex, the keeper of the gang’s class.”

Alex snorted setting his gun down to give Joker the finger.

Agatha was rummaging around a small chest that sat behind Thea’s seat, her nose wrinkled as she pulled various things out: ropes, more gas grenades that Jason must have stored in here, she found one of Joker’s laughing gas canisters, and a package of cigarettes. “God damn it! I know I put a first aid kit in here…” she muttered. “Ah, here it is!”

Joker sat on the floor, his back against the side of the van between Alex and Frost. Harley rested between his outstretched legs, curled against him, her head on his chest. The wound across her temple was a mat of bloody hair and congealing blood making it difficult to see that side of her face. Her pale skin looked like Joker’s, ashen, with dark circles and some purplish bruising under her eyes. She had her eyes screwed shut, her cuffed hands resting against Joker’s chest. Joker had one arm wrapped protectively around her, holding her close, his lips and nose pressed against the top of her head; he kept kissing her hair. With his free hand, he glided his fingers over her back gently. Harley’s eyes were closed, though she was muttering so softly, and somewhat incoherently.

“No more monsters...yes Harleen...I know...yes...the Scarecrow…” She shuddered and Joker tightened his hold in her even more. He looked down at her with a frown, his blue eyes dark with concern as his fingers moved through her blood soaked hair to gently pull the bloody strands away from her face. She looked so small and frail in his arms, but he knew she had fought to be back with him. His sweet pumpkin...his girl. Joker closed his eyes as he pressed his lips against the top of her head. A gentle smile settled on his red lips; he had her in his arms, he had his girl.

Agatha moved over to crouch on her knees in front of Joker and Harley. She frowned looking at the two of them. They both looked too thin, like haunted figures, ghosts of themselves, with Jackie’s already unnaturally pale skin looking ashen, his eyes looked to be set in sunken sockets of darkness when he looked at his aunt. Agatha’s eyes looked over Harley, who didn’t look much better than Jackie, though it was hard to see with the amount of blood covering her face and clothing. Her cuffed hands were ripped up at the wrists, caked with dried blood.

Agatha reached forward and gently pushed some of Harley’s hair back from her face. She shook her head; the older woman could see bruising on Harley’s face, bloody lips. Someone had hit her more softly, and somewhat incoherently.

Agatha moved over to crouch on her knees in front of Joker and Harley. She frowned looking at the two of them. They both looked too thin, like haunted figures, ghosts of themselves, with Jackie’s already unnaturally pale skin looking ashen, his eyes looked to be set in sunken sockets of darkness when he looked at his aunt. Agatha’s eyes looked over Harley, who didn’t look much better than Jackie, though it was hard to see with the amount of blood covering her face and clothing. Her cuffed hands were ripped up at the wrists, caked with dried blood.

Agatha reached forward and gently pushed some of Harley’s hair back from her face. She shook her head; the older woman could see bruising on Harley’s face, bloody lips. Someone had hit her more than once.

Joker’s voice trembled as he looked at his aunt. “Auntie?”

Agatha looked up into Joker’s eyes. She frowned slightly reaching out to stroke his face. “She’ll be all right. We have her now.”

Joker nodded laying his cheek against the top of Harley’s head.

Agatha pressed her lips together. She felt like she had aged in the last few weeks, sure she was going to lose Jackie, the way he was wasting away without Harley, worried they would never get Harley back. The thought of Harley languishing away in prison, or Arkham, she shuddered at the thought. Then there was Bruce...she loved him too, but...God he was so much like his father, a righteous, pompous ass with no idea how the real world, the real Gotham worked. Instead, he charged around like a goddamn hurricane trying to force things into the way he saw them. Bruce had just taken that attitude one step further by putting on a cape and running around Gotham supposedly righting wrongs. Agatha felt a momentarily sick feeling in her stomach. She and Thomas had been a lot like Bruce and Jack...but...Agatha pushed those thoughts away. She needed to focus. She couldn’t fix the past and it didn’t look like she could fix the future either. She glanced over at Frost. “You think you can get the cuffs off of her?”

Frost glanced over at Joker who nodded before the former cop reached over to gently pick up Harley’s hands, examining the cuffs while Agatha gently pulled back one of Harley’s eyelids. Harley didn’t focus on her, her eyes moving back and forth clearing seeing something else. Agatha frowned, studying her pupil before glancing up at Jack.

“She’s been drugged. No idea with what, but I think it's wearing off--and she’s fighting it. She’s exhausted, probably dropped her defenses now that she’s with you.” Agatha smiled and gently stroked Harley’s face. “Good night's sleep is what she needs most, and some painkillers, but I think she’ll be fine. She’s tough, a real fighter.” Agatha smiled at her nephew. “Being with you will probably be the best medicine for her, Jackie.”

Joker smiled kissing the top of Harley's head. Agatha reached out and brushed back locks of Jack’s green hair that had fallen across his face. She kept her fears and concerns to herself and she said quietly. “You’ll both be okay.”

Jack’s chin trembled as tears slowly rolled down his cheeks. “Thanks Auntie.”

“Now, let’s look at that leg.”

Jack opened his mouth to protest, but Agatha immediately pressed a finger against his lips. “Shush, I know what you are going to say, but you need that leg looked at first. I’m sure Harley would agree with me. She’ll be fine for the few minutes it takes me to get that bullet out of your leg.”

They both heard a quiet voice, rough, but determined whisper. “Damn right I would.”

Jack broke down, tears rushing down his cheeks, but his smile was wide when he looked down at Harley to see her eyes blinking as she tried to focus on him, a little smile on her lips.

“Harley!” Jack gasped, smiling down at her.

Harley pushed herself up. (Frost released her still cuffed hands he had been steadily working on getting off of her with a small wire. He noted to himself that he ought to keep a key for cuffs on him at all times.) She smiled looking like a victim of a slasher with the blood coating her face, but her eyes were a little clearer. She was still struggling with the remnants of the drugs in her system, but Jack’s eyes were on her smile, which was perfect, just like her.

“Puddin…” Harley looked at Jack. Her voice was soft as if she were still afraid this wasn’t real, tears slowly made their way down her face leaving lines through the blood on her cheeks. “My puddin…?”

Jack reached up with trembling hands to cup her face. “Harley, it’s me.” He caressed her cheeks, his thumbs moving through the still sticky blood. “My pumpkin pie.” He grinned wider still. “My girl.”

He pressed his lips against hers in a soft, tender kiss. He brushed his tongue along her lips, tasting her blood, but also tasting her, his Harley, the sweet taste of his precious wife. Harley made a soft, pained sound, tears rolling down from the corners of her eyes.
A bittersweet smile touched Agatha’s lips as she watched them for a moment before taking out the scissors from her kit and began cutting off the leg of Jack’s slacks to examine his leg while they kissed. Agatha pursed her lips, examining the wound before she removed a sterile razor from the kit at her side and began to expand the wound, cutting gently around the entrance to widen it enough to extract the bullet. Jack hissed only once while his aunt worked, but he was distracted enough with kissing Harley that he didn’t care what his aunt did to him. Agatha worked the bullet free slowly and carefully using the small razor and her fingers until she had eased the bullet out, dropping the spent bullet into a little plastic container meant to hold pills. She then worked slowly and carefully, cleaning the wound before stitching it up.

Harley opened her mouth against her husband’s lips, her tongue sliding into his mouth, caressing his tongue. She tasted blood and sweetness on Jack’s tongue and lips. She tasted Jack, her lover, her friend, her puddin. Jack lifted her cuffed hands and ducked his head between her arms, pulling her closer. The pain of his aunt working on his leg was numbed, not just from his acid dipped condition and shock, but because Harley was in his arms again. He held her closer, deepening the kiss further, his mouth moving over hers, trying to take in every part of her and the kiss, not wanting this to stop just in case he was wrong and this wasn’t real (he knew he was a little crazy, after all.) As long as he didn’t stop kissing her, this would last forever. Their tongues caressed slowly, twisting and turning, tasting each other. Harley moaned, leaning into Jack trying not to cry, but she couldn’t help it, she had dreamed of this moment for weeks, weeks that felt like years. She never wanted to stop kissing him, to feel the warmth of his body pressed against hers. The tears came regardless of her efforts, though they were tears of happiness and relief. Jack made a soft noise of want, need, and happiness, tugging her closer to him. The van and everyone around them, the pain, all of it fell away until it was just the two of them, in this moment. He had her back and nothing else mattered but that and the kiss.

Agatha sat back watching the two of them with a sigh when she was finished. Jack’s leg was wrapped in clean white gauze. She glanced at Frost with a smile. Frost looked bad, his face bruised, his lips bloody, but he grinned at her, his eyes light. He reached out to run his hand down her arm. Agatha caught his hand, bringing his knuckles up to her lips and kissed his hand. Agatha gave Frost his hand back before she silently took Jack’s injured hand from off of Harley’s back. She had expected him to fight her, but he didn’t; Jack simply held on tighter to Harley with his other hand. Agatha smiled a little at the way Jack didn’t react. He simply let his aunt take his hand, before her smile turned into a frown as she studied the deep cut that ran the length of his palm. It was far deeper than she had thought and it too would need stitches. She felt a little intrusive as she scooted closer, almost against Harley’s back in order to clean and awkwardly stitch up Jack’s hand and bandage it, but she was proud of herself when she accomplished her task, and all of that in a moving van.

“Okay you two, I need to look at Harley’s head,” Agatha said while cleaning off her hands. Jack gently nipped Harley’s lips, pulling away from her just a little. “Okay, but when you’re done…” He smirked at Harley.

Harley giggled and Jack was sure he had never heard a more beautiful sound. Jack reluctantly lifted her arms over his head, and they gazed at each other with such love and longing that it nearly broke Agatha’s heart.

She motioned at Harley. “Just lay your head against his chest, dear.”

Harley nodded, scooting to lay her head against Jack’s chest so that Agatha could examine the wound on her head. Agatha moved in closer and studied the wound with an experienced eye. She gently eased the bloody, matted hair back. Harley winced and inhaled a little sharply, but Jack’s hand was on her back, rubbing tenderly.
Agatha dabbed at the wound using some antiseptic to clean away the blood and get a better look. Alex glanced over and went pale as his eyes widened. “Why’s that fucking white like that?”

Agatha glanced up at Alex, then back down at Harley. “You doing okay?”

Harley nodded. “Hurts, but I’m okay.”

Agatha glanced at Jack, then Alex. “Okay, this is going to need stitches; the white in the wound is bone. Whatever cut her, cut right to the bone. It’s a clean cut, but it’s going to scar into her hair.”

Alex paled further and he swallowed hard. “Bone?”

Agatha nodded.

Jack’s eyes narrowed, the blue going cold as he hissed low and threatening. “That sidekick of Bats scarred her?”

Agatha frowned and nodded. “Now both of you be still while I stitch this up. I’m going to make the stitches as small as I can to reduce the scarring, but no jiggling, all right?”

Trope gritted her teeth, concentrating on driving as carefully as she could.

Harley simply frowned because while it hurt, the cut didn’t feel like it hurt enough to be open to the bone.

“Robin,” Jack whispered through clenched teeth.

Agatha said nothing more, but rather simply went to work, cleaning the area, and stitching up the wound. She did her best to make the stitches small before cleaning it again when she was done. Agatha counted mentally as she worked, counting sixteen stitches. She frowned as she placed a bandage over the wound. Agatha next examined Harley’s hands, stitching up the back of her hand—another five stitches—followed by cleaning Harley’s wrists and bandaging them as well. (Frost had finally removed the handcuffs while Agatha worked on Harley’s head.) When she was finished Agatha smiled, satisfied with her work under the circumstances.

“I got some painkillers back at the park. I want you both to take them and sleep. Lots of sleep, all right?” Agatha looked between them with a semi-stern look.

Jack nodded as did Harley. Jack held Harley close as he whispered. “Thank you auntie.”

She smiled turning to Frost. “Your turn big guy.”

Frost wrinkled his nose. “I don’t have anything that needs stitches and no bullet wounds.”

Agatha narrowed her eyes at him. “You let me be the judge of that. I’ve had more injuries than the lot of you combined in my career; you just let me examine you and shut up.”

Alex chuckled. “Yeah Frost, shut the fuck up.”

Jack chuckled holding Harley tight. All was right with the world at the moment.

* * *

By the time they had returned to the amusement park they called home, Agatha had Frost cleaned up and bandaged, and a few of their small group dozed in the back of the van. Everyone was exhausted. Trope sang as she drove, having left the radio station on the Oldies. Her voice was light and sweet, with Thea singing along softly on a few songs, lulling Harley to sleep against Jack’s chest. Jack remained awake watching Harley and listening, waiting for trouble, still not quite able to let himself relax. He wanted to make sure he had his wife home before he gave in to exhaustion. Frost was sleeping beside him. The big man looked strangely child-like while he slept. Alex was snoring like a freight train and Jack’s Aunt was resting between Frost’s legs, much like Harley was between his, but her eyes were open, watching Jack.

She smiled when he glanced over at her. Jack returned her smile, neither of them saying a word.

A few moments after they had arrived back home, Viktoria turned into the amusement park with the rest of the gang.

Harley, still a little groggy from having dozed off on his chest, helped Jack out of the van, wrapping her arm around his waist so he could lean on her. He winced, going a little paler for a split second as he adjusted himself on his feet.

Agatha frowned watching them. “I’ll be back in a bit with the pills for the two of you.”

Jack nodded. “Thanks.”

“You both should eat something too.”

Trope put her hand up. “Why don’t Thea and I go grab everyone some take out?”

Harley grinned. “That sounds great.”

Bane, now his normal size, looked tired, but grinned happily. “I could eat an entire restaurant.”

The group laughed with Viktoria patting Bane on the stomach. “I do love to watch you eat baby.”

Jack smiled, but his blue eyes were serious as he looked at everyone. “Thank you, all of you, for helping me bring Harley home.”

Bane smiled, his arm around Viktoria. “We’re family.”

Jason nodded, his hands resting in his front pockets, the gesture making him look years younger than his mid-twenties. “You guys mean the world to me. I’ll do anything for you, any one of you.”

The rest of the group murmured their agreement.

Jack shared a smile with Harley. Harley said softly. “You’re all our family.”

Agatha stepped forward and hugged them both. “Now—rest, get cleaned up, and I’ll bring the pills and food.” She turned and looked at everyone else. “Okay guys, let’s eat and get some rest.”

Jack grinned turning with Harley and looking at their little house on the park grounds. “Home sweet home.”

Harley blinked several times doing her best not to tear up, but she failed. “I almost didn’t think I was going to come home.”

Jack frowned, giving her shoulders a gentle squeeze. “I’m sorry Harls.”

She smiled at him, making his heart flutter. “Don’t be sorry puddin--you came for me. I’m home,” she said softly before she helped Jack to the door.
With her hair wet from washing it in the sink, Harley sat on the floor of their room on a blanket she had spread out. She was completely naked except for the bandages she wore on her wounds. Jack, his hair also wet from Harley washing it for him in the same sink in their bathroom, sat across from her, completely naked as well except for his own bandages. They both looked paler than their naturally ghost white skin usually was, stained red and brown with blood, a kaleidoscope of bruises on both of them. Their bedroom was dark except for the one bedside lamp that cast a soft glow like starlight into the room. Between them sat a large bowl of soapy water and a couple of washcloths.

Jack’s gaze wandered slowly over Harley’s naked body. She had lost weight and there looked to be a few new scars on her milky skin. He saw a haunted look in her blue eyes. He knew they needed to talk about things, things he needed to know about while she had been gone, but not tonight.

He had missed her so much. It wasn’t just the sex, the intimacy, but he had missed everything about Harley—the smell of her skin, her smile, her laugh, the feel of her hair against his cheek, talking to her, the sound of her voice when she spoke or laughed, watching her brush her hair, holding her, sharing the parts of himself that he would share with no one else other than her. Part of him was terrified that this wasn’t real, that somehow he had cracked completely and she was simply an illusion brought on by his need for her. But he had noted the tattoos on her legs when he had helped her undress, black inked messages binding them together. She had written their names on her legs, etching her pain into her own skin. It hurt him to see how much she had missed him, had marked on her skin like that...but if this was a dream, he would never have done that do her. He had brushed his fingers along the marks which made him almost blind with the desire to kill everyone in that prison...but he would find out each one, each individual, guard, prisoner or administrator who had hurt her, and he would skin them alive, every damned one of them for hurting Harley. He placed those thoughts aside for now, his attention fully on Harley.

Harley felt a twist in her chest when she saw how thin Jack had become while she was gone. There was a haunted look in his eyes (that she didn’t realize was also reflected in her own) that hadn’t been there before. She was also scared that he wasn’t real, that Crane had somehow won and broken her until she had fallen into a delusion. After the things she had seen while under Crane’s thumb, she doubted herself. But this felt real...it had to be real. She didn’t think she could cope if it wasn’t. She would break because she needed Jack to be real, to be here with her. She didn’t think she could live another day if this wasn’t real, if her puddin wasn’t here with her...she wouldn’t want to live another day without him.

Both of them were silent, not needing to speak. She smiled and pushed her doubts aside, picking up one of the cloths, soaking it in the soapy water before she got up on her knees. Harley scooted next to him, sitting on her knees beside him and began to caress his skin with the cloth to wash away the blood, the grime, and the pain of their separation.

Jack smiled at her too, doing the same, (though he remained sitting, unable to sit on his knees at the moment) by picking up the other cloth and slowly, tenderly, ran it over her skin. They were quiet while they worked, cleaning one another, soaking in each others presence while washing away the weeks of their separation, washing away everything until they were clean.

Jack resoaked his rag and brushed the cloth against Harley’s throat, watching the water run down her breasts, slowly skating down her stomach. He dragged the rag down over her breasts, brushing tenderly over her stomach, caressing her, worshipping her, his harlequin.

Harley washed the cloth over his shoulders, dragging the damp cloth over his chest and down his stomach, washing away their time apart. She trembled a little as complete exhaustion washed over her, but it was also mixed with relief. She was finally home with her puddin, her husband.

Jack put his cloth down and pulled her closer, wrapping his arms around her waist and laid his head against her chest. He needed to feel her against him, to know she was here, she was whole, that she wasn’t a ghost. His voice was soft, filled with pain when he spoke, his eyes closed as he leaned against hers.

“I’m so sorry Harley. This was all my fault. I failed you.” Harley could feel the tears against her skin, a warm dampness against her cool skin as he pressed her harder to him.

Harley wrapped her arms around him, her fingers in his green hair cradling his head against her chest. “No you didn’t puddin. It just happened--it wasn’t your fault.”

Jack held on tightly to her, his arms trembling slightly. “My decisions brought us here. I took too long to get you back. When I saw Batman take you…”

She felt his body tighten, Harley stroked his hair trying to ease some of the tension. His voice was rough. “I couldn’t find a way to you…”

Harley kissed the top of his head. “But you did come for me puddin. The first chance you got, you came for me.” She smiled kissing his hair. “You brought me home.”

Jack shifted to look up at her. Harley stroked his hair back from his face, staring into the depth of his blue eyes, losing herself in his gaze. “You came for me puddin,” she said softly, smiling down at him, her own tears gathering in the corner of her eyes. “I knew you would. I always knew you would find a way.”

She leaned down and kissed him, a deep, tender kiss, trying to tell him how much she loved him, how much she missed him in action where words failed her.

Jack’s hands reached up to cup her face, pulling her down to return her kiss with all the passion, love, and loss he felt, to communicate what his wife meant to him.

Harley pulled away slowly, kissing his nose, his eyes and forehead before she stood and gently pulled Jack to his feet, helping to hold his weight off his wounded leg. She led him over to the bed, pulling the comforter and sheets back. They crawled into the bed together, Jack easing down to the middle of the bed before lying on his back, holding his arms out to Harley. She crawled to him and he tugged her up against him. She laid her head against his chest, her body pressed along his side, fitting perfectly against him, skin to skin.

Harley closed her eyes, her body going almost instantly limp, relaxed for the first time in many weeks. The sound of his heartbeat in her ears calmed her, soothed her like nothing else. She wrapped her arm around his chest, pressing in as close as she could, relaxing completely against his side.

Jack pulled the blankets up over them both, holding her close, one arm around her shoulders while his other hand rested against her hand that was on his chest. Jack wrapped his hand around hers when he laid back against the pillows. He stared up at the ceiling for a few moments, letting himself relax, feeling her body against his, the warmth and scent of her all around him. He held her, listening to the sound of her breathing. Finally, after weeks of being unable to sleep, Jack drifted off, falling into a deep sleep with Harley against him, a smile on his red lips.

*

Agatha arrived later with the pills and food. She had carefully made her way upstairs, calling out to her nephew and niece, but when they didn’t answer the door which had been left open, she hurried up the stairs and opened their bedroom door worried that something was wrong. She stopped in the doorway with a smile. They were both asleep, Harley curled tight against Jack’s side and Jackie was sleeping--really sleeping--something he hadn’t done since Harley had been gone.

She tiptoed in and deposited the painkillers and a bag of Chinese food on the bedside table before she slipped out, leaving them to sleep.

*

Across town Batman yanked his cowl off as soon as he exited the damaged Batmobile and threw it in the direction of a wall. Barb frowned watching him stalk back and forth in anger.

She glanced over at Robin. “I saw on the news, complete fuck up, eh?”

Robin’s leg was bandaged and held out in front of him, his mask dangling between his hands when he spoke. “You might say that. Joker showed up, and so did some of Falcone’s men, and we heard the Irish gangs were there too. But it was Joker and his gang that really caught us off guard.” Robin glanced over at Batman, dropping his voice when she spoke to Barb. “Joker had a god damn rocket launcher and a semi.”

Barb grimaced. “Wow, I would not have seen that coming.”

Robin nodded. “Yeah, tell me about it. We managed to corner them, but...well, it went sideways.”

Batman turned around. “What he is trying to say is that it’s my fault everything went south. I...I tried to talk to Joker...as my brother, as Jack, instead of the crazy psychopath he has turned into.” Batman winced rubbing his chest and side. He was sure a couple of his ribs were cracked. Harley had been a surprisingly good shot even in her compromised state.

Bruce closed his eyes and pinched the bridge of his nose. “I don't know why I thought any of my brother was still in him...”

Bruce leaned against the wall next to the computers with a tired sigh.

“I don’t think there is anything of Jack left in him at all…”

Robin and Barb exchanged a look, but said nothing.
Jack’s eyes opened slowly. He frowned, blinking away the sleep that clung to him. He couldn’t clearly remember the last time he had slept through the night, not since Harley had been taken. It felt a little odd now, but he smiled; he felt whole, complete again. Jack smiled wider feeling his wife’s body pressed up against his side—warm, real, alive, her body firm and simultaneously soft against him felt like heaven. Jack very slowly stroked her skin with the fingers of the arm that was pinned under her, partly just to caress her, but there was a small part of him that wanted to make sure she was real, that this wasn’t some fever dream or madness trying to pull him under. But Harley was real, she was here in his arms. He could feel her, smell her hair, hear her breath. Harley’s breath was slow and warm against his chest, her hair was silk against his shoulder and arm. Jack sighed happily through his smile; all was right with his world, his Harley was back at his side. He could take on anything now.

He shifted just a little looking down where her head still lay against his chest, her arm flung across his stomach and one of her legs up across his hips. He could partially see her face (her hair was tangled around her face), but he could see a hint of her lips were a light brush of pink and her was mouth open just slightly. He could see her closed eyes through the soft white tangle of her hair, dark lashes against her pale cheeks, but he could also see the hint of bruises on her face, the discoloration on her perfect skin. He could see the white of the bandage on her head, and there was angry red flaring out along her skin, easy to see because of her acid bleached paleness.

He frowned slightly, anger beginning to replace his good mood as he thought of that bird that belonged to his brother. The bird that had hurt Harley, scarred her...

Jack felt a tight twist in his chest glancing down at Harley again. Her face was so angelic as she slept, peaceful and happy. Looking at her chased away the ill humor that threatened to overcome him. His girl, his pumpkin lying against him was safe. He felt a sting of tears in his eyes, but he blinked them back. No more tears, only smiles he thought. She was hurt—they were both hurt, but they would heal. None of that mattered right now, however, because they were together again. There were no words to describe how he felt, to describe the depths of his happiness let alone to describe his love for her...the moment he had realized he was in love with her, all those emotions wrapped up into this moment, the first moment in his entire like that he felt whole. Harley loving him made him whole, made Jack Wayne—and now the Joker—into a whole human beings, with goals and purposes that only revolved around her. No one else in the world truly mattered to him. He may have a new family, but his wife, his Harley was at the center of that, the core of what made him who he was now.

He reached over and with gentle care, pushed her hair back from her face. She was so beautiful he thought with a soft smile, so very beautiful and she was back in his arms. Jack kissed the top of her head.

Harley made a soft sound, her body shifting, her left leg moved down, and Jack hissed as her leg brushed against the bullet wound in his leg. Harley’s eyes popped open in surprise.

“Jack?” She pushed up, moving her leg off of him quickly. He inhaled sharply again.

“Oh my god Jack! I’m so sorry!” Harley gasped and tried to pull away from him, but Jack grabbed her.

“It’s fine Harls! Come back here.”
He tugged her back against him with a small laugh. Harley giggled softly, relaxing once more against his side before she pushed herself up to look at his face. She gazed at him, taking in every detail of his features, his milk white skin that now was covered in a variety of bruises, his perfectly shaped lips, his intense blue eyes, framed by locks of dark green hair that had fallen around his face in that sexy, slightly tousled way only Jack’s hair could achieve. Harley gazed with loving concern at him and reached up to gently stroke back some of his hair.

“Are you sure you’re okay?” she asked, gazing into his blue eyes and feeling a whirlwind of intense emotions. She was home, back in Jack’s arms...home. He’d gotten hurt coming for her. She sniffed, tears stinging her eyes, her chin quivering just a little, but she smiled. “I missed you so much puddin, but I knew you would come for me, I knew you would.”

Jack reached up to caress her face, the bruises and cuts fading away, he only saw his beautiful wife. He brushed his thumb across her cheek wiping away the hint of tears on her skin. “I missed you too pumpkin. I'm so sorry it took me so long...”

Jack drew his fingers along her jaw to her chin, the tips of his fingers light against her flesh, but he easily drew her close. His lips brushed against hers, careful of her wounded lips, before he kissed her.

Harley’s eyes slipped close, losing herself in the feel of his lips, the touch of his skin, the taste of his tongue. Her fingers on his chest tightened, pressing her fingers against his skin. She kissed him deeper while leaning up onto her elbow, her hand reaching up to caress his throat. Harley ran her tongue over his to deepen the kiss, pressed herself closer to him.

Jack ran his fingers into her hair, cupping the back of her head, holding her to him while kissing her with more passion. His tongue danced against hers in a delicate caress, his desire for Harley spiking. It wasn’t just about sex, it was more than wanting her physically—it was about needing to feel her, to know she was alive and in his arms, to know they were together and to be part of her.

He had been so lost without her, so alone, on the edge of losing more of himself without her there. Harley held him together, his only light in the storm of his rising insanity. He needed to show her how deep his love was for her.

Harley felt her own rush of desire spread through her, hot and needy. She wanted to be part of him, to share herself with him, to wrap herself in his scent, to feel him inside her and all around her. It was so much more than sex for her as well. It was a bonding of their souls. She needed him now more than ever. After being apart for so long, she felt shattered, broken, and she needed Jack to be whole again.

Jack lightly tugged at her lips, careful not to hurt her before he pulled back enough to whisper against her mouth. “I want you Harls. I need you.”

Harley stroked his hair back from his face, her eyes bright. “I need you too puddin.” Tears continued to slowly run down her cheeks. “I was so lost without you puddin.”

Jack smiled rubbing his nose against hers. “I don’t exist without you sweets.”

They kissed again, Harley leaning into his kiss, and wrapped her leg around him. Jack jumped when her thigh pressed against the wound.

Harley yelped and pulled back. “Oh puddin! I’m so sorry!”

Jack winced, but chuckled. “Don’t be--it's fine.”
Harley pouted a little. Jack grinned at her reaching up to stroke her hair back, but when he did the hair pulled against the bandage and stitches. Harley yelped, drawing back.

Jack paled. “Oh Harls! I’m so sorry!”

Harley winced a bit, but laughed. “We’re a mess.”

Jack chuckled with a small nod. “We are…”

He more gently caressed her face, tucking her hair behind her ear. He continued to smile softly, cupping the side of her face and drawing her down for another kiss. Harley willingly fell into him, Jack’s mouth moving tenderly over hers before he whispered. “Let me taste you.”

Harley blushed, and a soft giggled bubbled up. “Jack…”

Jack caressed her jaw. “Please pumpkin…”

Harley moved carefully, crawling on top of Jack with her back to him. His excitement grew seeing the expanse of her smooth, creamy snow white back. He followed the curve of her spine with his eyes, the way her smooth back sloped down into her round hips. He reached up with both hands--careful of his bandaged hand--to run his fingers down her back, watching the way Harley arched and curved her back into his touch. She was the most beautiful woman in Gotham, the most beautiful woman in the world. He felt the swelling of his erection intensify as he licked his lips, waiting to taste her on his tongue. He gently tugged, drawing her hips closer.

Harley scooted back slowly, her damaged hand making it a little difficult to move, but she ignored that pain and instead focused on the feel of Jack’s body beneath her, the way his skin felt when her thighs brushed against his sides, her groin brushing against his chest, wet, hot and aching for him.

She felt goosebumps rush across her skin when Jack ran his fingers down her back, but when he grasped her hips and pulled her closer, she shivered while a smile spread across her lips. She gazed down at his stomach, brushing her injured hand along his stomach, smiling when he twitched at her touch. Her eyes traveled to his erection, her mouth watering as she looked at him, thick and erect for her. Her lips itched with the need to run the head of his shaft against her lips, to feel that soft satin skin, to taste him on her tongue, to feel him throbbing inside her mouth. She swallowed, her eyes following down his hips then along his thighs. She winced in sympathy for her husband when she saw the slightly bloody bandage around his thigh, but then all thoughts except her thoughts of pleasing him were rushed from her mind when she felt Jack lick her.

Jack pulled her hips over his face, his hands brushing up along her tight rear with a smile. Her skin was so soft, like cream and silk. When she was over him, he gazed at her sex, his mouth watering. He wrapped his arms around her thighs, pulling her down to him at the same time he brought his head up to brush his tongue across her clitoris. He groaned, tasting the sweetness of her sex on his tongue, surrounded by her unique scent. Jack angled her a little more to press his mouth fully against her, sucking and brushing his tongue back and forth, her little gasps and moans exciting him further. He was lost, surrounded by his Harley and nothing else mattered. He dragged his tongue over her and whispered. “You taste so good pumpkin.”

Harley moaned her eyes fluttering, her body tensing when he licked her, followed by his lips sucking gently on her, followed by the smooth back and forth of his tongue on her. Harley responded to the intensity by wrapping her undamaged hand around his erection, holding him gently while she ran her tongue over him, closing her eyes with pleasure, feeling him against her lips. She loved him so much it hurt, deep down in her spirit, hurt in a way she wanted to never stop feeling. She gently pressed her teeth against his skin before slowly sliding her lips down around his length, her tongue moving back and forth to coat him in her saliva. She ran her lips down the side of his erection again, sucking tenderly, making her way down, then slowly back up again, running her tongue over the head of his shaft, pressing her lips against him before she gradually circled her tongue over the smooth, soft skin of his member. She loved the way he felt, the sweet, soft skin and firm length of him, stroking her hand up and down while she ran her tongue over him, feeling the little jerks of his body that she evoked in him.

She moaned when Jack flicked his tongue back and forth against her clitoris; the sensation and pleasure sent ripples all through her.

Jack groaned against her when she took him into her mouth, the feel of her tongue sliding back and forth, coating him in her saliva, the soft tickle of her long hair against his skin had his legs tensing; a flare of pain radiated from the wound in his leg. His leg jerked in response, but he ignored it, sliding his tongue inside Harley instead.

Harley moaned around his member, her moans muffled with him in her mouth. She sucked hard on him, dragging her lips up his length, her tongue swirling around the head of his erection, flicking across the tip, tasting his excitement when Jack’s leg jerked. Harley gasped pushing up.

“Jack, are you…”

She didn’t get to finish because she felt that slick wet twist of his tongue sliding inside her. Jack moved his tongue back and forth, followed by a twist that made Harley almost collapse against him, it felt so good. She groaned loudly, countering by sucking hard and deep on him, taking his entire erection into her mouth, her tongue playing back and forth against the smooth skin. Jack squeezed her backside groaning into her before he caressed her skin, his hands running over her rear end down her thighs. He moved his head to the side, gently biting the soft flesh of her thigh, sucking as his fingers pressed hard into her hips. He sucked until he left a faint purple mark. Jack dragged his tongue against her skin, returning his attention to her clitoris, tasting deeply of her.

He flicked his tongue across her again before pulling her down to suck, burying his face against her, his eyes closed, a smile of absolute pleasure and pure happiness on his face while he pleasured Harley, and thereby pleasured himself. He opened his mouth wide to lick her, feeling her shudder over him. But when Harley dragged her teeth teasingly up the length of him, Jack threw his head back and cried out, grasping onto her hips, and panting as he fought back an orgasm.

Harley gasped when she heard him, feeling his breath against her and heard the sweet, erotic sound of his pleasure, his grip on her hips tightening along with his body tensing in pleasure. She tasted him, the salty sweet stickiness of his cum beading at the head of his erection, smearing against her tongue. Her brow furrowed with the erotic pleasure of it all, but when he dragged his tongue across her clitoris again, she came with a cry.

“She...Puddin!!” Harley arched, her eyes closing, and any pain that came with her body tightening was washed away by the pleasure and complete happiness of being with her husband again. Jack growled with pleasure, wrapping his arms around her tight, his hands pressed against her lower back to pull her down to drink of her, to lap up her orgasm. Harley’s head dropped down against him, stretching her hands out along his legs, her back curved while Jack held her close against him, his mouth moving against her sex. He slid one hand along her leg, wrapping his hand around her ankle, his other hand pressed against her lower back, his mouth moving slowly over her clitoris, his tongue lapping slowly, tenderly over her.

Harley moaned low at the same time kissing his knees, rubbing her face against him needing to feel every inch of him. The desire to rub herself around his skin, to wrap herself in him was nearly overpowering any other thought--she simply couldn’t get close enough to Jack.
Jack squeezed his eyes shut, feeling the same as Harley. He needed to be inside her, it wasn’t just a physical need, but a need to be connected with her after so long apart.

“Come here pumpkin,” Jack whispered kissing her thigh before rubbing his his cheek and nose against her silky skin. “I need you Harls.” His voice was rough and deep with desire.

Harley moved slowly, pulling away and turning around to face him. She gazed at him, thinking to herself that he was so beautiful. The acid bath had done nothing to take away from his beauty, the intensity of his eyes; if anything the acid had only enhanced him, making him more beautiful in her eyes. She delicately caressed his cheek with her fingertips, brushing along his jaw, then his lips.

“I need you puddin,” she whispered. “I need my husband so much.”

Jack smiled at her, reaching up to caress her face, running his hands through her hair. He frowned when she winced slightly. That damn cut on her head...put there by that little bird of his brother’s...Jack quickly banished the thoughts of what had happened to focus on the now. Harley was here in his arms, he could taste her on his tongue. She was alive and here with him now. Jack cupped her cheek staring into her light blue eyes. “I love you,” he stated plainly. The three words were laced with such emotion, his eyes begging her to understand just how deeply he felt for her.

Harley kissed the palm of his hand. “I love you puddin, always.”

She slowly lowered herself on top of him, groaning when she felt his erection push into her, feeling the hardness of him enter her. She had never felt anything as good as this, as her puddin inside her, filling her. She arched her back, pressing her hands against his chest, spreading her legs wide so that she could take every inch of him into her body before she dropped back down to kiss him.

Jack grabbed her hips, hissing slightly as the movement stretched the stitches in his palm. Spreading his legs wide also aggravated the wound in his thigh, but he didn’t care. He ran his hands up her back, feeling the smooth sensual curve while returning her kiss. Harley dragged her tongue along his mouth, tracing the line of his jaw, then along his throat. Jack groaned dropping his hands down for a moment, but Harley grabbed his hands moving them over his head slowly. She snaked her fingertips down his arms, feeling for a moment just how thin he had become--like a mad ascetic--while she was gone. Her fingers glided back up his arms wrapping around his wrists while she moved her hips in a tantalizing and erotic wave, rolling her pelvis slowly in a combination of thrust and pull, her body pulling against his erection while thrusting down, feeling him deep inside her before she pulled up again.

Jack panted, giving himself over to her completely. He held his legs bent despite the pain in his thigh, watching while Harley slowly sat up again, her hands wrapped around his forearms while she thrust, picking up speed, her hair tickling his skin. She groaned pushing herself up completely, her hands on his chest again while she thrust, arching her back, throwing her head back with a loud cry. Jack groaned, watching her climax, feeling her body hold him while she came, while the sensation of being flooded washed over him. He had never seen anything more beautiful than watching Harley orgasm.

Harley hissed dropping down again and grasped his upper arms, keeping them pinned over his head while she rode her orgasm, feeling every inch of him inside her, wet and slippery. She panted harder releasing Jack’s arms, which he immediately wrapped around her, pulling her body close to him, meeting her thrusts with his own rhythmic movements. They kissed, tongues sliding against each other while Harley thrust down on him, Jack thrusting up to meet her. The tension was building high, higher between them, both of them gasping, panting, until Jack cried out, his orgasm ripping through him, tearing him open, spilling everything into Harley. He held her tight, holding her to him and muffling his cries against her mouth.
Harley whimpered, his orgasm setting off another climax for her. Her cries muffled against his as they peaked, their shared orgasm had both of them losing themselves in each other until finally they both collapsed, the breath short and fast.

Harley took a deep breath as she nuzzled the side of Jack’s throat, her arms wrapped around his head holding him close. She didn’t want to move, didn’t want to lose her contact with him. Jack held her tightly, his eyes closed, enveloped in her scent, the warmth of their bodies connected together.

He whispered against her ear. “I love you so much Harley...my girl.”

He swallowed down his tears at the same time fighting the small dark part of himself that was scared, terrified of losing her again. He knew he couldn’t function if something happened to her, that if he was ever parted from her again, he would destroy Gotham, he would destroy everything to get her back. He had been ready to burn the world down this time...if he was parted from her again, he would...Gotham would tremble in fear of what he would do to them. But for now, all those thoughts were washed away as he held her, gazing into her eyes, her scent, her body, all of her surrounding him, safely back where she belonged, in his arms.

Harley smiled and whispered back. “I love you puddin...I love you always.”

She could hear Harleen in the back of her mind, a soft whisper telling her to hold on to him, to not let go. She smiled, closed her eyes, and lay her mouth and nose against his skin. She was home, Jack was home. She would never be away from him again...but Harleen’s small voice whispered...what about Crane? Harley snarled, shoving Harleen down--she was not going to think about Crane, about the fact that he was once more lose in Gotham. She would tell Jack...later. But for now she didn’t want to think about Crane, about Blackgate...she wanted to only focus on the fact that she was with her puddin again...and her world had been set right once more.

They stayed connected to each other as long as they could, but when Harley was forced to roll off of him, Jack simply pulled her close again, turning his body to face hers. Harley smiled, resting her forehead against his, their legs intertwined, their arms wrapped around each other and looked into each others’ eyes. They were both tired again, but happy.

Jack smiled at her, rubbing his thumb across her cheek, staring into her eyes. “Nothing is going to keep me away from you again, nothing.”

Harley smiled tenderly. “Nothing puddin...nothing.”

They fell asleep again, comforted in each others’ arms.

* *

Sophia, dressed in tailors navy blue slacks with a matching short jacket and white silk blouse, slipped out of her father’s office. She doubted he would miss her in the rage he was in. She felt only a little bad for leaving her little brother in there, but he needed to learn to defend himself, and when to leave their father to his rages. If the little boy couldn’t figure that out, it wasn’t her problem.

Their father had lost Harley Quinn as well as eight of his people. He was not happy and he was making sure everyone within earshot knew it. Sophia sighed, glancing at the bodyguards that waited outside her father’s office and motioning to her own, Angelo and Lucia, who both looked irritated from being made to wait out here in the hall. She motioned with her fingers at them before she started to walk down the hall away from her father’s office, not waiting to see if they would follow, her heels making sharp clicks against the polished floor as she headed toward the elevators. Well trained and loyal, her people fell into line behind her without a word.
Her mind raced as she walked into the elevator. She didn’t think her father stood a chance against the Joker, not really. If she were in charge of the family, instead of going after the clown, she might try another tactic, seducing him to her side. As the old saying went, keeping your friends close and your enemies closer. The Joker represented something new in Gotham, an element like they had never seen before, no family connections, no old ways and mafia laws keeping him in check. He was a loose cannon, but a cannon that she might be able to aim at her enemies if used correctly.

The Joker could help keep the Falcone family on top of the Gotham underworld, but the way her Daddy was behaving, he was going to let the clown drag him and the rest of them down. The elevator arrived on the ground floor, and Angelo stepped out first, leading the way toward the garage with Lucia bringing up the rear. They headed toward the garage where Sophia’s car was waiting, a silver Rolls Royce Ghost II, her newest purchase. It had been a little gift to herself for all that she was putting up with--her father and this entire mess. As far as she was concerned, the current problems were her father's creation.

Angelo checked the car before opening the door and holding it open for Sophia. She slipped into the back, settling in as Angelo and Lucia took the front seats. She had just settled back, thinking about stopping someplace for lunch when the door next to her opened and a young woman slipped inside before anyone could react. The woman had a gun, a small pistol, pointed right at Sophia.

Sophia’s bodyguards turned, their own guns aimed at the woman.

The woman was beautiful, with creamy dark skin, and long curling black hair. The woman was dressed all in black, a black suit tailored to her trim body, but her most startling feature was the blue of her eyes. She smiled showing off perfect teeth.

“Now, now, don’t anyone make a move they might regret. I’m just here to chat for a moment.”

Sophia narrowed her eyes. “Who are you and what do you want?”

The woman grinned. “Oh I like you, right down to business. I’m here representing a client who would like to extend you an invitation.”

Sophia frowned. “From who?”

The woman smiled wider before she spoke again in a sing-song whisper.

“‘Beware The Court of Owls, that watches all the time, ruling Gotham from a shadow perch, behind granite and lime. They watch you at your hearth, they watch you in your bed, speak not a whispered word of them or they'll send The Talon for your head.'”

Sophia’s eyes widened and felt herself shrink back from the woman, not really intending to have moved like she did, but the rhyme was one anyone growing up in Gotham City knew. Most thought of it only as a silly ghost story, but Sophia knew it was the truth because her father had told her so, though the Court hadn’t been heard from in over a generation. She stared at the woman as if she were seeing a ghost.

“What do you want?” Sophia asked, her voice hushed.

The woman smirked. “We think it’s time that the Falcone family had a change of management--don’t you?”

Sophia gasped. It was one thing to be thinking about it herself, it was something else to have someone come to her and suggest removing her father.
“What do you mean?” Sophia growled.

The woman laughed, the sound deep and pleasant. “Oh please, don’t acted so shocked. The Court is always watching.” The woman showed her teeth again in a grin. “Anyway, I’m here to tell you that you have the Court’s full support, but also if a change isn’t made soon, then the Court will be forced to take matters into its own hands, and we doubt that you would want that.”

Sophia narrowed her eyes. “What does the Court care about my family?”

The woman shrugged. “The Court is concerned about Gotham. Your father has been a vital element in keeping Gotham running…” She paused and added. “...in his own way.” The woman tilted her head, giving Sophia a pleasant smile. “The Court looks the other way where the mob is concerned because it suits their interests, but the escalating conflict between dear old Daddy Falcone and the Joker has raised some concerns. The Court feels that the Falcone family would perform better under a different head. Let’s be clear: they are offering to throw their support behind you. I suggest, for your own good, you accept it Sophia Falcone, or you may find that the Falcone’s are no longer welcome in Gotham.”

Sophia opened her mouth to respond, but the woman leaned forward quickly, surprising her as she pressed her finger against Sophia’s lips followed by a hissed. “Shhh...Think about the offer Miss Falcone. We’ll talk again later.”

With that, the woman slipped out of the car. She leaned down and waved through the tinted window before strolling off.

Sophia frowned, her heart was racing. Angelo and Lucia exchanged a look before Angelo asked softly. “You okay Miss Falcone?”

Lucia added. “Sorry about that Miss Falcone. I don’t know how she got in. We had the locks engaged.”

Sophia waved her off. “It’s not your fault,” she assured them, trying to keep the nervous tremors from showing in her movements. “She represented the Court, and they always find a way.”

She frowned chewing her bottom lip while her guards watched her before she said softly. “Say nothing of this to anyone.” She looked at her guards who both nodded. Sophia smiled softly. “Now, I need a drink. Let’s head over to Belmonte’s shall we?”

*

Harley woke first, her eyes fluttering open to find that she hadn’t moved from her position, her forehead against Jack’s, her arms and legs tangled with his. She smiled watching him sleep; he looked so peaceful. She could see the light color of his veins under his skin, only marred by the bruises on his face and the split across his bottom lip. She sighed happily, but her stomach made a noticeably loud rumble. She had no idea how long they had slept, but her stomach was telling her it had been a long damn time.

The sound of her stomach growling prompted Jack’s eyes to open. As soon as he focused on her, a huge grin spread across his face.

“Hey pumpkin,” he said softly.

Harley smiled. “Hey puddin.”

Harley’s stomach growled again, louder than before. Jack laughed at the sound and it was the sweetest sound Harley had ever heard. Jack reached over and cupped her face with his hands tugging her close and kissed her, all with a smile on his face. Harley melted into his kiss.

After a few seconds, Jack grinned “I could eat too. I’ll see if I can get someone to bring us breakfast.” He waggled his brow at her and Harley laughed.

“You don’t have to do that.”

“Why not? I’m the Joker, if I can’t get someone to bring us breakfast, then what am I doing with my life pumpkin?” Jack laughed again, pushing himself up. Harley smiled watching him. Even with the amount of weight he had lost, Jack was so amazingly sexy she thought. The way he moved, the ghost white paleness of his skin, the way his green hair fell around his face. Harley caught her bottom lip while watching his rear, her eyes trailing up his back then down again. There was nothing more beautiful than her puddin naked. She was grinning like a schoolgirl with a crush watching him, but when Jack stood he had to grab a hold of the table beside the bed when his leg began to buckle.

“Puddin!” Harley jumped up, stopping momentarily when the pain from her head wound made her slightly dizzy before she rushed over to wrap her arm around his waist.

Jack frowned with a hiss of pain. “Stupid leg.”

“You’ll be on it in no time--you heal super quick now puddin, but you still need to take it easy, at least for today.” Harley helped him to the bathroom.

“My cane should be at the back of the door…” he muttered.

Harley kissed his cheek (which made Jack grin) before hurrying off to get his cane. She came rushing back with the cane in hand while Jack used the bathroom. When she brought the cane to him, Jack smiled and kissed her cheek. “Thank you sweets.”

Harley smiled tenderly. “Anything for you puddin.”

Jack smiled before he began to move, using his cane to help him work his way across the floor. Since his acid bath, pain hadn’t been that big of an issue, but he supposed a bullet wound though the leg was pushing the limits of even his new pain tolerance.

Jack made his way across the room, moving slowly. “I’m going to see if my Auntie can bring us breakfast,” he said before he walked over to where he had left his phone. He picked the phone up and walked over to flop down on the side of the bed.

While Harley used the bathroom dialed his aunt’s number. He glanced toward the bathroom with a smile. He had an idea for tonight, a little celebration...a gift for Harley. Hopefully she would be in the bathroom long enough for him to set everything up with his aunt.

*

An hour later, sitting in bed together, Harley in a pair of panties and one of Jack’s dress shirts with Jack next to her in a pair of gold colored boxers, they snuggled together on the bed. They had the blankets pulled up over their laps, each with their bandages freshly changed. (Agatha had insisted she was changing their bandages when she arrived carrying a tray full of breakfast foods, from muffins, to waffles, even two large plates piled with bacon and sausages, along with a pot of hot tea, orange juice and milk, all of which she had Frost purchase hot and fresh from a local diner that served breakfast twenty-four hours a day.)

Harley was curled against Jack’s side feeding Jack a slice of bacon watching him with a silly, but happy grin on her face. Jack smirked, letting her feed him, his arm around her shoulders, partly just holding her to hold her, but there was a little darker part that was scared, scared of losing her all over again. Jack squeezed her shoulder, laughing softly as Harley nearly shoved another piece of bacon into his mouth.

“You need to put weight back on.” She smiled and wrinkled her nose at him.

Jack laughed. “Yes ma’am.”

Harley kissed his shoulder, picking up her juice to sip it slowly. “Puddin?”

Jack smiled content and chewing on his bite. “Mm?”

“So what are we going to do now?” Harley asked softly. She knew what she wanted to do--she wanted to hurt Batman, but she didn’t want to force Jack into anything he didn’t want to do. She knew he still loved his brother, probably would always love his brother, but her hate for Batman had only grown deeper, darker...

She felt Jack go still next to her. She glanced at her lover with a slight frown. Not only had he gone still, but his blue eyes looked as if a shadow had fallen over them. His usual smiling lips were set in a frown.

“We are going to hurt him,” Joker replied with a soft chuckle. “Two can play that game and I think it's time for Batsy to feel exactly what it's like to lose something you love.”

Harley shifted next to him, a little smile tugging at her lips. “How puddin?”

Joker grinned at her. “He tried to take something of mine Harley, he tried to use you to hurt me, and that is really a low blow.” Joker scowled, but his demeanor quickly turned; he chuckled as his plan began to form. “His little bird...birds are such delicate creatures...I wonder how Batsy would feel if his bird that he loves so much more than me was suddenly unable to fly?”

Harley smiled, her voice soft. “Why stop there puddin, what about his Cat?”

Joker smirked looking over at Harley, lifting a brow at her. “His Cat?”

Harley nodded. “Selina. Why hurt him just once--why not twice? Hurt Batman and Bruce Wayne. If Talia was in Gotham, I would say go after her too, but Selina would be good, don’t you think puddin? We can find everything that Batsy or Brucie cares about, anything and anybody, really show him how much it hurts to have someone you love taken from you.” Harley’s voice had gone low, a darkness creeping into her words that even she wasn’t aware of. She knew she hated Batman and Bruce, but until this moment, even she wasn’t aware of how much she hated him. She wanted him to suffer like he had made Jack suffer, she wanted to hurt him deeply, in a way that he would never recover from.

Joker laughed, nearly knocking their tray off their laps with his laughter. “Oh Harls!! You are so dark and devious!! I love it!!” He grabbed the tray dropping it off the side of the bed to the sound of clattering dishes and spilling liquid, jumping on to of Harley, grabbing her hands and pinning them over her head.

Harley squeaked in surprise, but that turned into a giggle when Jack straddled her. His smile was wide showing off his perfect white teeth. “Hmmm...this viciousness is making me horny Harley, whatever am I going to do about it?”

Harley wiggled under him, licking her lips with a grin. “Mm...I think the best medicine would be for you to find an outlet for this surge of sexual energy...that’s just my professional opinion as your doctor, that is.” Harley grinned and wrinkled her nose at him.

Jack smirked. “Well, you are the doctor.”

He scooted down, dragging the tips of his fingers along with him, caressing her skin while taking playful nips against the shirt she wore until he was between her legs. He looked up at her. His blue eyes were heated as he slowly began to peel her panties down. Harley watched him, her heart pounding. Jack brushed his nose against the cotton of her panties, his breath hot, seeping through the cloth to her sensitive skin beneath. He pressed his mouth against her, his breath caressing her, followed by a shiver as he pressed his tongue against her panties and into her. She tossed her head back with a groan, her arms still over her head and grasping at the pillow. She felt Jack’s words against her, his breath brushing through the cloth before he pulled her panties to the side and ran his tongue over her in one long lick.

Harley gasped, the feel of his warm wet tongue against her had her seeing stars. She reached down to grasp his hair while Jack pressed his lips against her, hungrily moving his lips over her, sliding his tongue slowly back and forth while he snaked one hand up her torso, gliding over her smooth skin, under her shirt to grasp her breast. Harley bent her legs, pressing her feet into the mattress, her fingers caressing his green hair while he sucked on her, licking slowly, followed by his fingers sliding into her at the same time he brushed his fingertips over her nipple. Harley moaned, pressing his lips against her, hungrily moving his lips over her, sliding his tongue slowly back and forth while he gently pinched and brushed his fingers over her hard nipple. Her desire and pleasure built up like a bubble ready to explode until Harley cried out as her orgasm burst over her.

Jack groaned against her, pulling her, thrusting his fingers into her while she came until his fingers were soaked and slick. Harley fingers in his hair spasmed, her entire body jerking with each brush of his tongue. He pushed up onto his knees, quickly pulling his underwear down. He licked his lips, holding his erection with one hand to brush the satin soft head of his shaft against her. Harley whimpered. “Puddin...please...”

Jack grinned at her, brushing against her one more time, watching her groan and jerk before he swiftly thrust into her. Harley mewled with pleasure feeling him inside her, that perfect beautiful feeling of him thrusting into her. Jack dropped to his hands over her, kissing her hard. She moaned, tasting herself on his mouth while he pushed hard into her, pounding their bodies together. Jack kissed against her lips reaching down to pull one of her legs up and over his shoulder, leaning into her, his kisses desperate, heated.

Harley grabbed his shoulders, holding on, her entire body bouncing with his thrusts. She cried out when another orgasm ripped through her hot and fast, washing over her before she knew what had happened. Jack hungrily kissed her, thrusting into her hard and fast, the sounds of his body slapping against her filled his ears, the sounds of her cries, her fingers pressing into his skin, that delicious wet, tight feeling of his erection thrusting into her body...Jack groaned loudly, spilling himself into her, thrusting until his entire body felt weak and he collapsed on top of her.

Harley kissed him, covering his face in soft, sweet kisses.

Jack smiled nuzzling against her neck, pressing deep inside her, giving in to a few more gentle thrusts, which made Harley whimper and squirm with pleasure.

Jack sighed happily, nibbling her ear, making her giggle before he whispered. “We have plans to make, my sweet.”
Across town, early evening, Bruce winced slightly as he took off his jacket after getting off the elevator at the apartment. Having to show that he wasn’t in any pain while at the meeting in Wayne tower had been difficult and again when he had driven to the manor to see how rebuilding was progressing. His chest hurt like a son of a bitch and the bruises were awful looking, having turned a deep, dark purple.

When he walked into the apartment he was greeted by the sounds of a video game along with Barbara’s laughter and Dick’s cursing. He thought about saying something about the cussing, but considering the young man had to be off his leg for a few days, he decided to give his crime fighting partner a break.

He walked into the living room with his jacket over his arm to see Barbara and Dick on the couch together, Dick’s leg on a pillow across the coffee table bandaged up (with a handful of stitches beneath.) There were at least four empty pizza boxes, cans of soda and a large bowl of M&Ms on the table, mostly gone. Bruce smiled a little. Dick was going to have to work all that off if he kept up eating like that...but he supposed Dick had the metabolism of a young man whereas Bruce was getting old enough that he needed to watch his intake a little more diligently. Between the two of them, Jack had a metabolism that allowed him to eat anything and never gain a pound while Bruce had to work a little harder...Jack had always been either skinny or instantly muscular depending on how much effort he put in while Bruce had always had to work extremely hard on improving his body.

Bruce frowned in surprise that his thoughts had gone to Jack so easily. No...Jack was dead, his brother was dead and only Joker remained. He had to remind himself of that. He quickly banished thoughts of his brother and the confrontation they had just had, but he knew deep down he would never be able to look at Joker and not see his brother lurking under the pale white skin of that green haired fiend. Jack was still in there somewhere; Bruce wanted to give up on him, but he wasn’t sure he could.

Bruce started to walk by when Barbara smiled at him over her shoulder. “Hey! Dinner will be ready soon.”

Bruce frowned in surprise. “Oh?”

“Yes sir--I have taken the liberty of making crown roast of pork with mushroom dressing, some garlic and herb buttered potatoes, and a nice merlot.”

Bruce turned toward the apartment’s kitchen to see Alfred wearing his usual uniform minus the jacket, instead wearing an apron.

Bruce stared, his eyes wide “Alfred?”

Alfred smiled. “Indeed sir.”
She had nearly had a fit, not wanting to be without him, not even for a moment, but Jack had kissed her in a way that had her melting on the spot, caressing her jaw as he whispered to trust him.

But now she was about ready to go looking for him. She was doing her best not to panic, but he still hadn’t come back…

That was when there was a knock at her door.

Harley frowned; Jack wouldn’t knock. She got up and hurried over, walking a little oddly because of her freshly painted toenails, and pulled the door open to see Agatha, Trope, Thea, Viktoria, and Bea all crowded around her door. Agatha was holding the most beautiful vintage red ball gown that Harley had ever seen.

Agatha grinned. “Surprise! Time to get dressed, dear!” She held up the dress.

Harley looked confused. “Dressed, what’s going on?” She stepped back to allow the ladies into her room.

Trope giggled. “Joker has a romantic evening planned for the two of you!”

Thea was carrying a large makeup case and Harley saw that Bea had a curling iron in hand while Viktoria had a bag of hairspray along with other hair tools, and was carrying a pair of red heels.

“What?” Harley looked confused, but Agatha smiled. “Strip, we’re here to get you ready.”

Harley giggled with a shake of her head. “Jack planned this?”

Thea nodded as she set the makeup bag down and started to go through her things. “Yep, not before you strip…” She gave Agatha a mock glare. “Let’s do your makeup. Bea, you have the earrings?”

Bea, who was wearing capri pants and a Rolling Stones t-shirt, put her hand in her pocket and pulled out a pair of simple, yet gorgeous, teardrop diamond earrings. “Got ‘em right here.”

The women all smiled at Harley and Thea grinned crookedly. “Okay girls, let’s play barbie!”

* * *

When Harley emerged from her room she looked amazing, if she said so herself. The girls had managed to hide her bruises and cuts with makeup (though there was only so much that could be done with the bandage on her head. Between Trope and Viktoria, they had managed to style her hair in a way to hide some of the bandage.) Harley wore a vintage, strapless, pleated silk chiffon evening gown with pieces that crossed over her breasts, and going over her shoulders to drop down her back like a cape. Thea had parted her hair on the side and styled her white blonde locks in long curling waves to her shoulders reminiscent of the actress Eleanor Parker. She had the diamond drop earrings in her ears, and wore a pair of ankle strap peep toe red heels (that incidentally matched the nail polish she had chosen.)

Agatha took her hand and led her down the stairs with the other women following behind her. Trope clapped her hands as they made their way to the living room. “Oh Harley, you look so beautiful!! Joker is going to die!”

Thea, her arm around Trope’s waist, beamed. “You are gorgeous.”

Harley giggled and spun around slowly. “I feel like a princess.”
Agatha smiled. “Jack picked the dress out himself, and the shoes. That boy has good taste, learned it from his aunt.”

Harley giggled happily. “So where am I going?”

Agatha smiled and motioned toward the door. “Just follow me.”

*

Outside the house, just a short walk away, Frost sat in the driver’s seat of a 1951 white Rolls Royce Wraith. Harley gasped in surprise.

“Where on earth…” she began to ask, but Agatha smiled. “I still have a few friends in Gotham. Now, hurry up my dear. Jackie is waiting for you.”

Agatha pulled the back door open and ushered Harley inside. After she was seated, she looked out the window and waved at her girlfriends, women who she realized at this moment meant more to her than she could possibly express. They all waved as Frost pulled away and drove the car slowly, heading toward what Harley had called since they moved in, the X-files building.

The building, which was almost four stories tall with a dilapidated, old-fashioned looking spaceship sitting on the top of it, was supposed to at one time be part U.F.O museum exhibit, part spook house, with the spaceship section of the building serving as a restaurant. Jack had told her once that he was having it cleaned out so they could use it as a cafeteria for the gang. His friends--the people who had rescued him not long after his spill into the acid--had been working on it off and on along with Jason and the others. Harley had completely forgotten about the place until this moment.

Frost pulled up in front of it and put the car in park. Harley frowned. There were no lights that she could see, the building looked as dark and abandoned as she remembered it always being.

Frost slipped out of the driver’s seat, came around, and opened her door for her. Harley slipped out biting her bottom lip. “Are you sure this is the right place?”

Frost smiled and nodded. “Yep, just head on in and take the elevator up to the restaurant.”

Harley frowned narrowing her eyes at him. “Is this a joke, Frost?”

Frost laughed. “No, I promise. The Boss said to just take the elevator.”

Harley sighed. “Okay.”

She took a breath and headed inside.

When she pulled the door open, the ground floor was dark, though the lights above the elevator were on. The place was clean; it was clear that someone had cleaned the walls and floor and the debris that had been in here the very first and only time Harley had been over here had been removed. She walked swiftly over to the elevator to press the button. The doors opened immediately and she stepped inside. The inside of the elevator was clean, someone had painted the walls, and had laid a new, dark red carpet on the floor of the elevator.

She smiled, her heart beating with growing excitement as she pushed the button that would take her up to the top floor.

*
When the doors slid aside and Harley stepped out, she froze in shock.

The room was like a wonderland. The walls had been cleaned and painted a dark midnight purple with swirls of colors that she assumed represented the galaxies. Fairy lights had been strung everywhere, draping across the ceiling and along the walls, mixed with lit candles that were placed here and there throughout the room, giving the space an ethereal, enchanted quality. A little off to the side was a single round table with a white table cloth, two chairs, lit by two candles, one long and tapered the other shorter and sitting in the middle of the table.

Standing in the middle of the room was Jack.

He was dressed in a dark purple and burgundy paisley three piece suit with a black dress shirt underneath, dark purple tie and a pair of purple and black oxfords. He wore dark burgundy gloves and leaned on his cane. His green hair was slicked back, his lips painted bright red and his eyes danced with pleasure when he saw her.

Jack bowed, holding his hand out to her. “Would you care to dance?”

The sounds of Billy Eckstine singing “My Destiny” began to play, filling the entire room with music. Harley blushed walking quickly over to take Jack’s hand. He pulled her against him wrapping his arm around her waist, his hand resting against her lower back while holding the cane off the floor. Harley laid her hand on his shoulder, her other hand tight in his as Jack began to move her around the room to the music. He moved slowly and Harley could feel the way he favored his good leg, but despite the limp, he danced gracefully.

“You look incredible,” he whispered. “The most beautiful woman in Gotham.”

Harley giggled and blushed. “Puddin...you look so handsome, the most handsome man in Gotham.”

Jack laughed. “Poor Gotham, having two such gorgeous people in it making everyone else feel inferior.”

He spun her around before he pulled her in close, pressing her body up against his. He smiled at her and Harley lost herself in his gaze before Jack sang softly along with the song.

“That's how it is
And that's how it has to be
You are everything in life to me
You are my destiny…”

He dipped her back, gazing lovingly at her before bringing her back to her feet (he only jerked in pain once, but his face betrayed none of that, just his smiling at his wife.) He slowly danced in a circle with her, stepping out to hold her out at arm's length, their hands barely touching before he gently tugged her close again.

Jack sang softly along with the music, smiling at her.

“My destiny is to be in love with you
Makes no difference what you say or do
I must stay in love with you
That's my destiny…”

Jack spun her slowly around until her back was to him. He then wrapped one arm around her waist, his cane pressed lightly against her while taking her other hand tenderly. He held her close, dragging his lips along her bare shoulder, up to her ear while he moved them in a slow circle, swaying gently to the music before he spun her back out and into his arms to face him again. This time Jack wrapped his arms around her, pressing her against him. His lips brushed a kiss along her forehead (careful of her wound). They stayed in one place, swaying back and forth to the music, staring into each others’ eyes.

“You are my destiny Harley...everything in life to me.”

Harley whispered back. “I was always meant to love you puddin.”

Jack smiled, brushing his nose against hers, his lips so close she could feel his breath.

“You will never tear us apart sweets.” Jack’s words caressed her lips. “Nothing Harls.”

Harley closed her eyes leaning into his attentions, her lips begging for his kiss. “Nothing puddin.”

Jack kissed her, a slow, tender kiss filled with love and passion. Harley wrapped herself around him, losing herself in his kiss.
It had been a week since the night Jack had gotten Harley back. Jack and Harley sat in their living room on the ground floor of their house with only a couple of lights on illuminating the room in a warm, creamy glow.

Jack wore a pair of bright blue, floral printed athletic pants with a dark purple t-shirt and a pair of orange and blue striped socks. He sat on one of the loveseats, his legs crossed. He smirked and rubbed his chin, his eyes moving over the chess board that sat on the table in front of him. Harley sat across from him wearing a bright pink onesie with white polka dots, fuzzy neon pink socks, and she had her hair in pigtails. Though the bandage was gone from the wound on her head, the stitches stood out dark against her pale skin. Both wife and husband sported bruises that were now an ugly yellow-green color with a mix of purple and blue patches here and there. Each time Jack looked at Harley and saw the stitches, it only reaffirmed his anger, his need to make Bruce hurt for what he had done, what he allowed that Bird of his to do to Harley.

Jack glanced from the board to Harley. She watched with a discerning eye and waited for him to make his next move.

Harley’s eyes moved from the board to Jack, narrowed her eyes slightly. “What are you staring at?”

Jack grinned showing off his perfect teeth. “You.”

Harley giggled with a hint of rosiness in her cheeks. “You’re supposed to be making your move.”

Jack shrugged. “Maybe I don’t want to beat you and would rather just watch you.”

Jack chuckled when Harley growled at him. “You think you’re going to win?”

Jack smirked again. “I know I’m going to win.”

Harley glared at him. “You’re too cocky.”

“It isn’t being cocky if you’re that good.” Jack grinned at her and waggled his nonexistent eyebrows.

Harley snarled. “I’m going to throw one of these pieces at you.”

Jack giggled and put his hands up. “Okay, okay--I’ll be good.”

Harley giggled. “No you won’t, but that's one of the things I love about you. It's that whole bad boy mystique.”

Jack grinned and ran his fingers through his green hair and struck a pose. “What can I say, I’m irresistible.”

Harley giggled. “That you are puddin.”

Jack wrinkled his nose at her before going back to examining the chess board. He was just about to finally make a move when his phone began to chime. Jack frowned reaching over and grabbing the phone, surprised to see that it was Alex.

Jack didn’t have a chance to say hello when he pushed the answer button however; just as soon as he took a breath, Alex yelled into the phone. “It’s fucking happening!!”
Jack frowned with a glance at Harley. “What’s fucking happening?”

“THE BABY!! THE BABY IS FUCKING HAPPENING!!!” Alex screamed into the phone. “I fucking need you buddy! I fucking need you both! I need fucking everybody!! I can’t do this alone!!”

Harley was looking over with concern as Jack mouthed. “Baby!”

“BABY!” Harley jumped to her feet. “The baby is coming?”

“Alex, where are you?” Jack asked calmly.

Alex didn’t answer for a moment, Jack could almost hear the confusion as Alex struggled to figure how where he was or where he was going until he finally blurted out. “Hendershott is on his way, to my house! I fucking need you guys here now!!”

Jack frowned for a moment before he asked. “Okay, but which house?”

Alex was silent for a moment before he replied as if it took him a beat to remember that Jack didn’t in fact know all of Alex’s different home locations. “Upper West Side off B street. There’s a fucking old renovated building on the corner, it’s called the fucking Roosevelt, can’t miss it. “ Alex’s voice shook as he asked. “Please--fucking hurry.”

Jack smiled into the phone. “Will do.”

He hung up and shot a grin at Harley. “We have a baby on the way.”

Harley clapped her hands. “Goodie!!”

Jack laughed. “Let’s change, I’ll call the others. Alex wants everyone there.”

Harley gasped. “Aww! That’s so sweet!”

Jack laughed. “I think it’s more because he’s scared. He never planned on being a dad.”

Harley nodded. “Well, let’s get going then.”

* *

It took Jack and Harley a few minutes to get ready.

Jack changed into a nice, simple bright blue suit with a floral printed tie, black oxfords, and dark red gloves. He made sure his green hair was styled and his lips painted a deep red.

“First impressions are important,” he told Harley with a smile. “We want the baby to know that their Uncle Joker is a man of style.”

Harley giggled, but she had pulled on a simple black pencil skirt and light knit red sweater along with a pair of knee high black boots. She pulled her hair free and fluffed it out with a smile. “Do I look all right?”

Jack pulled her close to his wife to reach up to rub her bottom lip. His heated gaze traveled over her lips, then up to her eyes. “You look good enough to eat my sweet.”

Harley giggled just before Jack kissed her, slow and deep. Harley sighed in delight when Jack released her, then blinked as she suddenly remembered. “Oh, gifts!”
Jack frowned in confusion. “Gifts?”

Harley hurried away from him to drop to her knees by the bed. She reached under, feeling around until she grabbed a box and pulled it out. “Oh, I had bought a baby gift like...months ago just for this...” She sat back on her heels as she pulled the box open.

Jack frowned pouting slightly. “You bought a gift without me?”

Harley glanced over her shoulder at him. “Sorry puddin, I ordered it online and Agatha picked it up for me. I was going to ask for your help I hadn’t intended on buying anything at the moment, but when I saw these I knew they were perfect!”

Harley opened the box and pulled out first a bright white and yellow silicon banana, the end of which resembled a toothbrush in that it had plastic bristles. She handed the banana to Jack who grinned while examining it. Harley also pulled out a stuffed medium size clown with a bright red smile and large blue eyes, wearing a pointed clown hair and costume in bright greens, purples and reds. Harley stood up with the little clown in her hands.

“I saw this and...” Harley smiled looking up at Jack.

Jack reached for the clown and laughed. “Harley, it’s perfect, just like you.”

He leaned over and kissed her on the cheek. Harley smiled and blushed with pleasure.

*

Frost waited in his car with one arm out the window, a smile on his face. Agatha stood outside the car waiting when Jack and Harley emerged. Agatha had a colorful gift bag filled to the brim with all manner of baby related items. Next to Frost another car waited that held Jason, Trope, Thea and Bea, while Bane and Viktoria were in an old beat up looking van (the back of which was filled with balloons) while Zsasz (whom no one had seen since Harley’s rescue) sat on the step to the back of the van wearing his typical black suit.

Zsasz smiled and waved. “Hey.”

Jack laughed. “Where did you come from?”

Zsasz smiled and shrugged. “Just laying low, but heard there was a baby coming.” He held up a teddy bear which only made Jack laugh more.

Trope leaned over her window looking at Jack and Harley. “Do we know where to go?”

Jack nodded. “Just follow us.”

*

The small caravan made their way through Gotham heading toward the Roosevelt. Everyone parked in a different location (just to be safe) with Jack and Harley heading up to the building first. The building looked to have been built about the 1880’s with peaked roofs and curved balconies. The front entrance had a locked glass door with a buzzer on the side. Inside Jack could see a curved desk with a guard sitting at the desk dressed in a blue and grey uniform and a little billed hat.

Jack cupped his hands around his eyes as he peered in at the desk clerk. The man looked up then pointed with a pencil in the general direction of the buzzer. Jack pushed the buzzer, followed by the tired guard’s voice.
Harley and Joker exchanged a look, not sure what name Alex would have listed them under so Jack pushed the button by the door and simply said, “Jack and Harley Wayne…” He looked back over his shoulder at their motley group before adding, “...and friends.”

The man frowned looking over something on a clipboard before pushing the button again. “How many friends?”

Jack sighed and turned around. “Okay I need a headcount, hold your hands up.”

Harley giggled watching Jack count everyone’s hands before he turned back around. “Eight.”

The man looked once more at his clipboard before he nodded pressing a button; there was a buzz and the door popped open.

Jack grinned putting his arm around to Harley who wrapped her arm around his and they headed inside.

The man at the desk looked over their small crowd and shook his head before he pointed at a wall where there were four elevators. “That elevator on the far left, only that one. You’ll have to go up in two separate groups. Take the elevator to the six floor, make a left, walk down past two doors. The last door on your right is the one you want. Do not touch any of the other doors. Got it?”

The desk guard gave Jack a narrow eyed look. Jack grinned brightly and saluted the man. “Got it.”

The guard grunted and went back to his computer.

Jack turned to their group with a smile. “Follow me kiddies!”

*

Jack, Harley, Frost, Agatha and Zsasz took the elevator first. They made their way down the red carpeted hall (the walls were painted a dull white and with the red carpet Harley kept thinking of the Shining) until they found the proper door. Everyone stopped sharing a startled look when they all heard the sound of a scream from the other side of the door.

Harley giggled. “I wonder if that was Alex or Alice.”

Jack snickered at her before he reached up and knocked once with his gloved knuckles. He had just begun to knock again when the door was flung open.

Alex, barefoot, in striped boxers, and wearing a sweat covered t-shirt, his brown hair sticking up in a million directions, and his eyes wide as his gaze landed on Jack, exclaimed, “YOU'RE HERE!”

Alex threw himself at Jack. Jack barely had time to grab his friend. “Alex?”

That was the moment everyone heard Alice scream. “ALEX!! Get in here!!”

Alex stepped back. “Come on! It’ll be here any minute!!”

Alex grabbed Jack’s hand and pulled, dragging the clown across the apartment with Harley and Agatha trailing behind him.

Frost and Zsasz looked at each other. “I think I’ll stay right here,” Frost murmured.
Zsasz nodded. “Yeah...someone needs to open the door for Jason and the others.”

Frost nodded and pointed his finger at Zsasz. “Exactly.”

The apartment had dark hardwood flooring throughout, the walls painted a soft grey with a few tasteful prints framed on the walls. They passed by a couple of other rooms, what looked like an office and another bedroom until Alex yanked Jack into the large master bedroom. Inside laying on a queen size bed was Alice. She was resting against a huge pile of pillows, her legs up and spread. She was covered in sweat, the t-shirt she was wearing was pushed up over her stomach—which was huge--while Dr. Hendershott stood on the other end looking down with a smile. A young woman in a nurse’s uniform stood off to the side, awaiting instructions.

“Ah, you’re all just in time, the head just crowned.” Dr. Hendershott smiled with an enthusiastic nod.

Alice looked tired, but she smiled, her eyes almost feverishly bright. “You all came!” She started to cry. “I can’t believe you all came.”

Harley smiled. “The rest of the gang are in your living room.”

Alice gasped, more tears flowing. “Oh gosh...there should be some cold cuts in the fridge and I think there....Ahh!!” She gasped in pain, dropping her head back. Hendershott smiled. “Now my dear, you need to focus on pushing. I’m sure your friends can find everything they need. Alex, please…” Hendershott motioned to Alice with his head.

Alex looked at Jack. Jack smiled wrapping his arms around his old friend and hugged him tight. “Get in there and help her, you’ll be fine.” Jack released Alex, placing his hands on the sides of Alex’s face. “Go on.”

Alex took a breath and grinned despite his panic and hurried over to sit beside Alice and took her hand in his one. Hendershott smiled. “Now--push.”

Jack put his arm around Harley while Agatha grinned. “This is so exciting! I didn’t get to be there when you or your brother were born,” Agatha said softly with a glance over at Jack. “I wanted to be, but...circumstances…”

Jack smiled and reached out to brush his fingers over his aunt’s shoulder.

Alice cried out and within seconds the room was filled with the sounds of a screaming new life. Harley watched, tears in the corner of her eyes as she remembered her own brief pregnancy, what she and Jack could have had together. She sniffed and quickly dabbed at her tears. Jack saw Harley’s expression from the corner of his eyes, the pain written on her features. He knew exactly what she was thinking about. He reached over to her and pulled his wife into his arms, wrapping her tight in his embrace, kissed the top of her head. He knew exactly what she was thinking about because the thought had crossed his mind too, how this could have been them if only things had gone differently. He didn’t say a word, he simply held her. After a few seconds Harley wrapped her arms around Jack, holding on tight to the man she loved.

*

A couple of hours later, Alice and the new baby were both sleeping, Hendershott having given her and the baby a clean bill of health. Alex was sitting on the couch next to Jack and Harley, a beer grasped in his hand looking both exhausted and completely in heaven.

Alex chuckled. “I still can’t believe I’m a fucking daddy...me? I never thought…” He sighed, taking a sip of his beer. “Just never thought a relationship let alone a fucking family was in the cards for Jack laughed, reaching out to touch the tip of his beer bottle against Alex’s. “There is no one more deserving my friend.”

Alex made a rude noise. “I don’t fucking know about that. I feel fucking sorry for this kid, got me as a father.” Alex sighed. “Just wish my fucking Dad could have been here.” He took a sip of his beer and sighed as he sank back into the couch.

Jack nodded and took a sip of his own beer. “So, what’s your son’s name going to be?”

Alex grinned brightly at Jack. “We decided on Michael, but we also decided to give him two middle names.” Alex kept grinning while Jack narrowed his eyes. “Frank and Jack, so his name is Michael Frank Jack...last name pending.”

Jack laughed. “You didn’t?”

Alex snorted. “Fuck yeah, we did! You’re my fucking best friend man! ‘Course he had to have your fucking name in there.”

Jack laughed. “Oh that poor kid, bad enough he has you for a father.”

Alex laughed along with him. “Yeah, he is going to be a fucking mess, but he is going to be fucking loved.”

The two men clinked their beer bottles together, drank for a moment before Alex looked over at Jack. “So, what’s your next fucking move, man?”

Jack sighed, settling back against the couch and glancing around at his gang. Zsasz and Jason were in the kitchen making sandwiches for everyone while Harley, Agatha and the rest of the ladies were looking through the baby clothes that Jason, Trope and Thea had brought over, giggling at the cuteness of the tiny outfits.

Jack took another sip of his beer before he answered. “I need to destroy Falcone.” He chuckled low, finding what he said funny. “It only makes sense that since we’ve just celebrated a new life, that an old one should end.” A balance, Jack mused running a finger along the top of his bottle of beer. “Falcone went after Harley, he tried to have her killed. I have to kill him, graphically, in front of an audience.” Jack smiled with a crooked lift of his upper lip, his eyes distant for a moment before he continued. “I need to put on a show.” He glanced over at Alex. “I was playing with him before, drawing out the suspense, making a game of it. It was fun, but I’m done playing. He needs to die for what he did.” He took a long swallow of his beer, staring off. “But not just him. I think it’s time that the mob families’ reign ended in Gotham. I know I’ve said it before, but now, I think I might have a plan, one that will allow me to destroy Falcone, and any of them that think they might take his place.” Jack nodded with a grin that Alex decided looked rather sinister. “A plan that will not just hurt Gotham’s organized crime, but will help me hurt Batman.”

Alex frowned. “Batman? But…”

Jack glanced at Alex. “I want to hurt Batman, Alex. I want him to hurt like he made me hurt...putting Harley in Blackgate...putting her out of my reach...” Jack’s voice lowered and took on a menacing tone. “I want him to feel helpless, I want him to know that his little crusade to save Gotham is pointless, that nothing he does can save anyone. I want him broken.” Jack’s eyes glowed with an inner fury that threatened to crawl out.

Alex swallowed a large gulp of his drink, watching his friend, seeing the Joker creeping into Jack’s eyes while Jack spoke. “He tried to take her away from me...I want--need--him to feel what that’s like...to lose something you love…”

Alex frowned. “Okay, so you want to hurt him? How?”

Jack smiled, Joker bleeding into his grin as he glanced over at Alex. “Harley and I have a plan...anyway, Falcone…” Jack sipped his beer. “I want to start a war.”

Alex frowned looking a little uncomfortable. “A war?”

Jack nodded. “A gang war. I want to start a war between every gang in Gotham. I want them all after Falcone’s head.”

Alex frowned in thought, but nodded. “Make sure he has no more fucking allies.”

Jack’s grin was wide, showing off his perfect teeth. “Exactly.”

Alex worried at his bottom lip for a moment before he asked. “So, how are you thinking about doing this?”

Jack smiled. “If I kill the head of every crime family in Gotham, pin it to Falcone, there will be an all out war.”

Alex cringed. “Fuck yeah, that would do it. They’ll all be out for fucking blood, and territory. Lesser families would see it as a fucking chance to step forward and take more of the fucking pie.”

Alex yawned, tired despite the gravity of their conversation. “So, how are you planning on doing it?”

Jack sighed. “Not sure. I need to get all the heads of the families in one spot. Get Falcone to call them together, but...I don’t want him there personally. I want to pin their deaths on him and cause complete chaos…”

Alex nodded, then said in a quiet tone. “You know Falcone has two other fucking kids besides that fuck Mario. He has a fucking daughter Sophia and another son, Alberto. I might have heard that he is grooming that fuckwad Alberto to be his heir now. Though a lot of people thought it would be Sophia since she is now the eldest, and also the fucking smartest of his three kids, but Carmine is a bit fucking old fashioned. You get that fuck Alberto to call a fucking meeting…”

Jack grinned at Alex. “That’s a fucking great idea.”

They both laughed.

Jack nodded. “I just might be able to pursue this Alberto to put the word out that he wants a meeting with the heads of all the crime families in Gotham. Do you think they will come?” He looked sideways at Alex.

Alex nodded. “Fuck yeah they’ll come, if for no other reason than fucking curiosity to see who the fuck is going to take over the Falcone family. I might have heard that The Roman’s been acting a bit off his fucking rocker since you killed his people and got Harley back. The fucking Roman ain’t used to having his fucking ass handed to him like that. You have been making him look fucking bad since you started all this...Jack.” Alex said ‘Jack’ as if he wasn’t sure he was using the correct name, but when Jack said nothing to contradict him, Alex smiled--partly in relief.

“So, you know where I might find this Alberto?” Jack asked.
Alex shrugged. “A little fuck bird might have told me he’s been seen a lot at this gallery in the upper east side called Kane & Swan. Seems the little fuck fancies himself a painter. Good chance you might find him there.”

Jack smiled. “Thank you Alex. I owe you.” He chuckled. “And poor Batman would just be so busy...too busy...”

Alex frowned. Part of him wanted to ask what Jack had in mind for his brother, but he didn’t know if he really wanted to know in this case. The two men were silent for a moment when Jack spoke again, his tone light once more.

“So, I’m thinking about investing in some bullet proof clothing.”

Alex laughed. “Really, you fucking just now figured out that would be a good fucking idea?”

Jack smiled, but gave Alex the finger.

Alex laughed and finished off his beer, turning to look over the back of the couch. “Hey Zsasz, toss me another?”

Zsasz looked up from where he had been cutting sandwiches in half and nodded, opened the fridge, pulled out another beer bottle that he simply tossed across the room. Alex caught it out of the air with his one hand easily.

“You should eat something, all that beer is going to go straight to your head,” Zsasz added.

Alex grinned. “Thanks Mom.”

Zsasz smiled at him giving him double middle fingers, which had Alex laughing.

Jack took Alex’s beer without being asked and with a hard twist, opened the top.

“Thanks man.” Alex took the open beer, drank a long pull before sighing with happiness.

“I can set you up with a tailor. Man I know…” Alex began, which made Jack chuckle. Alex ignored him and continued. “Goes by the name Vangel, he’s from fucking Austria.” Alex smiled. “Got a fucking crazy accent. Anyway, I’ve sent several clients there looking for fucking stylish, but bulletproof outfits. I’ll give him a fucking call in the morning, set you the fuck up. You can go see him tomorrow night. He’s got a fucking legit business, but he does all the real fucking money making shit at night. All fucking private appointments.”

Jack smiled. “Sounds good, and thank you.”

Alex nodded drinking his beer. Jack frowned, sensing that Alex had something else he wanted to talk about. He waited, giving his friend time to center himself.

Alex sighed. “I’m gonna be fucking leaving Gotham in the next couple of months.”

Jack frowned. “Why?”

Alex sighed again. “Well, I was going to fucking do it anyway, what with the baby coming and all…” He frowned and looked at his pale friend. “But after what you just told me you wanna do…” He sighed, dropping his head back against the couch and closed his eyes. “I want Michael to grow up someplace...nice...you know? Where I don’t have to fucking worry about him getting involved with the wrong people…” He chuckled derisively. “People like me. Fuck. I want him to have a fucking chance...and Alice, she needs to be someplace...I don’t fucking know...she needs a fucking house, a home where she and Michael can be happy. I mean don’t get me wrong, I ain’t getting out of the fucking information business. I’m too fucking far in to get out myself, but I want to know they are fucking safe from whatever the fuck I’m doing. I thought I would go and stay with them for a while...you know...make sure everything is cool before I came back.”

Jack nodded his understanding before he asked. “You sure you have to come back? I mean, if you wanted to stay away I would understand...especially with what I have planned. And you have a family now.”

Alex opened his eyes, sliding them toward Jack. “You know me man, I can’t stay the fuck away from Gotham for long. I could probably go out to see Alice and my kid every month or so, take a vacation off the grid for a few months here and there, but my fucking place is in Gotham, always has been, always will be. But...I wanted to let you know. I’m gonna be gone for a few months, though I’ll make sure you can get a hold of me...you know, just in case you fucking need your fucking pale ass pulled out of a fire or something.”

Jack laughed with a nod. “Thanks Alex, and I’m glad you are taking Alice and Michael out of here. Things are going to get decidedly ugly in Gotham.”

Alex nodded, opened his mouth to say something when they all heard the sound of a baby beginning to cry.

Alex set his beer down with a grin. “Well, be right the fuck back, going to go help Alice with my son.”

Jack grinned. “Good luck, Daddy.”

Alex’s grin was broad and bright.

*

Harley ran her hands down her legs, straightening the short, high waisted black ruffled skirt she wore, drawing Jack’s attention to her legs, though he knew drawing his attention hadn’t been what she had been trying to do. He couldn’t help but be distracted, however, he thought with a quiet sigh. His wife had incredible legs, legs he very much like having wrapped around his waist or over his shoulders.

Harley crossed her legs, the skirt riding up a little. Jack glanced from the road back over to her legs. She wasn’t wearing hose; her legs were naked, bare. He very much wanted to run his hand up her leg, but Harley had already smacked his hand once telling him to keep his eyes on the road. She had done it with a playful grin which, now that he thought about it, might mean she was playing with her skirt on purpose. He smirked. The little minx.

He glanced at her again, his eyes moving up from her legs to her torso. She had on a little white pom blouse, see through so he could see the sweet little white lace bra she wore underneath that he knew matched the lace panties she wore underneath the skirt, a matching set. He knew they matched since he had watched her dress (one of his favorite things to do, watch her dress along with watching her brush and put up her hair or when she did her makeup. There was something so hypnotic and sensual about watching Harley. He particularly liked watching her brush her hair. Tonight she had chosen to wear her hair up in what she had called a flip twist ponytail. He had no idea what that was, but she looked adorable and sexy at the same time. He enjoyed the way her ponytail swayed. She also had on a pair little black western style booties, which to Jack only made her bare legs that much sexier. Who was he kidding, he asked himself. Every inch of her was sexy, every inch of her was his to hold, to touch, to caress. He grinned, his eyes burning a moment. He had his girl back and no one was going to take her from him again. No one.

Jack turned his attention back to the road with a wide, red lipped grin, leaving one hand on the steering wheel of the dark purple Porsche 911 he was driving. Frost had gotten the car for him from the Irish, a gift for the Boss, though letting them go out without him had made Frost unhappy. But Jack wanted to be alone with Harley, and not just at home, but out with her, just the two of them. And going to see that tailor friend of Alex’s was a perfect opportunity.

Jack reached up and began to pull the dark purple glove he was wearing off. He glanced at Harley. He had tried rubbing her leg earlier with the glove on; maybe she would change her mind if he took the glove off. He spit the glove out and with a wicked grin, reached over, laying his bare hand on her bare knee with a happy sigh, sliding his hand down her thigh. “Ahh, that’s much better.”

Harley giggled. “I thought I said both hands on the wheel?”

Jack beamed at her. “Yes, but this is different, I took the glove off.”

Harley laughed softly scooting closer. “Oh, well, since you took the glove off.”

They laughed together with Jack settling back in his seat. Everything was right with his world at the moment. He slid his hand back down her leg to give her knee a squeeze.

Harley laid her head against his shoulder and closed her eyes, wrapping one arm around his biceps and yawned. She was still having trouble sleeping, her dreams haunted by Crane. She still hadn't told Jack about Crane being in the prison. She wasn’t sure why except maybe she wasn’t ready to talk about Crane, about what he did to her, what he tried to do…

She kept hoping that if she didn’t think about him, Crane would leave her alone, but he kept lurking in her nightmares. She knew she needed to tell Jack that Crane had been at Blackgate, but not yet...not now...she just wanted to be with her puddin right now, to banish away all the bad that had happened while they were apart and focus her attention on Jack. Harleen told her it was just because she didn’t want to deal with Crane yet...and maybe Harleen was right. Harley wanted to focus her anger on something she could affect...Batman. She closed her eyes pushing away Crane and her nightmares to focus on right now. She smiled to herself. And right now was good, so very good.

*

Vangel, the name in chunky neon red letters over the small doorway, was located in the middle of a small strip mall between a Lin’s Buffet and a Family Dollar Store. The Buffet was still open and the strong smell of Chinese food wafted from the open glass door that was propped open by a metal trash can. Jack glided past the restaurant, looking at the tailor shop. The establishment was small; the display windows on either side of the door held faceless mannequins wearing what looked to be (though hard to tell in the dark) nicely tailored suits. The place looked to be closed, though Jack and Harley noticed a soft light emanating from somewhere in the back. Jack looked around and turned, driving the purring sports car around the side of the building to the back alley looking for the door to the back of the tailor’s shop.

He parked the car and slid out of his seat with a keen eye taking in their surroundings. They had parked behind a rust colored red metal door just as Alex had told them when he had given them direction to this specialized tailor.

Jack while he pulled his glove back on, glaring at the door. Harley slipped out of the car, glancing first at Jack--who she thought looked stunning in a dark blue suit with a light grey vest. The dark blue of the dress shirt stood out against the pale, ghostly white hue of his skin. He reached up and ran a hand over his green hair while he walked closer to examine the door, the gesture sending shivers down his wife’s spine because there were few things she liked doing more than messing up his perfectly styled hair.

Jack grinned at her. “Well, here goes nothing.”

He brought his knuckles to the door and tapped out a quick rhythm. Harley’s lips twisted into a smirk; the rhythm of the knocks sounded an awful lot like a Queen song on the metal door. She had opened her mouth, about to ask him if the knock was indeed a Queen’s song when the door popped open to reveal the head of an older woman leaning out around the door.

Both Jack and Harley were taken aback as the woman had to be pushing close to eighty. She was diminutive, maybe reaching just to Harley’s chest, and wore large, bright green round framed glasses, a matching green turban with wisps of white hair curling around her forehead and glaring, bright red lipstick. She narrowed her eyes behind her glasses as she gave Jack and Harley a quick once over.

“You Alex’s friends?” she asked, a slight accent placing her origins somewhere in Eastern Europe.

Jack grinned at her. “We are.” He bowed at the waist. “Joker and Harley Quinn, at your service.”

The woman looked at him with a frown, then at Harley before she grunted. “Vangel will see you now.”

She pushed the door open and walked away.

Jack chuckled with a sideways glance at Harley. She shrugged with a grin. He put his arm out for her and Harley wrapped her arm around his before they stepped inside; the door seemed to close of its own accord once they had stepped through into the building.

The back of the shop no more than a small, plain hallway. The old woman, who wore a brightly printed tropical muumuu in a color that matched her turban, walked briskly past a couple of doors, with Joker and Harley hot on her heels, the old woman moving with surprising speed. She pulled back a dark blue curtain and yelled in a shrill voice.

“Vangel!! They’re here!”

This was followed by a man’s light, high-pitched voice yelling back. “MOTHER!! Stop yelling!! I can’t work with you yelling!!”

The old woman yelled in return, “TACI!!”

Jack and Harley stepped through the curtain to the sound of arguing and the sound of some sort of dance music, but the singer was singing in what Jack thought was Romanian. They were both surprised to see they had entered a large work space. The walls were painted in a light taupe, the floor a nice, polished light hard wood. One wall held a large full-length mirror and around the mirror, pasted to the wall, were hundreds of images of old Hollywood stars in black and white photos all showing them in tailored suits and dresses. A large table dominated the middle of the room along with bolts of cloth, spools of thread in a rainbow of colors, along with all the tools of a tailor.

Standing in the middle of the room working on pinning cloth to a seamstress dummy was a man of around sixty years of age. He wore part of a vivid red tailored suit—the jacket of which was thrown over a chair. He wore the vest and matching tie still, while the sleeves of his white dress shirt were rolled up to his elbows. The man’s short, full, curly hair was longish, curling around his ears and collar, and was dyed a bright pink. He had a ribbon of cloth over his shoulder, filled with pins and he held a piece of chalk in his hand.

He turned toward them when they entered with a gasp of delight. “Oh, Alex told me his friends were stylish and unusual, but I had no idea!!”

The man tossed his chalk onto a nearby table and hurried over with his arms held open wide. “I am Vangel!! I am so pleased to meet you both!” He stopped right in front of Joker and Harley looking them over with a pleased expression. “Oh my goodness; look at the two of you!! I adore your skin, so perfect, like porcelain dolls!!” He clapped his hands with joy. “And your hair, so unusual.” He tilted his head, examining Joker before he turned his gaze to Harley. “And you my dear, so beautiful! You are like an angel!!” He gasped, placing a hand to his heart. “You two are so beautiful!! You are like the perfect couple!!” He gasped again with joy before turning to address his mother. “Aren’t they mamă?”

Vangel’s mother was over in a corner pouring herself a large glass of Țuică as she muttered back at her son. “Da, Foarte frumoasă.”

Vangel smiled and turned his attention back to them. “Now, Alex said you were both interested in suits that would provide a certain level of protection?”

Joker chuckled. “Yes, I have some deadly plans that will soon be in play, a few strategic…” He frowned, though the edges of a smile tugged at Joker’s lips as he said. “…tactical pieces of clothing would be nice.” Joker smiled wide then. “Besides, a good set of tailored clothing is always a boon. I love a good tailored suit.”

Harley giggled gazing with love in her expression at Jack. “He does love his suits–always has,” she said giving Jack’s arm a squeeze.

Vangel clapped his hands. “Oh, I do love a handsome man with a good eye for clothing. All right, Joker isn’t it?” Vangel giggled with delight. “And I do love that name too. When Alex told me your names, I nearly died with delight!!” Vangel danced back to his table to grab up a measuring tape. “I’ve heard so much about the two of you in the news lately. I feel like I’m working with celebrities!!” Vangel smiled with excitement in his eyes. “Now then, my dears. Let’s get some measurements, styles, colors. Oh, and would you both like matching colored suits? Matching in style I mean, not color. I think that would look simply divine! There is nothing sexier than a woman in a suit, believe you me.” Vangel smiled taking Harley by the hand and led her over to the full length mirror against the wall.

Harley glanced at Jack who gave her an encouraging smile while he answered Vangel. “My pumpkin looks beautiful in anything. Perhaps with your expertise opinion, you have suggestions?”

Vangel nodded. “Well of course she looks beautiful in anything! Look at that figure!! Mm...an angel, yes…” Vangel placed her in front of the mirror and walked around Harley, inspecting her. “Mm...I think red would look so divine on you my dear, red and black are certainly your colors with those striking light blue eyes and that hair!! Both of you have such eyes!!” He sighed turning to glance at Joker. “Simply to die for!”

Vangel laughed with a slap of his hand against his thighs. “Now before we start, you said ‘tactical.’ I have some of the latest in microfiber kevlar, carbon fiber, carbon nanotube technology, nanotechnology, and a few surprises of my own with my work in kinetic gel.” Vangel smiled. “I can promise a suit that will not only save your life, but will make you look good doing it.”

Joker laughed with pleasure pulling over a stool to sit and watch while Vangel took Harley’s measurements as he asked.

“How do you feel about a suit in purple?”

Vangel’s eyes danced with delight. “Well now, I do love how your mind thinks Mr. Joker.”

*

Several hours later Jack and Harley were leaving Vangel’s after placing orders for several complete suits for Jack, separate vests, and jackets in order to mix and match, a couple of cute Bolero jackets for Harley, a couple of vests, two sexy dresses and a complimentary suit to one of Jack’s suits. It would take some time Vangel had told them, but that they would both be pleased, he was sure of it.

Jack smiled as they drove through late night Gotham. The streets were quiet, traffic was light. At this late hour, most of the bars were closing, nightclubs were shutting their doors and people were wandering home. For a moment Jack’s smile drooped, a shade catching his attention from the corner of his eye. He glanced over, but it was nothing...no Bat.

He wondered briefly is his brother was out and about or was he recovering still from their last encounter. He grinned at the thought that Harley had left a lasting impression on Bruce…

He chuckled as he drove.

Harley glanced over with a smile at her husband, reaching over to lay her hand on his thigh. “What’s so funny puddin?”

Jack grinned at her. “I was just thinking how happy I am right now.”

Harley squeezed his thigh. “Me too puddin.”

Jack glanced sideways at her, enjoyed watching the streetlights dance across her features, coloring her pale skin in multiple colors. He reached over with one hand and cupped the side of her face. Harley leaned into his touch closing her eyes, letting out a soft sigh of contentment.

Jack rubbed her cheek with his thumb. She was so beautiful, his heart hurt with how much he loved her. They had been so long apart, he had been so desperately lonely without her...Harley kissed the inside of his palm. She kept a light hold on his hand, slowly working his glove off. Jack shivered. It almost felt like she was stripping his clothing from him, leaving him naked. She turned her light blue eyes on him, her gaze warm, lustful as she dragged her slightly open mouth across his now bare fingers before she licked and kissed his palm, the sensation of her wet tongue against his palm sent shivers down his spine. He had a difficult time watching the road and her at the same time. He found it difficult not to watch her pink tongue against his pale fingers.

Harley slowly slid one of his fingers into her mouth, rolling her tongue around his finger, taking it deep into her mouth. She smiled, her eyes dancing with mischief and sucked on his finger. Jack sucked in his bottom lip, dividing his gaze between the street and her. Harley took her time to suck on each of his fingers in turn, her tongue and lips driving Jack to bite his lip and breath heavier. Jack continued to divide his time between gazing at her, then back to the road when he suddenly snatched his hand back and grabbed the wheel, spinning it around to turn down a side street. Harley yelped in surprise her hands shooting up to the roof to stop herself from being tossed around.

“Puddin!!! What’s wrong?” Harley looked around for the cops or Batman, but she saw nothing, no one.

Jack turned down a street only for Harley to realize they were entering a small neighborhood park.
She could see a path lit by pale lights, the shadows of a swing set, a handful of park benches, along with a thick grove of trees.

“Puddin?” She glanced at Jack as he pulled the car up to the sidewalk where the trees were thickest.

Jack turned off the engine, everything silent except for their breathing.

Jack pushed his seat back as far as it would go, yanking off his other glove before he whispered. “Come here beautiful.”

Harley giggled and crawled over onto Jack’s lap. She licked her lips cupping his face between her hands. “What’s this all about?”

Jack purred, his hands running under her skirt. “What do you mean pumpkin...I just didn’t want to wait...you little minx,” he added in a low lustful whisper.

Harley made a soft groan, leaned in to kiss him, their tongues sliding together in a slow, tantalizing kiss. Jack’s hands slid under her skirt, snaking along her thighs, feeling the coolness of her bareskin. He pressed his fingers into her flesh while at the same time he tugged her toward him—the firm mass trapped by his slacks—pressed up between her legs. He could feel the heat between her legs transferring through his trousers, or at least he imagined he did. He grunted as his hands slid around to grab her rear, pressing her down on him, his fingers digging into the softness of her, the sensation was both delightful and agonizing at the same time.

Harley groaned while she struggled with his tie, yanking it loose so her fingers could move work at the buttons of his shirt. She had gone so long without him that each time she needed him felt like she would die if she didn’t have her hands on her puddin, feel his body under her, hear his moans, the soft way he said her name. She moaned with pleasure feeling him hard between her legs; the thin lace of her panties did little to take away from the sensation of him rubbing against her. The fabric of his slacks created a thrilling combination of sensations that had her rubbing back against him while she pulled desperately at his shirt, needing to touch skin, needing to feel more of him. She gasped in pleasure once she had his shirt open enough to run her hands over his bare skin, kissing him hard while rubbing against the hard mass of his trapped erection.

Jack groaned and bit her lips. It felt so good to have her in his arms again, to hold her, love her. He pushed her back just enough that he could pull at her top, needing to touch as much of her as he could. Harley helped by pulling her top over her head. Jack reached up to grab her bra, shoving the delicate lace up over her breasts. He groaned seeing her naked breasts, full, soft, creamy, the pink of her nipples an invitation to suck and bite. He yanked her forward, bending his head to her breasts. Harley giggled with pleasure, her laugh turning into a gasp as Jack passed his tongue over the hard nipple of her breast before he sucked a nipple into his mouth, his tongue rolling and flicking over her nipple, causing an agonizing need that ripped through her straight to her clitoris. Harley whimpered, rubbed against him, her backside bumping against the steering wheel while Jack switched nipples, sucking, licking, brushing his lips over her sensitive nipples. He reached up, cupped her breasts with both hands, pressed her breasts together until he could suck both nipples into his mouth.

Harley gasped, her fingers caressing through his hair while she arched into his attentions, rubbing her clitoris against him in several slow, undulating rolls of her pelvis.

Jack smiled feeling the tension in her body building, her fingers pressing into his scalp while she held his head to her breasts. He squeezed her breasts, lavishing her nipples with his tongue until she cried out, arching her body against him when she orgasmed with a deep cry.

“Uuh...puddin!!” Harley cried out, thrusting her hips against him, rubbing her clitoris against the fabric of his slacks, shuddering with each thrust of her hips.

Jack growled with pleasure releasing her breasts, Harley gasped in response.

He reached down between them. Harley, her hands pressed against the ceiling of the car, lifted up enough to allow him to undo his slacks, his fingers fumbling for a moment against the now damp fabric until he finally had himself free, his erection throbbing with need. He grasped himself in one hand, rubbing against her, slick and waiting, while he pulled her panties aside with his other hand. He slowly guided her down on him, dropping his head back with a hiss as Harley lowered herself down on him, the sensation of slick heat wrapping around him had Jack groaning aloud. Harley pressed down on him kissing him hard while at the same time thrusting her hips, grinding down on him before lifting up again. She cupped Jack’s head, her fingers caressing the back of his neck, her fingers playing with locks of his green hair. She rode him, slow and hard, easing up before she brought herself down in a deep grind.

Jack had his hands over her, gliding along her back then back down to her hips, hissing when she thrust or ground in a particular way that sent ripples cascading through his body. He pulled her closer, continued to kiss her, his tongue playing along her lips, teeth grasping her lips, and sliding to bite along her throat. Harley moved faster, bouncing, made the entire vehicle move with her.

Jack groaned out loud, holding on her, the sound of their fucking, their panting and moaning filled the car.

Harley cried out, pressing her forehead against him when her climax hit her. It rushed over her, a burst of hot, bright light that ran through her body, setting every inch of her on fire. She rolled into Jack, thrusting, pressing, her fingers grabbing at his hair, forcing his head back. Her cry of pleasure filled the car. The feel of her soaking him made Jack cry out, the pull of her fingers in his hair, the slight pain fed his building orgasm, his body becoming taut for an intense moment, his feet pressed hard against the floor of the car, before his body let go. His orgasm broke over him in a wave of heated pleasure that had him blacking out for a split second.

Harley collapsed against him, struggling for breath, her fingers caressed gently through his hair. “Oh...oh puddin…”

Jack’s eyes fluttered, a silly smile on his face. “Mm...Harley…”

*

Nearby Batman was alone--while Robin recuperated--stopped on a nearby building surveying the park. It was one of the smaller parks in Gotham, but there was a known criminal element that liked to use the park for drug deals after dark. Usually just petty drug dealers or gang members, nothing hefty, but it was enough of a problem that Batman occasionally came this way to check, but tonight the only thing in the park was a Porsche. He frowned for a moment staring at the parked car, detecting slight movements. He thought about going closer to check it out, but decided against it. It was probably just a wealthy couple enjoying the evening…

He shook his head and headed back deeper into the belly of Gotham.
A cover band was singing live at Big Mama’s that evening, each member looking like they had stepped out of the 1980’s. The song they were currently covering, “Running Up that Hill” played through the bar, and a few people were dancing, though most seemed content to linger in the shadows or drift to the bar and let the music roll over them. The lighting in the bar was dim—as always—with soft pink and purple lights casting everything in a soft, rosy glow.

Joker, with his green hair slicked back and his lips painted a deep shade of crimson, stood in the doorway dressed in a fitted black, hairline striped suit with a dark green dress shirt. He wore a black, white, and grey tie with a style of dots that carried a definite ’70’s vibe. (It was his first of several suits made for him by Vangels, along with a matching pair of oxfords.) He pressed his lips together for a moment, his eyes scanning the bar. At the same time he tightened his hold on Harley; the dark green leather gloves he wore made a soft creak when his fingers pressed into her waist. The front half of Harley’s pale hair was pulled up in a ponytail that fell in waves down her back, mixing with the rest of her hair. She was dressed in a scarlet mini dress that looked startling against her milk white skin. The bright garment showed off her long legs, with a draped top and squared shoulders (giving an ‘80’s vibe), while the sleeves ended at her elbow. The back of the dress had a slit from the back of her neck that trailed, down her back to her tailbone, leaving a long expanse of her back exposed.

Joker resisted the urge to stroke his fingers along her pale back, but it was a struggle. He smirked with a slight turn of his lips, his gaze roving around the bar until he saw his people all sitting in one of the large booths that the bar provided for large parties. As the lights danced over them he picked out Frost, dressed as always in a suit that made him look like a hitman. Next to Frost, his arm around her shoulders, was his Aunt Agatha. She looked elegant, hair cut to frame her face, wearing a short, pink, fringed halter dress, and not looking her age in the slightest. Next to them sat Bane in black jeans, a black button down that looked as if the fabric was straining to contain his muscles. Joker could see the faint green color under the man’s skin that followed the path of his veins and his addiction. Next to him sat Viktoria October, his doctor and girlfriend, dressed similarly to Bane, all in black, but she had recently cut her hair shorter. The white streak in the front that swept along the side of her face seemed wider, as if the white had spread recently, but she looked happy leaning against Bane’s side, her hand resting on his chest.

Wearing his red and black motorcycle jacket, Jason was laughing, a beer in his hand and gesturing emphatically as he told some story to Trope and Thea. This time, the girls had turned their hair aqua green, both wearing black mini skirts with fishnets, with Trope in an old Cure shirt and Thea wearing a band shirt for the Korean band Walking After U. Next to Thea was Zsasz in a black on black suit, his bald head catching the lights while he sipped his beer and chuckled at whatever it was that Jason was going on about. Bea, dressed all in a tight green sparkling dress, looked amused as she sipped her drink though her eyes seemed to be mostly on Zsasz. Interesting, thought Joker. Hadn’t seen that little twist coming. He smirked wondering if Zsasz was aware or if he would care if was aware. He glanced down at Harley who seemed to sense her puddin’s gaze on her, and by the knowing look in her eyes, she saw exactly what he was seeing. She gave a silent giggle, bringing a smile to Joker’s face. He loved her laugh, just one of many things he loved about his Harley.

The last member of tonight’s group was here as the Irish representative, the new leader of the Irish gangs, Siobhan McDougal, or as she was known among the Irish, Silver Banshee. The woman’s solid white hair was buzzed on the sides giving her a long type of mohawk. She was dressed all in black and silver from her tight black pants to her striped black and silver top. Joker smiled. He respected people who were dedicated to their aesthetic like that. Joker didn’t know much about her except a few rumors that Alex had dug up on her, but he was interested to learn more and to see how she worked with his gang, because what he had planned was going to be fun.

Jason noticed Joker and Harley first and called out, waving his beer bottle around. “BOSS!! Miss Quinn!!”

Harley waved. “Hey everyone!!”

Frost stood and scooted over making room in the booth for Harley and Joker. They approached the booth and slid in, Joker draping his arm over Harley’s shoulders. Within seconds of taking their seats Big Mama came over to their table, a bright smile on her face.

“How are my favorite clowns tonight?” Big Mama asked with a smile.

Joker grinned. “Big Mama, don’t you look delightful!”

Harley squealed with pleasure. “Oh my gosh I love that dress!”

Big Mama chuckled and did a slow spin. The wig she wore was done in long pink waves and the dress resembled a 1950’s tea length dress, sleeveless with a sweetheart neckline in light pink, but with a scattering of dark pink roses that trickled down from the bodice to trace the edge of the skirt. When she spun, the full skirt spun out and around in a beautiful circle.

“Oh, this old thing? My new man Maarten has a great eye for fashion and he knows exactly what would look good on me. He picked it out for me.” The expression on Big Mama’s face showed that she was happy.

Joker smiled and nodded his agreement. “Well this Maarten does indeed have good taste.”

Big Mama laughed. “Don’t I know it. He picked me! Now, what can I get you two to drink this evening?”

Joker smiled at Harley, kissing her cheek. “What would you like my sweet?”

“Mm...I feel like a Pina Colada.” Harley rubbed her lips together with a grin.

Joker nodded turning back to Big Mama. “An old fashion for me darling.”

She nodded. “I’ll have your drinks right away. It’s so nice to see you all here again.” She added, “You all enjoy your evening and there should be some dancing later. I know how you two love to dance.” Big Mama grinned and turned away; her dress swung out as she flounced off. Big Mama pulled off the maneuver with grace despite her size.

Joker turned back to the group. “So I’m assuming you are all wondering why I asked you here?”

Jason chuckled. “Oh, that sounds ominous.”

Joker laughed. “Maybe...I wanted to discuss my plan for bringing down Falcone for good and for giving Gotham a good cleansing.”

Bane reached over to pick up his beer. “Cleansing? How?”

Joker smiled holding Harley close to him; his fingers stroked her shoulder while to talked. “I want to kill the heads of every crime family in Gotham and I want to make it look as if it was under Falcone’s orders. This will start a gang war...and a gang war means that dear old Batsy will be very, very busy--maybe a little too busy. And that will allow Harley and me here to take a little revenge on the caped crusader.”
Siobhan McDougal blinked in shock. “Can you do that, Joker? I mean, get all the heads of the families into one place?”

Joker smiled at her, his grin spreading across his face in an ominous way that had her frowning. “Oh I can do anything I want darling, anything at all. But first, we need Alberto Falcone.”

Jason took a sip of his beer with his eyebrows lifted. “Alberto Falcone?”

“The Roman’s youngest and last son. Alex informed me that the word is Falcone is now grooming Alberto to take over the family business after Mario’s unfortunate early demise…”

Agatha interrupted. “Alberto? Doesn’t he have a daughter, Sophia, who’s the eldest now?”

Joker confirmed his aunt’s question with a nod and said, “He does, but it seems our dear Carmine is a bit of an old fashion sexist and is passing up the daughter in favor of the son.”

Trope muttered, “What an ass.”

Harley nodded her agreement. “Exactly.”

Joker chuckled. “Well, if we needed another reason to kill the guy…”

“So what does Alberto have to do with you killing the heads of all the crime families in Gotham?” Siobhan asked with clear concern.

“He has everything to do with it because he is going to be the one to bring them all together for me.” Joker grinned. “You see, it seems that little Alberto has been working behind his father's back. He has plans of his own and maybe he wants the reins to the Gotham underworld before dear old daddy’s death. Alberto goes missing for a few days, puts the word out he wants to talk. With Falcone’s growing list of problems and reports of his instability-- lunacy strikes the best of us, you know--I think the others might want to listen.”

Jason snickered. “Then bam! Kill them all.”

Joker showed his teeth in a laugh. “Exactly…”

He stopped speaking when a young woman in a tight latex orange dress stepped over with their drinks balanced on a large tray. She smiled, set the drinks down, and hurried off.

Joker continued. “Kill off the heads…gang war. Alberto puts out the word that his father found out about his plans and that the killings were all his doing, gangs turn on Falcone, keep him busy and weak…then I just stroll in and…” Joker made a finger gun. “Pop! Of course, after I make sure that he knows it was all me and Harley, that we finally got to him, got our revenge…” He shrugged. “Since our more direct approach clearly wasn’t working, I thought perhaps a more indirect route would work better.”

Agatha frowned before she spoke. “This is definitely going to draw the Owls’ attention Jackie…”

Joker grinned at his aunt. “Good, because I don’t like knowing there is some group hanging around in the shadows spying on everything.” Joker put his fingers in the air and fluttered them about. “Thinking they control what happens in Gotham, thinking they control my family, thinking they can control me…” He laughed. “If they don’t like what I’m going to do, then let them come on out and say their piece to my face.”
Agatha’s frown deepened, but she nodded. “Just...be careful Jackie. This plan is big...taking out Falcone was going to disturb the status quo as it was, but this...taking them all out...” She rubbed her finger against the table. “It’ll be chaos...”

Joker grinned at her. “Exactly, that’s been my aim all along, except this time, I think I can do it. This will create the chaos I’ve been after.” Joker smiled, keeping the rest of his plan to himself; his plan to use this chaos to hurt Batman, to take the Bat’s little Robin and break his wings, to make sure his pet never flew again. And to find his brother’s cat and take all nine of her lives. That aspect of his plan was even more personal than his vendetta against Falcone, going after Robin, going after Selina, hurting Batman, cutting closer to Bruce’s soul and heart...That part of the plan touched on a pain that ran deep in Jack, deeper than just his mind, but tearing into his very soul. No one but Harley understood. Harley had felt that same pain; she understood and wanted to hurt his brother just as much as he did. They both needed to hurt Batman and Bruce Wayne.

Joker pressed his lips together into a thin line as a rush of rage washed over him for what Batman had done. It was hurtful enough that his brother had lied to him for years, ignored him, cut him out of his life, but then to bring that brat in, to replace him, to give himself a new little brother, that had hurt deeply. But then to top it all off by taking Harley away from him, putting her out of his reach and into danger, giving Falcone the opportunity to hurt her, to hurt him, Jack couldn’t forgive Bruce for that. He would never forgive Bruce for any of it, for the abuse, the asylum, taking Harley—the weeks without her had nearly killed him. Batman needed to understand what he had done. His brother needed to understand what that felt like, to lose all hope. That aspect of the plan was far too personal to share here with his gang--his new family--or even with his aunt. She may have sided with him in this fight, but he couldn’t be sure she would follow him down the path he and Harley had decided to take that involved Bruce, the Batman, Wayne.

Harley spoke in a tone that the others had to strain to hear over the bar’s noise. “This will also weaken Batman since he’ll be fighting the gang war on all fronts. His crusader complex will drive him to fight until he can’t fight anymore.” She giggled. “And if he can’t win, he’ll despair, which will make him question his crusade.”

Bea frowned. “Crusader complex?”

Harley nodded and continued. “Batman is a crusader; he thinks that his cause of just and noble. Think of it like the Crusades, the religious war between Christians and Muslims. The crusaders thought they had a moral authority to run over the Muslims, an authority given to them by the Church and God. Batman is like that, except the authority was given to him, by himself.” She gave a soft snort. “Batman is his own Papal authority and since in his mind, he is right, anything that contradicts his view is necessarily wrong.”

Jason snorted as he flopped back in his seat crossing his arms over his chest. “Yeah, that sounds about right. Fucking asshole. I hate anyone who thinks they have the fucking moral high ground, so sure of themselves. What’s that saying--people who live in glass houses?”

Trope nodded. “Batman has a lot of nerve. The men in power tick me off, but someone like Batman, who thinks he has some moral superiority, that self-righteous attitude, that pisses me off even more.”

There was a murmur of agreement that passed over everyone.

“So how do we get Alberto?” Frost asked in a soft tone, setting his drink down and gave Joker and Harley a look of interest. “I’m guessing you already have a plan?”

Harley picked up her drink, smiling down at it. “According to Alex, Alberto Falcone is an art student, never planned on being in the family business. Being the youngest, he has been allowed to pursue his own interests. He likes to frequent an art gallery called Kane & Swan, it's a place his sister bought him to not just display his own work, but to give him a chance to work at helping display other struggling artists’ works. It's a small place located in The Hills area. We just stake out the place until Alberto appears. Should be easy to pick him up.” She shrugged, leaning back into Joker’s arms. He chuckled and nuzzled her ear.

Jason nodded with a grin. “Cool. Can we destroy some of the art?” He put his hands up as Thea started to reply. “Hey don’t get me wrong. I like art, but I don’t like uppity artists who think they are better than everyone else and I’m betting poor little Alberto is one of those, got Daddy’s money--or his sister’s, same thing--to make sure he can get his shit out there for the public consumption…”

Jason muttered. “I hate rich people…”

Joker grinned at Jason. “I’m sure you can do whatever you want while we’re there darling.”

Jason grinned at Joker. “Cool.”

Joker sipped his drink before he spoke again. “I’m also thinking of bringing in Cobblepot.”

Bane frowned. “The Penguin, but why? Isn’t that little turd under Falcone’s boot?”

Joker smiled. “He is, which is why he’ll side with us. Cobblepot hates being beholden to anyone. Plus, with Alex leaving Gotham for a while, I need a new information broker and word is that Cobblepot is the man to talk to.” Joker had expressed to Harley earlier his previous displeasure with Penguin, but that was in the past. He was willing to entertain an alliance with the snide, little man. “He knows a lot about what's going on in Gotham. Not as good at the work as Alex, but who is, really?” Joker wrinkled his nose with a grin. “Besides, he knows me from way back, he’ll join.”

Siobhan sipped her own drink studying both Joker and Harley before she spoke. “I’m with you--if you can pull this off.”

Joker grinned at her, though the smile lacked humor. There was a coldness to it that reached into his blue eyes. “Good. I would hate to see you and the Irish on the wrong side of this after we’ve worked so well together.”

Siobhan resisted the urge to frown, looking between Joker and Harley. The same flatness was in the eyes of both despite the pleasant smiles on their faces. They made her shiver.

She took a measured breath and nodded. “Agreed.”

Joker laughed smacking his hands on the table. “Good. Now, let’s have a nice evening shall we?”

Everyone nodded their agreement.

The music had just changed. The cover band began playing a smooth, mellow, jazzy version of the song “It Must Be Love.”

Joker chuckled stepping out from the booth and put his hand out to Harley. “My sweet, I think that must be a sign of the dancing that Big Mama promised us.”

Harley beamed at him, placing her hand in his. “I think you’re right puddin’”

Joker tugged Harley to her feet gazing at everyone seated at the table. “If you’ll excuse us…”

He grinned, holding Harley’s hand, his touch gentle as he guided her along with him. He moved her to the bar’s dance floor in front of the stage. There were a few other people there dancing to the music, though not many. Joker spun around, pulling Harley into his arms in a smooth, graceful movement. He wrapped one arm around her waist while taking her hand in his, but instead of holding her hand up, he laid her hand against his chest. His hand cradled hers in a tender gesture, resting both hands against his chest. His smile was softer, his eyes lighter when he looked down at her. Harley smiled back at him, her gaze filled with love for her husband as he began to lead her around the dance floor, waltzing in a sedate pace to the music.

Joker glided across the floor. He moved with the grace of a professional dancer, moving Harley with him, holding her hand and turning her in a circle before bringing her back into the embrace of his arms. He turned in a circle, spun her out again before he brought her back toward him, this time placing his hand against the side of her neck while she placed her hand on his shoulder. Joker gazed into Harley’s eyes while he reached up to lay his other hand along her forearm and smiled at Harley while they danced. Harley leaned into Joker’s touch. Feeling his fingers pressed against her throat sent shivers along her skin, goosebumps rising over her flesh. He angled her slightly while they moved; their steps flowed easily, the two of them in tune to the movements of the other. He leaned her back holding her with gentle care by her throat before he pulled her close once more. His lips hovered a breath above hers, not quite a kiss. Joker stared into her eyes, both of them becoming lost—the music, the people, the bar, all falling away until they were the only ones on the dance floor. No one else existed in the entire world but the two of them, right now, right here.

Harley’s smile was soft and her eyes danced with mischief before she whispered. “I noticed you said nothing about our plans for Robin or Selina.”

Joker smiled at her as his hand dropped back to her waist. He turned, guiding her in a slow spin. “No--I didn’t.” His smile dropped away from his lips. “That information is too personal. That is revenge that I don’t want to share, except with you Harls.” He gazed down at her. “Our revenge.”

Harley smiled and wrapped her arms around him, rested her head against his shoulder and closed her eyes. Joker held her close, their bodies moving back and forth.

His voice brushed against her hair and tickled her ear. “It will be the ultimate joke Harls, to take away everything that Bruce cares for…” Joker’s voice was low, Harley could detect the thread of pain in his words that maybe even he wasn’t aware of. “To make Bruce...no…” Joker chuckled. “...to make Batman face how unstable and fragile life is, how much of a danger he is to those he surrounds himself with. This time Brucie won’t have me around to ignore, to blame, to be better than. Brucie won’t have little Jackie to watch stumble on the edge of sanity and fall over the edge so that he can tell himself how stable he is, how much better he is dealing with all that life throws at him. No, this time it's going to be Batman that suffers, not Bruce Wayne. Brucie is going to lose his mask.” Joker chuckled. “Brucie won’t be able to say, “Oh, at least I’m not as crazy as my little brother.” No, he’ll have to face the darkness alone...no sidekick, no love interest…all of it ripped away…” Joker chuckled. “Even Alfred left him...he’s all alone and vulnerable…and we are going to take the rest of his stability away from him. We are going to bring Brucie and Batman to the edge and shove them both over.”

They both giggled before Joker kissed her.

Harley melted against him, her arms wrapped tightly around his shoulders and lost herself in Joker’s kiss.

*

Bruce sat across from Alfred, his coffee cup cradled between his large, calloused hands. Dick was gone, currently at school while Barbara was off doing some shopping. He stared into the dark depths of his mug. Alfred was quiet, holding his cup of tea between both hands, giving Bruce the space he needed to form his thoughts.

“Jack...he calls himself Joker now...Jack is gone. The man that’s left behind isn’t Jack anymore. He was bad when he left, but he is so much worse now,” Bruce said in a voice barely above a whisper.
“He is so much worse,” he repeated.

“Is it true he attacked Carmine Falcone from a helicopter?” Alfred asked. “In the open?”

Bruce nodded. “He did. Failed to kill him, though he killed Falcone’s girlfriend and ex-wife. And Falcone’s lawyer is still missing.” Bruce turned his coffee cup around between his hands, not yet touching the dark liquid. “He’s killed a lot of people.” Bruce closed his eyes. “I can’t believe my little brother…” Bruce choked and squeezed his eyes shut.

Alfred looked down at the untouched tea in his cup. “Did I hear correctly that Miss Harleen ended up at Blackgate?”

Bruce nodded. “I barely saved her from impacting with the sidewalk when she fell from the helicopter. I can’t believe as obsessed as Jack is with her, with that woman, that he let her fall.”

Alfred frowned. “Bruce, that isn’t fair.”

Bruce opened his eyes giving Alfred a frown. “I should have let her fall. All this would have ended if I just let her…” He swallowed.

Alfred reached out to lay a hand on Bruce’s arm. “You don’t mean that Bruce. That isn’t in your nature.”

Bruce stared at his cup. “I wonder.” He sighed and continued. “She was being kept in Blackgate, until they determined her sanity, but the warden couldn’t wait that long and had her moved to Arkham. Falcone apparently made an attempt on her life while she was being held at Blackgate, she attacked some guards, and a couple of prisoners from what I’ve learned. Jack and Falcone both made a grab for her when she was being transferred to Arkham, with Jack winning. He got her and escaped from me.” He frowned. “I lost him. I lost them both.” Bruce rubbed his fingers along the table before he looked up at Alfred. “I don’t know what to do now. I failed him, completely. I don’t know if I can save them, I don’t know if I can save him…I don’t know if he is worth saving anymore.” He closed his eyes. “My parents would be so...I don’t even know what they would say knowing I failed my brother so miserably.”

Alfred’s voice was calm, but the emotion was there, under the surface. “You cannot give up on him Master Bruce. You cannot give up on either of them, you simply cannot. Jack is worth saving and Harleen is worth saving.”

Bruce opened his eyes to look at Alfred. The old man seemed older, but there was so much pain in the man’s eyes, in his voice. “You have to promise me Master Bruce, that you will never give up on your brother or Miss Quinzel. That you will find a way to save them--promise me.”

Bruce frowned. “Alfred I…”

Alfred squeezed Bruce’s arm. “Bruce, swear to me, you will save them.”

Bruce continued to frown, but he nodded. “I’ll do everything in my power to save them both. I swear Alfred.”

The older man nodded and released Bruce’s arm. “Thank you Master Bruce.”
The phone beside the bed went off, the sound of a light chime waking Harley up. She frowned against her pillow before she blindly reached over for the phone, her fingers brushing against the polished wood of the bedside table before she realized that the phone was actually on the table on Jack’s side of the bed.

Harley’s groan was quiet. She rolled over and stopped, smiling at Jack who was lying on his side, the blanket wrapped around him, snug and secure. His eyes were closed, some of his green hair brushed forward over his forehead and eyes. Harley thought he looked peaceful now as she reached over and brushed his hair from his face. Jack murmured, rolling onto his back throwing one of his arms over his eyes. Harley giggled, scooting up against his side wrapping her arm around his chest and her legs around his hips.

“It’s time to wake up,” she whispered against his jaw, placing a soft kiss along the smooth line of his jaw, following it up to his ear where she kissed him again. “We have kidnappings to perform…”

Jack mumbled without opening his eyes. “Ugh, it’s too early.”

Harley responded with another giggle. “It’s almost two in the afternoon.”

Jack groaned again. “I hate sunlight.”

Harley kissed the side of his mouth. “It’s rainy out…at least I think it is--I thought I heard rain.” She continued to place kisses along his throat and down his chest before following her trail back to his mouth. “How about I give you an incentive?”

Jack shifted his arm up to uncover one eye. He opened it revealing the startling blue, but he lifted a hairless brow at her, a grin trying desperately to spread across his face. “Oh?”

Harley chuckled. “Yep.”

Harley sat up and hopped onto her knees before she straddled him to sit on his pelvis. She was wearing her panties and one of his dress shirts, a deep crimson one that she had grabbed out of their closet last night. She liked sleeping in his shirts, (especially after Blackgate) she liked the way they always smelled like him. Jack was only wearing a pair of boxers that had a diamond pattern of black and plum across them.

Harley adjusted herself, feeling his semi-hard erection between her legs, wiggling to rub herself against him as she made herself more comfortable.

Jack groaned and gasped. “Ow! Harley you’re heavy!”

Harley gasped. “What?”

Jack chuckled. “I said you were heavy.”

Harley smacked him on his bare chest. “Jerk! Take that back or no incentive!”

Jack laughed reaching down to grab her thighs and bucking. “Nope, not going to take it back. You can’t make me!”

Harley wrinkled her nose at him and began to crawl off him, but Jack grabbed his pillow yanking it from under his head and smacked Harley in the face. Harley squealed and fell backwards.
She sat back up, grabbing the pillow. “I can’t believe you did that!”

Jack laughed. “You are so cute when you’re annoyed!”

Harley hit him in the face with the pillow.

Jack laughed tossing the pillow aside and pulled her down to him. He covered her mouth with his, kissed her. Harley melted against him, wrapped her arms around his head, her fingers brushing through his green hair.

Jack’s hands slid up her back, shoving the shirt up as his hands moved, tracing the curve of her spine. He made of a soft moan of desire against her lips, keeping the kiss slow and sensual, enjoying the way her tongue felt in his mouth, and the softness of her lips against his.

Harley grabbed his bottom lip with her teeth, giving his lip a careful tug that made her puddin growl. She pulled back just enough so she could look into his eyes. They were so blue, she could become lost in his haunting gaze.

“I love you,” she whispered. “I love you so much puddin.”

Jack’s smile was tender, just for her. He brushed his hands through her long white hair, pushing it back from her face. “I love you too sweets. You are my entire world.”

Harley smiled and kissed him again, but this time Jack wrapped his arms tight around her and rolled her over onto her back. Jack tugged at her shirt, finally finding the one button that held the shirt together. He growled against her mouth as the button frustrated him, slipping in and out of his grip until he finally sat up, straddled Harley and ripped the shirt apart. Not only did Jack tear the button lose, but he also tore the shirt.

Harley giggled. “Puddin!”

Jack shrugged. “Vangel can fix it.”

He waggled his eyebrows at her before he leaned in and brushed his lips against her throat.

Harley sighed and arched her head back while Jack’s lips trailed along the sensitive skin of her neck, his lips catching her skin and tugging playfully until he came to her breasts. He moved with slow determination, his eyes closed and focused on the feel of her soft skin against his face, the smooth silk combined with the delicate scent of her, his Harley. He traveled lower, his lips caressed her skin until he neared her nipple. Jack brushed his lips over her nipples, smiling when she gasped again. His smile turned into a crooked grin when Harley made a breathy gasp, his smile turned into a crooked grin when Harley made a breathy gasp, her body arching at his touch. He lay against her, brushing his nose along her skin, feather soft and tantalizing. His fingers brushed with a light graze over her still healing wounds along with the growing number of tiny scars that marred her body, only enhancing her beauty for him. Her scars, like his own, spoke of their journey together. He smiled when he felt Harley’s hands caress his back and shoulders before she buried her fingers in his hair. Jack rolled his tongue over the nipple of one breast, cupping the soft, round mound with his hand, squeezing her breast up before sucking on her nipple.

Harley squeezed her legs together; the heat building in her groin was almost too much. Just the weight of his body on her was thrilling, the feel of his body against her and under her touch, his lips gliding over her skin and pressed against her breasts, the smell of his hair. Jack switched to her other breast and Harley groaned aloud while her hands cradled his head against her breast. Jack smiled, taking his time as he slid down her body planting kisses in his wake or alternating with long licks, dragging his tongue over her skin and feeling the goosebumps on her flesh until he had angled down... between her legs. He grabbed her panties with his teeth, looking at her face with a playful and mischievous glint in his eyes before he sat back and tugged on her panties with his fingers and stuck his lip out.

“I need these off...” He tugged again, making Harley laughed. “...so I can play with you.” His voice dropped to a seductive whisper.

Harley smiled “Okay fine, if you put it like that.”

She giggled at Jack, raising up on her elbows so he could pulled the fabric of her panties over her rear to begin tugging them down her thighs until he stood up. Jack stood struggling for a few seconds to find his balance. He laughed as the mattress wobbled under him.

Harley laughed watching her husband playing around on the mattress. Her smile was soft, loving. She was pleased to see him happy, so happy that she was with him again and overjoyed to see him easing more toward being himself again.

“Hey, I thought you wanted my panties?” She gave him a playful mock pout.

Jack grinned down at her with a lick of his lips. “Oh, I do.”

Harley giggled again, shoved her panties down the rest of the way, then kicked them off her feet before she reached down and grabbed them, tossing the panties at Jack while he bounced on the bed.

“Hahahaha!!” He laughed, grinning like a kid at Harley as he caught her panties out of the air and wrapped them around his wrist like a bracelet.

Harley giggled and rose up on her knees. “Hey!! I thought you were going to play with me?”

She grabbed his boxers and yanked, pulling down them to his knees. Jack laughed and dropped on her forcing her back against the mattress, the entire bed bouncing. He kicked off his boxers while holding her down and sat on her.

“Now I have you right where I want you,” Jack purred pressing his hands down on her shoulders. Harley smiled, glancing down at his erection with a smirk before Jack simply dropped down on top of her using his entire body to press her down into the mattress. They both laughed, but Jack quickly muffled her laughter with his mouth, sliding his tongue between her lips. Harley’s fingertips trailed with slow grace up and down his naked sides, feeling him goosebump under her touch while she returned his kiss with equal vigor, her tongue twisting and sliding against his tongue, her fingers pressed into his skin. She groaned and bit his tongue, his lips; the kissing made her heart beat faster and her groin burn. She wanted Jack, needed him.

Harley's voice was soft. “I want to be right here with you puddin--always.”

Jack caught her bottom lip with his and pulled before letting her lip go with a grin. “You will always be my girl Harley, now and forever. You are my queen...” He smiled and brushed his nose against hers. “The Queen of Gotham.”

Harley purred. “That makes you my King...”

Jack smiled and kissed her again, but while he kissed her, he reached down and pulled her right leg up over his shoulder, wrapping his arm around her leg with his hand splayed across her knee. He leaned into her, kissing her harder while rubbing his erection against her, hissing with pleasure, feeling the flow of her juices over him, hot and wet against him. He pulled back from her lip, his brow furrowed with the intensity of the pleasure that washed over him before he thrust into his wife.
Jack leaned in heavily, his lips against her ear when he released a deep groan of pleasure, his shaft buried deep inside her. Harley’s eyes rolled, her own answering moan came from a combination of feeling him deep inside her, piercing her, but the sound he made, that deep moan on his lips when he was inside her, set Harley on fire. Their moans mixed together when Jack pulled back just enough to slide deep into her again, thrusting himself as far inside Harley as he could. He shuddered and Harley felt a wave of heat, her body responding with a gush of fluids, not just from having him inside her, but feeling his pleasure at knowing she was making him weak with ecstasy.

Harley grabbed his upper arms, squeezing while she arched her pelvis up against his thrusts. She willed him deeper inside her, wanting and needing all of him.

She whimpered; she couldn’t think of anything she loved more than being at one with her husband. “Puddin…”

Jack pushed himself up to his knees, holding her leg against his shoulder. Panting with a smile on his lips, Jack kissed her knee. His hand glided up and down her smooth leg while at the same time he made slow thrusts into her, rocking his body in fluid motions, his gaze traveling from her face to watching the rhythmic slip and slide of his erection in and out of her.

Harley dug her teeth into her bottom lip, reaching up with both hands to drag her fingers down his chest and stomach, feeling the play of muscles under his milk white skin. She liked the way his green hair fell across his brow, how intense his blue eyed gaze was when he looked at her. His grip on her knee tightened as he fucked her, with slow steady thrusts. She mewed with pleasure, arching her back; her foot dropped down to press against his shoulder. He was beautiful, her puddin, his skin like porcelain, his eyes so blue and hypnotic. She could lose herself, had lost herself in his eyes from the moment she saw him. Harley caressed his stomach, tracing the flat muscles of his abdomen. Her fingers caressed the chiseled lines of his groin, her fingers sliding down until she felt the gooey, wet slide of his erection as he moved. Each thrust had her shuddering, her fingers brushing against the slick, wet hardness of his erection each time he pulled back.

Jack playfully bit her foot while continuing to rock his hips into her, slowing down to drag himself slowly back, his erection wet and shining with her fluids before he thrust back into her, burying himself as deep as possible, reveling in the sound of their bodies, flesh smacking against flesh. He grinned when her breasts bounced with the impact, her eyes rolling closed and her fingernails pressing into his skin. She was so beautiful he thought, like an ethereal being, something beyond an angel. Being with Harley felt so good, and thrusting into her made him feel complete, whole. He swallowed and growled in pleasure. Jack loved her, loved her so completely that he knew he wouldn’t--couldn’t--live without her.

Jack licked his lips as he reached down to brush his thumb over her clitoris, gradually rubbing back and forth in time to his thrusts, his thumb slipping and sliding against her. Harley cried out, and her hands dropped to the mattress to grasp fistsful of the sheets when her orgasm ripped through her the moment his thumb brushed against her. Her toes pointed, her foot pressed hard against his shoulder. Jack grinned and bit the side of her foot, one hand sliding down her leg watching her, his body tense while he continued to rub her clitoris, watching the way she tensed and thrashed in delight under him while her fluids soaked his erection, causing his breath to become more and more ragged. He continued his slow thrusts into her, grinding his teeth together while fighting his own orgasm, but Harley made it difficult with the way she was moaning and moving her body.

Jack grinned and bit the side of her foot, one hand sliding down her leg watching her, his body tense while he continued to rub her clitoris, watching the way she tensed and thrashed in delight under him while her fluids soaked his erection, causing his breath to become more and more ragged. He continued his slow thrusts into her, grinding his teeth together while fighting his own orgasm, but Harley made it difficult with the way she was moaning and moving her body.

Harley ran her hands up Jack’s chest, hooked her feet behind his legs, and thrust her hips up to meet his with a whispered moan. “Jack...my puddin…”

Jack smiled moving her leg aside to ease himself down on her. He wrapped his arms around her head, his hands tangles in her white hair

He brushed his nose against her forehead. “Harley, my sweet…” He chuckled and placed a kiss at the side of her mouth, another on her cheek, brushing his nose against her and kissing his way to her ear. “My one, my only,” he said with passion, his voice husky.

Harley screamed her orgasm, holding onto Jack as if her life depended on it.

Jack continued moving, his thrusts slow and deliberate, his lips kissing and brushing down her neck while she orgasmed. He fingered the nipples of her breasts, but then caressed the hard buds with his lips, pressing a deep kiss upon each while she rode her orgasm. Jack shuddered as a rush of hot liquid cascaded over his erection.

He bit into her breast with his teeth, growling. The bite wasn’t painful, just enough to convey the intensity of how she was making him feel, how her orgasm felt. He thrust faster, continuing to keep his movements in a rolling cascade of firm thrusts, but he couldn’t hold back any longer. He needed to join his wife in the ecstasy of orgasm.

Harley gasped, holding on with a whispered, “Yes puddin...harder…”

Jack’s blue eyes rolled and he bared his teeth, giving in to his need, thrusting hard and fast; the entire bed rocked with the vigor of his thrusting. Harley dug her fingers into his shoulder, holding on, watching the intensity of his expression, his green hair falling across his face. She cried out with pleasure each time he slammed into her until she felt Jack cum with a burst of hot liquid.

He growled her name. “Harley…”

The orgasm was intense, his body tensed and relaxed so quickly that if he had blacked out he would not have found that the least bit surprising. He smiled with a lazy grin that reached his eyes, making them glow in the bedroom’s dim light. “Mm...now think I could kidnap some spoiled mafia boss’s kid.”

Harley giggled. “Yeah, I think I could too puddin.”

Jack wrapped his arms around her head, tucking his hands behind her skull and showered her with tender, passionate kisses. Harley wrapped both her arms and legs around him, holding him close, content to stay just like this with her husband all day.

*

Alberto got out of the sports car that his father had given him, a baby blue 2018 Nissan 370Z. He knew it was a bribe, but he didn’t care; the car was fantastic and better than the old Lexus he had been driving. He smiled as he shut the door, ignored the parking meter while he leaned over to look at himself in the side mirror of the car. He was wearing a light, baby blue sweater with tight black pants and a baby pink fuzzy jacket and white shoes. He adjusted the white fedora on his head, giving himself a cocky smile before he turned and headed into the brightly lit gallery. The gallery itself wasn’t located in the best part of town. On either side there were abandoned buildings, trash, graffiti, the odd homeless person for local color, but Alberto didn’t care--the place was his and his alone. The only connection to the Falcone family was him. There were no mafia ties, no illegal drugs or guns coming through here, nothing. The place was exactly what it appeared to be, a small, local art gallery and nothing more.

The gallery occupied the bottom floor of an old two story brick building that had once been a feed store back in the early 1900’s, now converted into a high end--if small--art gallery. The building still retained the painted sign on the brick on the building’s left side that read in faded letters: Gotham Hay, Grain and Mill Feed. Alberto stepped toward the gallery, but stopped when he heard the sound of a car speeding up and then screeching to a stop directly behind his vehicle. Alberto turned around, his face contorting into an expression of annoyance as he watched two rather large men in black suits step out of a black Mazda like clowns out of a clown car.

Alberto rolled his eyes. “Could you two just take a fucking break?”

One of the men, dark, sun-kissed skin with tiny eyes...Alberto racked his brain for the man’s name...Juan, that was it Alberto thought as the man stepped forward. “Mr. Falcone, we are supposed to be keeping you safe.”

Alberto groaned, dropping his shoulders and rolling his head like a spoiled child. “Oh my GOD Juan!! It’s my fucking gallery!! What do you think is going to happen? This is my place!” Alberto gestured at the gallery. “I’m safe here--now go away.”

The other man, buzzed head, his eyes too big for his face reminding Alberto of the big eye paintings that were popular in the ‘50’s and ‘60’s (which Alberto found not just revolting, but creepy) stepped up beside Juan. The man’s name was Tiberius, which as far as Alberto was concerned, didn’t suit the giant of a man at all.

Tiberius’s voice was low, yet the tone was almost too high for his persona. “Sir, your father hired us to look after you. It’s our…”

Alberto waved a hand at the two of them. “Yeah, yeah, I know--because I’m the future of the Falcone empire. Whatever, I didn’t ask for this bullshit and I don’t want it. I don’t know why Soso can’t have it.” Alberto sighed, his sister Sophia (or Soso as he had been calling her since he learned to talk) wanted to head the family. She liked all the criminal organizational crap. He couldn’t understand why Daddy didn’t just pick her, since she was the best of the three of them...Mario, God bless his soul, had been a perverted idiot, and Alberto just didn’t care. Soso was the best of them for the job; she just didn’t have a fucking penis.

Alberto bit his bottom lip glaring at the two guards before he took a deep breath, brushing his fingers over his thin goatee. “Look, you both stay out here and try not to look like you stepped out of Goodfellas. I am going to go paint.” Alberto turned and pulled the door open to the gallery and started to step inside, then he stopped and turned to glare at the two men. “If you come in here I’ll call my Daddy and tell him that you both were being mean to me.”

Juan and Tiberius exchanged a look before they both said in unison. “Yes sir.”

Alberto gave them a smug grin. “Good.”

*

Tiberius and Juan stood outside the building watching cars go by with disinterest when two young women with matching shades of aqua green hair, both wearing tight black pants and little black lace bralettes with black leather jackets, stopped across the street, talking.

The two men both watched the young women without realizing they were both studying them.

The two women were in a deep discussion when suddenly one reached out to grab the other and they began kissing with abandon on the sidewalk.

Tiberius grinned and elbowed his partner. “You seeing that?”
Juan chuckled. “Damn.”

The two men were so distracted by the two young women making out heavily on the sidewalk across from them that neither man noticed the couple that stepped around the corner of a building on the same side of the street as the gallery. The man was dressed in a tailored suit with hat, glasses and a cane, while the woman also wore a suit and slipped into the gallery.

*

Joker grinned, his red lips pulled up in an amused smile as he reached up to adjust his dark purple fedora that he wore to cover most of his green hair before he swung his cane around in a circle before placing it down on the floor with a soft tap. The fedora matched the three piece suit suit he wore, a shade of purple so dark that it almost looked black except in the right light. The jacket had sharp, angled lapels and was cut to accentuate his lean figure. The dress shirt was black, but with an emerald green silk tie that matched the green of his gloves and the green in his green and black oxfords, all of which complimented the shade of his hair. He looked over the top of the dark lensed round sunglasses he wore, taking in the details of the gallery before glancing over to the woman on his arm.

“What do you think, Harley?” Harley, complimenting Joker in her own three piece suit, with a black waist cut jacket, matching vest and tightly cut slacks with a blue, silk dress shirt that had a sharp, angled collar. Her white hair was pulled up in twin buns on her head with wisps of white hair framing her face with her own pair of round, dark lensed glasses. She wore a pair of blue gloves, with matching blue oxford style heels. They both cut dashing figures, but the gallery was so sparsely populated that no one noticed them except one of the women who worked there, though she was too busy on her phone at the moment to more than glance over them and return to her conversation.

Harley lifted an eyebrow and sniffed while Joker frowned. “Well, look at this sorry place.”

The art gallery was small, taking up only the first floor of the building with walls painted so white that they were blinding (which made Joker thankful for his sunglasses) with yellow golden polished wood floors. The room had several half-walls that made the place resemble a half-hearted maze. On nearly every wall space was a large painting or several smaller paintings in a variety of sizes. A handful were portraits, while others were paintings of groups of people, and others were abstract, surrealist, or impressionist style works. Here and there on pedestals were strange, twisting sculptures that reminded Harley of some of her nightmares--especially the most recent ones that contained Scarecrow and his gaping maw trying to devour her. Harley shivered and looked away from the more disturbing pieces.

Harley focused her attention on a particularly large painting that was a mishmash of colors, giving the image the look of colorful mud spread across a canvas. She frowned before she nodded, wrinkling her nose at the paintings and sculptures on display, her eyes running over them with a mock critical eye. “Pedestrian,” she muttered in a nasally voice before leaning close to examine one of the pictures and pointing to the signature. Joker chuckled to himself, watching Harley as she pushed her glasses down to the end of her nose and studied the painting with a mock snobbish expression.

She grinned and pointed at the monstrosity. “That’s our boy.”

Joker leaned closed. “Well, I suppose then we are doing Alberto a tremendous favor by saving him from himself.”

Harley giggled. “Aren’t we just the nicest people puddin?”
Joker pulled her close, giving her ear a light kiss. “That we are sweets, that we are.”

He smiled, then sighed with another look around. The two of them walked with deliberate slowness, looking around the corners of the gallery when they saw a young man, his hair slicked back, the telltale white streak currently covered by a red baseball cap. Jason looked handsome dressed in black jeans with holes in the knees, a tight black dress shirt, a black motorcycle jacket trimmed in red, and black trainers. The bad boy mystique was in full swing.

Jason was currently examining a painting that hung near the young woman on the phone, already occasionally giving her a flirty smile or sidelong look. The woman was distracted by Jason, her attention moving from her phone conversation to the attractive, fit young man who had entered the gallery a few minutes before Alberto had arrived. She had even shifted her body around so she was more or less facing Jason, her eyes wandering down his body to give him a thorough—and open—once over.

Joker grinned at Jason (though the young man didn’t see the expression as his back was to them). “Ah, look at my boy, all grown up and flirting with the girls.”

Harley giggled in response.

Joker shrugged. “Well, I suppose we should get this moving along shall we? Let’s go ask our distracted young woman if she knows where our friend Alberto is hiding.”

Harley kissed his cheek and said, “Let me puddin.”

Joker smiled and gave Harley a bow from the waist, putting his hand out toward the woman shamelessly ogling Jason. “Of course, my dear.”

Harley winked at him before she walked over to the gallery employee and cleared her throat. The brunette turned her attention to Harley, clearly annoyed with a frown on her face as she said into the phone. “Hold on.”

The young woman put her hand over the phone, but her eyes darted over to Jason who winked at her. She blushed, trying to turn her gaze toward Harley, but her eyes kept moving toward Jason who was stretching with his hands over his head. It took a great deal of effort on Harley’s part not to laugh.

“Yes, ah, can I help you?” The woman asked, giving Harley a smile that didn’t reach her eyes. In the next second, however, she turned a full smile toward Jason who had moved closer while examining one of the gallery’s odd sculptures.

Harley controlled her urge to giggle by biting her bottom lip before speaking. “Yes, I’m just looking for Alberto Falcone?” Harley searched her memory quickly before she finished. “I represent the Gotham Monthly and we wanted to speak to Mr. Falcone about his art…”

The woman was barely paying attention as the full power of Jason’s charm was being directed toward her. The young man gave her a flirty smirk and a lick of his lips. The young woman blushed again as she answered Harley, though her eyes remained fixed on Jason. “He’s in the back working. Just take that door…” She pointed at a door that was just off-white enough to be distinguishable from the white walls around it. Harley’s brows drooped in irritation. She could see the door now, but she didn’t see a knob. “...and make a right. Shouldn’t be able to miss it, it’ll be the room where you can hear the Backstreet Boys.”

Harley smiled. “Thank you.”
Just as Harley took a step away from the woman, Jason moved in. Harley gave the young man a wink, which had Jason grinning as he put his hand out to the young woman minding the gallery. “Hello, my name’s Jason.”

The woman giggled with a nervous shake in her tone and took his hand. “I’m Susie.”

*

Harley motioned Joker to follow her as she hurried over to the door. It took her a few seconds to find the odd latch that blended into the rest of the door, but when she found it, she flipped it and the door clicked before it swung open. Harley grinned, pleased with herself when she opened it before turning to Joker. “After you puddin.”

Joker smiled stepping inside. “Well, thank you my sweet.”

Harley slipped inside after him, giving the gallery a quick once over before she eased the door closed, the two of them slipping inside, unnoticed and forgotten by the young woman tending the gallery.

Joker chuckled when Harley closed the door, turning around to address his wife. “Jason is a much better flirt than I gave him credit for being. He’s usually so...” Joker motioned with one hand.

Harley laugh. “More straightforward than subtle?”

Joker shrugged. “Something like that.”

Harley stepped closer, took Joker’s hand, and they moved down the hall. “In truth, he doesn’t really have to do much. He’s pretty cute, just focusing his attention on a girl is enough to have her go all goofy.”

Joker stopped and tugged Harley close, one hand on her waist pressing his cane against her, while his other hand reached up to stroke her face. She smiled at the feel of the leather glove against her skin as he turned her and pushed her against the wall.

“Should I be jealous?” Joker asked, his voice low as he held her face in his hand, but she could see the teasing in his eyes as she whispered back, her hands running down his front until she caressed his groin feeling that telltale response of his body.

“Never puddin…” Harley whispered. “Never.” She stroked her hands over him, earning a soft groan from Joker.

Joker stole a kiss, pressed his lips against hers, his mouth moving over hers in a hard, vigorous kiss, thrusting his tongue into her mouth. Harley moaned in response and yanked him close against her. They stayed that way for a few tense seconds, their bodies pressed together, their mouths locked.

Joker pulled away from her mouth, but caught her bottom lip as he did, tugging playfully. He leaned his forehead against hers. “Good. Because I like Jason; would hate to have to kill him.”

Harley giggled and smacked him lightly on the chest. “Puddin!”

He snickered and stepped back, taking her hand. “Come along my sweet. We have a package to pick up.”

*
Alberto had a life size canvas in front of him. He had removed his hat and jacket and now stood in the middle of the sparsely furnished room and staring at the canvas. His paints littered a long utility table while the old boombox style radio next to him emitted the sounds of the Backstreet Boys “Larger Than Life” at a party level volume. He was so focused with staring at his canvas that he didn’t hear or see the two people enter until the music was cut off.

“What..?” Alberto turned to see the two people standing in his work space. “Who the fuck are you?”

Joker grinned as he removed his glasses. “Thank goodness, that was making my ears bleed!” Joker blew Harley a kiss. “Thank you Harls dear.” Joker turned his attention back to Alberto to give the younger man a shallow bow. “Harley and I are going to be your business partners for the foreseeable future Alberto.”

Alberto frowned in confusion his voice dropping to a whisper. “Wait...I know you…”

Joker smiled, reaching into the pocket of his jacket and producing a capped syringe. “Yes, my darling, we are about to get to know each other a great deal better, because you my friend, are about to help Harley and me with a particularly large, detail oriented project.”

Alberto’s eyes widened. “What...no…” The young man opened his mouth, ready to scream for help and wishing that he had listened to his father, to his sister and allowed his bodyguards into the gallery, but before he could issue another sound, Harley closed the distance them in a blur to slug the young man hard across the face. Her closed fist knocked Alberto’s head to the side, at the same time cracking one of the young man’s teeth.

Alberto folded and dropped to the floor unconscious.

Joker frowned, looking between his syringe and the now unconscious Alberto. “Well geez Harls, why did I bother bringing this?”

Harley giggled giving her puddin a shrug. “Sorry puddin, but, well, he was listening to Backstreet Boys.”

Joker shrugged. “True. Okay let me administer this--just in case…”

Joker walked over and dropped down to the floor, placed the syringe against Alberto’s throat, and pushed the plunger home.

He stood and dropped the syringe into his jacket pocket. He pulled his cellphone out next and hit a number, only waiting a couple of beats before he said with a smile. “Bane love, the package is ready.”

He smiled and returned the phone back into his pocket as he turned to Harley. “Step one complete sweets.”

Harley walked over and into Joker’s waiting arms. “Now, step two?”

Joker gazed at her with love shining in his eyes for her then draped his arms around her. “Yes, tonight we go and see a certain little bird.”

*

The fight club was going strong despite the recent fluctuations in Carmine Falcone’s other business ventures. Penguin smiled as he sat on his “throne” and observed the events below, taking a slow drag on his cigarette. He was alone on his balcony observing the fight below, no hangers-on, no beautiful young men or women waiting to do his bidding. No, tonight it was just him and his bodyguards in the balcony seats. The music pounded hard and heavy, washing over the people, the fighters. The crowds were just as big as they had always been since the change over, but Penguin wasn’t satisfied, let alone happy. Building his own criminal empire had come to a grinding halt when Falcone had butted his head into Cobblepot’s business, and while he was still making money, Penguin was paying a hefty sum of it to Falcone. And that just burned his ass.

He blew out a long ribbon of smoke, watching two new fighters below; a man who was calling himself Drakon and a young woman named Cassandra. The two were performing well against each other, but Penguin’s money was on Cassandra.

He was so interested in the match that he didn’t realize someone had come up to the balcony until one of his men stepped forward and hesitated a moment before tapping his shoulder. “Sir, a Sophia Falcone is here to see you.”

Penguin took a breath and rolled his eyes before he muttered, “Fine.”

A few seconds later, Sophia Falcone was standing beside him. Penguin looked up at her. “And what can I do for you this evening Miss Falcone?”

Sophia’s gaze was on the fight as the young woman Cassandra had just performed a maneuver that would have made Batman proud. “I’m just here checking on my Daddy’s investments.”

Penguin snorted. “Or are you looking for some loyal followers to help you convince your daddy that you should be the one sitting in his chair and not Alberto?”

Sophia glanced down at him. “Would that really be so bad?”

Penguin shrugged. “I don’t really care myself--one Falcone is like another Falcone. Unless you sweeten the pot for me, I don’t see what my support one way or the other would make a difference.
Your father is old school my dear--he is not going to change his mind. If anything, if he finds out you’re out recruiting to your side, he might take that the wrong way and decide you are too dangerous.”

Sophia nodded, but added. “I’m not like my father, and my Daddy would never hurt me. And I would never hurt him.”

Penguin sighed and turned to give her his full attention. “What is it you’re looking for Sophia? You want my support in taking out your father? Is that what you’re planning? Or is there something else?”

Sophia sucked on her bottom lip before she spoke. “Word has it you have information on anything and everything going on in Gotham.”

Penguin shrugged. “There is at least one man better than me,” he admitted. “But yes...I have my ear on the pulse of Gotham. So?”

“I need to know what you can tell me about the Court of Owls,” Sophia said.

Penguin had taken a drag on his cigarette, but at the mention of Owls he started to cough. “What?”

Sophia glared at him. “The Owls. I need to know about the Court.”

Penguin laughed then and took a drink of some clear liquid in a small glass that Sophia thought might be scotch. “Oh, do you now? Look, I’m already between a rock and a hard place with your goddamn father. I’m not going to start giving you information on the Owls, because up to this point their eyes haven’t been on me and I intend to keep it that way.” He took a hesitant drag on his cigarette, but didn’t start coughing again. “Besides…” He let the smoke drift out between his lips in lazy puffs. “The thing is, I don’t really know anything more about them than anyone else. They’re likely a myth.”

Sophia snorted. “You know that isn’t true Oswald.”

Oswald turned his eyes back to the fight. “Take my advice Sophia, don’t go poking into places you’re not welcome.”

Sophia hissed. “Oswald…”

Cobblepot turned back to her with a smile before he added. “Sophia, I like you, I always have in fact, but you need to let this thing with your father go and you need to stop asking questions about the Court. The Roman isn’t going to let a woman take over for him. If he retires, it will be Alberto. If he dies, you know he will have a plan in place to secure your brother’s position as his heir, but you know what? When your father is dead, you can try and form a coup and take over, but I can tell you, not all the families will support you. The Roman isn’t the only one to hold such antiquated ideas.”
Cobblepot sighed. “Hell, knowing what I do of Alberto, maybe you’ll get lucky and he will hand the family business to you when your father is dead. You don’t rock the boat, the Court won’t lift a finger to stop you. That’s what you want--trust me--to stay out of the sights of the Owls. But keep me out of all of it. Unless you are going to cut my ties to your family, then we have nothing to talk about. I just want to make my money in peace.”

Sophia opened her mouth to argue, but Cobblepot had turned away from her.

“You’ll regret this Cobblepot,” Sophia hissed.

Oswald shrugged. “I’m sure I will at some point--maybe…”

Sophia turned and left with a curse.

Cobblepot waited, saying nothing, his attention seemingly on the fight, but the moment he saw Sophia Falcone emerge back on the floor below, his eyes followed her until Sophia Falcone and her bodyguards had disappeared through the exit before he muttered to himself.

“I hate the Falcons...I hate the entire Gotham mob.”

“ Well that’s nice to hear, because I think I have an idea for a beautiful partnership.”

Cobblepot’s eyes widened and he turned around to see Joker and Harley standing at the entrance to his private balcony.

Joker smiled, the lights dancing off his snow white skin. His green hair shone and his lips were a dark, blood red. “Evening Cobblepot!”

Harley was next to him, her arms wrapped around Joker’s arm, her own pale skin looked smooth like porcelain, and her lips matched Joker’s with their blood red shade. Her white hair and skin lent the impression of a delicate doll as she gave Cobblepot of beautiful smile. “Hey Ossie!”

Joker chuckled. “I have some plans I would love to discuss with you, old friend. Just might change your life!”

Cobblepot rolled his eyes. “Oh, fuck me.”
Penguin lips drooped into a frown as he narrowed his eyes at his visitors. He had no idea how they had gotten up here; there should have been several levels of bodyguards between them and him, but he was smart enough not to allow anger to get the better of him. If Joker had wanted him dead, Oswald was confident he would be dead.

Penguin sighed and leaned back in his chair; he glared at Joker and Harley. “What are you talking about?”

Joker pulled Harley into his arms and grinned at her as they began to dance. Their movements were slow on the small balcony area, but graceful.

Joker spoke to Cobblepot, though his blue eyes never left Harley’s face while he moved with her in a slow circle.

“Well Oswald, Harley and I have plans to finally, once and for all, eradicate the mobsters that have been plaguing Gotham.”

He spun Harley under his arm and turned her in a full circle before he wrapped his arm once more around her waist. “And, since you were there for Harley one night when she needed you, I am willing to make sure that you get a piece of the Gotham pie.”

Cobblepot sighed and crossed his legs. He motioned with his hands. “Sit down and we’ll talk.”

Joker grinned, his eyes on Harley, turning her so that her back was pressed against his chest, his arms wrapped around her waist. Harley smiled and rested her hands against Joker’s where they rested across her stomach.

Joker chuckled. “I knew you would be interested.”

The green-haired man stepped back from Harley, holding her hand as he took the empty seat next to Cobblepot. “So where’s your keeper?”

Oswald glared at him. “If you’re going to be cheeky, I’ll have you thrown out. Harley can stay, but you’re gone Joker.”

Harley giggled giving Joker a light smack on his chest as she sat down on his lap. “Puddin, be nice.”

Joker rolled his eyes. “Fine, I’ll be nice-ish.”

Cobblepot looked out over the fight club, the money being exchanged, his little empire that had been stifled by the interference of Falcone. “So, what are you planning clown?”

“A gang war.” Joker rested his hand across Harley’s lap. “You know the saying: to kill a snake you have to take it’s head? Well, I want to snap the head off this many headed monster, this…” His laugh was soft. “…this hydra. And to do that I have to take all the heads at once.” Joker drew his finger across his throat with a grin. “No more family heads, the families fall into chaos and we pick them off, one by one.”

Penguin rubbed his chin while he gave thought to Joker’s plan. He pulled the end of his spent cigarette from the holder and tossed the still burning ember into the crowds below before he pulled out a cigarette case and replaced the cigarette. Joker and Harley waited patiently as Oswald lit his next cigarette and took a deep drag on it before he finally spoke.

“Sophia Falcone was here to see me earlier. She was asking about the Court of Owls. I also know she is angry that her father wants her little brother to take his place.” Cobblepot blew smoke out in a slow stream. “She wants the chair, wants to be the head of the Falcone family.”

Joker nodded. “Makes sense. Alberto, like Mario, is poorly qualified for the position. Do you think Sophia is dangerous?”

Oswald shrugged. “No. If she could create a power base, get some of the families behind her against her father or brother, maybe, but she’s a long shot. The mob families are old, with old fashioned ways. She might be able to get a few on her side, but not enough to make her dangerous.”

Joker nodded, then asked. “Why is she asking about the Owls?”

Cobblepot shrugged. “No idea. I told her they are a myth, but…” He glanced at Joker. “The Owls are interested in running Gotham, but they are the old families of Gotham, old bloodlines, old money, and old ideas. I’m not sure how much control they have over Falcone or the other mob families, but I wouldn’t doubt if they have an interest. The mob, like the Owls, helped grow Gotham and they continued to be part of Gotham’s life blood even if no one likes to admit it—at least those who know about the Owls.” Oswald took a drag on his cigarette and let the smoke drift from his nostrils as he spoke. “Sophia would be dangerous if the Owls support her, though. Unlike her siblings, she is like her father—smart, shrewd, capable.” He smirked. “You might want to watch out for her if she can find allies outside of the old mob families.”

Joker smiled at Cobblepot. “Do you support her?”

Oswald’s smirk was open. “I support whoever is going to make me the most money and that is not Sophia Falcone.”

Joker narrowed his eyes with a soft grunt as Cobblepot continued. “So, if I agree to throw my lot in with you, what do I get?”

Joker leaned back in the seat while stroking Harley’s legs and enjoying the feel of his wife’s legs under his fingertips.

Harley smiled and reached up to let her fingers glide through Joker’s hair.

“You…” she said to Penguin. “...get to be part of our growing family and this...your club...is yours, full control.” Harley smiled. “And before you ask, no protection fees, no kick backs. All we want is your loyalty and your word that when the time comes, we can count on you to have our back.”

Penguin smiled. “And you get?”

Harley smiled while Joker reached up, his attention focused on her. His fingers lightly caressed the side of her face while Harley spoke. “We get control of the underworld. All of it.”

Penguin took a drag on his cigarette. “You get all of Gotham and I get...this.” He motioned at the club below. “Not sure if that sounds fair.”

Joker chuckled with a small shrug. “True, but life isn’t fair.” He winked at Penguin. “However, the offer is this: you throw in with us and I’ll make you my partner.”

Penguin turned to look at him fully. “Partner?”
Joker nodded. “Running something as big as the Gotham underworld is going to be difficult and in order to ease the burden, I’ll need people I can trust--well, sort of--someone at my side to help, someone with a mind for business, making deals…” Joker giggled. “Think of it as a junior partner in the bigger scheme.”

Penguin smirked. “Can I trust you?”

Joker laughed, this time a full belly laugh. “Oh course not! But I can’t trust you either!”

Cobblepot narrowed his eyes at Joker. “What about Batman?”

Joker chuckled. “What about him?”

“I don’t think he is just going to let a gang war rage on without interfering…” Oswald shook his head. “He has been making himself more and more of a nuisance. I’m sure if he found this place…”

Joker humfed. “Batman Schmatman. You let me worry about the Bat.”

Cobblepot laughed. “All right, Joker…” He stressed the name in a way that made sure Joker and Harley knew he would never forget who they had been. (Penguin doesn’t know who Joker is does he?) “I agree to your terms...for now.”

Joker reached out a hand and Penguin took it. “Perfect. And if you betray me I get to cut your wings off. If I betray you...well...sorry.” Joker chuckled.

Cobblepot paled. Joker’s grip was tight and for a moment he wondered if he had just traded one devil for a worse demon, but it was too late now he realized.

*

Two days after she had gone to see Cobblepot, hoping for some real information about the Owls, Sophia was on her cellphone, pacing back and forth as she tried for what had to be the fiftieth time to get a hold of Alberto. Usually she didn’t really care what her brother was doing as long as he stayed out of the way. She knew he was usually at his art gallery that she had bought him, or out partying or shopping, but she had realized this morning that she hadn’t seen or heard from him in the last two days, and that was strange. He usually contacted her at least once each day, if for no other reason to complain about his bodyguards and to try to get her to get them off of him.

She glared at her phone when the number went to his messages again. She chewed her bottom lip in agitation. She stared at her phone for a long minute before she walked over to drop her phone inside her purse. She snatched up her purse, did a quick check to make sure her gun was in it before she yelled.

“Angelo!! Lucia!! I’m going out to see my father!”

Her heels snapped against the floor as she stormed out of her bedroom and headed through the living room where Angelo and Lucia were already waiting for her at the door. She gave them a curt nod as Lucia opened the door for her.

*

Carmine Falcone was busy at his desk looking over some records for an import of wine from Italy that was a cover for the import of some art, a rare statue of Demeter, some rare coins and other priceless objects from an excavation site in Sicily. Falcone had paid handsomely for the pieces, a few of which were going to be part of his private collection, while the rest would be sold on the black market of Gotham and other cities for a profit. The paperwork he was looking over involved the legally imported wine, but there was a code hidden within the paperwork that told him what items were with this shipment. It was time consuming and grueling work that only he and a few other trusted men in the family could do.

Falcone’s concentration was focused on the paperwork when he heard voices outside his office door. He frowned, trying to ignore them, but after a few more seconds he heard the sound of someone getting punched followed by his office door opening.

Carmine reached under the desk for his weapon, then sighed with exasperation when he saw it was only his daughter walking in. She marched in like a storm dressed in a tight grey pencil skirt with matching tailored jacket, matching heels, and a white blouse. Her dark hair was piled on her head in a soft, feminine bun. He frowned at the sight of her; she looked a great deal like her mother.

“Sophia, what are you doing here?” Carmine glanced toward the door. He could see one of his bodyguards on the floor, a victim of Sophia’s bodyguard Angelo. He frowned with narrowed eyes; that man would have to be replaced.

“I haven’t been able to get a hold of Alberto for two days, Daddy,” Sophia said without preamble. “Something is wrong.”

Carmine’s attention was back on his paperwork. “He’s probably just busy Sophia. Alberto is a grown man. He doesn’t have to jump because you called.”

Sophia groaned. “Daddy. Alberto, unlike Mario, doesn’t disappear for days. If he isn’t at his apartment, he is at his gallery, but he hasn’t answered his phone, and he hasn’t answered any of my messages. Alberto never ignores me.”

Carmine snorted without looking up from his paperwork. “Maybe he has finally grown some balls and doesn’t feel like he has to answer to his big sister. Maybe he’s more seriously taken to the idea that he will be head of the family when I’m gone.”

Sophia glared daggers into the top of her father’s head. “I think you should send some people to look for him.”

Carmine looked up, his movements slow and precise as he stood up. Sophia tensed, realizing that she had just crossed a line.

Carmine placed his hands on the desk as he addressed his daughter. “Phia, I appreciate your concern for your brother but, you do not tell me how to run my business or my family.” His voice was cold, all emotion gone as he spoke to his daughter. “You need to learn respect.” She watched as his fingers balled into fists. “I blame myself. I’ve been too indulgent.” His voice had just a hint of sadness in it, but Sophia could tell he was more angry than upset.

For a moment Sophia thought about the gun in her purse, about pulling it out and shooting him in the chest, ending all of this, releasing her father’s control of Gotham, starting the beginning of a new age in Gotham with her as the head of the The Roman Empire, the Falcone Family…

There would be a fight, that was certain. She would have to fight for her position, grinding her little brother under her heel, but she would have the support of the Owls—they had said as much by sending her that messenger. She could kill her father, take over the family, take over Gotham, end this Joker obsession of her father's...maybe do something her Daddy had never thought of like bringing the Joker into the fold, make him and his gang part of the family. The man was crazy, but the Joker had shown he was daring and had the means to be a real issue for Gotham, unless that sort of crazy could be kept on a leash, directed at her enemies...She knew she could do it. She could solidify her power, get the Joker to work for her, then nothing would stand in her way, not Batman, not the Joker, and not her father...

But as she pulled her purse around, her hand pressed against the fine black leather, staring back at her father who held her in his icy gaze, she knew she couldn't do it. As angry as her father made her, angry at his old fashioned viewpoint, the way he treated her, the way he focused his attention on her brothers, the old fashioned, dated way he ran the family business...he was still her father and she loved him. She wasn’t ready to betray him or his trust. As much as she wanted the family and Gotham under her thumb, she wasn’t ready to sacrifice her father or her brother for that power...yet.

Sophia swallowed, lowered her purse, and bowed her head a fraction. “Sorry Daddy.”

Falcone stared hard at her for a few minutes, which made Sophia wonder if he knew what she had been thinking, if he had some idea of the thoughts that were roaming her mind, but if so he gave no indication before he sat back down. “If we don’t hear from Alberto by the end of the week then I’ll send some people to retrieve him, all right? I’m sure he is just doing something…” He motioned vaguely with his hand.

Sophia nodded. “Thank you Daddy.”

He grunted, moving his papers back in front of him. “Why don’t you go do some shopping? Isn’t that Gotham Spring Gala coming up? You used to love going to that. I have tickets…” He glanced up and smiled at her. “We’ll go to that together, a father and daughter date, so pick up something pretty all right?”

Sophia nodded. “All right Daddy.”

He went back to his work and Sophia walked toward the door. She had just reached for the handle when her father said, without looking up. “Phia, you tell Angelo that if he hits one of my men again, I’ll kill him.”

Sophia stiffened, but nodded. “Of course Daddy.”

Sophia walked out of her father’s office, a burning rage slowly building in her chest.

*

Somewhere in Gotham, Selina Kyle waited, holding perfectly still, her whipped wrapped around a metal beam that was part of the Gotham Museum of Art’s ceiling, but was also great for her occasionally slipping in and out of the museum whenever they had something sweet for her collection, or when she needed to make a quick buck. They kept upgrading the system but for some reason they simply couldn’t make that skyline impenetrable. It was pretty amusing she thought.

She was waiting, counting the seconds until she knew it was safe to move, her eyes on her prize--a single yellow diamond in the display case in front of her, when her cell phone vibrated. It was silent, barely noticeable. She frowned, reaching into the pocket of her black pants and loosened the phone.

“Jade, I’m working,” she hissed low into the phone.

Jade’s child-like voice answered her. “I know, but someone wants to hire you to steal ten million dollars in diamonds from some man named Joe Kerr. The details for the job sound right up your alley Selina! This could be it! The payday is gonna be great!”

Selina smiled at how excited Jade sounded. “Fine, I’ll look at it when I get back all right?”
She could almost see Jade nodding. “All right, hurry I’m ordering pizza!”

“Oh my way.” Selina said with a smile before ending the call. She returned her focus to the cat’s eye diamond she had decided to steal. “All right lovely, let’s break you out.”

*

Alberto blinked, confused. His eyes opened gradually, his head aching. The first thing that Alberto realized was that he had been stripped of all his clothing except his pants, leaving him chilled. The floor felt slick slick under his bare, aching feet. He couldn’t decide if the floor was damp or just that the room was chilly. Goosebumps were raised all over his skin and his hands felt the tingling of partial numbness. He sniffed, his nose stuffy and caught a hint of a something sweet, though he couldn’t put his finger on what the smell was. For a moment Alberto was happy that at least the smell wasn’t something disgusting, like a rotting corpse or something else just as hideous.

Alberto tried to focus his attention on where he was being kept. The room was illuminated, but the color was all wrong. It felt like late evening, or twilight. Still bleary eyed, he looked around trying to get his bearings and realized the light shining down on him wasn’t white or yellow, but purple. That was why it looked like early evening to him and made the room look abnormal. Alberto realized that he was tied to a chair, his ankles strapped against the legs, his arms behind his back, wrapped around the back of the chair. He could feel that whoever had him captive had used plastic zip ties. He struggled for a few seconds, but he was a secure as he had been moments earlier—not that he expected anything to happen, but he had to try.

Alberto squeezed his eyes shut, then blinked a few times, trying to clear his vision—and then regretted his decision. The purple bulb that dangled a few feet above his head created a strange otherworldly effect on the objects in the room, casting deep shadows that made every corner in the room seem alive with darkness.

The next thing that drew his attention was the piped in music. It was low, more like a whisper in the background; it was one song played on repeat. It sounded old, reminding him what might be played on an old radio from when his father would have been a toddler, or even before. The song, he guessed from the lyrics, was probably called “Life is Just a Bowl of Cherries.” The man’s voice was low and mellow like an old fashion crooner with a big band in the background.

*

“Life is just a bowl of cherries.

Don’t be so serious; life’s too mysterious.

You work, you save, you worry so,

But you can't take your dough when you go, go, go”

*

Alberto frowned, closed his eyes, and took a breath. The music made his skin crawl—making horrible situation even worse, he thought. He tried to ignore the music as he took in more of the room’s details. The walls had been painted purple and green and there were spray painted words across the walls in glowing spray paint written haphazardly. It took Alberto several seconds to realize that the words read “HaHaHa!,” “Smile!,” “Let’s Put a Smile On that Face!,” and “Why So Serious?” Along with words were spray painted smiley faces, spray painted knives, cards, balloons, and depictions of clowns. The walls also had clown masks that hung on nails or hooks that decorated the room along with what looked like old posters of circus attractions, doll heads, and real playing cards stuck to the walls with throwing knives. The decoration gave Alberto the impression that a scary clown had gone on a decorating rampage in the room. As Alberto’s eyes roamed over the room, he thought that if his circumstances were a little different he would have found this to be a rather interesting interactive art exhibit. But right now it was downright creepy.

Alberto took several deep breaths, performed his breathing exercises that his therapist had taught him to keep himself calm. This must be a kidnapping for ransom or else he wouldn’t be alive; at least that was what he was trying to convince himself. If that was the case, if he played along Daddy would give them the money his abductors wanted, get him back. And then the eldest Falcone would have the kidnappers killed. Albert would be free and he would get his revenge, he just had to play along with whatever these nutjobs wanted until his father came through.

Alberto allowed himself a small smile. It would be all right he told himself.

That was when the door—which he hadn’t seen--opened.

He watched, his eyes wide as a man and woman entered the room.

The man was dressed in an old fashion black and white tuxedo with tails, white bow tie, white gloves, and white flower pinned to his lapel. The woman wore a long, sparkling, sleeveless red dress with black criss cross halter top and with a slit on the side that ran up to her hip. She wore a pair of dark red shoes and sheer black hose that ended at her thigh. As she moved Alberto could see the garter belt that held her hose in place. Both of them had ghost white skin. The man had green hair that he wore slicked back except for a stubborn green curl that fell over his forehead. The woman had her hair pulled up in a soft bun, though some white curls fell around her pale face. Both of them had striking, brilliant blue eyes.

Alberto stared and he remembered them. At the gallery they had come to the back to speak to him...but after that his memory of what happened became fuzzy. He felt as if he should know who these two people were.

“Hello Alberto--comfortable?” The man’s smile was broad, his lips were a deep blood red, and there were dark shadows around the man’s bright blue eyes, making them stand out in an eerie way that made Alberto shiver. The man’s expression made Alberto have real doubts about his walking away from this situation.

“Who are you? What do you want? Do you know who my father is?!” Alberto tried to be aggressive like his sister, but his words lacked the conviction and power that Sophia could command.

The man laughed. “Well I’m insulted! Aren’t you Harley? I mean, I would have thought that you would at least know who we are!”

Harley’s bottom lip jutted out in what might have been a pretty pout in another situation, Alberto thought with a shuddering breath. “I know puddin’! I mean I like to think we are his father’s number one enemies.”

Alberto stared and whispered in shock. “Joker and Harley.”

Joker laughed and motioned with finger guns at the young man. “Bingo!”

Alberto felt a deep chill settle into his bones as the gravity of his situation pressed in on him. “What do you want?”

Harley answered the man with a sweet smile. “What we want is to kill your father as painfully as possible, but what we are going to do, with your help, is to start a gang war like nothing Gotham has ever seen and your dear old dad is going to be the reason for it.”

Alberto looked confused. “Gang War? What are you talking about? My father would never do that!”

Joker walked over and straddled Alberto’s lap, draping his arms over the young man’s shoulders, his face mere inches from Alberto’s while Harley walked around behind him and leaned down, and the fingers of her hand slipped into his hair. Her fingers moved through his hair grabbing a handful to prevent him from moving his face out of the Joker’s way while she leaned down close, her face close enough that her lips could brush Alberto’s cheek. He could feel the brush of her breath warm against his skin, and the feeling made him shiver. This close, he could smell her skin, that smelled like vanilla and flowers.

Joker smiled, his eyes flicked toward Harley; his smile was only for her before his blue gaze snapped back to Alberto. His voice was a seductive purr, and at the same time he caressed Alberto’s face almost affectionately. His blue eyes roamed over Alberto’s face while he spoke, his fingers reached out to caress a lock of the young man’s hair. “Let me repeat myself, which I should let you know…” Joker tapped Alberto on the lips. “…I hate doing.” Joker chuckled. “So please, don’t make me do it again dear.” Joker ran a gloved finger across Alberto’s lower lip and tugged it down a little before letting the other man’s lip go. “You, Alberto, are going to help us start a gang war, you are going to help us plunge Gotham into chaos, AND, you are going to help us not just kill your father, but utterly destroy him so that when he dies, he’ll be thankful for it.”

Joker stroked his fingers across Alberto’s face while Harley giggled in Alberto’s ear. “Isn’t that going to be grand?”

Alberto hissed between his teeth, a flicker of anger creeping out through his fear. “I’m not going to help you do anything!”

Harley’s lips tickled his ear when she spoke. “Oh see, that’s the beauty of this plan, little boy. You don’t actually have to DO anything...your disappearance is helping with that.” She ran a finger down the side of his face, turning her eyes toward Joker while she spoke. “You see, you disappear for a couple a days, followed by the heads of every one of the organized crime families in Gotham who answer to Falcone getting an invitation from you, because little Alberto has decided he doesn’t want to wait for dear old daddy to kick the bucket. You want to get the families on your side and overthrow your daddy...like a government coup.”

Harley and Joker shared a laugh.

Alberto looked confused. “But I don’t want to take over! Everyone knows that! I just want to do my art! Sophia is the one who should take over!”

Joker laughed. “Oh Alberto, do you really think anyone believes that? The Falcone family has ruled over the Gotham Underground for decades, no one believes that a Falcone doesn’t want power…”

“Sophia wants it, but I don’t!” Alberto’s voice was pleading. “Really!”

Harley pressed her cheek against Alberto’s, glancing at Joker with a loving and mischievous look in her eyes while she caressed Alberto’s scalp.

“No one is going to believe that.” Her voice was soft, sweet. She turned her gaze to Alberto who was looking at her from the side, his expression just beginning to look terrified. Harley smiled at him. “You see Alberto, you are going to be trying to consolidate your power, you are going to be bringing the heads of all the families together to give them your pitch, except, we are going to set it up to kill them all and frame dear old Daddy. Then you are going to let the remains of the families know that dear old Pops found out about your plan and tried to kill them all...and since he is going to be the only one alive...and poor old Alberto will have to go into hiding…” Harley smiled and batted her eyes. “See, you won’t really have to lift a finger.”

Alberto looked frantically between the two of them. “Then why are you keeping me alive? You need me don’t you!! You need me…” His voice trailed off as Joker sat back and laughed. “Oh sweet, sweet Alberto, we are not keeping you alive because we need you, we are keeping you alive because we are planning on having fun with you. Aren’t we Harley?”

Harley giggled standing up and patting Alberto on the head. “That we are puddin, because…”

Harley walked around to face him just as Joker stood up.

“You are going to be our last present to your father. Our last message so he knows exactly what we did and exactly who did it.” Joker purred as he took Harley’s hand and gracefully pulled her into his arms. He slid a hand around her waist, with his other hand he reached into the pocket of his slacks and pulled out a small, black remote. He aimed the remoted into the shadows of the room and pushed a button with his thumb. The music that had been playing changed. It still had the grainy, old sound like the music before, but this time it was a softer song, the smooth crooning of Frank Sinatra began to play as Joker slipped the remote back into his pocket and took Harley’s hand.

Sinatra’s voice cooed softly:

“Embrace me, my sweet embraceable you
Embrace me, you irreplaceable you
Just one look at you
My heart grew tipsy in me
You and you alone
Bring out the gypsy in me”

*

Joker and Harley began to dance around the room to the music. They stopped in front of Alberto, Joker spinning Harley across his body then along his arm. She moved with the grace of a dancer, her dress falling aside to reveal the long, pale length of her leg. Harley gazed at Joker, her eyes filled with love, her smile soft and sweet. Joker returned her gaze with just as much love as he pulled her back close to him, wrapping his arms around her.

Alberto watched them with wide astonished eyes. “You two are crazy!”

Joker swung Harley around and stopped when he heard Alberto. He looked at Harley who was frowning. “He called us crazy puddin.”

Joker nodded with a lift of one hairless eyebrow. “He did pumpkin.”

Joker stopped and kissed Harley’s knuckles before walking back over to Alberto guiding Harley by her hand to stop once more in front of their captive.
Joker sighed with a look of a parent dealing with a particularly trying and dull child. “We do not appreciate being called crazy. That’s just rude...and besides…” Joker pulled Harley against him, his arm slipping around her waist. “…that’s between me and my doctor.” He winked at Harley who giggled.

Alberto looked confused before he exclaimed. “She’s your doctor? What the fuck! What the fuck is wrong with you people??” Alberto thrashed in his chair, but was secure in his chair.

Joker’s eyes narrowed at Alberto, his eerie blue eyes cold, before sliding a quick glance to Harley. “I don’t like the way he is speaking to us, do you sweets?”

Harley gave Alberto a look just as cold as Joker’s with her light blue eyes Alberto pulled himself back in his chair as much as he could, wishing neither of them were as close to him as they were at the moment because he was certain he could feel the deranged energy coming off of them, raking against his skin.

Joker’s voice was cold and his blue eyes held Alberto in place as well as any bonds. “I don’t like the way you were speaking at all.”

The backhand slap that came from Joker was swift and sudden, snapping Alberto’s head to the side. But as surprising as the backhand was from Joker had been, the one from Harley was even more surprising. No sooner hand Alberto brought his head back around, the sting of the slap almost numbing his cheek than Harley’s hand snapped out. Her slap was worse, striking his mouth in such a way that his cheek and lips cut against his teeth. Alberto gasped in pain. Harley’s slap felt like his skin has been seared.

Harley growled. “You need to learn to show some respect.”

Joker laughed pulling Harley away. “Shh now sweets, you know he isn’t going to get a chance to learn much of anything you know...since we aren't going to keep him alive.”

Harley glared at Alberto, but within a few heartbeats her glare turned into a slow smile. “True puddin.”

Joker caressed her face. “Let’s leave Alberto to contemplate his life choices shall we? Remember, we have a dinner date, just the two of us...”

Harley smiled, her entire demeanor shifting to being sweet once more. “That sounds nice puddin.”

Alberto screamed. “YOU CAN’T LEAVE ME HERE!!! MY FATHER WILL COME FOR ME!!”

Joker and Harley stopped at the door to Alberto’s prison, Joker already having switched the music back to the song that had been playing before they came to visit. The song picked up, the volume just low enough to be heard echoing around the tiny room.

“Life is just a bowl of cherries.
Don't be so serious; life's too mysterious.
You work, you save, you worry so,
But you can't take your dough when you go, go, go.”

Alberto screamed again.
Joker and Harley turned, both of them laughing as Joker smiled. “Oh, go ahead and scream Alberto, get all the aggression out. No one can hear you here.”

Joker and Harley turned to leave when Harley stopped. “Puddin, we almost forgot!”

Joker looked at her in confusion “What did we forget sweets?”

She leaned close and whispered in his ear and then Joker laughed. “Oh, you’re right…” he said with a snap of his gloved fingers.

Alberto watched as Joker disappeared into one of the dark corners of the room only to reappear a moment later holding Alberto’s coat. Joker grinned (a creepy smile, Alberto thought) that spread across the clown’s face.) “Put this on.”

Alberto struggled while Joker draped the coat over his shoulders and stood back. Joker pulled out a gun from the shadows of his jacket and held it out with a whispered: “Make sure to smile my dear and remember, life is just a bowl of cherries, don’t take it serious.”

The sound of a gunshot filled the room.

*

Dinner that night was a simple table set with a white table cloth, candles, some roses, and the gentle sounds of a string quartet playing at Big Mama’s club. The club had closed early for the night with Big Mama cleaning up the place and making it look as romantic as she could for her two special guests.

Big Mama had arranged for the quartet, a couple of her boys and two of the bar’s waitresses who happened to be music students (though one played an electric guitar), forming them into Big Mama’s Quartet. They occupied the stage near where Big Mama had set up the small, intimate table for Joker and Harley. They were now on the stage doing a few last minute adjustments to their instruments while Big Mama yelled out orders to the kitchen in the back.

“You almost have the steaks done Wallace?” Big Mama walked hurriedly over to the door that led to the kitchen and pushed it open to lean in as she yelled. Wallace--whom Big Mama recognized as a very attractive older man--looked over at the door. “Almost Big Mama. Don’t worry--it’ll be perfect.” He winked at her, giving the large woman the shivers.

She wrinkled her nose at him and winked back. “Handsome devil.”

Wallace grinned and continued to cook.

Big Mama turned and walked back to the table to make a few last touches, adjusting the wine glasses, making sure the bottle in the ice bucket was still chilled when she heard Martell yelled. “They’re here!”

Big Mama’s lips curled into a happy grin. This romantic dinner was a thank you for everything that the two of them had done for her. The dinner had been her suggestion, a romantic moment before all hell broke loose. (She wasn’t clear on the details, not being an official member of Joker and Harley’s gang, but she knew enough to know something big was going to occur soon and they had already guaranteed her protection.) And because this was a gift, she wanted everything to be perfect.

She arrived at the door just as Frost pushed it open, holding it for Joker and Harley who stepped into Big Mama’s establishment holding hands. When she saw them Big Mama beamed. The couple looked elegant and sophisticated in their clothing, Joker in a tuxedo and Harley in a snug, sexy dress Joker grinned and winked at the tall woman. “Well thank you for this Big Mama. Harley and I haven’t been on a date in ages, have we sweets?”

Harley nodded, her voice soft as she squeezed Joker’s hand. “Not for a very long time.”

Big Mama gestured and her thrown together string quartet began to play, blending well together as they began to play. (Big Mama was relieved for their competence in playing.) She turned motioning for her guests to follow her.

“This way.”

Harley gasped when she saw the table set up in the middle of what was usually the place’s dance floor. “Oh Mama, it's so romantic!”

Big Mama smiled, pleased with Harley’s reaction. “I’m so glad. Now, you two make yourselves comfortable--your food will be ready momentarily. And if you need anything at all, I’ll be over at the bar.”

Joker smiled at her. “Thank you Mama, this is perfect.”

“Oh yes Mama, it’s fantastic!” Harley let go of Joker’s hand to throw her arms around Big Mama. The large woman looked a stunned, but also pleased.

“Anything for you two,” she said, returning Harley’s hug before she stepped back and turned to hurry to the kitchen.

Joker pulled Harley’s seat out for her, making sure she was comfortable before he took his own seat. Once seated, he reached for the wine, uncorking it and proceeded to pour them each a glass. Harley picked hers up once he was finished. The wine was dark red, almost black in the dim lighting of the club. She took a sip, smiling at Joker.

“This is so nice,” she said with a glimmer in her eyes.

Joker nodded. “It is. I thought a quiet night together before our plan starts to unfold would be nice.”

Harley giggled. “You are such a romantic, Jack.”

Joker shrugged, giving Harley a smile. “You bring out the best in me sweets.”

They both laughed softly before Harley set her wine down. “Have there been any bites from Selina yet?”

Joker sipped his own wine. “Yes, just this evening in fact. Agatha informed me the bait we set for her, a job to steal some diamonds from a Mr. Joe Kerr, was taken. I knew she would...that thief couldn’t resist a reward that big, nor could she resist that much in diamonds. I expect she thinks she will double-cross the client who hired her for the job.” He laughed. “Won’t she be surprised to find out it’s us?!”

Harley giggled. “And won’t Bruce be surprised when we hurt his little kitty.”

Joker picked up his wine holding it up for a toast. Harley picked hers up and held the glass next to his. Joker grinned at her, his blue eyes dancing. “To well-executed revenge!”

Harley laughed. “To well-executed revenge!”
They sipped their wine when Big Mama appeared with their plates.

“Fresh off the grill and just like you ordered!” she said with a bright smile, setting their plates in front of them.

Joker groaned with pleasure. “That smells heavenly.”

Harley nodded. “Oh, yes it does!”

“Take a quick bite so I can tell Wallace, my chef, what you thought. He is so sensitive about his work, just like any artist.” Big Mama grinned followed by a giggle. “And he is so attractive.”

Joker laughed cutting into his steak as Harley did the same. They both took their bites followed by a series of hilarious sounding moaning as they enjoyed the taste of the excellently cooked steak.

Harley groaned. “Oh my god, this is the best steak I have ever had!”

Joker nodded his agreement. “Our compliments to the chef!”

Big Mama winked. “I’ll take a great deal of pleasure in telling him.” She hurried off as Joker and Harley dug into their meal.

They ate in silence for a few minutes until Harley glanced over at her husband, picking up her wine. “Puddin? I was wondering...I mean Alberto and you talking about me being your doctor and all. I know we haven’t really talked about...Bruce...your plans...” She motioned with her glass in a vague sort of way. “I just...” She took a breath. “How are you doing?” she asked, her brow furrowed with concern.

Joker lifted his hairless brows at her in amusement. “Harley Quinn, are you trying to doctor me right now?”

Harley made a face. “No puddin, I just...” She frowned and took a large gulp of her wine. “Never mind.”

Joker set his utensils down and picked up his wine. “It’s all right sweets, though I have thought about asking you the same thing. You are still having nightmares about Blackgate, aren’t you?” Harley paled at the mention of the prison. They hadn’t spoken about Blackgate since her rescue. She knew he noticed her bad dreams; it wasn’t exactly like it was something she could keep hidden, but she had yet to mention Crane to him. There never seemed to be a good time to do so. And, as she thought about it, she worried about telling her husband...she worried about herself, talking about Crane terrified her. Knowing he was still out there in Gotham somewhere waiting...like a spider...She suppressed a shiver. Even now she didn’t want to talk about what had happened at Blackgate. She didn’t want to think about it at all and she didn’t want to burden Joker with the knowledge that Crane had been in there with her, that he had access to her and...Harley took a large swallow of wine. She wasn’t ready to talk about it, not yet. She looked up at Joker to see him studying her face. He had to realize something was wrong, but he didn’t push, just like she didn’t push about discussing his feelings toward Bruce, toward Batman. They were a complex, twisted ball that her picking at would...Harley frowned staring at her wine glass. She didn’t want to let Bruce or Batman ruin their dinner date.

They were both quiet for a long few seconds before Joker said in a quiet tone. “The past is the past sweets and whatever doesn’t kill you, simply makes you stranger.”

He grinned at her and held his hand out. “Shall we dance, lover?”
Harley gazed at him, her eyes filled with longing, with lust, and with a love so deep she knew it would kill her. She knew it just as surely as she knew that he felt the same way.

“I would love to puddin.” Harley smiled and took his hand. Joker led her out onto the dance floor.

He took her hand, laid it against his chest, covered her hand with his while his other hand went around her waist. He tugged her close, her hips flush with his while he spread the fingers of his hand against the small of her back. Harley wrapped her other arm around his shoulders, her fingers gasped the cloth of his jacket as she laid her cheek against his, their bodies so close that nothing could come between them. Joker moved her in a slow circle, his nose pressed against her hair, their hearts beating in time together while they moved.

Harley closed her eyes and let herself relax into her husband, letting all her fears, her worries, thoughts of their plans for Gotham, for Batman—all of it—for the moment, was washed away. Her mind, her heart, filled only with thoughts of Joker, her Joker. Harley only wanted to think about the man she loved and this moment she was sharing with him. The beat of his heart against hers, the feel of his body pressed against her, the tickle of his breath, warm across her hair, and the feel of his arms around her; she wanted to stay in this moment forever, she wanted to forget about Gotham and Batman. Harley only wanted him, Jack, her Joker.

The connection between them flared hot and passionate at the same time that it twisted and turned, bending them closer and closer together. Harley felt so interwoven with her Joker that she doubted one of them could exist...no she knew it...one could not exist without the other. She loved him with every fiber of her being. She could never be without him, her puddin was more than simply the man she loved. She could’t find the words, so she tightened her hold on him. She squeezed her eyes shut against the tears that threatened to spill over. He was her drug, her obsession, her partner, her lover, her everything and she would go wherever he led her.

Joker squeezed his eyes closed as he held her close and the music washed over them both, lost in a world where no one but them existed. He stroked his fingertips along her spine brushing his lips against her hair. He loved her, loved her more than anything in the world. She was his everything, his only reason...his only madness, his only true obsession.

Joker brushed his lips against her ear. “I love you,” he whispered his voice low and husky. “I love you Harley. You bewitched me, enchant me...you are everything to me Harley, everything.”

They danced in a wide circle around the room while his thumb brushed against her knuckles where he held her hand against his chest. “I can’t live without you. I don’t want to live without you.”

He brushed his lips against her brow. “I won’t live without you.” He closed his eyes laying his cheek against her head and his hold on her tightened a fraction more as he repeated. “I love you.”

They moved together for a few more moments, letting the music guide them when Harley lifted her head to look into his eyes. “I love you. I can’t live without you puddin, I don’t want to live without you.”

Joker smiled, brushing his nose against hers. He reached up to caress her cheek with the back of his fingers. “I love you, Harls. I loved you from the moment you walked into Wayne Manor, the moment I saw you, my little doctor. I knew I had to make you mine, and that--in turn--made me yours.”

Harley smiled brighter, her hand grasped in his tightened. “I love you. I loved you from the moment you smiled at me.”
Joker chuckled, his laugh soft. His gaze were light and one lock of his green hair fell against his forehead, bright green against his milk white skin. She could feel the brush of his warm breath against her cheek as he ducked down and brushed his lips against her brow. “Well, I guess it's a good thing we got married.”

Harley’s laugh was soft. “Puddin…”

Joker tightened his hold on her, continuing the slow circle of their dance when he ducked his head and kissed her. Harley made a soft moan, his lips warm and soft against hers. She opened her mouth, her tongue gently brushed his lips to then be caressed by his tongue. Every part of her melted against him like she was kissing him for the first time again, his lips sweet, his tongue gentle. He didn’t stop dancing while they kissed, continuing a slow and graceful circuit around the room, and his hand holding hers against his chest tightened a fraction more. Harley’s fingers caressed his throat before sliding into his hair, her mouth moving in a slow dance of its own over his lips, their tongues gliding and twisted together, all of Gotham forgotten in this one perfect moment.

*

Three more days had passed since Alberto Falcone had gone missing, though only his sister realized—or cared—that he was gone, though there was a smattering of questions, others noting that the young Falcone seemed MIA, but nothing and no one seemed overly concerned.

Manuel Escobedo, head of the Penitente Cartel—one of the major crime families in Gotham who answered to Carmine Falcone—was sitting down at his dining room table for his morning coffee in the home he owned. He could hear his wife in the kitchen cooking and his two year old son playing with some pots and pans. He ran his fingers through his dark, greying hair and pushed the hair back from what some would characterize as a rough handsome face, when his brother, Jesús dropped an envelope in front of him before taking his seat next to him.

“That was at the front gate,” Jesús said before he turned his attention to his phone, his sharp profile lit by the electric light of the phone.

Manuel picked it up. “Who from?”

Jesús shrugged. “Don’t know, just had your name on it, so I brought it straight to you.”

Manuel turned the letter over, but there was no return address, no stamp, just his name on the front. He frowned and opened it, pulling out a pale white card which simply had printed on it in purple letters:

You are invited to a meeting of the minds. It’s time to bring about a new era in Gotham. If you feel the same, come to the Barr Wharf at midnight tomorrow night, near the old Barr Fish Market.

Alberto Falcone

Manuel narrowed his eyes reading over the invitation a second time before he handed it to his brother. “What do you make of this?”

Jesús took the note and read it before looking over at his brother. “You think Alberto is going to try and unseat his father?”

“That’s what it sounds like.” Manuel grinned. “I think we might have to go down there.”

“You fine with another Falcone being in charge?” Jesús asked as he set the card on the table.

“New blood means new ideas, new management, new bargains...so yeah, I think we should go.”
Manuel smiled.

Jesús shrugged. “You’re the boss.”

*

In another part of Gotham, Kwan Lin, her long dark hair pulled back from her face and braided down her back in one long braid that brushed the floor where she sat on the floor of her apartment, was dressed in simple black yoga pants and a black t-shirt. She ate her breakfast of tofu pudding and watched the Gotham local morning new program when Lu Yen, a tall slender man with sharp, angular features and a bald head (freshly shaved) that reflected the morning light, came in with an envelope. The man (who was her bodyguard and her lover) bowed, holding the note out to her, his expression—as always--giving away nothing.

“This was left outside with your name on it. I have checked it thoroughly and it is safe,” Lu Yen said in his low, flat voice.

Kwan Lin frowned and took the envelope as she set her breakfast aside. She opened the envelope with a manicured fingernail. Inside was a plain white card with writing on it. She slid it out carefully before she read it. Her dark eyes scanned over the script and a small frown marred her pretty face. She glanced over to Lu Yen who stood in silence, his hands behind his back, waiting for her orders.

“It seems that Alberto Falcone is going to make a move against his father and is looking for support.” She handed the note to Lu Yen.

She watched silently as he read the note. His dark brown eyes popped up to meet her steady gaze. “It might be a trap,” he said.

She nodded. “Or it might be an opportunity.”

Lu Yen nodded and handed the note back. “As in all things I shall follow where you lead.”

Kwan Lin smiled at him. “Good.”

*

The Gotham night was cold and wet; it had been raining since early evening and had continued all through the night. The wharf was quiet, with only the sound of the rainfall and the movement of the water providing any real noise. The street lights were scattered, many of them out, but the few that remained lit threw pale yellow light that reflected off the water and made the shadows deeper than usual.

The brick building that had once been the Barr Wharf Fish Market was now abandoned, covered in several decades worth of graffiti. At the top of a nearby abandoned warehouse, Joker was dressed in a black on black suit and stood by Harley who wore a black bodysuit (that Joker found to be distracting) her hair in pigtails. They watched through the night vision binoculars they both had as the gang heads began to arrive.

Joker chuckled. “Oh there’s Drago Ibanescu, head of the Ibanescu family.”

Harley turned to look in the direction Joker had his binoculars pointed. “You mean that guy who looked like a bad Elvis impersonator?”

Joker nodded. “That’s the one. Get a load of the gold sparkle jacket. I think I want one.”
Harley pulled her binoculars away to glare at him. “No.”

Joker glanced over at her and winked.

They both heard Agatha behind them laugh quietly with a muffled chuckle from Bane.

Joker stuck his tongue out at Harley before putting his binoculars back in place. “Okay, there is Alexandra Kosov, new head of the Odessa gang…” He muttered in a low voice. “How many Kosovs are there?”

Harley murmured. “Wow, everyone’s got a bodyguard or two…talk about a lack of trust.” She giggled and Joker playfully elbowed her when Harley frowned still looking through her binoculars.

“Hey, isn’t that Lew Moxon? I thought he was dead?”

Joker turned his binoculars and grinned. “In the wheelchair? Yeah that’s him. This is perfect!”

Jason, in his full Red Hood costume, came over and dropped down to a crouch next to Joker. “Okay, everything is ready. Just saw Galante and Enrico Inzerillo pull up. That’s the last of them. Frost and Zsasz are in place for the drivers. I’ll be joining them at your word Boss.”

Joker, still looking through his binoculars at the gathered group below, whispered. “The gas is in place.”

Jason nodded even though Joker wasn’t looking at him. “Yeah, you just have to trigger them.”

Harley, who was also still watching through her binoculars, giggled. “They are going into the market building.”

Joker lowered his binoculars with a wide grin. “Let’s get on with the show then, shall we?”

*

Inside, Manuel Escobedo growled looking around. The inside of the abandoned market was covered in graffiti, the smell of old rotten fish clung to the walls of the place making the air heavy and putrid. The lights were on, but there were no chairs or table and no Alberto Falcone, just trash and the remains of a once thriving fish market with shredded posters on the walls, the empty cold display cases, and the crumbled remains of an old chalkboard.

“What the fuck is going on here?” Manuel glanced over at his brother who shrugged. “Don’t ask me hermano.”

Enrico Inzerillo shrugged. “Maybe he is like his father and likes to make an entrance.”

Lew Moxon muttered. “I don’t know why I’m even here.”

Junior Galante sighed. “Could at least have some drinks.”

Kwan Lin was about to respond to that when she began to feel strange. She looked over at Lu Yen. “I don’t feel right…”

Lu Yen looked dizzy and shook his head. “We should…”

But before he could say any more the tall, bald man dropped to his knees and fell over. Kwan Lin moved toward him, his name on her lips—that had gone numb--when she fell on top of her bodyguard, unable to move, or speak.
Everyone else gathered in the building began to feel the effects of something they could neither see nor smell, a clear, toxic gas that made them feel dizzy, nauseous and paralyzed them. Each of the gang leaders and their bodyguards or seconds fell to the floor.

Each of them could see and they could hear, but none of them were able to move. The group laid there, unmoving except for their eyes and breathing, for many minutes, silent and helpless. After what must have been at least ten minutes, Drago Ibanescu watched as a man with green hair and wearing an expensive, tailored black suit stepped in followed by a sexy young woman in a form hugging black bodysuit. Next came a man, a large, muscled man wearing a mask...a Lucha libre mask that covered his face. The mask was white and black with demon red eyes.

Drago watched as the three people moved through the group, the woman and man systematically shooting everyone in the head. Drago’s eyes followed them as the walked over people, shooting one after another until the man with the green hair and face, white as death, stopped in front of him.

“Oh lookie you, watching the entire show!!!” Joker crouched down and smiled, a bright red lipped smile at the man. “I bet you are wondering what is going on aren’t you? Well…” Joker tapped his chin with one finger, his gun dangling between his legs. Drago could see the woman checking for pulses behind the Joker.

Joker grinned. “Well my friend, this isn’t about little Alberto taking over for dear old daddykins. No, this is about revenge, about war, and about giving Gotham exactly what it deserves.”

Drago tried to move his mouth, but he couldn’t. Not only did he hear gunshots inside the building, but he would swear he heard the echo of gunshots outside. Joker laughed. “Sorry darling, but I mixed this little gas myself, part nerve agent, apart Succinylcholine…” He gestured with his gun. “And part a few more things. But I know, you’re asking “But Mister Joker, I thought Succinylcholine had to be injected and I thought nerve gas made you vomit.” Joker chuckled. “They do and they could...on their own, but these…” Joker held up his hands. “...are the hands of an artist.”

“Yes they are.” Harley came up behind Joker and wrapped her arms around his shoulders before she kissed his cheek. “Monologuing puddin?”

Joker laughed. “Maybe a little sweets, seems like old Drago was watching even though he can’t move.” He looked up at Harley as she rested her chin on his head. He brought his free hand up to caress one of her arms. “All done?”

Harley nodded. “Yep. The boys are nearly done outside.”

Joker purred. “Perfect. You have the coat?”

Harley nodded. “Bane is fetching it.”

Joker stood and wrapped an arm around Harley’s waist, then pulled her close as he once more smiled at Drago. “Any last words?”

Drago could barely make a sound. Joker laughed. “That’s what I thought…”

He held his gun out, Harley doing the same. Drago could only stare at Joker and Harley as they both grinned and pulled the triggers of their weapons.
Arturo Rodriguez was the first on the scene, at least among Gotham’s many reporters. He had a man on the force who he paid to call him whenever a crime scene was called in that might be newsworthy. In Gotham a person had to pick and choose what was covered. Not every crime story made the local news—there were too many—and people just didn’t care if John Smith’s grandma got mugged, because everyone’s grandma got mugged in Gotham. No, Arturo wanted the big stories. If he was the one to cover all of Gotham’s really big stories, especially anything to do with the Bat, then one of the major cable networks was bound to call him and get him out of Gotham so he could start making some real money.

The van pulled up to an area where Rodriguez and his cameraman, Charlie Woods, a large man who Arturo had never seen in anything but jeans and a Gotham Knights jersey, could see that the entire warehouse had been cordoned off with yellow police tape. There were at least a handful of police cars at the scene, an ambulance, and forensics vehicles. Arturo grinned at the sight. Judging by the size of the police presence—and approaching sirens—this was something major.

Charlie parked the van and leaned on the wheel. “So what did your source say happened?”

Arturo had pulled down the mirror on the sun visor and was inspecting his thick black hair, pulling at the skin below his eyes to make sure his eyes weren’t bloodshot. “He didn’t say, just that they had been called in because someone had heard the sound of gunfire.”

Charlie frowned, wrinkling his nose. “Fuck, you can hear gunshots in Gotham every damn night. I don’t think I could fall sleep if I didn’t hear the gunfire lullaby.”

Arturo glanced over at Charlie. “True, but apparently this sounded like a lot of gunfire.”

Charlie did not look impressed.

Arturo rolled his eyes. “Come on, get the camera and let’s see if we can make some news.”

Arturo and Charlie moved like a well-oiled machine, the two men having worked together for almost two years. Within minutes, they were ready and hurrying toward the crime tape where a lone cop stood watching the scene. Arturo could see a few civilian cars out here, the windows of which looked to be shot out—and he saw there were bodies in the cars. Several members of the Gotham forensics lab were going in and out of the warehouse, then a few seconds later the first body was being pulled out.

Arturo grinned and waved a hand at Charlie who was behind. “Get the camera on.”

Charlie did and aimed the light at Arturo.

Arturo knew he looked good. He had the good looks of a movie star, wore tailored suits, and expensive shoes. Arturo made sure he hit the gym every day to keep his figure trim for the camera. He was going somewhere, somewhere big, and Gotham was going to get him there, one way or another.

He turned toward the camera. “This is Arturo Rodriguez reporting from…”

“Hey!! You can’t be here!”

Arturo turned to see the lone cop, a large man, though not fat, with a red face and mustache that would have been in style in the 1970’s porn industry, racing over to him. “This is an crime scene, you can’t be here.”

Arturo glanced at the man’s badge before he replied. “Officer, would you like to comment? Witnesses have reported hearing gunfire and…”

The officer growled. “Look Rodriguez…”

Arturo looked surprised at being recognized, but the officer continued. “Yeah, I know who the fuck you are. This is a police investigation and we don’t need you clowns down here reporting on shit and fucking up our investigation. Now get your ass and that camera out of here or I’ll throw you both in jail.”

Arturo pulled himself up to his full height, just an inch shy of six feet. “You can’t do that! Freedom of the press!”

“Freedom of my boot up your ass! Now get out,” the officer snarled.

That was when they both heard someone yelled. “Hey, I found something!”

Arturo and the cop turned just as an officer walked out of the warehouse delicately holding a coat by his gloved fingertips.

*

The following night after their plan had gone off without a hitch, Joker was excited, nearly dancing off the walls from the moment they had left the warehouse. Every leading member of every important crime family in Gotham serving under Falcone was dead and the trap had been sprung. Now all they had to do was watch for the next few days or weeks to see Gotham dragged into a war. Joker had been all smiles, his blue eyes bright with anticipation for what lay ahead for Gotham and for Batman.

Step one in their revenge plot completed.

But tonight was just for the two of them.

*

Harley giggled while Jack tugged her along behind him, his hand in hers, and a blindfold over her eyes. He was moving a little too quickly for her in his excitement, making it a little difficult for her to keep up with his long-legged strides. Making it worse, she was wearing heels and while she could run in them if she needed to, trying to keep herself from blindly stumbling over Jack while he dragged her behind him was a lot more difficult than simply running. (The situation also told her that she might consider learning how to run blindfolded in heels. Never knew when the skill might come in handy.)

“Where are we going?” she asked again, her smile dancing across her red lips as she stumbled along behind him, her heels clicking on the asphalt and echoing in the deserted park.

Jack didn’t stop, continued to move swiftly, though he was careful to make sure she never tripped, or that he pulled her into anything. He kept his eyes darting back to Harley to make sure she was all right while he pulled her blindly along.

“You’ll see--stop asking!” Jack chuckled giving her hand a squeeze.
Harley laughed. “Fine, I’ll stop!”

Jack laughed. “Good, now hold on and be careful.”

Harley let him continue to pull her through the park, her smile never wavering. She loved it when Jack was excited like this, excited to share something with her. When he was really excited like he was right now, Jack was almost childlike in his need to share whatever it was with her, in his need to have her experience his excitement and enjoyment. That excitement was one of the many things she loved about him.

* *

Harley had woken up earlier in the evening to find a note on the bedside table and Jack nowhere to be seen.

The note, written in his elegant script had read: Put on a pretty dress and come down stairs.

Harley had frowned at the note, wondering what he was up to, but she had done as Jack had asked, dressing in a simple, short sleeved red dress, the skirt of which fell to her knees. It had a low v-neck that showed off her cleavage and little tiny cut out details along the ends of the sleeves and the skirt. She had paired the dress with a little white bolero style sweater (against the early spring chill in the evening air), no stockings, and red heels. She had left her white blonde hair loose, parting it on the side and styling it similar to the actress Veronica Lake, a little old fashioned, but she knew Jack liked that era and style. She had done her makeup in a similar style with a bright red lipstick, and wing-tipped eyeliner.

After dressing, she had hurried down the stairs to find Jack waiting for her, his green hair slicked back, his lips a deep, dark red and a smile on them showing off his perfect white teeth. He was dressed casually, wearing a pair of dark plum-colored slacks with thin, light pinstripes, suspenders of dark red. His shirt was an evergreen dress shirt, no tie, unbuttoned to just below the hollow of his throat that showed a hint of the white t-shirt he wore underneath and visible against his pale white skin. Harley’s heart and desire for her husband went into overload at the sight of him waiting for her.

Jack had grinned, holding out a single red rose in one hand and waving a black silk scarf at her with the other. “Come on down sweets--time to play a game.”

Harley had giggled, hopping down the last few stairs and took the offered rose. “Uh oh, why do I think I’m in trouble?”

Jack spun her around gently, facing her away from him before he held the cloth up and covered her eyes, his voice was low and sexy against her ear. “Because you are married to the Joker my sweets, you are always in some sort of trouble.”

* *

Now they were outside and Jack was tugging her along somewhere in the amusement park. Her smile was broad while followed Jack in eager anticipation.

She knew they were in the amusement park since they had simply walked instead of taking a car, but she had no idea where in the park. It was late in the evening and she felt a light sprinkle in the air, just enough to make the asphalt damp, but not enough to really warrant an umbrella. She had lost track of where they were once they had left the area around their home and made several turns. She suspected Jack had made the twists and turns on purpose so she couldn’t guess where he was taking her in the park. The jerk, she thought with an amused crook to her smile. After a few more minutes
Jack stopped and released her hand. She felt his hands on her upper arms in a light grip.

“Okay Harls, I’m going to move you, take a step up…” Jack said while he gently moved her to the side, then turned her around. Harley put her foot out, feeling around for a moment before she felt the step and stepped up.

“Okay Harley, now I want you to turn to the right, then walk backwards four steps.”

Harley smirked, but she did as he asked, turning and took four slow steps backwards. Her heel hit a step, which caused her to stumble back trying to walk backwards up said step, while blindfolded. She did, barely, just in time for her legs to bump against something and she fell back onto a metal seat with a gasp of both surprise and the slight sting of abruptly falling onto her rear.

“Ouch!” Harley yelped.

She heard Jack chuckle and she felt him drop down beside her. “Okay, put your arms up over your head for a moment, sweets.”

Harley did as he instructed and she heard a creak of metal. Then Jack hollered. “Okay Frost!! Let her rip!”

Harley frowned as she heard the sounds of something metallic moving and then the strange sensation of being lifted. She gasped in surprise reaching out to grab onto something, dropping her rose in the process. Her hands landed on a metal rail.

“Puddin! What’s going on?!” Harley asked, her hands on the metal bar tightened.

Jack laughed and pulled her blindfold off.

“Tada!!” Jack laughed as he revealed that they were in the air.

Harley gasped in happy surprise while looking around. “You got the ferris wheel working!!!”

She looked down and saw the giant wheel glowed with carnival lights of purple and yellow.

Jack grinned at her. “Yep, Frost, Bane, Jason and I have all been taking turns getting the old girl going because I wanted to surprise you.”

Harley giggled as the ferris wheel rotated slowly, bringing them up to the top where it stopped with a loud clunking sound of metal and hydraulics. The seat they were in swung a little. From here Harley could see all of the amusement park spread out around her. Most of the park was dark, but here and there she could see smatterings of lights, some dim such as the lighting around where Jack kept his lab in the haunted house ride, while others were brighter, such as where the carousel was located. She could see beyond the park into sections of Gotham around them. There were streetlights, wet sidewalks, old buildings--some lost to the years of neglect and decay and vandalism--while others struggled to survive, their old glory still visible under the smog and dirt. Farther away, she could see the twinkling lights and high rise buildings that was the heart of Gotham. She heard the dull sound of vehicles, a train, and the occasional tram or rail in the distance as well as the occasional sound from a boat on the dark water of the bay or harbor. From here, the city looked beautiful, like a fairy tale kingdom. From this distance and height it was hard to imagine that Gotham had a dark underbelly where crime ruled, that Gotham was a place where a Bat roamed the rooftops while a clown tried to burn the city, both related by blood and differing passions.

Jack watched Harley’s expression with a tender smile on his red lips.
Harley murmured as if speaking too loud might break the spell. “It’s so beautiful up here.”

Joker smiled and caressed her upper arm with the back of his fingers before he brought his arm up to drape across her shoulders and look out at Gotham with her.

“Yes, it is. But it is so much more beautiful with you here.” He reached around to brush her hair aside and kiss her ear.

Harley blushed, glancing sideways at him. “Are you trying to seduce me, puddin?”

Jack grinned at her with a mischievous glint in his bright eyes. “Is it working?”

Harley laughed. “Yes, of course it is!”

Jack took her hand and kissed her knuckles. He stared at her, his blue eyes strange in the flashing lights of the ferris wheel.

Harley smiled at him with a slight tilt of her head. “What?”

“You know I would give you the world Harley,” Jack said softly.

Harley rubbed her thumb against his fingers. “I know you would puddin.”

“I’ll give you Gotham,” he said with intensity. “I’ll make a Gotham where no one can hurt you.”

Harley’s smile faded into a frown. “Puddin…”

She could feel the tension in him when he spoke, his fingers holding her hand tightened almost painfully. “I’ll make the Bat pay for everything he has done to us, past and present. I’ll make him sorry for every moment he tried to keep us apart and I’ll destroy his precious Gotham, rip his noble crusade to shreds and remake Gotham in our image. He wants to made amends for what happened to us, to our parents. I’ll show him that he is working toward nothing but emptiness. We will be the things that go bump in the night and everyone will be scared of us. Not the Bat, never the Bat.” He laughed. “Old Brucie’s crusade will be for nothing...just like everything he has ever done...all his life’s goals will be like ashes on the fire of his Gotham.”

Jack’s laugh turned from light into something dark, echoed out over the evening breeze.

Harley bit her lip before she squeezed his hand. “Puddin?”

Jack’s eyes had a far off look in them, the blue taking on the strange glow as he focused on the view of Gotham. It was as if he were gazing into some future that she couldn't see, but then his gaze snapped back to her, and Harley saw that her puddin had returned.

She smiled. “Let’s not talk about Batman.”

Jack nodded, kissing her knuckles again. “Sorry Harls--of course. Tonight is for us.”

He dropped her hand, reaching up to cup the side of her throat and gently tug her toward him, a gentle smile on his lips. Harley gazed into his eyes, brushing her nose against his hand and reached out to grasp his side just before her lips touched his in a gentle kiss.

Harley fell into Jack’s kiss, letting everything fall away until it was just the two of them. Jack’s mouth moved gently over hers, his kisses long, passionate and deep.

Jack’s hand glided into her hair, feeling the soft, thick waves between his fingers, the taste of her tongue, sweet in his mouth. He stroked his tongue against hers, kissing her as if her breath, her touch, were the only things that kept him alive, that he needed her, needed her touch to ground him in reality.

Harley reached up to lay her hand over his, her other hand reaching up to grab his shirt; her fingers pulled at the fabric until she popped one of the buttons.

Jack brushed his nose against hers, pulling away only slightly from her lips, his forehead resting against hers. “I love you Harls.”

Harley smiled, brushing the tip of her nose against his in a soft caress. “I love you puddin.”

Jack smiled, a light dancing in his eyes. “My Queen,” he whispered.

Harley giggled. “My King.”

Jack pulled her close, pressing his mouth to hers, kissing her with more passion, his tongue brushing against her teeth. He dropped his hand to her waist and pulled her closer (which caused the seat to swing for a moment) until she moved to straddle his lap, hampered for a moment by the safety bar.

Jack pulled her skirt up, his hands sliding along her legs to her hips.

Harley wrapped her arms around his shoulders, leaning over him, her hair dropping down around them like a soft shelter as she kissed him, her tongue gliding against his tongue in a slow, sensual dance. Jack groaned and spread his fingers wide to gasp her rear.

Harley giggled while caressing his pale white jawline with her fingertips, brushing her nose against his, her forehead pressed lightly to his forehead. “Was this your grand plan puddin? Just to get me up here and fuck me?”

Jack grinned at her, his smile spreading across his face, his eyes dancing with mischief. “That obvious, am I?”

She giggled rubbing her fingers along his dark red bottom lip, tugging his lip down just a little. “Well, it worked.” She purred. “You get a cookie.”

Jack grinned wider if that were possible, she thought, the rows of his perfect white teeth against his red lips made a hot flash of heat burn through her. He reached down between them where she could feel him undoing his slacks, already hard and waiting for her.

Jack hissed as he pulled her panties to the side, and his fingers stroked between her legs feeling the wet heat of her excitement. He grinned wider still when his stroking made Harley gasp and groan.

Jack purred, his smile still wide, his fingers sliding inside her. “I do love cookies, pumpkin.”

Harley giggled kissing him, her hand sliding down from his jaw to his throat where she wrapped her fingers around his neck gently, pressing her fingers against his skin in a way she knew he liked. She reached up with her other hand, grabbing a fistful of his green hair. Not too hard as she didn’t want to hurt him as she forced his head back, grinding herself against his fingers while at the same time she attacked his throat. Harley dragged the flat of her tongue along his adam’s apple and up to his sharp chin. She brushed her lips back down his throat, licking him before she gently pressed her teeth into his pale skin.

Jack’s eyes rolled with pleasure with the feel of her tongue on his neck, his fingers sliding into his wife, greeted with a deep moan from Harley, then out to brush along her clitoris with his middle finger, which got him another moan from her that he felt deep, as if her moan of pleasure were a vibration that he could feel within his very center. He held her hip with his free hand; his grip was strong enough that he was going to leave bruises on her, but that only made him smile. Seeing his mark on her gave him a deep satisfaction, just as seeing any marks Harley left on him.

Jack groaned, rubbing her slowly. “You’re so wet.” He purred enjoying the feel of her; slick, hot, and his.

Harley didn’t answer him, but instead she rolled her hips. She kept her movements slow, sensual, rubbing against his fingers as her grip in his hair tightened. Jack inhaled a sharp breath, but he smiled at his wife’s attentions. Harley’s movements caused the entire seat to swing gently. She focused her attention on his throat, alternating between bites and long, sensual licks with a little bit of sucking against his neck. Her hand around his throat slid down to his chest where she tugged at his shirt. Her fingers wrapped around the top of the t-shirt he wore underneath at the same time she ground herself on his fingers, and her breathing became more and more ragged, the breath of someone needing more.

Harley pressed her mouth to his throat, just at the soft, tender spot where she could feel the beat of his heart under the skin. She sucked hard alternating her sucks on his neck with bites; she wanted to leave a mark of her pleasure on his pale, milk white skin. Jack bit his bottom lip with pleasure. The tight pull of her fingers in his hair, the brush of her nails against his chest where she tugged on his t-shirt combined with her biting at his throat, along with her thrusting, caused his erection to throb with need and release, but he enjoyed this tension, the waiting while he focused on her. He wanted to hear her cry out, needed to hear her scream. Harley let go of his hair, dropping her hand to his shoulder, her other hand pressed against his chest as she arched her back, grinding herself on his fingers, the tension in her body building fast, higher until she crested with a cry.

Jack laughed with delight as the ferris wheel car swung wildly.

*

Down below near the ferris wheel controls Frost cringed. He could see the car above him swinging like crazy and he heard Harley cry out. He frowned, hoping this damn ferris wheel stayed intact, the damn thing was at least a decade old, maybe twice that and it had been repaired by people who were not engineers...

Frost rubbed the bridge of his nose. If anything happened to the two of them up there, Agatha would have his hide.

*

Harley crumpled, it was as if her entire body had turned to jelly.

Jack chuckled, kissing her ear. “You’re not done yet Harls,” he hissed.

Harley giggled and pushed herself up. She could feel the warmth of his erection against her skin. She moved, pushing her weight up while ignoring the way the ferris wheel car swung as she grabbed the back of his seat behind Jack and lowered herself down on him with agonizing slowness.

Jack grabbed his bottom lip with his teeth, a deep groan in his chest, feeling her slowly slide down on him, warm and wet. The sensation of his wife wrapping around him forced him to press back against the seat while his other hand grabbed her hip holding her down on him. He didn’t want her to move yet; if she moved, he would orgasm and he wasn’t ready, not yet. She felt so fantastic on him, he had to wait, wanted them to climax together.
Jack hissed. “Don't move pumpkin.”

Harley nodded, folding herself around him and her arms cradled his head as she pressed his face to her breasts.

Jack didn’t move his hands from her hips, but simply held her down on him, his eyes closed and waited. The seat’s swinging slowed, and the squeal of metal settled. In the distance, he could hear the sounds of cars, the occasional lonely sound of a boat on the dark water around Gotham. This was perfect, Harley and him up above Gotham, soon to be their Gotham. He grinned. He was making love with his only and greatest love, surrounded by the city he both loved and hated.

Jack licked her throat, moved his lips back along her jaw to catch the lobe of her ear with his teeth.

“My pumpkin pie, my frosted cupcake,” he whispered.

Harley giggled. “Puddin.”

Jack purred. “I do like all the food nicknames sweets, just makes me want to eat you up.” He playfully growled while snapping his teeth at her.

Harley laughed and kissed him. She loved these moments, just the two of them; no wars, no gangs, no Batman, no Bruce...just her and the man she loved.

She sat back up and ran her hands down his face, then through his hair squeezing him tightly inside her, staring into his haunting blue eyes, as the carnival lights of the ferris wheel played over his ghost white skin. She arched her back, moving with slow and deliberate moves. Jack held her hips, his legs spread, feet braced against the footrest of the ride’s car, gazing up at her with a wide, red lipped smile. Harley braced her hands behind him and started to grind her hips against him, letting the swing of the seat work with her grinding thrusts, the tension in her body rising higher and higher. She groaned, giving herself over to simply feeling Jack inside her.

Jack groaned, his eyes closing part way so that she could see a thin glow of his blue eyes through his dark lashes. He held on to her tighter and giggled as the seat swung more. The combination of sex and danger made the act that much more thrilling.

Harley let go of the seat to grab Jack’s face, pressing her lips hard to his mouth, her tongue sliding between his lips at the moment she climaxed.

Jack wrapped his arms around her, her moan vibrated through his body from where her lips touched his, a vibration of pleasure from the point where their bodies were connected rolled through him, seeping deep into him, to his very essence. Jack felt her pleasure like a wave crashing over him and he was defenseless to stop his own body response to her. The seat swung along with the motions of their bodies and the metal squealed, but he didn’t care. Jack arched back, pressing his feet against the floor of the seat as his own climax ripped through him, tearing him down making him weak. At the same time he clung to her, his Harley, the only person in the world that he loved.

He cried out.

Harley cradled his head kissing him, swallowing his cry of pleasure.

*

Frost lit a cigarette leaning against the ferris wheel’s mechanism. He glanced up, but the lights of the ferris wheel were bright, preventing him from seeing anything. Thankfully, he thought. He smirked taking a deep drag on his cigarette, wondering if Agatha would be up for a ferris wheel ride.
Jack laughed and held onto Harley with a tight grip while the seat swung back and forth, though the wild swinging was gradually settling down. Harley let out a happy sigh and laid her head on Jack’s shoulder, in no hurry to get off his lap.

Jack relaxed, running the fingers of one hand through her hair while he stroked her back gently with the other. “Hmm...that was fun.”

Harley giggled, nuzzling his neck. “I love you.”

He kissed her cheek. “I love you too.”

“So..” He smiled and reached down to grab her rear and adjusted her with a grunt. “How about we go big game hunting this week?”

Harley laughed.

Two nights later, Batman stood in Commissioner Gordon’s office looking over the photos of the crime scene and the one piece of evidence they had found, a coat with a bullet hole in the shoulder that had been traced back to the now missing Alberto Falcone.

Gordon leaned back in his chair, his pipe smoking in his hand, his glasses slid to the end of his nose, and his white hair a mess.

“Have you questioned The Roman?” Batman looked up from the images of the dead men. So far nothing had happened in response to the massacre, but he knew it was only a matter of time before the shooting began.

Gordon shook his head. “No, not yet, just got that information about the coat this morning. I was hoping that maybe you had something I could use before I approached Falcone.” Gordon rubbed the bridge of his nose, pushing his glasses up to his forehead as he continued. “I’m not sure what the fuck is going on. Alberto’s body wasn’t found, so he might have escaped the slaughter, but I can’t see a reason for any of this, unless the rumors on the street are true.”

Batman finished for him. “That he is trying to overthrow his father.”

Gordon nodded. “Yeah, but it doesn’t make sense.”

Batman frowned rubbing his chin. “It might. Sofia Falcone can’t inherit the business since her father is old school. What if she is using her brother to make her father look bad? If she can get the other families on her side, or as the case may be, her brother…”

Gordon nodded. “Maybe, but killing the heads of all the families you want to follow you? Doesn’t make sense to me.”

Batman nodded. “True, we’re missing some piece of the puzzle.”

Gordon nodded. “I’m just worried about what’s going to happen if we don’t find that piece, and soon…”

*

Gabriel Santo glowered. The eye patch on his left eye didn’t diminish the hatred in the man’s brown eyed gaze as he picked up the shot and drowned the golden yellow liquid inside without making a face, which always impressed Rodney. Rodney, a small man with a pencil thin mustache and thinning hair, could barely take a sip of soda without the carbonated drink making him hiccup.
Drinking wasn’t something Rodney Fidget did often as his job was to keep the Penitente cartel’s books, and it didn’t do anyone any good to have a drinking problem if you were dealing with numbers, especially if a screw up could end with a bullet in your head instead of a pink slip.

Gabriel lightly touched the edge of the glass with one finger and Rodney filled it again without being asked from the bottle that sat at the table. Seated at the table were Romeo and Eduardo, the remaining heads of the Penitente cartels. With Manuel's death, they were left without a leader.

“We can’t let this go without a response,” Gabriel said in a tone filled with anger.

Eduardo frowned. “But we don’t…”

Gabriel snarled, slamming his finger onto the table. “I know exactly who it was--it was those fuckers the Inzerillo family. That asshole Enrico has been looking for a reason to kill Manuel ever since he took over the cartel. When The Roman let Manuel step in as head when his father died and keep our territory intact instead of letting Enrico take it, that little shit’s been looking for a way to take what is ours.”

Rodney frowned. He hated to speak up at these meetings, but… “But sir, Enrico Inzerillo was killed too. It doesn’t make…”

Gabriel reached up with lightning quick reflexes and grabbed Rodney by the front of his shirt and hauled the shorter man down so that they were face to face. “Last time I looked Rodney, you were paid to keep the money straight, not give your opinion.”

“Yes sir.” Rodney nodded.

Gabriel released him. “I say we hit the Inzerillo family now, take their territory, show the Roman that we deserve more influence, more respect. That we answer fire with fire. This is a test and we will succeed.”

The other men shared a look before Eduardo spoke up. “So…”

Gabriel smiled. “We hit them while they’re down, before they have time to recover. I want the Inzerillo family wiped off the face of the earth. I want Gotham to forget that the Inzerillo family ever existed.”

* * *

In another section of the city Timur Nayfield, a hulk of a man with a shaved head, slammed his fists against the table in the kitchen of Alain Goldberg’s kitchen.

“They killed her! They murdered Alexandra! My Alexandra!”

Alain, a slender man with an expensive haircut who favored expensive suits, frowned and laid his hand on his friend’s back. “Timur, are you sure it was Galante?”

“Who else could it have been? I told her not to go to that fucking meeting, that it was a trap, something felt off. I knew it was a trap!” Timur snarled. “I knew it. I told her over and over again not to go or to at least take me, but she wouldn’t listen! It was Galante, I know it!”

Alain frowned. Galante and Timur had been rivals forever. He knew that Galante and Alexandra Kosov had dated briefly, almost a Romeo and Juliet thing, two rival families serving under Falcone, but it hadn’t lasted long. Afterwards though, Galante had always been an ally to the Odessa Mob. Alain was sure the only reason Timur was blaming them was that he hated Galante for stealing Alexandra from him.

Alain sighed. “Did she tell you who the message was from?”

Timur shook his head. “No, she didn’t.”

Alain’s frown deepened. He knew Alexandra and Timur had been having issues after she caught Timur cheating on her. The only reason she hadn’t had Timur killed was because he was the brother of her best friend Zoya.

“Then you can’t know for sure…” Alain began, but Timur wasn’t listening. “I’ll gather the men and make a hit on Galante, he’ll never know what hit him…”

Alain sighed with a shake of his head. “Timur, Galante died that night too. All the heads…”

Timur snarled. “I don’t care! Probably died in his own trap, but now every member of the Galante Mob is dead!! Dead!!”

Timur turned and stormed out of the apartment slamming the door behind him. Alain frowned and closed his eyes. This was going to be bad, very bad for everyone. He needed to get a hold of Carmine Falcone…

*

Day three.

Arturo Rodriguez stood outside the burning remains of three older apartment buildings. The police and fire department had cordoned off the area as they tried to get the fires under control and rescue any survivors.

Arturo looked into the camera while he spoke.

“I have been told that this was a hit carried out by the Penitente Cartel. According to reports, a rocket launcher was fired into the home of what remained of the Inzerillo family, killing sixteen members of the gang and their extended family, as well as collateral damage suffered by the two apartment buildings that had flanked the building owned by the Inzerillo family. It is unclear what the civilian death toll is…”

*

The following night, Batman arrived at the remains of another shoot out. This one was on a smaller scale than the one that had occurred earlier this week that took the lives of the mob heads.

This shootout occurred between the Odessa gang and the remains of the Galante family.

There were at least a total of seven dead, and three of those were innocent bystanders.

Batman walked the crime scene slowly. Off to the side he could see Robin inspecting one of the bodies with a slight frown.

The young man stood up, looking over at Batman. “What’s going on? I mean I thought the Galante and Odessa worked together…sort of.”
Batman rubbed a finger across his chin in thought. “The murder of the mob leaders has left not just a power vacuum, but these families are looking for someone to blame. I think they are falling back on old rivalries as the answer.”

Robin frowned. “That doesn't make sense. I mean, everyone lost a leader...except the Falcones.”

Batman nodded. “Except for the Falcones.”

“I think it might be time to visit with The Roman.” Batman narrowed his eyes behind his mask. “Before this gets out of hand.”

*

Over the next two days more and more fighting broke out.

Someone torched a city block in the upper east side. Several small shootouts occurred between members of the Lucky Hand triad and the Neon Dragon triad that included the Ibanescu family.

There were several dead, more wounded, including innocents caught in the crossfire.

Smaller gangs with no connection to the mob started to make pushes into territory usually under the control of the bigger families. The Deacons gang in the Hills had gone after the Free Man gang, which had resulted in several deaths, mostly innocent civilians, once more caught in the middle. Able Crown and his gang completely wiped out the Dragon’s Claw gang, killing every member, while The LoBoys and the Sprang Bridge Soldiers completely took over the area around the Sprang Bridge and nearly all of Robbinsville was under their control and protection after they joined forces with the Batboys. The three gangs together were not just “protecting” Robbinsville, but they were shooting anyone to come close—including police officers, which meant that section of the city was being held hostage.

Along with all of this, a new menace had shown up in Gotham, a new crime boss who was slowly beginning to consolidate a little bit of power, a man named Roman Sionis.

*

Catwoman frowned, concentrating on slowly lowering herself down from the roof to the office window. She stopped with a look around, but it was late at night and despite all the fuss the mob and all the little wannabe gangs were causing in Gotham, this particular street was quiet, containing a few office buildings, one or two apartment buildings, and a few old, struggling restaurants—all of which were closed at this hour. From the angle she was lowering herself down from the roof no one would see her unless they were specially looking for a thief. (She had to swing over to get to the building’s roof, which had been a little further than she liked. The downward jump hadn’t been too bad, but she wasn’t going back that way. Turning her ankle had been a real possibility, but she had made the jump. Hopefully getting down would be easy, just take the rope and slither to the street and vanish into the dark.) She smiled and turned back to slowly lowering herself down to the window of the office she was breaking into in order to hit the safe inside where the prize lay. Ten million in diamonds.

The man she had been hired to rob, a man named Joe Kerr, had an office on the top floor of one of Gotham’s older buildings, originally built around 1910. The building had been refurbished into an office building. A little research had told Selina that this would be a fairly easy break in as several of the floors were unoccupied and the ones that were only had one or two offices on them, a dentist, a chiropractor, and a real estate office. The job should be easy then, with a really nice pay off Selina thought with a smile, big enough to invest into some new equipment, maybe some infrared goggles since she broke the last pair after a recent heist that went sideways. She wrinkled her nose in annoyance at the thought of losing that pair. They had been specially designed for her and they weren’t cheap.

The job had seemed almost too easy and she had almost turned it down because of that, but Jade had been excited by the idea of ten million in diamonds. Jade had suggested they take all the diamonds and the person who had hired them, a man who was Kerr’s business partner, a man named Jerome Napier, would have no recourse to go after them. Jade had argued that he couldn’t go to the police or his partner because then the finger would turn on him for knowing too much. Selina had pointed out that this Napier guy could simply hire someone to go after them. No, it was easier to do the job, maybe bargain for a better deal once she had the diamonds in her possession.

She grinned and tried the window; it was unlocked. That was a mistake made by many people who lived or worked on the top floors of buildings, they all thought that they were too high up for someone to break into the place through the window, and so they didn’t lock them. Amateur mistake, but that also made things very easy for her.

Selina slid the window up carefully, thankful that even though the building had been refurbished, whoever had done the job had kept the old window design, something that made her work even easier for her.

Selina slipped into the office, landing on the carpeted floor without a sound.

She stood up slowly with a look around. The room had a desk...and she stopped. She saw a shadow at the desk sitting there, a trail of smoke drifting up from the faint orange glow of a cigarette. Her eyes widened when she saw the end of the cigarette burn brightly.

Selina cursed to herself and started to turn back to the window when she heard the sound of movement, the soft rustle of cloth as the figure at the desk began to stand. She caught a hint of movement to her left and Selina turned just in time to see a figure dash toward her. She saw a woman with white hair pulled up into a ponytail, wearing tight black pants that looked painted on, a black half top shirt and black, heeled boots, and she held a baseball bat that was swinging her way.

“Here pretty kitty!!” The woman giggled.

Selina only had a moment to take in yet another bad heist as she turned toward the window thinking to throw herself out, but the woman moved fast and she was already too close. Selina didn’t have enough time to respond before the woman swung the bat. Selina leaped upward to avoid the attack, but the pale woman adjusted midswing. She was so fast, Selina thought in that split second before the sturdy, wooden bat caught Selina in the side of her left knee. Selina let out a cry of agony as the bat cracked against her and her knee made a snapping sound. She felt the impact knock the knee out of joint, and at the same time she knew without a doubt that her kneecap was shattered. Selina dropped to the floor and slammed up against the wall just under the window she had, only moments before, slipped through into the office.

“Harley giggled. “Oh puddin look at that, the kitty doesn’t wanna play anymore.”

Harley swung her bat like a baton while smiling down at Selina. “Poor kitty.”

Selina looked up at Harley. Now that the light from the street was on her, Selina though the woman looked like someone from the party at Bruce’s--Harley Quinn. She frowned in confusion. The woman looked familiar, not because Selina had seen her at the party, but Harley looked like someone she had seen before, she just couldn’t think of where, but god she couldn’t focus through the pain that was flaring in her leg.
Harley crouched down next to Selina. “How ya feeling kitty?” Selina thought about lashing out with her clawed gloves, but resisted the urge. Maybe she could talk her way out of this. The shadow at the desk stood up and walked into the light from the street, light that reflected off a gun. Selina felt a chill, a knot of cold in her stomach that was stretching out, chilling all of her. The pain from her knee was subsiding a little, she was still aware of it, but it wasn’t hurting in the same way. She realized she was going into shock. The shadow smiled down at her and Selina felt that cold spread as the light danced across the green hair, red lips, and pale white features of the Joker.

He was wearing a suit of dark purple. The only reason she could tell it was purple at all was that the pale street light caught some of the color, but it was so dark it almost looked black. He wore a double breasted vest of dark gold, an emerald green dress shirt, and a purple tie. Selina could even see that he had a flower the same shade as his vest in the lapel of his jacket.

Joker chuckled. “Look what the cat dragged in.”

Harley giggled standing up to wrap her arm around his waist, leaning the bat on her shoulder. “Looks like the kitty has a boo boo, puddin.”

Joker laughed. “Looks like she does pumpkin.”

Selina hissed. “What do you want?!”

Joker grinned, glancing sideways at Harley. “I don’t think she recognizes us sweets.”

Harley frowned. “You know puddin, I think you’re right.”

Joker smiled down at her, a smile that sent shivers through Selina. That mad smile accompanied by the strange blue shimmer in his eyes made her--for the first time in a long time--fear for her life. “I wonder if old Brucie will be upset when he finds out I’ve killed his pet?” Joker tilted his head smiling at her with a show of perfect teeth. Harley leaned her head against Joker’s as their twin smiles oddly reached their blue eyes, though it wasn’t humor she saw there, but something darker.

Joker’s voice was a low purr as he spoke. “Remember when you broke into Wayne Manor and Brucie was so in love with you that he couldn’t bare for Harley and me to hurt you? Even though you were trying to steal from our home? Remember how he chose you over his family? Even though you betrayed his trust?”

Selina stared at them, her eyes darted back and forth between the pair, widening as slowly she realized who Joker and Harley were…

Joker smiled as he saw the realization settle over Selina’s features. “Bingo Kitty Cat.”

Selina’s voice was soft with astonishment. “What do you want from me?”

Joker glanced sideways at Harley. “What do we want?”

Harley kissed the corner of Joker’s mouth. He smiled at her, rubbed his nose against Harley’s, though his gun never wavered before Harley turned her attention to Selina. “We want to hurt Brucie Selina, we want to hurt Batman, and you are going to help us do that.” She giggled. “You’re on our to do list!”

Selina reached up to grab the window sill and hauled herself to her feet, her mind racing. Bruce Wayne, Batman...Joker, Harley...Jack Wayne...Harleen Quinzel...she couldn’t move as fast as she wanted with her knee messed up like it was, but she knew she needed to get away, now, or she wouldn’t be leaving this office building.
She nodded slowly, opened her mouth as if she were about to offer something to the mad pair and then flexed to move. Just as she was about to pull herself through the window Joker fired.

Selina gasped, felt the bullet rip through her middle at the moment she threw herself through the window.

*

Joker and Harley exchanged a look when Selina disappeared out the window. They both raced to look out the window; first down, then up, just in time to see Selina disappear over the edge of the roof.

“Fuck.” Joker snarled. “Did I get her?”

Harley frowned, but then grinned as she stepped back from the window. “Look puddin.”

Joker followed her pointing finger. He saw blood staining the window sill, dripping over the edge and as they both leaned out the window to look they could see blood on the side of the building. A lot of blood.

Harley giggled. “Well, she may have gotten away, but I don’t think she is going very far.”

Joker chuckled with a shake of his head as leaned on the window sill with a smile. “This reminds me of a joke.”

Harley’s eyes sparkled. “Oh?”

He nodded. “A sadist, a masochist, a murderer, a necrophiliac, a zoophiliac and a pyromaniac are all sitting on a bench in a mental institution.

"Let's have sex with a cat," said the zoophiliac.

"Let's have sex with the cat and then torture it," says the sadist.

"Let's have sex with the cat, torture it and then kill it," shouted the murderer.

"Let's have sex with the cat, torture it, kill it and then have sex with it again," said the necrophiliac.

"Let's have sex with the cat, torture it, kill it, have sex with it again and then burn it," said the pyromaniac.

There was silence, and then the masochist said: "Meow."

Harley stared at him for a beat before she burst into peals of laughter.

~~ I have disabled anon comments because I have received a handful of comments that were attacks not just on my writing but attacks on myself. AO3 is free, you do not have to read works that you do not like and if you don't like them, then simply do not read them. Attacking the writer is not just mean, it's petty. There is no reason to leave an attacking comment, and there is no reason to leave more than one.~~
Bruce hurried down the hall of the hospital, his shoes making a slight squeak against the polished floors. The sterile light blue and white walls, accompanied by the sounds of beeping instruments, murmuring doctors and nurses surrounded by the smell of bleach, disinfectant and death set his nerves on end. He hated hospitals; it reminded him of disease and death, two things that he could never prepare for or fight against, no matter how hard he tried. He hated anything he couldn’t control, understand, or solve. Disease was a puzzle, but it was chaotic. Sometimes it didn’t matter if he had all the parts to solve it, sometimes sickness could still win. Death was worse, however. Death came from everywhere, from all sides with no rhyme or reason...death was pure chaos. Bruce remembered the night his parents died, the random act of violence that destroyed his life and his brother’s sanity. Their death had destroyed everything the Wayne family had been. Just like that, death had swept in—chaotic, terrible, random, unreasonable...like Jack was now...complete chaos with no rhyme or reason.

Bruce’s frown deepened. Thinking about his brother brought back the memories of Alfred being in here after his heart attack. That moment of pure terror that his one tie--no...Alfred wasn’t his only link to his parents there since Jack still lived, except, he supposed in all the ways that counted, Jack was dead too. That thought left a dull ache in Bruce’s chest. All that was left of his younger brother was that “thing” going around with the ghost of his brother’s face calling himself the Joker. That thought led Bruce to another thought, remembering when Harleen miscarried, and how devastated Jack had been.

Bruce wondered if that had been the moment that had sent Jack over the edge, the moment where everything had gone wrong with Jack along with the thoughts of what might have been, if Dr. Quinzel had carried a baby to term, if his brother was a father, now would things be different? Would Jack have gone down a different path? There was no point in him letting himself travel those dead end roads because there was no baby and his baby brother was dead.

Bruce’s brow wrinkled. Hospitals were not places of joy as far as Bruce was concerned. Hospitals were endings.

Bruce turned a corner and saw the nurse’s desk like a strange oasis in the desert of the hospital. He hurried over, noticing the startled look on the face of the young nurse manning the station as he came closer. He knew he looked a fright. Bruce Wayne was not playboy perfect at the moment, probably just this side of nuts. He had been out on the streets as Batman when he had received the call from Alfred telling him that the hospital was calling on behalf of an Irena Dubrovna, and that there had been an accident. Bruce knew exactly who it was. The name was a joke that Selina had told him, the main character from a 1942 movie called Cat People, about a woman who turned into a panther if touched by a man. Selina thought it was funny, which was why she used the name as one of her aliases.

Bruce had rushed back to the Batcave as soon as he could, pushing the Batmobile to its limits. Selina in the hospital? It had to be serious because she would never had contacted him otherwise. When he arrived at the cave, Bruce had stripped down, throwing on whatever clothing he had available before he took off to the hospital without combing his hair or checking his face. He hadn’t seen or heard from Selina since the party that Joker crashed months ago. He had hoped to hear from her, hoped that maybe they could connect again, but she had remained silent. The only reason he knew she was still in town was the series of robberies that all had her signature on them, a signature only Batman would recognize.
Alfred had told him over the phone that Miss Dubrovna had been admitted to Gotham General and that she was in intensive care after having surgery, though the hospital had refused to give any more details than that.

Bruce had fought the rising feeling of panic. He couldn’t understand why Selina was at the hospital or why he had been her emergency contact, but it didn’t really matter--she needed him and he would be there for her.

“I’m looking for Irena Dubrovna?” Bruce asked.

The nurse frowned at him, but nodded. “She’s in room 407.”

“Thank you.” Bruce turned and hurried away.

The nurse watched him with a quirked eyebrow before she pulled out her phone to text her friend that she had just seen Bruce Wayne--looking quite rough right now, but Bruce Wayne nonetheless.

* *

When Bruce found Selina’s room, the door was opened just a crack. He knocked once before pushing the door open to see Selina lying on a hospital bed, her eyes closed. Monitors beeped a steady rhythm while an IV dripped into her veins. She was alone, no other patients in the room and no hospital staff.

Bruce glanced out into the hall, but he saw no one, though the nurses’ station was not far back down the corridor. He stepped inside the room and quietly closed the door before he walked over to Selina. She didn’t open his eyes as he moved the chair that was in here over to her bedside and sat down. He would sit as long as he needed to.

He had just settled himself in to wait when Selina opened her eyes and smiled, her voice weak. “Hiya Bruce.”

Bruce sprang up. “Selina!” He exclaimed, reaching over to take her hand. “What happened?”

Her smile was as weak as her voice. Bruce could see the shadows under her eyes and her skin was deathly pale as if all the blood had been drained from her.

“It seems I did something monumentally stupid. I walked into a trap.” She chuckled followed by a grimace of pain.

“A trap? I don’t understand…” Bruce frowned down at her in concern.

Selina sighed. “I was on a job, a real easy job with the potential for a really big payout.”

She let out a small laugh until the pain stopped her, then she frowned at the expression on Bruce’s face. “Don’t be such a fuddie duddie Bruce, you know what I am.”

“I know, it's just…” He shook his head. “Nevermind, continue.”

A crooked smile touched her lips again. “Anyway, it was a trap set up by the Joker and Harley Quinn.”

All the blood rushed from Bruce’s face leaving him ghostly pale and feeling cold. “What? But why?”

“They said they wanted to hurt you, to hurt Batman…” Selina frowned at him. “What’s going on Bruce ignored her question with one of his own. “What did they do?”

She sighed. “It was a job to steal some diamonds from an office safe. I should have known it was too easy. Harley broke my knee cap, then Joker shot me.”

Bruce inhaled sharply. “What?”

“The Joker shot me,” Selina stated plainly while she stared at him. “He shot me as part of their revenge plan...your brother shot me.”

They were both quiet before Selina said again, “They said they wanted to hurt you, to hurt Batman...”

Bruce frowned, his eyes meeting hers, not sure what to say, but Selina whispered. “Dr. Elliot said there is a good chance I’m paralyzed. The bullet clipped my spine...”

Bruce swallowed. “Selina...”

Selina shook her head. “Don’t...I’m not planning on being in this damn bed more than I have to be. I just want to know why. I want to know what’s going on. Why do Jack and Harleen look the way they do? Why does he want revenge? Bruce...what is going on?”

Bruce opened his mouth than snapped it shut again, only to open it again, but this time he was saved from trying to answer by a familiar voice.

“Bruce Wayne? As I live and breathe.”

Bruce turned around to see a doctor entering the room, his eyes widening in surprise. “Tommy?”

Selina watched as Bruce stood and walked swiftly over to her doctor, taking the man’s hand, but the tall, red headed doctor yanked Bruce in for a hug instead. The two men embraced.

Tommy shook his head. “I’ve been meaning to get a hold of you since I’ve been back.”

Bruce took a step back, his hands on the doctor’s shoulders. “When did you get back into Gotham?”

“It’s only been a few months, though by the state of my apartment you would think I was still trying to move in.” Tommy Elliot laughed. “I’ve been working at Gotham General, putting in some time before starting my own cosmetic surgery business. Besides, I enjoy my work here, Pleasure in the job puts perfection in the work.”

Bruce smiled. “I still see you like to quote Aristotle. Well, it’s nice to know you’re back. When you left Gotham to travel I wasn’t sure if you would ever come back.”

Tommy laughed. “I think Gotham never completely gets its claws out of anyone. We all come back here in the end, for one reason or another. So, are you a friend of my patient Irena Dubrovna? Or something more?”

Selina growled. “Boys, I may be bedridden and on some heavy pain killers, but I’m still here, so don’t talk about me like I’m not here.”

Bruce turned around. “Sorry Se...Irena. Tommy--sorry--Thomas and I were friends as children. Our parents were friends, we practically grew up together.”
Selina gave a sick smile. “Oh, well, goodie.”

Tommy frowned. “I’m sorry Irena. How are you feeling?”

“They from the waist down, nothing,” she snarled.

Bruce frowned looking from her to his old friend. “So…”

“The bullet that hit her tore through her abdomen and nicked her spine. I did what I could, but it looks like there is the strong chance that’ll you will be paralyzed from the waist down.” Dr. Elliot sighed when he looked at Selina. “Now that’s not to say it’s permanent, Ms. Dubrovna. With advances in medicine, physical therapy…”

Bruce spoke up. “I’ll provide Irena with everything she needs. I’ll get the best…”

Selina cut him off. “Bruce, I appreciate you wanting to help, but…”

Tommy cut them both off. “Look, Irena has a long road ahead of her.” Tommy looked between them, addressing them both. “I think if Bruce wants to pay for treatments, get other doctors to look at you, I think you should consider it Irena.” He gave her a sympathetic look. “I know right now, this information, the acceptance of your injury is difficult, but…”

Selina sighed. “Look, I just want to sleep right now. We can talk about this again another time? Please.” She stressed the word, her gaze shooting between both men.

Tommy nodded. “Well, I came to see how you are doing…”

Selina gave him a sour look indicating that she was clearly not in the mood to talk about how she was doing.

He nodded turning his attention back to Bruce. “It was nice to see you again Bruce. We should get together soon, have dinner and catch up.”

Bruce smiled. “That would be great.”

Tommy gave a nod to Selina before he stepped out.

Selina sighed and was proud of keeping her eyeroll small. “Is there anyone you don’t know?”

Bruce shrugged and moved back to the side of her bed. “The Elliot home was close to Wayne Manor…”

They were both quiet again for a few long seconds when Selina took a deep breath. “Bruce, I don’t understand what is going on with your brother, with…the Joker…” She said the name as if it tasted odd on her tongue. “Or…Harley…but… I would be scared Bruce. They are coming for you and I may not be the only one they are after…” She reached out and laid her hand on his arm. “They want to hurt you, really hurt you.”

Bruce frowned as he took the seat by her bed and took her hand, holding it tightly.

*

Over the next few days, the fighting in Gotham between the now leaderless gangs had worsened. Entire sections of the city had become war zones. A rash of fires had broken out in the Bowery District driving people from their homes, businesses were destroyed, and a handful of deaths were related to the fires.
On the evening news, Caitlin Callahan stared at the screen trying to maintain her news perfect smile balanced with being serious as she reported the latest on the fighting.

“Six police officers are in critical condition tonight after attempting to arrest the arsonist believed to be responsible for the blazes in the Bowery District. It is believed these fires are related to the killing of several high-ranking members of Gotham’s crime families. The fires sparked a rash of violence throughout the city, including a shoot out in The Hill District that left two dead and a dozen injured.”

Carmine Falcone sat in the living room of his apartment that night watching the evening news. He narrowed his eyes at the television screen before he picked up the remote to turn the set off. He had been trying to make contact with the families, but hadn’t been able to connect with any of them. He had sent men out, but that had only ended up in shootouts. He had already lost several good men because of it. It was as if the families didn’t want to speak with him. It was as if they were avoiding him, which was troubling, though he tried not to dwell on it. There had been infighting before. As long as the Falcons came out on top, the others could kill each other for all he cared. His focus was on taking care of The Joker, that was all he really cared about at the moment. Once that menace was gone, then the rest—cleaning up Gotham, solidifying his control once more—would be easy. The Joker had made a fool of him and Falcone was determined to answer that with the Joker’s head on a spike.

On the other end of the couch, his daughter Sophia glared at him. She had arrived to tell him again that there had been no word from her brother Alberto for the last week or more. Carmine refused to believe that there was any trouble with Alberto. He was sure his youngest son, like his late elder brother, had vices that he would rather keep private. He would worry if Alberto didn’t show up in the next month, but until then he had told her that his attention needed to be on this quickly rolling out of control violence among the families. It wasn’t good for business and it wasn’t good for his control. Except Sophia knew that wasn’t where her father’s attention was; it was on the Joker.

Sophia snarled from her position on her father’s couch. “We need to find out who did this, who is trying to take you down Daddy.”

Carmine lit a cigar from where he sat. “No one can take me down Phia.”

Sophia frowned. “This has to be some sort of attempt Daddy. Why kill off the heads of all the families under you if not to sow chaos and dissension?”

Her father took a long drag on his cigar. He watched the smoke drift up from his lips, annoying his daughter before he answered. “Could simply be a coordinated effort to establish control in the families. Underlings getting annoyed with their positions; it’s not that unusual.”

“But all at once?” Sophia asked. “It seems strange and deliberate.”

For just a moment she considered whether this could be the Owls’ doing. She hadn’t forgotten about the visit she had received, conveying to her their displeasure with her father, and the undisguised message that they wanted her to do something about it—or they would--but the past week’s violence seemed too messy for them. Causing rampant violence in Gotham didn’t seem like their sort of strategy. Of course, she didn’t really know the Owls, but the stories had always been that they moved Gotham from the shadows. This, what was happening right now, was not from the shadows. This was chaotic, open, and deliberate. She had just opened her mouth to tell her father once more that they needed to get the situation under control when her father’s phone rang. While her father had a cell phone, he still liked to use a landline. The phone, an old fashion black rotary, had its own table by his chair. It’s first loud ring started Sophia.

Carmine put his cigar down in the ashtray at the corner of his desk and picked up the phone.
“Falcone.”

He listened to whoever was on the other end, his face going from ruddy with anger to pale as Sophia watched.

Her father finally spoke. “Are you sure?”

Whatever the voice on the other end of the line told her father, it was clear from the patriarch’s expression he wasn’t happy about. Her father hung up the phone and stared at his daughter.

“That was my contact in the force. He says there was a coat they found at the scene of the slaughter…”

Sophia didn’t need to ask which slaughter her father was referring to as he continued. “It seems they traced the owner of the coat to your brother Alberto.”

“What?” Sophia asked in confusion. “He was there?”

“Yes, it looks like he may have actually organized it,” Carmine said softly.

“Organized it? I don’t understand?” Sophia asked, but Carmine shook his head. “The cops’ working theory is that your brother was planning to overthrow me…”

“What?” Sophia stood up in shock. “Alberto would never!”

Carmine still seemed in shock himself when he spoke. His voice had a faraway quality, as if he wasn’t quite in the room with her. “All they found was the coat, a gunshot in the cloth, blood, but no body and information from one of the members of the Odessa family who said that their head had received a message from Alberto. He was the only other one who knew about it and he didn’t go to the meeting…”

Sophia shook her head. “I refuse to believe it. Something isn’t right here…”

Carmine frowned and shook his head. “You’re right. Your brother would never betray me!” He turned to his daughter. “Find your brother, get Tallyman. I want your brother here, now.”

Sophia nodded. Finally, her father was doing something.

*

Caitlin Callahan looked at the camera. Only someone who truly knew her could see the stress around her eyes as she reported the news that evening.

“In the last two weeks, gang violence had rocked Gotham like never before. There have been reports that in the last two weeks of at least twenty shootings with another six deaths and eight injuries associated with these shootings. Police have stated that they have transferred six more officers and six detectives to the Gotham Tactical Operations Division to help respond and investigate the shootings, using the model of their Gun Violence Response Team, formerly the Gang Violence Response Team in a hope to get this violence under control. There have been reports of looting in areas around Old Gotham…”

*

Jack leaned forward on the motorcycle, letting the cool evening air whip though his green hair, his blue eyes protected by a pair of motorcycle goggles. He grinned into the night as drove without a helmet, daring Gotham to try to take him out, to try to kill him again. He had survived once, he was sure he could survive whatever Gotham had in store for him. Tonight he was dressed unusually for him, wearing black jeans and a black henley under his jacket. He had several things strapped to the bike; a baseball bat for Harley, a tire iron (because one never knew), a bag of regular smoke bombs and a few flash grenades. That wasn’t counting what he carried under his jacket, the long hunting knife, or the two guns. It was always wise to be prepared, he had thought to himself while readying for the ride.

Harley was on the motorcycle behind him, her arms wrapped tight around his waist and enjoying the night air as well. She was dressed similarly, all in black, but her white blonde hair was braided in a crown with a few hairs lose to frame her face, her eyes protected by her own set of goggles. Jack smiled at the feel of her behind him, her arms snug around his waist. His lover, his wife, his security, the only person he needed, Harley Quinn. His smile increased a fraction as he pushed the bike to go faster.

They were going to a meeting with Jason, Frost, and Bane for a little recreational vandalism and murder. Their plan was to head into the part of the city controlled by The Triad and their associated gangs. The group hadn’t been participating in the gang violence occurring throughout Gotham, at least not on the same level as some of the others and Joker thought it would be fun to give them a little encouragement by attacking some of the buinesses in their area of the city, a little vandalism. One or two gang members murdered just might get them a little more involved. Besides, while that was part of the plan, to sit on the sidelines and watch the chaos in Gotham build, it was also a little boring. Jack needed something to do until it was time to attack and this was just what the doctor ordered, a little anarchy. Besides, if he was going to wear Batman down, everyone in Gotham needed to participate.

Jack smiled just a little broader thinking about Batma, about the next steps to tear Batsy down...

Jack had been paying close attention to Batman’s movements over the last two weeks. The news had reported on his appearances throughout Gotham as Batman tried to help the police get the gang violence under control. Batman would show up, sometimes with Robin, and sometimes not, to help evacuate burning buildings, or dropping in to subdue gang members who were shooting up blocks of the city. You name it, Batman was there trying to help, sometimes with his little sidekick, but sometimes alone. The violence in the city was progressing to the point that the news had even reported sightings of some of the other masked “heroes” who liked to skirt the edges of Gotham. There had been a report of Huntress being seen, which Jack was sure pissed off old Batman to no end. Batman was not a very good team player, Jack surmised. The only reason he had the little sidekick was because Jack was sure the boy ate up whatever bullshit Bruce fed him.

Jack made a sour face. That was what Bruce had always wanted. He hadn’t wanted a brother, he had wanted someone who worshiped him, a lapdog willing to do whatever Bruce wanted in order to please him. Jack frowned in thought. There was a point when they were growing up that Jack would have been that to his brother, a time in which Bruce could do no wrong.

Jack shook the thought out of his head and focused instead on his plans for breaking his brother by starting with the second thing that he was sure Bruce held dear--the little brat. First the kitty and next, the bird. Which meant things in the city needed to get worse. Much worse. Jack wanted Batman to be so tired, so overwhelmed that he divided himself, sending the kid to handle something on his own...

Jack smiled at his thoughts. By splitting Batman and Robin up, Batman was hobbling himself and putting Robin exactly where Joker wanted him, in his cross hairs. Jack smiled at the prospect. His brother was going to start making more mistakes as the constant violence continued. In turn, the more violence rocked the city, the busier Batman would be, and the busier Batman was, the more tired he became, the more mistakes he made, the easier it was going to be for the next step in their revenge plot.

But right now Jack wanted to do something else, something he hadn’t done in ages. He wasn’t exactly sure why he felt the need to drive out to Wayne Manor (the house was still under repairs because of the fire. No one living out there yet, but it wouldn’t be long now before Brucie could return to their childhood home, albeit remodeled.) This might be the only chance that Jack had to come out here alone. Jack’s frown turned into a scowl. He felt compelled to drive out to his old home and pay a visit to two people he hadn’t allowed himself to think about in a long time.

They arrived at the gate to Wayne Manor, locked with chains. Jack pulled up to the gate and turned off the bike. The dual headlights, set next to each other just below the handle bars, illuminated the lock and chain.

Harley frowned. “How we going to get in puddin?”

Jack slid off the bike, Harley following suit. He walked to the back of the bike where he had a black bag strapped and unzipped it. Inside were several toys, but he was after the crowbar. He pulled the metal bar out.

“Our skeleton key.” He held it up with a smile before he walked over and with a surprising amount of strength (though Harley knew where his increased strength had come from, just as hers had), he quickly broke the chairs. Jack pulled the gates open just enough to walk the bike through, with Harley following.

The estate was dark. A few lights on at the construction site provided scant illumination to reveal portions of the manor. From where they stood by the front gate, they could both see the scaffolding that covered the manor. Harley frowned staring in that direction. The house looked sad. It almost pained her to look at it, the ghost of Jack’s life before…

She jumped when Jack put his hand on her shoulder. “Come on Harls,” he said softly.

Harley nodded and turned, hurrying over to hop onto the bike behind Jack.

*

The Wayne Family cemetery was set a mile or more from the manor. Over the months since the manor had been unlivable, the grass had grown tall, making the cemetery look like a vast, unkempt field. There was a fence around this section of the estate with an arch, the name Wayne written in iron over the threshold that led into the cemetery.

Jack pulled up to the arch and stopped, turned off the bikes engine, though he left the light on. This section of the estate, like the rest of the uninhabited property, was dark. Harley could see the strange spooky shapes of trees in the darkness via the ambient light from a few stars that peaked out from behind the clouds overhead. A light breeze made the trees’ leaves rattle and the long grass swayed, creating a sound like whispering voices. It was faint, but it made her skin crawl. The shadows were accompanied by the silent, unmoving sentinels of the tombstones littered through the grass, their shapes darker shadows in the darkness.

Harley wrapped her arms around herself once she had stepped off the bike. She wasn’t cold, but like most people, a graveyard gave her the creeps, especially late at night with no lights.

Jack had stepped off the bike, but he was staring into the darkness of the cemetery.
“Jack?” Harley’s voice was small, almost lost in the darkness.

He shook himself and smiled at her, the light from the motorcycle’s headlights made his sharp, pale face look like a death mask. “Come on Harls--let’s go say hi to the parents.”

Jack walked over and took her hand. She could feel the heat of his skin through the black leather gloves he wore, transferring from him through her gloves to her.

Harley squeezed his hand and silently they stepped into the cemetery.

*

The two of them moved through the overgrown graveyard, both of them looking like ghosts in the darkness. The grass was thick and high, but the ground was soggy, their feet sinking and making sucking noises in the water saturated ground. The sensation gave Harley the shivers as she thought of coffins in wet graves, her foot bursting through and cracking through a water damaged casket. She made a face at the thought.

Jack didn’t need the light to know where he was going; he knew the way to his parents graves as well as he knew the back of his hand, as well as he had known the Wayne Manor’s many corridors. He didn’t need light to find the mausoleum where his parents lay.

In the middle of the cemetery that had been here since the first Wayne had died in Gotham, was a large marble mausoleum. Unlike the rest of the cemetery, someone had made sure to keep the area around the great marble monument clear of weeds and overgrown grass. Harley thought it strange, like someone was so obsessed with this one structure that they couldn’t see the other stones in the cemetery, or they didn’t care.

The mausoleum that dominated the middle of the cemetery was a classical design with Doric columns and a laurel wreath carved into the pediment. Though it was dark, Harley could see the carved friezes and cornices that continue the classical trend, reminding Harley of ancient Roman buildings, stately and cold, which made her wonder why mausoleums were nearly always based on ancient Roman design...Was it something to do with dead cultures or the hope that the underworld was a real place? She didn’t understand the fascination. There were small openings in the walls, darker shadows, indicative of Romanesque design and there were lions (at least that was what she assumed they were, it was hard to tell in the dark) flanking the columns and at the very top, engraved in large Roman style letters was the name Wayne for all to see.

The white marble structure looked ghost-like in the darkness, while the faint ambient light made the perspiration on the stone glitter. Jack had finally pulled a flashlight from the pocket of his jacket. He clicked in on and shone the light on the mausoleum, giving Harley a better view of the name engraved above the ornate doorway set in the stone, the stone lions, the columns. The place was cold, lacked warmth, as if there was a distance between the people entombed here and the people that mourned their loss. The entire thing made Harley uncomfortable. This was a monument of opulence rather than a place of fond remembrance.

Jack stood, unmoving, one hand in the front pocket of his jeans, the other held the flashlight steady on the structure in front of him. Jack stood on the steps of the mausoleum looking up at the family name. Harley couldn’t read his expression, as if his ghost white face was actually made of the same white marble. She saw no emotion in his blue eyes as he stared up at the building and the engraved name: WAYNE.

“Jack?” Harley asked in a soft voice. She reached out and laid her fingers against Jack’s shoulder.
Jack didn’t answer her or look at her, simply stared at the mausoleum for a long time. His red lips were a thin line, his blue eyes cold, his skin smooth and pale. Harley stepped back with a frown on her pale features. She wasn’t sure what to do, and felt trepidation at her husband’s behavior.

When finally he spoke, Harley jumped. “When they were first buried, there were only a couple of headstones in this spot. I remember them because I would come out here every chance I got. I would play on their graves, talk to them, spend time with them. I felt closer to them. They were simple headstones with their names and photos embedded in the marble. But when Bruce got older, he wanted something more elaborate. He wanted a monument to them, something large and grand. I was against it, hated the idea. I felt it would take them away from me.”

Jack turned to look at Harley. Some of his now permanently green hair had fallen across his forehead. There was so much pain in his gaze when he turned to speak to her, she felt her breath catch.

“I felt like Bruce was placing them beyond my reach. We fought about it. Nothing happened for years, but then one day...this was here.” Jack turned to look at the monument to his parents’ death. “Bruce hadn’t asked me again, hadn’t said a word to me. He just fucking built it. Only Alfred had known, but Bruce had ordered him to say nothing because of my instability. Besides...” Jack let out a humorless laugh. “I hadn’t been out here in ages, I wouldn’t even notice, he probably thought...until I did.”

Harley stepped closer and put her arm though Jack’s. He closed his eyes and Harley tightened her hold on his arm leaning her head against his shoulder.

Jack’s voice grew quiet. “This...” he gestured with the flashlight. “Is just one of the many ways Bruce has tried to pretend I don’t matter. His connection with our parents was always more important than mine.” Jack frowned glaring at the tomb. “He was their first, he would always be the first Wayne born to Thomas and Martha. I was always the mistake.” Jack’s voice was tense. “I wanted to come out here and tell them what I’m going to do. Tell good ol’ mom and dad that their little boy was going to destroy Gotham, but you know Harley? I think I have an even better idea.”

He broke free of her and started to run back the way they had come. “Puddin?” Harley started to follow, but he yelled back. “Stay there! I’ll be right back!”

Harley wrapped her arms around herself as darkness fell over her, leaving her alone in the dark next to the tomb of the people who might have been her in-laws if Gotham hadn’t been as cruel as it was...

A few seconds later she heard Jack coming back, the light from his flashlight bobbed in front of him. When he came back into view Harley saw he had one of the bags he had strapped to the motorcycle with him. She frowned in confusion as Jack set the bag down and began rummaging through it.

“Puddin?” Harley asked, but then Joker looked up at her holding a bundle of dynamite. Harley gasped when she saw the explosives. “Puddin? Why do you have dy...”

But Joker was on his feet, having pulled out several rolls of silver duct tape. He was giggling as he raced up to the mausoleum.

“Come on Harley. Help me!” He continued to giggle, motioning her over.

Harley frowned, but she hurried over to stand beside her husband. Joker shoved some of the dynamite into her hands along with a roll of tape. “Tape these around the building,” he said with a giggle.
Harley frowned looking at the dynamite that he was taping to the door of the tomb, then the dynamite in her hands. “Puddin, are you sure you want to do this?”

Joker laughed. “Well I hadn’t come out here with this intention, but you know sweets, it’s a great idea! I hate this thing. I’ve always hated it and what better way to give a punch in the tenders to that dolt Batman than to hurt something he loves...his dead fucking parents.” Joker tittered, taping more dynamite to the marble walls.

Harley’s voice was soft as she replied. “But puddin, they’re your parents too.”

Joker stopped with a piece of tape in one hand, the other against the cold marble wall of the mausoleum. He didn’t say anything for several minutes before he turned to look over at her. His eyes were sad, so sad that it caused a spike of pain in Harley’s chest.

“They haven’t been mine in a really long time sweets. I sometimes wonder if they ever really were my parents too...they’ve always been Bruce’s parents. Bruce Wayne lost his parents to violence, Bruce Wayne built buildings and created charities in their name...Bruce Wayne, the tragic hero of the story…”

Jack chuckled glancing sideways at Harley, and the pain in his blue eyes was vivid. “What have I ever done in their name Harley? Nothing except be the crazy son, the one who couldn’t hold it together, the burden that poor old Brucie had to bear...I’m a shadow Harley, the son that doesn’t exist.”

Harley could see the tears in Jack’s eyes as he stared at the tomb and spoke more to his dead parents than to her. “And as far as Gotham, as far as Bruce is concerned, I’m dead...I died...they don’t even know or care how, but at least poor Bruce Wayne doesn’t have the burden of his crazy brother anymore, tarnishing the Wayne name.” He glared at the monument to his family. “These aren’t my parents Harls...I don’t think they ever were...They were always the parents of Bruce Wayne, the dead parents of Bruce Wayne.” His voice became a whisper. “I’m just a shadow…an afterthought…” He frowned looking both sad, confused, and hurt. Tears began to rumble down his cheeks, but he continued to taped the dynamite to the walls.

Harley wanted to say more, wanted to do more for him. She understood on some level how he felt. She had become a ghost in her family as well; there, real, but unwanted, unloved...and forgotten. Harley didn’t say anything. She didn’t really have anything to say that would make him feel better. Instead she leaned over and kissed his cheek. Joker smiled at her, reaching out to quickly grab her chin in his long, strong fingers; he kissed her more thoroughly, taking the time to enjoy the feel of her warm lips, the slide of her wet tongue against his, the scent of her, so close to him, chasing away all the evil thoughts that bounced around his mind. Harley made him real, she gave him purpose, she filled in the spaces left hollow and bare by his family, by his brother. She completed him, healed him in a way no one else could. Joker stepped closer to her, his heart, his soul, his other half, the only thing in Gotham worth saving was Harley. She was the only person, his only reason for living...well, he thought, that and hurting his brother.

They stood together, both holding dynamite, kissing, two lonely souls having found one another in the darkness.

Harley made a small, soft noise, her free arm going around his waist to pull him closer as her lips moved over his mouth, her tongue diving deep between his lips. Her fingers balled into a fist against his back, hanging onto his jacket as if she were afraid of being blown away from him. He was her anchor, her life, her breath, her everything. When the world made no sense, her puddin was there to hold her regardless of the chaos around her. He wasn’t a shadow to her, he was the sun, the moon—he was her world.
After a few tense seconds of them kissing, Joker pulled away, his cool fingers still held her chin. He gazed into her eyes with a smile on his lips.

“I love you, only you Harley...only you,” he said softly before he stepped back.

Harley watched him as he quickly linked the sticks of dynamite until there was one cord. He dropped the cord; it wasn’t very long and once he lit it, the explosion wasn’t going to take very long.

He pulled out a lighter from the inside of his jacket, a grin on his lips as he held it up.

“Get ready to run.” He warned with a laugh.

Harley frowned. “Puddin, that isn’t a very long fuse.”

Joker chuckled. “Then we better run fast!”

He leaned in and lit the fuse, turning at the same time. He grabbed Harley’s hand and with a laugh he ran, pulling her along with him. They only made it halfway when the first of the dynamite exploded.

There was a loud booming sound, Harley let out a startled scream, but Joker never let go of her hand. Instead, he ducked, laughing the entire time as a few splintered pieces of marble came flying past them.

Harley burst out laughing with Joker as two more explosions occurred, then another and another. The two of them ran and dodged as more explosions rocked the small cemetery until they arrived at the archway, skidding to a stop in the wet grass. They both turned, still holding hands to watch as the remaining explosions lit up the night sky. The explosions were followed by the burning of the mausoleum, a bright, beautiful fire that burned brightly, lighting up the night sky. The fire slowly began to spread to the overgrown grass, superheated by the initial blast of fire, but petered out a few yards from the core of the explosions; the grass too wet from spring rains to really catch fire.

Joker’s smile was wide and he laughed. The laugh started low in his chest then slowly rose, bubbling out until he was in tears from laughing so hard.

Harley giggled, but she kept looking around wondering if anyone heard the sound and would call the police. Of course, with the way Gotham was right now, entrenched in the throes of a gang war, she wasn’t sure someone could bother to come out to an estate where no one was currently living, even if the owner was Bruce Wayne. Besides, the estate was large enough that any neighbors were quite some distance away.

Joker was still laughing watching the remains of his parents’ tomb burn. Harley stepped closer catching his face between her hands.

“Puddin?” She searched his face, saw the traces of Jack were becoming fleeting. She wondered if there would be anything of Jack left, but just as swiftly as the thought occurred to her, she dismissed it. Like her and Harleen, Jack was always a part of Joker...and the four of them were always together, intertwined so deeply that neither could function without the other.

Joker grinned back at her, his blue eyes danced with mischief and madness. He grabbed her around her waist and pulled her closer, kissed her, a kiss that was almost punishing, slightly painful and demanding. Harley responded, wrapping her arms around him and returned his kiss with equal fervor. Joker growled, his hands moving under her shirt, stroking her bare skin with a desperation. He needed her, she was the only person who loved him, who had always accepted him as he was, who didn’t expect him to be anything but who he was...Harley...he had finally cut the last string of destiny that tied him to Bruce, to the Wayne family name, and now his string was wrapped tight.
around Harley.

Joker growled again, his voice rough. “Harley, my Harley...you’re my everything Harley...only you...live together, die together...”

Harley blinked back tears as she stroked Joker’s face, gazing into his eyes. “I love you puddin, only us...no one else in the world but the two of us...only the two of us puddin...I go where you go...I’ll be by your side until I die puddin.”

Joker kissed her again, his kiss hard and demanding, wanton. He needed her, no matter what else happened, he needed her with him, his girl. His hands moved over her, grasping her breasts, squeezing, finding her nipples through the cloth, pinching, squeezing until Harley gasped.

Harley clung to him, returning his kiss with as much desperation and eagerness for him as her husband felt for her. She couldn’t live without him, wouldn’t live without him. Her hands moved down from his hair to drag her fingers down the front of his shirt before she yanked his shirt up and ran her hands over him, her fingers spread wide to touch his skin, to feel the play of muscles under the pale satin smooth texture of his skin. Heat raced through her, burning and fast, she needed him now, the ache was all consuming.

Joker’s lips moved down from her mouth to skate along her throat. He squeezed her breasts again, his thumbs brushing over her hard nipples before he released her and spun Harley around to wrap his arms around her waist, pressing her body against him. He ground the mound of his erection against her backside, pressing into the round softness of her while nuzzling her throat. Harley panted, arching her back while thrusting her rear against him. She felt like a fire was burning inside her, threatening to consume her if he didn’t take her, and right now. She needed to feel him inside her, for the ache in her groin was growing.

Joker growled in the back of his throat feeling that intense heat of her rubbing her rear against him. He wanted to thrust into her, needed to or the need would consume him. He walked her toward the motorcycle. Harley pressed herself back against him, reaching back to run her hands through his hair until they were at the bike. He bent her forward reaching around to unfasten her jeans, pulling them down past her hips.

Harley grabbed the seat of the motorcycle and held on. She moaned when she felt the heat of his bare skin against her rear. She arched her back as he grabbed her hips to yank her close. Joker rubbed the head of his erection against her, made his wife hiss with want, and spread her legs as much as her jeans would allow. Joker pressed close, felt her wet and ready for him, and slid into her, burying himself deep inside her.

They moaned together.

Joker gripped her hips, but when Harley reached back he grabbed her wrist, pulling her arm up and pinned it against her back. Harley arched, inhaled sharply with pleasure that burned in her.

She arched her back as he thrust into her, moving hard and fast.

Joker groaned and looked down at Harley’s back. The fire’s light danced across her pearl white skin, as he watched his erection disappear inside her, enjoyed the loud, wet sound of their fucking, the smack of their flesh coming together, the sweet sounds of pleasure she made each time he slammed into her. His hand around her wrist tightened, his hand on her hip gripped her soft skin knowing he was going to leave bruises behind.

Joker growled. “Uuhh...Harley…”
Harley whimpered and gasped. “Oh puddin...yes...harder...”

Joker smiled, his red lips spread across his face showing off his white teeth in the fire’s light. He tightened his grip on her and thrust hard, fast, slamming into her, giving himself over to his desire to be one with her. Harley screamed out her pleasure as her climax rocked through her, hard and swift, bursting through every part of her body in a hot and cold, dizzying rush. Her eyes rolled as she moaned, and she orgasmed again so swiftly it was almost pleasurably painful. She wobbled a little, gasping his name. “Puddin...Jack...Joker...”

Joker hissed, his own pleasure was building hot and fast, his body ached to release, but at the same time he didn’t want to stop, he wanted to bury himself in her, to stay inside her...his girl. Harley cried out again and her body tightened around him. His groan turned into a cry as his climax hit him fast, flooding her with everything he had. He let her arm go to grip her hips with both hands, leaning over her as he emptied himself into her, his knees growing weak.

Harley whimpered and her breath was ragged. She held onto the motorcycle for support. Joker wrapped his arms around her, laying his cheek against her hair. He panted, gasped for breath; they both did, staying still while the fire crackled behind them.

Joker whispered. “I love you Harley, I’m yours forever pumpkin.”

Harley closed her eyes, a smile on her lips. “I’m always yours puddin...my Joker...cross my heart and hope to die.”

Joker laughed licking her ear before he whispered. “Cross my heart and hope to die Harley.”

Chinatown was located near the Dixon docks and close to the upper west side. The Triad and all the Chinese gangs under them all worked with Falcone, not for Falcone. They prided themselves on that point. It had always been a tenuous partnership, but as long as Falcone had treated them well, the gangs had been content. Now with the head of the Triad dead, Alberto Falcone having disappeared--along with his promise of changes--everything had fallen into chaos. Carmine had tried to reach out to speak with Dai Lo, but Dai Lo, the head of the Lucky Dragon gang had stepped up, trying to bring the rest of the Chinese gangs under him. The others, however, were not taking to this new change in leadership...at least not yet.

Because of the chaos in Chinatown, a few of Gotham’s minor gangs had been trying to edge in and take some of territory for themselves, as in the case of the Lords of the Avenue gang.

The conflict between the two groups had resulted in some minor skirmishes, some fires, but nothing that the Gotham city police couldn’t handle...Until tonight.

Joker, with Harley riding behind him pulled down an alley near Chong’s Tea House. Jason pulled up beside him, and behind the two motorcycles was a van that held Bane and Frost who was behind the wheel.

Joker smiled glancing sideways to Jason who had his helmet on, hiding the young man’s face from view. “You ready?”

Jason nodded and Joker could sense the young man’s smile more than see it.

Joker chuckled. “Good. I want no building left untouched. If you don’t set it on fire or blow it up, I want it spray painted with the tags of rival gangs. I want this place in chaos, I want them to think they are being attacked on all sides by enemies they know, but can’t see. And I want Batman swooping in to try and save the day.”

Jason’s voice sounded a little hollow from inside the red helmet. “What if he comes along?”

Joker smiled and shrugged. “Then we leave and do this over again in another part of Gotham. At some point he’ll be in over his head and need the Boy Wonder with him. I’ve been paying attention to the news; he’s been all over Gotham since this started, and it has to be wearing on him. I’m willing to bet money he shows up with a bird in tow, so be ready.”

Jason nodded.

Joker smiled. “Good, now go.”

Jason revved his motorcycle and took off. Joker and Harley both turned as one to look over at the van behind them. Joker gave a hand signal.

Bane exited the van, he hit something on his personal equipment, and within seconds a bright green fluid began to pulse through his veins. They both watched with grins of delight as Bane’s size multiplied.

Bane pulled his mask over his face, stepped away from the van and stretched his arms before he roared.

Harley and Joker both squealed with excitement.

Joker yelled. “Go get ‘em, big boy!”

Bane roared again before he took off, eager to cause some destruction.

Frost stayed behind the wheel of the van, though Joker and Harley could both see him in the windshield of the van. His face was grim, but Frost gave them a quick nod letting them both know he knew his part in the plan.

Joker grinned and revved his motorcycle’s engine. “Ready for some fun Harley?”

Harley giggled, pulling the bag that held their grenades and the remainder of their dynamite ready. “I’m ready puddin.”

Joker chuckled. “Let’s go see if we can’t attract a Bat and his little bird.”

* * *

“This is Arturo Rodriguez reporting live from Chinatown. Reports coming in right now claim that there have been two deaths, and at least another seven injured tonight. Entire streets are currently burning and there have been reports of explosions. At this time, it is unclear who is behind the sudden violence here, though reports have mentioned gang tags, though there has been no confirmation from the authorities.” Rodriguez started to say something else when he stopped and placed a finger against the earbud in his ear that connected him to another reporter for his news station, a young woman who was working as his assistant. She mostly did detail gathering for his reports. Her voice came over his earbud. Rodriguez looked at his cameraman, then the camera. “I’ve just received a report of a possible hostage situation. A busload of people is being held by members of the…”
Batman landed on a nearby building, Robin beside him a heartbeat later. They could both see the fires below when their building and other nearby were rattled by an explosion.

Robin gulped. “Shit!”

Batman hissed with no real heat in his voice. “Language, Robin.”

“Sorry sir,” Robin replied, but he frowned looking over Chinatown. Batman watched the young man’s profile. He could see Dick was tired; they were both tired. They had been running around Gotham from almost the moment the sun set. There had been shootings, looting, fighting all over Gotham. Each night seemed worse than the night before. Batman was sure that everything would be coming to a head soon--this couldn’t keep going. He was actually surprised and disappointed that Carmine Falcone hadn’t tried to step up and bring an end to the fighting, not that he supported the crime lord, but Falcone had a way of keeping the peace...And that meant that something wasn’t right. After finding evidence that Alberto Falcone had been at the massacre of the gang lords, the police had a working theory that Alberto had been plotting behind his father’s back and that Carmine had found out...but there had been no body for Alberto. Batman didn’t think the theory made sense. From what he knew about Alberto Falcone, the young man didn’t have the will or the means to plot against his father. Something didn’t add up, but with everything going on in Gotham, he hadn’t had time to really look into Alberto Falcone.

Another subject that bothered Batman was that his brother had been quiet during all of this. He knew Jack--Joker--was out there somewhere, but he hadn’t seen or heard anything about his brother in weeks, not since his attack on Selina, and that worried him, deeply. The attack on Selina had been a deliberate trap. Selina was convinced that Joker was after him, but he had heard nothing, seen nothing...it unnerved him.

Batman’s thoughts were disturbed when Robin said in shock. “This is the worst yet Batman.”

The caped crusader nodded. “Agreed. It’s concentrated in this area…” Batman tilted his head as Barbara’s voice came over the radio in his cowl. “Batman, you might want to hear this…”

She switched the radio over, Batman could hear Arturo Rodriguez reporting. “The bus contains tourists who became trapped when the fighting began. It’s not clear why the bus was here in Chinatown at this late hour…”

Batman hissed, turning his attention to Robin who was listening intently. “We have a hostage situation…” He was about to add more when Barbara interrupted him. “Batman...I just picked up a call from the fire department--there’s a fire out at Wayne Manor!

“What?” Batman stood up straight, his brow furrowed. An image of Joker rose up in his thoughts, though with Gotham City right now, anything was possible.

Barbara sounded slightly distracted. “I don’t know how I missed it...yeah, someone reported a fire. They have it contained, though it wasn’t the manor. Strange...it was in the cemetery....” her voice took on that distant quality that meant she was reading something, he could hear her mumbling as she read over details before she spoke more clearly. “The Wayne family mausoleum was destroyed.”

“What?” Batman shouted before he brought himself under control. “Destroyed--what are you talking about?”

Barbara sounded upset and unsure as she said softly. “They are reporting that it looks like someone might have purposely...they aren’t sure but it looks like someone used dynamite...and it’s...it’s gone. They have an ambulance out there...they found the remains of bodies…”

Batman paled...the bodies of his parents...ripped apart by an explosion? But why? By who? Surely even Jack wouldn’t...

Batman shook his head. He didn’t have time for this. “Tell me what we know about the hostages.”

Barbara was quiet for a moment as if the switch in subject threw her off, but she quickly recovered. “They don’t know yet,’s but they said there are at least two gunmen around a tour bus and one of the officers reported seeing people inside...someone reported seeing a monster ma..” That was when there was an explosion followed by several screams. Batman and Robin’s heads both whipped around to see an apartment building enveloped in flames. The screams were coming from that direction.

Batman snarled, turning to Robin. “Go to see what you can to do help at the apartment building. I’ll go help with the hostages.”

Robin nodded. “On it Batman.”

The young man took off, leaping off the building as if gravity was nothing to worry about it. Batman watched for a moment for the young man to reappear, which he did, swining through the night toward the burning building. Despite everything, he was proud of Dick. The young man had a good heart and someday, if that day ever came, Batman knew he could leave the cowl of Batman to him, but that day wasn’t today. Batman launched himself into the night toward the hostages that needed his help.

*

Robin landed in a run on the asphalt, sprinting toward the building. He heard the sound of a young woman’s scream. Robin cursed to himself as he ran toward the building, stopping when he hit the stairs that led up to the front doors. The building looked to be engulfed, and he was surprised anyone was still alive inside, but he heard the scream again.

“I’M COMING!! HOLD ON!” Robin yelled taking a step back to look around.

He thought he saw movement in a window on the third floor, that was when he heard another scream. “HELP ME!!” It was definitely a woman, he decided.

Robin took several steps back and pulled out his grappling hook again. He aimed for the third floor window that looked clear enough for him to get through. The hook grabbed the edge, within a second the wire snapped taut, the mechanism yanking the young man up to the window. He turned his body, hitting the window with his shoulder and burst into the room. He hit the floor and rolled to his feet with a yell on his lips.

“WHERE ARE YOU? I’M HERE!! TELL ME WHERE YOU ARE!!”

He heard another scream and a young woman’s voice yell. “IN HERE!! HURRY PLEASE!!”

The room where Robin had entered the building was burning. The heat was nearly unbearabale, sweat was already running down his face, but the fire was still on the edges of the room slowly working its way inward. He rushed through the room’s door out into a hall that was engulfed in fire that was working its way up the walls. Robin heard the scream and ran down the hall toward a door that was untouched by the fire. They only had moments to get out of here, if they were lucky.
He kicked the door open and rushed into the room only to stop short at the sight waiting for him.

There was a large man in a luchador mask—bigger than any man Robin had ever seen—with green, glowing veins under his skin. In front of the large, masked man were two people he did recognize, both dressed in black. But the green hair, the tall, slender figure, bright blue eyes, a grinning red smile that made his blood turn to ice with the perfect white teeth, his arms folded over his chest told Robin exactly who the man was, The Joker. Next to him stood a beautiful woman, shapely, just as ghostly pale as the Joker with white blonde hair, her smile though was just as cold, and just was frightening.

Joker chuckled. “Well lookie what we have here Harley, a little birdie just flew in our window.”

Harley giggled. “He did puddin!”

Joker grinned at Robin and laid his arm around Harley’s waist as he said happily. “Bane, be a dear and fetch the bird for me.”

Robin spun around for the exit, but Bane, despite his size was faster.

Bane grabbed Robin, lifting the boy off his feet. Robin twisted around in Bane’s grasp, kicking out, his foot landing solidly against Bane’s chest, but the massive man gave no indication that the attack had affected him. Robin followed the kick with a punch that landed on Bane’s face, but it was like throwing his fist against a solid wall; the impact hurt him more than it had Bane. Bane’s head didn’t even move with the impact, but the big man snarled and before Robin could react to defend himself, Bane’s fist connected with his face, blooodying the young man’s nose, and knocking Robin out cold. The young man slumped in Bane’s grasp.

Joker and Harley strolled over while Joker laughed. “Oh careful there Bane dear, we have some plans for him.”

Harley nodded. “Yep, birdbrained plans.”

Joker laughed giving her a kiss on the cheek before surveying their surroundings. “Well, I suppose we should get out of here while the getting’s good. I don’t think this building is going to stand much longer.” He smiled, heading toward the door, following Bane, who had tucked Robin under one huge arm. “I do so hope Batsy is having fun.”

Harley nodded as they strolled toward the door, neither of them looking the least bit worried about the burning building around them.

“Let’s go home puddin,” Harley said cheerfully.

Joker nodded. “Home it is.”
Caitlin Callahan stared into the camera from behind her news desk the following morning as she delivered the news. Her expression verged on sad, that strange fake expression of sympathy so many news anchors were practiced at projecting, yet she had seriousness in her gaze. She struggled to keep her expression balanced and neutral. Callahan was here to deliver the news, not interject her opinions into the coverage.

“In breaking local Gotham news, with Batman's help, the hostage situation in Chinatown was resolved with no injuries. The hostages were all transferred to Gotham General for observation and released just this morning with no physical injuries. There were no arrests and no idea who had taken the bus hostage. It was discovered later than the bombs that had been rigged to the bus were in fact dummy bombs. Since there was no ransom request, no threats issued, the only clue that local authorities have is a description from the hostages of a very large man wearing a mask and stopping the bus while several other assailants, all masked, installed the bombs.” Callahan turned, switching to another camera as she switched stories. “There were also two arrests made last night in connection to a gang shootout in Chinatown. Also in Chinatown last night, several fires broke out in surrounding buildings, all caused by explosions. There is no word on a possible connection between the arson and the hostages at this time…”

Bruce sat in a wingback chair wearing simple black pajama pants and a white t-shirt, though he had yet to sleep as he stared at the screen. He felt exposed, as if someone had opened his chest and left his heart vulnerable. It had been hours before he had noticed that Dick had never returned or checked in. He had tried to radio the young man, but received no response. Bruce had called Barbara to ask her to track Dick. Bruce had installed a tracking device in Robin’s belt, a safety measure in case something like this happened, but...nothing. The device hadn’t activated...he had nothing. Bruce had no idea if the young man was hurt, missing, taken...it was as if Dick Grayson had simply vanished.

“Master Bruce, your tea is getting cold.”

Bruce’s head snapped up to see Alfred standing by the corner of the chair where Bruce sat staring at the television screen. Bruce relaxed. Having Alfred back was like having a part of his exposed heart healed, if only slightly.

Bruce shook himself and reached for the cup of tea that sat on the table beside him; it was lukewarm at best.

“Sorry Alfred, I just...where could he be?” Bruce picked his tea up, but didn’t drink it.

Alfred frowned. “I’m sure he is all right Master Bruce. You have trained him well, he is resourceful, and young. It isn’t like Master Dick to not communicate like this. Perhaps he is still working, caught up in helping with all the chaos…” Alfred frowned. His words were flat and hollow even to his ear. It was clear something was wrong with Dick. The young man would never have made Bruce, or any of them worry like this.

Bruce sighed before he stood and walked over with the tea to where Barbara sat, her fingers moving at a frenzied pace over the keys of the computer she utilized. Bruce had stayed at the site as long as he could, looking for any clue to Dick’s whereabouts. He had searched the building where he had initially sent the young man, but the fire had destroyed the building leaving little more than rubble. He had had to leave when the sun had come up, allowing the firemen and police of Gotham to get to their work.
Bruce stopped behind Barbara’s chair. He saw her screen flashed with information and images. She had been at it for hours, looking thorough traffic cams, police cameras, scouring radio signals and messages, trying anything she could to find some evidence of where Dick had disappeared, if he had been taken, if he had been hurt—anything.

“Barbara?” Bruce asked wearily.

Barbara stopped, let out a sigh before she spun her chair around and looked up at Bruce.

She shook her head. “Nothing. I’m sorry Bruce, but it’s as if he vanished into thin air. If someone took him, they covered their tracks really well, they knew where the cameras were and how to use them. It’s like with the bus— whoever stopped the bus and rigged it with those fake bombs knew what they were doing. I would swear they had to have a hacker or someone like that working with them to pull this off. I have images from the bus stopping, but after that…” She shrugged. “Nothing.”

Bruce decided to change topics. “Anything about my parents’ graves?”

Barbara sighed. “Not much. The police sent someone out there this morning. The report said there was evidence of dynamite and it looked like someone had come in on a motorcycle, but there was no break in, and with no security footage except at the site of the mansion, there really isn’t anything to go on. I’m sorry Bruce.” Barbara frowned before she turned back around to her computer.

Bruce sighed and muttered. “It had to be him, Jack…Joker.”

Alfred frowned. “Master Bruce, I…”

Bruce shook his head to stop Alfred from speaking further. “Who else would it be Alfred? Jack hasn’t just cut ties with me, this is him cutting ties with the Wayne name. That isn’t Jack running around out there…” Bruce pointed toward the apartment window, thrusting his finger at the skyline of Gotham visible through the window. “He’s cut ties with everything. That isn’t Jack anymore Alfred, that is a ruthless, insane criminal calling himself the Joker and the Joker has no conscience, no love, no honor, nothing. He is about murder and power and madness. The sooner you accept the fact that the Jack we knew is well and truly dead, the sooner we can bury him and move on.”

Alfred frowned. “Bruce, you don’t really mean that.”

Bruce narrowed his eyes at Alfred, his voice cold. “I do Alfred. I do mean it. My brother is dead. He died that night our parents were killed. The person that was left behind was hollow and broken—it just took a few years before he realized Jack was dead too and became what he is now, the Joker. I no longer have a brother.”

Bruce turned and stalked out of the room.

Alfred looked pale and felt weak. He and Barbara exchanged a look before Barbara said, “I ah, never met Jack…but…” She pressed her lips together, not sure what she was asking.

Alfred sighed. “Jack was troubled after their parents’ murder. He never recovered, just like Bruce really, but where Bruce focused on his crusade, Jack slowly crumbled.” Alfred glanced in the direction that Bruce had stormed off in. “I don’t think Bruce ever knew what to do with Jack, how to handle him. He wasn’t ready for the responsibility of a little brother who desperately needed him. I did what I could, but I wasn’t a replacement for their parents, or each other.” Alfred turned back to face Barbara. “They are both broken men. I’m not sure how much of what Jack has become is what he always was, or what his relationship with Bruce pushed him toward.” He shrugged. “I don’t think I’ll ever know the hows or whys, but no, I don’t think Jack is dead. I think Jack is inside the Joker, still scared…”

*

Bruce decided to make his way to the gym. There was nothing like bleeding off his anger by punishing his body.

Bruce grabbed some weight and began working his arms, building up a sweat in a short time as he punished himself with pushing his body. He was angrier than he had ever recalled being, maybe more angry than the slow fury that settled in him after his parents’ murder. This was not just anger, but what he felt bordered on a cold fury. Joker had hurt Selina, paralyzed her, his parents’ tomb lay desecrated and destroyed, and now Dick was missing. He knew they were all connected to the man who used to be his little brother. He didn’t know what Joker wanted, except to hurt him. Maybe that was all this was, Joker with Jack’s knowledge, hurting Bruce, hurting Batman, any way he could. A small trickle of cold ran up his spine. What would Joker want with Dick Grayson? Was it a simple kidnapping or had something else happened to the young man?

Bruce ground his teeth and began adding squats. If it was kidnapping, where was the ransom, where were the demands?

Bruce hissed in anger when his phone rang. He dropped the weights, the metal slammed to the floor with a loud bang as he walked softly over and picked up his phone. He blinked in surprise at the name that appeared. Talia.

Bruce hit the button. “Talia?”

“Hello Bruce,” Talia’s smooth and accented voice came over the line. “How are you?”

Bruce turned to put his back against the wall and slid down to the floor. “Are you coming back to Gotham?”

“Yes. My plane is arriving this evening. I...I need to see you. It’s important. It’s about my father and someone I need you to meet.” Talia sounded upset, her voice strained.

“I can pick you up…” Bruce started to say, but Talia cut him off.

“No, meet me at Gotham’s Wayne-Cobblepot Botanical Gardens. Remember our date there?”

Bruce smiled as a memory resurfaced. He did remember that date. It was one of those few nearly perfect days…

“Yes, I remember,” Bruce said in a quiet tone.

He could hear the smile in her voice. “Meet me there Bruce, around midnight.”

Bruce nodded. “I’ll be there.”

Bruce grimaced. Talia was in town with information about her father, Ra’s al Ghul. The man was an international business man, hadn’t been pleased about the young Bruce Wayne being with his daughter, but then, almost overnight al Ghul had changed his mind. Bruce had never understood why Talia had been tight lipped about it, but then life had gotten in the way forcing her back home. Bruce frowned, thinking about Selina in the hospital and now Talia was arriving. Robin was missing and he couldn’t shake the notion that the young man was possibly held by his brother. What more could happen? He shook his head. He probably should not ask that question.
Later that night, somewhere on the grounds of an abandoned amusement park, Dick came back to consciousness. His head felt heavy and he could taste old blood in his mouth. It took the young man a few seconds to realize he was sitting in a chair, his arms bound behind his back with what felt like a zip tie; his ankles were bound to the legs of the chair too. He was still in his Robin outfit, the mask he wore over his eyes was still in place too.

Dick squeezed his eyes open and shut, trying to clear his vision. There was a single light on him, like a spotlight, bright enough in his eyes to leave the rest of the room in shadow so that he couldn’t see anything beyond the pool of yellow light. What he could pick up about the room was that the floor was concrete, grey, but with what looked to be the remains of color, as if it had once been painted, but he couldn’t determine the color. He noted a smell of dust, mildew and...cotton candy? His nose itched from the scent, which he realized was still mixed with the scent of smoke from the burning building he had been looking for that person who needed...help. Dick’s memory came back in a flood, the Joker, Harley Quinn, the others with them...

“Oh lookie there Harls, our guest is awake.”

“He sure is puddin.”

Dick looked toward the sound of the voices and watched as Joker, with Harley Quinn on his arm stepped forward into the light.

Joker smiled, his lips a perfect slash of red across his ghost white face, his blue eyes electric, startling and his green hair was slicked back from his face. Dick had to admit, even in his current state the man who had once been Jack Wayne was a handsome man despite his coloring. Joker was also dressed well. The suit was tailored to his tall slender figure. The suit was black, all black, with a black vest, shirt, jacket, even his shoes, perfectly pointed oxfords, were black. Joker even wore black leather gloves. The only color was the tie Joker wore, red, like blood, like a bloody slash down the Joker’s chest. Dick was so focused on Joker’s clothing that he almost missed the tire iron the clown carried over his shoulder. His head still felt fuzzy.

Harley Quinn, who had her arms wrapped around one of the Joker’s arms, was also dressed in a black suit with her own vest and black, tailored short jacket. Instead of oxfords, she wore a pair of wickedly sharp heeled red shoes and instead of a tie, she wore a red blouse underneath her black jacket. This close, Dick could see she was a beautiful woman. Her white blonde hair hung in low pigtails; the white thick locks fell in soft waves across her shoulders like snow. Her lips were just as red as Joker’s and her smile was just as beautiful, and just as sinister. She carried a baseball bat with her that she rested over her other shoulder. The two of them walked into the light looking like two well dressed ghosts, hungry and vicious ghosts.

Dick watched them and felt a knot of cold fear that cleared his mind right away.

Joker smiled, showing off his perfect white teeth as he stopped in front of the young man.

“Now, little Robin--it is Robin isn’t it?” Joker grinned. “The first thing I want to make very clear is this...” He motioned at the room with the crowbar, then back at Dick. “...you, my dear boy, are not the cause of what is about to happen. This has nothing to do with you. Really, if I had a choice, you wouldn’t be involved at all. I mean, you are sort of just...” He waved his hand with the crowbar in the air looking for the correct word. “Mm...not exactly in the way, because you do have your uses, which is what is going to happen right now. You are going to serve a purpose. You are a message...” He shrugged and looked over at Harley who shrugged too. Joker lifted his chin a fraction as his gaze bored into Robin’s. “You’re a step in the chain toward our goal.”
Joker nodded with a smile and gave Harley a kiss on the cheek. “You see, what is about to happen here is just a symptom, and treating a symptom is part of the healing process, or part of euthanasia in this case. Harley and I are like doctors and we are going to treat Batman by working on the symptoms first. Batman needs to be cured of his crusader’s complex, to be shown that his complex has casualties. I was the first.” Joker’s hairless brow knitted into a scowl as he threw his arms out to the sides. “The first victim, the first corpse!” He laughed and spun around before he stopped turning to face Dick again. “Catwoman was the second, and you are going to be the third…” The green-haired man smiled as he pointed at the young man with the tire iron.

“You see, I want to hurt Bruce like he hurt me. He has tried time and time again to take away from me the one person who loves me, who accepts me, and who understands me. The one person in all the world that I love, who I would do anything for, who I would kill for...my wife.”

Joker strolled over to Harley who was smiling at him. He reached for her, running his gloved hand along her throat in a gentle caress and pulled her close.

“My one true, only madness,” he whispered staring into Harley’s eyes.

Harley smiled, brushing her nose against Joker’s nose. “Puddin.”

Joker kissed her, held her by the back of her neck and pressed his mouth to hers, hungry for her. Harley reached out and grabbed him with one hand, her fingers balling his jacket as she closed her hand into a fist, kissing him back with a slow, burning desire.

Robin snarled. “Batman will find me!”

Joker didn’t hurry to finish his kiss. He held Harley a moment longer, kissing her until they both felt warm desire pulsing through them both.

Joker caressed her lips with the tip of his tongue before he stepped back from Harley.

“Have you heard the quote, find what you love and let it kill you? I don’t know who said that…” Joker shrugged. “But I like it. Harley is going to kill me.”

Harley chuckled. “And you’ll kill me.”

“What are you doing to do me? Are you going to kill me?” Robin asked, trying to keep the tremor out of his voice.

Joker laughed. “Oh, I’m not going to kill you. I’m just going to hurt you, really, really bad.”

Robin paled and felt his breath catch, but he said again. “Batman is going to find me and when he does…”

Joker laughed. “And when he does? What? He won’t avenge your death…”

Robin’s stomach twisted into a knot. He hadn’t really considered that Joker would kill him. He thought Batman would find him or that because Joker was Batman’s brother, then maybe…

“Batman is going to save me,” Robin repeated, but this time his voice had a tremor, because he wasn’t sure.

Joker smiled. “Well, this will definitely be a test to see how far old Batsy is willing to go...to see just how far I can push him.”
Robin narrowed his eyes and spoke with anger. “He’ll never fall to your level Joker. He’s a better man than you’ll ever be, a better man than you ever were. You’re just mad because when it came to it, he chose me over you. He cares for me more than he ever did you. You’re just jealous because he loves me like a brother.” Robin smiled when he saw by the expression on Joker’s face that he had hit a nerve.

“Batman will come for me,” Robin hissed.

Joker’s eyes were dull for a moment. Robin frowned. There was something in his expression that made him feel...bad for what he had said. He’d never felt abandoned by his family and when his parents died, Bruce was there to help pick up the pieces, but Jack Wayne had only had his brother who had been suffering too. Maybe...no. He refused to think that Bruce had done anything wrong. Jack Wayne was a bad seed, and he had become a monster. Some people were just broken from the beginning.

Robin said it again. “Batman will come for me and make you pay. He cares about me.”

Joker’s expression changed once more. He chuckled, glancing over at Harley. “Ah, the optimism of youth.” He turned back to Robin. “This is going to be a valuable lesson for you my lad, something I learned a long time ago--Bruce won’t save you. He won’t be there when you need him.” Joker stepped closer and grabbed Robin around the back of the neck, yanked the younger man’s head close to his. Joker laid his forehead against Dick’s in an intimate gesture, as if they were brothers, as he hissed in a low voice. “Bruce will only love you for as long as you obey him, as long as you are useful to him. The moment you think for yourself, or the moment you show anything resembling what he considers a weakness, ol’ Brucie will toss you aside, hide you away, forget you exist.” Joker stroked the back of Robin’s neck with his fingers, brushing the short hairs with a gentle touch. “You think because he’s Batman that he’s a hero, that he’ll swoop in and save you.” Joker chuckled with a raspberry that left flecks of spittle on Robin’s face. “He can’t even save himself.”

Harley stepped closer. “I think we need to teach him a lesson puddin.”

Harley held her bat ready. Joker let go of Robin and stepped back beside his wife with a smile, hefting the tire iron over his shoulder.

He shrugged at Robin. “This is going to hurt you a lot more than it’s going to hurt us.”

Joker began to laugh, loud and long.

* * *

Outside the storage warehouse where Joker and Harley were holding Robin, Frost stood with his ears and eyes open. He wasn’t really guarding them or watching out for anything since they were at the amusement park, though he was keeping an eye out for the Bat. He didn’t really think Batman would find them here, but better safe than sorry. The vigilante had proven himself to be resourceful.

He frowned as he paced in front of the warehouse. He wasn’t sure how he felt about them kidnapping the kid, not that Robin was some snotnose pre-teen--more an unruly teenager--but still, this whole thing felt a little uncomfortable while at the same time he understood where Joker was coming from. Batman, or Bruce Wayne, had been hurting his brother for years. It was only natural that Jack...or Joker wanted to hurt him back. Joker had said he had no intention of killing the kid, he was only going to use him to send a message, that it was all about hurting Batman...

Frost sighed, in for a penny, in for a pound he supposed. Joker would always have his loyalty; he and Miss Quinn were his family, along with Agatha. And besides, Frost thought with sniff, Batman did need a message.

*

That same evening Sophia and Tallyman were in a car being driven by her bodyguards Angelo and Lucia in the front. Sophia was heading to her brother’s favorite club, Electric Dreams. The place was an abandoned auto warehouse that had been turned into a two-level dance club and bar. She knew a lot of Gotham artists hung out in the place, as well as Salvatore Inzerillo, a second cousin or uncle or some sort of relative to Enrico Inzerillo, the now dead head of the Inzerillo family. She hoped to find her brother there, but with the gang murders and fighting she wasn’t sure. If things had been “normal” she would simply have gone to see the Inzerillos, presenting herself as The Roman’s daughter and they would have been falling all over themselves to help her in the hopes of winning favor with her father, but with the way families and gangs were acting now...No, this was probably better--a neutral setting, lots of people and some alcohol.

Tallyman sat in silence next to her with a scowl on his dark features. He had suggested that she allow him to kidnap Salvatore and let him get any information from the man his way, but Sophia didn’t want to alienate any more members of the other crime families than were already out for Falcone blood. And she wanted to find her brother. Forced information was never reliable information. The club was crowded when they arrived, forcing them to park further away than Tallyman or her bodyguards liked, but they made their way down the sidewalk to the club without incident.

Once inside, Sophia looked around with a grimace. The place wasn’t too big--for an old warehouse--but the sea of humanity inside was shocking. She supposed with all the fighting on the streets, many Gothamites were heading to the club to blow off some steam, to be somewhere they felt safe, and probably to get high, drunk or both to forget about what was going on outside. She supposed she couldn’t blame them. She would give anything for a moment in which she didn’t have to think about the future of the Falcone family, but some people did not have the luxury of forgetting.

Their small group stopped a few steps inside the club. Tallyman frowned, his eyes narrowed. Something displeased the man. He turned his attention to Sophia. “We’ll split up. I’ll take the second floor.”

Sophia nodded. “Fine.” She was happy to get away from the man. He may be good at what he did, but he made Sophia feel on edge with his presence.

She watched as Tallyman, his dark black skin against the white suit he wore (which was soaking in the purple and blue lights of the place) made him stand out against the sea of young people dressed in shorts and t-shirts. To Sophia he looked like a deadly shadow playing at being human. Within seconds, even as she stared at him, Tallyman was gone. The man simply disappeared into the crowd, an impressive feat since only a moment ago she had thought he stood out too much to blend in and ask questions. She shook her head and turned her attention to the crowd.

Sophia turned toward her bodyguards. “Give me some distance--I can’t really ask questions with the two of you hanging so close.”

Angelo and Lucia shared a look.

Angelo spoke up. “Miss Falcone, I don’t think that’s a very…”

Sophia turned to glare at him. “I don’t care what you think! I want you and Lucia off my ass for a few minutes while I try to get information on my brother. Got it?”

Angelo and Lucia both looked taken aback by the venom in her voice, but Lucia nodded. “All right Miss Falcone. We won’t be far away.”

Sophia nodded, followed by a sigh. “Thank you. I’m sorry, I just--I just really want to find Alberto.”

Lucia nodded. “We understand Miss Falcone. We’ll be close, but not too close.”

Sophia nodded. “Thank you.”

She took off toward the bar. The best place to start, she reasoned, was with the bartenders. She received a few looks from the club patrons. Sophia wasn’t exactly dressed for a night dancing in a tight black pencil skirt and white silk blouse with black stilettos, but she was striking as she made her way to the bar, with people moving out of her way without her having to lift a finger.

She arrived at the bar, the other patrons making her a space. She slipped into the space and leaned on the counter. It was only a beat later before a bartender, an older man with short greying hair and a ready smile hurried over.

“What can I get you?”

Sophia smiled. “A pisco sour and can I ask you a question?”

The man had turned away to make the drink, but turned back to face her. “Sure, what do you need?”

Sophia smiled her most charming smile. “I’m looking for information about my brother. Alberto Falcone.”

At the mention of the name Falcone, the man lost some color. “Alberto Falcone? Honestly I don’t recall the name. I mean, I know the name Falcone, but I don’t remember an Alberto.”

Sophia nodded. “Do you know Salvatore Inzerillo?”

The bartender nodded. “Yes, he’s actually here tonight.”

The bartender pointed and Sophia turned in the indicated direction to see Salvatore Inzerillo on the dance floor. Salvatore, Sophia noted with a critical eye, was not an attractive man. He was heavily built, already developing a “beer gut” from his excessive drinking and partying. He had thick black hair that seemed to be trying to envelope his entire body. He was dancing with a couple of women on the dance floor, at the same time holding a drink in his hand.

Sophia smiled at the bartender. “Thank you.”

The bartender nodded. “I’ll have your drink in just a minute.”

Sophia turned to watch Salvatore when someone took the space next to her.

“I thought you were going to take care of your father for us.” The voice was soft, smooth, and feminine and cut through the music for Sophia’s ears only.

Sophia turned to see an exotic looking woman with what she would call perfect dark beige skin and oval blue eyes. Her dark hair lay slicked back from her face and she wore all white. Sophia didn’t know why, but she knew this woman represented the Owls.

“I...I’m looking for my brother,” Sophia said as way of explanation.

The woman nodded. “We know. Is Alberto really trying to take over the business from your father?” she asked with interest.
Sophia shook her head. “I don’t believe it.” He could inherit anyway--being The Roman’s remaining male offspring--so making a move wouldn’t make sense, Sophia thought, but she kept that to herself. The Owls could probably draw that conclusion themselves anyway. “He’s been missing…”

The exotic woman smiled. “Word is he organized a meeting of the family heads to try and win them to his side. Your father heard about it and had them all killed.”

Sophia turned to look at the dancers again, her attention on Salvatore. “That’s not true.”

The woman in white frowned. “The Court does not like the war that is going on. It is bad for Gotham, bad for the Court. We do not like wars that we did not start for a particular purpose. This war had no purpose. Your family, all the criminal families have been tolerated by the Court because they serve a purpose, to the function of the Court and the city. If you do not take care of your father, then we will step in. The Grandmaster has been most generous giving you this opportunity to serve the Court and you are wasting it.”

Sophia swallowed trying not to show how nervous she was, unnerved by this woman and the power she represented.

“I will take care of it, I swear,” Sophia said with a calm she didn’t feel.

The woman smiled. “I hope so, because if not then we will have to bring the criminal underworld under new management.”

The woman stood up, but with her back to Sophia, she said. “You have forty-eight hours. After that, a Talon will be sent. We have been more than understanding with you, but this issue has become a problem that is now affecting all of Gotham. Forty-eight hours is far more generous than you deserve. See that you do not disappoint.”

With that, the woman vanished into the crowd.

Sophia let out a breath she had been holding. “Damn it.”

*

That same evening Agatha, dressed casually in a pair of jeans, t-shirt, tennis shoes and a light jacket, was walking home from a quick trip to the local deli. Frost was with Jackie tonight, but he was supposed to be home later. She smiled as she made her way down the sidewalk when she felt something, like she was being watched. Agatha stopped in her tracks, turning to gaze down the alley she stood next to.

At first all she saw was shadows; the streetlight didn’t penetrate the darkness of the alley, but as she stood still watching, searching, a shape formed within the shadows. Agatha narrowed her eyes and rolled her shoulders, ready. The figure seemed to sense that it had been spotted and proceeded to pull itself away from the shadows.

“Agatha.” The voice was deep and smooth, surprising Agatha as she replied. “Jonas?”

She looked down the sidewalk in both directions before she stepped into the shadows of the alley to see a tall, slender man standing by the wall. His body was covered from head to toe; the black outfit he wore resembled a crisscross of thick black leather straps that wrapped across his body giving him a slick look. The shoulders of his outfit were heavily padded, the leather gloves he wore extended to his elbow, covered by a thick gauntlets studded with metal. Every part of the man was covered in protection, including a mask he wore, part of a helmet that covered his head. His eyes were covered by strange, black lensed goggles leaving only his mouth and chin exposed showing the strong chin and firm mouth of an attractive African American man.

As soon as they were deeper into the shadows, the man named Jonas pulled the mask away revealing a smooth shaven head and dark blue eyes. He smiled when he saw Agatha.

“Long time no see, Agatha. You look good.” Jonas grinned, showing off rows of perfect, straight white teeth.

Agatha frowned in surprise. “What are you doing here Jonas? I thought...I thought you weren’t currently active.”

Jonas frowned. “I wasn’t until a day ago. I was awakened along with a handful of others, but I was mostly brought back to find you.”

“Me? But...oh no…” Agatha frowned taking a step back, her hand moving to grab a weapon she had concealed on her body, but Jonas smiled and shook his head holding his hands up to show her he held no weapons. “No, you are not to be terminated. Quite the opposite. The Court wishes to reactivate you. They want to welcome you back into the nest Agatha, want you to be one of us again.”

Agatha, who had been looking nervously down the alley snapped her head around at Jonas’ words. “Reactivate me? Bring me back into the nest? I don’t understand. I was let go when the Court and I came to an agreement. No Waynes would be part of the Court. I don’t understand.”

“The Court has reconsidered their position. They see Bruce Wayne as a much needed surge of new blood, but…” He smiled at Agatha when he saw the expression of horror on her face.

“But...they have decided to extend an olive branch to you. Return to the nest, perform a special task, and Bruce Wayne will be left as he is.”

Agatha dragged her teeth over her bottom lip. She had feared that returning to Gotham would put her in their sites—her or Jackie or Bruce, but she didn’t think the Court would call her back. She should have known. She had let herself become too comfortable, let herself feel too safe when she should have known better. Maybe she was getting too old for this.

Agatha pressed her lips together before she answered. “What do they need from me?”

Jonas nodded his approval before he answered. “The Court has become concerned about this Joker person. He has caused many deaths and has had a hand in the destruction of several important deals. The Court has decided that the Joker and the chaos that follow him cannot be tolerated in Gotham any longer. They feel that you are the best candidate for handling him.” Jonas smiled. “Isn’t that good news? You could come back to us. They have said they will forget all past ills and will reinstate you to the Court. You will resume your work as a Talon…” He smiled again. “You and I could work together again.” Jonas seemed pleased by this news, but Agatha’s thoughts were swirling with anxiety. Did they know who Joker really was? Was this a trap or a test? But if it were true, she might be able to control things within the Court if shefooled them, if she agreed.

Agatha looked at Jonas who smiled back at her. His expression held no malice, no anger, and he seemed to really want her back…

*

Bane held his cards close to his face. Only his eyes were visible over the tops of them. He studied everyone at the table. The group of them sat around a small round table set in the middle of one of the displays that had been part of the amusement park’s Tunnel of Love ride. The water that ran through the ride had long since dried up. The mechanisms that allowed the water to create a small flowing river were rusted shut.

For some reason the tunnel of love ride had a large diagram of dinosaurs as part of its several displays that the “lovers” in their little boats could see as they rode by, along with a Japanese tea ceremony scene, and a stereotypical African tribal scene. The place was low budget and racist. None of them could figure out the “love” angle of the place. Either way, except for getting the electricity going again in the building, no one had bothered with trying to get the actual ride working again. Instead, tonight, Bane had carried a table down to the first display and set the large wooden table down among the plastic dinosaurs while Jason, Trope, and Thea brought the chairs. Zsasz brought two cases of beer with Bea and Viktoria bringing two brown bags of snacks with them.

They had a CD player in the corner playing some soft jazz. Jason had come down here and switched the lighting from the red bulbs that were in most of the wall sockets to some soft white bulbs, along with strings of lights that he hung from the ceiling and around the dinosaurs so that the strange plastic dinosaur display was now bathed in white light rather than red. Bane reached, looking over his cards while he did so, and picked up his beer bottle from the table next to him. He took a sip, watching everyone with hawk eyes.

Viktoria grabbed a handful of cheese puffs from a nearby bowl and tossed a few into her mouth with a grin before feeding Bane some.

Jason studied his cards. “Okay, I’ll raise you another ten.”

Zsasz lifted a hairless brow at Jason. “You sure about that?”

Bea chuckled, elbowing the bald man in the side. “Zsasz, stop.”

Zsasz grinned at Bea and waggled his eyebrows, making her laugh. (Everybody else exchanged knowing smirks. It was obvious that Zsasz may have found someone he actually enjoyed speaking to besides Joker.)

Thea glanced at Trope who shrugged before she tossed in her own couple of chips into the pot in the middle of the table. “You are all going down.” Thea grinned. “I’m gonna clear you all out and then I’m going to buy that 8K TV I’ve been looking at.”

Jason pouted. “You should have something like that for the club house.”

Thea laughed, adding. “We have a clubhouse?”

Jason gestured at the faded plastic fossils of strange tunnel of love dinosaurs and badly painted jungle backdrops. “Does this look like a clubhouse? Besides, if you clean everyone out and buy one of those super fancy TV’s, I think we should all benefit.”

Thea laughed. “Fine, if I win, I’ll purchase one and install it someplace for us all to use, but not in here. It still smells like mildew in here.” She wrinkled her nose in disgust.

Jason did a fist pump. “Awesome! Hey, could we convert that old food court building, the one that looks like a big top tent? The inside is large enough. It pretty much just needs a good cleaning, some chairs, a couple of couches...”

Bane folded his cards against his chest. “Is there a kitchen?”

Jason nodded. “Yeah, there is. I would have to look at the appliances ‘cause I’m sure most of them are shit now, but replacing them would be easy. I think Joker and Harley would be all for it.”
Trope nodded. “Oh we could have parties!! And dancing! Joker and Harley love dancing!”

Bane grinned. “I could make you all my famous ropa vieja.”

Viktoria smiled at the big man. “This sounds like a great plan.”

Jason nodded. “Joker and Harley are gonna love this idea.”

*

Joker smiled, standing back, leaning back on his right leg, his left out in from of him as he examined the young man tied to his chair. He frowned, tilting his head one way and then the other, as if trying to determine something important. He held his hands up, the tips of his thumbs together as he created a frame with his hands while looking at Robin. He grinned as he framed the young man between his hands, gazing with pleasure at Robin’s bloody, beaten face.

Dick’s nose was broken, his lips bloody, and one eye looked to be swelling shut.

Dick looked up at Joker, speaking through bloody lips. “He’ll never love you, you know that? As far as he’s concerned, you’re dead to him. You’ve been dead a long time.” He spat blood. “And what’s worse is you’re jealous! You so desperately want your big brother to love you...” Dick’s voice became sing songy. “...that you’ll do anything to get his attention, even try burning down the city, but it won’t matter. Bruce hates you, he always will.”

Joker stopped and stared at Dick, his smile fading. “Who says I want him to love me? I’ll take the hate--hate is just love gone bad.”

Dick wheezed and said with venom. “He’ll never care for you the way he does me, Joker! He’ll never even hate you as much as he’ll love me.”

Joker’s smile dropped completely, his blue eyes became cold, and his voice matched his gaze. “I guess I’ll just have to try harder then, hmm?”

Harley frowned, looking between them. She could see the pain hidden behind Jack’s gaze. She felt a rage boil up in her at Robin. She moved without thinking, anger driving her, and shoved the head of her bat at Robin, striking him in the stomach with enough force that he coughed out an explosive burst of air.

“Shut up Birdbrain,” she ground out between clenched teeth. ”He doesn’t need Batman or Bruce--he has me.”

The young man gasped in pain, but he smiled knowing he had landed a strike on Joker; not physically, but emotionally. He could see it in the clown’s eyes. “That’s what all of this is. You lost your mind and Bruce stopped loving you. He had to find a replacement brother. He found me.”

Harley hissed in fury, her hand snapping out to grab Robin by his ear twisting and yanking down hard. The young man yelped.

“Shut up,” Harley snarled.

Joker narrowed his eyes at Robin. “You may just be a replacement for me in Bruce’s eyes, but you know what little birdie, you’ll never be me. Try as you might, you’ll never been a Wayne, you’ll never be his brother.” Joker stepped closer. “But then again, I don’t want to be anyone’s brother either...” Harley moved out of the way to allow Joker to get closer. He dropped forward to lay both hands on the back of the chair around Robin’s shoulders, his nose nearly touching Robin’s. This close, Robin could see the mad wildness in the Joker’s blue eyes, the simmering explosiveness like a hissing snake ready to strike. The man’s eyes were beautiful, but in a deadly way.

Joker smiled, but the grin never reached his eyes. His bright red lips framed the rows of perfect white teeth. “You will always be the replacement, and you know what little bird? You will be replaceable by another bird, and another. I predict that you are going to be replaced my little, little bird...think about that. If he can replace his own brother, what makes you so special, little orphan?”

Robin glared at Joker, his left eye swelling shut as he whispered. “He’ll never love you.”

Joker pushed back and backhanded Robin, snapping the young man’s head to the side.

Joker stood still for a moment, glaring at Robin before he shook himself, the tremor running through his entire body as if reclaiming a calm he didn’t feel before taking another step back.

“Well, that was unpleasant.” He wrinkled his nose as if he had smelled something rotten.

Harley stepped over to him, letting her bat drop to the floor with a loud clatter as she pulled Joker closer. “Puddin, you all right?”

He smiled at her and reached up to caress her face. “You are the only family I need Harley. You were correct in what you said--I only need you. You are all I’ve ever needed, all I’ll ever need. I love you, only you.”

Harley smiled brushing her fingers over his lips. “I know puddin. I love only you, I need you..”

Joker caressed Harley’s cheek, let his fingers trace down to her throat to wrap his hand around her neck in a tender hold before he turned back to Robin. “You see, I have a new family, and most importantly, I have her.” He turned to look at Harley again, his smile soft when he gazed at her. “My moonlight, my madness, the moon that I howl at.” Joker’s eyes wandered over her as he whispered to her, his voice soft.

“Love is merely a madness; and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punish’d and cured is that the lunacy is so ordinary that the whippers are in love too.”

Harley giggled gazing at him. “I love it when you quote Shakespeare puddin.”

Joker smiled and rubbed his nose against hers before he grabbed her sides and pulled her against his body, kissed her with rising heat. He tilted her back, supported by one hand on her lower back while his tongue played against hers. Harley held him close, giggling as she caressed his tongue with hers just before Joker pressed his mouth fully to hers in a kiss that made her insides turn into a spiraling twister of butterflies. He reached up to cup the back of her head, his arm tight around her waist. Harley made a small whimper of pleasure and her hands gripped him with desperation. She loved him so much, loved him with every fiber of her being. She returned his kiss as if this would be the last, taking her time to enjoy the feel of his lips, his tongue in her mouth, his hands on her, until it was time to breathe once more.

As Joker smiled at her, his blue eyes twinkled. “Probably should see about sending our little message, then I want to take you upstairs and have my way with you.” Joker gave her a wicked grin before he released her.

Harley giggled again, letting him step back. “I’m looking forward to it puddin,” Harley purred as Joker pulled out his phone to turn his attention to Robin. “Now, smile for the camera Boy Blunder.”
That night Bruce drove out to Wayne Manor, not as Batman, but as Bruce Wayne. He had an hour or so before Talia’s flight landed, maybe another hour or more before he would be meeting her at the botanical gardens. He wanted to see the destruction of his parents’ gravesite. Just thinking about the fact that Jack (he knew with certainty that it had to have been his brother) had gone so far down the rabbit hole that he would destroy their parents’ final resting spot, made him sick to his stomach.

Bruce pulled his car up to the cemetery where several generations of Waynes lay buried. He parked and slipped out of the vehicle, leaned in to retrieve the flashlight he had brought with him. He clicked it on with a frown, shining the light toward the family grave site only to see yellow police tape across the entrance to the graveyard.

Bruce sighed before he stepped closer and pushed the tape up, crouched under it, and headed into the cemetery. He didn’t have to walk far before he saw the destruction. The mausoleum looked as if a bomb had gone off. The center was completely gone, a gaping hole was left in the middle looking like the cracked open chest of a heart patient, exposed, weak, bits of marble flashed white in the flashlight beam where they lay on the ground, like the bones of an exposed grave, were scattered throughout the cemetery. The explosion had destroyed several other headstones as well. Jack--Joker had treated his family memories with so little regard that Bruce wanted to strangle him. How could he do this? Bruce wondered to himself, how could Jack be so callous toward his own blood?

For a moment, Bruce felt a spike of hatred so intense for Dr. Harleen Quinzel that his chest hurt. He believed that her arrival had started this, her presence had taken his fragile brother and twisted him further. Bruce had tried to help Jack by bringing her to their home only to have her presence destroy Jack rather than heal him.

Bruce stopped himself from thinking on that any more. He saw no point in dwelling on who was to blame. He knew where the blamed lay.

The bodily remains of his parents had been gathered up and moved to the Gotham City coroner until Bruce decided what to do with them, but he just couldn’t bring himself to think about it right now...not when the living needed him so much more. With Dick missing, Selina paralyzed, his brother running around as a crazed, murderous clown…

Bruce closed his eyes.

He stood still in the quiet of the cemetery when his phone buzzed. He opened his eyes, startled by the sound cutting through the quiet darkness. He removed the phone from his back pocket.

Maybe Alfred or Barbara had some information on Dick, but when he looked at the number it was unknown.

For a moment he thought seriously about dismissing the call, but…

He tapped the answer button only to be greeted by a video image of Robin, his face bloody and beaten, a gag in his mouth, and tied to a chair.

The video was live.

“Robin!” Bruce yelled into the phone, but the view turned away from the wounded young man to reveal Joker and Harley. Joker waved at him through the phone.

“Hey there Brucie. How’s it hanging?” Joker laughed.
Harley put her head next to the Joker's and waved. “Hiya Brucie!”

Joker took Harley’s hand and the two of them skipped back, the phone image jumping as they both skipped over to Dick. They stood behind the young man while Joker held the phone out so that Bruce could see all three of them.

Harley reached around from behind and grabbed Robin’s face in her hand and squeezed. Robin struggled, but she held him firm and kissed his bloody cheek. “Poor little bird,” she cooed before laughing into the camera.

“So Brucie, I wonder…” Joker turned the camera toward his pale face. “How far I can take this before you break? Hmm? How long before you fall off your moral high horse? Come down here to the level of us crazies and undesirables?” Joker rubbed his chin, his eyes in the air in thought before he shrugged. “I guess we are going to find out.” He put his head down next to Dick’s and waved again. “Bye, bye, Batman...Harley and I are going to have some more fun with your pet bird.”

The call disconnected.

*

Joker laughed as he slid his phone back into his pocket. “That was fun.”

Harley giggled. “He is going to go nova.”

Joker laughed. “Brucie has always had a really terrible temper, even when we were kids, he never could take a joke.” Joker shook his head. “I ever tell you he beat that crap out of me once? Before you and I met?”

Harley frowned and shook her head. Joker simply shrugged. “We’ll have to talk about it later, right now…”

He turned his attention back to Robin. “So my fine feathered friend, Harley and I have a date, so we are going to leave you to contemplate your current position, your life choices…” He smiled tilting his head. “Do you wanna die? Or maybe you want to switch sides? Come play with me and my family?”

Robin struggled, his words muffled by the gag.

Joker laughed touching the tip of Robin’s nose with his finger. “I don’t need an answer now, you just think on it.”

Joker and Harley turned to leave. They stopped as they felt something, as if the very ground rumbled under their feet.

Harley’s eyes widened looking over at Joker. “Did you feel that puddin?”

Joker nodded with a look around, as if he would see the reason for the shaking they both felt through the floor. “What was that?”

Even Robin looked confused when the sensation came again, stronger, strong enough that Joker and Harley both swayed on her feet. The walls of the building shook. The shaking and rumbling were followed by a violent tremor through the floor, strong enough that they both dropped to their hands and knees. They heard a building sound, like a creaking sound from below. The warehouse walls shook as vibrations raced up the wall and shattered the old glass windows. Robin’s chair fell, the young man landing hard on his side with a gasp of pain muffled by the gag. Next followed another sound like the roar of some great beast.

Harley turned to look at Joker, her eyes wide. “What’s happening?”

Joker frowned, his voice filled with disbelief. “An earthquake?”

As if giving voice to what they realized, the strongest tremor hit. The entire building swayed, the walls of the warehouse wobbling and warping as if they were made from jelly, followed by the more startling sound as more glass from the old windows shattered. A strange yawning sound of cracking, breaking concrete resounded. Dust filled the air, the warehouse shuddered, and swayed, tilting to their right as it began to fall. A large crack appeared in the floor, racing straight for them.

Harley reached out for Joker. “Puddin!!”

Joker lunged for her, his hand grabbing onto her just as the ground opened. Her hand was ripped out of his. Harley screamed, falling, the large hole swallowing her.

Joker yelled. “NO!!”

He leaned down to look for her, his eyes wide with fear and desperation, his heart hammered as panic threatened to overtake him. Joker roared in pain. “HARLEY!”

As her name left his mouth, the concrete melted away beneath him and he was falling...

*

End of Book II

---

End Notes

The Nursery rhyme is Originally from Gammer Gurton’s Garland, 1784 (No title.)

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!