Harleen swallowed. She had fought back, ripping her nails along his chest, her knee slamming into his groin with every bit of strength she had. She had pushed him off of her, getting to her feet and kicked him in the ribs before she took off running for help. She had reported him to campus security, which lucky for her, found him still on the ground, but even luckier was that Guy Kopski had several other assault charges issued against him and one restraining order. If not for those other issues already against him, he might not have been kicked off the campus. Lucky for her, he had been...

Harleen had pressed charges against him for attempted assault, but his family lawyer had gotten the charges reduced further and cut a deal for to community service if Guy agreed to leave the college. It had made Harleen sick, but she had moved on with her life, finished her degree and had pushed her time with Guy Kopski away, locking it up and forgetting all about it completely. It had become something that had happened to another person. But now all of it came rushing back to her.
“What do you want?” Harleen hissed. “I want nothing to do with you and you're not getting anything out of me.”

Guy chuckled. “Really? How about I want some of that fucking Wayne money and I'm betting that freak Jack Wayne would love to hear how you whored yourself around in college.”

“What? That's a lie! Jack would never believe you!” Harleen gritted out between her teeth, her grip on the phone tightening enough that the plastic case groaned.

Guy laughed on the other end. “But what if I can provide pics? Who do you think your rich boy is going to believe, you or me?

Harleen opened her mouth to say something, her mind racing. How could he have pictures of anything? She never slept with him. He had assaulted her! That was when Jack came trotting down the stairs.

“Hey sugar dumpling, what's taking you so long?” Jack was all smiles as he trotted down the stairs then his steps slowed when he saw the look on Harley's face.

“Harley, what is it?” Jack asked with concern.

Guy on the other end apparently heard Jack and he laughed. “Yeah Quinz, put old Jack Wayne on the phone...” Harleen hung up.

Harley frowned mentally. “I don't want to...I...you were so weak and stupid then.”

“Maybe, but you need to tell him.” Harleen frowned. “Jack has told you all his secrets...tell him.”

Harley sighed. “I know you're right, but can it wait? Not now. We're going out to dinner with his brother and I want Jack in a good mood.”

“All right, but Harley don't let this go. Tell him.” Harleen faded away.)

She shook her head. “It's nothing puddin.” She draped her arms around his shoulders. “So, you wanna help me dress for dinner?”

Jack frowned knowing she was keeping something from him, but he decided to give her time to tell him when she was ready. So instead he laughed. “Oh do I!” He grabbed her, lifting her into his arms bridal style and started to hop up the stairs while a squealing Harley.

“I always love helping you dress!” Jack chuckled taking the stairs with her in his arms two at a time. “And undressing...” Jack grinned.

Frost drove them to the restaurant that night. “Nice to see you back Boss. You and Miss Quinn have a good time?” Frost glanced in the rear-view of the Bentley where Jack was playing with Harley's neckline, his fingers tracing the edges of the dress where it ran along the top of her breasts, his tongue and teeth worrying at the smooth column of her neck and down to her bare shoulders. The dress was a red trumpet style that hugged her figure. The sleeves were off-the-shoulder and the chiffon and lace dress had a train, not long, but just enough to give the red dress a bit of a dramatic flair. Sequins in the bodice of the dress made Harley glitter and her hair was styled with one side of her hair braided along her scalp so that the rest of her long blonde hair fell over her left shoulder. Jack was enjoying himself immensely as he licked her neck again sending delightful shivers down Harley's spine.

Harley had her eyes closed enjoying his touch, her right hand resting on Jack's crotch, squeezing ever so gently. Jack growled softly. He was dressed in a three-piece royal purple suit, the jacket of which had black lapels matched with a black shirt, making Jack the image of elegance. As always, Harley thought. They both knew they were a little over dressed even though the restaurant had a dress code that demanded the patrons wear jackets, but Jack thought it would be fun to go all out.

Jack looked up from his licking of Harley to smile at Frost's eyes in the rear-view. “We had a great time. It was nice to be alone away from everyone for a while.” Jack grinned at Harley adding, “Harley kept me very busy.”

She giggled as her cheeks reddened. “Puddin!”

Frost chuckled. “Glad to hear it Boss.”

“Ah Frost, my darling. Would you be free to drive Harley and me to a friendly game tomorrow evening?” Jack met Frost's eyes in the rearview. Frost smiled and nodded. “Of course Boss, anything you want!”

Jack grinned. “Good good. Now, where was I? Oh yes...” Jack tugged her closer nibbling on her shoulder causing her to wiggle and squirm.

The restaurant, Ducard's, was very lovely on the inside, Harley noted with pleasant surprise; the simple lines on the outside of the building didn't translate on the inside. The interior was definitely 'fancy' Harley thought. Jack waltzed in with Harley on his arm and stopped to have a word with the maitre d'. Harley and Jack were receiving quite a few looks, dressed up as if they were going to a royal dinner instead of just dinner with Jack's brother.

The inside of the restaurant had the warm golden luminescence of candlelight. Soft violin music played in the background, creating a calm and sophisticated atmosphere. The architecture reminded Harley of Versailles that she had seen pictures of in books, complete with mirrors on the walls along with highly ornate wall sculptures of Roman gods and goddesses. Crystal chandeliers hung everywhere reflecting the light back at the mirrors on the wall creating the illusion of a vast space. There were round tables with elegant white table cloth and chairs throughout the main dining area. The chairs reminded Harley more of expensive arm chairs than actual dinner table seats.

Jack smiled leaning on the podium with his elbow. The young woman who had been looking down at her guest book glanced up with a quizzical lift of her brow.

Jack smiled pleasantly. “Wayne,” he said simply. The young woman at the pedestal smiled and nodded. “Right this way sir, ma'am.” She inclined her head and briskly headed into the main dining room, her heels making a smart click-clack against the floor.

The young woman, with her hair spiraled up on top of her head in an intricate bun, wore a long black skirt that stopped just at her ankles and a white dress shirt, her name tag pronouncing that she was named Kate. The maitre d' led them to the far back of the restaurant to a table in the corner where Bruce, wearing a crisp tailored black suit and red tie, sat cross-legged sipping some wine and going over something on his phone with one hand, his thumb scrolling through something when he heard them approach. Bruce glanced up and smiled brightly when he saw them.

“Jack! Harley! Glad you both could make it.”

He stood and embraced Jack, then took Harley's hand, kissing her knuckles which surprised Harley enough that she didn't remove her hand right away staring at him. Jack chuckled taking her hand from Bruce and kissing her knuckles while he pulled her seat out for her.

“Did you guys have a nice stay at the cabin?” Bruce asked taking his seat and pointing at a waiter, then motioning at the young man before holding up two fingers indicating he wanted two more glasses brought over.

Jack sat down next to Bruce, taking Harley's hand and kissing her knuckles again. He held her knuckles against his lips, idly running the soft, smooth skin against his painted lips as he spoke.

“We did. It was nice to be away from everything. A lot quieter than our little trip to California and it helped with the healing process.” Jack wiggled the fingers of his healed hand. “Still a little stiff and sore, but healing just fine. Alfred is a miracle worker.”

Bruce frowned ever so slightly at the mention of Jack's broken hand...which reminded him of the fight “club,” but he promised himself to let it go...though Batman may have a different opinion on the matter.

Bruce nodded. “Well, why don’t we order our dinner before we talk about the engagement party, hm?”

Their waiter approached their table carrying two extra wine glasses on a silver tray. “May I pick you up another bottle of wine?” he inquired politely.

Bruce nodded. “Yes please, we are having Chateau Lafite Rothschild. If that is fine with you Jack?” Bruce glanced at his brother and Jack inclined his head. Bruce smiled and glanced back up at the waiter. “And I believe we would like to order.”

The young dark haired man nodded. “Whenever you are ready, sir.”

Soon their food orders were placed and Bruce steepled his fingers with his elbows on the table, his blue eyed gaze shifting between the both of them. He made an effort to keep his smile pleasant. Bruce wanted this to work, he wanted Jack to be happy and he wanted to be friends with Dr. Quinzel since she was making Jack happy and, he thought not for the first time in the past few weeks...she was going to be his sister-in-law. It was still difficult for him...separating the reasons he brought her here, to now, with her about to marry his baby brother. Bruce still had an issue with some of the stunts Jack had pulled recently, but he told himself that maybe being married would be good for Jack. He kept reminding himself that marriage could be stabilizing for Jack. His brother could settle down, think about raising a family. Bruce had hoped when Harleen had first become pregnant that maybe that was a good sign. But when she lost the baby he had worried that Jack would become worse...so far, except for that fight club incident, Jack had seemed reasonably stable, as far as Bruce knew. Though he had come across the police report (as Batman) of the Electrocutioner being found by some cops, his mind seemingly...gone. No one was sure what happened, the only reason they had learned the man was indeed the Electrocutioner was from a mugshot taken a couple of years before. An examination had shown that the man had been lobotomized. It was a queer question on who had done it to him...for a moment Bruce had entertained the idea that it had somehow been Jack, but he had just as quickly dismissed the idea.
Jack would never do such an thing. Bruce was even surprised that he would have considered it for the heartbeat that the idea had entered his conscious mind. Jack seemed better, his outbursts of violence were under control and he was happy.

“What more could I possible want for him?” Bruce had asked himself.

Maybe, just maybe, this party would be a way for them to mend some of the bridge that spanned the gap between them.

Bruce smiled, leaning on his elbows. “So, I wanted to discuss your engagement party...for two weeks from now?”

Bruce nodded. “I thought we could have something elegant, invite all of Gotham's elite and of course some of the CEO's that Wayne Enterprises works with, friends of the family, especially people who knew our parents. I know Alfred said you had wanted a themed party, but I was hoping I could steer you both toward a more elegant style party.”

Jack frowned slightly, glancing at Harley who smiled at him in such a way that Jack felt his heart swell in his chest. She murmured, “I'm fine with it if you are puddin.”

Jack grinned leaning over and planting a loud kiss on her cheek. “I love this woman!” He grinned at Bruce who couldn't help but smile. No matter what he may think or continue to worry about, it was clear Jack was deeply in love, and judging by the way Harley looked at Jack she was just as much in love with his brother. Jack wrinkled his nose with a grin.

“Sure as long as there is lots to drink, dancing, a live band that can play a decent waltz and more dancing AND...” He leaned over and whispered to Harley. “Cupcakes?”

She giggled and nodded. “Cupcakes.”

Jack grinned at Bruce. “Lots and lots of cupcakes!”

Harley giggled and took another sip of her wine. “Maybe we could have a color theme?”

Bruce smiled and nodded. “Yes I'll make sure there are a lot of cupcakes. A color theme would be just fine—what did you both have in mind?”

Jack grinned. “Purple and green!”

Harley giggled bumping his shoulder. “Red and black!”

They both giggled leaning in toward each other like a couple of conspiring kids, Jack reached over and ran his finger over the bridge of her nose, his blue gaze was filled with love and mischief. “If you want black and red that's what it'll be Harls.”

Harley smiled. “Actually I think purple and green would be prettier puddin.”

Bruce smiled watching the two of them. A little part of him was slightly jealous. He frowned, his thoughts drifting to Selina...

Jack murmured tracing Harley's jaw. “You would look beautiful in purple.”

Harley giggled. “We could wear matching outfits!”
Jack sat back looking pleasantly shocked. “You're right Harls!! We could match!! It would be such fun!!! We could still go with a 1920's theme with our outfits!” Jack glanced at his brother. “Would that be acceptable at an elegant engagement party?”

Bruce was actually surprised that Jack asked his opinion. He smiled pleased and nodded. “Actually that would be wonderful. As the bride and groom-to-be you would both stand out, as you should at your own engagement party.”

Jack clapped his hands. “It's decided then!”

Bruce thought briefly about approaching the prenuptial conversation again, but decided to let it go for now. This was the first in a very long time that he and Jack were getting along, so much so that they were laughing together. It was nice. Bruce hadn't realized how much he had missed his little brother. Bruce smiled, and really, honestly, he owed this moment to Dr. Quinzel.

Bruce smiled at her and nodded his head. Harley blinked in surprise not sure what the gesture was about, but she smiled back.

Later that evening Harley was curled in the crook of Jack's arm while Frost drove them home. The evening had been successful. Bruce and Jack had gotten along all evening, talking about the party and a few other (non-volatile) subjects. They both had laughed telling her about a party their parents had had when the boys were quite little, the two of them sneaking into the party well after they should have been in bed and hiding under a table.

Jack had started to laugh as he retold the story of pulling on the tablecloth of the table, trying to make sure they were well hidden, but instead he had yanked all of the party food off the table...including a very large crystal punch bowl.

Harley smiled. It had been nice to see the brothers laughing together, remembering their lives growing up as brothers.

Jack lit a cigarette and rolled down the window as he smoked, holding her close. “You know Harley, this was a good night.”

She gazed up at him watching the way he wrapped his lips around the cigarette, the slow way he blew the smoke out. She found his smoking so damn sexy.

“Mm...Jack...I love you.” Harley reached up to stroke the back of her fingers along the end of his sharp chin. He glanced down at her with a smile. “You will always be my girl Harley...I love you my sweets.”

She sat up and turned his face toward her. Jack stared at her for a long moment before he flicked the cigarette out the window.

Harley found his movements to be sensual, seductive without effort. Jack leaned in and kissed one cheek, then her other. Harley smiled closing her eyes each time his lips touched her skin. Jack caught her lips with his teeth chuckling softly before he kissed her, a soft and tender kiss. He reached down and started to unbutton his vest slowly. Harley reached for him, taking over, unbuttoning the vest, then running her hands up the soft fabric of his shirt and started to undo the buttons one by one, letting his shirt fall open. Harley ran her hands up his chest and over his shoulder. His skin was so soft, even where her fingers ran over the puckered places where his wounds were, the place where Croc had bit him, the claw marks on his stomach. For Harley, it didn't take away from how alluring his body felt—in fact it only enhanced her desire for him.

Jack reached around her, taking hold of the zipper at the back of her dress and slowly, gradually tugged it down until the upper half of her dress fell away. She hadn't been wearing a bra since the dress had dropped shoulders and held her breasts snugly, so there had really been no need. Jack sat back to admire her.

“You are so beautiful Harley...the most beautiful woman in the world,” he whispered and slid one hand over her breast, cupping it then squeezing gently.

(Frost twisted the rear-view mirror away so that he couldn't see them unless he turned around, though he was wondering if he could have a sliding window installed between the front and back seats.)

Jack gradually dragged his lips down the column of her neck, brushing over her collarbone and pressing soft kisses in his wake. Harley laid back, the two of them shifting just a little so that Jack could be above her. He tugged her dress up, then, with both of them giggling, they struggled to get her dress off until finally Jack helped her pull the garment over her head.

Harley giggled and reached for Jack again. He slipped his arms out of his jacket, shirt and vest, tossing them into the front seat with her dress before he lay on top of her.

“Harley...” He whispered her name like a prayer, pressing his lips to the tender spot just under her ear. Harley moaned softly, her arms around him, the tips of her fingers caressing up and down his spine feeling the soft warmth of his skin under her fingertips. Jack slowly made his way down her torso, pressing kiss after kiss against her skin. Harley moaned again; the warmth of his lips, the tickle of his breath against her skin caused heat to swirl and pool in her nipples and groin. Jack pushed himself carefully higher again, his lips pressing against her hard nipple. Jack enjoyed the texture of her nipple against his lips, the hiss from his woman, her back arching when the tip of his tongue played over the sensitive skin. He rolled his hand down her stomach, over her side then back again, dragging just the tips of his blunt nails across her ribs. She giggled softly and wiggled just a bit.

Jack laughed. “Ticklish Harls?”

She giggled and squirmed when he did it again, his tongue flicking slowly over her nipple while his fingernails tickled over her side. Harley giggled in response to his attentions. “Puddin!”

He chuckled softly, his hot breath brushing across her sensitive nipple. He switched breasts, grasping her nipple with his lips and tugging. Harley glanced down to watch him, to watch the way his lips pulled at her nipple then the way he coated her nipple with his tongue, spreading saliva over the sensitive skin just before he blew on the hard nub. Harley shivered, a quiver rippling from her breasts to her groin, a tickle so deep, making her so desperate that she couldn't find the words to express the aching longing for him to be inside of her, to fuck her. While Jack's mouth was focused on one of her breasts, he brought his fingers up to play with the nipple of the other breast, rolling the hard nub with his fingertips.

ache for his touch. Her body grew tight and hotter yet, waiting for him to touch her, only to have him withdraw his fingers. Harley groaned with frustration, then pouted when he withdrew his hand completely. She had lifted her leg (still wearing her heels) placing it across the back of the front seat. Jack sat back smiling down at her and ran the flat of both hands up her torso, grabbing her breasts then dragging his hands back down over her stomach and up again.

He grinned. “Damn, you are so soft Harley in all the right places.”

She giggled. “You like it?”

“Mm...yes...” Jack dragged his hands down again stopping and tracing her tattoo with his fingertips. “Lucky you...” he repeated slowly before running his tongue over his teeth while he traced the words. “Mm...I would say so Harley...I'm very lucky.”

Harley laughed. “That tickles!”

Jack chuckled dragging his fingers back and forth until she was squirming and squealing. “JACK!!!”

He dropped down capturing her kiss with his mouth sliding his hand under her to hold her close. Harley wrapped her arms around him, biting slowly at his lips and tongue before sucking gently on his tongue. Jack purred which made Harley growl playfully and hiss. “On your back Jack Wayne.”

Jack giggled. “Ooo!”

(Frost glanced over to see Miss Quinn's shapely leg, her red heel resting on the shoulder of the passenger seat. “Yeah” he thought, might have to consider a different car for chauffeuring these two.)

They shifted, doing a little awkward turning around that had the both of them laughing, but finally, with Harley practically shoving Jack onto his back, she was on top. She grinned running her hands, her palms flat against his stomach, up over his chest giving him a look that communicated how much she would simply like to eat him. Jack grinned with his hands resting on her thighs. He loved the way she felt, her body weight pressing down on him, to be surrounded by her scent. Jack squeezed her legs grinning up at her.

Harley purred squeezing her arms together so that her breasts stuck out more. “I'm going to do this...”

She undid his slacks spreading the material wide then grabbed the edge of it along with his boxers and yanked, forcing Jack to lift his hips up. They both laughed but then Harley wrapped her hands around his hot erection. Jack groaned dropping his head back.

“Mmm...puddin...so hard and so warm...” Harley rolled her thumbs up the length of him pressing along the underside of his shaft all the way up then over the head of him, enjoying how soft his skin was there, like satin. She wanted to rub his shaft over her lips and cheeks, to press her lips to not just the head of his shaft but to every inch of Jack Wayne. She wanted to suck on every inch of skin, to smell him, taste him. Harley rolled her tongue over the top of his satiny soft head, tasting just a little of the salty ejaculate that leaked against her lips, which had Jack throwing his head back with a loud groan.

(Frost frowned. Maybe I should invest in ear-buds too? Yeah, that might be a good idea. He thought to himself.)

Jack whimpered. “Come here Harls.”
Harley grinned scooting herself over him and pulled her panties aside so she could slide down slowly, groaning softly at the feeling of Jack's hardness filling her. She dropped down to wrap her hands under his head to the feel of soft luxurious curls of his hair between her fingers. Jack wrapped his arms around her holding her close, their bodies connected, their souls connected. They stared at one another, smiling, rubbing their noses together.

Jack chuckled jerking with a groan when she moved; she was so warm and wet it felt so good it almost hurt. He rolled his hands down her back, under her panties to grab her rear, pressing his fingers into her flesh. “You're going to be my wife.”

Harley giggled tightening her inner muscles around him, squirming because he felt so good inside her. “Mrs. Wayne.”

Jack groaned, his hands running down to her hips which he gripped holding her down on him. He moaned. “I could be Mr. Quinn if you want.”

Harley giggled, the vibration of which rolled from her to him, up through his core. Jack gasped, closing his eyes for a moment as the intensity of feeling her laugh that way made him want to cry out. Harley brushed her lips against him, lazily licking his bottom lip with her tongue just as she started move her hips, gliding, then grinding against him, her inner muscles contracting and tugging against him. Her heat burned through him warming his entire body. Her breath came in little pants and soft feminine grunts which drove Jack crazy all by themselves. Jack could feel her fingers flexing against his skull where she cradled his head, tangling in his hair. He smiled against her mouth, his tongue flicking out to caress hers, thrusting his hips up, wanting to bury himself deep inside her.

Jack ran his hands up her hips, grabbing a hold of her waist, thrusting his hips up to meet hers before he dragged his hands around her back feeling the supple curve of her spine. They stayed closely wrapped around one another, their hips moving in short thrusts or Harley would roll her hips grinding hard against him. They groaned together sharing their breath. Jack could feel it when Harley started to reach her first peak, her body tensing around him. Harley laid her forehead against his, her breath coming in quick gasps until she pushed up, digging her fingers into his chest, arching her back.

She came with a cry. “JACK!!! Uuh Jack!!”

Jack hissed pressing his teeth into his bottom lip, arching his back to meet her, reaching up to grab her shoulders. “God Harley...Harley...my—my Harley...”

Jack squeezed his eyes closed trying to hold back just a little longer, but God it was hard with her looking like a damn angel over him, the streetlights flashing against her pale skin, the look of pleasure on her face when she climaxed.

Jack reached up to run the flat of this hand down her stomach with a pleaded, “Harley.”

When she looked down at him, her beautiful face, her blue eyes glowing in the streetlight, he couldn't hold back; it was as if she ripped his orgasm from him. Jack cried out a sob that was a mixture of intense pleasure and undying love that came from him as he held on to her.

Watching the man she loved orgasm sent a ripple through Harley, a deep burn that spread out from her groin to encompass all of her. She came again with another moaning cry. Jack yanked her down to him wrapping his arms tighter around her, kissing her with a deep, desperate passion that bordered on the fanatic.

(Frost pressed his lips together and squirmed a bit in his seat while he drove. It was quite difficult not to be...enticed by the sounds coming from the back seat. Hell, Frost thought, he didn't think he and his wife had ever had sex like that...not even on their wedding night!)

*

The next day Harley and Jack were lying in bed naked, curled in each others arms when Harley murmured, “I really want some peanut butter cookies.”

Jack sat up suddenly turning to stare at her. “What did you say?”

Harley frowned looking confused. “I want some peanut butter cookies?”

“How did you know that was my favorite cookie?” Jack asked breathlessly.

Harley giggled. “I didn't.”

Jack grabbed the pillow he had been resting his head on and whacked her over the head with it. Harley squealed. “JACK!!”

She started to get up when he hit her again with the pillow and laughed. Harley snarled as she grabbed her own pillow, and, using her gymnastics training, she rolled away from him in a somersault to leaping to her feet at the end of the bed. She promptly hopped up and swung her pillow at her opponent. The pillow hit Jack straight across the face, knocking him back against the bed. He lay there unmoving, his eyes closed and his mouth slack.

Harley stood there naked on the edge of the bed her pillow raised for another strike. “Jack?”

Jack didn't move or respond. Harley narrowed her eyes and poked him with her foot. He still didn't move. “Jack?”

The moment that Harley dropped to her knees and put her pillow aside, Jack lunged up and grabbed her. “Never think your victim is dead 'til you take them down a second time!!” He grabbed her around the waist and yanked her over on top of him. Harley squealed laughing. Jack rolled over pressing Harley down into the mattress. She laughed, but then he started to blow raspberries on her stomach while holding her down. Harley squealed loudly.

“JACK!!”

“You have to surrender!!” Jack laughed blowing on her stomach again. Harley squealed and laughed loudly kicking her legs against the mattress. “I surrender!!”

Jack laughed and hopped on top of her straddling her. “You belong to me now!” Jack grabbed her arms and yanked them over her head holding her down. His smile was beautiful Harley thought as she gazed up at him with a broad grin on her lips. “I'm always yours Jack. Always.”

Jack smiled, brushing his nose against hers before he kissed her, a slow tender kiss, dragging his fingertips down her arms. Harley wrapped her arms around him with a soft groan. “Mmm...”

Jack ran his mouth gently over hers, nipping at her tongue, cradling her head between his hands, his kiss melting over her like warm honey, sweet and slow. His thumbs brushed over her cheeks tenderly. Harley stroked her fingertips up and down his sides, lower, caressing along his thighs returning his kiss with little whimpers of need. Jack pulled away with a grin and whispered.

“Wanna go make cookies with me?”

Harley giggled grinning up at him. “I thought you would never ask.”

The two of them came downstairs to the kitchen where Alfred was making some tea. Harley was dressed in a pair of black leggings and a long denim shirt with the sleeves rolled up and her hair pulled back in a 1960's style ponytail with the slight 'bubble' look to her hair that was common for the era and a pair of brown, knee high boots. She was laughing, her arm around Jack's. Jack wore a pair of slim cut jeans, some brown oxford wingtips along with a grey button-down shirt cut to stylishly hug his torso. He had the sleeves rolled up too and had elected to go without a tie.

Alfred looked up surprised to see them. “Is there something you need Master Jack, Miss Harleen?”

Jack grinned, released Harley's arm, and jumped up to sit on the counter with crossed ankles.

“Alfred,” Jack began, “Harley and I want to make peanut butter cookies!”

Alfred blinked in surprise. “Truly?”

“Yup! Harley brought up she wanted some and I haven't had any in ages!” Jack clapped his hands together.

Alfred continued to frown, perplexed. “Wouldn't you rather I just made them sir?”

Harley walked over to lean between Jack's legs. “But it wouldn't be as much fun unless we made them! You can guide us.”

Alfred's frown altered, but remained a frown. “You two are going to ruin my kitchen, aren't you?”

Jack and Harley shared a giggle.

Jack and Harley, both wearing aprons that Alfred had dug up for the both of them, were laughing and rolling the cookie dough into balls before rolling the peanut butter balls in the bowl of sugar and setting them on the cookie sheets where Harley would take a fork and press down first horizontally, then diagonally.

Harley picked up some dough and fed it to Jack who grasped one of her fingers with his teeth and playfully sucked on the digit with a wicked grin on his face.

Harley giggled glancing over to Alfred who was sitting at the small counter, out of their way, sipping on his tea and watching the two of them when Harley turned and asked, her finger still in Jack's mouth. “Do you have any baby pictures of Jack?”

Shocked at her question, Jack released her finger only to groan. “NOOO!! Not baby pictures!”

Harley giggled and bumped Jack with her hip. “Yes baby pictures! It's part of being a couple, embarrassing childhood pictures!”

Jack shook his head. “Still not fair because I don't get to see any of you.”
Harley smiled. “Well...I might be able to find a few...if you show me yours first.”

Jack grinned giving her a wicked expression that made Harley laugh and smack him lightly on the shoulder. “Jack!” she scolded him which only made him laugh all the more.

Alfred smiled pushing himself to his feet. “I'll be just a moment.”

While Jack and Harley put the cookies into the oven to bake, rolling a few more for the next batch, Alfred came back carrying several large albums. Harley squealed and clapped her hands. “Baby pictures!!” Jack hastily wiped his hands on his apron and hurried over to help the older man.

Alfred smiled as Jack took a couple of the thick albums and they set them down on a clean section of cabinet away from the baking and opened up the first album. Harley washed her hands and hurried over, drying them on her apron. Jack groaned and rolled his head. “Uhh!! Alfred!” he whined, but only halfheartedly. “I could raise your salary if you 'lose' those albums.”

Harley slapped Jack's shoulder and shared a look with Alfred, who proclaimed, “A butler cannot be bribed, Master Jack.”

Alfred chuckled pointing to a picture of a little round faced baby with huge blue eyes nestled in the lap of his mother while his father stood behind them, his hands on his wife's shoulders. A small, dark haired boy stood by his mother's knee staring at the little bundle in his mother's arms as if he couldn't quite decide whether to like it or not. “That is Master Jack at three weeks.”

Harley leaned closer to examine the photo. Her heart twisted in her chest to see baby Jack, so soft and innocent with striking blue eyes. The woman holding him had the same shade of brown hair that Jack did now (baby Jack only had wisps of hair), with the same delicate long face as Jack. Harley glanced over to her lover. She could see the shadow of his mother in his features.

Jack stepped closer to wrap an arm around Harley's shoulders staring down at his mother's image holding a baby Jack Wayne in her arms. Behind her stood her husband, squared jawed and blue eyed, a kind but stern face, whereas Jack's mother's eyes were grey and softer. They looked like they held a hidden pain like Jack's eyes did. Her observation made Harleen whisper from the darkness of Harley's mind. (Do you think Martha Wayne had issues with violent outbursts or other tell-tale signs of illness? Harley growled. “Shut up Harleen.”) Thomas Wayne sported the thick black hair that his eldest son inherited. Bruce was there in the picture staring down at his little brother with serious eyes.

“Bruce looks a lot like your father, the hair, the eyes, even the expression. But you, except for the eyes, you take after your mother,” Harley said tilting her head as she studied the picture.

Jack frowned examining the photo. “Yes, I suppose I do, though Bruce and I both have our father's eyes.”

Harley smiled softly touching his picture. “You were a sweet baby.” For a moment Harley's heart twisted in her chest and an ache filled her. The baby that could have been...she touched her stomach, letting the sadness wash over her and then recede.

Jack squeezed Harley close kissing the corner of her mouth. He knew exactly what she was thinking without either of them saying a word.

Alfred noticed poor Miss Harleen's expression, though it passed quickly. He focused back on the photo and chuckled. “Unlike Master Bruce, who was quite loud as an infant, Master Jack was always rather quiet, though I do remember that you laughed a great deal.”
Harley giggled. “So you have loved to laugh from day one?”

Jack shrugged looking slightly embarrassed as Alfred turned the page and pointed. “Ah, here is Master Jack when he was three years old.”

Harley leaned close to see a picture of a slim little boy with mischievous blue eyes wearing a bright purple t-shirt and blue shorts. He was holding his big brother's hand while both boys were grinning and looking at the camera. Judging by the furniture in the background and the figure of Alfred in the corner, caught by the camera, both boys were tall for their age. Bruce was just starting to not look as 'babish' but Jack still had that roundness to his cheeks. It looked like both boys were swinging their arms.

Alfred smiled. “The boys were inseperatable until after their parents’ death.” Alfred spoke with a fondness in his voice. Harley traced the photo of little Jack.

Alfred turned a few pages, stopping to show Harley images of Jack as a skinny little boy, his brown hair wild and unkempt. One of her favorite images was a picture of Jack in blue jeans and a green t-shirt sitting under a tree blowing balloons up. He must have been tossing them because the area under the tree was littered with a rainbow of vari-colored balloons. Bruce must have been running around with a toy sword because he had stopped and was either posing or had been captured in midfight pose. Alfred said that Jack was blowing up the balloons for Bruce to conquer with his sword. The boys would secure the balloons to target for Bruce to do battle with. Jack would sometimes play the game, but his approach was always a little more sneaky whereas Bruce was always very much an 'in-your-face. problem solver; Jack was always more about misdirection. Harley giggled while Jack blushed with embarrassment. Harley loved the photo though, the two brothers working together, Jack’s bright innocent blue eyes, lacking the pain she knew he carried now, the dark secrets...but now he had her to share them with. Together they would navigate the darkness.

The next photos Alfred showed were of Jack in different costumes. Harley gasped. “You have always liked to dress up!”

Jack grinned and nodded. “Told you, always need the right costume. Dressing up always allowed me to pretend I was someone, or somewhere else.”

Alfred chuckled. “Young Master Jack has always had a flair for the flamboyant.”

The images were of young Jack dressed as Hamlet, a pirate, a cop, and a harlequin. Alfred tapped the picture of Jack in the harlequin costume. “Now that one was Master Jack's favorite. Took me over a month to convince him to stop wearing the costume every day.”

Jack grinned with a little shrug. “I like clowns.”

Harley smiled and kissed him on the cheek. Jack caught her jaw with his fingers stopping her from turning away and kissed her tenderly.

Alfred flipped the page and pointed down at an image of two teenage Waynes. Jack was slender to the point of almost skinny, but there were hints of the slim, wiry muscles he was developing. The baby roundness had fallen away and the long sharp features were starting to be seen in the lines of his face, with his hair dyed black, hanging well below his shoulders. His hair didn't look oily or dirty like one might expect at that age; instead he looked like teenage Harleen's idea of a Goth Metal God. Even now Harley could tell high school Harleen would have been swept off her feet by him. His hair hung loose and long around his face, casting his lean figures in shadow. He wore the typical school uniform of the wealthy who send their children off to be educated. Next to him stood Bruce looking tall and stronger. Bruce with his perfectly styled short hair, his eyes just a little hard, whereas Jack's eyes looked haunted in the photo. The difference between the two brothers was astonishing.

Jack groaned. “O’ God please stop or I'll put my head in the oven with the cookies.”

Alfred smiled. “The oven is electric sir.”

Later that evening, Harley was upstairs having headed up before Jack in order to start a bath for the two of them, a nice bubble bath for them to soak in together. She decided to go ahead and get it started while Jack and Alfred spoke a little longer She giggled thinking about taking a bath with Jack...maybe a little something else. She giggled happily to herself at the thought. She scurried into the bathroom singing to herself.

“Loving you is easy cause you're beautiful.

Making love with you is all I want to do.

Loving you is more than just a dream come true.

And everything I do, is out of loving you...”

Harley was all smiles; it had been a wonderful, calm day. Though she enjoyed the thrill of travel and new locales, her new roller derby activities, concerts, and other excitement with Jack, days like today were just part of why she looked forward to spending her life with Jack. She was just adding some bubble bath when her phone, which she had set by the sink, began to ring. She was still singing under her breath when she reached over and picked up her phone. Distracted with her task, Harley answered without looking at it.

“Hello?”

“Hey baby. How's it going?”

Harley felt her blood run cold, her fingers around the phone had gone numb.

She hissed. “Stop calling me. I am not giving you anything.”

Harleen immediately resurfaced; it was her hand holding the phone to her ear that started to shake.

Guy laughed. “Oh Quinz...still so naïve. Still so stupid. You are going to give me what I want you little bitch and what I want is a hundred thousand—or else I am going to make your fucking life hell Quinz. Hell,” he emphasized the word slowly. “I will make sure Jack Wayne hates you so much he won't be able to even look at you.”

Harleen tried not to cry. Even the idea of Jack hating her hurt. She couldn't live without him. She loved him so much and the mere thought of him hating her caused her eyes to sting. She couldn't help the tears that were rolling down her cheeks. Guy had made her feel worse than her step-father ever had...that she was small and useless, that no one but him would love her and then he would hit her. Harleen closed her eyes. She was stronger than this...Jack had helped make her stronger.

Harleen hissed. “You come anywhere near Jack, I will kill you Guy.”
Guy laughed. “A hundred thousand will do for starters Quinz, remember that. We can have a nice serious discussion alone about the rest...the payments I expect...or I swear it won't just be Jack Wayne who won't be able to stand you...it will be all of Gotham.” Then the phone went dead.

Harleen dropped the phone and angrily rubbed her hands over her eyes, but the tears wouldn't stop. She looked at herself in the mirror. “He is not going to hurt me. He can't do anything to hurt me. Nothing he can say will stop Jack from loving me...he doesn't have any power over me.” As she spoke to herself in the mirror, Harleen seemed to back away, fading back into the background of her mind. Harley smiled at herself. He could call all he wanted...say what he wanted, but she wasn't going to cave in to his stupid demands.

Harley washed her face and stripped, tossing her clothing in a corner.

A few minutes later Jack came waltzing into the bathroom following the sounds of Harley singing.

“No one else can make me feel the colors that you bring,
Stay with me while we grow old,
and we will live each day in spring time.
Cause loving you has made my life so beautiful.
And every day of my life, is filled with loving you.
Loving you I see your soul come shining through.
And every time that we have I'm more in love with you....”

Jack leaned in the doorway of the bathroom where he could see Harley, her back to him, reclining in the tub full of bubbles. Her hair was wet and slicked back, her head resting against the tub's edge. She had lit a few candles around the bathroom to permeate the moist air with the warm scent of vanilla. Harley turned to look over her shoulder at him smiling when she sensed him.

“You singing just for me toots?” Jack's grin was warm, but with an edge of mischief.

“You just going to stand there or are you going to strip naked and get in here with me?” Harley purred.

Jack laugh. “Naked in a tub with a gorgeous blonde? Only a fool or a married man refuses an invite like that!” Jack laughed, pulling his shoes off.

She watched while Jack undressed quickly before he walked over and slowly stepped into the tub to sink into the water with a contented sigh. “Mm...nice. I love all the bubbles!” Jack sank down. “I brought us up a plate of cookies. Left the rest for Alfred and Bruce.”

Harley giggled as she scooted closer Jack and wrapped her legs over his thighs and around so that she could drape her arms around his neck. Jack grabbed her waist to tug her even closer. She could feel his quickly hardening erection bump against her in the water. She dragged her teeth over her bottom lip with a wicked grin.

“You happy to see me?” Her eyes drifted down with a significant crook of her eyebrow.
Jack licked his lips. “Oh, I'm always happy to see you Harley.”

He scooped up some bubbles and blew them into her face.

She giggled, shaking her head and wrinkling her nose before she leaned closer to kiss him, covering his mouth with hers, her tongue easing into his mouth. Jack groaned softly holding her tight, returning her kiss with equal zeal.

While they were kissing she scooped up some bubbles placing them onto his head with a giggle against his lips. Jack grinned opening his eyes though he didn't take his lips from hers. “Oh, that how we are going to play, is it?”

Jack scooped up a larger handful, plopping them onto Harley's head. She laughed, the bubbles running down her face. She wrinkled her nose. “You are so bad!”

“Tell me you want me Harley,” Jack breathed softly, his blue eyes boring into her light blue ones.

Harley growled a response. “I want you Jack.”

Jack ran the flat of his tongue up her neck biting her chin before he hissed with desire. “I want you Harley. I want you now and I want you to fuck me.”

Harley reached down into the water to hold him steady before Jack lowered her down, squeezing her rear hard. He closed his eyes dropping his head back against the tub when he felt his body connect with hers, running his hands up her back and over her sides, the tips of his fingers dragging along her ribs. Harley’s features contorted with the intensity of feeling, Jack filling her, the way he was grabbing her backside, the slightly painful press of his fingers into her skin. She loved it all so much that she would not be able to describe it in words if anyone had asked her (not that she would share such intimate information with anyone other than Jack, anyway.) She grabbed the back of the tub and had just started to roll her hips when Jack grabbed her and held on tight before he flipped their positions around splashing water everywhere.

Harley squealed with laughter. “Puddin!”

Jack grinned picking her up and setting her on the edge of the tub. “What is it pumpkin?” he asked innocently.

He set her on the edge which forced Harley to balance her tush, but she had to grab hold of the edge to prevent herself from toppling over when Jack spread her legs wider. Jack began a slow rotation of his hips as he grabbed both her breasts with his hands, shoving them up where he bit and licked, sucking, more biting as if he simply couldn't get enough, that he needed to devour her. At the same time his hips jerked, plunging him in and out of her warm wetness groaning at the way her body tightened around him, pulling at him.

Harley cried out when Jack thrust especially hard, but it was a cry of pleasure and her orgasm burst, flooding her with heat when her pleasure peaked then crashed over her. “Uuuuhh...Jack!! Uuhh...”

Jack pushed himself up balancing on one knee, bringing his left leg up to press his foot against the back of the tub, wrapping Harley’s leg around his waist he started to quicken the pace of his thrusts, harder, needing to be deeper.

Harley dug her nails into his rear, lifting his hips higher, helping him thrust deeper. Jack used one hand to balance, his long fingers wrapped around the edge of the tub, his other hand was in her hair holding onto a tight handful, pressing her mouth to his. He could feel Harley about the cum again as she was tightening around him in a way that felt like she was trying to pull his very being from his body.

Jack groaned like a man in pain. “I'm gonna cum Harley...ahh...ahhha...”

The sound of wet flesh slapping hard against wet flesh, accompanied by the sound of splashing water mixed as background music to their shared panting until Jack hissed.

Jack cried out, letting himself go with a loud. “FUUCK!!”

Harley dug her fingers painfully into his hip, but he didn't care. He couldn't think or see straight because not only was his own orgasm blowing his mind, but Harley came at the same moment he did, the shared pleasure, her body holding him tight, the flood of warmth, her cries driving him beyond words. “PUDDIN! Aah..yes!!”

Jack was sure he passed out for a moment which made him start to laugh. Just sank back down into the water, tugging Harley with him and grinning from ear to ear. “Maybe we should take a shower?”

Harley blushed wrapping her arms around his neck and settling her head on his shoulder. “Yeah, maybe so puddin.”

Later that evening, Jack was dressed a light-blue Gucci Bee Jacquard Oxford “Duke” shirt and a 3-piece navy Armani suit tailored to fit him in such a way that Harley nearly dragged him back to the room. He paced while they waited for Frost, who was a few minutes late. Harley was dressed for the evening in a short, chic little red dress with a plunging neckline and little metal hoop accents that accentuated her trim, figure with an angled hemline. She wore a pair of black, high heeled sandals and her long hair was piled up, held in place by a couple of hair sticks. She was watching Jack pace, smoking on a cigarette with an aggravated disposition.

(Earlier upstairs, Jack had leaned in while she was doing her make-up with a lusty. “Tell me you are not wearing panties under that dress.”

Harley had grinned. “You'll just have to wait and find out won't you?”

Jack had groaned. “You are killing me!”)

Jack was slightly annoyed as they waited for Frost to show up. Jack had just tossed his cigarette down onto the gravel of the driveway (which would annoy Bruce if he found out) and pulled his phone from his inside jacket pocket ready to dial again, when Frost came driving up the driveway. He swiftly hopped out of the car and opened the door to the vehicle for the two of them. Harley thought Frost looked pale and tired. He knew he had messed up, but didn't know what to do about it.

Frost muttered without looking up. “I'm so sorry, Boss.”

Jack frowned handing Harley into the back of the car before he turned to face Frost.

Jack didn't shut the door on Harley, instead leaning against it as he spoke. “Why are you late sweetheart—and I want the truth.” Jack stood up and pulled out another cigarette and his lighter, lit the end and waited, clearly giving Frost a minute to collect himself before he spoke. Jack looked calm, but Harley could recognize the agitation behind his movements. Jack didn't like running late, ever.

Frost frowned glancing down at his shoes as he spoke. “It's...it's personal Boss.”

“Personal in that you won't tell me or personal in that it's family?” Jack leaned on the back car door again taking a long drag on his cigarette as he studied Frost. Harley looked up from the back seat, watching the two of them. Frost frowned glancing up at Jack then back down at the tips of his shoes. “Well sir, it's my mother. I'd prefer not to go into it, if you don't mind.”

Jack frowned, his voice growing quiet and ignoring Frost's protest. “Your mother?” Harley recognized the change in Jack's voice, a subtle shift in his concern.

Frost nodded. “See Boss, she's in this care facility and...it's not the best, but it's the best I can afford. I was with her tonight and she ain't doing so well.”

Jack looked thoughtful, then he walked around and put his arm around Frost's shoulders. “Look Frost, you're my friend right?”

Frost nodded. “Sure thing, Boss.”

Jack tilted his head to glance at Harley. She knew exactly what he was going to do without Jack saying a word. She smiled and nodded. Jack grinned and continued. “Then, since Im your friend AND your boss I want you to feel like you can come to me at any time. So, I want you, while Harley and I are at the game tonight, to write down all your mother's information and let me take care of everything. I will get her set up in the best facility here in Gotham. You give me the details of her illness and I will make sure everything is paid for. I don't want you to worry about a thing except making sure you visit her often. All right sweetheart?”

Frost blinked. He wasn't sure for a moment that he had heard Mr. Wayne correctly. “You want to pay for everything?”

Jack squeezed Frost's shoulders. “Yes. You my friend are not just a good employee, but you're a good son to your mother.” Jack grew quiet then said softly. “I miss my mother Frost. So...” Jack smiled, releasing Frost. “I expect all the information by the time you are driving us home and I promise that by day's end tomorrow your mother will be taken care of.”

Frost stared at Jack then suddenly—taking a chance—the man grabbed Jack in an embrace. “Thank you Boss, thank you so much.”

Jack smiled and returned the embrace, patting Frost's back. “Not a problem my dear, not a problem at all.”

Tonight, the card game was set up in a different location (probably since Jack had killed a man at the other place.) This time Alex had managed to secure an abandoned church for the game. When Frost drove up to the address that Jack had given him, Jack burst out laughing.

“Leave it to Alex to find an abandoned church to use for an illegal game!!” Jack actually slapped his knee in glee. Harley leaned over Jack's lap to look out his window at the church. The building was in the Gothic architecture style with large glass windows (most seemed to still be in place Harley noted), clustered columns in the front and sharply pointed spires. She could see what looked to be intricate sculptures and flying buttresses on the outside of the church.
Harley giggled. “Reminds me of the Addams family.”

Jack laughed grabbing her hand when she sat up. “Say something French Harley.”

Harley grinned and whispered, “Je t’aime.”

Jack took her hand and kissed her knuckles before he started to kiss his way up her arm. Harley giggled. “Jack!!”

He grinned. “I always loved those movies. My favorite I think was the Addams family motto, “Sic gorgiamus allos subjectatos nunc”...“We gladly feast on those who would subdue us.” I believe Harley, that is a statement you and I could get behind, don't you sweets?”

Harley grinned as Jack stepped out of the car after Frost had opened the door. She took Jack's hand and he delicately helped her out of the car. With a smile Harley replied. “I completely agree puddin.”

Jack hooked her arm through his, kissing her knuckles one more time before he did so. “I knew you would, my lovely little minx.” He gave her cheek a quick kiss before they walked toward the church together.

The night air was beginning to grow chilly as Gotham began to head into the fall months, but when they stepped into the abandoned church the temperature became warmer. The walls of the church echoed with the sounds of Skrillex's “Bangarang” playing in the background. (Which made Harley think that Alex ought to attend a rave or something sometime.) The long aisle would have been beautiful at one time, Harley thought. Here the Gothic architecture was shown in the ogival arches that ran along the sides of the aisle, the beautiful stained glass windows and the vibrant heavily decorated walls and ceiling depicting angels and saints.

The altar was still intact with more of the extreme ogival Gothic arches that were painted gold, now pealing away to show the dark, rotten wood underneath. At the altar was where Alex had set up the poker table and the bar from the last game. The table was the same one he had used last time (which made Harley wonder who Alex hired to lug the damn thing about from place to place. Of course, now that she thought about it, how many of these abandoned places did Alex own around Gotham?)

Alex had candles lit everywhere throughout the church, which for a moment made Harley feel as if they were participating in a séance rather than a game of poker. He had also strung work lights everywhere to provide more useful lighting, but as they approached closer Harley saw that tonight Alex wasn't alone; tonight he had his girlfriend Alice with him looking adorable in a sleeveless white swing dress with musical notes printed all over it.

The cast of characters from the last game was much the same: Tobias Whale had returned (this time with a different woman on his arm...a red head who looked less snobbish than the last woman), Professor Pyg (with piggy half-mask in place), Simon Stagg (this time Stagg had come stag, Harley noticed with a giggle. She of course had to share her little play on words with Jack, whispering in his ear which had him snickering into her shoulder), Gina the nurse, this time in Disney's Frozen themed scrubs, Yuri “The Russian” Dimitrov, wearing a floor-length pink faux fur coat, shirtless and wearing pants that reminded Harley of a disco ball and his boyfriend, dressed much more subdued in black slacks and a sunflower pattern dress-shirt. Along with the players from last time, there was a new player whom Harley recognized from the masquerade party at Wayne Manor, Dr. Johnathan Crane. The tall sandy blonde doctor was dressed like a mortician in a black on black suit with his sandy blonde hair slicked back. He smiled at the both of them giving them a thin lipped nod of acknowledgment when he saw them walking down the church's nave. Harley shivered. Dr. Crane had a strange way about him...

Harley also noticed that the serving girls for tonight (while were just as scantily clad as last time) were different from the last game, as was the bartender. After what happened last time, Harley thought that was probably to be expected. Not everyone could handle seeing someone die, Harley thought with a smile. Alex was sipping on a what looked to be a black Russian, his arm around Alice's waist, when he saw them coming up the nave.

“Holy fuck man! I was beginning to think you two weren't coming!” Alex laughed setting his drink down on the portable bar and hurried down the nave toward them with Alice walking a little slower behind him though she was all smiles. Tonight Alex was dressed much the same as at the last game except tonight his t-shirt had pictures of playing cards on it that read “I play poker and know things; That's what I do.”

Alex embraced Jack and then Harley, kissing them both on the cheek. “So glad to fucking see you man. You look so much better than the last time I saw you! You were fucked up!”

Jack laughed. “Yes, well some tender-loving care from my sweet Harley helped a great deal in my healing.”

Harley smiled kissing Jack on the cheek. Alex laughed. “God you two are like a fucking Hallmark card. Well get the fuck over here, get a drink and let's play some fucking cards. Oh and Alice is with me this time. She wanted to come and watch.”

Alice smiled. “So nice to see you both again.” She took Harley's hands and the two women mock-kissed each other on the cheek. Jack took Alice's hand and gave her a light kiss on the knuckles. “It's nice to see Alex hasn't been such a pig as to drive you away.”

Alex snorted. “Alice is a fucking angel.”

Alice giggled.

Harley suppressed a delighted giggle and would squeeze his thigh.

Crane was the only factor in tonight's game that was bothering Harley. He was polite, well-spoken... there was nothing that should have triggered Harley's dislike, but there was just something about the way he studied...everyone...like they were all experiments, bugs under a microscope, as if he were looking for something, trying to pick them apart. Harley had read some of Crane's work when she was a student. He was particularly interested in what made people scared, what frightened them. Harley picked up her drink, a hot buttered rum, letting the warmth of the liquid calm her nerves. His work had been interesting and just a little unnerving.

Jack didn't seem the least bit creeped out by the man. If anything, Jack would simply stare back at Crane with a playful grin on his red lips. But other than Crane's unnerving staring, the game was going along nicely.
Harley returned her focus back to Jack. She smiled and glanced at Jack's cards, her hand settling down between his thighs, enjoying the heat she could feel between his legs, the slight jump when she would stroke her fingers too close to his crotch. Jack would bump her with his elbow whenever her fingers would stray too close...which of course only encouraged her to be naughty and continue to stroke him under the table.

She was just about to see if she could undo his zipper and slide her hand into Jack's pants when she noticed movement down at the end of the nave. It was hard to see anything with the illumination so much dimmer there, but she could have sworn she saw a shadow. Harley moved her hand and squeezed his knee. Jack glanced at Harley, their eyes meeting, then she motioned with her eyes down the nave. Jack glanced in that direction. Harley could see the minor twitch at the corner of his mouth when Jack saw the shadow she had seen.

Jack set his cards down and put his right hand over Harley's and tapped out the number three with his finger over the top of her hand. Harley nodded; three people had slipped into the church.

Harley glanced around the table, it seemed that no one else had noticed the intrusion. Jack hadn't picked his cards back up. Harley felt the shift in him that signaled he was about to stand up when suddenly three shadows emerged out of the darkness. One of them rushed forward, taking long strides as he yelled.

"All right—nobody move!!"

The man that yelled was tall, with a frame that was going toward pudgy (he clearly had a developing "beer belly," at least that was what Harley thought. He also had short black hair cut in that style of "smart-ass businessman" that asshats the world over liked to get. Harley thought to herself that he was the type of guy she would have hated whether he was holding a gun on her or not.)

The man was dressed in an expensive suit, but he looked as if he had taking a recent beating, there was a nasty looking bruise developing under his left eye and his lips were split. His expensive suit looked as if he had been sleeping in a gutter, blood and grime staining the expensive fabric. His companions looked more like hired muscle. Two rather tall, muscled types who hired themselves as 'bodyguards' or whatever paid well, but they were usually all appearance and not a lot of strength, Harley thought to herself. At least that was what Jack had told her once when he was explaining why he and Bruce never had bodyguards.

She glanced at her puddin, who had narrowed his eyes dangerously. Harley smiled just a little; clearly he was thinking the same thing as her. All three men where holding Glock-17’s, though the man speaking didn't hold his weapon with the comfort of the other two. Jack figured that made that man more dangerous than the other two. The man who had spoken glared at Alex as he halted a few paces away from the poker table.

"Except you Alex, you can stand up and walk over here real slow."

Alex stood slowly, his one hand in the air. "What the fuck is this all about Rippey?"

Alice grabbed Alex's arm. "Don't please."

Alex glanced at Alice and grinned. "It's okay honey."

He started to walk over, his one hand still up, edged slowly around the table as everyone watched him. Jack was fuming. No one moved, the other two gunmen kept a close eye on them. (Though Jack could see by the looks the two men were exchanging, they recognized some of their “hostages.” Jack suppressed a smirk thinking to himself that they must have just realized the shit they had stepped in by agreeing to work with this Rippey.)

When Alex was close enough, Rippey grinned holding the gun on Alex, the barrel aimed right at his face.

Alice was standing still, so pale that Harley was worried she might pass out. Jack frowned, his thoughts racing when he realized he had heard the name Rippey from Alex before...He remembered the last name from some conversations with Alex because he had made some lame joke about the name. Alex had told him once that he had some competition in the “information” business, a man named Andy Rippey. Rippey had a bought and paid for education, had worked in the stock market and had made some deals over the years with some very bad men in Gotham. Rippey thought he was better than Alex and under the delusion that he could push Alex out of his top-spot as the guy everyone went to in Gotham for information. Andy Rippey wanted to be the man in the know, the guy everyone invited to the big parties, who went everywhere for free and was everyone's friend. Except, as Alex had told Jack, Rippey was the world's biggest fucking asshole. Rippey wasn't nearly as good at getting information as he thought he was and he had “accidentally” screwed some of his clients trying to play both sides, trying use information he had to create a situation Rippey had thought he could benefit from. Instead it had landed Rippey in the hotseat.

Apparently Rippey had problems being a neutral source of information; he was easily bought, which led to Rippey giving out bad information on purpose...and as Alex had said, Rippey had fucking screwed up. But someone like Rippey, Alex had told him, blamed all his problems on someone else, in this case: Alex.

Rippey laughed waving his weapon in Alex's face. “Ain't none of your fancy friends going to get you out of trouble this time Alex!!! This time I know exactly how to get rid of my competition!”

Alex groaned rolling his eyes. “Rippey, you fucking asshole. Killing me isn't going help, ya know? No one likes you Rippey and you're a fucking asstwat!”

The rest of the guests around the table had gone still. Jack frowned, his eyes darting around gauging who would help or hinder. He didn't actually think anyone of them would hinder—all of the poker players were, as far as Jack knew, good clients of Alex's (or else they wouldn't be here at one of Alex's games), but while they would not hinder Jack trying to save Alex, they certainly wouldn't help. Why endanger themselves? Jack thought in derision. The staff, no help there, Jack thought. Just plain people getting paid to do a job.

Jack glanced at Harley. She gave him an encouraging smile and a hint of a nod and Jack smiled in return. He knew he could always count on Harley.

Rippey snarled. “If it wasn't for you Alex I would have taken over Gotham. All of these people would be begging me for help! Coming to me!! But no, if if wasn't for you! I would be the toast of Gotham right now!!”

Alex snorted. “Fucking bullshit Rippey, even if I wasn't the one squashing your shitty ass, no one would want to do business with you! No one likes you Rippey. You. Are. An. ASSHOLE! So you know what? Kill me if you want. You will still never be me. I'm twice the man you are, even considering...” He wiggled the fingers of his one hand.
Jack smiled. He had to admire Alex; even with a gun to his face, he didn't back down. Jack spoke up.

“Rippey is it? You know, if you want to walk out of here alive, I would put the gun away.” Jack smiled serenely, taking out a cigarette and lighting it.

Rippey snarled. “Shut the fuck up! Who are you anyway?”

Alex smirked.

Jack stood and slowly walked around the table with cigarette in one hand and with his other hand, he took Harley's hand leading her around the table with him closer to one of the gunmen while Jack was focused on Rippey.

“The name is Jack Wayne. I'm sure you've heard of Wayne Enterprises, if you are anyone that is?” Jack took a drag on his cigarette, running the tips of his fingers along Harley's spine.

Rippey narrowed his eyes. “You're that crazy younger brother of Bruce Wayne aren't you?” Rippey frowned.

Alex snickered. “Oh fuck.”

Jack moved swiftly, Rippey twisted around to bring his pistol to aim at Jack when he realized Jack was coming toward him. Jack grabbed the barrel of the pistol with his left hand yanking Rippey's arm down and to the right with his right hand. Jack yanked his cigarette from his mouth and jabbed the burning end into Rippey's eye. In the same fluid movement, Jack let the cigarette go, grabbed Rippey's fist, yanking the weapon free and threw it the floor where the gun slid underneath the poker table.

Harley was annoyed. Not only had these jerks decided to come in and mess up a perfectly nice evening of gambling, but this was the second time her puddin's game of poker was sabotaged by someone being a jerk!! She moved at the same time that Jack did, heading toward the closest of the two hired guns next to her. (One of them was blonde, looked like a TV cut-out of a hired thug, all show muscles, ugly face and ugly smiles while the one closest to Harley had black hair.) He had turned looking over toward Jack and Rippey, leaving him unprepared for Harley. She rushed forward moving swiftly on her high heels. Ducking under the man's gun, Harley came right up into his face startlingly him. She grabbed the front of his shirt in both her hands, hissing as she did so.

And slammed her forehead into the man's nose, breaking it with a sickening sounding crunch, accompanied by a sort of squished melon noise.

The guy yelled. “MI NOTHE!

But Harley wasn't done with him. She shoved the man back from her, releasing the hold she had of his shirt. He stumbled trying to aim his weapon with the one hand, while the other hand was grabbing at his profusely bleeding nose as if simply holding his nose would somehow make it hurt less. Harley, with a lovely smile spread across her face, performed a back flip, bringing her legs up and kicking the dark-haired thug under the chin with a smart thwack of one of her heeled shoes. The dull thud of Harley's foot connecting with his chin, followed by his head snapping back with another sickening sounding crunch. The man fell to the floor like a sack of potatoes. He lay there gasping for air, his nose broken, chin split open and having knocked the air from his lungs when he fell, hitting the remains of the church's hardwood floors.
Harley stepped over to him with just a little swing in her hips and placed a heeled shoe on his head, the heel hovering over the man's eye. She smiled down at him with her hands on her hips.

Once Rippey was disarmed, (Jack wanted to laugh at the ridiculously shocked expression on Rippey's face when Jack easily disarmed him), Jack brought his knee up slamming it into Rippey's crotch. Rippey gasped at the shock of pain shooting through his groin, but before he had time to even fully appreciate the pain of his crushed testicles, Jack brought his right arm back and slugged him right in the face with a meaty sound of fist impacting with face. The impact of hitting Rippey sent an electrical shock of pain racing up Jack's arm, reminding him the his hand was only recently healed, but Jack just snarled and ignored the pain.

Rippey stumbled backwards a step, but Jack didn't give him time to recover. Instead, Jack grabbed Rippey by the front of his suit with his left hand, cocked his arm back with a wide grin on his face, and hit Rippey again in the face. The second hit knocked Rippey's head back, blood flying into the air from the man's shattered nose. Jack's fist came back bloody, having not just cut his knuckles on Rippey's teeth, but the blood from Rippey' bleeding nose had spattered onto Jack's fist.

Jack laughed. “You really are as stupid as you look. Though I think Alex called you the perfect name, an asstwat. Rippey. You are an asstwat. Coming uninvited into our poker game and threatening my friend? No one—and I mean no one—threatens anyone I consider a friend.” Jack smiled, but there was no humor in the expression. Jack's blue eyes were flat when he smiled at Rippey.

Jack hissed. “And you know what's even worse than that Rippey? You held a gun on my girl. No one threatens my girl or my friend.”

Jack continued to hold Rippey by his suit and hit him in the face a third time. If Rippey's nose wasn't broken by the first two hits, this one most certainly broke the man's nose as the sound of broken bone grinding against bone was easily heard along with a howl of pain. Rippey tried to bring his hands up to defend himself, taking a swing at Jack. Rippey's knuckles grazed Jack's chin, but in response, Jack slammed his fist into Rippey's stomach knocking the air from the man. Jack let Rippey go, easily dancing out of the way when the man vomited.

Alex quickly made his way back to Alice's side. Alice was watching Jack and Harley with wide eyes, all the blood drained from her face. The third gunman looked torn between helping or fleeing. By his inaction, it was clear he was at a loss. Everyone else just sat there watching impassively. They had already seen Jack Wayne kill once and all of them had been on the other end of a gun before...but it seemed as if Jack Wayne and his woman had things under control so they just watched, sipped their drinks and waited for the game to continue. Dr. Crane was watching all the developments with keen interest and clinical detachment. His dark eyes were on everyone's' reactions to the situation and he made mental notes that he would write down once he returned home. The wait staff that Alex had hired were clearly better trained because the young women never uttered a word or scream. They simply turned away.

Rippey dropped to his knees gasping. Jack pushed Rippey back, causing the man to fall onto his back continuing to gasp.

Jack strolled over, and straddled Rippey smiling as he sat down on the man's chest, resting his elbows on his knees.
“You know Rippey...” Jack giggled as he flicked the man on his forehead. “Rippey...what a God awful name. Anyway Rippey, I could just let you go with a warning, but I have this feeling you are one of those individuals who doesn’t learn lessons very well. So, I’ve decided that this, this is going to be a permanent lesson. Never go after my friends and never hold a weapon on my girl.”

Jack sneered and suddenly dropped his hands down over Rippey’s face, his thumbs over the man’s eyes, one good and the other blistered eyelid. Rippey gurgled and started to struggle, reaching up to grab at Jack’s arms. Jack smiled and pressed his thumbs into Rippey's eyes. Jack leaned in, pressing down with all his strength until there was a distinctive crunching sound accompanied by a high-pitched shriek. Jack continued to sit on Rippey as the man thrashed and screamed. Jack Wayne sighed and made a disgusted noise, wiping his bloody thumbs on the shoulders of Rippey's suit, then without looking behind him Jack simply held his bloody hand out and in a flat voice said.

Jack didn’t see who gave him the gun (Alex had retrieved it from under the poker table and handed it to Jack.) Jack held the weapon to Rippey's head and with a smile he said. “Live and learn...oh well, in your case: live and die.” With that Jack shot Rippey in the head, silencing the screaming coming from the ‘eyeless’ man.

Jack wrinkled his nose, jerking a little when blood, skull and brains splattered his suit.

Harley giggled from where she stood watching him. “Oh puddin.”

Jack smiled looking over to where Harley had her heel positioned over one of the gunmen ready to take his eye. The gunman's friend was still standing there off to the side, staring in horror, his pistol only half-halfheartedly pointed at anyone.

Jack slowly stood, wiping some of the bits of Rippey off the front of his suit after taking the handkerchief from his jacket pocket. He frowned, dropping the gun onto Rippey's chest turning to look at the other gunman. “I'm hoping you and your friend are both intelligent men and have decided that perhaps you should involve yourselves in a different kind of work?”

The man at Harley's feet was holding his broken nose with both hands, but he nodded and his friend looked slowly around at everyone mumbling. “Ah...yeah..look, he was just paying us to be here. We ain't got no beef with you guys.”

Jack chuckled. “Ain't got no beef? Did you hear that Harley? They ain't got no beef.”

Harley walked away from the man lying at her feet, strolling over to Jack and laying her hand on her puddin's shoulder as she leaned into him. Jack grinned at her, looking into her eyes. Harley reached up and wiped some of the blood from his face with her thumb before she kissed him, wrapping her other hand around Jack's neck and pulling him closer. Jack grabbed her waist with one hand, holding her against him for the kiss then let her go reluctantly. He sighed happily. Without looking at either man he said softly, the single word clearly directed at them. “Go.”

The gunman that was still standing hurried over and grabbed his friend helping him up, the two men leaving without a backward glance.

As soon as they were gone Alex started laughing. “FUCKING HELL Jack!! Man, you are a fucking lunatic!! You saved my fucking life! I swear though that's two fuckheads you've killed at my card games. I don't know if I can fucking invite you anymore!”

Alex hurried over and yanked Jack into an embrace with his one arm. Jack laugheded hugging Alex back. “Harley and I, we take care of our friends and I promise, next game I will keep the killing to a minimum.”

Alex grinned. “Thanks man. I'm fucking serious. Ain't no one stood by me before, saved my life like that. I...I fucking appreciate it.”

Jack smiled. “You can always count on us Alex.”

Alex nodded. (For all his bravado when the gun had been held on him, he had been scared, but the emotion he was feeling right now was genuine thankfulness that Jack and Harley cared enough to save his life. Alex promised himself, no matter what, he would always have Jack's back, no matter what the future might bring.)

Alex took a breath and turned to everyone. “So, after we clean up this mess...” Here Alex indicated Rippey's dead body. “You guys still wanna play?”

There was a round of murmured consent. Alice looked a little scared, but she nodded wrapping her arms around Alex, burying her face against his shoulder. Alex smiled rubbing her back with his one hand.

The rest of the poker game went well, with Jack dropping out after winning three hundred and thirty thousand. Yuri gave Jack a seductive smile. “Come on Jack, you know you want to play with us a little longer.” He licked his lips which made Jack laugh, but Yuri's boyfriend look as if he wanted to tear Yuri's tongue out of his head. Stagg frowned. “Ain't going to give me a chance to win more money off you?”

Jack stood taking Harley's hand and kissing her knuckles. “'Fraid not gents. I have some unfinished business tomorrow night that I should probably rest up for.”

Alex laughed. “Fuck yeah you do. Going finally get your little showdown with Oswald Cobblepot.
That ought to be a fucking show! I still can't see that guy actually fucking fighting.”

Jack laughed. “It should be interesting. But thank you all for a fun game.”

Alex nodded. “See ya tomorrow, you crazy fuck.”

Crane stood up. “Might I have a word with the two of you in private? I could walk you out.” Crane smiled. “Sure man, we'll wait.”

The nave was wide enough that the three of them could walk side by side. Crane smiled. “That was rather interesting.”

Jack frowned. “What do you mean?”

“Your response to fear, the way you attacked that man without fear for your life. Both of you.”
Crane smiled and Jack, who had his arm around Harley's waist stopped to look at the man. “Are you going to be a problem Dr. Crane?”
Crane frowned for a moment, then smiled shaking his head. “No, no, I assure you. No, I do research on fear and I would be very interested in using you and your fiancee in my experiments.”

Jack’s eyes narrowed. “Use? Experiments?”

Crane shook his head. “You misunderstand Mr. Wayne. I would like for the two of you to participate in my fear experiments.”

Jack glanced at Harley then smiled. “We’ll think about it Dr. Crane.”

The next morning Harley was sitting up in bed waiting for Jack. He had gone downstairs to fetch them some breakfast. He had been gone a while so Harley assumed he was speaking with Alfred...maybe even Bruce. She smiled. It made her happy for Jack to be getting along with Bruce. She pushed her hair back behind her ears when her phone rang. She saw it was indeed Guy, the number unknown. Harley hit the button. “Stop calling here.”

Guy laughed. “Cranky in the morning aren’t you? Did you know there was an article in the society section about you and Jack Wayne? That his brother Bruce is going to be throwing the two of you an engagement party?! Mmm...public acknowledgment for all of Gotham to see after weeks of being engaged, weeks of speculation on how serious the relationship was? Oh my, it’s all so exciting Quinz!”

Harleen crept into Harley's voice. “Shut up. Leave me alone.”

“Never Quinz. Not until I get my money. And as along as the money keeps coming you will never see my face.” Guy laughed.

Harleen felt the sting of tears behind her eyes. “You can't hurt me! You have nothing.”

Guy chuckled. “Oh Harleen...now you should know...it doesn't have to be the truth for my words to ruin your life. Fuck sweetie...all it has to be is a few hints, a little lie here and there...maybe some photo-shopped pictures...even if they are proved false, the damage will be done. Do you really want to risk your future happiness just to avoid paying some pocket change?” Guy sounded mock upset.

“Quinz, just pay me baby and you will never hear from me...unless there is no money and then everyone will here anything I want them to hear. I'm sure the local news would love to hear my side of the story. The spurned lover, dumped because of the Wayne fortune.” Guy laughed. “Don't disappointment Quinz.” The line went dead.

Harleen threw the phone across the room shattering it. She dropped her head down to her knees covering her head with her arms. She closed her eyes. He had nothing. There was nothing. He couldn't hurt her anymore...Harleen repeated to herself until she felt that confidence settle over her. Harley swallowed, assuring herself there was nothing he could do to her.
Harley smiled softly as she studied Jack's profile. His blue eyes were intent on his task, a lock of his brown hair had fallen forward over his forehead, and he was holding his bottom lip between his teeth while he slowly dragged the brush across her nails. He was concentrating on painting her fingernails, alternating between black and red. They were going to do some shopping before the fight tonight with Cobblepot. Jack already seemed bored with the idea of fighting, as if the fight club had lost it “newness” and Jack was ready to move on to something else. Harley was fine with that; she didn't want him to be hurt again. But at the same time, there was something hot about watching him fight...the sweat rolling down his body, watching the movements of his lean muscles...blood on his teeth and the chaos in his eyes. Harley smiled blushing at her thoughts. Thinking about Jack helped her calm her nerves which had been frazzled since she woke up that morning.

Harley had been distracted during breakfast and now also as she sat, wearing only her bra and panties, letting Jack paint her nails. She was still distracted by the uncomfortable feeling of something crawling over her skin. She had a nightmare last night about Guy...she swallowed at the memory and the shiver of Harleen eased to the surface of her thoughts. She couldn't remember exactly what the dream had been about, just the feeling of something weighing her down still permeated everything.

She didn't tell Jack about the dream or the feeling that settled over her when she woke up. She had simply rolled over and snuggled closer to him. Jack had opened his arms without opening his eyes and pulled her against his chest, holding her tightly. He kissed the top of her head, rolling onto his side and wrapped one of his legs over her hip. The warmth of his body, the smell of his skin surrounding her, the steady beat of his heart, had lulled her back to a peaceful sleep.

But today, Jack was focused on their engagement party. Bruce had asked them to pick out the cupcakes they wanted and to place an order for the party, at least several hundred cupcakes.

Jack blew on her nails, holding her hand across his while he blew. Jack frowned glancing up at her. He could feel the tension in her arm.

“You okay Harls?” Jack asked holding her hand up to blow on her fingernails again.

“I'm fine, promise.” Harley smiled looking into his eyes. Her heart hurt for a moment looking at him. She loved him so much that it hurt. A physical pain, a twisting in her chest. If Guy did anything to hurt Jack...hurt this, what they had...Mentally she cursed at Harleen for being so weak. Harleen only replied with a choked, “I'm sorry,” before Harleen faded back into the darkness. Harley swallowed and changed the subject. “You want me to paint your nails?”

Jack nodded. “Yep! Just black today.”

Jack smiled. “Yep, going for a more 'elegant' look.” He snorted.

Harley laughed. “Our engagement party isn't going to stay 'elegant' is it?”

Harley shook the little polish bottle before unscrewing the top and taking out the little brush.

Jack laughed before making a rude noise. “No. I'm going to hire a magician.”

Harley giggled. “What?”
“A magician! I ever tell you how Bruce hates magic?” Jack laid his hand across Harley's knee while she worked.

“He does?” Harley frowned. “Why?”

Jack shrugged. “When we were little, I remember our parents had a magician for his birthday. Giovanni Zatara...supposedly a famous magician. 'Course, neither of us knew who he was at the time. I guess he was a friend of our father, offered to show up for Bruce's birthday. But anyway, Bruce was terrified of him after he did a few tricks. Though he would never admit that. But as we became older I think magic actually made him angry! He doesn't like things he can't figure out and magic is something he could never figure out.” Jack switched hands so that Harley could work on the other hand. “I remember when we were in high school Bruce was on this mission to disprove all magic. He learned how to do all the magic tricks, every sleight of hand trick, disappearing act...you name it, Bruce learned how to do it. But what really got under his skin was when he taught me the same tricks, except I was better at them than he ever was.” Jack chuckled. “God he hated that—another thing he will never admit. Bruce never admits when he is upset.” Jack smiled ruefully before he continued. “Actually, there were a few tricks that my brother couldn’t figure out, a couple of Zatara's tricks that boggled the mind. It's the tricks Bruce couldn't figure out that really bothered him.”

Harley frowned as she listened and concentrated on his nails. “Why?”

Harley finished with his nails, leaned over and kissed him lightly on the lips. “I will always go wherever you lead Jack.”

Jack gazed at her. “Always and forever Harley.”

“Always and forever,” she repeated gazing back at him.

Jack reached out to carefully run his fingertips along her jaw in a tender caress before he continued. “Anyway, Giovanni Zatara has a daughter that's roughly around the same age as Bruce. I remember her, raven hair, big grey eyes...she was nice to me. Not a lot of people were...or are...” Jack frowned and for a moment his eyes clouded with memories. Harley had just finished screwing the top on the nail polish back on when she saw the look in his eyes. She held her arms open to him.

Jack smiled softly and scooted into Harley's embrace. She laid back on the bed, his head nestled between her breasts while he spoke. “Anyway, her name is Zatanna. She is playing at a local theater here to some sold out crowds, but I called her and she agreed to meet with us. I told her about the party and she seemed pretty excited to attend, invited us over this afternoon to discuss her fees and to catch up she said.”

“Catch up? Sounds like you and Bruce knew her well.” Harley stroked her fingers through his hair, feeling a spike of jealousy that she quickly dismissed, at least temporarily, while Jack spoke.

“She and her father came around several times after our parents' murder. I remember Bruce wasn't always very nice, especially if she did any magic while she was there and she had refused to show him her 'tricks' as he called them. I think he offended her.” Jack chuckled lightly to himself.

“But she was always nice to me, taught me my first card tricks, before Bruce, until she and her father stopped coming around. I sometimes wonder if Bruce chased them off...” Jack frowned closing his eyes. He smiled gently listening to Harley's heartbeat.

“Well it sounds like having her at the party will be fun. I always liked magic shows,” Harley said quietly, her eyes closed while her fingers played through Jack's hair. She could feel his smile against her skin.

Alfred was in the front room dusting when Harley and Jack came laughing and racing down the stairs. Harley (wearing a pair of black leggings, knee high black boots and an open shoulder lace detailed deep red top with long bell sleeves and a burgundy leather jacket, her hair done in a fishtail braid) squealed when Jack grabbed her around the waist lifting her off her feet. He threw her over his shoulder and carried her down the last few stairs. Jack was dressed in a pair of grey slacks, white dress shirt and a dark brown leather jacket that was fitted to him. The leather jacket had a 1940s bomber jacket feeling to it and a pair of black leather Chippewa Men's Rally 12” Euro Motorcycle boots.

Alfred winced. “Oh, please do be careful Master Jack!”

Jack hopped down the last step, his arms tight around Harley's waist, her feet in the air as she laughed and squealed at the same time. “JACK!!”

Jack set her down with a grin. “Sorry Alfred!” He grinned, clearly not sorry. Alfred sighed, but Harley hurried over and threw her arms around Alfred giving him a big kiss on the cheek. “Sorry Alfie!”

Alfred smiled and shook his head. “So, where are the two of you off to this fine day, if I may ask?”

Jack walked over and wrapped his arm around Harley's waist. “We are going to pick out and order cupcakes for our engagement party AND our outfits. Then I'm taking my girl to lunch.” Jack leaned over and kissed her at the corner of her mouth when he stopped short.

“Alfred! Where is that place you were telling me about a few weeks ago? The one where they have the swing dancing!” Jack asked excitedly.

Alfred frowned in thought then smiled as the name came to him. “Ah, it's called Swing 46, it is a jazz and supper club Master Jack.”

Jack was grinning at Harley. “I thought dinner and dancing...before the final event tonight.”

Harley frowned. “Are you sure about that puddin?”

Alfred smiled. “It is quite a nice establishment, Miss Harleen. I have gone, maybe once or twice, on my evenings off.”

Harley giggled. “Alfred! Really? With a date?”
Alfred smiled and went back to dusting. Harley giggled, noting that though Alfred smiled, he refrained from answering. “All right, dinner and dancing.”

Jack’s eyes were bright. “I love dancing with you Harls. In my arms swinging to the music…”

Jack scooped Harley up and swung her around the main room. Alfred smiled softly watching as Jack weaved with Miss Harleen in his arms. He was so happy to see Master Jack in love and Miss Harleen, just the way she gazed at him, it was obvious that she loved the younger Wayne brother. It did an old man's heart good.

Jack dipped Harley back stealing a kiss. “I could teach you how to sock hop tonight!”

Harley giggled. Jack took her hand and led her out the door to where he had driven the motorcycle around front. “See you later Alfie!” Jack put his hand over his mouth and blew Alfred a huge kiss.

Giggling happily, Harley did the same.

Alfred chuckled with a slight shake of his head and went back to dusting.

Harley had her arms wrapped tightly around Jack's waist while he drove, the motorcycle weaving through traffic as he headed to the bakery, a place called “Gotham Cakes and More.” The bakery store was located at 112th Eight Ave and was a small shop located between a bank and a small used book store. The front of the shop was a dark chocolate brown with large picture display windows where several tiered cakes were shown.

When they pulled up on the bike Harley looked in wonder at the cakes on display in the windows. They were gorgeous! True pieces of art, she thought. Jack helped her off the bike, taking her hand and not letting go as he twisted her around then out again in a spin. Harley laughed. “You are in a really good mood Jack!”

Jack grinned. “I don't know...I guess it's the idea of the whole of Gotham knowing you are my girl.” Jack wrapped an arm around her waist holding her against him, his other hand stroked slowly along her jaw. Harley cupped his face in her hands. “I love you so much Jack, so much.”

Jack kissed her, his lips sliding along hers before his tongue brushed against her lips. He pulled her closer deepening the kiss when some man walking down the street yelled. “Get a ROOM!”

Jack laughed against her mouth, reaching down to squeeze her rear for emphasis and yelled back. “I like an audience! I perform better under pressure!”

Harley burst out laughing. Jack grinned taking her hand and walked with her toward the bakery. They stopped at the windows to look at the wedding cakes. There was one that was grey and white with four layers ending in a castle, while another was blue and silver looking as if it were part of a palace in Paris. There were several that were covered in roses, or other flowers and another was black and white with silhouettes that illustrated a couple’s moments together. Jack laughed leaning close to Harley's ear.

“Ours would chronicle some of the people we have had to dispose of on the way.”

Harley snorted and covered her laugh. “Jack!”

“Oh, or silhouettes of all the places we've had sex! That would be an awesome cake!” Jack grinned and waggled his eyebrows at her. Harley blushed and laughed, playfully smacking him on the
The inside of the establishment smelled like vanilla and chocolate, mixed with the smell of coffee. The interior had shiny chocolate colored floors and bright honey colored walls. There were tables with stools, some lined across a counter, while others were in front of the windows and of course a large glass display case that held slices of cakes, cupcakes, danish, all matter of fresh baked goods. Jack swung Harley's hand between them as he walked up to the counter.

A young woman dressed in black slacks and a pink t-shirt, smiled brightly at them. “May I help you?”

Jack smiled. “Yes, my fiance and I have an appointment to meet with someone named Jeanie.”

“Oh yes you must be the Waynes, correct?”

Jack's grin widened. “Yes, the Waynes.”

The young woman smiled. “Why don't you have a seat and I'll send her right out.”

They only had to wait a handful of minutes, (in which Jack told Harley “Bakers earn the majority of their income in the morning, they earn most of their dough at yeast by a leaven o'clock.” Harley had groaned loudly which only made Jack laugh more), before Jeanie a heavy-set woman with light almost white blonde hair came out, carrying several large binders. “Well hello! You must be Mr. Jack Wayne and Dr. Harleen Quinzel? The young engaged couple?”

Jack frowned for only a moment, his hand around Harley's tightening. “It's Harley Quinn.”

“Oh, I'm sorry—Miss Quinn.” Jeanie frowned, but Harley smiled. “It's fine.”

Jeanie nodded taking a breath to start over. “Yes, ah, your brother, Bruce Wayne called to say you would both be coming to pick out cupcakes for your engagement party?”

Jack nodded. “Yep, we need a thousand cupcakes.”

Jeanie blinked. “A thousand.” She took a breath and re-oriented. “I thought your brother had said two hundred?”

Jack frowned tilting his head, blinking his big blue eyes at her with a completely innocent expression. “Is that going to be a problem?”

“No, no of course not.” Jeanie paled a little. “Same delivery date?”

Jack nodded. “Same date.”

Harley leaned in close and whispered. “A thousand?”

Jack laughed whispering back. “Yes. It'll be funny! Can you imagine Bruce's face when a thousand cupcakes show up?”

Harley shook her head with a laugh. Jack turned back to Jeanie leaning his elbows on the table. “Now, let's talk about how you are going to display the cupcakes.”

Jeanie went very pale. “Display?”
Jack giggled. “Oh yeah...I was thinking a giant circus big top! I mean if that is something you would like Harley?”

Harley squealed. “OH, with a big red and black striped tent?”

Jack gasped. “YES! That would be perfect!! Harley you read my mind!”

The both of them giggled holding hands which prompted Jeanie to ask timidly. “Are you being serious?”

They both turned to look at her and at the same time said. “Of course.”

After half an hour of discussion, Jack and Harley had ordered several varieties of cupcakes from chocolate malt to hummingbird cupcakes...the shop had twenty-two flavors, all of which they ordered as well as a discussion of how the cupcakes were going to be displayed. Poor Jeanie looked both pale and elated at the monumental task she had ahead of her and how much she was going to be paid.

Jack and Harley were heading outside for the bike, ready to go shopping for their outfits for the party and make a stop for this magician Jack wanted to hire, when Harley saw someone from the corner of her eye, someone she recognized.

She turned in confusion, but then her eyes widened when she saw Guy standing at the corner leaning against the building. He winked at her. He strangely didn't look much different than when they had dated in college, the same blonde good looks, chiseled chin, the sort of all-American boy many fathers would love to see their daughters bring home. He was dressed in jeans and a white t-shirt with a blue blazer holding a soda. He took a sip staring at her with a smug smile. For a moment Harleen swelled to the surface, her fear washing over Harley. How on earth did he find her?

But then Jack had stepped in front of her reaching out to touch the tips of his fingers along her jaw. “Harls, did you hear me? You all right sweets?” Jack gently caressed her face.

Harley blinked and shook her head. “Yeah, yes, yes I'm fine. Let's just go.”

“Well, I asked if you wanted to go grab some lunch first.” Jack held her cheek very gently his blue eyes filled with concern.

“Lunch sounds wonderful Jack.” She smiled taking his hand in hers and tugging him toward the bike. Jack let himself be directed, but he glanced around. He didn't notice anything (Guy having stepped back around the corner vanishing from sight), but something had been bothering Harley since they returned to Gotham from their stay at the cabin. It upset him that she was keeping something from him, but at the same time he loved her deeply enough to trust her; she would tell him when she was ready. He just had to be patient.

For lunch, the two of them decided on pizza. Jack pulled the bike around back and down an alley, parking behind the pizza restaurant. Jack again took her hand after parking the bike, then proceeded to hold her hand as he led her inside. The place had a warm coziness with brick walls, black tables and chairs with the red and white checkered table cloths one usually expected in a pizzeria, all mixed with the mouth-watering smells of melting cheese, baked crust, and marinara sauce.

The place was pretty crowded, but the waitress who came to seat them managed to find them a decent table on the far left. “What can I get you to drink?” she asked, cocking her hip to the side, her pen poised over the pad in her hand.

Jack glanced at Harley who had picked up the menu the waitress had handed to her, glancing over the drink selections. “Mm...let's try a margarita.”

Jack grinned. “Excellent choice as always my sweetie. I will have a bottle of your pale ale.”

“Okay, got it,” the waitress said. “Be right back with your drinks and I can take your food order when I return.” She gave them both a smile and trotted off.

Jack turned to Harley. “What do you think about ordering pizza for the party?”

Harley chuckled. “Are you purposely trying to sabotage this party?”

Jack made a face. “No, just trying to make sure everything isn't mind-numbingly boring. So we have a magician, a few hundred cupcakes extra we probably don't need and, I don't know...a hundred pizzas? “ Jack set his elbows on the table, lacing his fingers and smiled when he rested his chin against his fingers. “I don't think of it as sabotage...more like just adding a few fun elements. Magic is fun, cupcakes are fun, pizza is fun....”

Harley giggled. “Want to add some balloons?”

Jack’s smile was mischievous. “Wanna add a hot air balloon?”

Harley grinned. “Why not!”

That was when their waitress returned with their drinks and the two of them ordered.

Lunch was fun, just the two of them talking and laughing and (ordering a hundred pizzas for the party) when Harley saw him again, Guy. He was across the street, sitting on a bus stop bench and eating a hotdog, probably from the hotdog cart not too far away from him down the street.

He caught her watching through the restaurant window, and lifted his hotdog to her. She turned away, her blood running cold. Clearly he had gone from harassing phone calls to stalking. She wondered briefly about calling Frost herself, asking him for his assistance...maybe on filing a restraining order...

But when she turned back to look at Guy, he was gone. She saw his retreating back headed down the street away from them. Maybe if they hurried, he would lose them she thought to herself as she grabbed Jack pulling him toward the front door since they had just finished. Jack laughed.

“Hey, hey Harley—why the hurry?”

Harley stopped, frowned for a split second before she smiled. “Just thought if we finished out chores early enough we could maybe go for a walk in the park.”

Jack smiled softly catching her chin with his thumb and forefinger and tugged her lips toward his, “Anything you want Harls, anything at all, you only have to ask.”

Harley closed her eyes sinking into the kiss that followed, letting Jack's presence wash away all her tension.

“I just want you puddin...always you,” Harley said softly. Jack pulled her close, wrapping his arms tight around her and rested his chin on her head. “I'm not going anywhere my sweets. You will never get rid of me,” he said with a smile.

Harley chuckled closing her eyes tight, her arms around Jack's waist holding him so that he would never disappear.

Their next stop was clothing (Jack's favorite thing to shop for). They decided not to go for the full '1920's' look, but instead for modern clothing inspired by the era.

Jack smiled yelling over his shoulder as he drove. “I looked up this place online that is located downtown. It should have exactly what we are looking for. We'll be good and dress 'elegantly' for the party at least.”

Harley laughed, her chin resting against his shoulder. “Well that will be one thing we do that will make Bruce happy.”

Jack snickered lifting up her hand from around his waist and kissed her knuckles as they pulled into a little shop downtown called The Vintage Agenda.

The woman who ran the place reminded Harley of a heavier Audrey Hepburn from “Breakfast at Tiffany’s” with her hair piled high on her head, a little pearl necklace, a black sleeveless maxi dress and black heels; she looked ready for a night on the town rather than selling clothing in a shop.

The woman smiled brightly. “Hello, I'm Kathy. I'm here to make your vintage inspired dreams come true.”

Jack laughed. “Now that is an introduction!”

Harley ended up with a gorgeous black beaded mesh fringe flapper dress with a nArt Deco style design across the front and back in silver. The black fringe at the bottom of the dress, which stopped around mid-thigh was fun, as Harley kept swooshing her hips back and forth to make the fringe sway.

Jack grinned watching her hips like a man under a spell.

Harley blushed with a wrinkled nose. “I love it.”

Kathy smiled. “I know exactly what shoes you should pair that dress with, something comfortable, a high heel, but not too high. Wait right here.”

Kathy hurried off into the back, but soon returned with a pair of black T-strap heels. When Harley tried them on with the dress, the look was complete.

Jack sighed smiling. “God, you are the most beautiful woman Harley.”

Harley stood there in the dress and shoes, her eyes meeting Jack's while Kathy droned on about accessories.

Next was Jack. Jack purchased a Great Gatsby inspired tuxedo with a full on black fitted jacket with long ‘swallow’ tails in the back, a white vest, trousers with silk stripes on the sides, and a white bow tie, then chose black leather oxfords with the spats.

When he had stepped out of the dressing room Harley thought her knees were going to give out he looked so handsome.

“Oh Jack. That is...goodness.” Harley did a little swoon which had her husband-to-be laughing. “Mm...maybe I should wear this tonight.” He waggled his eyebrows at her. Harley giggled happily with a hint of pink in her cheeks.

While at the shop they also purchased clothing for tonight for when they went dancing before the fight. (Harley tried once to talk Jack out of it while they were at the shop, but he emphatically explained: “Toots, I'm not going to let that little bird think he won by not fighting him. Harley had whispered. “I just don't trust him not to do something dirty.”

Jack shook his head. “I'm counting on him doing something dirty Harls. Don't worry your prettily little head. I'll take care of the bird quickly and we can be on our way home early.”

Jack bought Harley a red and white polkadot swing dress along with the crinoline underneath. The dress had a little collar and short sleeves. Harley had stood in the dress, again swishing her hips back and forth, watching the way the skirt moved, rolling around her hips like its own little ocean. Jack also purchased for her a pair of red and white t-strapped pumps that had little white bows on them. Jack didn't buy much for himself. He ended up with a new pair of black skinny jeans and a black leather motorcycle jacket that made him look like Marlon Brando.

This time when they left the shop, Harley was looking for Guy, terrified that she would see him standing against a wall again smiling at her, but she didn't see him anywhere. She breathed a sigh of relief. She was sure he hadn't left Gotham, but maybe his stalking them for the day was over and she could focus on dinner, dancing and watching her puddin fight...

Their last stop before heading home was the Gotham King's Playhouse where Zatanna was playing to sold out shows. Jack pulled up to the theater, the both of them sitting on the motorcycle and looking up. The Gotham King's Playhouse was part of an older Gotham building dating back to 1905 when the building had been constructed. It had been in nearly continuous occupation solely as a theater its entire existence.

The front of the building held a large neon sign over the entrance that announced the theater's name and another billboard like sign beneath that which announced, “Zatanna, Master of the Mysterious” with a picture of a beautiful raven-haired magician. Her costume consisted of fishnets, booty shorts and a tuxedo top and top hat.

Harley frowned with a narrowing of her eyes. “Should I be jealous?”

Jack turned to look over his shoulder at her, clearly confused. “Of what?”

Harley studied his face for a split second then smiled happily; it was clear to her that Jack saw no reason at all that Harley should be jealous. The fact that no woman (even one clearly as gorgeous as Zatanna) meant anything to Jack made her heart swell in her chest. Yes it was probably a little petty of her, but it made her feel good knowing Jack desired no one but her. She smiled at him giving him a kiss on the cheek. “Nothing, never mind.”

Jack frowned, but he hopped off the bike, turning to grab Harley by her waist and lift her off into his arms. She giggled and wrapped her arm and legs around him, making Jack laugh. He stumbled with her losing his balance for a split second, taking several steps backwards before he finally had his balance. He put his hands under her rear and, with a large smile, carried Harley into the theater.

The interior of the theater was not nearly as grand as the one in which Alex had had the first poker game she had attended. This one had the stadium seating, red velvet chairs, but the walls lacked the grandness of the other theater, though the walls were painted in a gold color with lovely art deco style arches and an elaborately textured ceiling. The stage was magnificent Harley thought with art deco designs painted around the stage, framing it. The stage had the large red velvet curtains, with a smaller set of gold curtains at the top over the red, and the backdrop that was currently in place looked like a painting of the heavens as envisioned by the creators of the silent French film “A Trip to the Moon.”

As they walked down the aisles between the seats, Harley saw Zatanna on the stage. She wasn't in costume, instead she was wearing a pair of low riding black sweatpants and a black baby-doll t-shirt that read “On Wednesdays We Wear Black.” Her long raven-colored hair was pulled up into a ponytail and she had on duckie slippers. She was speaking to someone up in the top of the stage by the lights.

“Yes, like that, I want that blue light to come on just as I'm telling the story of the stars.” She smiled at whoever she was speaking to when Jack called out. “Did you hear about the perverted magician? He pulled his top hat out of a Bunny!”

Zatanna turned around and laughed when she saw Jack Wayne and his fiancee. “Jack Wayne! I should have known it was you. You told bad jokes even when we were kids!” Jack laughed as the young woman came to the end of the stage and jumped down, walking swiftly up the aisle to meet them. She pulled Jack into an embrace (clearly surprising him), then she did the same to Harley. She then held Harley back, her hands on her shoulders. “You must be Harley Quinn. Love the name! Jack just wouldn't stop gushing about you when he called.”

Jack twisted his lips into a frown like a little boy. “I don't gush.”

Zatanna beamed. “You do about her.”

Harley blushed and Jack shrugged. “Okay I guess I do gush about Harley. She is my girl.”

Jack kissed Harley on the cheek with a wide smile. Zatanna grinned motioning with her hand for them to follow. “Come on back stage with me and then we can talk in private...sorta. This place is never really private.”

Jack and Harley followed her backstage to a small, but adequate dressing room. Zatanna moved some layers of clothing, a bird cage with a sweet little blue parakeet inside, a couple of top hats and a few miscellaneous objects that Harley was not sure exactly what they were, until the three of them were able to sit down and face each other comfortably. Jack reached over to take Harley's hand and rested her hand against his thigh, his hand covering hers.

Zatanna turned her chair around in order for her to lean against the back of it and asked. “Either of you want something to drink? I have some bottled water and a few sodas.”

She put her hand to the side of her mouth and whispered loudly. “I also have a few wine coolers stashed somewhere I could find for us.”
Jack laughed. “I’m fine. Harley?”

“I’m fine too, but thank you,” she said politely.

Zatanna shrugged. “Okay, let me know if you change your mind though,” the grinning magician said. “So, heading to the altar before Bruce. Actually, I’m not surprised.”

Jack frowned; clearly he was surprised. “Really? Even though I’m the crazy one?”

Zatanna laughed. “As far as I’m concerned you and your brother are both crazy, but most men are.” She winked at Harley. “But I would peg Bruce as the crazier one. Remember how he used to drill me about my magic and demanded to know the truth all the time?”

Jack nodded. “I do.”

“He’s lucky I didn't turn him into something unnatural or give him continuous farts or something,” she said with a grin.

Jack’s eyes glinted. “You can do that?”

Zatanna laid her head against her crossed arms laughing. “So—engagement party. You want to hire me?”

Jack nodded, letting go the fact she had chosen to not answer his question. “Yep for two reasons: one it will be epic; and two, it will drive Bruce up the wall.”

Zatanna lifted a brow at him. “I do remember you had a thing about driving Bruce to the edge all the time, trying to make him lose his temper.”

Jack shrugged. “What can I say? Bruce drives me to drive him crazy.”

Zatanna shook her head. “Well I would be happy to perform. My usual fee is twenty-five thousand a night, but for you I will perform for free.”

Jack shook his head. “How about instead of free, I just donate your usual fee to a charity of your choice?”

Zatanna smiled. “Oh, I like that. Listen to you, sounding like your brother.”

Jack made a face, then laughed. “Careful there Zatanna, going to make me change my mind. Go rent myself a clown.”

Zatanna laughed at that. “Hey!”

Jack and Harley laughed too, but Jack waved his hand at her. “Don’t worry, I would rather have you over a clown...but only barely.”

“So, care if I ask how you two met?” Zatanna smiled with lifted eyebrows as she looked between them.

Jack nodded to Harley, squeezing her hand, who took over speaking. “Well, I was hired by Bruce to be his psychiatrist.”

Zatanna blinked. “Seriously?”

Harley nodded and Zatanna grinned. “Ooh, I love work place romances!! How romantic! Was it love at first sight?"

Jack grinned looking at Harley. “It was for me.”

Harley gazed at him squeezing his hands. “Me too.”

Zatanna sighed. “Okay, I'm officially jealous.”

* They had spoken for a few more minutes, ironing out details, but when they left it was settled that Zatanna would be there, early so she could mingle before the performance. Jack would be making a donation to the Gotham's Rainbow Trust in her name.

* Back home, Harley had just gotten out of the tub, a towel wrapped around her torso, another towel wrapped around her hair. Jack had showered earlier and was on the phone with Alex who had called to let them know the location of the fight tonight. Harley was looking through her make-up bag trying to decide on eyeshadow when Jack came rushing into the bathroom.

“Hey Harls, you are never going to believe where Pengy and I are going to be fighting...whoa...” Jack stopped short to admire Harley in her towels.

Harley blushed. “What are you staring at...you've seen me wrap a towel around myself before.”

Jack gave her a goofy grin. “I don't know...you look especially...delectable right now, that's all.” His blue eyes wandered down her back, lingering on the back of her thighs, then up again. He smiled with hooded eyes at her.

Harley blushed pulling the towel off her head and shaking out her damp hair. “You're silly.”

Jack leaned over out of the bathroom doorway and tossed his phone onto the bed before coming back into the bathroom. He wasn't dressed yet, only wearing his boxers, a purple pair with green polkadots. Harley loved them, since they were whimsical, like so many of Jack's moods. He put his hands behind his back, waltzing over to her to stand behind her and watch her over her head in the bathroom mirror as she brushed the tangles out of her damp hair. Harley narrowed her eyes watching him.

“You're up to something,” she said softly. Jack's grin looked mischievous as he pleaded innocence. “Nope, not me.”

“So where are you and Pengy supposed to fight?” Harley ran her comb through her hair until it was nice and smooth.

“Cobblepot Manor. Inside this time.”

Harley blinked in surprise. “Really? I thought it was too much disrepair for anyone to be inside of it?”

“It's not in the best shape, unless he's made changes. I'm just surprised he would want all those people there unless he's sure he is going to win.” Jack reached up and ran his hands over her bare shoulders and down her arms sending warm shivers over her skin.

“I'm worried about this fight Jack. I don't trust him. You beat him at that duel, he set up that fight with Croc to kill you, I know he did...he's going to try and hurt you Jack. I couldn't...” She stopped and then continued. “If anything happened to you...” Harley swallowed looking at his reflection in the bathroom mirror, tears threatening to fall from the corner of her eyes.

Jack smiled at her reflection, wrapped his arms around her from behind and pressed her back against his chest. He rested his narrow chin on the top of her head.

“I'm always careful Harley.” He kissed the top of her head, pressing his nose against her damp hair, closing his eyes. “I won't let anything or anyone get between us Harls. I swear it.”

But the look she gave him clearly indicated that she knew that wasn't true, that he loved to live dangerously. Jack turned her around by the shoulders to face him.

“I swear Harley, I'll be careful with Cobblepot. I know this is a trap. That he's going to try to do something nasty because he knows he can't take me in a fair fight, and I also promise to kick the living shit out of him.” He grinned down at her, his hands gently holding her upper arms.

Harley was still pouting, looking down at their bare feet. Jack bent over to try to look into her eyes but she wouldn't look at him.

“What do you call a penguin in the desert?” he asked softly.

Harley frowned refusing to look at him. “What?”

Harley snorted, trying not to laugh. Jack grinned at her reaching down to brush his thumb over her

He tilted her face up whispering.

“May I kiss you Miss Quinn?” Jack asked in a low voice, his thumb brushing along her chin.

Harley smiled meeting his eyes. “Always puddin.”

Jack kissed her, a slowly exploration of her mouth with his tongue that had her weaving in place slightly. His kiss made her want to sink to the floor, to simply melt. His tongue brushed over her teeth, caressed her tongue, in slow warm rolls, waves of warmth flowed over her pooling in her breasts, in her groin making her crave more. She wrapped her arms around his body, pressing herself desperately to him. Jack's hands, which had softly cupped her face dropped to her towel to pull the cloth from around her letting it fall heavily to the floor around her feet.

Harley let out a soft gasp as the cooler air brushed over her torso, but then the cool air was quickly replaced by Jack's hands. He brushed his palms down her sides, gently caressing her skin,causing the tiny hairs across her torso to quiver. He brushed his fingertips down her side, his blunt nails creating a soft tickle, then he dragged them up again, sending goosebumps racing over her skin. Jack's hot breath cascaded along her neck, heating her skin. He leaned down, blowing slowly, letting his breath send chills down her spine just before he licked her shoulder. Harley closed her eyes taking in a shuddering breath while his tongue danced across her skin. His fingertips moved from her sides to stroked slowly over her rear; again he curled his fingers to drag his nails over the round slopes of her rear, creating another series of racing goosebumps over her flesh before he spread his fingers wide to grab her rear and squeeze pressing her pelvis up against his groin.

“I want you Harley,” Jack hissed. “I want to bend you over the sink and fuck you while I look into your gorgeous face in the mirror. I want to watch you cum, hear your groan my name.”
Harley groaned in response. “Yes Jack.”

Jack smiled against her skin, then slowly started to lower himself down, placing kisses against her skin, pressing his lips to each erect nipple when he was even with her breasts, his breath warm against her skin sending curls of heat flowing through her. Harley squeezed her eyes shut against the tense pleasure his lips and breath were causing, her whole body already on fire from such simple touches. But just when she was focusing on the feel of Jack’s elegant fingers brushing down over her skin, his breath hot against her flesh, she felt the warm dampness of his tongue on her flesh.

Jack ran the flat of his tongue over her nipples then circled over the sensitive flesh using just the tip of his tongue. The sensation caused her groin to tighten with the need for him to touch her, to stroke those long fingers of his against her, a burning ache that he kept simply feeding as he sucked on one of her nipples. His hands were around her hips, his thumbs against her hip bones, holding himself steady as he crouched on the balls of his feet in front of her.

Jack shifted his attentions from her breasts to her stomach, kissing his way lower until he dropped to his knees. He spread her legs, forcing Harley to lean her hands back against the sink to hold herself up arching her hips toward Jack. He smiled pressing his mouth to her, rolling the tip of his tongue over her clitoris, eliciting a moan from Harley. Jack smiled against her, licking slowly then rolling his tongue over her taking deep strokes against her while his hands glided up to grab her rear again and squeeze pulling her closer. He sucked, pulling on her with his lips. Harley dropped her head back gasping out loud as one of her hands found purchase against the sink while with the other, she tangled her fingers in her puddin’s hair.

Jack’s blue eyes never left her face. He wanted to see every expression, to watch her complete surrender, the way she dragged her teeth across her lips, biting her tongue...he wanted to worship her, worship his Harley. He loved her so deeply, so much that he almost felt like it, their love, was driving her further down the path of madness...he wanted to kill for her, tear the souls from everyone who dared to hurt her, he wanted to tear his soul out and give it to her...his girl...his Harley. He pressed his fingers into her hips, holding her tight as he shook his head back and forth again sucking until Harley screamed.

He licked her a few more times, long slow licks before he gradually stood, his tongue tracing a damp trail up her body to her breasts which he kissed, sucking on each again, his tongue flicking across the sensitive surface of each nipple, tugging them with his lips, his hands cupping her breasts up and squeezing when his mouth found hers again. The kiss was long and deep, Jack's tongue pressing and swirling against hers. Harley could taste herself on his lips and tongue which only made her growl. “Puddin..”

Jack moaned, his voice coming in panting breaths. “Mm...my honeybunch, my sweet cupcake...” He chuckled turning her around to face the mirror over the sink.

Harley thought he was going to take her right then, but instead Jack kissed his way down her spine, gradually dropping to his knees again. He pressed a kiss to the tip of her tailbone, bringing his hands up to squeeze her rear, cupping and squeezing and biting her backside. Harley's body weaved under his touch, undulating with each caress. She gasped when Jack bit her again, his teeth pressing hard into her flesh, then he sucked harder still, his hands skating over her soft skin. Jack sucked until he was sure he had left a bruise on her buttocks. He pulled away just enough to look at where he had bitten her, a deep purple mark on her porcelain skin. He grinned.

Jack stood back up pushing his boxers down and forced her legs further apart with his foot before he slid up into her. Harley gasped arching her back, then groaned when he pushed deep inside her, feeling that hard warmth and the satisfaction that came with having him buried inside her. Her inner muscles contracted, holding him while Harley looked into the mirror.

Jack grabbed her hips with his hands, pressing his fingers hard into her skin on both sides and started thrusting, just plain hard fucking. He smiled at her, catching her eyes in the mirror when she looked up. She groaned seeing him standing behind her, thrusting hard and fast into her, hitting into her over and over again.

Harley arched her back further, pressing back against him with a sexy growl in her throat and her eyes sparkling in the mirror. Jack groaned driving himself deep inside her watching the changes in her expression in the mirror. He slid a hand up her back, then dragged his blunt nails down her spine, the whole while thrusting as deep as he could, feeling that wet warmth surround and pull at him. Jack wanted to close his eyes and let the feeling ripple through him, but he was also being driven willingly, pleasantly mad by the look in Harley's eyes, the lust and love reflected back through her hot gaze.

Harley thrust her hips back and hissed. “Harder Jack...Uuhh...puddin harder!! Yes!!”

Jack held her hips with both hands letting himself go, no controlled thrusts, just fucking her as hard as he could, watching the bounce of her backside, the expression of her face in the mirror. Jack moaned. “I can't...I can't hold back much longer Harley...”

Jack pressed his teeth into his lower lip with a hiss. “I love your smile Harley.”

She grinned at him pushing herself up a little more; he could see the way her breasts bounced with each of his thrusts hitting her backside. She groaned, then he felt it, that tightening, her whimper and then the burst of her pleasure that made her shudder and clench her fingers into fists on the countertop. Harley kept her eyes on Jack's when she came, his slowly expanding bubble of her sexual pleasure burst, flooding her whole body with warmth.

really did it for him. Seeing her smile at him in the mirror at the same moment she came was more than he could handle. He arched hard with one final hard thrust, burying himself as deep into her body as he could, his fingers pressing hard into her hips when he came with a loud moan.

Jack groaned loudly, his eyes rolling closed for just a moment as the sensation of pleasure burst over him, as if Harley was ripping something from his very soul when he climaxed. Harley groaned when Jack pressed deeply into her, another ripple of pleasure bursting up through her body, then immediately made them both feel liquid, relaxed, and sagging against the sink.

Jack lean forward and kissed her spine, then her shoulder, then her ear. Harley stood up a little and Jack wrapped his arm around her squeezing one of her breasts.

“I love you Harls. Nothing will ever come between us. I love you.” He said it with a slight lilt of desperation in his voice just as he wrapped his other arm around her waist.

Harley leaned back into him, feeling him still embedded inside her kept making her jerk with aftershocks of pleasure.

“Oh Jack...puddin...always and forever...” Harley smiled closing her eyes. Jack smiled gazing at her in the mirror, their bodies joined.

He hissed against her ear. “My girl.”

Harley opened her eyes to look back at him in the mirror. “Always puddin.”

Jack sighed, reluctantly letting her go and pulling out. He reached for a cloth which he handed to her while he grabbed his boxers off the floor.

“Ready to go dancing?” he asked with a wide grin.

“Jack, are you sure dancing is a good idea before the fight?” Harley asked while she cleaned up.

“Yep. I want to have some fun. Waiting about to go kick bird ass is boring sweets...though I suppose we could stay here and fuck and make love all night until it's time to go?” Jack grinned wide then chuckled. “BUT I really want to twirl you around a dance floor and show you off in that cute little dress you purchased today.” Jack winked at her.

Harley giggled blushing slightly. “Fine you win.”

Jack grinned. “Yeah me! Oh, I better get dressed. Want you to do my eyeliner before we go!” Jack stopped in the doorway to turn and smile at her. “I can't wait to dance with you in the that dress.”

Harley blushed softly. “It is a gorgeous dress.”

“It's only gorgeous because of the woman wearing it,” Jack said before he brought his hand up and blew her a kiss, disappearing into the other room. With that, Jack rushed out of the bathroom. Harley smiled watching him go. She loved him so much that it hurt, her chest ached. For a moment her thoughts drifted to Guy...she was not, could not let him ruin what she had with Jack. She had to figure out a way to get rid of Guy...somehow...
Frost was driving them tonight and he pulled up in front of the supper club. The outside wasn't anything special, just a flat building entrance with a burgundy awning and some outside seating on either side of the door—nice, but nothing thrilling.

Frost leaned out the window after Jack and Harley had hopped out. “I'll park over there Boss, at the pay parking lot. You can just call me on your cell when you're ready Boss, Miss Quinn, and I'll drive around front to pick you up.”

Jack smiled. “Perfect.” He pulled out his wallet and handed Frost four hundred dollars. “Go get yourself something to eat. Oh and does your mother like the new facility?” Jack asked with a smile.

Frost's responding smile was bright. “Oh yes Boss! She loves having her own room again.”

Harley leaned on Jack's arm. “Did she get the flowers I sent?”

Frost nodded. “She did Miss Quinn. She really loved them.”

“I put a standing order in to have roses delivered once a week,” Harley said with a smile.

Frost roughly rubbed a fist across his eyes. “Thank you both.”

Jack surprised Frost by leaning in and kissing the other man on the top of his head. “Not an issue Frost my love. You are a friend to me and Harley.”

Frost nodded rubbing his eyes again. Jack smiled then asked. “Oh did you find the address for later this evening?”

“Yes sir, I know exactly how to get to Cobblepot Manor.” Frost gave a small salute.

Jack grinned hooking Harley's arm through his and stroked her arm. “Wonderful! All right! I'm off to spin my girl on the dance floor!”

Jack and Harley waved goodbye to Frost and headed inside the supper club.

The inside of the supper club reminded Harley of supper clubs she had seen in old movies from the 1940's and '50's. There was a large dance floor with a traditional looking big band on stage which was currently playing Benny Goodman's “Moonglow.” Tables and chairs sat around the dance floor and a full bar was over to the right on the far wall. The wall themselves were painted a deep terra cotta and were decorated with old movie posters from the era, photographs from the supper club itself and old jazz posters.

Jack grinned. “Alfred was right, this place is nice. So Harls, dancing, dinner or drinks first?”

Harley smiled at the child-like expression of pleasure on Jack's face. “How about a dance mister?” she asked with a coy smile.

Jack laughed. “I thought you would never ask Miss Quinn.” Jack took her hand and led her out onto the dance floor just as a man stepped in front of the band. “We are lucky tonight to have one of Gotham's local swing bands with us tonight, The Era.”

The crowd clapped as the man continued. “And now—The Era !”

A young woman with her red hair done up in such a way she reminded Harley of the movie star Barbara Stanwyck, wearing a snug evening dress of the era, stepped up to the vintage microphone that had been brought out for her an smiled at the crowd. “I'll be singing Bei mir bist du schon.”

The crowd clapped and the woman leaned in to sing.

“Of all the boys I've known, and I've known some

Until I first met you, I was lonesome

And when you came in sight, dear, my heart grew light

And this old world seemed new to me

You're really swell, I have to admit you

Deserve expressions that really fit you

And so I've racked my brain, hoping to explain

All the things that you do to me

Bei mir bist du schon, please let me explain

Bei mir bist du schon means you're grand

Bei mir bist du schon, again I'll explain

It means you're the fairest in the land...”

Jack grinned. “You know how to swing dance Harls?”

Harley frowned, thinking of movies she had seen set in the 1940's and '50's. “Well, sorta.”

Jack laughed. “Don't worry about it sweets, just follow me!”

Jack swung her around the dance floor, moving his feet in a kind of hop step that Harley easily picked up and duplicated. He then swung her out at arms length, continuing with the sort of hopping steps to the music. Harley just flowed right along with him laughing when he swung her back then spun her in a circle before swinging her out again. Harley did a sort of twisting dance step when Jack swung her out then laughing, rolled back into his arms. Jack held her, her back against his chest while they swung and swayed to the music.

They started doing a series of twists and spins, their feet keeping up to the hopping beat of the music. Harley's skirt flounced with the swinging movements, keeping her hips loose while she twisted. Jack danced with the loose, elegant abandon of someone who was a natural dancer. They didn't realize they had drawn a crowd of on-lookers until people started to clap with the song's beat, the singers crooning away while everyone watched how effortlessly Jack and Harley danced in the middle of the dance floor.

Harley was all smiles, her eyes never leaving Jack's grinning face while he swung her around. Jack swung Harley to his side, his arm around her waist, Harley's arm just naturally going around his. Together they did a few back and forth steps, their knees staying slightly bent the whole time with the bounce in their steps. Laughing they turned back to face each other, Jack spinning around and lifting Harley off her feet. She laughed and brought her legs up as he twisted around, dropping her back to her feet before he swung her out, always keeping a hold of her hand, then swung her back into his arms.

Jack then held Harley in a classic ballroom dance pose and proceeded to lead her around the circle of the dance floor in a quick step. Harley laughed just following along with him even though she didn’t really know how to quick step, but with Jack leading her it was easy. They made a circuit of the dance floor then Jack spun around dropping down on one knee, his other leg up so that he could sit Harley on his lap just as the music came to an end.

The crowd erupted into cheers and applause. Harley was grinning from ear to ear panting just a little. Jack was the same as he stood up and pulled her into the circle of his arms, dipping her for a quick kiss which earned them another round of applause before Jack led her off the dance floor and headed to the bar.

“Now that was a fun!” Jack laughed lifting Harley by her waist and easily planting her on one of the stools.

“You are such a wonderful dancer Jack,” Harley said softly.

Jack laughed. “I’m only as good as my partner and you, Miss Quinn, are a fantastic partner.”

The bartender strolled over. “What can I get the two of you?”

Jack glanced at Harley. “What would you like sweetness?”

Harley tapped her chin. “How about a French 75?”

Jack grinned. “Good choice my love. And I’ll have a Green Dragon.”

The bartender nodded. “Coming right up.”

Jack took Harley’s hand and started to speak, but that was the moment that Harley’s attention was caught by a figure moving around the far side of the dance floor. She saw Guy moving through the crowd. He caught her eye and winked at her and her blood turned cold. She closed her eyes purposely turning away from Guy. She knew what he was doing; he was showing her he could find her, find them both. She glanced up, watching as Guy moved out the door with a wave at her.

Harley jerked her attention back to Jack. He frowned reaching out to stroke her face. “You all right?”

She swallowed just as the bartender arrived with their drinks and she quickly grabbed hers to take a sip. “Yes, just...I want the fight tonight to be over with.”

Jack smiled at her. “I know sweetums. It will be. Then I plan on taking you home and making love the rest of the night,” He assured her with a wink at her. “Sound like a plan?”

Harley giggled pressing her lips together on the spike of emotion. “Yes, yes it does.”

Jack stroked her chin tenderly. “How about one more dance?”

The music had slowed down and the singer had begun to sing a song called “If I died in Your Arms” her voice a warm seductive purr. Harley downed her drink in one large swallow which made Jack blink in surprise. He quickly downed his one drink taking Harley’s hand and leading her back to the dance floor.

“Oh you know that I’ll give you my heart into his arms.

Even if it's torn apart
Coz I've come too far to be scared
And I don't regret what we shared
But you know that I'll love you for good
And I'll love you much more than I should
And I can't help but cry when you're so far away
But I'll smile coz I hope that you'll be back one day …”

Jack held her close, his arms completely around her as if they were simply embracing. Harley had her arms around his neck, her body moving with his in a slow and sensual sway. Harley laid her head against Jack's shoulder and closed her eyes. Jack tightened his grip around her, pressing his lips to her ear. Harley sighed softly. She could hear Harleen's voice whispering to her. “Tell him Harley...tell him soon. This is going to end badly if you wait...tell him.”

Harley screwed her eyes tightly closed, hissing mentally. “Go away Harleen...just...just go away.”

Jack kissed her ear again and Harley lifted her head to look at him. He smiled brushing his nose against hers while the singer crooned.

“Now there's one thing I need you to know
Coz you think that you just know me so
That I'll be there if you ask me to
If you only knew
That I love you so much that it hurts
My broken heart feels so much worse
You do what you want coz I gave you my best
And you know something
If you ask me, I would say yes ...”

Jack kissed her, slowly and tenderly. Harley tightened her hold around his neck, returning his kiss with every ounce of love and passion she felt for him.

As last time, the drive to Cobblepot Manor was pleasant since it was located on the outskirts of Gotham. As Frost drove up, Harley leaned out the passenger window to stare at the building, really looking at it for this visit. Where the Wayne manor had a definite 'Gothic' feel to it, the Cobblepot home still reminded her of a haunted house, an old fashioned sanatorium, a castle, a prison—some place that was a fortress rather than a home. Jack frowned watching as they approached. This time there was scaffolding and other clear signs of work being done on the building that had not been “There the last time they were here.

“Yeah he must. Or maybe he is becoming involved in other illegal actives?” Harley frowned turning to share a glance with Jack who shrugged. “Maybe.”

There were already several cars parked all around the front of the manor. Frost frowned turning to look at the two of them in the back seat. “You sure you don't want me to come along Boss?”

Jack shook his head. “Nah, stay with the car. This won't take long I think.”

Frost glanced at Harley. It was clear to her that he wasn't happy about this, that he felt it too, that something was going to go wrong, but he turned back to the wheel. “Whatever you say Boss.”

Jack slipped out of his leather jacket, leaving it in the back seat before he came around to get Harley. He opened her door and took her hand, kissing her knuckles. “I promise sweets; this is going to be short and sweet.”

*

Blockbuster, as usual, was standing outside the fight club and waiting by the door. He lifted his chin at Jack and Harley. “Good luck tonight,” he said surprising them both.

Jack smiled. “Thank you.”

Blockbuster nodded, but was disinclined to say anything else.

Inside, the manor was in the same state of evolution, with some walls plastered and painted, others in the middle of being repaired with tools scattered around like so much debris, the forgotten tools of human workers now looking forlorn and haunted in the dreary manor. There was electricity, but the lighting was dim. As Jack and Harley walked from the main room following the sounds of music (Iggy Pop's “FunTime” was currently playing), they came to what must have once been a ballroom. The marble floor was now mostly lost under the remains of fallen ceiling tiles and decaying furniture and was occupied by the usual suspects from Warren who was set up in a corner taking bets, to Penguin, dressed like someone from a century back, leaning on his cane and with his cronies on either side of him as he sat in a large rotten chair near the back. Jack caught sight of Alex who was here with Alice. The one-armed man waved and started to make his way toward them.

Jack saw Cobblepot staring at him, a gloating expression on his pinched face. Clearly Cobblepot thought he had the upper hand being on his own ‘turf’ so to speak. Jack knew Oswald would be armed, he was sure of it. Jack hadn't brought anything with him this time; he didn't think he would need it against Oswald. Oswald was going to be relying too heavily on the element of surprise and that he would be better armed than Jack...but Oswald's biggest fault, which would be Jack's best weapon, was Cobblepot's own ego.

“Well well, looks like the entertainment for the evening showed up everyone. The clown is here!” Penguin stood up, the crowd parted creating a line between Penguin and Jack. For a moment Jack was reminded of the old westerns when a shoot out was about to take place between the bad guy and the good guy...Jack chuckled with amusement wondering where he would stand in that equation.

Jack smiled. “You know Ossie, if you're going to be a smartass, first you have to be smart.
Otherwise you're just an ass.”

The crowd of people around them started to laugh; it was low, like a rumble barely heard, but it was definitely there, the laughter moving through the crowd.

Penguin narrowed his eyes. “You ready to fight or just stand there wearing makeup and batting your eyes?”

Jack smiled and batted his eyes (which earned Jack more laughter) at Oswald. Jack winked before he made a kissy face and blew Cobblepot a kiss. Harley covered her mouth with a snort of laughter. Grinning Jack turned to Harley standing beside him and pulled her against him. “Don't worry sweets, everything will be fine.” He gazed down at her, running the back of his fingers along her cheek.

Then he kissed her. Harley wrapped her arms around him, hopping up to wrap her legs around him too, causing the skirt of her dress to flounce. She kissed him deeply, her tongue a tender caress against his own. The crowd around them yelled and whistled while they kissed before Jack set her on her feet turning her around and giving her a little shove toward Alex, smacking her playfully on her rear as he did so. Harley turned a mock glare at him, but his smile and confidence were contagious so she smiled back and blew her lover a kiss.

Jack turned back to Oswald, pulling his t-shirt over his hand and tossing it to Harley with a wink. Harley caught the shirt and held it to her chest watching him. The few women in the crowd tonight crowsed when Jack removed his shirt.

Oswald sneered at Jack while he removed his jacket and vest before removing his tie and rolled up the sleeves of his dress shirt. Oswald walked over to stand in front of Jack.

“So, ready to be humiliated Jack Wayne, the clown of the Wayne family, the nut job, the unwanted son, the cry baby...” Oswald's voice was sing-song and needling as he held his fists up, holding himself in a fighting stance.

Jack grinned. “I feel sorry for your parents Ossie, out of 100,000 sperm, you were the fastest?”

The two men circled each other slowly. Jack seemed laid back, an easy smile and no tension in his body. Penguin on the other hand was holding himself tightly, looking like a vicious little bird ready to peck Jack's eyes out at the slightly twitch.

Penguin snarled and took a jab at Jack. Jack twisted aside easily avoiding the hit. When Penguin's knuckled fist passed by his face, Jack noticed the light catching something in Oswald's hand. Jack frowned, he would have to let Cobblepot get closer to see what it was the shorter man was holding.

Jack danced back from Cobblepot, but not too far, putting enough space between them that Oswald wouldn't realize Jack was setting himself up for a hit, giving Oswald the opening to take a swing at him. Jack shook his arms out, bouncing back and forth on the balls of his feet, keeping his body loose. His smile (which he knew grated on Oswald's nerves) was in place. Jack took a few quick swipes at Ossie, not designed to make contact with him, but designed to force the other man to move.
Oswald threw a few punches which Jack easily avoided, but the smaller man surprised Jack when he ducked in under Jack's guard, hitting him in the stomach hard enough to double the taller man over.

Jack gasped with pain, the breath knocked out of him, but he grinned. Jack winced straightening up. (Thankfully he thought, it was a good thing he and Harley ate a light dinner or else he might have vomited and that would have looked bad.) Judging by the impact and feel of Oswald's fist, Jack had learned something; he now knew Oswald was wearing a pair of clear plastic knuckles.

Jack avoided another swing just as Oswald tried to follow his successful hit with another to Jack's jaw, but the tall, slender man leaned backwards, avoiding Cobblepot's plastic knuckled fist, the plastic of the weapon only just barely scraping across Jack's jaw.

Cobblepot grinned. “Come on Jackie, make me laugh! Take a swing, I dare you—or are you too chicken?”

Jack sneered at Penguin just before he swung his fist.

Harley was standing next to Alex and Alice. Alice, who had her arm around Alex’s waist, leaned closer to Harley to be heard over the crowd. “You doing okay?”

“Yes, just worried about my puddin.” Harley frowned, holding his shirt up against her mouth, catching her bottom lip between her teeth; just knew Cobblepot was going to try something soon. She watched Jack, her eyes never leaving him as her tension mounted.

Jack’s fist connected with the large beak of a nose on Oswald's face. The man squawked before he jumped back, his hands suddenly over his nose trying to protect it, a little too late. He glared hatefully at Jack.

“You know Jack, I bet your brother wishes every day that it was you who had died in that alley instead of your parents...can you imagine what it must be like for Bruce Wayne to know he has you as a brother?” Penguin laughed which sounded stuffy now that Jack had broken his nose. Jack smiled in satisfaction at the blood flowing over Oswald's lips. Jack focused on Oswald. His smile became flat, lacking anything remotely resembling humor.

That earned Jack hoots of laughter from the crowd about them. Penguin narrowed his malice filled eyes. Jack grinned. “You know Oswald, you've got less meat in your pants than there is in a vegetarian restaurant.”

This remark set the crowd howling with laughter even louder. Cobblepot snarled then hissed like an angry goose as he charged at Jack. Cobblepot was surprisingly fast despite his slight limp, charging into Jack and catching him around the waist. The two men struggled in their close quarters, hitting each other in the back of the neck or side as they struggled in a violent embrace. Jack managed a few good hits while Oswald concentrated on Jack's side, trying to break a rib. The impacts hurt, the plastic knuckles adding to the force of Oswald's strikes, but his hits were just not strong enough to break one of Jack's ribs; if anything Cobblepot was only bruising Jack's ribs. Jack shoved him away, hissing.
“I’m done playing with you Oswald. Everyone here knows you are nothing. You are just a wannabe with an inferiority complex and probably a small dick.”

Oswald snarled ready to spit some sort of venom at Jack when Jack simply swung too fast for Penguin to dodge, hitting him in the solar plexus hard enough that Penguin gasped, falling back against the wall (the crowd parting like water when the shorter man started to stumble into them.) Jack stalked forward with his grim smile on his lips. Cobblepot pushed himself away from the wall, but Jack ducked and rushed forward pivoting his upper body to bring his right fist around to slam Oswald in the liver. Oswald squawked, gasping out for breath. Jack just stood and watched the shorter man drop to his knees before he turned and started to walk away.

“This fight is over,” Jack said.

“Not so fast Jackie,” Cobblepot growled struggling for breath. The crowd had gone silent. Harley screamed. “NO!!”

Both Alex and Alice grabbed her, stopping Harley from running out to Jack.

Jack turned around slowly to see Oswald holding a gun on him.

Cobblepot coughed, getting to his feet. “You aren't walking away Jackie.”

Penguin looked unsure himself what he was going to do. Jack shook his head. “Tsk tsk. You know I was going to walk away. Decided I wasn't going to beat you like you so richly deserve Ossie, but a gun? Really?” Jack looked around at everyone here. “Even when I saw you were using plastic knuckles...I was just going to drop you and walk away, but now...” Jack shook his head as if he felt real regret. “Now I'm just going to have to beat the living shit out of you.”

Penguin looked around for support, but no one said a word; not even his two lady bodyguards who gazed at him with looks of disappointment.

Oswald snarled at them. “Get over here and protect me!”

The tall dark-skinned woman of the two spoke up. “Cobblepot, we are here to protect you against threats to your life, not when you start a fight.” She smiled. “We promise to step in if Mr. Wayne goes too far.”

Jack grinned at them. “Don’t worry, I have no indention of killing him.” Jack turned back to Oswald. “Humiliating you? Well, that's another thing entirely.”

Jack moved so quickly, grabbing Cobblepot by the wrist and yanking the gun out of his sweaty hand that Oswald was pulling the trigger on a weapon that was now sliding across the floor and disappearing into the crowd. Jack smiled at him and in the next instant he threw a punch straight for Oswald's face, snapping his head to the side, knocking him back a step or two. Then Jack twisted his body and with a little leap, he kicked Oswald in the chest which sent the man flying backwards, the crowd once again parting and letting Cobblepot fall to the marble floor.

Jack stalked over and straddled Cobblepot smiling down at him. “You know, you are really annoying. But lucky for you that's all you are Oswald.”

Jack walked over to Harley who was smiling at him as she held her arms wide.

Jack walked into her embrace, wrapping his arms around her waist and lifting her off her feet.

Oswald rolled to his side spitting blood, gasping. “I'll get you Jack Wayne!! I'll get you...”
Harley woke up to the feel of Jack nibbling on her ear. She giggled and squirmed away from him rolling onto her side, her back facing him. “What are you doing, Jack? Go back to sleep,” Harley mumbled. She kept her eyes closed, but she couldn't keep the smile off her lips.

Jack scooted up closer, his hand snaking down her side, his fingers starting to wiggle over her stomach, then along that highly sensitive place between her hips and groin.

“Why?” Harley snuggled more securely into her blankets.

Jack huffed. “Because, today is our engagement party and I can hear that the mansion is already crawling with workers. So we need to get out for a few hours and I have a plan.” Jack nibbled on her shoulder, tickling her softly.

Harley grinned, still refusing to move. “A plan?”

“Yes, we are going to go out on the lake.” Jack nibbled down her arm. Harley rolled over onto her back finally so she could see him. Jack was grinning, his brown hair a tousled mess.

“What lake?” Harley asked with genuine confusion and curiosity.

“The lake here on the Wayne estate. There is a boat house, and there should be a row boat out there. I thought it might be fun, get us out of the house while the chaos of the party being set up was going on...bring a lunch with us...” Jack rolled on top of her, his hair falling forward to frame his face. He rubbed his nose against hers. “Come on Harley. Go row boating with me!”

Harley giggled. “I guess I could go boating with you...”

Jack dropped all his weight on her causing her to squeal. He immediately started numming at her neck and shoulders until she was screaming with laughter.

“JACK!! That tickles!!”

Jack giggled with a slight nod. “I know!!”

Harley laughed and bucked her body until Jack finally let her toss him off the bed. He fell off the side disappearing. Harley frowned when he didn't come up right away. She edged to the bed.

“Jack?”

That was the moment he chose to pop up to his feet completely naked. “BOO!”

Harley rolled out of the bed going after him. “You're a dirty cheat Jack!!”

Jack laughed. “Of course I am!!”

An hour later the two of them were weaving their way through the chaos of party preparation people on their way to pick up a picnic basket from Alfred. Harley was dressed nice and casual today in a pair of black leggings, hiking boots and a dark red, light weight, sweater top that hung past her hips with a denim jacket to ward off the morning chill. She wore her hair loose and wavy around her shoulders. Jack wore black skinny jeans, a dark blue pull over henley with a black leather jacket and black boots. When they arrived in the kitchen, Alfred was arguing with Jeanie from the bakery.

“They did so order a thousand cupcakes,” Jeanie was stating, her fists on her hips.

“I clearly recall that Master Bruce was only going to be ordering two hundred. We do not need a thousand.” Alfred was calm, but he was tapping his fingers on his arm where they were folded across his chest.

Jack started to laugh, putting his hand over her his mouth like a bad little boy. Harley grimaced, but she started to giggle too. When Jeanie saw them she pointed. “He ordered them, didn't you Mr. Wayne?”

Jack gave Alfred his best apologetic look. “Sorry Alfred.”

Alfred didn't groan or sigh, the only indication of annoyance was a slight twitch of his lips. “Of course Master Jack. Let us see what we can do Miss Elmore.”

“Just call me Jeanie, please.” Jeanie smiled.

Alfred pointed to a rather large wicker basket on the counter. “Your picnic Master Jack.”

Harley dashed over and kissed Alfred on his cheeks. “Sorry about the cupcakes Alfred.”

Alfred smiled. “Just tell me that is the only surprise.”

Harley glanced back at Jack who was snickering again and Alfred barely refrained from rolling his eyes. “Ah, well. I shall, as they say, roll with the punches.”

Harley kissed him again. “Thanks Alfred. Oh, heads up...a hundred pizzas are coming.”

Alfred sighed. “This is almost as bad as Master Jack's eighteenth birthday.”

Harley giggled. “Promise to tell me about it!” She waved, following Jack out the door. Alfred smiled. “I shall my dear. Let us just say it involved spiking the punch.”

The trek to the lake took far longer than Harley anticipated, but when they arrived she could see the lake was well worth the hike. The lake was beautiful and much larger than Harley thought it would be; she was beginning to think that the Wayne property was far more encompassingr than she thought; she had never thought to ask Jack the extent of the property. She hadn't even seen the lake, hidden as it was by trees that surrounded the whole area, the leaves recently having started to turn beautiful shades of red, orange and yellow.

There was a small dock that led out into the water of the lake with a small rowboat big enough for two tied to it and a boathouse. The boathouse was not at all what Harley thought of when she heard the term 'boathouse.' This was more like an actual house with sort of a boat/house/garage at the bottom. The house itself was all polished wood, with large windows facing the lake and a roofed terrace at the top.

As they walked toward the house and dock, Jack pointed with his free hand (the other carrying the basket.) “That lake house has two bedrooms and there is a large motorboat in the boathouse, but I thought the rowboat would be more romantic.”

Harley blinked in astonishment. “Sometimes I forget exactly how much money you and your brother have.”

Jack chuckled. “Me too. We have another manor house as well...the small house it's called. That house was the first Wayne Manor built by the Wayne family...geez...early 1840's maybe....”

Harley frowned as they walked out onto the dock. “Really? Another whole house?”

Jack shrugged leaning over and carefully dropping the basket into the middle of the rowboat. The boat was a lovely white rowboat that was big enough to seat two comfortably. “Yup, it's over on the island where that national wildlife refuge is...shoot, I forget the name. Our Dad donated half the land there for the refuge, but we still own the property where the house is located.”

“You ever been over there?” Harley asked as Jack carefully handed her into the boat. Harley was careful as she took her seat, the boat rocking gently under her weight.

“Not for a long time. Bruce and I went over there once when we were teenagers. The place was still in pretty good shape. It's like a damn castle.” Jack gracefully stepped onto the boat and settled down across from Harley.

“I would love to see it sometime.” Harley smiled at Jack as he picked up the oars. He grinned at her. “How about we head over there around Halloween? Nice and spooky.” Jack widened his eyes with a wicked little grin.

Jack rowed them out to the middle of the lake. The sky was a calm steel grey with a layer of ghost white clouds that slowly drifted overhead making the sunlight a watery grey. There was a gentle breeze, made cooler by the water, just enough that Harley brought her hands up to blow warm air into her hands and back against her nose. The water was clear and clean, casting back a perfect reflection of the trees along the water's edge. Harley smiled leaning back, her fingers dragging lazily across the water. Jack set the oars back in the boat and carefully moved over to sit by Harley. He leaned over and pulled out a pillow along with a blanket from the picnic basket.

Harley laughed. “Alfred's idea?”

Jack grinned. “Nope, mine! I thought it would be nice not only to eat lunch out here, but to just lay out here in the peace and quiet, holding my girl.”

Harley smiled softly, her eyes burning with a sudden overwhelming feeling of emotion. “I love you so much Jack.”

Jack was in the middle of pulling out their lunch when he stopped to look at her. “You okay Harls?”

She nodded. “It's just that...”

“I just don't want any of this to end,” Harley said instead, ignoring Harleen. Jack reached over and cupped her neck, tugging her close and laying his forehead against hers. “It never will Harley. I swear. You are I are a team. Together forever, come hell or high water. Got it toots?” He smiled, his blue eyes seemed to pierce her own as she nodded and replied, “Forever Jack.”

Jack gave her a quick kiss. “Okay—now, lunch. Let's see what we have...ah perfect, peanut butter and jelly sandwiches!” Jack laughed. “Oh and ruffled potato chips and some jam-filled thumbprint cookies!”

Harley laughed. “Not what I was expecting.”

Jack grinned handing her a sandwich in a plastic sandwich bag. “I told him to make us something simple since I know there will be all sorts of food tonight—including pizza—and the house is crazy right now. Didn't want Alfred to try and make anything complicated for our picnic. BUT, I did have Alfred pack this...”

Jack pulled out a bottle of wine. He grinned. “We have here a Riesling Trocken "Stock & Stein", Jakob-Kühn 2011 with white flowers and stone fruit that mimic apricots in the jam of our sandwiches.” Jack held his other hand under the bottle of wine as if he were showing it for a potential customer. Harley laughed.

Jack and Harley had eaten lunch, drank more than half the bottle of wine and were now lazily floating on the lake, letting the boat drift where it may, lying side by side in the bottom of the boat watching the dark clouds play across the sky. Jack held her hand and kissed her knuckles as they gazed up at the sky. He took her fingers, kissing the tips of each finger before going back to kissing her knuckles.

Harley had her head on his shoulder occasionally turning her head to kiss the place along his jaw or lean up to kiss his ear. “What do you want do to after we get married?” she asked.

“Mm...we could travel...kill annoying people all over the world,” Jack said with a laugh as he brushed her knuckles over his lips.

Harley giggled. “I always wanted to go to Paris.”

Jack shifted over to his side holding her hand against his mouth. “I'm sure there are a lot of annoying people in Paris too.” They both chuckled, but Jack continued. “If you want to go to Paris, then that is where I will take you. Just name it Harley, my sweet Harley Quinn...my harlequin...” Jack traced her face with his fingertips. “I will take you anywhere in the world Harley, anywhere at all. I will do anything to make you happy, my sweets.”

“Honestly Jack, I don't care where we go or what we do, as along as we're together. If you're with me then I will always be happy.” Harley leaned forward and kissed him softly.

Jack wrapped his arm around her waist tugging her closer. “I love you, my harlequin.”

Harley purred back and pressed her body up against his. Her mouth roamed hungrily over his, her hand coming up to thread through his hair. Jack moaned softly as he held her close. They nipped each others lips, tongues, and he slid his hand up her back. Harley stroked his neck, catching his tongue with her teeth, making Jack chuckle. She wrapped a leg around his hip which Jack grabbed and yanked further up, wrapping his arm around her thigh, kissing her a little more passionately. His hands drifted up from her leg, slid under her shirt, where he felt the warmth of her skin under his fingers. He had just reached up for her bra with his long fingers, undoing the latches at the back easily, then slid his hand along the smooth skin of her back, when the first chilly drops of water hit them.

Harley jumped and looked up. “Oh that was cold! Jack I think...”

That was the moment the clouds decided to open and and let the rain fall in great sheets of cold wet water. They both squealed. Jack sat up with Harley quickly. He grabbed the blanket (which they had had over their legs) and wrapped it around her head and shoulders before he grabbed the oars.

“Hold on Harls! Going to see how fast I can make this baby go!”

Harley laughed. “Jack! You're rowing, not driving a car!”

Jack grinned brightly. “I know!”

Jack rowed the boat with impressive strength as the rain started to come down harder on them.

They arrived at the dock soon after, but the rain had already soaked both of them to the bone. Jack jumped out of the boat and onto the dock with ease, reaching back to grab Harley’s hand, easily lifting her up out of the boat before he leaned down to grab their basket. Laughing together in the cold torrent, they ran up to the lake house. Jack pushed the door open and both of them stumbled inside.

Harley laughed kicking off her boots and shivered. “Oh gosh, that is cold!”

Jack grinned. “There's a gas fireplace in the living room. I could get it started and there should be some blankets in the closet. I think Alfred comes out here once a week to freshen everything up, so they should be clean.”

Harley yanked her denim jacket off and then her top. “A fire sounds great.”

Jack grinned while pulling his boots off. “Then a fire you shall have.”

Jack stripped off his jacket, then pulled his shirt over his head. Harley grinned doing the same, but her eyes were on Jack, watching him as he pealed his wet jeans off, taking his boxers with them until he was standing naked in front of her running his fingers through his wet hair slicking it back. He caught her watching him and grinned, his smile spreading across his face, showing off his perfect white teeth. Harley giggled as she felt her cheeks heat with a blush, feeling that warmth that only Jack could create in her spread through her body. She quickly stripped off her damp clothing, dropping them to the floor with that slopping sound of wet cloth hitting the hard floor. Jack wrinkled his nose playfully, his tongue gliding along his upper teeth as his blue eyes ran down her chilled naked body. “The air is a bit, ah, nipply,” he said with a wink. Harley wrinkled her nose and rolled her eyes as she pulled her long hair to the side and wrung it out, water dripping onto the floor next to their clothing. He chuckled and took her hand, kissing her knuckles before he led her into the lake house's living room.

Their wet feet made slopping sounds against the wood flooring as Jack led her through a small hall and into the house's main room. The living room, like the rest of the house, was paneled in light wood that had a deep yellow glow to it. The living room contained a nice set of white furniture. On the wall were water color paintings of the Wayne Manor, the lake and the woods around them as well as a couple of paintings of two young boys who could only be Bruce and Jack. The room also had several tapestry throw pillows and a large fireplace against the far left wall. The fireplace was stone layer, with a wood mantle that had a few small family photos on it and there was a large, white, fuzzy fake bear skin rug in front of the fire. Naked, Jack hurried over to a closet door just inside the living room, a thin door that opened up onto multiple shelves on which there were several thick folded brown and white blankets. He pulled one out, snapped it open and wrapped it around Harley’s shoulders before grabbing another to wrap it around himself.

He then pulled out the rest of the blankets and carried them over to the fireplace. Harley reached in and pulled out a couple of pillows that were setting on the bottom shelves and carried them over with her. Harley grinned. “These are down pillows aren't they?”

Jack, who was spreading the blankets out in front of the fireplace, answered, “Yep. Of course, only the best for the Waynes!”

Harley laughed at her fiance’s words as she carried the pillows over and set them down on the blankets while Jack walked over to turn on the fireplace. It only took a few minutes for the fire to begin to warm the room. Jack walked over to a stereo system that sat against the wall, picked out a CD and placed it in the CD tray, then turned the music on. The sounds of Ivy Levan's “Killing You” filled the living room. Harley couldn’t see where the speakers were, but the music seemed to emanate from everywhere.

With his blanket around his shoulders, Jack hurried back toward the front where he had left their basket and came back with the remains of their wine. The sound of the rain could be heard drumming against the roof creating a comforting sound that mixed with the warmth of the fireplace and the sounds of Ivy Levan's voice in a duet with Sting's. Jack came dancing over to her with the wine, singing along with the song and grinning wide as he used the bottle as a microphone.

“I want our home to burn it down
I want nobody when somebody's around
I won't scream, howl the moon
But the reason that I'm howling is you!
Oh, oh well, I hope it's warm in hell!
Oh, oh well I hope it's warm in hell!
'Cause no one's ever gonna need somebody more than I need you
And no one's ever gonna hurt somebody more than I hurt you
You know it's true, the things that I do and I'm killing you
The things I do and I'm killing you
You see, love is war, love is blind
We could've met it if we just took the time...”

*

Harley giggled watching him dance in a blanket, naked, and singing into a bottle of wine before he finally stepped over and sat down pulling Harley down with him in front of the fire. He grinned wide repeating the lines from the song. “And no one's ever gonna need somebody the more than I need you...and on one's ever gonnie hurt somebody more than I hurt you...the things I do and I'm killing you...”

Jack stopped singing, grinned at her and stuck the cork in his mouth. He pulled the cork out of the bottle with his teeth before he handed the wine bottle to Harley. “Now, to warm up some.”

She smiled as took the bottle and tilted it back to take a couple of swallows before handing it back to Jack. He smiled at his fiancee and took a swig before setting the bottle aside and wrapping his arm around her shoulders. Harley leaned her head against his shoulder, the two of the snuggling down on the rug in front of the fire. “This is nice,” Harley said softly snuggling against him.

Jack smiled with contentment, holding her close. “It is.”

(The music changed to something softer; Jack lowered the sounds as Selena Gomez sang out “There are a million reasons I should give you up, the heart wants what it wants...”)

Jack smiled rubbing his hand up and down her arm. “Yeah, almost a shame to go back for the party. We could just stay here all day.”

Harley giggled. “Except there will be a thousand cupcakes, a hundred pizzas and a magician.”

Jack chuckled. “True—would be a shame to waste all that by not showing up. But until then...”

Jack was about to shove Harley backwards, but she was ready for him and instead shoved him down against the pillows, tossing off her blanket and crawling on top of him, her hands pressed against his chest. “Were you going to do something like this Jack Wayne?”

Jack laughed gazing up at her with an amused expression. “You read my mind.”

Harley ran the flat of her hands up his chest. “Mm...could be because the same thing was on my mind after watching you undress.”

Jack grinned as he caressed her thighs. “Well yes, the thought occurred to me seeing this gorgeous blonde, naked and damp standing in front of me...a man is only so strong.”

Harley giggled at him and leaned down to kiss him. Jack wrapped his arms around her, holding her tight against him. Her skin was warm, silky soft against his; he could feel the warmth of her seeping into him.

Harley licked his mouth, then slowly ran her tongue down his chin, and then along his throat. His skin tasted slightly salty mixed with something unidentifiable, but pleasantly and uniquely Jack. She grabbed his throat between her teeth, tugging gently for a moment before Harley started to drag her tongue down his chest, sliding her body along his stomach, biting and sucking as she went.

Jack closed his eyes, his hands moving to her damp hair giving himself over to her. Each teasing bite or lick from Harley made him groan softly. He loved the feel of her fingers pressing into his flesh, the way her breasts brushed against him, he could feel her nipples hard, stroking against his skin as she edged lower.

She lowered herself down between his legs, pressing her hands against the soft flesh at the space between his groin and thigh. Jack jerked when she stroked her fingers against his skin in that sensitive area, teasing him. Her fingers danced passed his scrotum, her breath hot against his shaft, but she didn't touch him fully, not yet. He only felt her hot breath for a few moments.
Jack groaned when she slowly ran her tongue over his quickly hardening erection, wrapping her fingers around him, leaning against his thigh and using her other hand to cup him, squeezing gently, at the moment she wrapped her lips around him. Jack squeezed his eyes closed feeling her lower her mouth on him, her lips moving down gradually, her tongue weaving against the under side of his shaft slowly, covering him in her saliva. Her hand holding him jerked up, then gradually slid up and down as she drew her lips up to the head of his erection. She sucked gently, then harder, then gently again, adjusting the rhythm of her hand between stroking up and down while squeezing and massaging his scrotum. Harley rolled her tongue over the head of his erection in a slow lazy twirl that made him hiss. “Harley...my Harley...”

Harley smiled, flicking her tongue over the top of his shaft, her tongue playing along it before she wrapped her mouth around him again. She sucked hard, pressing her lips down on him, then pulled up, her tongue coating him with saliva as she did so. Harley smiled against him as she listened to the grunts and gasps from Jack, enjoying the feel of his fingers in her hair tightening.

Harley let go of him only long enough to suck the full length of him into her mouth, relaxing her muscles to take all of him until he was touching the back of her throat before she pressed her lips tightly, dragging them up his length, her tongue moving back and forth along the under side of his penis. Jack's fingers convulsed in her wet hair, his hips jerking up. “Uhh...Harley...”

Harley stopped and crawled back up to straddle him. Jack whimpered slightly at the loss of warmth from her mouth, but opened his eyes to look up at her staring a down at him, her hands on his stomach. Her thighs on either side of him were warm and soft. When she flexed, holding him with her legs, it was exhilarating just feeling her weight on his hips. It made him want her even more. Harley rubbed her hands over his pecs, her nails brushing gently over his nipples before she dragged her nails down his chest, eliciting a hiss from him.

“Watch me Jack,” she whispered, her blue eyes reflecting the light flickering from the fireplace just before she took him in her hand, and holding him steady, she lowered herself down onto him. Jack sucked in a breath with pleasure as her warm wetness surrounded him, burying him inside her, and feeling the way she surrounded him made him groan loudly. He watched her face, contorted with pleasure at the moment his body pierced her own.

Harley’s muscles tightened drawing him into herself, holding him inside her. She closed her eyes briefly letting the warmth and pleasure roll through her body, the tremor of pleasure hot and stimulating, flowed up her spine and spread through her body like warm honey, oozing into every fiber of her being.

Jack reached up to grab her, his hands around her waist, holding her down on him, and watched Harley arch her back and reach behind her to grab his knees. He hissed with pleasure, watching her lean back. He looked down to see himself inside her, sending a renewed ripple of warmth through him. He dragged one hand down her stomach, brushing over the tattoo, to her groin, his thumb brushing over her clitoris and rubbed gently. Harley gasped and groaned and thrust her pelvis, squeezing him inside her which sent molten heat through his body. Jack groaned watching the way her breasts bounced as she moved vigorously, then she slowly rolled her hips sending erotic waves through him, his skin tingling in pleasure.

She brought herself forward again, her hands pressed against his chest, rolling her hips, pressing down hard on him, then undulating her hips in slow waves. He could feel her pleasure building when he grabbed her hips and thrust upward, meeting her rhythm; any moment now, Jack knew she would climax.

Jack reached down to roll his fingers over her clitoris again, stroking slow and steady and grinned when her breathing quickened, her skin warming as she came closer. When her eyes opened, the blue was filled with something warm, lustfilled and only for him.

“Oh, oh Jack...uhhhh...puddin...yes yes...”

Jack groaned watching her. “You're so beautiful Harley. Cum for me Harley, cum for me pumpkin.”

Harley cried out, her eyes screwing closed, her fingers digging into his chest almost painfully when she came. Jack groaned feeling the bursts of extra wetness wash over him, that flood of warmth as her muscles tightened then went lax again when she came. He grinned happily, watching her. Harley buried her face against his neck, then playfully bit him before she pushed herself up to gaze down at him.

She smiled, getting her breath back and catching her bottom lip with her teeth which sent trickles of pleasure through him. He loved her smile.

“Oh Jack...” she groaned.

Then she surprised him again when she lifted up and off of him, the loss of her wet heat had him whining slightly. Jack groaned. “Harley!”

She giggled at his response. Jack swallowed watching her, his hands hovering, ready to grab her again. She turned her back to him, holding his erection steady once more before she pressed him back inside her. Jack groaned watching the curve of Harley's back, reaching forward to grab her rear, squeezing hard into the creamy soft flesh, pressing his teeth into his lower lip almost painfully, watching the way his shaft disappeared, in and out of Harley. It was beautiful watching her move, feeling her shifting and fucking, her hips thrusting up and down then rolling over him punctuated by her gasps and groans. He pressed his fingers into her hips enjoying the feel of her soft flesh in his hands, and the red marks he left in her skin delighted him. Jack dropped his head back with a loud groan, arching his back to thrust his hips upward, burying himself as deeply as possible into her.

Harley moaned loudly, a deep primeval sound of pleasure. The feel of his fingers pressing into her flesh, holding her down on him while his thumbs rubbed up her tail bone then back, pulling her cheeks apart so he could watch his shaft moving in and out of her. Harley lifted and lowered her hips, having him so deeply embedded in her body, the feel of his hands on her, every sensation made her groan loudly.

“Oh Jack! Jack you feel so good...Uhh...yes...” She grabbed his knees, her fingers pressing in hard as she held on and thrust her hips up and down, bouncing just a little, which made Jack gasp. “Oh God Harley!”

She hissed with pleasure at the way Jack felt inside her, each time he hit that spot that sent a burst of heat through her.

Jack sat up wrapping his arms around her waist, pulling her back against his chest, one hand around a breast squeezing, his other hand moving down between her legs, rubbing over her clitoris while she thrust on him. Jack dragged his tongue up her spine before he bit down into her creamy skin at her shoulder. Harley jerked, but the pain was a welcome addition to their fucking.

She groaned. “More Jack...more...”

He moved his hands to cover her breasts, the warm silk of her skin, the sweet softness, the weight of her breasts in his hands felt good. Jack grinned against her shoulder just before he pinched her nipples, rolling the hardened flesh between his thumb and forefinger harder than necessary, but that spike of pleasurable pain had her muscles tightening in response.

Jack brought his legs up, bending his knees slightly. Harley immediately grabbed his knees again, arching into him. Jack kissed her shoulder before he pressed his teeth into the flesh of her back again, biting down as he thrust a few times in fast jerks into her warmth. He let go to groan against her shoulder. “Fuck me Harley, fuck me hard.” Harley cooed in response, her fingers digging into his knees as she lifted up, almost completely off of him, the head of his shaft the only part still inside her when she came crashing down on him again. Jack's eyes crossed for a split second while he held onto her.

Harley's whole body tightened, reaching, climbing for that peak. She ground her hips down hard on him; that was the moment the bubble of pleasure broke and washed over her. She cried out, her orgasm breaking like a wave through her body. Jack couldn't hold back when she climaxed this time. It was too much. She sounded too beautiful, breathtakingly sexy and her body around him tightened to the point of yanking his orgasm from him. The soft whimpers she made, the way she called his name, the rush of fluid...

He pressed his forehead against her shoulder, his arms tight around her waist when he came with a long moan.

He kept thrusting as if he just couldn't stop, his fingers flexed, spasmodic with the intensity of his orgasm. He pressed his forehead hard against her shoulder, her soft hair against his cheek, with an almost anguished sound. “I love you Harley...my girl.”

Harley leaned back against him, her eyes closed letting the intensity of her feelings, not just the physical pleasure, but the way he touched her very soul wash over her. She placed her hands over his where he held her, weaving her fingers with his while Jack's last thrusts sent her spiraling up, then crashing down as another wave rolled through her, her orgasm racing up her spine.

Jack held her tight, neither one of them moving for the longest time. Jack kissed her shoulder, tracing the line up her throat to her ear.

Harley giggled resting back against him. “Mmm, always my puddin...”

It was early evening, not long after Jack and Harley made their way back to the manor house. They were both wet again having walked through another burst of rain showers, but they immediately made their way upstairs to take a warm shower together (which took far longer than necessary because Jack lifted Harley up and pinned her against the wall, holding one of her legs up while he fucked her hard and fast, pounding her against the wall until everyone in the house putting the party together heard her scream Jack's name.) Harley sat in front of the bathroom mirror setting the 1920's style hair chain in her hair that she had just finished curling and pinning partly back, giving her golden hair a soft look as the rest of her hair lay in waves around her shoulders. Her makeup was done in a softer 1920's style with a basic cupid’s bow red lips and smokey eyes. She was humming to herself, smiling at her reflection as she adjusted the hair ornament in her golden hair.

Her smile widened when she saw Jack walk into view to stand behind her, adjusting the tie of his old-fashioned tuxedo. She had done his makeup for him, black eyeliner that made his incredible blue eyes stand out even more and red lips that matched her own. His hair was slicked back and he wore a pair of white gloves even though she had painted his nails for him.

He grinned at her in the mirror, then did a little spin making Harley laugh softly. He stepped up behind her and ran his gloved fingertips along her throat. “And you look so beautiful that I don't really want to share you tonight.”

Jack leaned over and nibbled on her ear making her squeal and wiggle. “Jack!!”

He laughed pressing a kiss to her ear careful not to smear his lipstick. “So, ready to go down?”

Harley stood and ran her hands down the front of her dress. “Yes.” She swished her hips making the tassels sway.

Jack laughed. “You are going to look gorgeous dancing in this dress.” Jack wrapped an arm around her waist, pulling her up against him and held her right hand in his, dancing her around the room. He spun her out, then pulled her back into his arms and waltzed in a circle.

“Ready to go put in our appearance my sweet? The happily engaged couple,” Jack asked, dipping Harley back. Harley giggled softly. “Yes, I guess so, but you're in a great deal of trouble tonight Jack. I am going to peel that suit off of you first chance I get and I am going to show you exactly how good you look.” She ran her tongue over her upper lip to emphasize her point.

Jack giggled. “Ooh Miss Quinn!! You say such scandalous things!”

They both giggled with Jack pulling her up and wrapping his arms around her waist. Harley draped her arms over his shoulders and kissed him softly.

When Jack and Harley made their way to the stairs leading down to the entrance hall, Harley gasped in surprise when she saw how the stairs were decorated. When they had arrived home the stairs hadn't been touched and some workers had just started to put lights up. But now the place was completely transformed. The stairs had been decorated with green leaves and hundreds of white roses, all intertwined through the bannister and down the stairs. Every other stair was decorated with white candles, their flames dancing merrily. The main hall was laced with strings of lights and more white flowers throughout as well as white drapery that led from the hall, guiding guests to the ballroom.

When Jack and Harley arrived at the top of the stairs they were also surprised to see most of the guests in the front hall with Bruce, dressed in a perfectly tailored black suit. Bruce was holding a glass of champagne and smiling as was everyone else. Harley didn't know most of the people in attendance. She saw Zatanna, and she recognized the mayor, the chief of police, a few of the other elite families of Gotham from the two other events she had attended and from the paper or internet. She even saw Alex (in a suit no less!) with Alice in the very back, each person holding a champagne flute in their hands and waving at them. Harley and Jack both gave a little wave back.

Harley felt Jack, his arm around her waist, squeeze her side. Harley's heart swelled when she glanced sideways at him. He wasn't looking at anyone else but Bruce, his big brother. No matter what Jack had said, Harley had realized there was a little bit of the little brother hero worship of his older sibling, no matter how much Jack tried to get under his brother's skin...no matter how maniacal Jack became...or how violent...there was that part of him that was always the little brother seeking his big brother's approval. Jack wanted Bruce's love and approval, no matter how he acted or protested. And this, this acknowledgment of their engagement in front of everyone...the fact that Bruce was throwing this party, did more for Jack than Bruce could ever know, because no matter what, Jack loved his big brother with all his heart. It did Jack more good to see his brother smiling and happy for him than the fact that all of Gotham's elite was here to see them.

Bruce smiled and held up his glass. “I would like to introduce everyone to my little brother, Jack Wayne and his bride-to-be Harley Quinn.”

That surprised Harley. Bruce used the name Jack had given her. She smiled at him and reclined her head. Bruce returned the gesture. Jack laughed and taking Harley's hands he led her down the stairs to the applause of the group. When they reached the bottom of the stairs Bruce hugged Jack. Jack laid his head on his brother's shoulder with a broad smile. “Thank you Bruce.”

Bruce hugged him back tightly. “I love you Jack. I always have and always will.”

Bruce released his brother and turned to Harley, pulling her into his arms and hugged her. “Thank you Harley, for making Jack happy.” Bruce held her tightly.

Harley returned his embrace. “I love Jack with all my heart. Thank you Bruce for this. You have no idea how much this means to us both.”

Bruce nodded and smiled. “Well...” He released Harley. “Shall we go have a party?”

The crowd cheered.

The ballroom, (which had even more guests waiting inside who broke out into applause when the engaged couple entered) was decorated in elegance. There was white drapery that started at the large crystal chandelier and extended out, mixed with small twinkling lights creating a canopy overhead. There were white clothed tables and chairs all decorated with candles and white roses. There was a small string quartet playing, and of course, a huge big top circus display in a corner where the cupcakes were on display. There was a large buffet table with shrimp, vegetables, crackers, dips, cheeses...there was so much food Harley was sure there would be leftovers for days. That was not even considering the wait staff that was walking around with trays of hors d'oeuvres, and the alcohol! Harley had never seen so many cocktails and other colorful drinks being walked around. Bruce had gone all out and really out did himself.

Once everyone was in the ballroom, Bruce moved over by the large circus tent of cupcakes near the string quartet and took one of the microphones set up there.

A light appeared on the dance floor in a perfect circle as everyone clapped. Bruce grinned calling out. “Okay you two, let's have a dance!” (For a moment Harley saw a little bit of Jack in Bruce. Something about his smile and the glint of happiness in his eye.) She smiled while Jack took her hand and led her out into the middle of the ball room.

Jack winked at her. “Hey my bride-to-be, would you like to dance with me?”

Harley giggled and took his hand as the string quartet started to play “At Last.” Jack spun Harley into his arms then danced her across the dance floor, his bright eyes never leaving her face. She wrapped her arm around his waist and they slowly moved in a circle ignoring everyone watching them as they danced. Jack took her hand from around his waist, his fingers sliding along her arm. He stepped away from her, taking her hand once more so that he could slowly spin her around and back into his arms. They took up the position for a waltz, slowly dancing in an elegantly flowing circle.

Jack grinned at her, his eyes only on her. He took her hands, guiding them to his shoulders. He surprised her by tucking his hands under her arms and lifting her into the air, moving in a slow spin, gazing up at her. Harley smiled down at him, everyone in the room fading away until it was only her and Jack dancing together, together forever. (Bruce, along with everyone else, felt almost like intruders watching how intimately the two of them danced together.)

He gently set her back on her feet, sliding her body down his own, their eyes never faltering from one another. Jack pulled her close again, taking her right hand in his, his other hand stroking along her upper back, their foreheads touching as he led Harley into a tango next. The steps were short and quick, back and forth, their bodies pressed together. Jack slid her to the side and Harley brought her leg up, leaning her body against Jack's side. He leaned with her, the two of them creating an artful sway to the side. Jack lifted Harley up again, swinging her gently as if she weighed nothing. After two spins Jack, brought her back to her feet gracefully before they laughed together.

The happy couple spun around the dance floor, making a full circuit, and stopped when they came to the middle of the dance floor where Jack wrapped his arms tight around her waist, tugging Harley up against him. Harley wrapped her arms around his neck and they simply swayed together to the last of the music. Just as the last notes played, Jack dipped Harley just slightly and kissed her.

Everyone started clapping. Jack laughed and spun Harley out, maintaining a hold on her hand, and the two of them bowed to their audience.

Jack walked Harley off from the center of the ballroom floor and the music started again with something light and classical.

Harley was all smiles until she saw someone from the corner of her eyes. She turned and there he was, Guy, standing on the other end of the cupcake display, a glass of champagne in his hand. He raised his champagne glass up to her and winked before he licked his lips in an obscene gesture. Harley's blood ran cold. She stumbled.

Jack frowned turning toward her, laying his hand on her arm in concern. “Harley?”

He turned her into his arms, then cupped the side of her face looking deeply into her eyes. He could see the fear there, that something was hurting her. “Harley, I don't know what has been bothering you the last few days, but sweets—you need to tell me.”

Harley felt Harleen ooze past her defenses and murmured, “It's ...it's Guy, Guy Kopski. He...he's an old boyfriend of mine from college.”

Jack frowned as something cold crept into his eyes. He started to say something when one of the guests came up to congratulate them on their engagement. Jack was doing his best to be polite, yet he pushed past the guest, almost dragging Harley with him as he headed to a corner of the ballroom and grabbed her by her upper arms, pressing her into the corner.

Harley/Harleen looked down at the floor before she continued. “Guy Kopski was this man I dated for a few weeks in college. He—he was awful Jack. He used to hit me.”

Harley reached up touching a phantom hurt on her face. She whispered as if talking to herself. “He chipped my tooth once...”

She felt the pressure of Jack's hands on her upper arms, not hurtful, just a reflection of his anger. He reached up to cup her face with one hand and tilted her face up to him as she continued. “Nothing intimate happened between us. I didn't want it to...and I refused him, until one night, when I was on the verge of breaking it off with him, he...he tried to rape me.”

While she spoke, Jack's expression became more and more murderous, his eyes, a lively blue, turned almost icy, a flat and dangerous edge creeping into them. Jack's voice became deadly quiet. “What? Tell me again.”

Harley/Harleen (the two now mixed together) started to cry. “He...he tried to rape me. I fought him...I got away from him.” She swallowed hard before she continued. “I managed to have him thrown out of college for it because mine was just one of many complaints against him. He...he started calling me just recently, threatening me, demanding money because he found out I was marrying you. I tried to ignore him, but now I've seen him over the last few days, following us. He swore he would make you hate me, he would tell stories to the Gotham press to turn them against me and to...make you look like a fool. And me...this...gold digging whore...If I didn't start paying him...not just one payment, but he wanted me to keep them coming...forever I guess...”

Harley/Harleen started to sink against the wall.

“Oh Jack...I just hoped he would go away. I...I don't know why I just...I didn't want you to see me as that person who was so weak she let herself be...” she trailed off for a moment and then looked up at her fiance. “Jack....I didn't want you to stop loving me. I thought maybe I could handle this myself...I...I don't know....” Her voice trembled and tears started to leak from the corner of her eyes. Jack grabbed her, pulling her into the embrace of his arms and held her tightly, resting his chin on her head. “You have nothing to be upset about except that you should have told me sooner Harley. I trust you. I trust no one in this world like I trust you Harley. We are a team—always. If someone hurts one of us, they hurt us both.”

Harley broke down in his arms and Jack held her close, stroking his fingers along her back as he continued to speak. “You never have to face anything alone Harley. Never. “

He tilted her face up to his once again and kissed her softly. She moaned, leaning into the kiss, giving her strength. Jack pulled away and rubbed his nose against hers before cupping her face between his hands and using his thumbs to stroke her cheeks and wipe away the tears.

Harley pressed her forehead against his and whispered. “He's here Jack, here at the party.”

Jack stiffened. She could feel every muscle in his body go taunt. Jack's voice was low, steady, and deadly. “Where Harley?”

Harley turned and pointed. Guy was still standing by the cupcakes sipping his champagne and grinning from ear to ear. Jack turned back to Harley cupping her cheek and kissed her hard before he pulled back and hissed. “Stay here. I'm going to take care of this.”

“Jack wha...?” Harley grasped for him, but he was already walking toward Guy. Harley rushed to catch up.

*

When Jack reached Guy, he snarled. “You need to leave.”

Guy looked a little surprise when he turned to see Jack Wayne, but he grinned. “Not until I get my money. That bitch finally tell you what I want? Give me what I'm owed and you won't see me again...until the next payment is due at least.”

The smile Guy gave Jack was nasty, condescending and so full of his own self-satisfaction that Jack didn't hold back. Jack punched Guy hard enough in the face that the man's nose instantly broke, blood rushing down over his lips. Guy dropped his champagne glass, the glass shattering into a hundred pieces when he grabbed his nose. Everyone turned just as Guy took a swipe at Jack. Guy's first punch missed as Jack leaned out of the way.

Jack grinned and hissed. “You aren't getting anything from me! AND LEAVE HARLEY ALONE YOU FUCKER! NO ONE, AND I MEAN NO ONE MESSES WITH MY GIRL!!”

Jack's arm snapped out hitting Guy in the face a second time. Guy dry heaved at the pain of having his nose hit again. Guy swung again, managing to connect, but Jack brought his arm up protecting his head from Guy's clumsy swing, the strike causing little more than a bruise to Jack's arm.

*

By now everyone was watching the fight as the two men moved out onto the dance floor. Anyone who had been out there dancing swiftly headed off the floor to avoid the fight. Bruce, who was in the back talking with Zatanna turned at the sounds of people gasping and murmurs running through the crowd when he heard his brother shout at one of the guests. Bruce started to move forward, seeing that Alfred had appeared. The two men exchanged a look before they both moved forward toward the sounds of fighting.

*

Jack grunted when Guy slammed into his chest, wrapping his arms around Jack. Guy struck him three times, hard in the side, possibly cracking one of Jack's ribs. Jack brought his elbow down on Guy's back with two hard downward jabs of his elbow until Guy grunted in pain and stumbled back, releasing him. Jack then backhanded Guy across the face as hard as he could, snapping the other man's head to the side. Guy stumbled backwards, the blonde man just barely kept his footing. He managed to right himself and charge at Jack, taking a blind jab that Jack simply slapped down. Jack swung his right fist, slamming his knuckles into Guy's cheek. Guy grunted in pain and swung his fist wildly at Jack, managing to get a strike in, opening a wound across Jack's cheek. Another quick strike and his knuckles brushed hard across Jack's nose, blood instantly oozing down and staining the white color of Jack's tux from the pressure cut in his cheek, at the same time that blood started to leak from Jack's nose running across his red lips. Jack angrily wiped the blood away with the back of his hand smearing it across his white glove. The next swing that Guy took, Jack easily blocked with his elbow. Jack leaned to the left and swung, his fist connecting with Guy's side, cracking a rib.

Guy took an awkward left fist swing at Jack who swung his right elbow up blocking the hit. Jack swung again at Guy, his left fist connecting with Guy's jaw; this time there was an almost audible crack as the knuckles of Jack's fist fractured Guy's jaw. Jack was grinning viciously as he then hit Guy again in the abdomen, accurately striking and temporarily paralyzing his diaphragm, causing Guy to struggle for breath before Jack then hit him again in the cracked ribs, breaking them.

Jack chuckled low and menacingly, swung his fist, aiming for Guy's face again, but Guy managed to slip a hit under Jack's arm, knocking Jack's head up causing his teeth to snap together. Guy sucked in a breath and got another slug in, hitting Jack in the face again, opening up another pressure wound at Jack's jaw.
Harley cried out. “Jack!!” She started to run to help, but someone grabbed her from behind. She turned, ready to fight when she saw it was Alfred. He frowned. “Miss Harleen, please don't...”

His grip was light, but his expression was one of concern and worry. Harley didn't know what to do so she let Alfred stop her from running to Jack.

Jack snarled out a laugh and charged under Guy's arms, wrapping his arms around Guy's middle and lifted the blonde man off his feet before throwing him into the cupcake display, sending cupcakes flying everywhere. Guy pushed himself to his feet just as Jack had stepped closer and hit Jack in the stomach, then another fist to the side. Jack took the punches, then grabbed Guy, lifting the man off his feet again and slammed him back down onto the floor with the smashed display and squished cupcakes. Jack straddled Guy, blood covering his teeth as he smiled down at the blonde.

“Nobody threatens my girl...no one...and I'm going to kill you for what you tried to do to her. I want you to suffer!!” Jack wrapped one hand around Guy's neck, his right fist poised over Guy's face.

Guy choked on a laugh and spoke even with his broken jaw. “She's a fucking whore!! A frigging fucking cunt!!! She was always a cunt! Teasing me! Acting like she was going to let me fuck her, but when it came right down to it she was a fucking WHORE!! You hear that everyone!!! JACK WAYNE'S BITCH IS A FUCKING CUNT WHORE!! Write that in your fucking papers!! If she let you between her legs, it's only because you got the money to pay for it!!” Spittle and blood flew from Guy's lips as he ranted under Jack.

Jack snarled, his eyes flashing deadly and cold. It was clear to Guy that Jack Wayne was going to take pleasure in killing him. He grabbed Jack's arms without success in moving Jack's hand from his throat; Jack's grip was like iron. Jack then released Guy's throat and snapped his hands out to grasp both of Guy's wrists and pin them with one hand to Guy's chest, while with his other hand, Jack hit Guy in the face, again, and again, and again. The crunching scrape of bone moving against bone was audible as Jack smashed Guy's nose into a bloody, fleshy mound of nothing. Guy's lips split against his teeth, Blood started to splatter over Jack's tux, some splattering up to his face as he continued to hit Guy. The crimson fluid was covering Guy's face, his head lolling, his eyes rolling back to show only the whites, but Jack just kept hitting him.

Jack finally grabbed Guy around the neck, stood up and lifted Guy with him...

Someone was screaming. “CALL 911!! CALL 911!!”

Bruce rushed toward his brother, shoving guests out of his way as Jack lifted Guy up off his feet. Bruce could see his brother's face, covered in blood, his blue eyes wild and something in Bruce's heart sank... Bruce whispered. “No Jack...no...”

This...that look was what Bruce had been fearing all this time...the reason he had hired Dr. Quinzel...that Jack would lose control one day...and that day was now...

Jack grinned at the barely conscious Guy before he slugged him hard enough that Guy was lifted off his feet and sent crashing down again, his head bouncing when he hit the floor with a loud crack against the marble flooring. Guy started to lift his head, but there was clearly something wrong as he dropped back and stopped moving all together. That was the moment where everything seemed to turn into a slow motion film for Harley. Jack started to go after Guy again when Bruce rushed up behind him and grabbed his brother under his arms and hauled his brother back.

Jack snarled, spittle and blood flying from his lips. “LET ME GO BRUCE!! I'M GOING TO KILL HIM!!”

“JACK STOP IT!! NOW!!” Bruce roared and yanked back, hauling and pulling his struggling brother off his feet and away from the immobile Guy. A siren could be heard in the distance, echoed by another siren. Harley ran to Jack and screamed, “LET HIM GO!!” as she beat on Bruce's arms. Alfred rushed forward to try to grab Harley again, but she was yanking at Bruce trying to get him to free Jack.

Jack started to laugh a high pitched maniacal laughter that sent a chill down Bruce's spine and had many of the guests looking on in shock and fright. Bruce held onto Jack even after he had stopped struggling, but he continued to laugh, the sound now a crazed chuckle. Alfred had wrapped his arms around Harley pulling her back as the police entered the ballroom.

An hour later Jack was in handcuffs and being shoved into the back of a police car. He was still laughing, unnerving everyone. An ambulance was taking Guy to the hospital, but he was unresponsive. Harley had heard one of the medics say something about him being in a coma. One of the officers, a young blonde woman with a stern face named Sarah Essen was standing by a crowd of guests taking statements while her partner, Sgt. Roger DeCarlo had taken Bruce's statement and was now taking hers. Bruce was standing nearby while Alfred had a comforting arm around Harley's shoulders.

She was fighting tears, but they were falling down her cheeks in a steady stream as DeCarlo asked. “So, this Guy Kopski was threatening you, trying to blackmail you?”

Harley nodded. “Yes, he wasn't supposed to be here—he had been stalking me.”

DeCarlo nodded. “And why hadn't you reported this?”

“I hoped he would just stop...just go away.” Harley sniffed then asked. “Can I see Jack? Can I go with him?”

DeCarlo frowned. “I'm sorry Miss Quinn, but no. He is going to have to be taken in.” DeCarlo glanced at Bruce. “I'm assuming you have already called your lawyer?”

Bruce nodded. “Yes, he will meet Jack at the police station, though my brother needs medical attention too and I want a doctor from Arkham there, someone to evaluate my brother's mental fitness.”

“I promise he will get it once he's booked Mr. Wayne and you just made the arrangements with your lawyer...” DeCarlo closed his notebook. “Now if you'll excuse me.”

Harley turned on Bruce. “What is going to happen to him? Why can't I go down there with him?” Her voice was rising with each word. “We can't be apart! We can't be!”

“Harley. Let me handle this.” Bruce's voice was stern, hard, lacking emotion as he turned his back on her and walked away. Harley started to go after him, but Alfred eased Harley back. “Miss Harleen, let me take you to the kitchen and make you some tea all right?”
Harley turned to Alfred, whispering. “Alfred...I...we...we can't be apart...”

Alfred frowned putting his arm around her shoulders. “Come along Miss Harleen. I'm sure everything will work out.”

She looked over her shoulder, her body starting to tremble. She couldn't believe any of this was happening...she needed her puddin...he needed her...they needed to be together!

It was two in the morning by the time the doctor that the Wayne lawyer had requested made it to the Gotham police department lock-up.

Jack sat in an interrogation room, which was painted that terrible battleship shade of green, one table, two chairs and a two-way mirror. It was raining hard enough outside that the drum of the rain against the building could be heard inside the interrogation room. Jack was handcuffed to the table, now dressed in a prison orange jumpsuit. The wounds on his face had been attended to, with a couple of stitches and band-aids over the wounds. His knuckles had been cleaned as well, but there was still a rough, bloody feel about him. The man that was sitting across from him, the professional who had been requested by the Wayne lawyer and Bruce Wayne himself, was Dr. Jeremiah Arkham.

Arkham smiled and pushed his glasses up his nose. “Do you know why I'm here Mr. Wayne?”

Jack grinned. “To see if I'm sane.”

“Basically. Your brother and lawyer requested a psych evaluation based on your history of mental illness. My determination will decided whether you are held at Blackgate or given over to me for help at my asylum.” Akham folded his hands on the table in front of him with a neutral expression settled over his features.

Jack chuckled. “Why does wanting to kill a man make me unstable...”

Arkham frowned. “Jack—may I call you Jack?”

Jack grinned. “No.”

Arkham frowned clearly not expecting that answer. “All right Mr. Wayne...I spoke to Dr. Thompson, you remember her?”

Jack narrowed his eyes. “Yes I do.”

Arkham smiled. “Well I spoke to her before coming here to speak with you. She had some interesting things to say and your extended file is quite interesting.” Akham smiled. “Anyway, why did the man you attacked deserve to die?”

“Hmm...let's see...I was in the anger stage and on my way to acceptance, which would have been perfect once he was dead,” Jack growled.

“Hrm...let's see...I was in the anger stage and on my way to acceptance, which would have been perfect once he was dead,” Jack growled.

Arkham nodded. “I see...you know Kuber Ross. All right. Do you feel any guilt over your actions?”

Jack laughed with a slight shake of his head. “No, should I?”

Arkham nodded. “How would you have felt if you had indeed killed this man?”

Jack smiled. “Happy.”
Arkham nodded. “And why happy?”

Jack crossed his eyes. “Have you ever danced with the devil in the pale moonlight?”

“What?” Arkham frowned.

Jack chortled. “I just like the way that sounds, don't you?”

Arkham took his glasses off and cleaned them before he stood up. Jack giggled. “You know what is really funny? That you all think any of this matters...but you know I did find meaning in one thing...finding someone to share it all with...” Jack's smile became wider. “Someone who understands.”

Arkham frowned. “I'll be right back Mr. Wayne.”

Outside the room on the other side of the glass stood Commissioner Gordon, Bruce Wayne, and the Wayne family lawyer Coleman Reese.

Bruce Wayne spoke up. “So, Dr. Arkham?”

Arkham nodded. “I think committing your brother would be the best decision. I don't think he fully comprehends what he has done, that his actions have repercussions—and given his past issues, I think a full stay with us will do your brother some good.”

Bruce looked at Gordon who frowned and nodded before his gravelly voice ground out one word. “Fine.”

Reese smiled. “Wonderful. Let us draw up the paperwork, shall we?”

*

Bruce watched through the mirror when Dr. Arkham returned to the room to inform Jack that he was being committed.

Jack turned toward the two-way mirror and screamed, trying to stand up, yanking on his cuffed hands. “NO!! BRUCE!! You can't!! Harley!! No, no!! I need HARLEY!! YOU CAN'T KEEP US APART!!”

Jack went ballistic, yanking on his cuffs and screaming continually for Harley. Dr. Arkham frowned standing up and backing away as two police officers rushed into the room to try to restrain Jack. Dr. Arkham asked for his bag which was brought in a few seconds later. Arkham pulled out a vial and syringe from his medical bag, quickly breaking the seal and filling the syringe while Jack screamed.

“HARLEY!!”

Arkham yelled. “Hold him steady—I'm going to sedate him!”

The guards struggled to hold Jack as Arkham approached him with the syringe. Dr. Arkham injected Jack in the neck and within seconds, Jack's whole body became limp. He broke down into a sob, sinking to the floor, held up more by his cuffed hands than under his own suddenly rubbery muscles and curled into himself as the sedative took effect.
“Harley...I need Harley...”

Bruce closed his eyes. Never had he witnessed anything so hard as watching his brother have a psychotic break. Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose thinking to himself, what was going to happen to Jack now?

Harley was waiting in the kitchen with Alfred for Bruce to return. The rain drummed relentlessly against the manor and sent a chill through the house, but the rain wasn't the only reason for the chill. Harley was still dressed in her evening gown, but her make-up was smeared across her face from her crying, her lipstick was smudged, and her eyes looked haunted; the smeared makeup only added to her pained and lost look. Alfred had held her while she sobbed almost uncontrollably until she was hiccuping as she struggled to catch her breath, but now he wondered if he didn't prefer that to her current hollow state.

Alfred had brought her a blanket when she started to shiver. He had wrapped it around her shoulders before putting a cup of hot tea between her hands. But even with the blanket and tea, Harley couldn't seem to stop shivering.

Alfred watched her with concern, but his own heart felt heavy in his chest. He had never seen Master Jack in such a state, the violence in his eyes, and that laughter... Alfred shivered and sipped his tea watching Harley. She was pale, all the color having been drained from her face and the shivering had set in almost as soon as Bruce had left for the station. He was afraid she would become ill if this kept up.

“Is there anything at all I can get you Miss Harleen?” Alfred inquired with concern.

“No, no thank you Alfred. I'm fine,” Harley said in a small voice.

Alfred glanced at the time on the oven. It was almost five in the morning. That was when they both heard the sound of a car pulling up in the drive outside. Harley flung the blanket off and dashed for the front of the house, Alfred close on her heels.

*

Harley ran to the door in desperation, hoping to see Jack, hoping that Bruce had brought him home, but she stopped dead in her tracks when she only saw Bruce standing in the doorway removing his damp coat looking worn and tired. There were shadows under his eyes and his face looked drawn.

“Where is Jack?” Harley demanded, her hands in fists at her sides as her entire body starting to tremble.

Bruce frowned and looked at Harley, then glanced at Alfred who was standing behind her. Bruce glanced down at his wet shoes for a moment without speaking.

Harley snarled. “Where is Jack?!”

Bruce glanced between the two of them again before he spoke. “I had him committed.”

Harley gasped, her breath leaving her in a whoosh of astonishment. She brought her hands to her mouth, her eyes wide in shock. Her voice was barely audible. “What?”

At the same time, Alfred gasped as well. “Master Bruce!”
Bruce frowned, rubbing a hand over his mouth in clear distress. “I had to...it's for the best. There was no choice, it was Arkham or Blackgate until he has a parole hearing. I thought Arkham would be the best for him. It's clear Jack needs help.”

“FOR THE BEST??!” Harley screamed. “PUTTING HIM IN AN INSANE ASYLUM??!”

Harley moved so quickly that Bruce wasn't ready for her, before he knew what was happening, Harley struck him across the face. “HOW COULD YOU DO THAT TO YOUR OWN BROTHER?!”

Bruce took the slap, but Harley wasn't finished. She slapped him again snarling as new, hot tears ran down her cheeks. “You never loved him!! You have been looking for a chance to do this to him haven't you!!??!”

Bruce let her hit him a couple of more times. She lunged at him, her fist smashing into his chest, tearing flowing down her cheeks, and she was screaming incoherently. He could have stopped her easily, but he felt guilty...she was correct, part of him had always wanted to be able to just put his brother someplace where he couldn't hurt anyone, including himself. There was a certain level of relief knowing that Jack was someplace where he was safe...Or maybe it was because Jack was an embarrassment? Maybe he wasn't admitting to himself what he really felt? Bruce had felt a chill when Jack had started laughing...that laugh he remembered from when Jack had really lost control when they were younger...that laugh that always indicated that Jack had done something bad...And this time, the laugh seemed to close a door between them while opening something else, something worse, more frightening than anything Bruce had encountered.

Bruce grabbed Harley by her wrists, holding her arms up so she couldn't hit him again, nearly lifting her off her feet.

Bruce looked into Harley's face. Her teeth were bared in a vicious snarl, her blue eyes blazing with hatred, but she was also crying, tears running down her cheeks creating dark rivulets down her face.

She yanked her arms free from his grasp, stumbling backwards into Alfred who gently held her shoulders. Harley hissed with venom at Bruce. “I will never forgive you.”

She turned and took off, running back toward the kitchen, her heels making hard clacks on the marble flooring.

Alfred watched her go; he looked older, sadder. “Master Bruce, are you sure that was the only option? An asylum? I just...I just don't see how being in there will help Master Jack. He will resent you sir.”

Bruce groaned and ran a hand over his face before he nodded. “Yes, it is best Alfred. Dr. Arkham himself came out to speak with Jack. He thought committing Jack would be the best for him, and I agreed. Jack nearly killed that man. I stopped at the hospital on the way home to check on him. Jack put that man in the coma, Alfred! He would have killed him if I hadn't stopped him.”

Alfred frowned. It was clear to Bruce that Alfred had more to say, but the butler kept his opinion to himself—for the moment. Bruce sighed. “I'm going to go change and go to bed. I'll be heading to the asylum first thing in the morning to check on Jack.”

Alfred nodded then said more softly. “Master Bruce, Bruce...we should talk about this.”

Bruce, who had headed toward the stairs stopped with his foot on the first step, his hand on the bannister. He didn't turn around to look at Alfred. “I...not now Alfred.”
Alfred sighed. “Bruce...”

Bruce didn't say another word, but simply made his way up the stairs. He turned down the hall heading toward his room disappearing from Alfred's sight, his expression pained and mournful. And then Alfred heard the sound of a car. He frowned turning around. He could tell, even with the rain, that the sound was coming from around the garage area and heading down the drive. Alfred frowned and whispered, “Miss Harleen?”

He raced to the kitchen only to find that she was gone...

*

Harley had grabbed the keys to the Lamborghini and took off driving off of the Wayne estate, heading toward Arkham asylum at a break neck speed. She was driving recklessly, the song on the radio was drowning out the sounds of the rain and her own tears and sniffling. While she drove down from the manor she was talking to herself, repeating over and over again. “No, no, no...I won't be separated from my puddin!! They can't lock him up...not without me...not without me...he needs me...I need him...” Tears flowed down her cheeks, her knuckles white as she held onto the steering wheel whispering. “Not without me...not without me...”

The rain had not eased up by the time she arrived at Arkham. If anything, it fell harder, a steady dark grey rain reflecting the darkness in her chest, the hollowness of complete despair. Harley could see the ancient iron gate up ahead, the headlights of the sports car catching the wet metal and reflecting back the Victorian looking gate with “Arkham Asylum” in iron letters across the top of the gate as if she were entering the doomed property of a Gothic monster.

She drove along the poorly lit drive, the weak yellow lights casting more shadows than light and pulled up to the large front doors that reminded her of the entrance to Dracula's castle. She pulled into the guest parking, tossed the keys inside the Lamborghini before she locked it and walked with determination through the pouring rain to the main entrance. There was a light over the door, the same sick wavering yellow of the lights that lined the path she had followed up here. There was another sign over the door that read: “Arkham Asylum visitor entrance.”

Harley pressed her lips together and shoved open the door, walking in with determination.

Inside wasn't much better than outside. Oddly, when she had been a student, she had seen this place as ahead of its time, an institution where patients were treated with care or housed in safety for themselves and others. But now that she was here and someone she loved was trapped inside, Harley saw it as a prison, the tall stone buildings, the fencing—all of it was just designed to hurt as far as she was concerned now. But she was getting into this prison to be with her puddin, one way or another.

Once inside Harley looked around. There was a small lobby with a few generic plastic chairs visible in that dull white lighting that would make you feel tired and cast everything in the glow of purgatory...which was exactly where anyone would be as they waited here...purgatory...waiting between this world of the asylum and the world outside. The floor was dull beige and a drab blue; the blue theme continued with the receptionist station where Harley could see a middle-aged woman, with her brown hair done up into a bun, her glasses perched at the end of her nose, with a long chain that ran from her glasses to around her neck, wearing a dull nurses outfit of plain white. She sat behind a wall with a sliding frosted window, currently open. The woman hadn't bothered to look up when Harley stepped in out of the rain.

As Harley approached, it looked as if the woman wasn't working, but reading a magazine.
Soaking wet in her evening gown which was now plastered to her, her hair a damp disarray of blonde and her makeup having smeared and run further down her cheeks, Harley leaned on the little ledge outside the receptionist window. There was a can of flower topped pens at the woman's elbow, the bright colors looking out of place, in this house full of dull shades.

“I want to check in,” Harley whispered.

The woman looked up and pushed her glasses up her nose. “What now, young lady?”

“I want to check myself in,” Harley said slowly, her bloodshot blue eyes stared back at the woman.

The older woman pressed her lips together into a thin white line. “Well, how about we get someone to come talk to you first, eh? Just because you broke up with your boyfriend or girlfriend, or have gone on a bender, doesn't mean you have to be checking yourself in.”

Harley narrowed her eyes. “I want to be checked in. I want to be with my fiance.”

The woman sighed. “Honey, you are clearly confused. Why don't you go on home before I have to call security or the police.”

Harley felt something inside her break. It was odd she thought, it was almost like she heard it break...a quick snap in her mind. Harley screamed. “TAKE ME TO JACK!!”

The next thing she knew, Harley had launched herself over the tiny counter and through the window of the reception station, grabbing a hold of the woman by the front of her uniform. Both women fell back as the chair went out from sudden weight of both women. The receptionist's head hit the tiled floor with a sickening thunk.

Harley sat up on the woman's chest, cutting off her air, but Harley didn't stop. She hit the woman in the face with her fist, over and over and over again. The sound of her fist smacking into the nurse's face could be heard for a few seconds, the sickening sound of meat being hit by flesh and bone, before someone came to investigate the sound of the crash. It was another nurse, a young blonde. She pushed open the door. “Agatha what's...”

She saw a crazed blonde on top of Agatha wearing a black and gold flapper-style evening dress, her blonde hair a mess, make-up smeared across her face, beating Agatha over and over. Blood had splattered across the floor, across the blonde's face and over her knuckles. The blonde on top of Agatha screamed. “TAKE ME TO JACK!!”

The blonde nurse screamed and hit a button by the door. “SECURITY!! I NEED SECURITY!!”

Harley started to laugh, a long, hard, maniacal laugh while tears continued to run down her cheeks mixing with the blood splatters on her face as her voice dropped to a deadly whisper.

“Take me to my puddin...”
Earlier at the Gotham PD, Jack had been sedated and strapped down to a gurney before being transferred to an ambulance. The ambulance roared through the streets of Gotham heading toward Arkham Asylum, but the drug was working itself quickly through his bloodstream until when the orderlies came to wheel him out of the back of the ambulance, Jack was fully cognizant again.

Jack didn’t let on that he was awake again, regaining full consciousness just as the ambulance’s engine turned off. One of the paramedics muttered, “I always hate transferring the crazy ones. Always waiting for them to jump up and rip my throat out.”

The other paramedic in the back, a young woman, laughed. “You watch too many horror movies Tucker.”

The man named Tucker chuckled. “You don't watch enough Lexi.”

He couldn’t quite see what they were doing, but soon the back of the ambulance opened up and some light rushed into the small back compartment. Jack carefully watched them through the cover of his lashes, seeing shadows of the two paramedics moving around them and then the jerk and rattle of the gurney being lifted up and rolled out the back. Lexi and Tucker didn’t say a word as they rolled him out, one on either side of him. The rain had eased up and everything shone wetly in the lights from the front of the asylum. Jack could see the water on the building making the old architecture look glazed.

The paramedics were close enough that if he hadn’t been strapped down he could have easily grabbed one of them, broken an arm and used them as a hostage and a shield. He wanted to laugh at the thought of the chaos that would cause. But he was strapped down and so Jack had to lay prone in frustration while he was handed off to the asylum. Jack heard a voice that he recognized, Dr. Arkham. He could hear the doctor speaking to someone—must be security Jack thought to himself, but they were positioned behind him, out of his range of sight.

“Mr. Wayne shouldn't cause you boys any issues; he is well sedated. I just want him brought to a medical exam room, where we can check him over and change him into his patient attire, then after that I want him transferred to his room on the sixth floor. The drug should last at least another hour, maybe longer in his system. I gave him quite a heavy dose. Hopefully he won't become violent again...”

Outside the ambulance, the man that Arkham was speaking to frowned looking down at the paperwork that Arkham had handed him. “Wayne? As in Bruce Wayne? The Gotham billionaire?”

Arkham chuckled. “No, not Bruce Wayne, the younger Wayne—Jack Wayne, his little brother.”

The tall dark-skinned man frowned rubbing the back of his neck as he looked at the form attached to the clipboard. “I had heard he had a brother.”

His partner, a shorter man with pale splotchy skin snorted with a glance at the paperwork his partner held. “I heard his brother was nuts, guess he finally cracked, huh?”

The two paramedics, Lexi and Tucker both laughed. The woman spoke up. “Guess money can't buy sanity.”

“Yeah, it sure can't.” The orderlies laughed in agreement.
Arkham frowned in displeasure, his eye landing on each of the four people around him.

“Mr. Wayne is very sick. I would appreciate it if all of you would keep that mind. Fame and money do not equal mental health. It is not Mr. Wayne's fault, and I expect him to be treated with respect and care. Now, just get Mr. Wayne to his room and make sure he is comfortable.” Arkham glared at each person before he turned and walked into the asylum, leaving the two security men to do their job and the two paramedics to leave. The four looked at each other and the woman shrugged. “Okay boys, he is all yours.” The two paramedics turned with a wave and headed back to the ambulance. The two Arkham orderlies sighed, the taller one glancing back at his clipboard.

The shorter man looked at his partner. “You wanna get him Mike? Or should I?”

Mike sighed, rubbing the back of his neck again. “You go ahead Bill, he's strapped down and drugged, it should be fine. I'll do the paperwork later, sound good?”

Bill grinned. “I like that deal. I hate paperwork!”

Mike laughed. “I know you do buddy. You sure you can handle him on your own?”

Bill made a rude noise with his lips. “Please, he's drugged. The day I can't handle a drugged crazy is the day I quit.”

Mike chuckled. “Okay man, just don't get us in trouble. I think Arkham was a bit upset with us.”

Bill rolled his eyes. “He doesn't deal with these freaks on a day-to-day basis like we do. He don't really know what's what...no worries buddy. I got this nutjob handled.” It took a great deal of effort for Jack not to react, his prevent his face from contorting with rage or his hands from balling into fists, but he hated Bill with every fiber of his being right now.

Bill grabbed the back of the gurney and pushed Jack into the asylum. Jack tried not to react to the few miserable drops of rain that sprinkled down on him. The front of the asylum glowed wetly under the glaring front yellow light, the rain falling in a slow, pathetic dribble at the moment, leaving the building coated in slick drops of water that made it seem as if the stone walls were weeping.

Bill pushed Jack's gurney through the large Gothic doors of the asylum and headed past the security doors that divided the lobby of the asylum into the main body of the hospital after an older woman at reception buzzed him through.

Bill waved. “Hey Agatha!”

Agatha barely looked up from her magazine. “Hey Bill.” She gave him an absent wave and continued to read her article. Bill chuckled shoving the gurney through the gates. Bill started to whistle “Dear Prudence” while pushing Jack through a long dimly lit hall. Jack watched everything through his lashes, the lights flashing overhead as they passed, reminding Jack of horror movies he loved to watch. He did his best to pay attention, taking in every detail that he could searching for a way to escape, but as Bill wheeled him into an elevator, Jack's heart sank. He couldn't see much as he was currently strapped down, and pretending to be drugged. Jack closed his eyes instead and let his mind drift to Harley. Thinking about her calmed him while at the same time hurt. How long before he could see her?

Bill stopped at the elevator, pushed the button and waited. Jack listened for the tinny ding announcing the elevators arrival and Bill pushed him inside the small, cramped elevator. A dull urine colored light shone down on Jack. Bill was at Jack's side and this close, he could smell stale alcohol and sweat on the man. Jack's lips twitched in disgust. Bill continued to whistle the song tapping his foot annoyingly on the floor.

After a couple of seconds the doors opened onto another darkened hall with watery lighting. Bill shoved the gurney out the elevator doors, turning left and heading down past a few other rooms before turning left again. The hall was “T” shaped with two more halls leading to more rooms.

Bill pushed the gurney into the room which looked like a typical hospital examination room right down to the drab, almost moldy feeling paint color choices. There were stainless steel cabinets, counters, IV stands as well as several other bits and pieces of equipment that Jack couldn't identify from his prone position. Bill stopped the gurney in the middle of the room. He stood over Jack and waved his hand in front of Jack’s face. He grinned showing off yellow and chipped teeth.

“Hey there pretty rich boy, you gonna be my bitch?” Bill laughed at his crudeness as he set about removing the straps from Jack for his medical exam, and to have his clothing removed for the standard black and white striped outfits all patients wore at Arkham Asylum. Bill hummed while he worked, thinking he had nothing to worry about, that everything was perfectly safe since it was clear to Bill that the patient was still out cold on who knew what cocktail of drugs Arkham had given him. Bill reached over and started to undo Jack's bloodstained white bow tie.

Jack waited a heartbeat when Bill reached over him before he sprang into action, sitting up suddenly and slamming his forehead into Bill's with a hard enough impact that both men were disoriented for a handful of seconds.

Bill cried out, “FUCK!!” and stumbled away from Jack. Jack blinked his eyes a few times. He still felt slightly groggy from the drugs in his system and the forehead smack was harder than he intended. He rolled off the gurney, falling on his knees which caused him to hiss in pain. He looked up, a trail of blood running down between his bright blue eyes. Bill continued to hiss. “FUCK FUCK FUCK!” He stumbled around, with blood running into his eyes. Jack pushed himself to his feet and leaped onto the orderly's back, immediately wrapping his slender arm around Bill's neck. Jack felt mad, savage, consumed with rage. The pain he felt at Bruce's betrayal, at being separated from Harley was driving him mad...Bruce thought he was crazy? Well, he would show him crazy!

Jack leaned close and smiled hissing in Bill's ear as his arms tightened around the man's throat, his long legs locked around Bill's waist. Jack leaned back pressing his forearm hard against Bill's larynx. Bill let out a small choked sound. He could almost feel this crazy on his back cracking his Adam's apple.

“I'm nobody's bitch,” Jack snarled just before he sunk his teeth into Bill's ear. Jack bit down hard and he could feel his teeth cutting through the skin of Bill's earlobe, the coppery gush of blood leaking through the wound onto his tongue. Bill screamed, clawing at Jack's locked arms while the younger man pulled and yanked tearing in a swift, savage movement, ripping off half of Bill's ear from his skull in an arc of blood.

Bill let out a wonderful scream Jack thought, rather high pitched, worthy of any female horror movie actress from the 1960's. Jack let go of Bill, jumping backwards and landing easily on his feet before he pushed Bill toward the door with a firm foot the orderly's backside. Jack spit the hunk of ear out and started to laugh as blood dribbled down his lips. Bill's screams only made Jack laugh more hysterically, because it was the most high-pitched scream he had ever heard! Jack especially started to laugh when Bill dropped to the floor and scooted himself as far away from Jack as he could, slamming his back up against one of the cabinets.

Jack grinned, his lips covered in blood. He licked them before he giggled. “Did you hear about the guy who lost his left ear? He hears all right now!!!”
Bill was whimpering, his hand covered in blood from where he was holding his hand against his bloody, torn ear, staring at Jack in horror.

Jack sighed. “No one appreciates the humor of the situation.” Jack shook his head in sadness before he hurried out of the room.

With all of Bill's screaming, Jack had only breached the doorway before four guards came running down the hall toward him. Jack rolled his eyes. He turned to run in the opposite direction, only to see more guards come racing down that hall toward him, pouring out of the elevator like clowns spilling from a clown car. All the guards were armed with what looked to be tasers, each one of them a burly man or burly woman.

Jack held his hands up, blood continuing to drip from his chin creating an ever broadening stain of red on his white tux shirt.

That was when the guard named Mike stepped forward and without a word, tasered him, the prongs striking Jack in the side. Jack's body seized up, but he didn't make a sound; he just smiled and he seemed to shake it off almost instantly. (Jack chuckled to himself. All those shock treatments he gave himself before facing off against the Electrocutioner were paying off again.) Two more guards rushed forward to taser him again, one set of prongs hitting him in the side again, the other set in the hips. Jack's facial muscles jerked, his smile wavering only slightly, but he stared hard at each guard that tasered him. It was clear he was going to shake the tasing off again.

Mike yelled, his voice a little shrill. “Hit him again!!”

Two more guards hit Jack, the taser prongs slamming into his other hip and lower back. Jack hissed, arching, his hands balling into fists, until finally he went down, collapsing painfully to the floor. But he started laughing hard enough that tears were in his eyes. “I finally managed to get rid of that nasty electrical charge I've been carrying. I'm ex-static!”

The Arkham security just stared in shock until Dr. Arkham came rushing off the elevator. He saw the crowd of orderlies near the end of the hall. He rushed down to them and forced his way through the guards yelling. “Make way!! Come on move!”

Jack grinned up at Arkham, though he was unable to move when he saw the doctor had a syringe. Two orderlies rushed up with Arkham, forcing Jack onto his stomach, yanking his arms behind him painfully and holding him there. One of them put a foot on Jack's lower back securing Jack's wrists with nylon handcuffs. The other orderly held Jack's head, smashing his cheek against the floor. Jack hissed through the pain, his voice shaking only slightly. “I”m going to kill you doc. Just you wait and see.”

His blue eyes roamed over the guards who had tasered him giggling. “I'm going to kill all of you. Each in a different way because I'm very creative!”

Arkham frowned. “You're a very sick young man. I am going to make you better Jack. I promised your brother and I promise you.”

Jack laughed, the sound a cross between a giggle and a sob as the needle was stuck in his neck and the drug almost instantly started to hit him, burning through his blood.

Jack grinned, pressing his teeth hard together in a rictus-like smile, his eyes becoming droopy as he gazed up at the doctor. “Oh you can try doc...you can try, but you are never going to make me better than I already am...”

“You just behave yourself Mr. Wayne,” Arkham said with a smile patting Jack's cheek. Jack wanted to bite the doctors fingers, but the drug was making him sluggish.

Jack swallowed, tears started at the corner of his eyes. “You want me to behave, you get me my Harley here.”

His eyes fell closed as he whispered groggily. “Get Harley.”

When Jack opened his eyes again, he was alone. Jack was left in a room, a dark little hole with a cot bolted to the wall and floor, a toilet that was mostly a hole in the floor, and nothing else but the dull white walls around him. The flooring was slightly better, it was at least a sort of 'blue' color, though like everything else it, it lacked...life. Everything was dull and dirty making the asylum seem to exist in a realm of perpetual twilight. And it was chilly. There was no warmth here. Jack could feel that the mattress under him was thin and the pillow underneath his head was virtually non-existent, flat and everything had a chemical clean smell. There was a blanket folded at the end of the bed. Just a basic, light blue blanket.

There was a light high above him that he couldn't reach so he had no control over whether the light was on or not. When he first came to, the light was on, a sick yellow glare beating against his eyelids. He had rolled away from the light onto his side and shivered. He felt lost without Harley. He couldn't believe he was here, in this place without her, alone. He needed her arms around him, the smell of her skin against him...the feel of her, her hair, soft again his cheek, her voice, her smile...he needed her. Anything would be bearable if she was with him. Jack wasn't sure he could make it without her. Maybe he would really go mad. Jack giggled softly, a sound that turned from laughter to sobbing. Jack curled in on himself, squeezing his eyes closed trying to imagine her there holding him. He could almost hear her whispering “Jack...my puddin...” Her breath warm against his ear. The sound of her laugh, her little moans when they made love... He drifted off to sleep, the last dregs of the drug in his system lulling him away as the ghost of Harley wrapped around him to ease his pain.

When he woke up again, the light was out leaving the room cast in darkness. He could now hear the sound of wild giggles, muttering broken by the occasional howl of pain, or maybe desperation, floating through the darkness as if the darkness had awoken creatures that stalked the shadows. Jack managed to sit up on the flat cot and lean against the cool wall, looking out toward his cell's door. The wall here was clear, the door clear, both made of shatter resistant plastic. Jack chuckled gazing at it. He would be willing to bet the plastic had been made by Wayne Enterprises. While he studied it he grinned, thinking that this was just the sort of thing Wayne Enterprises would make and if he looked closer he would probably find the logo somewhere. It was hilarious really, to be kept captive by something his family's company made. He sighed looking down, which was when he noticed his tux was gone. That was also the point that he really became aware of the cheap cotton against his skin. Jack made a disgusted face; his clothing had been replaced with an ill fitting uniform of black and white vertical stripes. His feet were bare, but he saw a pair of white socks and simple shoes on the floor beside the bed. Jack scooted his bare feet under the folded blanket. It provided some relief but it was the best he could do considering that his arms were bound by the jacket. Jack chuckled, a sound filled with misery and pain.

He could now see there were dim lights that ran the length of a long hall, and patches of dark where other cells were located. Jack squeezed his eyes shut and occupied himself with thoughts of Harley.
He smiled murmuring softly, “My sweet, sweet harlequin...”

He had no idea what time it was, only that in here it was dark and he was alone, trapped in a limbo apart from the rest of the world and apart from Harley. Jack’s lips trembled. Alone. Without his Harley.

Jack leaned against the wall of his cell, rubbing the side of his head back and forth singing softly to himself. His eyes were closed, dark lines ran down his cheeks. Black was smeared around his eyes from his eyeliner. He could still feel the dried blood on his lips. They had changed him, but no one had bothered to clean his face. There were hints of tears at the corner of his eyes as he sang softly bouncing the side of his head against the plain, dull, white wall imagining Harley smiling at him. The only person in all the world who loved him...loved him like he was...the only person he would ever love. He sang to himself in a whispery voice:

Only love can hurt like this

Must have been a deadly kiss

Only love can hurt like this...”

His red lipstick was smeared across his mouth in a mock imitation of a wide smile mocking his pain. There was still blood dried on his face from his fight with Guy, but also from the guard he had attacked. That man's blood was dry on Jack's lips, flaking slightly. Jack grinned a little thinking about the orderly whose ear he had bitten off. Granted, he was wrapped snugly in a straightjacket for his troubles, but it had been pretty funny. Jack jerked once or twice trying to free his arms. He chuckled softly licking his dry lips tasting blood there.

He opened his eyes and stared out of his cell as he whispered the lyrics of his song to himself again, imagining Harley standing in front of him, smiling, her arms open for him...

“But it's the sweetest pain

Burning hot through my veins

Love is torture, makes me more sure

Only love can hurt like this...”

Jack squeezed his eyes shut as his voice broke. “Harley...I will kill them all. Every one of them...” He whispered to himself. “Every one of them. I will have you back...I promise...they won't and can't keep up apart.”

He screwed his eyes closed against a fresh wave of pain. He said her name in a passionate whisper. “Harley.”

*

A few hours later Harley was in reception having beaten the woman Agatha into unconsciousness and screaming. “TAKE ME TO JACK!!! I WANT MY PUDDIN!!” She was crazed with desperation. She had to be with Jack, she couldn't let him be here alone without her! And she couldn't be without him!! Harley wanted to tear this place apart until she was with him again—with her Jack!
Two security men entered the room ahead of the nurse who had called for them, both with their tasers out. One was a short man of clear Latino background, dark hair, copper skin, while the other was a tall, heavily muscled pale man with a balding head.

The shorter man frowned. “Why is she yelling for pudding?”

His taller companion snorted. “I don't understand these crazies John any more than you do.”

The taller of the two who looked more like a bruiser than a guard, grinned at Harley, stepping a little closer with his hands up like he was approaching a wild animal.

“Hey sweetheart, why don't you step over to the wall and put your hands against it. Maybe we can help you find this Jack person you're looking for and then once you're nice and quiet, maybe we can get you some pudding? You want chocolate or vanilla? We might even have some tapioca.” He lifted his brows at her giving her condescending smile. Harley stood slowly, her blue eyes narrowing at the new object of her attention. She could tell when someone was being condescending to her. Harley looked crazed, wet from the rain, her makeup smeared across her face, her knuckles bloody, but she narrowed her eyes a fraction more at the two men shifting her gaze between them, her hands balled into fists at her side. “I want to see Jack Wayne NOW.” Her voice came out low and angry with a dangerous growl.

“Okay lady, Jack Wayne, I heard he was brought in. He was put on the sixth floor. You calm down and we’ll see if we can't bring you up to him okay?” The bruiser grinned, easing toward her, still treating her like she would a wild animal. He held his taser in one hand, while his left hand was held out to her, gesturing to calm her down.

Harley's eyes flashed in the ugly lighting, her expression deadly. She could see the nurse standing behind the guards watching, but she was occasionally talk to someone just out of Harley's sight on the other side of the doorway. That person moved into view and Harley saw another nurse, as well as the glint of a syringe in the other woman's hand. Harley screamed and threw herself at the guard before the man had time to use his taser on her. She grabbed his arm, yanking the man forward with a quick upward knee to his crotch, pulled him off his feet with the sudden violent gesture and slammed her elbow down against the back of his neck. The man's partner yelled something, surprise clear in his voice, but Harley never heard the man fire before the taser prongs hit her in the chest. She cried out in pain, her whole body going stiff, every muscle seemed to clinched at once forcing her to arch her back, her hands clenched into fists.

She collapsed a moment later with a groan of pain. The guard who had used his taser on her immediately rushed over rolling her onto her stomach yanking her hands behind her back and pressed his knee against her lower back painfully while he held her arms pulling out nylon zip strips to secure her wrists. Harley would have cried out, but she couldn't. Tears spilled from her eyes as she laid there on the floor being handled, and then the nurse injected something into her neck which burned. She started to struggle, but the drug hit her system quickly. The last thing she remembered before she drifted off was someone yelling for Dr. Arkham.

Two hours later, in another cell on the same level as Jack, Harley had started to scream again. She had screamed when she came out of her first sedation to find herself strapped to a bed. She had reacted violently enough that Dr. Arkham had been called again to try to calm her. She screamed and cried as Dr. Arkham smoothed her hair back. “Dr. Quinzel, please, you know this behavior is beyond you. You really need to calm down.”

Harley's blue eyes blazed. “I want my puddin!!”
Dr. Arkham frowned in confusion. “Dr. Quinzel, if you want pudding, you need to calm down.”

Harley rolled her eyes. “God you are a bunch of idiots! Let me go!!”

Arkham frowned turning and leaving the room to talk to a nurse who was waiting outside. Harley struggled. She was wearing a straitjacket as well as being strapped to the bed. Someone had changed her clothing into a dress with thick black and white stripes. Her feet were bare and the room was freezing. Not only was she being kept from Jack, but she felt violated. They had taken her dress and put her in this outfit while she was unconscious. She realized at the same time that her engagement ring was missing. Harley gasped on a sob; she moved her fingers in the jacket...no, her ring was gone. Harley's bottom lip started to tremble as she was overcome with pain and revulsion which only made her tear up, large tears falling from the corner of her eyes. Her ring, the ring Jack had made just for her...

Harley's voice broke. “My ring...” she whispered.

The pain was acute. And then she screamed again in frustration, straining against the bonds holding her down. Dr. Arkham hurried back into the room, this time holding a syringe in his hand, hidden from his patient's view.

“I'm very sorry about this Dr. Quinzel, but you really need to calm down before you hurt yourself.”

Harley groaned on a sob. “You took my ring!”

Arkham sighed. “We had to, you know that Dr. Quinzel. It's policy. You could hurt yourself with it.”

Harley squeezed her eyes shut on the pain. “My ring.” She took a breath trying to calm herself deciding to try a new tactic. “Please!! I'll stop...just...I just need to see Jack.”

Arkham looked down at her, his expression one of pity. “I'm sorry Dr. Quinzel, you know I can't allow that just yet.”

Harley dropped her head back against the flat pillow with a keening moan. “Please!!”

Arkham sighed. “You need to rest Harleen.”

He put the syringe, that Harley hadn't seen, to her neck. Harley started to sob, but the drugs hit her fast and soon she was out.

*

Harley didn't thrash around when she regained consciousness again; she controlled herself with a strong effort. She opened her eyes slowly, taking a deep breath. She knew how this worked, how the game was played. You want something, you want privileges, than you behaved yourself. She could do that...she could try at least. Until she had Jack back. Once she had Jack back, all bets were off...

Dr. Arkham sat on a stool next to her bed, his legs crossed leaning forward, resting his arm on his knee.

“There you are Dr. Quinzel.” He smiled like he was proud of her. “Now, Harleen, may I call you Harleen?” Arkham smiled at her and he spoke in a low tone. His voice had that kind of wheedling calm that was like fingernails against the chalkboard to Harley. She knew exactly what he was trying to do.
“Don't call me that,” she hissed.

“Call you what, Dr. Quinzel? Or Harleen?” Arkham smiled lifting a brow in question at her.

“Dr. Quinzel, yes. Don't call me that. It's Quinn, Harley Quinn now.” Harley turned her face away from him so she wouldn't have to look at him.

Arkham frowned, but nodded. “All right Miss Quinn. I wanted to inform you that I will be asking Mr. Wayne to seek legal action to become your executor since you have no family available, and considering your relationship with the family...” He smiled, bouncing his leg a little.

Harley turned back to face him. “What?”

Arkham smiled. “You are clearly not in your right mind at the moment...Miss Quinn...and you need help, but as Mr. Jack Wayne's fiancee, I thought you would appreciate having Bruce Wayne take control of your “estate” since it is connected with Jack Wayne or will be.”

Harley turned away again, tears pricking her eyes. She didn't want him to see her cry. “I don't appreciate him at all. He put my puddin in here.”

“Puddin?” Arkham frowned.

“Jack...he put Jack in here. I want to see Jack.” Harley turned back to face Arkham. “Please? Please can I see him?”

Arkham frowned with a small shake of his head. “I think that it would better for now to keep the two of you separated.”

She knew at the moment she reacted, that she shouldn't, but her anger, fear, and pain at not seeing Jack raced through her like a bullet train. Harley's reaction was instant. She began to fight against her bonds and screamed in impotent frustration and fury until Arkham was forced to sedate her again.

*

When Harley woke again she was alone and no longer strapped down. She gazed around slowly. The room was dark and there were no windows. There was very little in the room except for the cot she was on and the toilet, there was nothing else, no furnishing at all. She was still in the straightjacket, limiting her movements. She closed her eyes. She supposed she would have to prove herself non-violent in order for them to let her out of the jacket. Harley swallowed telling herself, she was at least that much closer to Jack. But the pain of separation, of knowing he would not be here to hold her, kiss her...She curled on her side and started to sob. She felt hollow inside, as if she were a bottomless pit of anguish that was sucking everything that had ever been good in her life into its darkness, that there would never be any light again. She choked. “Puddin...oh puddin...”

Bruce had just managed to get into bed. He had stripped out of his damp clothing and while a warm shower would have been nice, he was simply too exhausted. He knew he should be concerned about where Dr. Quinzel had sped off to, but he just couldn't seem to drum up the worry. He assured himself she had probably driven to Arkham to try and see Jack. They would turn her away and she would be force to return to the manor. Batman might have gone after her, but Bruce was weary.

He crawled into bed and was lying down only to find himself staring at the ceiling when he received a call. Bruce groaned glancing over to his cellphone lying on the table beside the bed. “What now?” he muttered reaching over and grabbing for the phone.
“Hello?” Bruce answered picking up his cellphone with exhaustion evident in his tone.

Bruce sat up, suddenly wide awake again. “What?”

“Yes, well apparently she showed up demanding to be admitted and then violently attacked our receptionist when she suggested that Dr. Quinzel go home. I have her in solitary, under sedation at the moment.”

Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose as Arkham continued. The hits just kept coming. Some nights it seemed easier to be in uniform in Gotham fist fighting with criminals.

“Does she have any family I should notify?” the psychiatrist inquired.

Bruce shook his head. “No. Only some half siblings that she has no contact with....her mother recently passed on and her step-father is missing.”

Arkham was quiet for a moment. “I would suggest you contact your lawyer and pursue becoming Dr. Quinzel's legal guardian since she is engaged to your brother.”

Bruce nodded. “Yes, yes of course. Are they both all right?”

Bruce could hear Arkham sigh. The man sounded tired. “Yes. They are both sedated, though I would like to ask Mr. Wayne: I have them both in the secure unit at the moment where they will both stay until they are no longer violent and can be allowed to mix with the general population. At that point I can no longer keep them separated unless you wish me to isolate your brother. But I wondered Mr. Wayne—would you like me to keep them from seeing one another?”

Bruce frowned closing his eyes. “I...I think that might be best for the short term, keep them separated, or at least don't let Jack know Dr. Quinzel is there. After they are both stable I will trust your judgment doctor.”

“All right, thank you Mr. Wayne. I will speak to you again later this morning.” Dr. Arkham hung up after that. Bruce closed his eyes lying back. Bruce opened his eyes again and stared up at the ceiling. The ceiling was plain and white, providing no answers. He couldn't believe that this was happening. He would have to tell Alfred. Both of them, his brother and sister-in-law-to-be—if that ever happened now. Bruce felt an overwhelming sense of loss and failure. As the older brother it was his job to take care of Jack and he had failed him miserably. Bruce pushed the heels of his hands against his eyes. How could everything had gone so wrong so fast?

Being Batman was easy, being Jack's older brother was hard. Bruce pressed his lips together on the pain and took a few deep breaths, forcing himself to be calm and let himself relax.

Unknown to Bruce, a reporter had managed to come across some information about what happened at the party since his girlfriend was friends with one of the wait staff that had been hired for the engagement party. This led to the headlines/stories in one of the local Gotham papers: “Local billionaire Bruce Wayne's younger brother Jack Wayne was involved in an altercation at the youngest brother's engagement party at Wayne Manor. At this time we do not have all the details, but Jack Wayne put a man in a coma. At this time the name of the man is unknown, but we will keep you posted. Jack Wayne has been committed to Arkham asylum by his older brother Bruce Wayne.”
Bruce arrived downstairs looking the worse for wear and headed toward the kitchen. His eyes were bloodshot and his expensive suit looked rumpled and slept in despite the fact that Alfred knew Bruce would never sleep in his suit.

“I have fresh coffee brewing Master Bruce,” Alfred said without looking up from where he was chopping carrots. Bruce frowned walking over and reaching for a mug to pour off some coffee into, the biggest mug he could find. He felt as if he had been on the streets of Gotham last night fighting criminals instead of having his brother admitted to an asylum. Bruce didn't bother adding sugar or cream, but instead blew on it until the midnight black liquid was just barely cool enough to begin sipping. When the first taste of hot coffee hit his tongue Bruce came instantly more aware.

Bruce ran a hand through his dark hair taking another sip. “Where are the travel mugs Alfred? I think I'll fill one and take it with me.” Bruce opened a cabinet door, his blue eyes searching the shelves without really seeing anything at the moment. He knew that he was distracted at the moment—had to get his head on straight.

Bruce opened the cabinet, found the cups and took one down. He glanced at Alfred while he poured the coffee. It was clear by the stiffness of Alfred's shoulders and the way he refused to look up at Bruce that the butler was upset. Bruce pressed his lips together.

“Alfred if there had been another way...any other way...I wouldn't have committed Jack,” Bruce started just as Alfred looked up cutting him off.

“There is always was another way sir. He's your brother, not some crazed criminal on the street that you fight every night. Your brother, Bruce. You could have found another way especially now that you know Jack was only reacting to someone who had threatened Miss Harleen. How many criminals needed hospital care after a certain night prowling vigilante encountered them? Bruce, please.”

Bruce blinked in shock. Alfred very seldom simply called him Bruce, not 'Master Bruce' or 'sir.' Just calling him Bruce demonstrated how upset Alfred was about the situation.

“Alfred, Jack is dangerous. I have known that for a long time. I brought Dr. Quinzel to help and he simply twisted her around. I had Dr. Thompson come in to help them and they fooled her too! He is just as violent if not more so now than when we were kids. Jack needs real help Alfred.”

Alfred dropped his gaze and finished with the carrots, scooting them into a bowl and picked up some celery, but he didn't reply.

Bruce sighed. “Jack needs help and judging by Harleen's extreme reaction, so does she Alfred. She drove herself down there and attacked a woman to get herself committed! That is not the act of someone of sound mind Alfred.”

Alfred closed his eyes. He had been worrying about where Miss Harleen was, having tried to contact her, but she had not answered her phone. His worst fear was that she had had an accident, but now to know she was in that awful place with Master Jack hurt just as much. Alfred grew very still. Bruce could feel the pain emanating from the older man. “That may be sir, but keeping them separated? You realize that your brother and Miss Harleen have been inseparable since you put them together? Even when Miss Harleen was in the hospital after the miscarriage, your brother stayed right with her the entire time, by her bedside. Even when he needed to care for himself he would not leave her. I think trying to keep them separated is a horrible idea. That was why Miss Harleen drove herself to the hospital and attacked that woman, to be with Master Jack. And how long before Master Jack realizes Miss Harleen is in the asylum? Then what will happen?"

Alfred wiped his hands on his apron. “Bring them back here, hire another doctor, let me help, but Master Bruce—Bruce, please let them be together.” Alfred gave Bruce a pleading looking. Bruce stared at Alfred in surprise. Alfred never asked for anything, in all the years he had been part of the family, Alfred never once made a request unless it was for the well-being of Bruce and Jack. Alfred was level headed, the one person that Bruce could rely on to respond with cool logic and quiet sarcasm to any situation...but it seemed even he was under an illusion woven by Jack.

Bruce sighed. “I can't Alfred.”

With that Bruce turned and left the kitchen. Alfred watched Bruce's back as he left, seeming to age as he stood there, defeated.

When Bruce arrived at the asylum he was escorted immediately to Dr. Arkham's office. When Bruce stepped in, Arkham was sitting behind his desk. The man's glasses had slipped to the end of his nose and he was writing something, dressed in his white lab coat and a dark brown, simple suit, his hair a slight mess looking as if the man had been napping earlier. He glanced up when the door opened.

“Ah Mr. Wayne, so nice to see you.” Jeremiah stood up and walked around his desk, taking Bruce Wayne's hand in both of his and shaking the younger man's hand with enthusiasm. Bruce shook Arkham's hand, a quick hard brief shake. “So, may I see my brother?”

Arkham frowned. “I think Mr. Wayne, it might be best if you wait a few days before seeing your brother. Give him and Dr. Quinzel a chance to acclimate to their new situation. Especially since your brother attacked and maimed one of our orderlies.”

Arkham motioned to the chair across from his desk as he resumed his seat behind his desk. Bruce stepped over to the ancient looking chair, a dark brown cushioned chair old enough that the cushion was losing color, much like Arkham's office. The walls were paneled with dark wood, there were shelves loaded with books and had one window which was closed and the dark blue curtains were pulled closed, yet everything looked as if it were fading. On the wall directly behind Arkham was a drawing of the asylum when it had first been built, a large Gothic castle-like structure. The image was imposing, frightening.

Bruce sat with his hands resting on the arm rests glancing at the drawing. The image of the asylum made Bruce think of Dracula's castle from an old black and white film he and Jack watched as children. Bruce brought his attention back to Jeremiah Arkham.

Bruce frowned at Arkham. “Maimed?”

Arkham sighed. “He bit a chunk of the man's ear off.”

Bruce went pale. He brought a hand up to his mouth in shock. The doctor took a few breaths before he spoke again. Arkham continued. “Dr. Quinzel broke several bones in the face of our receptionist as well. They are both quite violent.”

“How many days is a few days?” Bruce asked.

Jeremiah Arkham set his elbows on the desk and folded his fingers. “Usually three days. It will depend on their behavior. They will both receive individual care and sessions. It will take a few days to decide on what medicines might help the two of them, what other treatments to administer. After that, we will slowly integrate them into the rest of the population that occupy our sixth floor. I cannot keep them away from each forever while they are here, but I can keep them apart for a few weeks.
I'm assuming all current treatments that are available for their rehabilitation are acceptable?"

Bruce frowned beginning to deflate. Three days before he could see and talk to Jack. Maybe explain his actions for putting him in here...discuss Harleen...

Bruce sighed pinching the bridge of his nose. “Yes, yes of course, whatever you need to do Dr.
Arkham, any and all treatments.” He took a deep breath. “Are you sure I have to wait three days?
Couldn't I see him for just a little bit, just to know he's all right that...so that he knows I'm here. I came...”

The expression on Bruce's face conveyed desperation. Arkham frowned. Maybe he could bend the rules for Bruce Wayne...just this once and besides, if he treated Wayne well, the man might make a farther donation to the asylum. “All right Mr. Wayne. Why don't you return to the waiting area and I'll arrange for an escort to take you to your brother.”

Bruce pushed himself up. “Thank you Dr. Arkham. Thank you.”

“Of course, Mr. Wayne.” Dr. Arkham stood up as well and walked with Wayne to the door. “Don't worry about a thing, you brother and soon-to-be sister-in-law will be treated with expert care. We will soon have them past this dreadful incident and back out there as contributing members of Gotham society.”

Bruce stopped and turned to the physician. “Thank you Dr. Arkham.”

Jeremiah Arkham smiled. “My pleasure Mr. Wayne. Now, go down to reception and take a seat. I will grab a couple of orderlies and we will go see your brother.”

No sooner had Wayne left than Dr. Crane showed up. Arkham had just finished organizing his papers to put away before heading out to find a couple of orderlies, when there was a quiet rap at his door. He frowned. The knock was distinctive Arkham always thought, Dr. Crane's knock always reminded him of Edgar Allan Poe's poem The Raven...

Once upon a midnight dreary, while I pondered, weak and weary,

Over many a quaint and curious volume of forgotten lore—

While I nodded, nearly napping, suddenly there came a tapping,

As of some one gently rapping, rapping at my chamber door.

“'Tis some visitor,” I muttered, “tapping at my chamber door—

Only this and nothing more.”

Arkham shook himself, half-amused at his moment of reverie, and answered. “Yes, come in.”

Crane entered the room. Crane was tall and thin, with short brownish-blonde hair that continued to flop rebelliously over his brow. Today Crane—who had impeccable taste Arkham had to admit—wore a suit of dark brown and red plaid with a white shirt and flowered red tie. Crane seldom smiled and when he did, it was unsettling. Today, Crane's thin lips were pulled back in an equally thin Smile.

"Is it true Jeremiah?" Crane asked as he walked in and took the seat across from Arkham's desk.

"Is what true Jonathan?" Arkham slid his papers into the desk's drawer and lifted his gaze to meet his fellow doctor's intense stare.

"Is Jack Wayne here in the asylum?" Crane asked with intensity.

"Yes, both he and his fiancee were admitted early this morning," Arkham answered tiredly.

Crane's smile continued. "May I have them Jeremiah?"

Arkham blinked and frowned. "You want to be their doctor? I was thinking of assigning Thompson since she had already worked with them..."

Crane's smile remained in place as he crossed his legs and tilted his head a fraction, a few strands of hair falling forward over his brow. "I would like use them in my experimental treatments. They are both perfect candidates, you must admit."

Arkham frowned tapping a finger against his lips as he pondered Crane's request. Crane leaned back patiently wrapping his hands around his knee and waited. Arkham knew Crane was doing a great deal of research into fear as a form of treatment.

"All right Crane. You can have them." Arkham smiled. That was one worry off his shoulders, really.

Crane stood up. "Splendid."

Arkham yawned and stretched. "You can do their first one-on-one sessions this afternoon."

Crane smiled. "I look forward to it. Thank you Jeremiah."

Arkham yawned again. "No problem Johnathan."

Soon after his conversation with Crane, Dr. Arkham led Bruce into a room that held a series of chairs, with little partitioned off sections where clear plastic divided one section of the room from the other. Between the two areas was a speaker so that each person could hear the other without being able to make physical contact. Arkham walked Bruce to one of the chairs, then disappeared back out the way they had just come. Bruce looked around. The place was badly in need of a fresh coat of paint. There were signs of water damage on the pale, flat blue paint and the tiles on the floor were brown and chipped. Bruce frowned slightly at the state of the room, but then his attention was distracted as a door on the other side of the plastic wall opened and Bruce saw two large men step in, nearly dragging Jack.

Bruce went pale. Jack's hair was a mess and his face was still bloody, his brother's make up smeared across his eyes and lips making him resemble some nightmarish clown. But the worst part of seeing Jack now was that his brother was in a straightjacket. The two men had to half drag Jack to the seat opposite Bruce and plopped him down, none too gently, Bruce noted with a grim frown. Dr. Arkham stepped into the room and moved up to stand behind Jack.

"I'm sorry about your brother's condition," Arkham explained with a sad look. "He will be allowed to shower and clean up soon, but he has only recently come off the sedatives we had to administer again early this morning, but he seems to have calmed down and is ready to cooperate. Isn't that correct Jack?"

Jack, who had been looking down at his bound arms in the off-white jacket, lifted his head to look at Bruce. When he spoke Bruce could see the blood still staining his brother's teeth. “Yeah, doc, I'm all kinds of compliant,” he said out of the side of his mouth, but kept his gaze on his older brother.
“Well well, Brucie. Guess you finally got what you wanted...”

Jack frowned looking around. “Where's Harley? Why didn't you bring her with you?”

Bruce frowned, but Jack continued. “You kept her from seeing me? You didn't allow her to come!!”

Jack started to stand, but the orderlies on either side shoved him back down onto his seat. Bruce felt a twist in his chest seeing how much pain Jack was in. Alfred was correct, Jack needed Harley...but...

“It's not like that Jack...” Bruce began, but Jack wasn't listening anymore. Bruce was shocked to see tears in Jack's eyes as he struggled against the two orderlies. “You can't keep her away from me Bruce!! You can't!!”

Jack struggled. “I want to see Harley!! BRUCE!!”

Dr. Arkham frowned. “That's enough!! Jack settle down or you'll be sedated again.”

Jack struggled as tears rolled down his cheeks while he glared at his brother. “Bring her Bruce, bring Harley.”

The orderlies grabbed Jack lifting him and dragging him out of the room. Jack struggled yelling.
“BRUCE!! Bruce!! I need to see her!! Please Bruce!! Please!! Please help me!! BROTHER!!
PLEASE HELP ME!!”

Bruce stood watching his brother disappear, Jack's pleas hitting him right in the heart and gut. Jack didn't begged for his help like that since they were children and it hurt more than he thought it could.
Arkham went with Jack, returning to the area where Bruce stood waiting with a hand over his mouth as he stared at the place his brother had been.

“I'm sorry you had to see your brother like that Mr. Wayne. I should have stood my ground and not allowed you to see him but...”

Bruce nodded. “It's fine doctor, thank you. You will keep me informed of his condition...every day.”

It was a statement, not a question. Dr. Arkham nodded. “Of course Mr. Wayne, of course. Now, let me escort you to the front.”

He had let himself break down when they brought him back to his cell...room...whatever it was, (he couldn't leave so it was a cell as far as he was concerned) after Bruce's visit. He couldn't believe Bruce hadn't brought Harley with him. Jack closed his eyes as renewed pain washed over him. He needed her and Bruce hadn't even brought her with him. For a brief moment Jack worried that maybe Harley hadn't wanted to see him, but he had quickly dismissed the idea. His Harley would never abandon him, never.

It was almost noon before Jack saw someone again. He was hungry and miserable, but he had decided he wouldn't let anyone know, not again. After the episode with Bruce he refused to let himself be that weak again. So when two very large men dressed in nurses whites came to his door Jack put on a huge smile. Both men were, he noted with some chagrin, armed with tasers. One of the orderlies was a large man with beady black eyes and enough muscle that his head looked too small for his body. His partner had the look of an all-American football player from a high-school movie, blonde, nice build, chiseled good looks. They were both dressed in white uniforms and both wore equally dull expressions on their faces. The beady eyed man slid a card into a reader on his side of the clear, shatter proof plastic door to Jack's cell. There was a buzz and the door popped open, allowing the orderly to step in. His voice was deep as he pointed at Jack with the taser. “Turn and put your feet on the floor.”

Jack, who was sitting on his cot shrugged (as well as he could in the jacket), turned and put his bare feet on the floor. He narrowed his eyes. “I already had my pee break gentlemen. Two of your kind, though not quite as burly, came in here and help me get my pants down to take a piss.” Jack said it with a bright grin. “It was just as humiliating as you would have thought and neither of them understood my jokes or at least they didn't laugh. And on top of that neither one of them flirted with me. Really a hit to the old ego you know?”

The man stared at him as if surprised that Jack spoke to him then he shook his head. “We're to take you to the showers Mr. Wayne. Dr. Crane wants you cleaned up before your session. You behave yourself then we won't have to put you back into your straightjacket. You misbehave, we taser you and you're right back in it. Are we clear Mr. Wayne?”

The man came over, dropping down on one knee to put Jack's socks on him and to help Jack into the dull grey slip-on tennis shoes. Jack behaved himself smiling down at the man. “So what's your name?” Jack asked pleasantly.

The man finished, slipping on Jack's socks and shoes before standing up, grabbed Jack by the straps of his straitjacket and lifted him to his feet without answering him. Jack chuckled. “Hey you guys wanna hear a joke? My dad died when we couldn't remember his blood type. As he died, he kept insisting for us to "be positive," but it's hard without him!”

The football player snorted, his beady eyed partner gave him a dirty look. The football player shrugged. “Sorry Dale, it was funny.”

Jack continued giggling softly. “If you guys see me smiling it means I'm thinking of doing something bad. If you see me laughing, I already have!”

The blonde chuckled again as he took his position on Jack's other side. The beady eyed orderly sighed. “That's enough Mr. Wayne.”

Jack chuckled. “Nah!! Come on guys, can't we be friends? Wanna here a song? I have a great singing voice!”

The two men put their hands on Jack's shoulders and led him out of the cell and into the halls.

In her cell, Harley was sitting on her cot with her back against the cool wall. She had been roughly escorted to the showers half an hour ago. She hated to admit it, but she felt better clean and in a clean uniform. They had let her back into her cell without her straightjacket as along as she behaved; she had been informed that they wouldn't put her back into it, but if she acted violently at all, she would be right back into the restraining jacket.
Harley leaned against the wall with her eyes closed kicking her legs slowly against the cot. She was trying to not let the pit in her heart open up and swallow her again when she heard something. She stood up and hurried over to the clear plastic of her cell wall/door and leaned against it listening intently. Then she heard Jack’s voice singing loud and clear with a slight lit of laughter to his voice.

“I'm one card short of a full deck
I'm not quite the shilling
One wave short of a shipwreck
I'm not at my usual top billing
I'm coming down with a fever
I'm really out to sea
This kettle is boiling over
I think I'm a banana tree
Oh dear, I'm going slightly mad
I'm going slightly mad
It finally happened, happened
It finally happened uh huh
It finally happened I'm slightly mad - oh dear! ….”

Jack grinned looking between the two orderlies. “See, told you I have a great singing voice and lucky for you two, I take requests!”

The high school jock looking orderly grinned. “Do you now?”

The one named Dale snarled. “Rich, if you encourage him, I swear to God...”

Jack chuckled. “Ah come on Dale! Be a sport! Let Rich here pick a song!”

Jack laughed again grinning brightly.

*

Harley frowned. “Jack?” She breathed his name listening hard, but then she heard him laugh after a rough voice groaned. “Will you stop singing!”

Harley pressed harder against the transparent door. “JACK!!” Harley's face broke into a huge smile. “JACK!! JACK!! CAN YOU HEAR ME??!”

*

Jack had just taken a deep breath, ready to sing his heart out again much to the annoyance of one of the orderlies when he heard her voice. Jack stopped singing, his eyes going wide. He said her name in a whisper. “Harley?”

Then he heard her again. “PUDDIN!! IT'S ME!”
Jack stopped in his tracks nearly causing the two orderlies to trip when he suddenly stopped moving. The one named Dale gave Jack a shove in the shoulders. “Come on Mr. Wayne, you said you wouldn’t cause any trouble.”

Jack wrinkled his nose. “I said I understood—never said I wouldn’t cause any trouble.”

The football player snorted on a laugh again. That was when all three men heard the voice.

“JACK!! IT'S ME HARLEY!!”

Jack reacted instantly. He bolted. “HARLEY!!”

He didn't manage to get very far before the beady eyed orderly named Dale hunkered down like a bull and slammed into Jack’s lower back lifting him off his legs and slamming Jack down. Jack hit the floor hard, the two men going down and sliding across the floor.

Jack had the instant taste of blood in his mouth, his teeth cutting against his bottom lip, the slam to the floor knocking the air out of him, but Jack twisted and fought, kicking at Dale as he struggled and yelled gasping painfully for air. “HARLEY!! HARLEY!!”

* *

In her cell Harley was jumping up and down. “JACK!!”

Tears started to flow down her cheeks as she banged her fists on the clear wall. “JACK, JACK!!”

* *

Jack managed to squirm his way out of Dale’s grip, rolling onto his back and using his feet to kick at Dale, striking Dale in the face hard enough to break the man's nose.

The blonde orderly yelped. “Oh shit.”

Rich’s taser was on his hip and he fumbled, yanking it off and aiming it at Jack. Jack had just regained his feet, rolling up to his knees then leaping to his feet before taking off at a run toward where he thought he heard Harley's voice coming. “HARLEY!!” Jack yelled.

* *

Harley heard him. She gasped with excitement and yelled back. “JACK!!”

* *

Jack had only managed to go a short distance before he was hit in the back of the thigh by the taser. He was weak from lack of food, water and, already being tasered more times than any regular person should be, along with the drugs that had been pumped into his system too many times in a short span of time. So when the taser hit him, Jack jerked tight for a moment, almost falling, but he still managed to fight off the effects of the taser, starting to move again, slower, but he forced himself to take a step forward, and then another jolt hit him, and yet another. The third jolt of electricity was enough to put him down this time. Jack dropped hard onto his knees, the impact rattling through him before he dropped sideways, landing heavily on his side, knocking his head against the floor. He blinked, dazed, but he was smiling a wide smile that stretched ear to ear.

Three hours later, Jack finally had his shower. He hated to admit that finally getting a lukewarm shower felt good. He was in a fresh set of asylum “fatigues”...clearly making sure the patients were dressed as unfashionable as possible must be some sort of torture because, Jack thought to himself, these outfits were hideous. Once he was showered and dressed, he was put right back in the straightjacket because of the earlier incident...and he had been sedated...again the drugs having worn off about an hour and a half ago. They had allowed him to shower, but the second time he had had six orderlies escort him, all armed with tasers. But he hadn't cared! Now that he knew Harley was here in the asylum, he was determined to avoid being sedated again. He was going to find a way to see her, to be with her and part of that would mean he would have to use every once of his charm, humor and good behavior...until that didn't work any more. He would kill his way through this asylum on a murderous rampage if he had to, but he was going to be with Harley again.

Jack grinned happily. Part of him was thrilled! She was here, close too, on the same floor as him! But the other half of him was devastated that she was in the asylum too. What had happened? How did she get here? Did Bruce have her committed too? Could he do that? Did he do it as some sort of punishment, maybe revenge? Jack calmed himself. He was not going to jump to conclusions...he would just have to find out, that was all.

He sat on the edge of his cot waiting for the orderlies to arrive and take him to his session. He was humming happily to himself kicking his legs back and forth like a child in a chair when they arrived, except Jack's long legs allowed him to rub the rubber soles of his shoes against the floor making annoying squeaking noises. He glanced over when one of the men opened the door to see that they had brought a wheelchair with straps. Jack frowned.

The orderly who opened the door was Dale, his nose taped up along with a little bit of swelling around his eyes. This time he had a different partner, another guy that looked like he could be Dale's twin.

Dale spoke, his voice slightly stuffy. “It's to make sure you don't try anything on the way to your session.”

Jack stuck his bottom lip out in a pout. “Ah come on guys, really? Can't you forgive me Dale? I'm a man in love. We sometimes do crazy things. You ever been in love Dale?”

Dale narrowed his eyes at Jack. “Don't start Mr. Wayne.”

Jack grinned. “Call me Jack.”

Dale frowned for a moment then sighed. Jack could see it, even with him having broken his nose, Dale was susceptible to a little bit of the Ol' Wayne charm. Dale pointed a threatening finger at Jack.

“Jack, just behave, get in the wheelchair and don't cause any more problems today. I don't think getting tasered or sedated would be good for you again, but that don't mean I won't do it.”

Jack smiled. “I will be a picture perfect patient. Cross my heart. Well I would, but my arms are a bit tied up at the moment. But I swear, I'll be such a perfect patient you'll be singing my praises and telling the other loonies, 'You should be more like that good boy Jack Wayne, always does what he's told.'” Jack ended with a bright smile.

Dale just sighed and motioned to the chair. Jack hopped up, sauntered over and flopped down onto the seat of the wheelchair. Dale and his partner quickly strapped him down and proceeded to wheel him down the hall. Jack dropped his head back against the wheelchair to smile at the two men, rolling his head back and forth to look at both of them. “Hey ah, is it okay if I yell “Hi” to my girl? Just in case she can hear me?”

Dale sighed. “I would prefer you didn't Jack.”

Jack grinned, his eyes dancing. “That's not a no!”

“HARLEY!!! I LOVE YOU!!” Jack yelled as loudly as he could.

*

Harley nearly fell off on her cot and onto the floor when she thought she heard Jack. It wasn't as loud as earlier when she had heard him singing, but she was sure she heard him this time too. She jumped up and ran to the front of her cell, pressing herself against the hard shatter proof plastic, listening. She grinned and yelled at the top of her lungs.

“JACK!! JACK!! I LOVE YOU!!”

Harley smiled, blinking back tears. He was so close...he knew she was here!!

Someone in Harley's hall yelled. “WILL YOU SHUT UP!”

Harley made a face, sticking out her tongue and yelled back. “MAKE ME!”

Harley giggled with glee as she tossed herself on her cot like a teenage girl whose crush had finally noticed her, squealing happily to herself. “He knows I'm here!! My puddin knows I'm here!!”

Harley was smiling so much her cheeks hurt and she drummed her feet with excitement against her cot. Jack knew she was here. Now, they only needed to find a way to be together...

*

Jack wiggled in his wheelchair. “You hear that??!! That was her!! That's my girl!!” Jack's smile was wide and happy as he was wheeled to the elevator. He dropped his head back looking again between the two orderlies. “She is the most beautiful woman on the face of the earth.”

The orderly with Dale glanced at his partner. “He talking about that cute blonde that came in last night right after him?”

Dale glanced sideways at the other man giving him a clear “shut the fuck up” look.

Jack grinned. “Does she have legs that go on for days, blue eyes that make your heart melt and a figure that would make men go to war and a smile brighter than the sun? Then that's her...that's my Harley.”

The orderly next to Dale opened his mouth to say “Yeah that's her” but from the look he was getting from Dale, the man snapped his mouth shut. Jack didn't care...

He knew she was here.

*

They arrived down on the first floor and continued to wheel Jack down to the end of the hall, turning toward the last door on the right. Dale knocked and a soft melodious voice replied. “Enter.”

Dale opened the door, holding it open while his partner wheeled Jack inside. Jack frowned when he saw Dr. Crane.

“Hey, I know you,” Jack said.

Crane motioned for the orderlies to leave. “I'll ring when you can return.”

Jack was left facing Crane's desk as the two men who had wheeled him down here stepped out of the office. Jack frowned slightly with a look around. Crane's office was noticeably neat, with deep burgundy colored walls, book shelves lined with books, and there were several framed prints hanging on the walls. Jack picked out prints of Goya’s “Saturn Devouring his Children” and a print of Fuseli’s “The Nightmare.”

Jack lifted an eyebrow. “You definitely have a theme going on here. Nice suit, by the way.”

Crane smiled. “Thank you. May I offer you something to drink, perhaps some food. I know it's been hours and you must be hungry.”

Jack jerked his bound arms. “Unless you're going to feed me doc, I think the answer would have to be no.”

Crane smiled again. Jack studied the other man, deciding he didn't care for Crane's smile.

Crane said in the same soft voice. “I will make a deal with you Mr. Wayne. I am going to be your primary doctor here at Arkham. I would like to start our relationship out with a bit of trust. I will release you from the jacket...though you will have to have one hand cuffed to the chair and I will have some food brought to you while we talk. Agreed?”

Jack narrowed his eyes slightly, then nodded. He had to play the game to get what he needed. “Agreed.”

Crane hit a buzzer under his desk and within seconds Dale returned. “Yes, Dr. Crane.”

“I want you to remove Mr. Wayne's jacket and cuff him to the chair. Then I would like you to bring him something to eat. What was on the schedule for the patients' lunch today?”

Dale frowned in thought. “Ahh...grilled cheese, green beans and a slice of apple pie.”

Jack frowned with suspicion. “Ah, it feels like a bourbon day, but...chocolate milk will do.”

Crane nodded and looked to Dale who stepped over to Jack. Jack gave him a quizzical look, but leaned forward and let Dale undo the straps of the jacket then quietly let Dale handcuff one hand to the wheelchair with a nylon handcuff. Dale left to fetch Jack's lunch while Crane took his seat again.

The psychiatrist steepled his fingers with a smile. “Now, Jack—may I call you Jack?”

Jack frowned slightly. “Sure.”

“Jack. I would like to understand exactly what happened to bring you here to Arkham.” Crane gazed calmly at him.

Jack gave Crane a “look” that said he knew that the doctor knew exactly why he was here. “I beat a man into a coma in front of a bunch of Gotham elite at my engagement party.”
Crane nodded. “Were you not afraid of the consequences?”

Jack shrugged. “Not really, didn't actually think about it.”

Crane nodded. “Would you say you were not afraid at all.”

“Nope.” Jack smiled.

Crane nodded pulling open a drawer at his desk to pull out a pad and pen. “So, Jack, what are you afraid of?”

Jack narrowed his eyes. “Nothing.”

“Not even something happening to your fiancee?” Crane asked with a lifted brow. Jack paled slightly and remained silent, but Crane noted it.

The doctor smiled again. “What if I told you I had a way for you to see your fiancee Jack?”
Harley yawned since it was late and it had been a long day, the same day she had been admitted to the asylum. It was turning into the day that would never end, she thought with a sigh. She was still riding a little bit of a high knowing that Jack was close enough that she could hear him and that little bit of information had done wonders for her mood. Harley yawned again. She couldn't cover her mouth because she was in a straight jacket as she waited on her cot to be taken to see Dr. Crane, her first session with him. Harley swung her legs back and forth and muttered to herself. “You know this is all your fault.”

In her mind Harley could see Harleen, dressed in her conservative black skirt and red top, her blonde hair pulled back into a tight bun, the glasses that she didn't need perched on the tip of her nose. She had her white doctor coat on. She had been so proud of the coat. Harleen frowned at Harley. She wasn't in her box, she was sitting on top of it with her legs crossed, a pad and pencil in her hand.

“If you hadn't been such a coward; if we had told Jack before the party none of us would be here.” Harley hissed into the dimness of her cell. “We could have killed him and no one would have known. It's all your fault we ended up here. You're the one who should die Harleen.”

Harley squeezed her eyes closed on a fresh burst of tears. She had told herself she was done crying. Jack knew she was here and it was now only a matter of time before they were together again, but that didn't stop the pain of not being with him now from threatening to overwhelm her again. She hissed into her cell. “I hate you,” directed at Harleen, but her other self was no longer there.

She flopped to the side of her cot, her hair falling across her face, her bottom lip sticking out. She sang softly to herself herself, an old song that she remembered listening to in college. Slowly, and very low, more a whisper than singing, Harley murmured:

You and me
Meant to be Immutable Impossible
It's destiny
Pure lunacy Incalculable
Inseparable
And for the last time
You're everything that I want and asked for You're all that I dream
Who wouldn't be the one you love
Who wouldn't stand inside your love Protected and the lover of . . .

Her voice trailed off when she saw shadows through the golden cascade of her hair, walking down the hall toward her cell. She didn't bother trying to push herself up, with her arms bound up she would end up just rolling around or flopping like a fish out of water, so she watched as the hulking image of Dale and some female orderly who looked like Dale in a wig materialized in front of her cell door. Dale slid his card and there was the click of the light switching over and the beep announcing the door was opening. Dale frowned as he stepped over to Harley while the woman pushed a wheelchair into the room behind him. “Come along Dr. Quinzel.” Dale nudged her arm with his knuckles gently.

Harley narrowed her eyes. “Didn’t I tell you last time you was in here to call me Harley or Miss Quinn...not Quinzel?” Harley didn't move a muscle except to keep glaring up at Dale through her hair.

Dale sighed. “Yes you did Miss Quinn. Sorry, it's late. Let's get you in the chair.”

Harley rolled away putting her back to Dale and his female companion.

“Did you see Jack?” she asked with her back to him.

Dale sighed. “Yes Miss Quinn and he's fine.”

Harley grinned rolling back over. “Did he ask about me?”

Dale sighed again. Harley wondered briefly about how much sighing Dale did on his job and that he really should talk to someone about his work time stress. “Miss Quinn, let's get you into your chair and then I will answer you question, but only if you agree to no fighting me.”

Harley beamed at him. “Of course!”

Harley let Dale lift her up, then pick her up by her coat straps to place her in the chair. He made sure she was comfortable before he strapped her down. She tilted her head back to look upside down at the woman holding the chair's handles. “What's your name?” she asked with a smile.

The woman smiled at her. For such a large brute of a woman, she had a kind smile. “Sandra.”

Harley smiled sweetly. “I'm Harley, don't let anyone tell you different.”

Sandra smiled. “Of course.”

Dale made a grunt that was accompanied by a frown.

Sandra just rolled her eyes. “Calling her by a name she prefers isn't that big a deal Dale.”

“I guess so.” Dale rubbed the back of his neck looking annoyed. Harley bounced slightly in her chair. “You said you would tell me what Jack said.”

Dale flushed. “I ain't repeating everything he said...he was a little inappropriate.”
Harley grinned, her cheeks turning red as Dale continued. “But he said to say he loves you.”

Harley swooned. “Oh Jack. I love him too.”

Dale rolled his eyes motioning for Sandra to follow him.

Harley inhaled, but Dale quickly turned to put a hand over her mouth. “Miss Quinn, it's late, some of the other patients are sleeping and I don't want you yelling in the hopes that Mr. Wayne hears you.”

Harley sighed and pouted. “Fine.”

They started to move when Harley took another breath. Clearly Dale was faster than he looked as he twisted around and covered her mouth. “Miss Quinn,” he warned her with narrowed eyes.

Harley pouted, but then licked his hand. Dale snatched his hand away with a disgusted face, but it was Sandra who reached down and laid a large hand on Harley's shoulder. “Miss Quinn, please no shouting. How about if you behave, I will take a message to Mr. Wayne for you.”

Harley dropped her head back to smile at Sandra. “You mean it?”

“Cross my heart.” Sandra smiled kindly.

Harley giggled. “Okay I'll be quiet.”

Dale sighed. “Thank God,” he muttered and started to walk again.

*

They made their way through the dimly lit halls traveling by a few other patients. One, a young blonde woman with what Harley would describe as a lovely angel's face was sitting cross-legged in front of her cell door. When she saw Harley being wheeled by the young woman waved. “Hey! Hi! I'm Barbara!!”

Harley leaned forward as much as she could. “HI! I'm Harley!”

Barbara stood up as Harley moved past her. “Can we be friends?” she called after Harley.

Harley frowned in confusion, but yelled back. “Sure!”

Dale sighed, again. “Barbara, you're supposed to be getting ready for bed.”

Barbara grinned. “I will Dale. I promise.”

Dale shook his head as they continued by with a snort. “You don't wanna be friends with that one Miss Quinn.”

Harley frowned. “Why not?”

They had arrived at the elevator and Dale pushed the button. “She killed her parents.”

“Oh?” Harley leaned forward trying to look back, but she was pinned to her chair by the additional straps. “That's interesting,” Harley said in a tone that sounded too curious to Dale's ears.

Once they arrived, Harley was wheeled into Crane's office. Since it had grown dark outside, he had turned on a lamp on his desk. The lamp reminded Harley of an old fashion banker's lamp with an amber shade. The light cast the rest of the office in darkness. He was writing when she was turned to face him. Without looking up, Crane said softly.

“Remove her jacket and please cuff her to the chair.”

Dale and Sandra set about doing what the doctor asked without a word. Harley didn't move except to help them remove her jacket and calmly placed her left hand on the chair to be cuffed to it. She watched Crane who continued to write as the orderlies stepped outside of the office. Crane looked up only when Dale and Sandra had stepped out and Harley sat in silence.

“Now, I was told you like to be called Harley?” Crane asked in a soft voice as he set his pen down and steepled his fingers.

Harley nodded. “Yes.”

“Have you had dinner yet?” Crane asked, standing up with a slight lift to one eyebrow.

Harley frowned. This was starting off as a strange session. “No.”

Crane nodded and walked to the door pulling it open where Dale and Sandra were waiting. “Dale, please fetch a tray of food for Miss Quinn.”

Dale nodded. “Yes sir, Doctor Crane.”

Crane closed the door and went back to his desk and sat. “Now Miss Quinn. I am Dr. Jonathan Crane. I will be your primary doctor as well as your fiance's doctor.”

Harley beamed. “You talked to Jack?”

“Yes, yes I did this afternoon. Jack has agreed to help me with my research at the same time that I am treating him. In exchange I have offered him some...incentive.” Crane smiled.

Harley frowned. “What research, doc? I read some of your papers when I was a student. You study fear.”

Crane smiled with genuine pleasure. “Why yes, Miss Quinn. I did read that you have a degree in psychiatry.”

Harley nodded. “Yes, I do.”

Crane smiled. “Interesting. Why do you not want to use your birth name and the title you earned?”

Harley frowned. “Because I'm not her anymore.”

Crane lifted a brow in question. “Really? Is Harleen then a separate person from Harley? The woman you have become...become for Jack?”

Harley gave Crane a withering look. “I didn't become Harley for Jack...I became Harley because of Jack. He opened me up...showed me that there was more...that life is a joke and we all run around taking it too seriously. Harleen was weak, scared...”

Crane was calm, but he jumped on the word. “Scared?”

Harley nodded and continued. “She was scared of her step-father, scared of the world...scared of, well...everything, but Jack showed me I was strong and powerful and there was nothing for me to be scared of..."

Crane nodded. “Interesting.”

Harley licked her lips. “You said something about research?” She was trying to pull him away from the subject of her and Harleen...

“Good, good. Yes, Jack has agreed to help me in my research. I was hoping that perhaps I could persuade you to help as well. Dr. Arkham has given me full freedom to treat you both...” Crane stopped as there was a knock at the door. “Ah...your dinner.”

He stood up and walked to the door, opened it to reveal Dale standing there with a tray of food. From the smell, which made Harley’s stomach growl loudly, it was chicken and gravy, corn and to her surprise, a glass of chocolate milk. Crane held the door open and Dale brought the tray over, balancing it on her wheelchair. Dale picked up a steaming cup of tea and handed it to Dr. Crane. “I thought you might like some of your tea Dr. Crane,” Dale said solemnly.

Crane took the tea with a slight nod. “Thank you Dale.”

Harley frowned, but she was starving so she went ahead and dug in. “So what kind of help are you wanting for your research?” she asked taking a bite of chicken.

Crane strolled around the office slowly, but careful to stay in Harley’s view the whole time. She studied him as he moved about. He was well dressed; Jack would appreciate that she thought, but there was something...creepy, unsettling about him. Crane motioned very little with his hands as he spoke. “It will mostly be simple participation in some tests...just to get some basic...mental readings, nothing more. “

Harley frowned her fork hovering just in front of her mouth. “That’s it, just some tests?”

Crane smiled softly. “Just some tests.”

Harley reached forward taking her glass of milk. “I...I guess that's fine.”

Crane’s smile widened. “Good, good. Now...I would like to ask you about why you came to have yourself committed last night.”

Harley set her glass down. “I came because Jack was here.”

Crane had taken his seat again and took a sip of his tea. “So you wanted to be committed? Why not just visit?”

Harley stared down at her tray. “That wouldn't have been enough. I need to be with Jack. You...you wouldn't understand, it's more than love. It's not that simple. Jack and I need each other. We haven't been separated since the day we met.”

She gazed at Crane across his desk, the intensity of her gaze trying to communicate to him the depth of the love that she and Jack shared. “It's not...” She frowned struggling for the words. “I would die for him. He means everything to me. It's more than love doctor...more than that. What we have is something more...transcendent?” She frowned clearly not happy with what she had said, but not sure how else to say it.

Crane nodded. “Interesting. Is that why you beat poor Agatha so badly...this need to be with Jack?”
Harley nodded. “Yes. I love him.” She shook her head. “Love is such a weak word...I...I...” Harley struggled to make herself understood, but Crane put his hand up. “I think I understand. Jack said much the same thing. Well...interesting. We shall begin testing tomorrow, Miss Quinn.”

Crane stood walking over to the door, but before he opened the door Crane smiled at her. “By the way Miss Quinn, what are you afraid of?”

Harley didn't hesitate in answering. “Losing Jack.” Though after the words had left her mouth she wondered if she had done the right thing by admitting that.

Crane smiled. “Interesting.” He nodded opening the door. “Dale, Sandra, you may take Miss Quinn back to her room as soon as she is finished with her meal.”

That night Crane sat in his office reading over his notes that he had taken on both Jack Wayne and Dr. Harleen Quinzel. Their biggest fear seemed to be the thought of not being together, of losing each other. Interesting as well as being something he could play with to a great extent since he had both of them under his care. Crane tapped his pen against his lips in thought. He would inject them both, starting tomorrow and monitor their reactions to his fear toxin, as well as setting up situations to test the toxin's effectiveness and their fear, their reactions.

Crane smiled. It was nice that Arkham wanted nothing to do with the patients on the sixth floor—it allowed him a whole floor of test subjects as well as unfettered access to everything he needed to test and develop his toxin. This really was going to be quite enjoyable.

* *

The next morning after breakfast, which consisted of lukewarm oatmeal, toast and milk, (breakfast was brought to Jack's cell though he was told if he behaved himself he would be allowed to take meals with the other patients in a day or two) Jack was allowed outside. He was strapped in his jacket then strapped firmly to the wheelchair, but Crane had insisted that Jack be wheeled out into the gardens for some fresh air before their session that day. Once outside, Jack would be set free for a limited amount of time, allowed to mingle with a handful of the other patients that resided on the sixth floor.

Dale was wheeling him through the halls to the elevator before he would take him outside.

Dale rolled his eyes. “Why don't you just tell me what you want Mr. Wayne, instead of trying to be friends?”

“Can you wheel me by Harley's room?” Jack smiled innocently.

Dale sighed. “No.”

“Why not?” Jack pouted.

“Dr. Crane has given orders that until he has decided one way or another that you are both “safe,” you are not allowed to see each other,” Dale explained in a tired voice as he wheeled his charge down the hall where the elevator was located.
“Oh come on Dale, how would he know? Besides, he did promise me Harley.” Jack pouted.

Dale sighed. “He would know and he promised after the sessions, not before.”

“Could you give her a message?” Jack asked hopefully.

Dale sighed. “I might, just tell me the message and this time make it clean.”

Jack grinned and Dale groaned as Jack said. “Tell her I love her.”

“Fine.”

*

Jack frowned. “How does a crazy person travel through the woods.”

Dale grunted in response. Jack cheerfully continued. “They take the psychopath!”

Jack laughed, but Dale gave no response except to keep pushing the wheelchair along.

Dale and Jack made it to the bottom floor without Jack getting himself into trouble, though he had told Dale several jokes that had fallen flat...either Dale had no sense of humor...Jack grinned to himself or the man was just that good at not laughing. That had to be it! Dale was in desperate need of someone to make him laugh and Jack decided he was just going to have to find a way to do that before he left the asylum.

Dale wheeled Jack down a hall to a door that opened up from the back of the main building. Jack paid attention as Dale scanned his employee card, followed by a buzz and a light switched over to green opening the door.

Today was a heavy overcast day, the sky a perpetual grey with the threat of rain in the air. The daylight (and not being drugged in the back of an ambulance) allowed Jack to really achieve a proper look at the asylum grounds. The grounds were not made up of simply one large building, but were actually several large Gothic style buildings littered throughout a vast, fenced in estate. Jack could see that there were winding paths leading to each of the buildings, all with little metal signs in front of them announcing the title or function of the building.

Dale wheeled Jack along an old grey paved path in need of repairs (so the wheelchair ride wasn't exactly smooth), turning around the side of one of the buildings. Jack noticed that there were guard towers located all over the grounds making the place look much like a maximum security prison, albeit with trees and shrubbery. Jack gazed above him at the towers, but only a handful had anyone patrolling. The few guards that Jack could see were armed, but they were too far away for Jack to precisely determine what sorts of weapons they carried. He would assume nonlethal since this place was technically a hospital. As they turned another corner, Jack saw the “gardens.”

They were not actually gardens, but instead were a building, a botanical garden, sealed off behind glass walls. Jack frowned. “What was this place before it was an asylum?”

Dale muttered. “Used to be the Arkham family estate. This place has more secrets and hidden areas than...nevermind, shouldn't have said that.”

Jack smiled, but said nothing.

There were two armed guards at the entrance to the gardens, and unlike the orderlies, the two guards were dressed in black slacks and grey shirts with Arkham embroidered across the shoulders and pocket with talkies hooked on their belts and ball caps with the asylum name across the top. Jack noted they were armed with tasers, nothing deadly...nothing permanent. Jack smiled. They both nodded to Dale.

Dale frowned. “I told you not to call them that Jason.”

“Whatever Dale,” Jason muttered. The other guard had a chiseled chin and dark mocha skin, didn’t say a word. He just smiled, opening the door so Dale could wheel Jack inside. The inside of the building was overflowing with greenery and winding brick paths, and there were even a few benches. Inside there were maybe four patients including Jack. Dale rolled him around to where there were other wheelchairs sitting empty. Dale pulled Jack around and unfastened his straps, then released him from the jacket.

Jack grinned brightly. “I will behave like I was in church Dale, my friend.”

Dale narrowed his eyes. “Why do I suspect you don't go to church.”

Jack laughed. “So Dale, who are my fellow crazies?”

Dale sighed. “Mr. Wayne, please—we refer to everyone here as patients.”

Jack groaned dropping his shoulders. “Okay fine, my fellow patients.”

Dale took a breath. “All right, the bald man there is Victor Zsasz over there, Aaron Halzinger, Robert Greenwood and Abigail O'Shay. They are all sensitive, so please, do not ask why they are in here.”

Jack grinned slowly and Dale sighed. “Please Mr. Wayne.”

It was Jack's turn to sigh. “Ooh, okay fine.”

Inside the asylum, Harley was being escorted to the common room by Sandra who was telling Harley what she was allowed to do in the common room. Harley was wearing little white slippers along with her black and white striped dress and her long blonde hair was loose and curling softly around her shoulders. She wasn't in a straightjacket, nor was she handcuffed, she only had Sandra with her, walking close behind her.

“We have board games, a television—though you aren't allowed to watch the news, so don't ask. If you want the station changed, you do need to ask a nurse or an orderly. We have sketch paper, coloring books and crayons, no pens or pencils. Though you are lucky, today is ice cream day! So everyone gets a snack of ice cream as a special treat. You will be sharing the room today with Barbara, Linda, Jervis, and Tabitha. We prefer the patients didn't bother each other about why you were committed, but as along as you all behave...” Sandra shrugged.

Harley nodded, then sighed softly. “No Jack?”

Sandra gave Harley a sympathetic look. “I'm sorry, Dr. Arkham thinks you both should remain separated for at least another couple of days. After that, who knows.” Sandra gave her an encouraging smile.

Harley's bottom lip trembled. “I need to see him.”

Sandra frowned. “I'm sorry Miss Quinn.”

“Call me Harley.” Harley angrily wiped a tear away with the heel of her hand. Sandra frowned. “Maybe, if you want, I could take him a message for you?”

Harley turned around so quickly that the much larger woman took a startled step back. “Would you? Really?”

Sandra nodded. “Yes, just...don't tell anyone.”

“No, no, of course!! Thank you Sandra, thank you!!” Harley threw her arms around Sandra. Sandra smiled blushing. “Ah, let's get you to the common room.”

The common room wasn't anything special, Harley decided within a few seconds of passing through the door. The room was painted plain white, with several windows that had the wire frame embedded within a reinforced plastic frame. There were several plain wooden chairs around the room and several plain wooden tables with easily washable white plastic surfaces. There was a TV in the corner of the room up on the wall, an old fashioned RCA TV. Harley saw Barbara, her bobbed blonde hair bouncing as she rocked her head back and forth to music that wasn't playing, sitting at a table coloring. The other patients were scattered around the room. When Barbara saw Harley, her face lit up and she motioned Harley over with an excited smile on her face.

“New Friend!! Come here, come here, sit with me!”

Harley glanced back at Sandra who gave her an encouraging smile and motioned her into the room. Harley walked over pulling out the chair across from Barbara. She sat down and raised her hand in a little wave feeling as if she were back in preschool.

“Hi, I'm Harley.” Harley smiled.

Barbara grinned as she thrust her hand out to Harley. “I remember! Wow, you are so pretty! I'm Barbara Kean, but everyone calls me Babs.”

“Babs. I like it.” Harley giggled and took her offered hand.

Babs grinned. “Thank you. Does anyone call you Harls?”

Harley nodded. “Sometimes.”

Babs continued to grin taking her hand back. “So, I know we're not suppose to ask, but whatcha in for? I just have to know because you don't look like you belong here.” Babs giggled. “Me? I killed my parents.”

Harley grinned. “You don't look like you belong here either.”

The two young women giggled like they were sharing secrets in homeroom before Harley answered. “I attacked the receptionist so they would commit me. My fiance is here for beating a man into a coma at our engagement party. I wanted to be with him.”

Bab's expression became filled with wonder. “That is so beautiful! True love!! I love it. So you're here for true love?"

Harley nodded. “Yes...”

Babs looked at her, tilting her head one way and then another, her round blue eyes looked slightly empty, but she said quietly, “You and him...it's deeper than love, isn't it? You have secrets don't you? Bloody secrets. I can tell. I can see blood in your eyes. I like that. We are going to make great friends!” Babs handed Harley a green crayon before she went back to her own coloring. “So, tell me all about your fiance.”

Harley took the crayon as Babs scooted the coloring book she had been using into the middle of the table so both women could color. The book was a generic coloring book full of clowns and circus animals. Babs had given all the clowns on the two pages bloody eyes, the red crayon smeared angrily across the eyes of every clown.

Harley gnawed her bottom lip before she spoke. “He is handsome...so handsome...like a prince from a fairy story. Tall, lean and he likes to dress well and he has the bluest eyes. You can just become lost in his eyes. He likes to wear eye makeup and for me to paint his nails...and he is so talented! He can sing, dance, play the piano, he's fantastic in bed and knows how to kill someone...”

Harley blushed and giggled; she hadn't meant to say that last part.

Babs glanced over at her smiling broadly and pointed her crayon at Harley. “I know...there is blood on you. I like that in a person.”

Harley giggled before she continued, coloring in the hair of a clown with the green crayon Babs had given her. “But the best part about Jack is the way he thinks. Nothing matters except us, him and me...everything else...society, the “good” people of Gotham, civilization, all of it is an illusion...they are all hypocrites...so it doesn't really matter what we do...it's all one big joke because when it comes down to it, no one is really civilized and none of it really matters because everyone ends up in the same place...”

“Arkham?” Babs asked which caused both women to laugh, but Babs' eyes lit up. “I can see why you love him!!

Harley smiled softly, dreamily. “Yeah. I can't live without him.”

Babs sighed like a love sick girl. “I'm in love too.”

Harley started coloring the hair of another clown, deciding each of them on the page would have green hair. “Oh, who?”

Babs pointed across the room where a lovely dark skinned woman with jet black hair sat on the very uncomfortable looking couch, her arms and legs crossed, and glared at the television on the wall. There was some sort of game show playing and the woman watching did not seem happy about it.

Babs grinned. “That's Tabitha. She likes to kill people too, but I think her lawyer is the one that got her sent here. Anyway...I think she's dreamy. Though I'm still in love with my fiance too, so it's a bit of a pickle.”

“Fiance?” Harley asked glancing up. Barbara nodded. “Yeah, he works for the Gotham PD.”

Harley frowned, shaking her head slightly at Babs' complicated love life.

Jack strolled around the botanical garden, his hands behind his back. The garden was really nicely kept up, which, considering the state of the asylum itself, Jack found surprising. The plant-life was lush and green, with just the right amount of flowers to give the place a little color. Jack could tell by the architecture of the greenhouse that it had to date back from at least the 1870's. As his eyes slowly took in his surroundings, Jack looked as if he had not a care in the world while he looked for every escape route, but there were guards at every door. Jack sighed. He had thought briefly about escaping and finding Harley...even if he were caught and hauled back to his room and sedated, it would be worth it for one kiss, one hug... but right now, as he studied his situation, he knew it was an impossible dream. He was frowning in frustration, watching two of the guards talking when a voice behind him said. “Don't try it, you'll just end up in solitary and believe me; you don't want that.”

Jack turned to face a slim, bald man with dark brown eyes. The man held himself with an easy grace, but Jack recognized a fellow killer easily by the way the man held himself, ready to spring into action at a moment's notice.

The man smiled at Jack, holding out his hand in greeting. “I'm Victor, Victor Zsasz—everyone calls me Zsasz.”

Zsasz blinked. “I had heard a Wayne was here. You're like a minor celebrity, one of the Gotham elite among us crazies. All of us are nobodies, but you, you are one of Gotham's elite.” The man spoke without ire or envy, simply making a statement it seemed to Jack.

Jack put his arms out and performed a stage bow. “That would be me.”

Zsasz grinned. “The rumor mill's been spinning about you. Did you know that man you attacked? He died. Just this morning.”

Zsasz chuckled. “All of us are killers here, or violent...too violent for polite society. We're all insane here. Don't fit in. Still surprises me you're here, though.”

Jack laughed. “Oh, I guess I've been walking that fine line for a while. My big brother's been looking for a reason to stick me in here. You know, the family shame, and I guess I gave him one. But you know my friend, Zsasz you said?”

Zsasz nodded. And Jack continued. “Zsasz, All those people out there claiming to be sane, they are all just prisoners...sanity is a prison of the mind. Little cogs in a big machine that is grinding them to dust.” Jack tapped the side of his head. “Harley and I aren't sick, we're just free.”

Zsasz chuckled. “I like the way you think, Mr. Wayne.”

Jack smiled. “Just call me Jack.”

Zsasz nodded. “Jack. So how is Arkham treating you so far?” Both men turned and started to stroll down the path. Jack smiled clasping his hands behind his back. For a moment his mind drifted to thoughts of Harley...

Jack sighed. “Terrible. My fiancee is here too, but they won't let me see her. I really, really, really need to be with her. And I really need a drink and a cigarette. “

The two men started to walk along one of the paths that curved toward the center of the greenhouse.
“Might be able to fix the cigarette issue.” Zsasz grinned, but then he tilted his head. “So your fiancee is here? Really? Both of you here, how odd. No offense. What floor is she on? If you don't mind my asking?” Zsasz's face was etched with kind concern.

Jack smiled thinking about Harley. “Same floor. She heard me singing on the way to the showers and called out to me. She's close.”

Zsasz frowned in wonder. “She is one of the sixth floor residents? Wow, interesting. Do you know what she did or did you two do something together?”

Jack shook his head, but he smiled. “Whatever she did, I bet it was glorious. She is like a...we...” Jack laughed. “She is my little murder kitten. Everything she does is perfect.”

Zsasz quirked a brow at Jack's words, but he replied. “Arkham will probably keep you away from her as long as possible, especially if you two need each other. He is a bit of an ass like that. Doesn't like the patients to have “relationships.”’’ Here Zsasz signed finger quotes in the air before he continued. “But there are only a few of us on the sixth floor...we're the dangerous ones.” Zsasz grinned. “They don't like to let us all hang out together at the same time, in the same place, but there aren't that many of us so you might get a chance to be with her eventually and who knows, you get a orderly or nurse on your side...”

Jack muttered. “I don't like eventually. I need to be with her now.” He frowned, his eyes going cold but then he seemed to shake himself out of his mood and smiled, folding his arms behind him, holding his elbows. “So we're the dangerous ones you said? How many of us are there on the old sixth floor?”

Zsasz stopped walking for a moment, glancing toward the glass ceiling of the greenhouse. “I believe with you and your fiancee that brings our grand number to twelve.”

“Interesting,” Jack said noncommittally.

“So who's your doctor?” Zsasz asked as they continued to walk.

Jack was still gazing up at the ceiling as he strolled next to Zsasz. “Crane.”

Zsasz stopped in his tracks to stare at Jack. “Is he your fiancee's doctor too?”

Jack frowned giving Zsasz his full attention. “Not sure, why?”

Zsasz gave Jack a serious look. “Be careful with him. He can't be...”

Jack was about to ask what he meant when Dale called him. “Mr. Wayne, time for your session.”

Bruce wasn't paying a lot of attention to the video he was watching on the computer. He was both angry and frustrated. He was in his office at Wayne Enterprises where the board had called a meeting, a vote really, to decided the fate of Jack Wayne's continued presence on the board of directors. Bruce wasn't sure why he was surprised. After the last attempted vote to get his brother off, being committed to Arkham...by him...it was inevitable, but it didn't make the event any less frustrating.

His thoughts drifted to Jack and Harley, but more specifically to seeing his brother...the way Jack had begged for Bruce to help him, the look on Jack's face, the pain in his little brother's eyes. That had hurt. Jack hadn't begged Bruce like that since they were children. Bruce leaned his elbows on the desk dropping his head into his hands, his fingers threading through his hair in pain and frustration. He loved his little brother, he loved and cared for Jack deeply, but he didn't know what to do. He sensed he was losing Jack, maybe for good this time. No, he couldn't accept that. Bruce swallowed down his pain when his phone buzzed. Bruce looked up. He had set his cellphone on his desk near the photo of him, his brother and his family in happier times. Bruce glanced at the photo, his eyes lingering on the smiling image of his little brother as he picked the phone up. The caller was unknown. Bruce frowned, but answered it. “Wayne here.”

“Bruce.”

Bruce froze; it was Selina. “Selina?”

“Hi Bruce. I...I heard what happened.”

Bruce squeezed his eyes shut. “What do you mean? What are you talking about?”

He could almost feel Selina sigh against his ear. “Jack and his fiancee...I heard that you committed them both.”

Bruce sighed, seeming to deflate. “Yes. How did you...”

“Word travels fast Bruce...and it was on the local news. I wanted to call not just to tell you how sorry I am, but you warn you.” Selina sounded tired.

“What are you talking about? Warn me about what?” Bruce sat up straighter.

“Arkham. Just...it's not what it appears to be Bruce. I just want you to be careful, keep an eye on your family. Don't trust anyone,” Selina hissed.

Bruce closed his eyes anger creeping into his voice. “Not even you?”

“Especially not me.” Selina answered back and hung up.

Bruce sighed dropping the phone to the desk. He wasn't sure what to think. Arkham wasn't safe? He rubbed the bridge of his nose. It wouldn't hurt to look into the asylum...

Jack was wheeled in to see Dr. Crane, just like yesterday, in a straightjacket, and restrained to the chair. Today Crane had the curtains open on his office window, letting in the grey, watery light. The bank lamp on his desk was lit casting a warm amber glow; spilled along the desk were several scattered sheets of paper. The unorganized, scattered papers looked oddly out of place in the otherwise extremely neat room.

Crane was reading and writing vigorously in a notebook, when, after the knock, and his confirmation, Dale wheeled Jack inside.

Today Crane was wearing a pale blue-grey suit with very subtle white stripes, a light, almost gold dress shirt and matching tie. He smiled when Jack was wheeled in and left in front of his desk. Dale left the room, but almost as soon as he walked out another large man (who reminded Jack of a pro wrestler he had seen once on TV...Jack wracked his brain...the wrestler had been named Triple H), took up a position behind Jack. Jack frowned looking up at the new orderly, who was staring straight ahead like a soldier. Crane snapped his notebook closed and reached over for the cup of tea that sat steeping on his desk.
Jack gave Crane a quizzical look. “Not going to release me today doc and what's with the Triple H guard?”

Crane smiled. “Not today Mr. Wayne. Today we begin the first of our “tests” that you agreed to, along with your fiancee, Miss Quinn.”

Jack twitched. “You are seeing Harley too?”

Crane smiled. “Yes. She will be vital to our...sessions.” Crane took a sip of his tea before setting it down again and standing up. Jack wasn't scared, but he felt something, a strange pressure in his chest telling him that something wasn't right. Crane crouched down behind his desk. Jack heard the sound of a drawer opening and he could see Crane set a small case on the desk, then...a ball gag?

Jack narrowed his eyes. “What are those for?”

Jack indicated with a tilt of his head the items on the desk.

Crane smiled. “All part of what's to come.”

With that said, Crane made a motion with his head toward Triple H (as Jack was thinking about him now), and the next thing Jack knew, Triple H had grabbed his head and was holding him steady, Triple H's large beefy hands wrapped around his head, the man's thick fingers pressing into his skull. Jack started to struggle and snarl, his thrashing caused the wheelchair to squeak, rattle and creak.

“What is this?? What are you doing!??!” Jack yelled, but he was unable to break free of the orderly's grasp.

Crane picked up the gag. “Just relax Mr. Wayne, this is all part of your cure.”

Ignoring Crane's assurance, Jack continued to struggle. Crane stepped closer, but Triple H was strong, and with the rest of his body secured and tied down, Jack was helpless. Crane pressed the rubber ball hard against Jack's lips and teeth trying to force the gag into Jack's mouth. Jack refused to open, the ball gag forcing Jack's lips against his teeth cutting the back of his lips, until Triple H grabbed a hold of Jack's jaw with one hand, the other large meaty hand grabbed Jack's hair and pulled, forcing his head back. Jack struggled, but he could do little as Triple H forced his mouth open. Once Crane had the rubber ball in Jack's mouth, Triple H held Jack's head allowing Crane to secure the gag in place.

“There, that's not just so you won't do a great deal of yelling, but it will also prevent you from cracking any of your teeth Mr. Wayne since the effects of the drug can be...exciting.”

Crane stepped back from his patient, running his fingers through his hair, straightening his hair up after the brief struggle with Jack. Crane stepped over to his desk and picked up the case he had set there. Jack watched him, his blue eyes wild with rage as the doctor opened the case and held up a syringe to the light. Jack saw that the syringe was full of a softly glowing orange liquid.

Crane turned back around to face Jack, walking closer. “This will be the first of a series of our more “extreme” treatments, along with a few more traditional treatments which will be starting tomorrow; ice baths, electrical shock therapy, the tried and true treatments for the insane, but tonight Jack, tonight is when we begin the first of our more, radical sessions.” Crane gave Jack a smile. It was a simple, thin lipped smile, but there was something in his eyes that was cold, calculating and maybe just a sliver of crazy thrown into the mix Jack thought.

Crane continued, leaning against the back of his desk as he spoke.
“Now Jack, you say you have no fear, that nothing makes you scared. I find that very interesting. I am a professor of psychiatry, specializing in phobias. I taught for a while, but then realized to really study fear that a place like this...” Here Crane gestured around him. “Here was where I needed to be. Inducing terror has always intrigued me. Even as a boy, I liked to frighten people, animals, it was all the same to me...what I was interested in was what made them scared and how they reacted to that fear. I became obsessed with fear's crippling power. These experiments that you and your fiancee, Dr. Quinzel, will be helping me with are experiments on fear and its subsequent effects. And while you are both going to be helping me with my research, perhaps I will be helping you.” Crane smiled.

Jack stared at him, his blue eyes full of fury as Crane brought the needle up to his neck and injected the serum. Crane spoke while watching the orange fluid enter Jack's veins. “This is just the first, but I also have a stronger serum and I am working on a gas form. Perhaps, if we're lucky, we will be able to test the gas very soon, but for now, the injections will have to do.”

Jack returned to consciousness slowly and painfully. Whatever drug Crane had pumped into his system had left only lingering effects in his blood, though his body on the other hand ached like a son-of-a-bitch. Jack could feel it, something crawling through him, but other than that he didn't really feel too much from the drug. As he laid on his side, waiting and listening, he realized that he wasn't in his cell. He could feel the vastness of space around him, indicating he was in a bigger room. He was still dressed in his Arkham attire, but he was neither in a straight jacket nor was he handcuffed. Jack's eyes fluttered opened slowly. He felt a little woozy and his heart rate seemed elevated, probably the drug in his system. He was lying on his side on a dirty floor; he could feel the gritty texture of dirt and God only knew what else under his cheek. His olfactory sense was almost immediately assaulted by the scents of decay, dust, old water and the sickly sweet and grotesquely sour smell of death. The next thing that Jack became aware of was that there was little light. Jack shifted and started to push himself up to a sitting position when his fingers brushed up against something metal that rolled across the floor. Jack reached out for the item and grabbed it, realizing at that moment that what he had was a flashlight.

Jack sat up and turned the flashlight on, panning it around the room. He looked to be in the remains of a hallway, the walls a sickly grey and white with large chucks of paint peeling off the walls and exposing brick underneath. The light washed over a few items in the room, what looked like an old leaning wooden chair, and at the very far end of the hall he thought he saw an old piano. He ran the flashlight around to reveal windows, but they were all boarded up, the only reason any light at all came into the room was because of the small gaps where the boards didn't quite cover the windows.

As Jack examined where he was, he could hear the sounds of the building settling around him, the soft moans and creaks of the ancient building shifting and adjusting itself to the cooler night air outside. Jack frowned; how long had he been out? It had still been daylight when he was escorted to Dr. Crane's office. When Jack got to his feet he was sure he heard the sounds of whimpering. Jack went very still, listening. Yes, he heard it again...female and there was something familiar about the sound...

Jack's heart slammed against his chest...Harley...he was sure of it. It was Harley he was hearing.

In another section of the same building, Harley had pushed herself into a corner of the room. She was terrified. She had come awake to find herself surrounded by shadows, crawling, creeping, slithering shadows accompanied by hisses, moans and whispers. There were shadows all around her, moving and shifting, sometimes she was sure she saw eyes, glowing red or orange, emerging from the thick inky darkness to stare at her before they would sink back into the shadows.

Harley shivered. She was in her Arkham clothing, but she was barefoot. She felt exposed, terrified, a deep bone aching chill rattled through her body, never had she ever felt this scared. The last thing she remembered clearly was being in Dr. Crane's office for her first official session with him...but after that everything was blurry, all the images that came to her mind seemed to melt away, slipping through her fingers and disappearing. Even now, trying to focus, her mind couldn't seem to settle on anything but her fear, the terror she was feeling was the only thing that was real, and that was all consuming.

That was the moment she heard the footsteps.

Jack frowned using the light to guide him through the darkness of the place trying to follow the sounds he was hearing that he just knew were Harley. Every few steps he would have to stop as a wave of dizziness washed over him, which he was sure was being caused from the drugs in his system...he had no inkling of what Crane had injected him with, but he was positive it was not having the effect that Crane would have desired, whatever that effect was supposed to be...Jack felt mostly fine. He would find a way to use that to his advantage.

He had just passed through a doorway into another hall, this one lined with rooms, each with a heavy wooden door, all of which stood open. Jack had just run the flashlight over the doors when he heard the scream....

Jack jerked, his heart pounding in his chest, his blood racing with...fear...it was Harley.

First she smelled it, a scent of rotten, spoiled earth, mud and stagnant water. As the shadow moved closer the smell became stronger, other scents making themselves noticeable, the sickly sweet smell of rotten flesh and decaying meat, the putrid scent of waste mixed with the earthy smell of rotting vegetation. A massive figure loomed out of the darkness. To Harley's drugged mind, the creature that emerged from the darkness was something from a nightmare, a hulking creature that seemed to be a melding of so many horrible nightmares that she couldn't separate them. Oozing from the chest of the creature, Harley saw the faces of her step-father and Guy, melding and oozing with the rotten, bruise colored, maggot-infused flesh of the monster before her. Their eyes moved to stare at her, their mouths opening to reveal long needle-like fangs as they both silently screamed at her, while their thick long, rotten purple tongues whipped out, their very tips caressing her skin and sending a cold chill racing to the very pit of her stomach. As she watched in horror, many fanged mouths opened up across the body of the monster; they would appear, then ooze closed again, disappearing into the sections of the monster's body that had turned into pus-colored flesh, then pushing through the darkness of undulating skin. Then just when Harley thought the creature could not become any more hideous, parts of its black and yellow, oozing body opened up to reveal the porcelain white skulls of children. Each one opened its tiny skeleton mouth and wailed.

“Mommy!!!”

Harley covered her ears and screamed.

The man standing in front of Harley didn't seem to least bit put out by her scream. If anything the sound seemed to attract him; it made him happy, excited. He wanted to hear her scream more. When she stopped screaming, he frowned. He was at least six feet four and built like a wall of solid muscle. Over his head he wore a burlap sack with round holes cut out for his eyes and on top of that he wore a pink party hat. His clothes seemed stretched over his muscled mass, just barely covering the man and in his right hand he held a large a twelve inch long butcher's knife. He reached out one large meaty hand toward the now, non-screaming woman.

Harley's mouth was still open, but no sound was coming out. Her eyes widened in horror as the creature extended a putrid limb toward her. At first it looked like a hand, but soon the fingers split open, long sharp, disease infested claws ripped through the tips of its fingers, the flesh falling away, dropping in bloody chunks that made a wet “plopping” sounds as the gobs hit the floor. Harley started to scream again which made the big man smile. He reached over grabbing her by the arm to yank her to her feet. The woman stopped screaming again as she went limp. He lifted her up and threw her over his shoulder.

* Jack was running without really looking where he was going trying to follow the sounds of Harley's screams. She was scared...no not scared, she was terrified. He had never heard such a terrible sound as the way Harley was screaming. Jack felt his heart beating, slamming inside his chest. He had never felt anything like this before, the strange sense of loss, the feeling of control slipping. Jack snarled, fighting the sharp spike of the feeling, forcing the stress down. He could not help Harley if he wasn't himself, wasn't his best...Jack stopped, squeezing his eyes shut. “Fuck,” he snarled before he took off again, but the sounds of her screams had stopped.

Estimating where his Harley's screams of terror had emanated from, Jack arrived in a large room, and like everywhere else he had been, the windows were boarded closed. As he panned the flashlight around the room, he saw that the majority of the ceiling panels were gone, haven falling to the floor and chunks of insulation were exposed, some of the insulation hanging from the ceiling like the loose, loopy remains of intestines hung to dry, grey, dead and rotting. The rest of the ceiling was on the floor in clumps mixed with the remains of chairs and tables. Jack moved his flashlight slowly over the trash hoping to see something that would tell him that Harley had been here or where she had moved to...that she was alive at least, just something. He needed to know she was alive. The pit in his chest seemed to open and threatened to swallow him. Jack trembled, his lips twitching as if his face could not decide between a laugh and a growl.

* Crane watched the monitor, his legs crossed, and his fingers steepled in front of him. He slowly rolled his fingers, the pads of each hand touching the other going from front to back, then back again. He had several cleverly hidden cameras in the building for monitoring his experiments, which allowed him to make observations and take notes. He reached over with a contented smile to pick up his tea that he had left sitting beside the monitor, studying Jack Wayne as he began the desperate search for his fiancee. Crane was not interested in killing anyone as he watched his dependent variable pick up Dr. Quinzel and carry her off. No, this was all about creating the maximum fear, to push his patients to the brink of sanity...Crane wanted to not just obliterate fear, he wanted to control it! To use it as a weapon...and a doctor couldn't exactly continue his work if this was only about murder. Not that he didn't enjoy watching the occasional death, the victim dying not only from their injuries, but from the intensity of their fear. No, this was about study, learning and controlling. Crane took one more sip of his tea before he set it back down. Mr. Wayne was quite interesting. He had only shown a very mild reaction to the fear toxin and he actually seemed to be able to fight against it. Crane decided he needed a sample of Jack Wayne's blood.

Dr. Quinzel, on the other hand, had had an extreme reaction to the serum. That was quite interesting, quite delightful to watch and really, quite, quite beautiful. He could only imagine the horrors she was seeing based on her reactions. Her terror was quite intoxicating, almost sexual in its intensity. Dr.
Quinzel's fear was by far the most beautiful thing he had ever seen. He smiled and shivered with delight, watching her. He felt something for her he had never felt before...a kind of desire he had never felt before...it wasn't exactly that he wanted her physically, though watching her made him feel things...desires...for her...to possess...but it was her reactions, her terror...that was what drew him to her. She was perfect in her fear, a beautiful testament to what he was trying to accomplish. That was the moment when Crane decided, he didn't know how...but Dr. Quinzel was going to be his...her terror, her fear...she would be his darling, his lady...Crane smiled. His perfect terrified mistress.

Now, if he could just keep Birthday Boy on track and not lose Dr. Quinzel, Crane had so many more experiments to try on his happy couple and he wanted desperately to pursue this new feeling that Dr. Quinzel had awoken in him. Crane would let the test run as long as possible before stepping in; he would not like Birthday Boy destroying his beautiful Harleen.

Crane reached for his notebook and jotted down a few notes. He had never been happier than when he had come to work at Arkham. Arkham provided him the space, freedom and time to do his work. The estate was massive with not just the main house, but there were also several buildings that occupied the grounds of the Arkham estate, each of them having been converted to some use for the asylum, such as a separate intensive treatment building, a regular hospital building for surgery or patients who needed long term medical treatment. And that was not even counting the dormitory for doctors, nurses or other staff who pulled all-nighters on the grounds. There was also a “church” and several other buildings used for a variety of reasons, and that still left a handful of buildings unused, abandoned with no specific purpose...except for Crane and his experiments with the sixth floor patients. The abandoned buildings were usually boarded up, which gave Crane a fairly controllable environment with which to work and with the loyalty of staff members whom Crane paid extra for their work and silence, Crane now had the perfect conditions in which to work.

Crane had just written a few notes down, murmuring to himself when he looked up at the monitor to see that Birthday Boy had brought Dr. Quinzel to the heart of the building, the “lair of the monster” so to speak. Hopefully Birthday Boy would stay on track. Killing Dr. Quinzel would throw the series of experiments that Crane had planned into disarray and Crane's burgeoning feelings would not allow her death either. Crane frowned as he pressed his thin lips together.

* Harley didn't remember passing out, but the next thing that she was aware of was opening her eyes again and almost immediately wishing she could pass out once more. She shivered as a chill ran through her body. She had been stripped down to her bra and panties leaving her skin exposed to the chill of the room. Her near-nakedness made her feel vulnerable, as if the miasma of the place was seeping into her very pores and tainting her.

Harley could feel the cold metal under her back; she was on an examination table, her arms spread out and strapped down, her legs also spread and strapped down, icy metal around her ankles and wrists, the cold chill of the the metal table pushing up through her skin. Harley shifted her head trying to see how she was strapped down when she realized that there was another strap around her neck preventing her from raising her head more than a fraction. As her confused, drug addled brain struggled to understand what was happening, she realized that there was light in here, the warm flickering light of candles. She moved her head as best she could trying to see where she was being held. Harley could see from the light, there appeared to be several hundred candles, of a variety of shapes, set throughout the room. The room, had been painted white at one time, but water had damaged the walls, leaving large rust colored stains along the surface.

As Harley studied the walls, something underneath them seemed to roll, moving in a ripple as if something underneath the paint was shifting, climbing up to the ceiling. Harley's eyes widened in fear as whatever it was shifted to crawl to the ceiling causing the white paint to swell and split open, but whatever she thought was there was gone by the time the wall would split out, leaking pus and viscous clear fluid down the walls.

Her breathing became shallow, rapid pants, her eyes widening so much that the whites showed in a broad circle around her fear filled blue eyes. Panic, nesting like a viper in her chest ready to poison her, threatened to overwhelm her thoughts. Just as as the creature she saw under the paint made it to the ceiling, it vanished, the movement stopped and once more the room seemed solid, the open wounds on the wall were gone and everything seemed to return to “normal.” Harley took several deep breaths struggling to get her panic back under control. She squeezed her eyes shut, her bottom lip and chin trembling as she fought the tears.

Harley took several more deep breaths, but the tears rebelliously seeped out from her closed eyes. “Oh Jack. I wish you were here. I miss you so much,” Harley whispered to herself as her chest and throat burned. She opened her eyes again and that was when she saw something else move into the room from the corner of her vision. Her wild eyes followed the shadow as it separated itself from the dark corner. It approached her slowly, the oozing body continuing to morph, shift as the face of Guy emerged from the pus-yellow and tar-black body. The head of Guy grinned at her accompanied by the whispered voices of children that she couldn’t quite hear.

Harley screamed.

Jack jerked around, turning at the sound of another scream. Jack took off at a run following what he hoped was not an echo, but her actual scream, the light from the flashlight wobbled madly showing Jack hints of open doors, abandoned wheelchairs and other miscellaneous debris scattered in front of him. Jack could feel his panic starting to rise with the beating of his heart. (He thought to himself that adrenaline must help in triggering the serum that Crane had injected him with...or at least it helped with the activation of the drug. He would have to remember that.) Jack fought the panic, shoving it down, fighting the fear the serum tried to enhance.

Crane sipped his tea, his second cup, with a grin watching Jack run through the halls following the sound of Dr. Quinzel's screams.

“How interesting,” he murmured softly to himself. “He is managing to remain fairly calm, seems to have remained largely unaffected by the serum. Very, very interesting.” He glanced at the next monitor where Birthday Boy had Dr. Quinzel strapped down, stripped and vulnerable, which would only increase her fear. Crane was quite happy with her reaction to the serum, better than he expected. The next sessions with her would be quite enlightening too. Crane smiled. He had such plans for her, his perfect little lovely patient. His little doll to play with...

Crane narrowed his eyes watching Birthday Boy, a patient of the sixth floor that Arkham had long since forgotten about...(Birthday Boy or Roy Salinger which was his real name, murdered 15-year-old debutante Amanda Grant. Since then he had been murdering young girls of the same age, though he was not above murdering other young women when one of the appropriate age was not available. He liked to disembowel them with a butcher's knife.) Crane had moved him to his experiment area with the promise of kills when he wanted them and all the cake he could eat. It amazed Crane that the lunatic managed to stay as muscled as he did since his diet, since taking up residence in Crane's little experiment, consisted almost exclusively of cake, birthday cake.

Crane sipped his tea before licking his lips. Birthday Boy was not under the serums influence, but he had been given specific directions not to permanently harm Dr. Quinzel. Dr. Crane watched as Birthday Boy raised the knife over her. Crane narrowed his eyes. If Birthday Boy didn't follow procedure, he knew what the punishment would be...his reward would be most...unsavory. That was the moment the door slammed open. Crane grinned and whispered to himself, “Perfect timing.”

Birthday Boy held the knife up, the candlelight catching the blade and dancing along its shiny surface. In a voice that cracked from little use, since the huge monster of a man spoke rarely, Birthday Boy hissed, “Make a wish.”

Just as he brought the knife's edge down to her stomach, dragging the sharp blade in a slow careful movement along her stomach, he watched the line of red emerge from the shallow cut he made. He loved watching the way the blood oozed up through the slice, staining the pale skin Birthday Boy felt himself becoming excited. He enjoyed the blood, the cutting and the screams—most especially the screams.

Harley screamed, the claw that she saw burned through her skin turning it black. She could smell the sweet scent of cooking flesh. She looked down to see the blackness spreading over her. It wasn't the pain that had her screaming, but the monster hovering over her, the monster cutting into her with its lethal blood tipped claw, and the poison it was spreading through her veins that had Harley screaming.

That was the moment that Jack kicked the door open. He knew he had found her when he arrived at the door, because he could hear Harley’s cries on the other side. The door slammed open, ripped off its rusted hinges and toppled onto the dust and debris riddled floor with a loud crash sending up a cloud of dust. Birthday Boy stopped moving, his knife hovering over Harley's stomach, blood dripping from the blade's tip, stained with her blood. Harley was screaming and sobbing, struggling against her bonds. She hadn't even noticed that Jack was there.

Jack stood in the doorway, his eyes narrowed, the blue radiating with rage. He dropped the flashlight letting it roll away. Jack's lips curled into a smile, but it was a smile that radiated a deadly menace. His hands balled into fists as he hissed:

Chapter End Notes

This is not how an asylum is run. Arkham is a combination of the comics, TV series Gotham and the games Arkham Asylum and Arkham City.
Hide and Seek

Jack's voice broke through the horror that Harley was experiencing, flowed over her, caressed her, and her eyes widened in hope. Her voice came out slightly cracked as she whispered aloud. “Jack?”

She rolled her head to the side and at first she only saw swirling darkness, a mass of moving, roiling sickness that shifted and twitched in place; two red eyes looked back at her, staring at her...Harley stared back, those eyes were the source of Jack's voice. She could hear Jack's voice emanating from the murk. The creature moved toward her, the sound of pieces of it coming off and hitting the ground in wet slopping chunks. But the other monster, the one with the long claws that had cut her, stepped from the darkness putting itself between her and the monster that sounded like Jack.

Harley's heart sped up, her blood pumping hot and fast through her veins, the fear toxin rushed through her making every part of her feel weak while the darkness kept moving toward her. Harley started to shake, but she knew she heard Jack's voice coming from the new horror she was seeing. Trembling, she tried again, her voice barely a whisper. “Jack?”

“Get away from her you fucker!” the shadow monster roared.

Harley heard Jack's voice again. It was him, it had to be, she told herself.

She squeezed her eyes shut and focused only on the sound of Jack's voice. “Jack,” she said softly, her one anchor inside the nightmare.

Jack saw Harley staring at him, but by the strange look in her eyes it was clear she wasn't seeing him, not yet. He could only imagine what she did see...

Jack's whole body was trembling. The need to have her see him, to know he had come for her, hurt, twisting the knot of pain in his chest.

“Harley.” He said her name placing all his emotions, all his feeling for her in the way he said her name. “Harley it's me, it's Jack, it's your puddin. I'm here for you.”

*

Birthday Boy stared at the intruder. The big man didn't move. This was not how it happened. He was supposed to play with his toy, not have someone distrub his playtime!! He was supposed to get the prize, the scary doctor always promised him a prize and he always got it. This was his new toy for him to play with for hours, days if he was careful. The longest he ever kept a toy was three days before they stopped being fun. But this one was espeically pretty, he wanted to make this toy last, but now this intruder was here!! Birthday Boy snarled in quickly mounting anger. This was his play time!

Jack quickly glanced around the room searching for a weapon. On one wall Jack saw something that made his blood run cold; a wall that looked in the dull light to be plastered with the images of girls, photographs from someone's wallet, school pictures, images cut from magazines, newspapers, each one of a pretty girl, or lovely woman, and all of them marked with what looked to be dried blood smeared across the images. There had to be hundreds of them. Jack felt...scared, for only a moment, but swiftly fought the feeling down, his eyes returning to Harley.
Harley opened her eyes again. She followed the image of the monster shadows, watching the shadows roiling like thunder clouds and edging closer. She could almost feel the thing's icy breath when it said her name again. “Harley?”

YES! It was her puddin's voice. She knew it was him. Harley shivered and clenched her eyes closed for a breath, then opened them again; she had to force herself to see Jack. Harley focused herself, staring at the monster even as looking at its horrible blackness made her want to scream and lash out. Instead, she focused on peeling back its exterior, keeping the image of Jack firmly rooted in her thoughts. The shadows seemed to melt away from his features and then she saw him, her Jack. He seemed to emerge through the shadows, the wisps of darkness pulled away from him revealing her lover.

When Harley saw him, her voice came out pained and hoarse. “Jack!!”

Birthday Boy put himself between the intruder and his toy. He was not going to lose his new toy!

Jack's eyes darted to the other wall on the opposite end of the room from the wall of women. There Jack saw just what he was looking for...the wall was hung with hundreds of knives all displayed liked prized possessions of a serial killer. Jack's grin was wicked when he saw the blades. He didn't stop to think further. Instead he dashed to the wall. Each blade was held by sets of hooks and there were hundreds of blades, knives all of shapes and sizes, each one cleaned and displayed with care. He didn't have time to assess the blades, he only had enough time to dash for them. His long legs carried him the distance quickly; Jack barely stopped himself from slamming into the wall, wrapping his hand around one of the blades and yanked it off, turning on the ball of a foot, the blade held in front of him. Jack hissed again at Birthday Boy, keeping his eyes on the large man, his gaze seemed to prevent the man from moving.

Jack growled. “I said, get away from her you fucker!!”

Despite Jack's burst of movement, Birthday Boy didn't react at first. He was not used to his toys coming for him. He always found them and he certainly wasn't accustomed to them talking back to him like this one did...usually they screamed. He liked the screams. This toy was also all wrong because it was a boy. He always had girl toys! He wasn't used to his toys being boys. He hated boys, he only liked girl toys.

Birthday Boy had watched that new toy—the wrong toy—when it ran across the room to his blades, his pretty special blades and yanked one off his perfect wall of blades. By the time the situation finally formed in his mind, allowing him to focus on what was happening, the wrong toy's hand had wrapped around a 12" granton edge cimeter knife and yanked it from the wall.

When Jack ripped the knife way from the collection, Birthday Boy finally reacted. He roared. “MINE!! MY GIFTS!!”

He lumbered toward Jack with his butcher's knife raised. Jack dashed forward dropping to his knees and slid across the floor. The ravaged and splintered floor torn up the knees of Jack pants, ripping into his kneecaps and splitting the skin, but Jack never noticed as he used the blade like a wakizashi, holding the handle with both hands in order to put as much power as he could behind his strike. It was slightly awkward to hold the blade like he was, but Jack was willing to give up on ease for a heavy slash. He slid past Birthday Boy, the blade ripping along the larger man's side and hip. Birthday Boy roared at the burning pain of the sharp blade cutting through his flesh. He turned around and slashed at Jack; the large man's strike was heavy and powerful, but ultimately clumsy. Jack rolled to his feet and dodged to the right, then the left, as Birthday Boy slashed down once, then twice, trying to cut the smaller man down.

Across the room, Harley was struggling against her bindings. She could see the monster, its body was a roiling mess of hissing cries, the skulls of babies pushing through the thick viscous mass of its body to scream at her. Harley tried not to scream in terror this time, though her whole body was shaking with the effort. The fear toxin in her system pushed her to her limits, burning through her blood. But Jack seemed to shine in her vision; she could see him and she held on to that as the monstrous mass lunged at him.

*

Birthday Boy lurched forward, his blade slicing at Jack who sprang out of the way, arching his lean body and taking a few steps back, he then used his natural gracefulness to dance forward striking out with the blade like a cobra. Birthday Boy lumbered back, the tip of the blade catching, nicking him, but not puncturing very deeply. Jack smiled, but the grin lacked any humor—it was cold and vicious.

He chuckled. “You are proof that evolution CAN go in reverse.”

Birthday Boy stumbled out of the way, the blade cutting the air in front of him. As it snapped out, it seemed to sing, slicing the air. The large man growled, the sound like rocks tumbling together in a bucket. He tried again to slash at the smaller man, but Jack danced quickly out of the way. Jack lunged forward, the two men locked arms, their blade arms pressed together. The two men struggled, their bodies doing a strange deadly dance around the room before Jack brought his foot up and kicked Birthday Boy in the stomach as hard as he could, breaking their stalemate. Jack danced back while Birthday Boy lumbered backwards, his eyes narrowing behind the sack mask. The large man moved suddenly, sprightly for his size and caught Jack by surprise, the blade of his knife cutting deep across Jack's shoulder.

Jack let out a hiss of pain, blood immediately coating his shirt causing the fabric to stick to him.

Harley struggled, thrashing against the bonds that held her to the table, banging against the metal. Her eyes were wild as the monster was hurting Jack! It slashed at him with its claws. She could see her Jack jumping, twisting out of the way of the monster's heavy, clumsy swipes. He was fighting back, but the monster seemed to grow, shifting its shape, the face of Guy merging with the face of her stepfather becoming a monstrous bellowing creature all sharp fangs and orange glowing eyes. The tiny skulls emerged all over its body and howled into the darkness, filling her ears with endless screams. And then the screams began to mix with the voices of Harley's victims. Harley screamed back, not for fear for herself, but for Jack, her own voice joining the others that only she could hear.

“JACK!! RUN!!” She cried, sobbing. “Jack run...please Jack!”

She was shaking hard enough that her muscles ached. The chill seeped deep into her bones, the pain, and the fear sank deeper into her very marrow, the toxin twisting and burning through her causing a burning cold that settle deeper. The toxin reached into the corners of her mind struggling to pull at the darkness there. She felt as if she would never be warm again. The cold raced through her causing Harley to shiver uncontrollably, her teeth clattering together loudly, but she would not let the monster take her lover. She would not let it hurt her Jack. Harley started to work at her arms first. She arched her head and body to see how her arms were tied down. As she struggled to see her left wrist, she saw something dark pulsing, wrapping itself tighter around her wrist, cutting off the feeling in her arm. As she watched, whatever held her down, slithered, tightening its hold on her. She started to scream in horror feeling the icy, slimy ooze of the creature on her skin, but instead she shut her mouth tight, her teeth clashing together as she tried to keep the terror at bay and work to free herself despite the pulsing black mass cutting off the feeling to her wrist.

Crane rubbed his lips together. He leaned forward in his chair, his nose almost pressed to the monitor watching as his Harleen struggled against his toxin. He frowned, his beautiful doll was still terrified. Even through the monitor Crane could see the beautiful terror in her blue eyes, but apparently seeing Jack Wayne had given her a focus to fight his toxin. The psychiatrist narrowed his eyes in thought.

“Mm...interesting, very interesting.” He muttered to himself. He would have to work on something special, just for her, a version of his toxin more potent. He smiled. She would be his muse, pushing him to create, to reach further into the darkness...to find the ultimate fear...to bring the beauty of her terror to its full potential! He sat back again, reaching forward and tapped a key on his computer, switching the view to Jack and Birthday Boy. The two men where still fighting; Jack Wayne had a bad wound along his right shoulder, deep enough that he would need stitches. Too bad the young man appeared ambidextrous, switching the blade from his right hand to his left. Crane smiled in satisfaction. He could see the blood soaking into the man's shirt. He had to admit he was impressed with how fast and skillfully Jack Wayne moved. The man was dancer in a fight, as if he were born to this sort of duel, his life against another's. That along with his ability to fight the toxin...Crane was definitely impressed. Watching him, Crane had no doubt he was about to lose Birthday Boy, which would force him to change his experiments in the future...but it was an acceptable loss. With Jack Wayne and Harleen Quinzel he felt he had just taken a new step in his studies, a new direction. Crane smiled, definitely worth the loss.

Birthday Boy let out a deep chuckle at the sight of blood. He loved blood, the color, the taste...the way it felt between his fingers; which made Birthday Boy remember his prize. He glanced over his shoulder at the nearly naked woman, his smile turning into a leer at the thought of cutting her, of watching the blood ooze out and stain her pale skin...of smearing her blood on his fingers, face, rubbing it across his tongue. But his thoughts were quickly shifted when the man he was fighting sliced a blade across his wrist. Birthday Boy let out a squeak, the intense pain immediately bringing him back to this moment, and to this annoyance, this toy which wasn't acting like it should and who had come to ruin his fun. But before the large man could turn and attack, Jack twisted his body, using the whole of his torso to put as much power as he could behind his knee, connecting with Birthday Boy's ribs. The impact sent a shudder through Jack's leg, but the impact was hard enough that Birthday Boy grunted, stumbling back from Jack while grabbing his side.

Jack danced backwards before the large man could grab Jack's leg. The man glared at Jack, his eyes behind the sack mask full of rage. The giant masked man lunged forward moving swiftly for a person of his size. He slashed down with his blade, then sideways, before twisting around and slicing the blade down again, but this time at an angle, his movements quick and smooth. Jack responded in kind, twisting and dancing to avoid each slash, but as the big man over-extended himself, Jack attacked. He launched forward taking a slash at the big man with the blade he now held in his left hand. Jack's strike didn't hit like he hoped, but the tip caught the big man across the fingers, leaving a deep bloody cut that spanned the big man's knuckles and coated his fingers in blood.

Birthday Boy stumbled backward until his body slammed up against the exam table where he had Harley strapped down. The table slid across the floor and slammed into the wall. Harley cried out, her head thumping hard against the table. She sobbed in terror when the monster slammed against her table, the sudden explosion of movement sent the creature she saw on her wrist sliding down her arm. Her eyes widened in panic, but she did the only thing she could think of to fight against it—she closed her eyes. Birthday Boy pushed off from the table slicing at Jack with his blade, growling behind his mask in mounting rage. The big man's knife caught the very edge of Jack's arm, slicing along the shorter man's right forearm when he brought his arm up to block Birthday Boy's attack. It wasn't a deep cut, but it was enough to throw off Jack's next attack, blood coating his forearm, forcing him to take several backward steps while assessing the damage.

Birthday Boy was becoming enraged; this wasn't fun anymore! He wanted to play with his new toy and this person was preventing him from playing! The large man charged at Jack, thinking to use his size to end this confrontation quickly. Jack twisted his whole body around, bringing his right leg around and using the heel of his foot to slam into Birthday Boy's shoulder. The strike was powerful, but not enough to make the larger man drop his blade or break the bones in his meaty shoulder. Birthday Boy made a strange whining mewl that Jack wasn't sure was a sound of pain or something else entirely. The big man lunged, slashing his blade in front of him in an attempt to strike Jack, his attack messy. Clearly he was tired and wanted the fight to end. Birthday Boy swung his knife in sharp quick slashes, first vertically then horizontally, trying to cover the space in front of him hoping to hit the tiny man who had ruined his playtime. Birthday Boy wanted to slash his throat, watch him bleed, to feel the crack of the that man's bones in his hands, chew his organs and taste his blood.

Jack ducked and came up under Birthday Boy's slashes, ramming his blade with a powerful thrust of his left hand, sending the sharp metal all the way to the hilt into the big man's chest, catching him just under the collarbone, finding just the right spot for the blade to slip in easily. Jack hissed with annoyance; he had been aiming for the man's throat. Panting, Jack grinned however. “How many times do I have to flush before you go away?”

Harley was working to free at least one hand, with her eyes closed, she could feel the skin ripping away from her wrist and the side of her hand as she worked to slip it through the cuff. She could also feel the creature even if she couldn't see it writhing and squeezing, sucking on the blood. She shuddered, but she refused to let her nightmare—to let the fear—stop her until, just when she thought she couldn't stand the pain anymore, her hand popped free.

Birthday Boy backhanded Jack a second time.

Jack hit the floor and slid across it, the rough surface of the floor ripping through the shoulder of his shirt and into the skin. For a brief moment Jack wanted to laugh as the thought of splinters in his shoulder made him chuckle. He rolled onto his back with a hiss of pain between his clenched teeth just as Birthday Boy tried to finish his lunge. The large man had charged at Jack, his blade held over his head, his eyes wild with his own special brand of madness behind his sack mask. It was clear that he planned to ram to blade down into Jack while the slimmer man was down. Jack hobbled to his feet, ducked, and dodged the blade coming down, but not before Jack used all of his upper body strength, pivoting his hips in, and he punched upward, the knuckles of his left hand connecting with the big man's solar plexus with every ounce of strength he could put behind the strike.

Birthday Boy choked on a pained sob, the hit to the solar plexus knocking the air from his lungs, paralyzing him for a split second when he couldn't draw any air into his lungs, but he didn't drop. Jack backed away from the larger man with a hiss of annoyance. Birthday Boy on the other hand, missed planting the blade into Jack and stumbled past the smaller man.

Birthday Boy then turned in a surprisingly graceful move. The large man was hissing between his teeth, his beady eyes glaring from behind the mask, and sweat was soaking spots on the sack mask and the front of the big man's shirt. Jack was panting as well, blood and sweat mixed to run down his face and stain his shirt, his lips shiny with blood and sweat. Turning in surprise when Birthday Boy came back around, Jack's gaze shifted to his knife, stuck in the big man's torso. He was just calculating the risk of trying to get it back when both men heard a high pitched roar and the loud clatter of metal falling.

Jack's head turned toward the sound and he gasped when he saw Harley: bloody, nearly naked, beautiful Harley, leaping from behind, both her hands wrapped around the hilt of a curved blade.

"AAH!!" She landed on the larger man's back, her blade sliding into the back of his neck like a hot knife through butter. Birthday Boy stumbled forward two steps to drop to his knees. Jack danced out of the way just barely missing going down with them as Harley yanked the blade out with another savage scream.

Harley saw the black pulsating monster under her, the thing that had been trying to kill her puddin. She yanked her knife out, sweat running down her face, her eyes glazed by the toxin, and stabbed again with a shriek of rage. The large man rolled over trying to make a grab for her, but Harley jumped to her feet swiftly, avoiding his fumbling grasp while yanking her blade with her. She slashed out with the knife, cutting at Birthday Boy's reaching hands that she saw as whip like tentacles. She slashed with the blade, which was sharp enough that it cut cleanly through one of Birthday Boy's fingers. Harley leapt on the monster and stabbed again; the blade made a wet sound as she continued to stab him in the stomach, the chest, anywhere she could shove the blade. With her teeth bared, Harley stabbed over and over and over again, blood flying out to splatter her each time she stabbed Birthday Boy, the blade making a wet, squishy thunking sounding noise each time it entered his body. Birthday Boy tried to throw her off, but Harley was like a wild animal managing to move and sway out of reach, striking like a snake each time she could, the blade penetrating flesh with thick wet sounding thunks into the man's body. Birthday Boy only made some gurgling grunts of pain trying desperately to get away, but Harley's madness gave her strength and he was weakening rapidly; she did not allow the big man to move as she stabbed him over and over, her face becoming splattered with blood.

Jack looked on with admiration, his grin slowly growing watching Harley murder the large man. Finally, with a shaky gasp, she dropped the knife, which clattered against the floor, and stumbled back falling on her rear to stare at the dead body. Jack walked slowly toward her, carefully, sensing she needed him to be gentle.

"Harley?" He said her name softly.

She had been staring at the body, unmoving except for the panting breaths she was taking, when her blue eyes snapped up to Jack. Jack stood still and slowly opened his arms. Harley leapt to her feet and threw herself into his embrace. "JACK!!"
She hit him hard enough that every wound he had just received hurt, the impact of her body knocking the air from his lungs, but it didn't matter. He could feel her, in his arms, her body pressed against his, warm, and alive. Jack choked on a laugh filled with pain, but he finally had her in his embrace. His arms around her tightly, pressing her up against him, he did not care that everything seemed to hurt. He buried his face in her hair smelling her skin, the blood and sweat and her, his Harley. Harley buried her face against his chest and began to sob. “Oh Jack, Jack, Jack...” She rubbed her face against his chest smelling the blood, sweat, and her Jack...Jack...

“Jack.” She said his name softly. “Oh Jack...puddin.” Despite everything that had just happened, she smiled staring up at him.

Her fiance smiled down at her. “I'm so proud of you Harley—my harlequin.” Jack tugged her close and covered her mouth with his giving her a kiss that communicated every ounce of pain and love he had for her. Harley clung to him desperately returning his kiss just as passionately. She didn't care that he tasted of sweat and blood, he was here and she was here; she could hold him, feel him. Jack was trembling. He finally had her back in his arms, back with him and nothing was going to tear them apart again. They were both so involved with seeing each other that they didn't notice the two men that had quietly entered the room until the darts hit them both in the shoulders.

Jack turned with a snarled. “NO!!”

He moved swiftly, releasing Harley, crouching down and grabbing Harley's discarded knife in a move so smooth that the two guards didn't notice until he was coming at them.

One of the men, a short dark haired man with too wide eyes yelled. “SHOOT HIM AGAIN!!”

Jack roared in rage. “ARRRR!!”

Racing toward one of the guards, Jack snarled. The short man didn't get his gun up in time before Jack was on him, burying the blade to the hilt in his throat. The man's eyes widened in shock, thick blood bubbling from his lips and making a slow trail from the corner of his mouth. The other guard fumbled his gun in panic seeing his partner killed. Harley shrieked and raced toward the guard while he stumbled backwards trying to get the dart in the gun. He just managed to shove the dart in place and fired again aiming at Harley and hitting her instead of Jack with another dart right in the hollow of her throat. Harley stumbled a step, then another, her eyes widened in shock before she fell to her knees then to the side, unconscious.

Jack looked over his shoulder and screamed. “NO!”

He stumbled to his feet, racing to Harley. The guard loaded another dart and fired at Jack; the dart hit him in the back of the shoulder. Jack turned, his teeth bared. The remaining guard quickly and miraculously loaded another dart barely into the gun. The next shot hit Jack in the neck. He stumbled, hissing and yanking the dart out at the same time.

“I'm going to kill you!” Jack threatened, his blue eyes crazed.

The guard stumbled backward grabbing yet another dart, but his fingers slipped, almost dropping this one as well. Jack stopped at the body of the other guard, ripping the blade out of his throat with a sickening sound that had his partner almost passing out between the combination of fear and sickness. He managed to get the dart (his last) into the chamber and raised the gun. He shook, the barrel of the dart gun wobbling just as Jack started to run at him and shot. The dart flew and hit Jack in the stomach. This time Jack stumbled and fell, slamming his knees onto the floor. He glared at the man who shot him as his hand went numb causing him to drop the knife just before he fell over onto his side.

Crane yawned, watching the men come in and remove Jack and Harley, taking them to be cleaned up and placed in their cells as well as remove the body of Birthday Boy and the dead guard. Crane frowned slightly; he hated losing a guard. These were men he chose himself—no families, no attachments, they took their pay and kept their mouths shut. It wasn't that they were hard to replace, just annoying, and it was always inconvenient when something happened. It made the others twitchy for a while and out for revenge. The result was that they could become violent toward the patients. Not that violence was really an issue for Crane, but it did make his experiments more difficult. He sighed. Jack Wayne would be in the crosshairs of the guards for a little while after killing one of their own, but he trusted the young man to be able to defend himself...to survive. Crane smiled contently, the experiment had been interesting and entertaining, and additionally, he had discovered his muse. He clicked the monitors off on his computer and shut it down before standing up and stretching. He had much to do before the next experiment...

But first, he had promised Jack Wayne he would get to see Dr. Quinzel if they participated. As much as he now disliked the idea of letting the young man near his muse, he needed their continued cooperation for further study. They would be allowed to see each other...under supervision, of course. He frowned with distaste, but decided to focus on his planned adjustments to his toxin for now with his doll in mind. Crane smiled thinking of the terror on Harleen's face.

Harley came awake with a start, her whole body jerking, tense, her hands grasping at nothing. Her eyes opened in fright, for a moment seeing nothing but darkness and the creatures that lived in it. She sat up with a gasp, her chest hurting, her heart constricting. Her eyes started darted around the room, but just a quickly as the nightmares had come, they disappeared. Harley realized quickly that she was back in her cell, the three dull walls, the same single light, the clear wall and door...she looked down at herself. Her wounds had been cleaned and bandaged. She frowned staring at the bandages on her wrists and ankles the wounds reminding her of the horrors she had seen last night. The pulsating black mass, the faces and the echoing cries of dead children. Harley shuddered, cradling her arms against her stomach, a wave of nausea passing over her. She took a deep breath, closing her eyes and focused on the fact that the monster was gone. She had killed it herself.

Harley looked down at herself, belatedly realizing she was dressed in a fresh outfit, another black and white striped dress. She reached out and touched a lock of her hair that rested on her shoulder. Her hair still felt damp as if someone had washed it for her. She shuddered; the idea that someone had cleaned her and changed her clothing while she was unconscious made her feel exposed, violated. More so even than when the monster had stripped her and tied her to the table. At least then she had been able to fight, but this...this made her feel helpless and used.

Harley sat on her, cot pressing herself back against the wall. Her bottom lip started to tremble as she wrapped her arms tightly around herself and pulled her legs up to make herself as small as possible. The worst aspect of this whole thing, the part that made her even more sick than all the other things that had happened to her last night, was that she had been in Jack's arms, she had held him, felt him. She reached up and touched her lips. She could still feel the warmth of his kiss. She pressed her lips together trying not to cry, but the tears ran down her cheeks regardless of her efforts. Harley dropped to her side, keeping her knees up and her arms wrapped around herself. She needed Jack. Needed to be with him and she had had him for a brief moment...

She could hear Harleen's voice whispering to her. “Is he really worth all this?”

Harley snarled. Her eyes were closed, but she spoke in a whispered voice. “Shut up Harleen—if I want your opinion I'll ask for it.”

Harleen whispered. “There are people out there that can help you.”

Harley hissed. “I'm fine, just shut up.”

Harleen pleaded. “You know this isn't healthy Harley.”

Harley squeezed her eyes shut harder, pulling herself into a tighter ball. “Shut up Harleen!! If I need your help I'd ask for it! So stay in your box and zip it!”

She waited for Harleen to say something in response, but Harleen never replied.

Harley was lying curled on her side, unsure of how long she had laid there, unmoving, staring at nothing except her remembered kiss with Jack, when she heard her door open. She looked over through the thick tangle of her slowly drying hair to see Sandra standing there with a tray of food. Harley didn't feel like eating, but the smell of breakfast made her rebellious stomach growl. Harley could smell bacon, eggs, toast and she could see a plastic cup which probably held juice or milk. The friendly orderly smiled. “I heard that there might be someone special waiting for you in the common room today after breakfast.”

Harley slowly pushed her aching body into a sitting position. “What? Who?”

Sandra smiled. “A certain fiance.”

Harley's whole face lit up. “Jack? Do you mean it? Jack?” All thoughts of her nightmare from last night faded almost immediately, replaced by thoughts of her puddin.

Sandra smiled and nodded her head. “That's what I heard. So, if you feel like eating some breakfast we can head to the common room once you're done.”

Harley squeaked, her hands in fists as she kicked her legs. “Yes!!” She made a gimme gesture for the tray with her hands. “Food!! Give!!”

Sandra chuckled and walked over to set the tray down beside Harley. “Now don't rush, take your time and eat slowly, chew your food. We have about an hour before I can take you to the common room.”

Harley, who had started to shove eggs into her mouth until she looked like a chipmunk gathering nuts, stopped and frowned, bits of egg on her lips. She scrunched her brows at Sandra before she slowly chewed her eggs and swallowed.

“An hour?” she asked in a pained voice.

Sandra nodded. “It's okay honey, just eat your breakfast.”

Harley sighed, but then smiled again. The hope and fear mixed in her expression made Sandra's heart ache for her. Harley said softly with a hint of fear, as if she were waiting for her hope to be snatched from her. “But I get to see him right?”

“Correct.” Sandra smiled.

Harley ate more slowly, the orderly could tell it was with great effort that Harley was forcing herself to chew her food. Sandra stood by the door to wait. “Why don't you sit down? Want some toast?” Harley asked with a smile.

Sandra gave her a small smile in return. “Thank you, but I had breakfast and I'm not supposed to sit.”

Sandra shrugged. Harley made a face. “So if I promise not to?”

“Sorry, still can't.” Sandra smiled. “So, your fiance...”

Harley's face transformed, her smile lighting up her entire face, her blue eyes twinkling. “He is wonderful. Just...he is everything.”

“So how did you two meet?” Sandra crossed her arms, leaning against the wall.

“Would you believe I was his doctor? His brother hired me as his psychiatrist.” Harley took a bite of bacon.

“Yeah...” Harley said dreamily chewing on her bacon before she frowned. She looked forelornly at Sandra. “They took my engagement ring. Jack designed it for me himself.”

Sandra frowned just at the corners of her mouth. “I'm sure they put it in the safe. We have a safe in the basement where all of our patients' valuables are kept.”

Harley nodded, but she whispered savagely. “If anything happens to my ring someone is gonna pay.”

Harley perked up again then, though. “Do you think you could bring me a brush? I want to look my best when I see my puddin.”

Sandra shook her head. “No, I can't. You haven't earned the privilege yet.”

Harley made a face. “Well could you at least brush it for me? I look like a drowned rat.”

Sandra chuckled. “Sure, but believe me Miss Quinn, you are far too pretty to be a rat.”

“Really?” Harley grinned.

A few minutes later, her cell door standing open, Harley was sitting on the edge of her bed as Sandra stood behind her and combed her hair. She sighed contently and closed her eyes, but when she closed her eyes images of the monster from last night rose in her vision. Harley shook herself. She thought about asking Sandra about what happened last night though she wasn't exactly sure herself what had happened. The things she had seen couldn't have been real...but they had seemed so real. Before the nightmare had started, all Harley recalled was being wheeled in for her first session with
Dr. Crane, and after that...nightmares, but she was positive she had been in Jack's arms. Harley pressed her lips together and decided against bringing up last night...maybe it was mostly a bad dream anyway...

“You ever been in love Sandra?” Harley asked softly, her eyes closed while the larger woman brushed her hair.

“Yes, yes I have,” Sandra answered while she carefully worked out a tangle.

“What happened?” Harley started to turn around and stopped herself. Sandra sighed. “He doesn't know I'm in love with him.”

This time Harley did turn around with a gasp. “OH MY GOD!! Who is he? You're admiring him from afar? Does he work here? What's he like?!”

Sandra blushed, the large woman's face softening. “If I tell you, you have to swear to keep it a secret.”

Harley crossed her heart. “I cross my heart and hope to die, stick a needle in my eye!”

Sandra gave Harley a funny look, but before she could stop herself she took a deep breath and blurted out. “It's Dale.”

“OOOOOO! Dale!! Big and bald! Muscles.” Harley giggled. “Oh you two would make a perfect couple! Why don't you tell him?”

Sandra shrugged. “I mean we take all our breaks together. We can talk for hours...he usually requests me for his partner...”

Harley giggled. “Sounds to me like a man in love. A perfect love is not all about devotion and loyalty, it is also understanding little tiny things, that's from M.F. Moonzajer...and it's true! Love is the little things you do together, the secrets you share...the time gazing into each others eyes...”

Harley sighed like a love sick teenager.

“I don't know...I mean...he's never asked me out or anything.” Sandra gently ran the brush through Harley's hair; the blonde hair fell softly like liquid gold, the strands catching what little light was in the room.

Harley frowned in thought. “You know what you need to do? You need to change it up, do something new with your look to get his attention.”

Sandra pursed her lips. “I don't know...”

Harley turned around surprising Sandra by grabbing her hands causing the larger woman to almost drop the brush. “If it's true love you have to make him see you! See the gorgeous woman who loves him! I mean, he clearly already sees you, but you know...gotta sweeten the lure.”

Sandra blushed. “I don't know Miss Quinn...”

“Sandra, you have to seize love when you find it. Trust me.” Harley gave her a pleading look tightening her grip on her hands. Sandra searched her blue eyes then said softly.

Jack woke on his side, only staying still for a moment before he was on his feet in an instant. Pain shot through him when he leapt to his feet, but Jack didn't care. His gaze shot around frantically only to realize he was back in his cell, cleaned and stitched up. His left eye twitched and he sneered with a hiss under his breath. “Crane.” That was when he saw a guard approach his cell door, then another, and another until there were six guards standing on the other side of the clear wall glaring at him. The first one to show up, a dirty blonde with a bit of fuzz that he clearly thought of as a mustache and not the dead caterpillar that it resembled, glared at Jack and growled. “You killed Tim last night Wayne, you insane crazy sonofabitch.”

Jack narrowed his eyes and smiled wide. “I'm not insane, I'm voluntarily indifferent to conventional rationality. And besides, he deserved it.” (Jack wasn't clear if Tim was the big monster of a man he had fought and Harley had killed, or the guard he had killed...not that it mattered.) Jack smiled and put his fingers to his lips. “Oops.”

“Well, we're going to make you pay.” The man slid his ID card on the lock. Jack took a stance, but he knew in the small space and six to one, he didn't stand a chance, but he was going to make them work for the beating they were planning on giving him.

As soon as the door opened, the six guards pulled their clubs from on their belts and swarmed him. The first guard took a swing. Jack leaned back grabbing the man's arm, yanking him forward, then slammed his wrist across his knee, the impact forcing the guard to drop the baton, then while he had the man, Jack used his elbow on the back of the man's neck. That guard went down with a grunt. One of the other guards hit Jack across the forearm, but he spun around and hit that that guard in the face with his fist, breaking his nose with a sickening wet crunch before another man hit Jack in the shoulder, reopening the stitches. Jack hissed, his shirt instantly turning red as blood spread from the bandage to his clothing.

Despite the limited space, Jack managed a kick to the groin of that guard with a laugh. “You’re so inbred you might as well be a sandwich.”

Another of the guards brought his baton up and down to hit Jack in the same shoulder, sending pain radiating through his body. Jack hissed at the white hot burn and stumbled against the wall while yet another guard hit him in the face with his fist, bloodying Jack's lip.

Jack laughed, blood pouring over his lips. “Do you ever think how much happier I’d be if your mother swallowed?”

The next guard, this one a burly balding man with a nose red enough to show that he hit the bottle after hours, kicked out at Jack. “You motherfucker!”

The guard's clumsy attack put him within reach of Jack, who lashed out using the ball of his hand, hitting that particular guard under the chin, snapping his head back. One of the men yelled. “Kick his fucking ass!!”

Another voice added. “Beat that fucker for Tim!”

Two of the guards, both men who looked like they had seen one fight too many, pushed forward again shoving Jack back against the wall. Jack took several more hits to the body, one guy hissing as his buddies came in to grab Jack around the arms, torso and legs. “Not so funny now are you pretty boy! Are you?”

Jack grunted when he took a hit to the abdomen. Jack grinned with bloody teeth. “Looks like you suffered from fetal alcohol syndrome.” He giggled and the guard punched him again in the stomach, but this time two other guards grabbed Jack's arms and held him tightly, not allowing him to fight back. Jack grinned between punches. “Go fuck a landmine!”

He took a strike to the side, he didn't think his rib broke, but it groaned in protest. “You have the intelligence of a stillborn fetus!” Jack laughed loudly before coughing.

That was when everyone heard a bellowed roar that echoed through Jack’s cells

“GET THE FUCK OUT OF THERE RIGHT NOW!!”

Jack slipped down the wall to the floor, his hair falling across his brow. He spit blood from his split lip as the guards turned to stare at the person who dared to yell at them. Jack couldn't see who it was, all he could see were the backs of his assailants, but he was sure that the voice sounded familiar.

“I said get out of there now or you'll all have to deal with me and ain't none of you want that.” The voice’s threat was measured and slow, but there was a promise of deadly intent behind the words.

The guards, grumbling, filed out of the cell with someone pushing past them. Jack was left looking up from his position on the floor at Dale standing above holding what smelled to be a breakfast tray. The large orderly looked angry and disgusted. After the guards had left, Dale set Jack's tray down on the cot and hurried over to help Jack to his feet. He held his hand out and Jack took it, letting the big man lift him up.

Jack nodded. “Yeah, yeah...I'm fine.” He wiped the blood from his mouth with the back of his hand.

Dale frowned pulling out a handkerchief from his pocket, pushing Jack's hand away and wiped away the blood from Jack mouth. “Sorry about that Mr. Wayne.”

Jack grinned. “I suppose I don't blame them after killing...” Dale put his hand against Jack's mouth. “Shh...Mr. Wayne, you don't want to discuss it, believe me. Especially if you want to see your girl today.” Dale frowned and shot a look over his shoulder.

Jack's eyes lit up. “You mean Harley?”

Dale nodded. “Eat your breakfast and you have an hour in the common room with her.”

Jack frowned. “Only an hour?”

Dale nodded. “Sorry Mr. Wayne, that's all Dr. Crane authorized.”

Jack sneered, but then frowned. “You know all about Dr. Crane's experiments don't you?”

Dale nodded. “Yes, but believe me, things can get a lot worse if you start causing trouble Mr. Wayne—a lot worse. Now, you eat your breakfast and I'll be right back with a fresh shirt.” Dale pressed the handkerchief into his hand. Jack thought about pressing the matter, but let it go. He knew how these things worked. Crane had power and right now, Jack had none...but that was going to change. Until then he would play the game to be with Harley...even only a few moments were better than none. If he didn't have some time with her, then he really would go completely off his rocker.

Jack finished cleaning his mouth before he sat down beside his breakfast tray. His stomach made a roiling growling sound at the scent of food. Jack picked up his plate and started to eat when Dale returned with a clean shirt and a first aid kit.

“Take your shirt off please, Mr. Wayne.” Dale set the kit down on the cot and opened it up revealing an extensive first aid kit. Jack set his plate down gingerly reaching down to pull the shirt over his head. He winced with pain and dropped the shirt onto the floor. Dale came closer and carefully removed the blood soaked bandage. Jack sat still while Dale cleaned the wound, tsking and muttered. “Can't believe they reopened your stitches.” Dale turned and picked up a syringe and a bottle of liquid glancing at Jack. “This will numb it so I can redo the stitches.”

Dale having just filled the syringe stopped and looked down at Jack. “I don't think that's a good idea Mr. Wayne.”

Jack shook his head with a light smile. “I'll be fine, promise.”

Dale let out a breath and put the syringe down. “Fine,” he said with a slight shake of his head. He threaded the needle and set the work restitching the wound Jack sat quietly, his hands resting on his knees while Dale stitched the wound. “Dale, you got a girl?” Jack asked glancing sideways.

Dale was leaning close to Jack's shoulder carefully pulling the needle through the flesh. Dale glanced sideways his eyes meeting Jack's before returning his focus to pulling the needle through his patient's flesh. “Nope.”

“Ever been in love?” Jack asked continuing to watch Dale's expression. This close he could see the big man blush. Jack grinned. “So you have, a current love or an old love?" Dale pressed his lips together in a thin line, then said softly. “Sandra.”

“Ah she does!” Jack grinned patting his knees with excitement. “So what's her name?”

Dale said nothing, continuing his work slowly, piercing the skin and tugging the thread through. Jack groaned. “Come on man...what's it going to hurt?” Dale nodded. “Need to make a move Dale. If you love her don't let her get away. You know part of the reason I'm in here is because of love.” Jack smiled.

Dale finished with his stitches, carefully wiped the wound and applied a fresh bandage. “Oh?” Dale asked as he taped the bandage down.

“Yup, an old boyfriend of my girl's showed up at our engagement party. Real piece of work. Used to hurt her. I saw him and well...here I am.” Jack smiled. “Though I suppose it's not that easy. I apparently have issues with violence. Course my brother doesn't know the half of it.” Jack giggled taking the clean shirt that Dale handed him before the orderly set to work cleaning up the kit.

After Jack pulled the shirt on he ran his fingers through his hair. “So, Sandra—you should ask her out. Don't keep waiting Dale, seize the day!” Jack grinned his blue eyes dancing.

“That's easy for someone like you to say Mr. Wayne, you got a lot of offer a girl: money, looks...I'm an orderly in an insane asylum.”

Jack frowned, scooting back onto his cot until his back touched the wall and picked up a piece of bacon, taking a bite, careful of his split lip. “So? She works here too.”

Dale shrugged. “She deserves better.”

Jack chewed thoughtfully then spoke softly. “When Love speaks, the voice of all the gods...Makes heaven drowsy with the harmony.”

Dale frowned. “What's that?”

“Shakespeare my friend. All right, you need to ask this Sandra out.” Jack lifted his plate taking a large bite of eggs. He swallowed, grinning, “I am going to teach you a line of Shakespeare, you are going to quote it to this Sandra and give her a rose, got it?”

Dale blushed and shook his head. “I ain't doing any such thing, Mr. Wayne.”

“Why not?” Jack picked up his milk, gulping it down quickly.

“Because, she won't go out with me.” Dale leaned against the clear wall, the first aid kit in his hand and looked down at his shoes. Jack smiled. He knew he had him because Dale hadn't actually walked out yet.

“Come on Dale, do it for me.” Jack grinned.

“Why?” Dale looked up slowly.

“Because Dale my friend, I'm in love and I can't be with my girl, so I want to see someone else be with theirs...is that a good enough reason? Besides, Love is a familiar; love is a devil; there is no evil angel but love.”

“Mr. Wayne, you make no sense at all.” Dale shook his head with a smile.

Sandra led Harley to the common room. “Now, I don't think your Mr. Wayne is here yet, but he should be soon.”

Harley squealed. “Thank you Sandra.”

Sandra nodded, opened the door to the common area and scooted Harley inside. Today the room looked a little more grey. The Gotham sky was threatening rain which cast a gloom over the lighting inside the common room. There were only a handful of the patients in the chilly room right now: Babs, a bald guy Harley hadn't met yet, another short man with a crop of wild red hair who Harley sorta of remembered seeing, and Tabitha. Babs was sitting by Tabitha, the two women had their heads together talking, looking to be as thick as thieves today with Babs practically in Tabitha's lap. Harley smiled, musing that perhaps Babs was getting closer to her goal of having Tabitha as her girlfriend. Maybe love was in the air today Harley thought with a giggle.

Harley didn't quite know what to do with herself as she waited for Jack to arrive. Her body was nearly vibrating with energy and excitement at getting to see her lover and her heart was hammering so hard in her chest that it physically hurt. All her other wounds were minor compared to the pain of waiting. Harley started to pace the room, too hyper to simply sit and wait.

Harley had just made it across the length of the room when she heard the creak of the common room door opening. She turned to watch, going very still, her heart sped up pounding even more painfully against her chest.

She saw the door open, and then Jack walked in. Harley didn't move at first; she simply stared at him. Her bottom lip started to tremble and tears rolled down her cheeks, tears that she wasn't even aware that she was crying. Jack looked around the room, scanning the few occupants. His brown hair wasn't slicked back, but hung loose to fall around his face making him look younger. The makeup was missing and his skin looked pale, but...Harley swallowed...he was here. Jack stopped only a couple of inches from the doorway and stood looking around the room. He was frowning until his blue eyes her across the room. When his eyes alighted on Harley, his smile burst across his face like the sun coming out. Jack simply put his arms out when he saw her; that broke the spell that had prevented Harley from moving. She dashed across the room with a small gasp. “Puddin!”

She threw herself at Jack, (one of the guards started to move to intercept, but Dale, who had walked in behind Jack, hurried over and put a hand on the man's shoulder and shook his head stopping the guard from interfering.) Harley’s hands grasped his face, her mouth covering Jack's without a word. Jack wrapped his hands around her waist, lifting her up so that Harley wrapped her legs around his waist. Neither of them felt the pain of their wounds, too focused on one another. Jack held her close his arms tight around her as he pressed his lips to hers, his tongue sliding along hers, their tongues tangling together in a slow sensual kiss. Harley simply couldn't stop herself from kissing him. She wanted to ask if he was all right, did he remember what happened last night, how were they going to escape...but all those questions faded away with the need to continue kissing him.

Jack felt weak, he finally had her back in his arms again. The pain of knowing they only had an hour nearly killed him but he had her now and that was what he would focus on, Harley in his arms her tongue in his mouth, her body pressed against his....that was all that matter.

Dr. Arkham was at his desk writing on one of his reports, waiting for Dr. Crane. Crane had had his first session with Mr. Wayne and Dr. Quinzel. It was the routine that the attending doctor would give a quick report on the condition of the patients, a quick initial assessment with which Arkham would note and help in making recommendations for further treatments. Though Arkham usually simply let the attending doctor make all decisions regarding the treatment of their patients... Arkham was very much hands-off, trusting his staff to do what was necessary. Arkham didn't like to be too involved with the patients. They made him feel...unstable himself. He was only running this damn asylum because his father before him had, and his father before him—it was a family tradition. Arkham would have sold the place except it made good money off the state and people like Bruce Wayne who committed inconvenient family members, then turned around and made hefty donations to the asylum.

Arkham's train of thought was disrupted by the knock on his door. “Come in,” Arkham called.

Crane entered, dressed in one of the his many nice suits. Arkham wasn't sure how the man afforded those suits on his asylum salary, but that wasn't any of his business; he assumed it must come from the money he made off his publications.

“So, first session...have you made an assessment yet?” Arkham asked leaning back in his desk chair.
Crane, wearing a brown and beige, wide pinstriped jacket, bow tie, white dress shirt and black slacks stood for just a moment, unfastening the button of his jacket. His hair was slicked back and he had an air of accomplishment about him.

“I do have my initial assessment,” Crane offered as he sat in the chair across from Arkham and casually crossed his legs. Arkham noticed the fine leather shoes that Crane wore. The man must make a mint on publishing his work, Arkham thought to himself.

Crane continued in his mellow tone of voice. “Jack Wayne is interesting. I would say he has narcissistic, obsessive-compulsive personality disorder while his fiancee, Dr. Quinzel, is suffering from the same, though with a mix of hallucinations. I would surmise that they will be with us for a long while yet.”

Arkham groaned. “I thought as much. Oh well, that of course increases our chances of a hefty donation from Bruce Wayne.”

Crane smiled. “Indeed. Well I really should get back to my office. I do have appointments.” Crane stood and Arkham waved him off. “Of course, of course. Thank you Dr. Crane.”

Crane smiled.

Back at Wayne Manor, Bruce winced as he sat up in bed, the morning sun coming in cast a watery light through the grey clouds. A chilled rain was in the forecast. Bruce groaned since rain always made his nights out as Batman that much more difficult. The rain helped him in staying in the shadows, but it made the rooftops slippery and made seeing a little more difficult. He had had maybe two hours sleep last night after coming in late. He had been chasing down a couple of men who had mugged a young couple at an ATM. They had proven to be slippery, but he had finally caught up to them at five this morning. It wasn’t just those last muggers of the night, however. Bruce had run himself ragged, pushing himself far longer and harder than he had needed to last night. And he knew why—guilt. He ran his hands down his face as the image of Jack struggling against the orderlies, begging for his brother’s help came to mind. Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose, then pushed his fingers up the middle of his forehead. He just couldn’t know if he had done the right thing...Selina's phone call had thrown his confidence at his decision into turmoil. Bruce had just decided to get up for the day when he heard a knock at his bedroom door.

“Enter.” Bruce called wearily. How Alfred knew he was up, he would never know. The man had a sixth sense.

The door opened slowly and Alfred stepped in pushing a cart, the soft jangle of metal sending a familiar chime into the room and, judging by the smell, the tray contained breakfast. As always, Alfred and his sixth sense were at work.

“How are you Master Bruce?” Alfred asked. His tone was neutral, but Bruce could easily tell how upset the older man still was by the slight shadows around his eyes. Alfred had not been sleeping well. The butler's insomnia was not just over Jack and Harley, but he had been clearly upset when Bruce came in last night, so much later than usual, limping and holding his side. He was additionally upset because Bruce had told him about the vote yesterday; Jack was no longer on the board of Wayne Enterprises. Bruce had also informed the butler of the call he had received from Selina about the asylum. Alfred had been quite upset by the possibility that the asylum was not what it appeared to be. They had briefly 'argued,' if that was what it could be called, more a series of clipped back and forth responses about whether Bruce should take Jack and Harley out of the asylum. Bruce had refused to do so unless he was given a good reason—and evidence. Alfred had left the room looking pale, older and tired, his jaw set in a grim fashion that illustrated his displeasure.

“I’m fine Alfred,” Bruce said as he threw his legs over the side of the bed and ran his hands through his short black hair causing the thick locks to stick up making him look roughly like a porcupine. Alfred nodded while taking the lids off the dishes. This morning Alfred had made scrambled eggs, bacon and toast with a piping hot pot of coffee. Alfred had even brought up the newspaper, rolled and waiting on the side of the tray.

Alfred finished removing the lids off each plate and setting everything out and was about to leave the room when Bruce called out. “I thought about what Selina had said when she called me yesterday, and about our conversation...I'm going to hire someone to look into the asylum.”

Bruce could almost see the relief in Alfred’s shoulders. “Very good Master Bruce.” The older man didn't turn around, but he simply left the room. Bruce sighed, reached out to pick up the pot and pour himself some coffee. He hoped Selina was wrong. Bruce didn't think he could forgive himself if he had made another mistake with Jack.

Jack was sitting on the couch in the common room while Harley sat straddled on his lap, his arms snug around her holding her close, as tightly as he could without hurting her. His eyes stung and his body ached with the need to have her pressed up against him, to feel her, smell her, taste her. They had said very little to each other; instead they had spent their time holding and kissing each other. Harley traced her fingers over his face along his narrow jaw, over his shapely lips, but mindful of his wounds. Harley brushed her lips over his, the tip of her tongue caressing along his tongue. Harley dragged her teeth over his tongue and groaned softly. Jack ran his hands up her back resisting the urge to grind against her. He contented himself with dragging his hands along her rear, squeezing then sliding his hands up her back. The image of yanking her dress up and taking her was so strong that he groaned. Harley cupped his face between her hands, pressing down on his erection she could feel between her legs. Jack hissed opening his eyes to stare into her face. Harley smiled and Jack thought he would die gazing into her beautiful face.

Dale made sure the guards left them alone, letting them have their time together. The other patients stayed away from them giving them their space. Harley pressed her forehead against his, her fingers playing with the ends of his hair at the back of his neck. Jack kissed the tears that were slowly trailing down from the corner of her eyes, tasting the salt on his lips.

“Jack, we have to find a way out of here,” she whispered back urgently. “Last night was horrible, the things I saw...” She shuddered and Jack wrapped his arms tightly around her pressing her body against him. He didn't say anything; his anger at their situation was burning deep in his chest. He had made up his mind, some way, some how, he was going to kill Crane. Then he was going to hurt Bruce.

When their time was up, Dale walked over. “I'm sorry Mr. Wayne, Miss Quinn, but it's time to go back to your rooms. Well, except for you Miss Quinn—you have a session with Dr. Crane.”

Harley sat up straight, her eyes widening in fear. “What?”

Jack tightened his grip around her. “No.”
Dale frowned. “Mr. Wayne, please don't be difficult.”

“I'm not letting you take her!” Jack stood dropping Harley to her feet before shoving her behind him. He knew he was acting irrationally, but he couldn't help it. The thought of Harley going back to Crane after last night... Dale put his hands up. “Mr. Wayne, it is just for her therapy session, nothing bad is going to happen.”

“NO!!” Jack snarled. “You know what he did to us!! You all know what he does!!” Jack's eyes darted around the room. Their fellow patients all looked away, but the guards pulled out their tasers and started to circle Jack and Harley. Dale groaned. “Mr. Wayne please, you are only going to make this bad on you both if you fight.”

“I'm not going to let her see Crane again!!! I'm not!!” Jack hissed.

Dale frowned, but he said softly. “Mr. Wayne, this is going to go very badly.”

Jack glared back. “I don't care.”

Harley yelped and screamed as one of the guards came up behind her and grabbed her around the waist with large beefy hands. She started to fight, screaming, kicking and reaching back behind her to claw at the guard who had her. Jack started to rush for the guard, but Dale grabbed him from behind and pinned his arms lifting Jack off his feet.

“Please Mr. Wayne, stop!!”

The other patients were immediately rounded up as additional guards came rushing into the room. Harley started screaming at the top of her lungs, fighting for all she was worth. Dale was struggling as Jack threw his head back trying to hit Dale in the face. Two of the guards rushed up and tased Jack, then two more tased him again. Someone yelled for a tranquilizer. Jack saw Harley being hauled away and roared. “NO!!”

That was when a couple of doctors came rushing into the room. One of them came over with a syringe and Jack kicked at them almost throwing him and Dale backwards. Dale panted with the effort of holding onto Jack, pleaded. “Mr. Wayne if you continue this, you won't get to see her again!”

Jack growled as Dale tried one more time. “Mr. Wayne please, if you want to see Miss Quinn you need to stop now. Please.”

Then one doctor moved in close enough to inject Jack with a tranquilizer.

Half an hour later, Harley found herself in a straight jacket, again strapped to a wheelchair and sitting in front of Crane's desk. She had fought all the way here, even biting one of the nurses. Right now she was breathing heavily through her teeth and glaring at Crane.

There was soft music playing in his office this time while Crane poured tea. He had a full tea set on his desk, a beautiful set of white porcelain with hand painted red roses on it, while beside the tea he had a plate of what looked to be cookies. Oddly Harley thought, he had a vase of red roses on the corner of his desk as well.

Crane smiled at her. “I hope you like the music. This piece is call The Shadows Bride by Peter Gundry.” He picked up the tea pot and began pouring a cup of tea for her. “Sugar? Cream?”
Harley glared and ground out, “I can't exactly drink it like this.”

Crane smiled. “No worries my dear, I'll hold the cup for you.”

Harley frowned, then more softly replied. “Two sugar and some cream please.”

Crane nodded and fixed the tea as she asked before stepping around the desk, holding the cup and dish under it. He blew gently on the tea as he came over. “I believe it is the perfect temperature.” He leaned over and held the cup to her lips. Harley thought about ramming her head into the tea cup, spitting, biting...a hundred possibilities, but instead she sipped the tea.

“Would you like a Russian tea cake?” the doctor asked politely.

“I guess so,” Harley murmured, confused by what was going on. Crane turned picking up one of the tea cakes and gently held it to her mouth for her to take a bite, his bone thin hand balanced under her chin to catch any crumbs. She could feel his skin against hers; he felt cool and dry. After she took a bite he picked up a napkin that was folded on the desk and delicate dabbed the corners of her mouth. Harley watched him with confusion. He smiled as he leaned back against his desk. “There now, what do you think?”

Harley swallowed. “It's good.”

“Would you like me to release you from the jacket?” Crane asked again politely.

“Yes,” Harley said carefully.

“You have to promise me that you will behave yourself. We are only here to talk today. If you do not behave, I'm afraid I would have to punish your fiance.” Crane gave her a steady gaze. “Each time you misbehave, your punishment will be taken out on Jack Wayne. Are we clear Miss Quinn?”

Harley stared at him. She felt trapped, anything she did would be taken out on Jack and she couldn't have that...she could only imagine what horrors Dr. Crane might perform.

Harley swallowed and nodded. “Clear Dr. Crane.”

Crane smiled. “Jack is currently being punished for his behavior in the common room.” Crane set the tea cake down on its plate. “This will be the last time that happens, from now on, any time he misbehaves, his punishment will in turn be taken out on you. I hope this is something that I will not have to do Miss Quinn—I find myself taken with you and do not wish to cause you undue harm.”

Harley narrowed her eyes, her heart hammered hard inside her chest. She somehow doubted that after last night, but instead she responded. “What do you mean Jack's being punished?”

Crane sighed. “Let's just say he is having a bath and since he is not behaving himself, I'm afraid you will have to be punished to show him that I am deadly serious.”

Harley stared at him, her eyes widening slightly in fear. Crane smiled. “I do so enjoy that lovely look in your eyes.”

Jack was drugged, strapped up in a straight jacket, fighting as two large orderlies, one of them the man Jack had dubbed Triple H, the other looked a great deal like André the Giant struggled to keep a hold of the thrashing Jack. (Dale had been removed when he had tried to muscle Jack back to his room without putting him in a straight jacket, yelling for the guards to let him handle Jack). These two large men were flanked by four sour faced guards, each armed with tasers. The two orderlies carried Jack into a large, white tiled room. In the middle of the room were several long tubs affixed firmly to the floor and surrounded by gleaming tiles. Jack noted a strange looking standing frame in one corner as well and several hoses connected to the wall. One of the tubs was filled with water.

Jack swore, shouting. “YOU MOTHERFUCKERS!! I'M GOING TO KILL ALL OF YOU!! I'M GOING TO BURN THIS PLACE TO THE GROUND!!”

Jack was removed from the wheelchair and slammed up against one of the walls hard enough that the air was knocked out of his lungs. He gasped, but before he had time to recover one of the guards had picked up a hose and blast of water hit Jack forcing him back against the wall as the water came out in a high power spray. Jack dropped to the ground, slipping on the floor, but the spray continued, the water slamming him hard in the face and body making it difficult to catch a breath. The guard, looking on impassively, turned the hose off for a moment. Jack started to swarm to his feet ready to kill, but he was hit again with the water, knocking him off his feet. This time when the man stopped the spray of water, Jack was rushed again by the orderlies.

The orderlies dumped Jack into the tub with a loud, sloppy splash. The orderlies immediately shoved him down, holding him under the icy water. Jack struggled, breaking the surface once for a gasp of air, but two of the guards came over the hold him down. They kept him under the water until he stopped struggling, then, and only then did they release him. He gasped desperately for air when his head broke the water's surface. He struggled to push himself up for breath, slipping and sliding in the tub, splashing water everywhere, though the straightjacket making it near impossible to move. A moment later, the orderlies began dumping buckets of ice into the tub. It took four full buckets before Jack's teeth started to chatter, and another three before his lips turned blue, the icy water burned his skin leaving red, blistering welts on his legs and arms. He had stopped growling and shouting, covered in ice when one of the doctors he had seen in the common room stepped over near the tub. He was a short man with slumped shoulders and thinning weak colored brown hair. His square glasses sat at the end of his nose. He had a pad in his hand which he was looking at as he spoke.

*

“You're not going to do what you did last night?” Harley asked trying to keep her tone neutral, but failing. Crane gazed at her, a hint of his tongue at the edge of his mouth as if he were tasting her fear on the air between them before he answered with a soft chuckle. “No, not today. These things take time and planning, plus, you inspired me to work on my toxin again, to make a few changes. No, today we are just talking...well, and your punishment...”

Crane smiled sadly. “A dose of eletroc-shock therapy my dear. Don't worry, one treatment shouldn't cause any lasting damage...let's just hope your fiance behaves himself shall we?”

Harley's mouth twitched at the side. She knew all about electro-shock therapy, and how it was used as a tool for patients. The therapy could do wonders if administered correctly, but as a punishment...she felt her blood run cold. She had read a great deal of material on the subject while in school. (That was when she heard Harleen whisper.

“Maybe this will turn out to be good for us. A little electrical shock might fix what's wrong with you.”) Harley glanced down while Crane continued to speak, but in her mind she hissed. “Shut up Harleen. I'm not listening to you! Lalala...”

The truth was she was terrified. What if Harleen was right? What if this did something and...

Crane cleared his throat. “Miss Quinn?”

“When will I get to see Jack again?” Harley asked with a look up at Crane.

Crane smiled. “After the successful completion of session two, you will both be allowed time together.”

Harley blinked. “Session two?”

Crane smiled. “Well dear, you—out of everyone here—should understand the importance of testing. I am working on making some changes to the serum I have crafted and I will have to test its effects. You, my muse, have shown me that I need to push myself. That I have the ability to create real fear and your...boyfriend,” (he said it with a curl of his lip) “has also pushed me to find a formula that will work on him.”

Harley was nearly trembling with rage. She wanted to lash out, to say or do something to this arrogant, pitiful excuse for a psychiatrist, but his threat against Jack stopped her. Crane picked her tea up and held it to her lips again. She took the offered sip, glaring hatefully at Crane.

“Now my dear, let us get the nastiness over with and then later I will expect you for dinner.” Crane smiled and stepped over to his office door to open it. There were two orderlies standing there, large men that Harley hadn’t seen before. Crane indicated Harley with his head. “Take her to electro-therapy. Thank you.”

They stepped in without a word. Harley turned to Crane and screamed. “YOU’RE GOING TO PAY FOR THIS!!!”

Crane didn't bother to look up, he simply smiled while writing down notes in a journal. “Make sure you dress for tonight dear. I will be sending over a dress for you for dinner.”

Jack was doing his best not to shiver. He was soaking wet, freezing, bound in a straightjacket and strapped to a wheelchair. He was being wheeled down a hall, another pale white and blue hallway that looked like nearly every other hallway in this place, leaving a dripping trail of freezing water behind him. Jack snarled as his teeth chattered. “Where are you taking me?”

Neither the two orderlies nor the guards answered him, they simply kept walking without ever looking directly at him. Jack was rolled into a hospital room where there were several nurses, two more orderlies and Dr. Hurd, all moving around, preparing something. When they drifted out of his field of vision, parting like water, Jack saw Harley. She was wearing a hospital gown and she was struggling while the nurses robotically, methodically strapped her down to the bed. First her ankles, then her wrists before pulling long straps across her torso. She lifted her head struggling, pleading. “Don't do this! Please!! Don't do this! You don't have to do this!” Then her eyes met Jack's.

“JACK!!” she cried out and started to struggle all the more, shaking the metal frame of the bed. One of the nurses came over and put a hand on her forehead forcing her head down. Jack started to thrash against the bonds holding him to the wheelchair. “HARLEY!!”

The André the Giant of the orderlies lumbered over and grabbed Jack's head in both his hands and held his head still, forcing Jack to watch Harley. Jack snarled. “LET HER GO!!! LET HER GO!!
HARLEY!!!”

Dr. Hurd sighed. “Please gag him. Dr. Crane wants him in the room for this, but I refuse to listen to his shouting.”

The other large orderly also moved over to assist his counterpart, the two large men wrestled with Jack until they forced his mouth open, stuffing some cloth between his teeth. Once they had accomplished that, they tied another piece around Jack's head in order to keep the cloth in his mouth.
He continued to thrash about making noise, but now it was muffled, the metal clanking of the wheelchair replaced his shouts. While this was going on, Harley's mouth was forced open and a plastic mouth piece was shoved between her teeth. She started to spit it out, but one of the nurses held it in. “You are going to want to keep that in Dr. Quinzel or you're going to break your teeth or bite your tongue off. Usually the patient is under anesthesia for this, but Dr. Crane requested you receive treatment the old-fashioned way...” The nurse, a dark haired woman with a nasty smile and watery blue eyes, grinned at her. “Lucky you, you get treatment the way they should continue to get it for people like you. Without anesthesia.” The nurse chuckled with a hiss. “I love my job.” She patted Harley on the cheek before she picked up a cotton swap, rubbing Harley's temples with something gooey and cold.

Harley stared at her wide eyed. She knew this about electroshock...but to have someone say it to her made Harley's blood run cold. Her eyes rolled wildly when she saw the doctor bring over the head piece, thrashing her head about, but to no avail. Dr. Hurd placed the device against her temples. Two of the male nurses held Harley's shoulders down, while another two nurses held down her legs.
Harley started to struggle even more, just as Jack was doing the same. Hurd walked over to Jack, leaning on the arm of the wheelchair to look Jack in the eye.

He smiled. “Dr. Crane wanted me to inform you, for every time that you are difficult, every time you cause trouble, this is what will happen to Dr. Quinzel. He suggests that you continue with your treatment without further trouble such as what happened in the common room.” Hurd stood up and motioned with a hand. One of the nurses threw the switch.

Jack watched in horror. There was no sound, maybe a slight hum of an electrical charge, which was eerie, but Harley immediately started to convulse, her head arching back as her whole body jerked upward and she gritted out a small sound of pain. Her body thrashed, jerking and vibrating. Harley's seizure was painful to watch. The nurse behind her grabbed her head, one hand on her brow, the other under her chin to hold her mouth closed. Harley's whole body seized, arching against the restraints; the sound of her beating against the hospital bed made Jack sick.

A lone tear ran down Jack's cheek, but his blue eyes were filled with madness and rage.
Feral Hearts

The next day Harley still felt sore from her experience. She felt as if she had been beaten with a bat, but luckily she didn't seem to have suffered any lasting effects beyond that. Her memory seemed intact, but her jaw ached from clenching it. She tried moving it, but it hurt too much. She had cried herself to sleep the night before, not because of the pain she had endured, but from seeing Jack, shivering and wet, just out of her reach. She knew exactly what had been done to him, the torture they had put him through just to teach them both a lesson. Harley screwed her eyes shut and wished she could cut Crane's throat.

Harley sighed, wrapping her arms around herself and pulling her thin blanket up over her head. There had to be something they could do...something. She was contemplating this when Sandra showed up at her door, though without a breakfast tray. Harley only pulled the blanket off her head when Sandra knocked at the wall.

Harley glared. “Is Crane going to starve me now?”

Sandra smiled, though it was a weak smile. Clearly the woman was upset, but she was trying not to show it. “No, today you get to join the others for breakfast in the cafeteria.”

Harley blinked. “I do?”

“Yes, so put your shoes on and I'll escort you.” The orderly smiled gently at her. Harley slowly sat up. Not moving for hours had done her no favors, making every part of her stiff and sore but she sat up and slipped her shoes on, her growling stomach urging her forward.

Harley was led into a medium-sized room with white walls and white and black tiled floors much like a diner. There was a serving area along the far left wall, from where the smells of cooking food wafted over to her. Someone had attempted to decorate the place for Halloween with a few cheap paper decorations: pumpkins, black cats, ghosts and some scarecrows. When Harley saw the scarecrow something deep inside made her feel chilled...almost like a feeling of deja vu. She shivered and focused her attention elsewhere in the room. There were several large women plopping food onto trays as a handful of the inmates of the sixth floor stood in line to grab some breakfast. Harley could see Babs, Tabitha, Arnold (and a sock puppet on his left hand which Harley decided she needed to know more about) and Jervis.

Sandra escorted her into the room, stopping in the entrance. “Go ahead and get in line, the trays are right over there.” Sandra pointed to a counter where there were several food trays and a container of utensils.

Harley glanced at Sandra then with a soft sigh, she headed off to grab a tray.

There were five other orderlies in here, all male and as what seemed to be the norm, huge men, all at least six feet tall and built like walls, as well as a handful of nurses (male and female) who were off in a corner sipping coffee and talking, ignoring everyone else in the room. There were also two women and one man working behind the food line keeping the food hot. Harley walked past the orderlies on her way to pick up a tray. One, a tall man, muscled and with a gruff face, blue eyes and thick hair so black that Harley thought it looked painted on, who might have been attractive at one time, but that was long ago. Now he looked as if he drank too much and probably ate too many fried foods.
The man leered at her when she walked by.

The other orderlies with him laughed.

Harley ignored him, continuing to walk past, but he reached out and grabbed her arm. Harley jumped in surprise at the sudden pressure of fingers on her arm. She yanked herself out of his grasp. “Don't touch me!” she hissed, her blue eyes narrowed dangerously.

The other four men snickered. “Guess she don't want you to touch her Mel.”

“Hehe, even the crazy bitches have taste,” one man said and elbowed his friend.

The man named Mel glared at the other orderlies before he turned back to spit at her. “You better learn your place in here, little girl. Or you just don't want a real man? Maybe you need a lesson eh?”

Harley snarled. “Don't you ever touch me. No one touches me but Jack Wayne.” Then she gave the orderly the middle finger efore she walked off.

Mel watched her with narrowed eyes while his companions laughed. One of the other orderlies giggled and smacked Mel on the back. “Guess she told you.”

*

Harley shuddered letting that man's touch drop away and instead focused on getting her breakfast. When she stepped up to the table piled with trays, Harley noticed a container of utensils...all metal spoons, but no forks or knives. Harley narrowed her eyes, then quickly glanced over her shoulder. No one was paying attention to her, so she reached over and grabbed two spoons, one of which she laid on her tray, the other she deftly slipped down the front of her dress. She wasn't sure what good a spoon would do her, but it was all she had at the moment and it made her feel better knowing she had something she might be able to use for...whatever. Once she had her tray and spoon, she turned to head over and pick up her breakfast. Babs, standing in line behind Tabitha, saw Harley coming over and waved, jumping on her tip toes. “Hey Harley!!”

Harley smiled, though it hurt her jaw to do so. “Hi Babs.”

“Harley why don't you eat with me and Tabitha?” Babs asked when Harley was closer. Tabitha sneered at Harley, but Babs giggled. “Oh Tab don't be jealous! Harley has a guy here! Don'tcha Harley? Remember Tab, they were in the common room yesterday?”

Tabitha sighed. “Fine.” She shrugged. “You can eat with us.”

Harley smiled. “Thank you.”

Since there weren't many patients in the cafeteria, Harley received her breakfast fairly quickly, pancakes, bacon and some juice. She followed Babs and Tabitha over to a bench that was against the wall and behind the bench where Jervis sat with Arnold. Harley glanced at Arnold who seemed to be having a whispered conversation with his sock puppet while he ate his breakfast.

Babs grinned. “They call him the Ventriloquist. They took his puppet Scarface away from him so now he has his sock puppet Socky. Scarface was a mean old gangster from what I heard, but Socky is sweet.”

Harley frowned, glancing at the sock on the man's hand before she turned back around to face Babs and Tabitha. “You're talking like Socky is a real person.”

Babs frowned. “Well, in a lot of ways he is...has his own personality and his own separate voice.”

Tabitha snorted. “He's crazy, just like the rest of us.”

Harley frowned again, but she turned back to her food. She picked up the spoon, holding it up with a sour look. Babs chuckled. “They don't trust us with anything sharp.”

Harley snorted. “Figured as much.” She used the spoon as best she could to cut into her pancakes. Tabitha narrowed her eyes watching her then said in a low yet harsh voice. “So, I heard you got some juice yesterday.”

Harley's gaze snapped up, her blue eyes cold.

Babs gasped. “Tabitha!!”

Harley hissed at the other woman, “Shut up.”

Babs put her hand over Tabitha's mouth while the other woman was chuckling. “Forgive Tabitha, she isn't really a people person.”

Harley's eyes narrowed slightly as she turned her attention back to her breakfast. “Yes, I did.”

Babs gasped. “Really? Oh my god, I'm so sorry, Harley. You okay?”

“Yeah, I'm fine.” Harley didn't look up; instead she shoved a large bite of pancake into her mouth.

Babs asked quietly. “What happened?”

Harley chewed then took a sip of her juice before she answered. “Crane was punishing me and Jack for what happened in the common room yesterday.”

Babs asked softly. “Did he juice your guy too?”

“No—frozen bath,” Harley explained in a quiet voice.

Babs and Tabitha both winced. Babs reached across the table and laid a hand over one of Harley's. “I'm so sorry.”

Harley didn't say anything except to finish her breakfast.

Across the room, Mel was watching Harley intently. The smile on his face was cold, calculating. He usually liked to go for easy targets, the ones in solitary, or women who were too doped up to resist or the ones too stupid and retarded to know what was happening, but that one...that blonde bombshell...he was willing to change his MO to give that one a whirl. Mel smiled. Maybe he could talk Dr. Hurd into slipping him some of those tranqs they used on these nutjobs...didn't have to tell him what it was for...slip the fucker a hundred he would look the other way, everyone knew it. Mel licked his lips, his eyes intently locked onto Harley imagining her screaming and fighting him...

He liked it when they fought, too. But either way, he always won.

*

After breakfast their small group was escorted to a different room by the male orderlies. Harley, who was walking with Tabitha and Babs, didn't notice the way Mel was watching her. His hard blue eyes studied her intently. Harley caught him staring at her once when she just happened to glance over her shoulder. He made an obscene gesture at her with his tongue and Harley discreetly shot him the finger.

Harley turned away from Mel and instead focused on Babs who was telling a story about this man she had met called The Ogre. It was a long and complicated story, but rather interesting Harley thought.

The room they were led to was smaller than the common room or the room where they had just ate breakfast. It had the same lackluster white walls, but this room also had three round tables in it with plastic chairs around them. On each of the tables were finger paints and piles of paper laid out.

Babs giggled. “Oooh, arts and crafts day!!”

Tabitha muttered. “I fucking hate arts and crafts.”

Harley frowned. “What? What are we talking about?”

Babs smiled. “Once a week we get to do arts and crafts...it's supposedly some sort of therapy and it's mostly finger paints, but sometimes we get to make things like macaroni pictures...you know...summer camp type of stuff. It's stupid, but when you don't have much else to do in a day, it can be fun to pass the time!”

“Oh you mean an art therapy session.” Harley nodded.

Babs grinned with a nod of agreement. “I love art therapy!”

Tabitha muttered again, “I hate it.”

Babs giggled and wrapped her arm around Tabitha's. “Oh sweetie, you just aren't any good at it is all.”

Tabitha groused. “I don't like sticking my fingers in paint.”

Babs giggled with a little shake of her head. “You are such a whiner Tabitha!”

The three women took a table in the far corner and started to paint. One of the orderlies, a man who reminded Harley of an orc from the Lord of the Rings movies, just without the green skin, walked over to where Harley spied a CD player on a shelf in the corner positioned in such a way that only someone very tall could reach it. “You lunatics behave yourself and you get some music; any of you mouth off or cause trouble, no music and no paints. Got it?”

Everyone mumbled. “Got it.”

The orderly turned the music on. It was some sort of guitar music intended to relax the listeners. Harley made a face, which had Babs giggleing and Tabitha actually grinning.

“What is that?” Harley whispered.
“It's supposed to keep us calm.” Babs said while she opened a jar of yellow finger paint.

Harley rolled her eyes and made another face. “That will drive me insane.”

Tabitha grinned. “Tell me about it. Give me some electric guitar and a death metal vocalist any day.”

The three women chuckled. Harley reached for the purple paint glancing toward the door only to see Mel watching her. He winked at her and blew a kiss. Harley shuddered and scooted her chair around so that her back was to the man.

“You okay?” Babs asked.

Harley nodded, putting the foul orderly out of her mind. “Yeah...I'm fine.”

*

Jack sat on the floor of his cell and rubbed his face once, wishing he could shave. It had taken all night for him to get warm again after what they had done to him. Dale had treated his burns and had even brought him extra blankets, but Jack's thoughts were on Harley. Seeing her hurting like that...the rage in him felt like a wide gaping hole, tearing at him. He hadn't been able to protect her. Jack squeezed his hands into fists, shoving his knuckles against his eyelids. He hadn't protected her...

It was several hours later when Dale had brought him breakfast, which he had eaten mechanically.

That had been maybe an hour ago. He figured it was still morning, maybe about mid-morning. He leaned back against the wall and closed his eyes letting his mind wander to thoughts of Harley, focusing not on her in pain, but on their time together. He smiled remembering taking a bath with her; or the fun they had had killing all those people in that bar; her in his arms while they danced; the sound of her voice and her body moving against his. He was completely distracted until he heard the sound of someone opening his cell door.

Jack opened his eyes and frowned when he saw Dale at the door. Dale had the straightjacket and the wheelchair with him as well as another orderly that Jack hadn't seen before.

Jack frowned. He had his arms resting on his bent knees, his hands dangling, looking casual, but he had not moved from his spot on the floor. “What's up Dale?”

Dale held the jacket up. “You have a visitor.”

“What?” Jack frowned. “My brother?”

“No.” Dale shook the jacket giving Jack a meaningful look. Jack sighed and stood up to let Dale put him into the straightjacket. “Who then?” Jack asked glancing over his shoulder at Dale.

“I don't know...just know it isn't your brother.” Dale brought Jack's arms around and started working on securing the straps in the back, trying Jack's arms across his chest while he spoke.

“Just...I better warn you Mr. Wayne, behave yourself. I won't be with you and there are guards who will be in the visitor area. You do anything out of line, anything at all...the guards there are not above beating a patient to death.”

Dale shook his head. “It's only happened once since I've been working here at Arkham. A guy named Paul Dekker. Harmless enough, thought he was some sort of super villain because he could only see in really bright colors. It was because of some procedure to help him with his eyesight... anyway, he had a “fit” during a visit from his sister, but the guards got to him before the doctors or the orderlies... they were a little too enthusiastic with their discipline. So—just be careful.”

Jack nodded, introspective. “Gotcha.”

Jack sat in the wheelchair letting Dale strap him in before he was rolled out and heading to the visitors’ rooms.

The room looked much the same as it had the last time he was in here when he was brought in to see Bruce. There were four guards, all armed with pepper spray, batons and tasers. Jack frowned wondering if being a big guy with a tiny head was part of the job requirement because it certainly seemed to be a trend among most of the work staff at Arkham, big muscled bodies and little bitty heads. Jack grinned, there had to be a joke in there somewhere...

Dale pushed Jack's chair up the doorway then began unstrapping him from the wheelchair. In a moment, the orderly led Jack over to little window partition sitting him down and then stepped out. Jack looked over his shoulder as Dale disappeared from the room. The guards all glared at him. Jack grinned at each of them thinking to himself, I don't engage in mental combat with the unarmed... then he chuckled to himself.

That was when the door on the other side opened and Jack grinned in delight when Alex stepped through.

Alex grinned and waved. “Hey man! How the fuck are you?”

Alex was dressed like he was going to a club as the DJ in a dress shirt with a very loud pattern, a black and silver jacket and sporting a pair of aviator shades. Alex grabbed the chair pulling it out and flopped down.

Jack chuckled. “That your idea of dressing up?”

Alex smiled looking down at his clothes. “Yeah man, trying to look fucking respectable.”

Jack laughed. “You look like you're ready to hit the club or sell someone a great used car.”

Jack grinned at his friend. “You look cool. Thanks for dressing up to come see me. I appreciate the effort.”

Alex grinned at Jack, then his smile dropped. “How the fuck they treating you man?”

Jack glanced over his shoulder at the guards who were all glaring at him as one. “Well... could be better.” Jack shrugged as best he could in the jacket.

Alex frowned glancing from Jack to the guards behind him. When Jack looked again at Alex it was clear he understood what the problem was... Alex smiled and placed a finger on the side of his nose.

“You know man, I got some fucking... contacts. I'll see if I can get you some, fuck... I don't know... upgrades? Like better fucking food, more blankets... that sort of thing. Just might take a little time. You know how fucking slow change can be.” Alex grinned and winked.
Jack smiled back. Alex was a good friend, a really good friend. He knew exactly what Alex was saying, he had connections and he might be able to help Jack and Harley get out of here. It just might take him some time.

Alex leaned forward. “Hey, is it true Harley is in this fucking place too?”

Jack’s smile fell and he nodded. “Yeah..she is...”

Harley was only half trying to create anything with the finger paints. She had stuck one finger in the green paint, then the purple and had drawn a rough picture of Jack. It wasn't “good,” but she could look past the messy paint and see Jack's face. Babs had created a murder scene (she had done a really good job Harley noted; it was clear that Babs had come artistic skills.) Tabitha was trying to do anything but paint, by discussing angles from which she could use a whip in Bab's murder scene. She grinned at Babs giving her a kiss on the cheek before pointing down at the painting.

“See a whip could take them out here, then you duck and spin, snapping the whip out here.” Tabitha pointed at one of the “bodies” on Babs drawing. Babs grinned. “Oh wow Tabby, you are just so brilliant!”

Harley smiled shaking her head then sighed. She could give anything to be fingerprinting with Jack right now...

One floor down, Brigit Pike smiled while she pulled out her hidden cache of supplies that she had quietly been hoarding over the weeks. Brigit Pike was an arsonist. She was sentenced to Arkham after she had burned down a whole row of abandoned tentament buildings just because she had told the judge that the fire spoke to her. She had so far managed not to kill anyone with her little problem with fire, but it was only a matter of time, her doctor had said. He had declared Pike not just insane, but a danger to herself and others and so the Gotham court system had sentenced Brigit to ten months of evaluation and treatment at Arkham.

Brigit smiled happily at her little treasures. She had a couple of small branches that she had snagged from her visits to the greenhouse, some paper from art therapy and other bits of debris that she had gathered here and there. But no one knew that Brigit had been slowly gathering her little supply stash. She had had to do her hoarding secretly, of course, over the course of two months, a little bit here and little bit there until now she was sure she had enough to start a fire.

She sat with her back to her door, the contents of her hoarding between her legs and started to work, her hands rolling one stick against the flat notch she had worked tirelessly to carve into the surface of the other piece of wood until she had made a good enough indention for this part of her plan. Brigit grinned settling one piece of wood against the other and started to work her hands over the stick, spinning it swiftly watching for the beautiful first signs of smoke.

At the mention of Harley, Jack's whole looked changed, a cloud moving over Jack's vibrant blue eyes. Alex rubbed his one hand down his thigh nervously; he had never seen anything like it, the way that shadow moved over Jack's eyes. It was bad, he realized. Worse than that—it looked frightening. Alex was glad he was not going to be the focus of that look of hatred mixed with deep emotional pain that crossed over Jack's features.
It was clear Jack had been through some shit in the couple of days since the party incident, Alex thought. He could see it not just in the contusions on Jack's face, but there was something haunted in Jack's eyes...there had always been something slightly unstable about Jack Wayne, but now, seeing him like this, Alex was pretty sure that 'something' had only taken a turn for the worse.

Alex leaned forward his eyes darting to the gorilla size guards behind Jack. “I'll try and see...”

That was the moment the sound of a high pitch electronic beep started to go off accompanied by the strobe-like flashing of lights.

“What the fuck!” Alex stumbled up out of his chair, wondering what he had done.

The security guards wasted no time in grabbing Jack and literally slamming him back into the wheelchair. Jack was too shocked by the sudden movement and the blaring alarm to respond before he was being roughly held down and re-strapped into the chair.

Jack snarled. “WHAT'S GOING ON?!”

Someone came into the room on Alex's side and grabbed him. “Sir, you need to leave.”

Alex turned and shoved the person away with his one hand with enough force the guard stumbled back into the door. “Jack!” Alex turned but Jack was already being wheeled away.

In the art room the few patients here stood up, startled and knocking over their chairs. The orderlies all jumped at once, all of them yelling to be heard over the sound of the alarm. “What is that?” someone cried out.

One of the orderlies, one who looked older than the other four, yelled. “Fire alarm! Come on, we got to get the nutjobs downstairs! You and you,” (he pointed at two of them), “take Mad Hatter and Ventriloquist.” (He wasn't supposed to call them those names, but the senior orderly was in a hurry and didn't particularly care.) “Mel you take that blondie you keep staring at, I'll take Red there and her girlfriend. George, you're with me, Tabitha can be a handful if she gets riled up. Everybody got your tasers?” The orderlies all nodded together.

The group of orderlies nodded and went to grab their patients while the older man who had spoken was trying to make himself heard over the fire alarm. “EVERYONE, WE'RE HEADING DOWNSTAIRS, STAY WITH YOUR ORDERLY AND YOU WILL BE ESCORTED TO SAFETY. ANY OF YOU MISBEHAVE YOU WILL BE TASED AND CARRIED OUT. NOW LET'S MOVE!” Everyone looked slightly confused except for Tabitha who managed to somehow look bored as two orderlies led her out of the room with Babs right beside her.

Mel was grinning while he made his way over to Harley. He grabbed her by the upper arm yanking her up against him. “Come on cutie, fire alarm, gotta go hit the rendezvous spot outside.”

Harley started to protest, but the big man hauled her out of the room following the others.

Dale came rushing down the hall just as Jack was being wheeled out of the visitor's area, one of the guards carelessly slamming his wheelchair up against the wall in his hurry to push him down the hall. Dale snarled. “I'll take the patient!”

The guard that had pushed Jack hissed. “Good, the crazy is all yours.” He shoved Jack's wheelchair toward Dale who stopped Jack from toppling over with a disapproving look at the guard.

Jack snarled. “I'm going to fucking kill him.”

Dale hissed. “Don't say stuff like that out loud. Come on—we have to head outside.”

Jack looked up and behind him to see Dale as the big orderly pushed the wheelchair. “Will Harley be out there?”

Dale glanced down as he jogged down the hall. “Actually, yeah she should be...I'll try to put you near her if we see her all right Mr. Wayne?”

Jack's face brightened. “Thanks Dale, thank you.”

Dale frowned, but murmured. “No problem Mr. Wayne.”

Mel dragged Harley out into the hall, her feet skidding across the slick floor as she tried to fight, making herself a dead weight, but the beefy orderly didn't seem the least bit phased at all by her refusal to walk, yanking her arm painfully as he continued to move down the all. There were several other nurses, orderlies, a few of the other patients and doctors all making their way to the fire exits. None of them seemed the least bit concerned to see an orderly dragging one of the patients. And when Mel turned down a hall away from the fire exits, no one stopped him even when Harley screamed for help.

Harley screamed, trying to fight, hitting at Mel with her one free arm, kicking at his knees, his crotch, anything she could connect with, but Mel managed to hold her away from him and continued moving with determination. He was stronger than her, that much was clear. He stopped at one point looking around to make sure no one saw them before he shook her hard enough that Harley's teeth rattled in her head.

“Stop fighting me, you fucking cunt!” Mel hissed at her. “This can go one of two ways, you either pipe down and enjoy yourself or I make this one fucking painful experience for you.”

Harley snarled, trying to use her fingernails to rip into the skin of his hand.

“Let me go!! There's a fire!!” she hissed and kicked at him, but instead Mel kicked her. When his foot hit her thigh Harley gasped in pain; the man was wearing steel-toed boots and her leg went out from under her, but she didn't fall; Mel held her up by her arm.

Mel snorted. “There ain't been a real fire here in decades lady and I bet it was just one of the resident fire bugs managed to start a fire, nothing to worry about...but it will give us enough time to have a little fun.”

Harley's eyes widened and she screamed in fear and rage. “AAH!!”

She tried to pull free of Mel, realizing exactly how much danger she was in right now. Mel, who still had a death grip on her upper arm, yanked Harley close and backhanded her across the mouth splitting her lip. Harley gasped, the shock of the hit disorienting her enough that she didn't fight when Mel opened a door to a supply closet and stepped inside.

Outside on the side lawn, away from the other patients, the patients of the sixth floor were gathered in a tight knot surrounded by more than two dozen guards, a few orderlies and some doctors. Nearly all the patients were in straight jackets, with Zsasz, Jack, Robert Greenwood and Aaron Helzinger all strapped to wheelchairs as well. Jack was struggling trying to find Harley, but he didn't see her anywhere. He looked back at Dale in a panic.

“She isn't here?”

Dale looked around frowning then muttered. “Shit.” Dale motioned to one of the orderlies, a tall brute of a woman. “Sandra, can you watch Mr. Wayne...his fiancee isn't here.”

Sandra looked around only now realizing she hadn't seen the blonde. “What? Where is she?”

“I don't know, but I'm going back in. I don't think she would escape—not without Mr. Wayne—do you?” Dale asked quietly as he searched Sandra's face. Sandra shook her head. “No, never.”

Dale started to move when one of the guards grabbed him. “What the fuck Dale! You can't go in there until we get the all clear.”

Dale turned on the man. “Jesse, we've got a missing patient.”

“Someone trying to escape?” Jesse pulled out his taser, but Dale shook his head. “I don't think so, someone in trouble.”

Jesse frowned, then motioned. “Come on. I'll go with you.”

Jack watched helplessly as the two men ran back into the building.

Once inside the linen closet, Mel slammed the door and shoved Harley up against the wall hard enough to knock the breath out of her before wrapping a hand around her throat and squeezing.

“You better just shut up cunt, because this is happening whether you want it or not, you fucking tease!” Mel leered in close at her, close enough she could smell the stink of his breath, then he licked her cheek.

Harley gasped, then gagged, snarling and struggling, his hand tightening around her throat. He held her against the concrete back wall of the small linen closet, pressing her back against the cold stone as if trying to choke her into unconsciousness. Harley kicked and wiggled trying to break free. She brought her hands up and tore at his hand, her blunt nails scraping against his skin tearing bloody lines and surprising the large man with the viciousness of her attack. Mel hissed in pain, swinging her around.

Mel hauled her back and slammed her bodily to the floor. Harley gasped in pain, all the air bursting from her lungs, but the big man's attack wasn't enough to stop her. Harley thrashed, bringing her hand up and around, her fingers wrapping around in a tight fist like Jack had taught her, holding her knuckles tight, she hit Mel across the face hard enough that she opened a pressure wound along his cheek and lip, though her knuckles scraped along his teeth, ripping skin from her knuckles. At the same time she brought her knee up, slamming him between the legs. Harley rolled her whole upper body to the side bringing her right elbow up to smack Mel across the jaw. Mel gasped in pain rolling off of her and grabbing his jaw. Harley pushed herself back on her rear trying to put some distance between her and Mel, reaching to grab at one of the shelves and scrambled to haul herself up. Mel spit blood as he rose to his feet, surprising Harley when he hit her in the stomach causing her to stumble back and slam against the door.

Harley gasped in pain, but then Mel hit her again across the face. Harley's face jerked to the side, slipped and dropped to the floor, blood immediately flowing from her nose and over her lips. Mel reached for her, grabbed Harley by the top of her hair to force her head back while he lifted her to her feet before whipping her around to drop her onto her back again. She hit the floor hard, banging her head and slid across the floor. Mel dropped on top of her, grabbing her wrists and pinning them over her head while pressing the length of his body to hers, savagely trying to force her mouth open with his tongue in a hard, painful kiss. Harley screamed in rage against his mouth, bucking her body trying to get him off of her. Harley snarled, opening her mouth to gnash at him with her teeth, and succeeded in grabbing his bottom lip. Mel made a sound that was a cross between a whimper and a snarl.

When she felt her teeth sink into his lip, Harley yanked her head to the side, taking part of his bottom lip with her.

Mel screamed in agony, blood rushing down his chin from the missing hunk of his lip. Harley spit his lip back at him and rolled onto her stomach trying to get her legs under her and break his hold on her wrists. Mel released her, grabbing at this bloody face, sitting back on his haunches.

Panting with the exhaustion, Harley pushed up with her hands and knees, pushing herself toward the door, but her knees caught in the skirt of her dress, causing her to topple forward. When she hit the floor, Harley desperately reached between her breasts, and felt the metal spoon from where she had hidden it. She drew it out, holding it clutched tightly in her hand. She lurched to her feet in the next instant and lunged for the door.

Mel, holding one hand to the bloody ruin of his lip, reached for her with a bloody hand, grabbed her skirt, the sound of fabric ripping mixed with their struggling pants. His sudden yank on her dress pulled her off her feet again. Harley fell forward, her fingers scrabbling desperately against the door. She hit the floor again, knocking the breath from her lung in a rough whoosh of pain. Harley rolled over and kicked with all her might. Her first kick connected, her shoe meeting his face with the satisfying sound of breaking bone and teeth snapping shut.

Harley grinned. “FUCKER!” she snarled, kicking out again.

Mel's hand snapped out and grabbed her by her ankle before she could land her second kick. He hauled her toward him. Her body slid across the floor easily. Mel actually laughed as he grabbed at the front of her dress yanking her closer still, ripping the black and white material of her dress down the front.

“I'm going to fuck you up, you little cunt!” Mel snarled, his words slurring slightly against his torn lip.

But just when he was grinning, thinking he had her now, Harley brought up the spoon and with all her strength and a vicious smile that was all bloody teeth, she jammed the spoon into his left eye. There was a fraction of resistance as she shoved, then in the next instant, the flesh of the orb burst with a loud popping tear. Harley gasped, letting go of the spoon as blood and jelly leaked out of his eye, then with as much power as she could, she slammed the heel of her hand against the end of the spoon. The metal dug painfully into her palm, but she shoved the spoon another few inches into Mel's brain.

Mel's remaining eye widened in shocked surprise. Harley had buried the spoon at least four inches into his skull. He stared down at her with his one remaining eye before falling over onto his back, his hands grasping for the handle of the spoon as he made a strange strangling noise while blood bubbles from his mouth and nose to mix with the blood from his ripped bottom lip to ooze down his chin and across his cheeks.

Harley pushed herself shaking to her feet and sneered down at Mel. She spit on him. “Fuck you.”

That was when the door burst open. Harley turned, her blue eyes wide to see the orderly Dale and a guard. She turned, a smile on her face at seeing Dale, at seeing help, when the guard yelled. “GET DOWN!!”

Harley looked confused. Dale shouted. “JESSE STOP!!” But it was too late as Jesse tasered Harley in the chest. She jerked, her legs going out from under her as she lost control of her body.

Jack was pacing his cell. The fire had been small, one of the pyros down a level of so had found a way to start a fire...at least that was what Jack had overheard from some of the guards. Dale had never returned, so Jack had no word on Harley. He was muttering to himself as fear gripped him.

He laughed and muttered. “Crane would like to know how I'm feeling now wouldn't he? Heheh...”

“What are you afraid of Mr. Wayne?” Jack did a decent imitation of Crane's voice. “Tell me what scares you...” Jack stopped his pacing to wrap his arms around himself. “Losing Harley scares me. Nothing in this world scares me more than losing her.”

He had just started to make another circuit of his room when he saw Dale suddenly appear at his door. Dale looked upset. Jack rushed forward pressing his hands flat against the clear surface. “Where is she? Is she all right?”

Dale rubbed a hand over his bald head. “Yeah, I found her.”

Jack nearly sagged with relief, dropping his head between his arms to let out a breath he never realized he was holding. He took a few breaths before looking back at Dale. “Is she all right?”

Dale looked pale, upset. Jack pressed hard against the wall, leaning toward Dale. “Is she all right?” he repeated through clenched teeth.

Dale shook his head. “No. She killed an orderly, took a bit of a beating herself. She's in the infirmary right now.”

Jack frowned staring at Dale. Dale met his gaze. “They'll be here soon to take you to ECT.”

Dale looked upset. Jack looked down. “According to Miss Quinn, Mel, one of the orderlies tried to rape her and she killed him. Stole a spoon from the cafeteria earlier today...killed him with it.”

“What do you mean according? Harley wouldn't lie about that.” But as the information that Harley had killed someone with a spoon sunk in, Jack couldn't keep the grin off his face. That was his girl.

Dale shook his head. “It doesn't matter whether it's true or not. Mel was another one of Crane's guys, on the doctor's payroll. Crane is going to be pissed and you are going to pay for what she did.”

Jack frowned staring at Dale. Dale met his gaze. “They'll be here soon to take you to ECT.”
Jack narrowed his eyes at Dale then smiled. “Don’t worry. I can take it.”

Harley was sitting on the side of an examination table still in her torn uniform as a couple of nurses moved around her cleaning and bandaging her wounds. Neither woman said a word to her. Two guards were at the door and just beyond them Harley could see a concerned Sandra waiting not so patiently for them to finish, a wheelchair waiting for her.

Harley said not a word. She knew that she was in a deep trouble, just not sure exactly how deep. Once the nurses were finished with her Sandra was allowed into the room. She shared a look with Harley, but then the big woman was helping her into a straitjacket before setting her back in the wheelchair and strapping her down. Once she was secure Sandra was able to leave with her.

Harley glanced up. “Will I be able to get a new dress?”

Sandra nodded. “Yes, but first...” the big woman looked upset before she continued. “First we have to go to ECT.”

Harley’s eyes widened. “No! Why?”

Sandra shook her head. “It’s not you...it’s your fiance.”

Harley started to fight trying to pull herself free to no avail. “NO!! Why??”

“The man you killed...he was one of Crane’s,” Sandra said in a whisper without looking down at her. “I’m sorry.”

Harley’s response came out as a low pained whine. “No...oh no...”

*

Jack surprised Dale by not fighting. Dale was forced to take Jack to the ECT area before being relieved, the wheelchair taken over by “Triple H.” Dale crossed his big arms and watched helplessly while Jack was wheeled off. All of this was wrong, so wrong, he thought. But Dale had no idea what to do about any of it. The corruption wasn’t just with the sixth floor patients, though they suffered the worst...it was the whole damn asylum. But Dale was one man with no support and no money. He could easily be silenced. The only reason he stayed was to try and make the patients as comfortable as possible, to do what little he could to help them, but what was going on with Mr. Wayne and Miss Quinn was beyond what he could stomach. He needed to do something...but what?

*

Jack continued to remain quiet as he was wheeled into the ECT room, the only sound the occasional squeak of the wheelchair’s wheels. As with Harley, there were several nurses, a few guards and Dr. Hurd in the room preparing everything. Triple H stopped inside the doorway, a silent sentinel behind Jack. Jack watched them all with narrowed eyes. Dr. Hurd, who had been writing some notes down on the clipboard, turned at the sound of the door opening. “Ah there you are.” Hurd looked at Triple H who had just wheeled Jack into the room. “Oscar, could you unstrap Mr. Wayne and place him on the table for me—and please make sure he is strapped down.” Hurd glanced over to the left where yet another gorilla-sized orderly waited. “Help him.” Then he turned back to his clipboard.

Jack glanced up at Triple H. “Oscar, eh? You look more like Butch, Dumb Animal or Walnut Brain instead of Oscar.”
The big man remained quiet, not even sparing Jack a glance as he unfastened the straps that held Jack to the chair. Once freed from the chair, the big orderly shoved Jack by the shoulder out of the chair barely giving Jack time to stand before Oscar began removing the straightjacket. Once Jack was free, the other orderly stepped closer, both men grabbing Jack by his upper arms and nearly dragged Jack to the table even though Jack walked willingly. Jack laid down, glaring at the two orderlies as he allowed Oscar and the other man to strap down his wrists and ankles, three more straps across his torso.

One of the nurses glanced at Jack with a look that was a cross between fear and disgust, then the doctor. “Shall we begin Dr. Hurd?”

Hurd shook his head without looking up from the clipboard. “No, no Crane wants the woman here to watch. Give it a few minutes then we can begin.”

Jack jerked, turning to face Hurd and the nurse when they mentioned Harley. He didn't want her to see him like this...seeing her strapped down and shocked by that Dr. Hurd has almost been more than he could take...

A moment later, the door opened and Jack lifted his head to see Harley being wheeled in. Jack's heart leapt to see her. She looked battered, a purple bruise already quite visible on her cheek, growing past the bandage on her pale skin, another under her left eye. She had been cleaned up, but he could still see traces of dried blood around her nose, her lips, her bottom lip was slightly swollen, her golden hair a mess. But the worst part was that Jack caught sight of her torn dress, where it lay across her lap, her scraped and bloody knees visible. The rage that had been simmering in him since Dale had told him what had happened to Harley flared brighter. Even though her attacker was dead, the fact that his beautiful murder kitten had killed her attacker...that Harley had defended herself, made him so proud, but the fact remained, someone had tried to hurt her, tried to rape her...his girl...someone had tried to lay his filthy hands on her...and Jack had not been there to prevent it, which made him furious, mad with hatred, not just for the man who attacked her, but for everyone involved in leading Jack and Harley to be where they were right now.

Jack snarled struggling against his restraints for just a moment. Harley cried out when she saw Jack, jerking against her own restraints in a pointless attempt to get closer to him, only to immediately be yanked back against the wheelchair.

Harley gasped desperately, her eyes darting around the room looking for some sort of help, understanding, or sympathy. “Jack!! No no no no!! Please don't do this! Please!! I killed him!! I killed the orderly!! I should be punished!! No no no no no no!!!! Don't hurt him!!” Harley looked around trying to get any of them to listen.

Jack lifted his head his blue eyes catching hers. “No Harley! No...I can take it.” He smiled at her and her heart ached to see it. “Don't worry sweets.” Jack winked as her causing Harley to choke on a sob.

Hurd, with an inclination of his head, directed one of the nurses to walk over and rub some gel on Jack's temples. The nurse placed her palm on Jack's forehead, forcing his head back before she rubbed his temples with the gel. Hurd walked over to pick up the head piece from the machine. Harley started crying.

“Jack, I love you.”

Jack’s head was being forced down, but he smiled as he looked up at the white ceiling. “I love you too Harley. You're my heart and soul, my little pumpkin pie,” he said with a grin. “My girl. My harlequin.”
Harley swallowed and smiled softly with tears running down her cheeks.

Hurd rolled his eyes, grabbing the plastic mouth piece and rather brutally shoving it into Jack's mouth while at the same time hissing. “All very touching. Too bad all your pretty words won't save her, won't save either one of you. Nurse, throw the switch.”

The nurse hit the switch and the low humming sound filled the air, accompanied by the electric charge. Harley knew it probably was in her head, but the hairs on her arms inside the jacket stood on end just before the bolts hit Jack. Harley cried out, thrashing impotently in her chair. “JACK!!”

Jack's whole body arched for a split second completely off the table, his eyes screwed closed in pain. Harley watched in horror as his limbs stiffened, the horrible sound he made...a cross between a groan of pain and a muffled cry. Then the charge died as the nurse turned off the machine. Jack went into a seizure immediately. He jerked and thumped against the bed, but the nurses— with the help from the extra orderlies—all held Jack down.

Harley was sobbing. “Jack. Oh Jack.”

It took a good minute before his seizures stopped. Jack's head lolled to the side, his eyes never opening when he rolled his head from side to side disoriented. Dr. Hurd motioned to the nurse. “Again please.”

Harley screeched, yanking herself forward and nearly toppling the wheelchair. “NO, YOU CAN'T!!”

Hurd smiled at her. “Sorry, Dr. Crane's orders. Again nurse.”

“NO!!” Harley lurched, but the orderly behind her, Oscar, was now joined by another big, muscle bound orderly. Both men grabbed her shoulders, hauled her back to hold her in place against the chair.

Hurd ignored her. “Again nurse.”

The nurse turned on the machine turning to face the patient at the same time. The electrical sound filled the small space. Harley was sobbing uncontrollably while Hurd held the device to Jack's temples. He leaned over to smile at Jack and hissed. “Always hated people like you, Jack Wayne. Money, looks...everything handed to them on a silver platter. You have no idea who much fun this is for me.” Just as Hurd brought the device closer to Jack's temples. Jack reached up, surprising everyone since no one had been watching Jack's hands (it had taken only a little work since the men strapping him down had been careless) and grabbed Hurd around the neck with both hands. The nurses screamed in shock as Jack snarled.

Jack yanked Hurd forward and bit down hard into Dr. Hurd's neck. The doctor started to scream, the sound high enough pitched that the thought fluttered by in Jack's mind...bet he could break glass...Jack tore into Hurd's throat, the hot coppery taste of blood coated his tongue and lips when he tore through the artery, but he held Hurd there, savaging his throat further—he wanted to make sure the poor excuse for a doctor was dead.

The room erupted into chaos. The guards rushed to help the doctor, the nurses fled screaming, pushing past the guards and orderly, one nearly knocking Harley and her wheelchair over. Harley had started laughing. One of the guards, the man Harley barely recognized as the one named Jesse yelled. “Get her out of here!”
Oscar immediately yanked Harley's wheelchair out of the room while she laughed and yelled. “I love you Jack!!”

The guards managed to get Hurd away from Jack, but was it obvious that it was too late. The doctor fell to the floor making horrible gurgling sounds, blood bubbling from his lips, dark blood rapidly spreading across the floor as it poured from his traumatized neck.

Jack’s face, particularly his mouth and chin, were covered in blood. He spat out the hunk of flesh he had taken from Hurd, laughing.

When Jack came conscious again, he was surprised to find that he was free of the straightjacket, but he immediately realized he also wasn’t in his room. He was in a room with padded walls, a box, no window, no clear wall, only a tiny hole in the door with a little door that opened from the outside and the only light coming from far above, a pale watery grey light...and nothing else. He could still taste Hurd's blood on his tongue and feel the dry blood on his mouth and chin. He chuckled scrubbing his hands over his lips and chin breaking away as many flakes of dried blood as he could.

One less doctor in Arkham...for a while at least, he thought to himself.

Jack scooted himself over to a corner of the padded room and leaned against the wall closing his eyes. Now he could only hope Crane didn't hurt Harley for what he had done...

Harley was in her cell. She had been brought back here nearly four hours ago, a new asylum dress lay waiting across her cot when she arrived. Harley had quickly changed and now she waited. She had been given no information on Jack's condition, nothing to tell her where he was, how he was—it was enough to drive her insane. She hadn't even seen a nurse, orderly or doctor in the whole four hours since she had returned to her cell. She also hadn't been fed, simply dumped in her room and left like an unwanted dog.

Harley closed her eyes and thought about Jack, her arms wrapped around herself as if she were still wearing her straightjacket while she paced. “He has to be all right,” she whispered. “I would know otherwise...”

She took a couple of calming breaths when someone called her name. “Miss Quinn?”

Harley opened her eyes, turning toward the clear wall of her cell to see Sandra standing there. Sandra looked down the hall, her eyes darting both ways, then turned her attention back to Harley. “Promise me you'll behave yourself.”

Harley frowned. “Why?”

“Just...please, promise me,” Sandra pleaded with her.

Harley's brows knitted together, but she nodded. “Yes, yes I'll behave myself.”

Sandra nodded affirmation and used her card to open Harley's door motioning her to follow. “Come on.”
Harley quickly stepped out. Sandra put a hand on her shoulder and began walking briskly, quickly pushing Harley down the hall. Harley was full of questions, where are we going? Why so secret? What's going on? How is Jack? But she kept herself mouth shut. She could feel the tension in Sandra's grip as the large woman guided her down a hall Harley didn't recognize, then through a set of rooms to another hall. This hall was dimly lit, shadows were everywhere and there were only three heavy doors in this hallway. But what startled Harley was when she saw Dale at the end of the plain nondescript hall, standing by one of the doors with a cart. She could smell the food coming from the cart as soon as they hit the hall and her stomach answered with a loud growl.

When Dale saw them, he smiled nervously. “Anyone see you?”

Sandra shook her head. “No, and I shut the cameras off. No one will notice. Hank is on monitor duty and he is already asleep.”

Dale nodded. “Good, good.” He pulled out his card from around his neck, sliding it over the front of the electric lock on the side of the door. He then pressed his thumb to the pad. Sandra frowned watching him. “Won't Crane know?”

Dale smiled. “Hey, he didn't order Mr. Wayne not to eat. I was just bringing him some food.”

Sandra grinned at Dale, her eyes taking on that doe-eyed expression of being in love. Harley noticed, but she was too confused to pursue that thought further.

“What is happening?” she asked instead, her voice barely a whisper.

Dale smiled. “A little private time, that's what. I can buy you both a couple of hours...maybe until midnight, but then you'll have to be returned to your cell, all right Miss Quinn?”

“Private time?” Harley's voice shook with hope, but Dale nodded pulling open the door and gently prodding her inside before setting the trays down just in the entrance and shoving the door closed plunging her almost into total darkness without giving Harley a chance to say another word.

*

Dale sighed. It felt good to do something...right for once. He glanced at Sandra and smiled. “Have you had your second fifteen minute break yet?” He surprised himself with his own boldness, chalking it up to doing a good and dangerous deed for Mr. Wayne. He had to admit he was jealous of Bruce Wayne's younger brother. Not because of the looks or the money...but the love. Dale had never seen two people so much in love, but add on their recent torture...Dale thought the least he could do would be to give him some precious time together with his fiancee.

Sandra blushed. “I haven't, but shouldn't one of us stand guard?”

Dale shook his head. “Nah, no one comes down to solitary. They're safe enough.”

Sandra smiled. “Then I would love a coffee.”

Harley stood in the barely lit room, the smell of food making her stomach growl even louder. She couldn't really see much, the little light only illuminated a small circle in the middle. She could see that the room was padded and even the floor was lined in soft material. She was thinking about turning around and demanding to be let out when she heard a voice that made her heart leap in her chest.
“Harley?”

Harley’s eyes widened as she immediately searched the shadows. “Jack!”

That was the moment a shadow emerged from the darkness and Harley saw Jack standing at the edge of the tiny pool of light. He looked pale, his hair flopping across his forehead and there were flakes of dried blood on his face and uniform, but...

“JACK!!” Harley threw herself into his arms.

Jack stumbled back from the impact of Harley’s body hitting him, taking several steps backwards until he was against the padded wall wrapping his arms around her, covering her mouth with his own. Harley didn’t give him a moment to breathe, to catch his breath, her tongue was in his mouth, her body warm against his while her fingers grabbed his hair, holding his head to hers while she attacked his mouth. She made little whimpers of desperation, her body pressing hard against him. Jack didn’t hesitate, he growled in response and immediately grabbed the skirt of her dress yanking it upward. Harley stepped back from him only long enough to pull the dress over her head and toss it away from her. Jack grabbed for her, driving her to the floor, his mouth hungrily moving along her skin, his hands caressing her sides feeling her soft satin skin under his hands.

Jack groaned. “Harley Harley Harley...you're here...you're here!”

Jack said her name like prayer on his lips, his mouth caressing down from her lips to her neck, his teeth and tongue tasting her skin. Jack growled again. “Harley.” He shifted lower, biting at her collar, his hands sliding up her torso. He grabbed her bra, dragging it off her breasts, his mouth immediately attacking the soft sensitive skin, his tongue finding the hard tender nipple of her breast, sucking the sensitive nub into his mouth. Harley moaned, arching her chest to his mouth, wanting him to touch every inch of her.

She did a little shifting, pulling the bra down her arms, desperate to get out of under garments, to feel him all over her body. Jack sat up, his fingers moving swiftly over the buttons of his uniform while Harley fumbled with her bra. Once she finally had the garment loose, she yanked it away tossing the bra into the room and immediately reached for Jack’s pants. Jack stood up moving as quickly as he could to get the pants and his boxers off while Harley let go of his pants to lift her hips, shoving her panties down her legs and kicking them off.

Jack dropped to his knees between her legs, panting heavily as he gazed down at her. Harley was panting as well staring up at him, both of them looking at the other as if they could not believe they were real. Jack gazed at her with so much love it hurt to look at him, but she couldn’t stop.

Jack flicked her nipple with his tongue, then turned his attention to her left breast, his lips warm and soft, his tongue drawing wet circles over her hard nipples before he slid lower, pressing tender kisses down her torso, his hands sliding and caressing along the soft slopes of her body. He licked, tracing her stomach with his tongue, gliding lower, biting her groin gently with a hiss, rubbing the tip of his nose against her skin, then with his forehead and cheek, marveling at having her in his arms. Her groin throbbed with the need to feel him inside her, touching her...

Jack kissed the inside of each of her thighs before lying flat on his stomach and raising her legs over his shoulders. Jack wanted to be surrounded by her, to feel her, smell her, taste her. He laid his head against the inside of her right thigh, bringing her long left leg up over his shoulder as well and wrapping his arms around each thigh, pressing a kiss to her intimate lips. Harley moaned softly, tossing her arms over her head and arching her back. Jack smiled, the heady scent of making him dizzy with need, with want, he used the tip of his tongue to separate the soft lips, to run the very tip of his tongue over her clitoris in long sensual flicks.

Harley arched with a breathy groan at the warm wet feel of his tongue against her, her voice hitched. “Oh Jack...”

Jack delved deeper, his tongue plunging into her, the warm silk of her sex against his lips, his jaw moving in wide sensual licks and kisses, covering every inch of her. He pressed his lips hard to her clitoris sucking deeply while one hand roamed up her body, caressing the satiny skin before cupping her breast. He squeezed her breast before rolling her hard nipple between his thumb and forefinger while his tongue worked over her clitoris in long, wet licks. Harley whined softly, her body on fire just as Jack slid his tongue into her, bobbing his head, pushing his tongue deeply into her, fucking her in slow deliberate bobs and twirls, his tongue covered with her fluids.

Harley cried out, her moans echoing off the padded walls, her whole body rocking with the bobbing of Jack’s head. “Uuhh...uuhh...puddin...uuhh...UUHH!!!”

She came in a wave of pleasure rolling through her entire body, feeling the soft warm glow of her orgasm settle over her. Jack grinned when her body became taunt, then he felt and tasted her release on his tongue. He took one more long slow lick, tasting the juices of her climax, but he couldn't wait much longer—he needed to be inside her, to feel the welcome wet warmth of her body surrounding him.

Jack made his way back up her body pressing kisses along the way. Harley grabbed his face between her hands yanking his mouth to hers and devouring him. Jack grabbed her right leg holding the limb close as he entered her with a long groan. “Oh Harley...”

Harley moaned, her hands on his shoulder fingers gripping him tightly. They rocked together, Jack pressing his erection as deeply into her as he could, then pulling back slowly, then thrusting deep again. He kept his movements slow, deliberate, his tongue twisting with hers.

Harley pushed on his shoulders, using her free leg and the twist of her hips to urge Jack over onto his back. He rolled over, holding onto her tightly, not wanting to be out of her now that he had her again. Harley pressed Jack onto his back, her hands digging into his pecs as she rose up. Jack had his legs spread wide, the knees bent while Harley rolled her hips, grinding herself down on him.

Harley panted, rolling her hips harder. “Uuuuuhhh...Jack...uuhhh...Jack” her hands pressed into his chest.

Jack's hands glided along her thighs and up her hips, his blue-eyed gaze never leaving her face. “Uuhhh Harley...Harley, yes Harley...uuhh...”

He thrust up meeting her rolling and grinding.

Jack pushed himself up, grabbing her hips with one hand and pushing himself back up against the padded wall. He grabbed her rear with one hand, the other hand caressing her hair. Harley undulated her hips, wrapping her legs around him their panted breaths mixing together. They began moving faster, the pants filling the small space. Harley groaned leaning back from him, thrusting her hips forward harder. Jack ran a hand down her body, dragging his fingers over her breasts then along her stomach meeting her thrusts with his own, both of them panting heavily.

“Uuuuhuuuhhh...” Harley panted thrusting, pouncing harder, faster, impaling herself on him with each eager thrust.

Jack grabbed her shoulder, digging his fingers in while he thrust, pounding into her, the heat of her body surrounding him teasing him with the need to penetrate her as deeply as he could. He watched her face, the way her mouth was open, her lips plump and red, the look of ecstasy on her features...his girl...

He groaned deep in his chest. “Uuuhhuuhh...Harley...”

Harley's breath came in a studder as if she couldn't catch it, gazed at Jack’s face, his brow knitted with intensity while he pumped into her with more vigor. He growled her name again, the passionate moan dancing over her skin. “H-Harley”

Harley cried out as she orgasmed loudly, her fingers digging into his shoulder, her toes pointing as the wave of pleasure slammed into her and tightened her entire body, her muscles clamping down around Jack's shaft while she rocked with her orgasm and a loud cry of pleasure erupted from her lips. “UUuUuUHH! YES!! JACK!!”

Jack grunted, watching the way her face glowed in the dim light. When she came he immediately rolled her onto her back again, pumping vigorously, harder and faster into her, the room filling with the sounds of their fucking, the slap of flesh against flesh, the wet sound of him moving into and out of her. Jack groaned, panting, feeling himself coming closer and closer to his climax. He cradled her head between his hands, kissing her hard, his tongue curling with hers. Harley ran her hands up his side, then along his arms, wrapping her legs around his hips returning his kisses with tears sliding gently from her closed eyes as she held on tightly to him.

Jack bit her lips tenderly whispering heatedly. “Harley...my Harley.”

He captured her lips one more time, just as he spasmed and erupted inside her with a long drawn out moan. Harley felt the warmth of his climax, the last hard thrust which caused her to topple over the edge once more, her legs tightening their hold on him, her wraps wrapping tightly around her.

They were both quiet, catching their breath together. Harley pressed her face against his neck trembling. Jack held her tight, his fingers brushing her hair back from her face.

“I love you Harley. I love you,” he whispered against her ear.

Harley burst into tears. “Oh Jack, I love you. I love you so much...I...I just can't...”

Harley quieted, wrapping herself tight around him unwilling to let him go. Jack kissed her face, the end of her nose, her eyelids, her cheeks, her forehead, her chin and lastly her mouth before he reluctantly pulled out of her. Jack rolled onto his back pulling her against him. Harley nestled against his chest, her arm going tightly around his middle.

“How are we going to get out Jack?” Harley asked quietly. The room seemed to swallow the sounds of their voices as the spoke.
“I have a plan,” Jack spoke softly. “Alex was here. I think he is going to help...”

“Do you think Dale and Sandra will help?” Harley asked. He smiled feeling her breath against his chest.

“Sandra?” Jack asked.

“She is one of the orderlies. I think she is in love with Dale...they worked together to bring me here.” Harley pressed a kiss to his chest.

Jack smiled. “Really? That is interesting...and possibly helpful.”

They were both quiet for a bit when Jack whispered. “I heard you killed an orderly who tried to hurt you. I'm proud of you Harley. He didn't...?” Jack left it hanging.

She smiled snuggling in close. “No, killed him first,” she assured him and then said, “I loved what you did to Dr. Hurd.”

Jack laughed and Harley's heart soared to hear him. “Just wish it hadn't been so quick...he deserved a lot worse.”

They were quiet again, just enjoying this time they had together. Jack said softly.

“I'm going to kill Crane first chance I get.”

Harley chuckled softly. “Good.”

“I'm going to hurt Bruce,” Jack whispered.

Harley didn't say anything in response. She felt the same way, she wanted Bruce to pay for what he had done to Jack, but he was Jack's brother. That payment was up to him. Jack lazily stroked his fingers along her shoulder, he knew this would have to end soon, but he didn't want to think about it. He felt as if he were losing his mind without her beside him. Harley smiled pressing her cheek against his chest when she shifted her position, sliding down Jack's side. “Harley?” He frowned as she disappeared into the shadows around his legs. “Harley?” Jack asked again, but then chuckled when he felt her move between his legs, the smoothness of her palms sliding along his thighs...her tongue licking slowly along his shaft. Jack groaned reaching down to run his fingers through her silky hair.

“Oh Harley.”

He felt the delicious vibration of her humming against his skin. He immediately became hard once more, especially when Harley wrapped her lips around him, sucking hard and deeply on him. It was as if she were pulling his whole body toward her, his whole being. Jack let out a long passion-filled groan, his hips arching toward her as his fingers spasmed in her hair.

Harley bobbed her head, swirling her tongue along the underside of his quickly hardening erection. The feel of his fingers in her hair, the dull scrape of his nails against her scalp made her moan around him in her mouth before letting him go with a pop of her lips. Jack giggled.

Harley planted kisses all around his groin and scrotum, pressing her lips down, her nose against his skin taking a deep breath, the warm delicious scent of his skin. Harley smiled opening her mouth to slide her tongue along his soft, salty skin.

Jack writhed with pleasure feeling the gentle, warm running of her tongue in long lazy licks across his skin, tracing every inch of him.

Jack was shuddering with pleasure. “Damn it Harley, that feels wonderful.”

She giggled. “Good, because I want you again puddin.”

Jack jumped slightly at the sudden feel of her teeth when she bit him. He laughed with happiness feeling the sharp nip of her teeth on his stomach, then her tongue slid along his ribs before her teeth caught his nipple. She moved up further before she laid against him, her teeth catching his mouth, her tongue tenderly, yet heatedly delving once more into his mouth.

Jack grabbed her hips, pressing his fingers into her soft skin before he surprised her and rolled her onto back. Harley squealed, laughing. Jack grinned at her pushing himself up on his arms. “You are so beautiful Harley.”

Harley reached up run her fingers along his long face. “My handsome puddin.”

Jack’s smile was wide, his eyes twinkling. “Roll over.”

Harley quirked her brow at him with a playful smile almost feeling like her old self as she rolled onto her stomach. Jack grinned sitting back on his haunches. He brushed her soft hair off her back dragging his fingertips down her smooth, curving spine to her rear. He leaned over her pressing a kiss to her shoulders, then the middle of her back, he laid his hands on either side of her back and slid his hands down her body to her hips.

Harley moaned softly feeling the smooth caress of his touch just before Jack tugged her hips up. Harley pushed herself to her hands and knees. Jack licked his lips using his leg to spread hers wider, his hands gliding over the silk of her skin to squeeze her rear, gazing hungrily at her, the dim light caressed her skin causing her to glow...Jack grabbed his erection holding himself against her rubbing back and for, coating himself with her fluids again just before he plunged into her.

Harley cried out, her fingers digging into the soft padded floor, her back arching in a slender curve. Jack licked his lips dragging his teeth over his bottom lip gazing down at her, his hands wrapped around her hips. He thrust forward, watching with eager pleasure the way her flesh wiggled each time his pelvis met her backside. Harley groaned loudly feeling the deep penetration of him thrusting into her body, piercing her core.

Harley thrust back against him, willing him to go harder, deeper until she nearly screamed her orgasm, her body rippling with intensity, tears springing to her eyes as if a dam had broken flooding her with the intensity of her feelings for him. Jack joined her a second later, his body feeling as if he could drain his very soul into her. Harley moaned softly, her arms and legs going weak enough that she let herself fall forward with Jack on top of her. He laughed, biting her shoulder and neck. “God I love you Harley.”

Harley grinned sighing happily. “I love you Jack.”

Jack rolled off of her pulling her up against him, burying his face in her hair, his arm tight around her and holding her back pressed against his chest while Harley wrapped her arm around his feeling safe in his arms. “It will be Halloween soon,” she whispered. She tried to keep the pain from her voice, but it was difficult as she continued. “When we wanted to get married.”

Jack smiled squeezing her. “We are still getting married. No one is going to stop us Harley. No one. We are going to find a way out.” He chuckled softly. “Besides, think about it Harls, we've managed to kill four of Crane's people. I wonder how many more he is willing to sacrifice just to play with us?”

Jack kissed her ear, then her neck. She giggled snuggling in close to him. Neither of them wanted to talk about the fact they only had a few hours together. For now they could pretend that there was nothing outside this room.

Crane, wearing a tailored blue and white striped suit with a burgundy dress shirt and a blue and burgundy paisley tie, did not look like a man with anything to worry about. Yet he was pacing irritably across his office waiting for his meeting. He stopped at his desk pouring another inch of whiskey into the glass and downing it in one swallow when finally he heard a knock at his door.

Crane turned at the sound, taking a calming breath and brushing his fingers through his hair, straightened his tie and opened the door. Standing on the other side was a short balding man in a cheap suit, sweating despite the cooler weather outside.

Crane stepped aside to make room for the shorter man. “Finally Sharp, I was beginning to wonder.”

“Sorry Crane. These things take time, but he's agreed.” Sharp grinned at him, his beady black button eyes shone with pleasure. “Yeah, told him the transfer will be complete once he finishes the job and then he can disappear for a while outta Gotham. You just have to let him know what you want him to do. He practically leapt at the chance to do some acting. I guess once an actor, always an actor.”

While the other man spoke Crane walked behind his desk gesturing with his hand at the empty chair. Sharp took the offered seat and folded his hands over his belly.

“Good, good. Would you like a drink?” Sharp eyed the whiskey before he shook his head. “Better not, have that drive back to Blackgate. So, you want to tell me why you wanted him?”

Crane smiled putting the pads of his long boney fingers together and smiling over the top of his fingers at Sharp.

Crane's eyes took on a faraway look. “You see my friend, I'm in love. A beautiful blonde with heavenly blue eyes that shine brightly when filled with horror. Her lips are perfect for screaming and moans of fear...creamy skin, a generous figure...breasts that...”Crane licked his lips and stopped himself, then reached for the whiskey and poured himself just a little.

Sharp watched this, feeling suddenly uncomfortable. The look in the man's eyes was...almost...he looked crazy, lustful and obsessed. The way he was talking about this woman made Sharp fear for whoever she was, but ultimately, it wasn't his problem.

“So, ah...when are you going to use him?”

Crane's grin was wicked. “Oh, soon my friend, very soon.”
Beside You

Bruce was still at the manor dressed for the day in a black suit, white shirt and black tie, looking every inch the billionaire business man playboy, hiding the turmoil inside, which was only slightly visible by the dark circles under his eyes. He was worried about Jack and Harleen. He had called the asylum yesterday, asking when he could see his brother again, but Dr. Arkham had told him to wait a few more days. Bruce sighed. A few more days. He had just put his hand to his forehead when his phone vibrated on the table beside him.

Bruce picked up the phone and glanced at the time. It was not quite eight in the morning. Bruce sat at the large dining room table nursing his cup of coffee and waitied to meet the man he was contemplating hiring to investigate Arkham, a man named Victor Sage, when his phone vibrated again. Bruce had barely gotten out a “Hello” when Barry Hardgrove, the Wayne family lawyer, growled. “Guy Kopski is dead.”

“What?” Bruce nearly dropped his coffee cup.

“Died of his injuries this morning. I haven't heard anything yet, but I know the man had a sister. I wouldn't be surprised if she sues the Wayne estate.” Hardgrove sounded exhausted. “I just wanted to give you a heads up, tell you to be prepared.”

Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose. “All right, I understand. If they do, then we'll settle with them. They have a right to ask for financial compensation for Jack's actions. Just...just keep me informed.”

“I will Bruce. And Bruce, I know I didn't say this before, but I'm sorry about Jack.” Hardgrove sounded sincere.

Bruce nodded. “Thanks Barry. Me too.”

Barry sighed. “Well, I let you know if I hear anything else.”

“Thanks Barry.” Bruce hung up.

A soft knock sounded at the door and Alfred opened the door a crack. “Master Bruce, a Mr. Sage is here to see you.”

“Show him in please, Alfred, and would you bring some more coffee for my guest?” Bruce asked as he straightened his tie.

“Of course sir.” Alfred stepped aside to let a tall gentleman in a navy blue trench coat step inside. The man had a handsome face, but not anything outstanding. Dark hair, grey eyes, firm jaw. A face many would find attractive, but at the same time utterly forgettable. Mr. Sage took Bruce's offered hand as Bruce stood up.

“Mr. Wayne. I've heard a great deal about you and your brother.” Sage's handshake was firm, his hands calloused. Bruce motioned to one of the chairs.

“No, no I'm afraid not. So you said on the phone you wanted me to investigate Arkham Asylum where you committed your brother?” Sage asked just as Alfred returned with a pot of coffee and another cup. “Cream, sugar Mr. Sage?”
Sage held his hand up. “Black is fine, thank you.”

Alfred bowed to Bruce before stepping out of the room again.

Bruce smiled. “Yes, Alfred insists on conducting himself with almost Victorian airs. Anyway, yes I want you to look into Arkham. A...friend, brought it to my attention that Arkham may not be the best facility for my brother.”

“Well Mr. Wayne, my fee is six hundred up front, four hundred a day plus expenses.” Sage sipped his coffee watching Wayne.

“You came highly recommended Mr. Sage. Deal.” Bruce said.

Sage cursed to himself thinking he should have asked for more since Wayne agreed so quickly, but he recovered swiftly. “I will report to you once a week with my findings unless I find something that needs your attention right away.”

“Do you know anything about Arkham at all?” Bruce asked watching his guest.

“Nah, I mean not anything that isn't public record or hearsay.” Sage shrugged. “But then again, never had any reason to look further.”

Bruce nodded and pulled out his checkbook from his jacket's inside pocket. Sage watched while Bruce wrote out the check and handed it to him. “Let me know everything you learn Mr. Sage.”

Sage smiled and nodded. “Of course Mr. Wayne.”

Neither Jack nor Harley were sure how long they were together. Harley had fallen asleep curled in Jack's arms, her back pressed against his chest, his arms snug around her waist. It felt so good to be with him, to feel him, smell him...her puddin holding her tightly. Then the door opened and she saw Dale. Harley's eyes blinked slowly, adjusting to the light that was pouring in.

“I'm sorry Miss Quinn...Mr. Wayne, but it's time to go. You both need to dress.” Dale kept his eyes averted as he spoke.

Harley felt Jack shift behind her before he spoke. “When will we get to do this again?”

Dale kept his gaze down then shrugged. “Not sure Mr. Wayne, but I'll make it happen. I promise. Sandra and I are going to try and make sure you both get to see each other more. You have my word.”

Jack said nothing in response, instead he turned Harley in his arms so that she was facing him, his hands stroked back her hair from her face, his nails along her cheek, then his fingertips across her chin. “I love you, my little harlequin. We are going to get out of this I promise. I will set you free Harley.”

Harley nodded trying not to cry, but she smiled. “I know you will puddin. Just you remember, I ain't going anywhere without you.”

Jack grinned lopsidedly at her and winked. “Well of course not! There's no Jack without Harley.”

Then he pulled her close to kiss her forehead, her nose then her lips. Harley wrapped her arms around him pressing close against him as if she were trying to feel every inch of his body, to remember every part of him when they weren't together. Jack ran his teeth over her bottom lip tugging gently, with a whispered, “They will not destroy us Harley, but we will destroy them.” He gave her a grin and a kiss.

The next few days were quiet, almost routine if life in an asylum could be said to be routine. Harley was surprised she received no further punishment for Mel's death. It was almost as if everyone wanted to pretend that Mel had simply gone. Which was fine with her. She was delighted when she learned nothing else had happened to Jack either in connection to his killing of Dr. Hurd, though she didn't get to see him...yet. That was what made these last few days bad...the need to see Jack, like a burning asching hole in her being...if only...

When another day passed, Harley began to hope too that maybe Crane had moved on that he had lost interest in her. She was just starting to become comfortable with the idea when Sandra came to her cell early one evening.

*

It was early evening, the sun had just set. A yellow light glared down at Harley while she worked. Harley had been given crayons and some paper. She was drawing intently, focused on a scene she was creating of Bruce Wayne in a straightjacket, tied to a wheelchair with Jack holding a gun to his head. It wasn't very good, but she knew what she was trying to draw, and it just killed time. She giggled to herself thinking about adding some knives to it when Sandra knocked on her wall.

“Miss Quinn,” Sandra called.

Harley turned to see her holding a straightjacket and a wheelchair. Harley's heart dropped and her blood turned cold.

“Oh no,” she whispered.. She had hoped that maybe Crane was bored with her, with them...but no...she couldn't be that lucky, she thought bitterly.

*

Sandra pushed Harley down the hall. The big woman was quiet, tense. Harley decided to lighten the mood; it wasn't Sandra's fault she had to take her to Crane.

“So, you and Dale go out yet?” Harley asked keeping a smile on her face as she looked upside down at Sandra while the big woman pushed the wheelchair along.

Sandra looked down at Harley and a little smile played across her face. “Well, not a date, but we have had coffee together twice.”

Harley smiled. “Oooh twice. Good for you.”

Sandra blushed. “Thank you Miss Quinn.”

“Harley...come on, everyone who's my friend calls me Harley. You're my friend, okay Sandra.” Harley grinned at her.

Sandra smiled. “Sorry, Harley.”

When they arrived at Crane's office, instead of knocking, Sandra simply opened the door and pushed the chair inside. The office looked much the way it had every time Harley had been in here before, but today there was a lovely short sleeved, royal blue, vintage tea length dress hanging on the wall, with a pair of matching heels on the floor beneath it. On the desk, waiting to be used, was a makeup kit and hair styling supplies.

Harley frowned looking around. “Sandra, what is going on?”

Sandra looked unhappy, but she sighed unfastening Harley's straps from the wheelchair. “Dr. Crane wants you dressed and brought to the greenhouse for dinner.”

“What?” Once she was free, Harley jumped to her feet to stare at Sandra, her hands balled into fists.

Sandra frowned in response. “Please Harley, it's only dinner. Behave yourself and nothing...bad will happen to Mr. Wayne.”

“I won't have sex with him. I'll kill him before he touches me!” Harley snarled. “No one but Jack touches me!”

Sandra stepped closer and put her hands on Harley's shoulders. “He won't. Crane is a lot of things but he would never force himself on someone. He wants you to come to him. He will want you to want him. He's a manipulator. He will want you begging him not the other way around. As long as you play the game, you're safe..”

“I will never submit.” Harley snarled sticking her tongue out and making a rude noise. She glanced at Sandra while picking up the skirt of the dress before flinging the skirt aside. “How do you know so much about Crane?”

Sandra paled; the big woman fiddled with her nails. “I...I had a crush on him in school, in college. I took a few of his classes. I was fascinated with his work on fear...but...well that's a story for another time, but he was why I took a job here in Arkham. I've only seen him “in love” one other time.”

Harley, who had stopped to pick up one of the shoes and examined it, glanced over at Sandra her eyes slightly confused. “What happened to her?”

Sandra paled. It was clear she was remembering something she had witnessed herself, not just heard about. “She...she wasn't the same afterward.” Sandra shuddered. “Please Harley. He will hurt Jack if you don't do as he asks.” Sandra pleaded. “He'll hurt you. Just play along. It's the smartest and easiest thing to do until we can figure something out. String him along...once he realizes you aren't going to submit, things will get really bad...”

Harley stared at her then pressed her lips together and her blue eyes looked sad. “This isn't bad?”

Sandra shook her head. “You have no idea what he is capable of...I'm...look never mind, let's get you ready all right?”

Harley frowned, a million questions buzzing in her head, but nodded. She would play the game, anything to prevent Jack from being hurt...for now.

*

Harley was led outside the main Arkham building to the greenhouse. Harley wore the blue dress, her hair styled up in a soft bun on the top of her head, her make-up in soft shades with a slick cat-eye liner and a light blue eyeshadow that made—as Sandra said—the blue in her eyes pop. Sandra had done an excellet job of enhancing of Harley's natural beauty. Harley's high heels made a soft click-clack on the stone and cement walkway as the two women headed to the greenhouse. The air outside was much cooler; with the sun going down it was down right chilly though Harley did her best not to show how cold she was out here.

While they walked, she realized that the greenhouse was lit up like a jewel, glowing in the night. This time of evening, Harley would have thought the place would be dark, but the inside of the glass walled building seemed to glow with an inner fire. When she and Sandra arrived at the main door to the greenhouse, there were a couple of Arkham security guards waiting at the door. Each man gave Harley a hateful look. (Clearly everyone knew about her killing Mel after all. It made her wonder if any of them knew he was a rapist or maybe they just didn't care. Of course it was her word against his...and Mel was dead.)

The guards glanced at Sandra with a nod. They both stepped aside, one guard opening the door for the two women to enter.

Harley had to wonder how many people did Crane have on his payroll? And exactly how extensive were Crane's funds? Pretty extensive apparently! She thought wryly. Once inside Harley could hear the light sounds of classical music...piano...she was sure she had heard it before...Harley rattled through her memories before she recognized the music; it was Barenboim - Bach Goldberg Variations – Aria. She had heard it played live at a gymnastics competition during a floor exercise when she was younger. She didn't know why the music had stuck in her head, but here it was again, yet this time she found the softly playing piano music (clearly a recording judging by the sound) uncomfortable...eerie, like everything else occurring at this moment.

With Sandra behind her, both women walked into the greenhouse where Harley saw a couple of more men, not Arkham security judging by how they were dressed, but maybe hired thugs by the looks of them; she couldn't know for certain. Sandra, her hand on Harley's shoulder, continued to walk her deeper into the greenhouse. Harley could see lights had been strung along the trees, through the plants, fairy lights that she might have found lovely, but now only seemed to accentuate the eeriness of the situation.

In the middle of the greenhouse where all the paths led was a small circular area where Crane had set up a small round table with a white table cloth, two white wooden chairs with light blue upholstered seats, two tall glass candle holders, white roses running around their bases held white pillar candles, their flames dancing softly in the dim light. The little section also contained four armed men standing motionless, but watching her. Sandra escorted her closer, pulling out her seat and waiting until Harley sat before she turned and left. Crane was nowhere to be seen at the moment. Harley looked around taking in all the other details of the setting. The plates were white, decorated with light blue flowers on them. Next to the plates were two glass goblets, and two matching white and blue tea cups as well as silver dinnerware along the side of the plates. Next to the table was a cart with covered food trays, a bucket of ice with a bottle of wine sticking out of it. Harley could smell at least one food item—steak. Harley held her hands in her lap, balled into fists, when finally Crane showed up. He was dressed in an elegant black suit, white shirt and matching bow tie, his sandy colored hair was parted on the side and slicked back. He smiled when he saw her.

Harley snarled. “What do you want?”

Crane smiled softly. “To eat dinner with you my love.”

“I'm not your love.” Harley was vibrating with anger.

Crane smiled picking up the wine and with a skill of long practice, he popped the cork. “You are my love Dr. Quinzel, my muse, my...inspiration!”
He leaned over and poured wine into her goblet. Harley glanced around. The men here were all armed with batons, tasers and one wore brass knuckles, all non-lethal, but they would definitely hurt. Crane smiled, finished pouring wine into his own glass before he picked up the lids covering the food to reveal that the meal was indeed steak, salad and green beans.

Crane smiled as he took his seat. “I had this brought in from one of Gotham's finest restaurants, so please eat.”

Crane picked up his utensils and started to cut his steak. Harley sat there for a few heartbeats, her rebellious stomach growling before she finally reached for the fork and knife and cut into her food. The first bite melted on her tongue, which only encouraged her to eat more despite her revulsion for Crane.

They ate in silence for a little while; the food was excellent and the wine was good. Harley watched Crane warily with each bite she took.

Crane took a sip of his wine after eating a few bites before he spoke. “Every creative act has its destructive consequences. Which is why I must destroy you Dr. Quinzel and then rebuild you into something better, even more beautiful. You will be my greatest creation, my beautiful representation of pure fear.”

Harley went very still. “How do you think you are going to do that?” she asked softly, her voice barely a whisper.

Crane smiled as he sipped some of his wine. “‘Fear, you must understand, is more than a mere obstacle. Fear is a TEACHER, the first one you ever had and that is where my serum comes in. My serum is about pulling your fears to the surface, forcing you to face them. You have pushed me, my dear, pushed me to new levels...you and that Wayne fellow. He seems immune to my serum...but you...you are so delightfully receptive. I want to push, to see how far, how deep into your fears I can take you before you shatter. Then, and only then, will I rebuild you. Rebuild you into something glorious, your mind will be come mine to play with, mine to mold into my perfect companion, a perfect representative of my goals, my creation...my Lady Crow.” Crane chuckled softly taking a sip of his wine. “You see my dear, I respect the mind's power over the body—it's why I do what I do...I break it and rebuild it.”

Harley shoved herself away from the table. The men around them came to attention, but Crane put up a hand stopping them.

“Now, now Dr. Quinzel. May I call you Harleen?” Crane cooed softly.

Harley spit. “NO!”

Crane only smiled as he held her gaze. “Harleen. Once you are rebuilt into the beauty, the representation of fear I know you can be, then we can have the perfect child! A creature of my intellect and your new creation...it will be beautiful, my dear Harleen.” He continued to smile at her. If he noticed her trembling in anger, he didn't show it as he continued. “Besides, you can't stop me and fighting the inevitable will only hurt you and your Mr. Wayne more. And do you really want to see how much electricity your young man can take? Or perhaps you would prefer to watch him undergo the insulin therapy? Now that can be quite graphic and very painful.” He stood. “I had a pleasant dinner. I hope we can do this again soon.”

Harley lunged at the table, reaching for one of the dinner knive,s but one of the guards hit her in the back with his taser, then another did the same. Harley dropped as her muscles seized, watching in impotent anger, unable to move as Crane left the area and blew her a kiss before he disappeared.
Another few days passed. Harley hadn't seen Crane during that time. She had been plagued by nightmares, dreams of Crane pulling her, dragging her into a dark void that she couldn't escape. Other nightmares were of watching Jack being shocked over and over again until there was nothing left of the man she loved but a drooling thing that only outwardly resembled her lover.

Today, Harley had been escorted to the greenhouse again, but this time it was mid-afternoon and she was with some of the other patients. She glanced around shivering as she remembered her dinner with Crane, but thankfully the doctor had kept his distance these last few days. The only thing that would have made it better was if she had been able to spend time with Jack. Sandra had told her that she and Dale were working on getting them time together again...she just couldn't say when. Harley sighed. Not being with him was killing her inside. She needed her puddin.

Today the sunlight was grey; clouds had moved in threatening rain. She was walking with Babs and Tabitha when Babs excitedly bounced in place. “Did you ladies hear that we are getting some new roomies?”

Harley, who had her arms wrapped around herself while they walked frowned. “Roomies?”

Tabitha rolled her eyes. “She means more inmates.”

“Patients Tabs! You mean patients.” Babs giggled, but Tabitha rolled her eyes and muttered. “We can't leave, we get locked in our rooms and are forced to take meds we don't want while wearing this lovely black and white formal wear, and they make us have therapy and play with paints—inmates.” Babs sighed and continued. (Harley was learning quickly that Babs liked information. She liked to know things, everything. She had told Harley once that knowledge was power...the more she knew the more power she had.) “Well anyway, they are transferring some inmates from Blackgate prison over here to Arkham. I heard at least a couple will be joining us on the sixth floor.”

Tabitha groaned. “Oh goodie. I finally got used to you lot, now there is going to be more?”

“That doesn't seem...safe,” Harley observed.

“Well if you want to get technical, none of us are safe. We're all violent and some of us are murderers and there are ghosts here.” Babs winked which actually made Harley and Tabitha laugh.

Harley frowned. “Ghosts? What are you talking about?”

Tabitha groaned. “Oh you had to ask.”

Babs grinned, her light blue eyes twinkling. “There are ghosts here in Arkham.”

Tabitha put a hand on Babs' shoulder. “Not now.”

Babs sighed. “Fine. But supposedly Amadeus Arkham haunts the halls of the asylum!”

Tabitha smacked Babs on the shoulder.

Harley frowned. “You ever see a ghost?”

Babs shrugged. “Nope, but others have.”

“No one has seen a ghost Babs. Anything Jervis says is suspect because the guy is a loonie. He sees giant white rabbits too,” Tabitha grumbled.
Harley decided to change the subject before they started fighting. “So when are they coming, these new roomies?” Harley asked.

Babs frowned. “Any day now. They were supposed to be here a week ago, but something happened and the transfer was delayed. But my sources...” Here Babs tapped her ear. “Tell me it will be any day now...maybe even today.”

Harley frowned feeling a chill breeze brush over her. For some reason the idea of new inmates—prison inmates here in the asylum—made her skin crawl.

*

Crane was in his office going over the final paperwork for the transfer of the men coming from Blackgate. Finally, he would have his actor on the premises and he could begin the second part of his work with Dr. Quinzel and Mr. Wayne. This session was going to focus on Wayne. Crane smiled to himself. He had been working nonstop on his new formula. He had concentrated it into a gas, quicker intake through the pores; the reaction would be instantaneous. Then with his new inmate coming, this session might just be the one he needed to break Dr. Quinzel and, if he were lucky, Wayne as well. Breaking Wayne would break Quinzel...watching her lover fall to pieces might be the push she needed. Crane started to hum happily to himself then hit a key on his computer. Music drifted from the computer speakers, bringing a smile to Crane's lips as Mozart's “Requiem” began to play while he wrote down his notes, imagining his beautiful Harleen broken and ready to be rebuilt.

The last few days had been not just boring, but stressful for Jack.

Jack hadn't received any news about Harley. Dale had only told him she was all right. When Jack had asked about seeing her, Dale had said that he and Sandra were working something out, but that it would be soon... Well, soon was taking too long Jack thought. He needed to see her, needed to hold her in his arms. Damn it, he just needed her!! This evening, Jack was sitting on his cot playing a game of “Devil's Grip” with a pair of cards the big man Dale had provided him. Jack had been entertaining him all afternoon with them, doing trick after trick. His mind was still on Harley, but the cards kept him calmer. He had just finished his match when Dale came to the door of his cell.

“Ready for dinner Mr. Wayne?”

Jack looked up, holding a card to his right eye and putting on his best pirate voice. “Arrr...Mr. Dale, I'm being allowed to mix with some of the other patients?”

Dale nodded. “Yes. But if we don't hurry, the food will be cold.”

Jack chuckled continuing to hold the card over his eye like a patch. “Lead away my friend, to the terrible food they call dinner here.”

Dale chuckled. “Well, we certainly are not a five star restaurant.”

Jack chuckled while he slipped on his slipper tennis shoes. He grinned when he stood up making sure his striped shirt was tucked into his black and white striped slacks. “You know Dale, when I was a boy, I had a disease that required me to eat dirt three times a day in order to survive... It's a good thing my older brother told me about it, so if I can eat dirt, I certainly can handle food here.”

Dale chuckled as Jack stepped out of his cell and passed Dale, to walk in front of the large muscled man. Chuckling Dale asked. “Is that true Jack? About the dirt?”
Jack chuckled. “You've seen my brother, could you imagine him making me eat dirt?”

Dale laughed. “No, no I couldn't Mr. Wayne.”

“Honestly I think that is part of Bruce's problems...too good. Follows the rules too closely. Which is why I'm here.” Jack let out a breath throwing his arms out to encompass the asylum before he spoke again. “Dale, I have a question.”

Walking close behind Jack, Dale nodded. “Well I'll answer it if I can.”

Jack smiled. “Halloween is coming up in a couple of days. I want to get married.”

Dale frowned, almost stopping in his tracks in surprise at the question. “Okay and...?”

Jack stopped and performed an elegant, smooth turn to face Dale. “I want you to find someone to marry Harley and me, in here. Not someone on the outside, because they'll just...go tattling about it. I want someone on this side of the locked door. I want to marry my Harley.”

Dale tilted his head. “Why keep it a secret?”

“My brother. I don't trust him not to try and step in, try and stop us somehow...for some reason...” Jack's face darkened. “I don't want him to know. I don't want anyone to know except you, Sandra and the person who marries us.” Jack frowned as he continued. “We were going to have this huge wedding Dale. You...you should see the dress my girl was going to wear.” Jack closed his eyes and swallowed, his eyes stinging. He then rubbed angrily at his eyes for a moment before he continued. Jack was angry at himself for the tears, but Bruce had ruined everything with his holier-than-thou attitude. Jack had planned on giving Harley the world...

Jack really blamed Bruce's attitude toward him and Harley on the fact that his big brother had never been in love. Bruce simply didn't understand what love was like, that you would kill for love, kill because of love; when love is not madness then it is not love...or maybe Bruce was jealous? Bruce had everything, it seemed to many, except someone who loved Bruce like Harley loved him. That thought made Jack want to laugh.

Jack continued. “Anyway, I know my brother will try to stop us. There are only three people outside these walls I truly trust: Alfred, Alex, and Frost. And if I found a way to tell them, for them to come here, I'm sure Bruce would figure something was up. He always knew when something was up...well...most of the time.” Jack's smile promised that he had other secrets from his brother.

Jack continued, his voice sad. “I know I won't be able to give her the dress and the ring I have for her, what she deserves. They are locked away in Wayne manor just like her engagement ring is locked away here in Arkham...but...” Jack gave Dale a pleading look. “Help me marry my girl, please Dale.”

Dale stared down at Jack. A voice inside him said he should refuse, but then he thought...why not?

Dale nodded. “I'll see what I can find out.”

Jack grinned. “Peachy! Can you let Harley know?”

Dale smiled. “Of course, I'll find Sandra.”

Dale dropped Jack off in the small sixth floor cafeteria and immediately went in search of Sandra. He found the female orderly downstairs and outside on her smoking break. She was leaning against the side of the building looking off toward the Gotham skyline. When she saw Dale, her face lit up like a Christmas tree. Dale grinned when he saw Sandra. He knew a lot of people wouldn't find her attractive, she was too “masculine” looking to be considered pretty by today's standards, but Dale found her features to be enticing and he enjoyed her company.

“Sandra!” he called as soon as he spotted her.

She grinned. “Hey Dale, need something? I know this isn't your break. Everything okay?”

Dale hurried up beside her. When he stopped at her side he ran his hand down her arm. She smiled...she had the prettiest smile Dale thought. He debated only for a heartbeat before he leaned over and kissed her cheek. “I need your help.”

“Help? Sure, whatever you need Dale.” Sandra smiled, a soft pink blush on her cheeks.

Dale glanced around to make sure no one was within ear shot. “Jack Wayne just asked me to find someone on the inside here who can marry him and Harley.”

Sandra's eyes widened. “Really? That is so romantic! Do you know anyone?”

Dale frowned and shook his head. “No, I don't. I was hoping you might.”

Sandra frowned. “Well, I know someone who would know. Barbara Kean. She knows everything that goes on here in Arkham. Don't know how, but she does, and her information is never wrong.”

Dale frowned. “He doesn't want anyone else to know...especially no one outside the asylum, anyone who might accidentally leak the information. He's worried his brother will step in and try to stop the wedding.”

“Well...Barbara won't tell anyone...I would swear on it, though we might want to let her bring in Tabitha.” Sandra tapped her finger against her lips. “You know...I bet I could get Harley a wedding dress. My aunt runs a used clothing store downtown, she gets some really nice stuff. I know I could find something.”

Dale smiled. “You think you could get Mr. Wayne a tux?”

Sandra giggled. “Sure thing!”

Dale grinned at her. “You're perfect Sandra. I'll let Mr. Wayne know.” Dale stole another kiss from her cheek before he headed back inside.

Sandra watched him go with a dazed expression, her fingers on her cheek.

Back in the cafeteria, Jack had walked over and set his tray of food down at the table with Zsasz.

“So what's new guys?” Jack said with a grin while he picked up his spoon and pushed the food on his tray around with a slight grimace. “What is this stuff?”
Zsasz laughed. “Best to just eat it without asking questions.”

Robert chuckled softly. “Women taste better.”

Jack lifted a brow at Robert. “You know Robbie, that's the kind of information, you should keep to yourself, especially at the dinner table.”

The crazed haired Robert looked like he wanted to say something else, but instead shoved a spoonful of something like that looked like mashed potato into his mouth looking like he was pouting. Jack grinned at him and leaned closer. Jack grinned. “What did Jeffrey Dahmer say to Lorena Bobbit?”

Robert looked confused. “What?”

Jack smiled. “Are you going to eat that?”

Robert stared at him for a full second and then burst out laughing.

The four men were sharing a laugh when a tall, thick heavily muscled man with huge shoulders and a noticeably tiny head sporting a military hair cut, walked over and cast a shadow over the group of men. Jack turned completely around in his seat to look up and whistled. “Well, hello ugly.”

The man narrowed his small brown eyes as he sized up each of them. “I'm Ernie Chubb, just brought over here from Blackgate and I'm the new boss here, got it?”

No one said anything at first, though Jack giggled. “You know, bullies are always cowards. They like to pick on little guys or guys they think are weaker than them...usually means they have a little willy.” Jack held his little finger up and wiggled it.

Ernie reached forward, his ham-sized fists grabbed Jack by the front of his shirt, lifting him off his feet and held Jack up in front of his face, hissing between his large teeth, a little bit of spittle hitting Jack in the face. “I'm going to make you my bitch, pretty boy. You're going to suck my cock with that smile.”

Jack stared at Ernie impassive, then smiled slowly. “I'm only one person's pretty boy bitch and she would cut your johnson off and feed it to you.”

Robert broke into a laugh and started clapping his hands on the table. Zsasz stood up, his eyes narrowed into dangerous slits, his hands bunched into fists. Jervis just put his chin into his hands and sang. “No room!! No room!”

Ernie sneered, holding Jack with one hand, cocking back the fist of the other like he was about to hit him when Dale yelled. “PUT HIM DOWN!”

Everyone turned to see Dale with a couple of other big orderlies on either side of him and a couple of the guards who seemed a little reluctant to be standing there, but figuring they needed to do their job. Ernie glared. “Make me!”

That was when Jack’s hand snapped out, his right hand opened so that the side, between his thumb and forefinger hit Ernie in the Adam's apple with a quick hard sound of flesh snapping against flesh. The man choked, coughing, struggling for breath, immediately dropping Jack. His large meaty hands clawing at his own throat while he stared at Jack in disbelief.

When Ernie dropped him, Jack landed on his feet in a crouch, grinning. Then just as swiftly, Jack swung forward with his foot, putting all his strength into the kick, which landed right in Ernie's crotch. The big man tried to gasp, but he was already coughing and wheezing, the slam to his nether regions only made his struggle for breath that much more difficult, plus the contortion of pain that ran across his face and the bright red hue had Jack snorting with laughter. The large man let out a whistle-like wheeze of sound.

Jack stood up, straightening up his shirt and chuckled, just as Dale was yelling. “NO!”

But one of the guards rushed forward and hit Jack across the back of his knees causing Jack to fall forward landing on his knees with a loud crack and a grimace of pain that raced across his features. Then the guard grabbed Jack by the back of the neck, forcing him down on the floor, a knee to his back while the guard yanked Jack's hands behind his back and secured them at the wrists with plastic cuffs. Jack could hear some yelling, but what made him smile were the groans of pain coming from Ernie. Jack chuckled.

The rest of the room erupted in a fight as Zsasz hollered, “Get off him!!” and jumped the guard on Jack's back. Jervis was screeching. “You have a regrettably large head! I would very much like to hat it!!!” as he did his best to hit one of the orderlies in the head with his tray.

Jack lay on the floor laughing until there were tears in his eyes.

Later that night, just before lights out, Jack was lying on his back smiling to himself. The chaos in the cafeteria had been hilarious. It had almost been a riot. He snorted and tittered. A riot. Too bad everything had been brought under control so quickly. It could have been so much more fun.

With a sigh, Jack let his mind wander while he shuffled his cards (one of the guards had tried to take the cards when he brought Jack back to his cell, but Dale, who had been following close, had prevented the guard from doing so), doing a variety of tricks without looking once at the cards. He was surprised he hadn't been punished yet for the incident in the cafeteria, not that he was complaining. Instead, he was thinking about Harley, about her naked body against his...the smoothness of her skin, the smell of her against his nose...her radiant smile. She was going to be his wife soon, no matter what had happened to them—she was going to be Mrs. Jack Wayne. Wouldn't Bruce be surprised! Jack grinned and bit his lip, closing his eyes for a moment, letting himself become fully involved in the image of his girl. He set the cards down, reaching down to run his hand over himself. He was hard just thinking about her. Jack slid his hand into his pants, touching himself gently, thinking about Harley, her soft blonde hair brushing against his chest, his stomach, her lips around his erection, her lips pressing against every inch of his body, the way she tasted on his lips, the movement and feel of her breasts, the little pants, cries and moans she made when he was inside her. The way her body would arch, her walls tightening around him covering him in the warm slickness of her fluids...he could almost hear her moan. “Oh puddin.” Jack moaned moving his hand up and down faster his imagination filled with her. “Harley...uuhhh...Harley...”

He came quickly, his body arching into the burst of fluid from his shaft. Jack dropped back against the cot, panting when he imagined her on top of him, smiling down at him while she ground her hips against him. Jack stroked himself a few more times, the ripple of physical pleasure ran though him before he sighed, cleaning himself up and rolling onto his side, wrapping his arms tight around himself. It just wasn't the same as having her here. It felt good, but it didn't feel great...not without her.

He felt a wave of pain wash over him. He wanted her here, in his arms so badly that his entire being ached. Jack stuck a knuckle in his mouth, biting down hard. He was not going to let despair win. They were going to get out of this...he just had to come up with a plan. He was making friends...and enemies...but even enemies could be used...Jack closed his eyes letting himself drift, thinking of how to escape...what he needed to know...

A few hours later, after lights were out, he heard a light knock at his door.

Jack looked over to see Dale. Jack frowned giving Dale a questioning look in the dim lights from the hallway as the orderly scanned his card and stepped into the cell. Jack sat up. “What's up Dale?”

Dale smiled, hurried over and squatted down next to the cot. His voice was a deep whisper.

“I talked to Sandra. She told me that Barbara Kean, one of the patients here on the sixth floor would know who could perform a marriage legally here in the asylum. But you would have to bring her into the wedding as well as her lover Tabitha. But Sandra did tell me those two women are friends of your Miss Quinn.”

Dale nodded, then smiled. “Also, Sandra thinks she can get both you and Miss Quinn clothing for a wedding.”

Jack's grin expanded. “Really?”

Dale nodded. “Yep.”

Jack grabbed Dale's face with both hands, surprising the man when Jack planted a kiss on his forehead. “Dale, you are a treasure.”

By the light of only his desk lamp, Crane glanced up from his notebook to look at the man sitting across from him. The man across from him reminded Crane of the actor Basil Rathbone, that same old fashioned elegant appearance. The man, named Basil Karlo was slim with an aristocratic nose, a long pointed, firm chin and dark brown eyes and dark brown hair. A good “actor's” face, though Karlo was not known for his face; instead he was known for the characters he played behind heavy make-up and special effects.

“So, you used to be the actor?” Crane leaned his elbows on the desk and steepled his fingers.

Basil frowned. “Yes, I was...before the...incident.”

Crane nodded. “Yes, driven mad by the ending of your legacy...the studios who had been so good to you dropped you for the remake of your film, chose to cast a younger, handsomer man as your replacement. The only film you ever starred in as the lead, the headline actor...you killed the actor who was to take over your role, did you not?”

Basil nodded impassively, but Crane noted something lurking in the other man's eyes.

“And nearly everyone involved in the movie didn't you?” Crane asked with a smile. “Which was why you ended up in Blackgate...until your unique abilities appeared.” Crane lifted a brow in question at Basil, clearly asking how Karlo's abilities came about without actually asking the question.

The man said nothing, he just looked down at his knees, clearly unwilling to discuss it.

Crane smiled looking down at his notes. “You gained your unique abilities from an experiment at the prison, but you have refused to name the doctor who experimented on you. Why?”

Basil frowned “Look, I agreed to this because you promised me that you would release me...let me disappear and take my daughter with me.”

Crane nodded, gazing at Karlo, his eyes showing little emotion. “Yes, your daughter. She has been in our care for nearly three months...repeated suicide attempts. Committed by her mother, your now ex-wife. Yes, you work for me over the next few...days...weeks...however long I need you, and then yes, we will release your daughter and you onto the streets of Gotham. Fail...well...your daughter's stay will become more...permanent.”

Crane returned his gaze to his notes. “You can only maintain another form for a very limited time, correct?”

Basil, who was frowning deeply after the talk of his daughter and the vague affirmation of the time his service was needed nodded. “Yes, maybe an hour, but it's difficult. If I suffer any physical trauma...a hit or worse, the disguise crumbles.”

Crane smiled. “Well then, you will have to be careful, won't you? The two patients you will be helping with have both proven themselves to be quite violent, but I trust you know how to handle yourself?”

Basil nodded. “I do.”

Crane's smile spread slowly across his face. “Good, very good Mr. Karlo.”

The following day Sandra came into the cafeteria where Babs, Tabitha and Harley were eating breakfast in a corner of the room. The three women were talking about what happened in the cafeteria during dinner last night with Jack, the other sixth floorers and the new guy named Ernie.

“Jack's incredible!!” Harley giggled, her cheeks red blushing with happiness that her puddin had acquitted himself so well against a bully.

Babs laughed. “I loved the bitch remark!! He is only a one person pretty boy bitch! I guess that's you!”

Tabitha chuckled. “I have to admit, that's funny.”

Sandra came over at that point and sat down next to Harley surprising the three women. “Hey Sandra,” Babs said in greeting.

Harley smiled. “Did you hear what Jack did?”

Sandra nodded. “I did. Actually I need to talk to all three of you.”

The three women became very attentive. Sandra glanced around. No one was paying any attention to them, but Sandra spoke softly. “Mr. Wayne wants to have a wedding on Halloween. He wants to marry you Miss. Quinn, here in the asylum. But Barbara—we need your help. Mr. Wayne wants someone who can preform the ceremony legally, who is here in the asylum. He doesn't want anyone outside these walls knowing.”

Harley looked stunned, but a slow smile was spreading across her face. “He wants to get married!”
Sandra nodded. Babs’ face lit up. “Oh my gosh, that is wonderful!! I know just the person!!”

All the women looked at her. Babs smiled. “His name is Cassidy. I think he is on the fourth floor; anyway that’s where he was last I heard. He has schizophrenia, but he is a licensed preacher! He can marry you. Just have to find out what he would want in return.”

Sandra nodded with a smile. “I can slip down there on my break and find him.”

Harley giggled trying to contain herself. “I’m getting married!”

Sandra smiled. “I’m going to my aunt’s...she runs a used clothing store...and pick you up a dress and Mr. Wayne a tux. I know they won’t be the kind of clothing you guys are used to, but I’ll do my best.”

Harley gave Sandra a quick, one armed hug. “I will love it no matter what you pick! Thank you!”

Sandra beamed.

During her fifteen minute break, Sandra hurried down to the fourth floor. The fourth floor patients were allowed to roam the halls, enter the common room or any of the rooms on the fourth floor. They were watched by many orderlies and guards, but there was not the sort of “immediate violence” feel of the sixth floor. Sandra stopped at the nurses station where a couple of nurses were looking over a magazine.

“Excuse me, could one of you guys tell me where to find a guy name Cassidy?” Sandra asked politely.

One of the nurses, a red head with more freckles than unfreckled skin, glanced up and pointed. “He’ll be watching his soaps in the common room.”

Sandra smiled and thanked her before heading down the hall and to the right into a nicely lit common room. The room was painted the same dull color as the one on the sixth floor, but here there was a larger TV, a couple of comfortable looking couches, several cushy chairs, a couple of gaming tables where some patients were playing boardgames and another TV in the corner were two patients were playing a video game while some others watched. Sandra frowned; the difference in the two floors was quite shocking. She shook herself and turned her attention to the man sitting on the couch watching some soap opera on the television.

The man was tall and thin, with a receding hairline of dishwater blonde hair, though the back of his hair was held at the nap of his neck showing that it was long. He wore the typical Arkham Asylum black and white clothing, but the outfit seemed to hang on him as if he were simply skin and bones. Sandra walked around and eased down beside him. The man’s face had the weathered look of old leather, full of wrinkles and in need of a shave. He glanced sideways at her when he noticed her watching him. Sandra saw that he had bright blue eyes. For a moment she was reminded of Iggy Pop except a little rougher looking and in a black and white asylum outfit.

“Whatchyouwant?” he spoke softly yet quickly, a slight twang to his speech.

Sandra smiled. “You can perform weddings correct?”

Cassidy stared at her for a moment longer, then went back to his shows. “Yep.”

“Well, I need you to perform a wedding, tomorrow, Halloween, here at the asylum, in secret,” Sandra said softly.

Cassidy frowned. “Two loonies getting married?”

She sighed. “Two patients, yes. But you would need to be quiet about it. They don't want anyone outside of a few people to know.”

Cassidy frowned, but then shrugged. “Okay, I can do that, but I expect payment.”

Sandra chewed her lip not sure how she was going to pay him, but she charged ahead. “How much?”

Cassidy smiled. “I want four Milky Way bars...and none of those fun size shit, they ain't fun for nobody. I want full-size bars. Three pieces of orange construction paper, and I want a bottle of sparkling water...raspberry flavored.”

Sandra frowned. “That's it?”

Cassidy smiled. “Yep, that would do it.”

Sandra had to wonder about the payment, but she wasn't going to question it...it was a price she could afford.

“Okay, I will have everything for you tomorrow for the wedding. Me or another orderly named Dale will come down here and get you after lights out. Okay?”

Cassidy grinned, never taking his eyes off the TV. “Okay.” He glanced sideways at her. “Halloween wedding, eh? Couple of weirdies,” he muttered before his full attention was back on his TV show.

On Halloween, Sandra arrived at Arkham carrying two bags. No one paid any attention as the large woman brought the bags in and stuffed them into her locker. No one was dressed in costume (there was one year a few nurses dressed up in Halloween costumes and set an entire floor of patients into fits, so now dressing up at work for Halloween was not allowed.) Nor did anyone pay any attention when Sandra made her way to the fourth floor with a small plastic grocery bag.

Dale had taken care of the paperwork. He had a friend in the county clerk's office who printed out the marriage license he would need, no questions asked. With a little greasing of gears here and there, Dale had arranged for it to be filled without anyone taking notice. All it needed now was for Cassidy to perform the ceremony and sign it to make the marriage official. He owed a few minor favors to a couple of people, but he was pleased with himself and happy to help Mr. Wayne.

*

Sandra found Cassidy in his room this time reading a book while lying across his cot; judging from the cover he was reading an old romance novel. Sandra noticed that he had added a makeshift preacher collar to his asylum outfit. She couldn't be sure, but she thought the collar might be made of white construction paper.

He didn't look away from his book when Sandra entered his room. “You got the goods?”

Sandra handed him the bag. He set his book down and looked inside grinning. “Perfect. Just come and get me when your lovebirds are ready.”
Sandra nodded. “See you tonight then.”

*

The rest of the day was fairly normal. No fights, no deaths and no Crane.

Finally lights out time came. Sandra had given one bag to Dale while she took the other bag, and with a quick kiss, the two of them parted.

Sandra hurried to Harley's room, the bag with the wedding dress in hand. She found Harley sitting cross-legged on her bunk waiting. When she saw Sandra, Harley squeaked. “You're here!”

Sandra smiled, pulled out her card to scan the lock; the clear door popped open and the orderly slipped inside with her bag...Sandra hurried over to Harley. “I have some make-up and a veil to style your hair around, but we better get started. I brought a flashlight for a little more light, but it isn’t going to be much.

Harley giggled. “Oh, thank you Sandra! Thank you for everything!” Harley threw her arms around the orderly. Sandra blushed and returned her hug. “Okay, let's get you dressed.”

Sandra set the bag down and opened it up, pulling out a sleeveless white and ivory dress with silver accents. The dress had a sweetheart neckline, drop waist with a full ballgown skirt and a low back. The bodice of the dress was heavily beaded in silver. The front neckline was a plunging sweetheart with a beaded illusion inset that flowed from the front to a low dropped back over an flowy organza skirt. Sandra fluffed the dress out and held it up for Harley to examine. “Is this okay?” she asked.

Harley gasped. “Oh Sandra, it’s beautiful! Thank you!”

Sandra smiled, pleased that she could bring some happiness to Harley in this place. “I guessed on the size, but I'm pretty good at it so I think it's going to fit. Oh, and I grabbed these too.”

Sandra held up a pair of Christian Louboutin nude/champagne Strauss shoes covered in Swarovski crystals. Harley gasped. “Where did you get those?”

Sandra smiled. “My aunt's place. She deals in high end used clothing.”

Harley giggled. “Wow.”

Dale made his way to Jack's cell, making sure he wasn't seen. With it being Halloween, the guards on duty could go one of two ways; either heavy guard presence or light. Tonight someone or something was shining down on them because the guard presence was light.

Jack was pacing his cell, waiting for Dale to show up. When he saw the big man, Jack nearly threw himself at the door. “Where have you been?” Jack asked in a low hiss.

“Sorry, had to make sure the room we're going to use was empty and to make sure no one was in solitary,” Dale explained as he slipped into the cell with his bag in hand. He set it down in front of Jack. “Sandra brought the tux for you.”

Jack pulled the tux out and smiled. “You're girl has great taste, my dear Dale!”
The tuxedo was a black on black affair with black dress shirt, black tie and even the shoes at the bottom of the bag were black oxfords. Jack immediately started to pull his asylum uniform off and quickly dressed while Dale watched at the door, keeping a lookout for any guards or other orderlies. "There's a comb at the bottom of the bag too Mr. Wayne." Dale absently pointed at the bag keeping his eyes on the corridors outside—so far, so clear.

Jack was slipping on the black dress socks, having just finished tucking in his shirt, his tie was still hanging loose around his neck. The suit was only perhaps one size too big on him, but thankfully Sandra had thought to include a belt. Jack slipped on the shoes, tying the laces before he reached into the bag for the comb. He glanced at Dale while he brushed his hair back. "Did you bring the sharpie?"

Dale nodded and pulled the marker out of his pants pocket. Jack laughed. "Perfect."

He finished combing his hair then frowned rubbing his unshaven face. He looked rough, not something he liked. He sighed—couldn't have everything he thought.

Jack rubbed his hands down his front. "Okay, I think I'm ready. Do I look acceptable?"

Dale smiled. "You look real fine Mr. Wayne."

Jack laughed. "You're my best man tonight. Call me Jack please. I know I asked you before, but I really must insist."

Dale's cheeks reddened a little from embarrassment, but he relented and nodded. "Yes, Jack. Okay, let's go." Dale looked both ways outside the cell then motioned for Jack to follow him.

* *

Each floor in the asylum had a small one room chapel, even the sixth floor. The chapel was a tiny room with a couple of chairs, a table where someone had placed a cross and a burgundy curtain across the wall behind the cross, nothing more. When Jack and Dale arrived, Barbara and Tabitha were sitting in a couple of chairs, holding hands and whispering to each other. Zsasz was standing by the cross, a finger on top of it making it wiggle back and forth. Someone had put a tiny old cassette player on the table with the cross and some music was playing, an instrumental version of John Legend's "All of Me" filled the small room. Sitting in another chair must be the man who would be marrying them Jack thought, judging by the paper black and white collar the man was wearing...the man sat with his legs crossed, chewing happily on a large candy bar.

When Jack and Dale stepped into the room, everyone turned. Babs grinned and waved. The man with the paper collar stood up with a smile as he swallowed the last bite of his candy bar.

"Well, you must be the groom. Go stand there at the front. I'll let the bride know we're ready." The man walked out of the room. Dale leaned over to Jack and quietly explained: "That's Cassidy, schizophrenic from the fourth floor."

Jack nodded and chuckled. "Perfect."

A moment later Cassidy returned only to be followed by Harley. She stopped in the doorway, Sandra behind her spreading out her dress. Harley had her hair styled in a soft bun at the nape of her neck with long soft golden strands highlighting her face in gentle curves. There were flowers decorating her hair, small white roses and babies' breath. She stood in the doorway holding a tiny bouquet of fake white roses, but it was her smile that Jack found the most radiant, the most beautiful thing about her as she stood there smiling just for him, dressed all in white. (Faintly Jack could hear Babs gasp and whisper how lovely Harley looked with an answering whisper from Zsasz that both Jack and Harley looked stunning and how weddings always made him cry, while he wiped his eyes.

Harley stood transfixed in the doorway, gazing at Jack. He looked so incredibly handsome though the suit was slightly too big and he hadn't shaved the whole time they had been in Akham, so he looked scruffy, but to Harley he looked more handsome in that moment, waiting to become her husband, than at any other time they had been together. Jack's smile spread across his face and he held his hand out to her. Harley slowly walked toward him while the music played softly. Harley reached out and took his hand, weaving her fingers with Jack's. Jack resisted the urge to pull her in for a kiss, instead wrapping her arm around his and held her close, turning to face Cassidy. (Standing by with their phones out, Sandra and Dale took pictures and video.)

Cassidy grinned reaching over to pop the button on top of the player, turning off the cassette player. He cleared his throat before he began. Then with a solemn expression Cassidy spoke.

“Dearly beloved, we are gathered here today to bring together this woman and this man, both of whom were crazy enough to get themselves locked up in Arkham and on the sixth floor no less!”

Babs and Zsasz chuckled, as did Jack and Harley. Jack took Harley's hand and held it to his mouth, pressing his lips to the back of her fingers. They stared at each other as if no one else was in the room.

Cassidy continued. “I am going to unite them, two murderous lunatics—I heard about Dr. Hurd and the orderly Mel ya'll, good job there—in holy matrimony. If anyone here sees a reason these two shouldn't be married, just keep your damn mouth shut because no one wants to hear your opinion!”

Cassidy's voice had slowly risen on the last words, but then he took a deep breath and let it out slowly before he continued. “Now: do you Jack Wayne take this gorgeous blonde Harley Quinn to be yer wife?”

Jack kissed her fingers again smiling, his eyes never leaving her face. “I do.”

“Y'all got some rings?” Cassidy lifted a brow in question.

Jack pulled out the sharpie Dale had passed them just before they stepped into the chapel. He took Harley's left hand in his and on her left ring finger he wrote with the fine point sharpie, 'Property of Jack.' It was only slightly awkward as he wrote around her finger. He then handed the sharpie to her. Harley blew on her “ring” before she took Jack's left hand and wrote, 'Property of Harley.' Jack grinned at her blowing on his own “ring.”

Cassidy grinned at the two of them.

“Then by the power vested in me, Cassidy Boone, I now pronounce you husband and wife! Go on, kiss the bride!” Cassidy grinned.

Jack yanked Harley against him wrapping one arm around her waist, his other hand going up to gently cradle the back of her head just before he pressed his lips to hers. Harley dropped her flowers reaching up to caress Jack's face, her fingertips sliding along his unshaven jaw, her lips gliding over his tongue caressing his tongue. Jack dropped his hands from her face, wrapping his arms around her waist and lifting her off her feet, smiling against her mouth while he kissed her.
Harley giggled pulling away from his lips just enough to gaze into his blue eyes, her nose against him. “I love you Jack Wayne, I love you.”

Jack grinned and rubbed his nose against hers. “I love you, my wife.”

They both giggled, their kisses both hungry and desperate.

That was when they heard Sandra's voice. “I know it's not the best, but I snagged some cupcakes down at the that bakery right down the road after you leave the asylum's estate and well...Congratulations!”

Everyone turned to see Sandra standing in the doorway with a pastry box of Halloween themed cupcakes. Jack laughed. “They're perfect!”

Sandra walked over with the box holding it open for Jack and Harley to each choose a cupcake. Harley chose one decorated like a pumpkin while Jack's looked like a bat. Jack laughed. “Oh look, The Batman came to our wedding!”

Harley giggled as the two of them crossed their arms to take a bite of each others cupcake. Jack leaned close and whispered. “I'm going to take a bite out of you later.”

Harley giggled, kissing the tip of his nose then together they bit into their respective cupcakes.

Not quite an hour later, Dale and Sandra were escorting Jack and Harley to solitary. The paperwork for their marriage had been signed (Harley made sure she signed everything as Harleen Quinzel so that everything was legal on their marriage license). Dale and Sandra shuffled off the inmates to their rooms and now that only left Jack and Harley.

Dale smiled. “No one is in solitary, so we thought you two might like the same room you had before for the night. The nigh staff is light tonight with it being Halloween, so there shouldn't be any trouble. I'm pretty positive no one will notice you two are both gone, especially if we get you back in your cells by morning check.”

Jack grinned. “Thank you both. You know, when I get out of here, I could really use some loyal people working for me.”

Dale blushed. “Oh I don't know Mr. Wayne, this sort of thing is all I've ever done.”

“Well Dale, when I get out I'm planning on something spectacular, something like Gotham has never seen before...just think about it.” Jack smiled.

* *

They arrived at the cell they had been in before when Jack was in solitary. Dale held the door open for them while Sandra stood a little off to the side. Jack grabbed Harley, lifting her up into his arms in a typical bridal carry, causing Harley to cover her mouth to stop from giggling too loudly. Jack grinned winking at both Dale and Sandra as he carried his bride into solitary confinement.

The light was still the pale weak light, but someone had taken the time to throw a few rose petals onto the padded floor.

Dale and Sandra stood in the doorway for just a moment. “We are going to try to give you two all night. Guard duty is light tonight and Crane isn't on the premises, so I don't see it being a problem.
I'll get the paperwork filed tomorrow with my friend at the clerk's office.”

Jack turned around still holding Harley in his arms, Harley had her arm around his neck, her head lying against his, smiling at them. “Thank you Dale, Sandra. Harley and I owe you a debt and I always repay my debts.”

Dale nodded. “No need Mr...I mean Jack. “

Sandra waved as Dale shut the door. “Good night and congrats!”

When the door closed and locked, Jack set Harley down on her feet giving her a devilish grin. “Mrs. Wayne.”

Harley giggled. “My husband. Mr. Wayne.”

Jack walked Harley back until she was up against the padded wall. “You look gorgeous.”

Harley continued to giggle licking her lips. “You look very handsome, husband...my puddin...”

Jack grinned grabbing her face firmly, but gently between his hands. “Call me your husband one more time.”

Jack swooned a little. “I do like the sound of that.” Then he pressed his mouth to hers dropping his hand from her face to wrap around her torso, his fingers searching for the zipper. Once he had the zipper, Jack pulled the metal slider down slowly.

Harley reached in between them to grab his tie, loosening the silken cloth from around his neck then her nimble fingers started on the buttons of his dress shirt. She tugged the shirt out of his slacks, her finger gliding down from button to button until she had his shirt open and could lay her hands against his bare skin.

Jack groaned against her mouth. “I love you touching me Harley.”

She smiled against his lips, her tongue snaking out to tease his tongue in small little licks while she brought her hands up, grabbing both shirt and jacket in her grip to shove them off his shoulders with a playful growl. “Grr...husband. My puddin and my husband.” She giggled.

Jack dropped his hands from her body, shaking his arms a little and letting the jacket and shirt fall to the floor before he reached over and took hold of her wedding dress and tugged it until the garment fell, sliding down to fall in a pool of fabric at her feet. Harley giggled softly. She was only wearing panties under the dress. Jack stared at her, reaching out to run only the tips of his fingers over her, starting at her throat, gliding over her breasts with butterfly light touches that sent goosebumps over her skin. He turned his hands over continuing his feather light touch, his nails skimming over her belly. He stopped at her panties, his fingers sliding to the sides to skim the edge where flesh met fabric.

Harley sucked her bottom lip in with a soft moan. She reached forward, snagged Jack by his slacks, working to undo the buckle, sliding the button through the hole before she pulled the zipper down slowly. Since the pants where slightly big on him, the slacks fell to the padded floor quickly. Jack giggled doing the slightly awkward danced of stepping out of his slacks, kicking off his shoes while pulling his socks off and his boxers down.

Harley giggled watching him, sliding out of her own panties, but leaving the heels on.
Jack swallowed staring at her in the dim light, wearing only a pair of sparkling high heels. Jack made a soft groan in the back of his throat. “Damn Harley...my sweets...my pumpkin pie...you look good enough to eat.”

Harley purred sliding her tongue along her lips. “Well...husband...why don’t you get over here and take a bite?”

Jack walked over to her. Harley thought he was going to kiss her, but instead he dropped to his knees and buried his mouth between her legs. Harley cried out in surprise and pleasure, pressing herself back against the padded wall, her fingers digging into the padding, arching her pelvis toward his hot, seeking tongue.

Harley reached down with one hand, threading her fingers through his hair. His face between her legs tickled slightly with his unshaven cheeks brushing against her thighs. She panted, gasping at each flick of his tongue. Jack shifted closer, his head moving in gentle rolls, taking deep sucking pulls at her sex before rolling his tongue in slow, tender licks. He ran the flats of his hands up her stomach, one hand reaching for her breast. Harley gasped, rolling her hips to meet his licking, both her hands now in his hair as she rode the waves of pleasure from his tongue, teeth and lips, while Jack’s hands roamed down over her torso, along her hips and down her thighs. Harley undulated her hips against Jack’s face, groaning and panting until she felt that fantastic warmth blossom and spread, making her body go taut and her back to arch. “Uuuhhh ...puddin!!”

Jack sat back on his haunches and grinned up at her, his mouth shiny as the dim light danced across his lips. He licked his lips, grinning at her with a devilish gleam in his eyes. He reached up and took her hands. “Come here baby.”

Jack pulled her down to him, grasping her face between his hands when she was on her knees in front of him, kissing her deeply. Harley groaned tasting herself on his lips and tongue.

They dropped down to the flower petal strewn padded floor, continuing to kiss as if separation would take their ability to breathe. Harley forced Jack onto his back with a quick twist of her hips, her arms shoving on his shoulder. She giggled. “Just lay right there puddin.”

She crawled on top of him, still wearing her heels and turned so her rear was facing him. She immediately grabbed his erection in her hands and started to sensually rub her tongue and lips over him. Jack moaned feeling the warmth of her breath, the tender caress of her lips and tongue sending shivers over his entire body. Harley very slowly, tenderly sucked his length into her mouth pulling her lips up in a slow drag, then down again, her tongue twisting around him at the same time, feeling the warm satin smoothness of him filling her mouth. She cupped and squeezed his scrotum at the same time in gentle, tender pressure, her mouth gliding down ever so slowly overed him in her saliva, then added one of her hands, sliding her hand up after her pulling lips, continuing her hand movements while her tongue caressed the head of his penis slowly.

Jack squeezed her rear, his tongue slowly licking in long erotic laps across her clitoris, playing along her labia before he slid his tongue inside her. With his other hand he dragged his thumb across her finding her other entrance and slowly slid his middle finger into her, pumping slowly while his tongue flicked in and out. He grinned at Harley’s muffled sounds of pleasure, her back arching and her sucking on him became harder. “Mm...Mmm...mmm...”

Harley groaned sucking him as far into her mouth as she could, relaxing her throat then pulling back with a slight drag of her teeth against his sensitive skin. Jack groaned, the vibration tickling up her core.

Jack sucked harder, his finger and tongue moving quicker. Harley released him from her mouth gasping. “Oh puddin! Oh puddin! Uuhh...Uhh...Uhh...” Her hips moved with slight jerks as Jack continued his attentions without slowing. Harley dropped her head against his groin, her body tightening around him. Jack's free hand stroked up her spine his fingers dragging along her smooth skin when she came. “Uhh...uhh...uhh, oh puddin!!”

Her thighs squeezed him, her body aching back against his mouth causing Jack to grin. “Uuhh...Jack...” Jack was panting smiling. “Come here baby.”

Harley turned around while Jack held himself ready. She adjusted herself slightly then with Jack guiding her, Harley slid down him, groaning as he filled her. “Oh Jack!”

Jack grinned panting. “Mmm...Harley.”

He held her rear bouncing, his hips up in a thrust. Harley gasped meeting his thrust, their body's meeting in quick thrusts, then slow grinds. Harley smiled down at him, her hair starting to fall loose. “Uuhh...puddin...my husband!”

Jack squeezed her rear hard, loving the soft squishy feel of her ass in his hands. “My wife...fucking my wife.” He chuckled gazing up at her before reaching up with one hand to grab her hair and tug her down for a passionate kiss. They thrust and bounced together a few more times, kissing and taking each others breath until. Harley arched up, reaching behind her to stroke his scrotum, causing Jack to thrust hard upward with a deep-chested groan She stroked him gently a few more times before bringing her hands back around to press against his chest.

Harley adjusted her legs, placing her feet back against his thighs, dropping her hands on either side of his head, thrusting and grinding harder. Jack groaned smiling up at his bride, her golden hair falling in soft waves around her face. He leaned up to catch a breast with his lips tugging gently on her nipple. Harley groaned. “Uooh...ooh...” Jack smiled licking her breast, feeling his wife becoming wetter, her panting deeper, faster. “Oooh...puddin...uUhh...”

Jack grabbed her ass with both hands and started pumping harder; he was coming closer, the building pressure threatening to explode, wanting to burst. The sounds of their moans and smacking, wetness becoming more intense, more heated. Harley moaned loudly then Jack groaned. “Uuh...uhh...Harls...”

He thrust hard and fast, then Harley cried out, her orgasm racing through her. “Uuuhhh...JACK!! Oohuhh...”

Jack shoved hard and deep into her, one hand around her cradling the back of her head, yanking her down to kiss her, his other hand sliding down her lower back, pressing her hips down on him. They kissed hard and passionately at the moment he came. Jack's cries mixed with Harley's; she cradled his head between her hands nibbling his lips and tongue shuddering at the pleasure of feeling him. Jack took a few more hard thrusts, emptying his entirety into his wife.

Harley cooed contently kissing him tenderly, pulling away from his mouth only to lick his lips, then the tip of his nose and lastly his cheek. “You are mine, Mr. Wayne.”

Jack laughed holding her close. “Always Mrs. Wayne...always.”
The following morning shone with a mix of clouds, sun and a promise of rain. Alfred was out on the front lawn, dressed in his butler's attire with a garden apron over the front, with a plastic trash bag in hand, picking up candy wrappers and other miscellaneous debris left over from the trick or treaters last night. He smiled to himself. He enjoyed Halloween, especially the children in costume running up to the door, their faces full of eager smiles and laughter.

Usually on Halloween, Jack would help give out candy with the aging butler. Alfred frowned softly remembering that Jack would insist on carving several pumpkins the night before Halloween, lighting them all up, laughing and joking, telling stories about ghosts; the younger Wayne enjoyed the holiday with some of the child-like wonder that his brother lacked.

Bruce would never allow Jack to do anything too scary, warning him about frightening the little children, but Jack would make a wide variety of jack-o-lanterns for the front stoop, never venturing too close to the truly frightening. Alfred remembered Jack precariously standing on ladders to string lights through the trees where he could hang ghosts made of sheets. One year, Jack had even installed a sound system outside for spooky sounds. The younger Wayne would spend a god awful amount of money on a costume if he were going to be home for the trick or treaters (Jack did love to play dress up), while spending all the good part of the day on Halloween trying to get Alfred to dress up with him. Alfred chuckled remembering young Jack pleading with him to dress as a headless horseman with him, tugging on Alfred's jacket tails, his large blue eyes round and pleading. Jack had always been such a thin pale child, especially when compared to Bruce who was healthy and robust looking. Bruce always had parties to attend, while Jack was always home with him, alone. Alfred loved both men as his sons, but had a special place in his heart for Jack. Jack had always seemed more broken, more in need of attention that he did not receive from anyone else...Alfred sighed, his heart twisting at the memory of the little boy Jack had been.

But what made his heart twist even tighter was that this Halloween would have been different...they should have been having a wedding here at the manor. Harleen would have been here to share the holiday with Jack. The boy had finally found someone who understood him, adored him. Alfred stopped picking up the little bits of trash to take a few moments to control himself; hot tears were pricking at the corner of his eyes. He looked back at the manor with a sigh. Jack and Harleen had been so happy and he had been happy for them, thinking that they were going to make a wonderful life together. Alfred had even hoped for children. It had killed him when Miss Harleen had lost the baby, and Alfred had feared it had damaged something in Jack as well...but they both had come back from the tragedy and had been on their way to something special.

That was something the manor desperately needed—life, love...so much of the Wayne estate was clouded by the ghosts of the boys' dead parents, the manor seemed to be weighted with the sorrow of their shared loss. Jack and Harleen's marriage had offered a new hope for the family...a new beginning, but now...now...even when they were released from Arkham, the rift that Bruce had created between him and his little brother would now be damn near impossible to mend. The sorrow the brothers shared had created a chasm between them that may have grown too great to ever bridge. Alfred had known the brothers' relationship was tenuous, but he had really thought the boys were making progress. Now, knowing Jack the way he did, Alfred figured it would take a miracle to get the two young men to speak again. Though Alfred saw the fault more on Bruce's side than Jack's, both men had pushed each other away in different ways all through the years, but it was Bruce's need to shut off his emotions and pursue his quest—which Alfred understood—that created another rift that poor Jack had not understood. Alfred had pleaded with Bruce to include Jack in his pursuit of justice, but Bruce had insisted that Jack wasn't built to handle what being Batman was all about.
If only Bruce understood that Jack was terrified of being alone or Jack understood that Bruce was scared of losing someone he cared about. They both reacted to each other from a place of fear, two lonely boys who saw their parents murdered and who couldn't seem to find their way back to each other. That mugger had taken more from those boys than their parents; he had taken the two young brothers away from each other.

Alfred glanced from the manor toward the gate. He wanted to go to the asylum and see them both, but he wasn't sure how Bruce would react. When he had mentioned the idea, Bruce had told him he thought it was a bad idea, that Jack wouldn't react well to a visit. As Alfred stood there looking at the gate, a crisp breeze blew through the trees sending a few colorful swirl of leaves dancing on the wind. Alfred watched the leaves dancing on the air and he decided that blast it all...he wanted to see both Jack and Miss Harleen and check on them. Alfred smiled. Bruce was gone for the day and would not be there to assert his heavy opinion. He would drive himself to the asylum right away. With that decision made, he shoved the last candy wrapper into the bag and headed inside to change.

Bruce was sitting in his office going over some proposals from the Wayne Research Institute. They were wanting to develop a new type of seed that would take in dry soil and require little water. It was an interesting proposal. He was just contemplating calling to arrange a visit to the lab to discuss the matter with their newest employee, the very interesting Dr. Pamela Isley, when he received a call on his cellphone. Bruce frowned seeing that it was from Barry, the family lawyer. Bruce picked up on the second ring. “Barry what’s up?” he asked his eyes still running over the proposal.

“Did you know all your brother's money is gone?” Barry steamrolled ahead without a hello or good morning.

“What are you talking about?” Bruce frowned, setting the paperwork he had been looking over down on the table and focused his attention on the conversation.

Hardgrove continued. “Okay, the sister of Kopski did file a civil suit. So I thought, since this is your brother's mess, it should come from his accounts. So I called up the accountant to ask about the funds available, but, according to your accountant, your brother's checking account has a thirty-seven dollar balance.”

Bruce frowned in confusion putting his fingers against his temple and rubbing slowly while he spoke. “I don't understand. Why were you looking into my brother's finances?”

Barry took a deep breath. “I thought that I would look into your brother's finances and talk to you about having a check issued from your brother's account since he is the cause of all of this, BUT either your brother has moved all his money to a secret location, an unknown bank account, under his mattress! Fuck if I know! But all I do know is there is no money to pay off the sister from your brother's account,” the lawyer growled in frustration.

Bruce dropped his fingers to his nose and began to rub the bridge wishing he had a drink in front of him, but thankful at the same time thankful that he didn't as he sighed and replied. “I'll pay it,” he said simply, fatigue evident in his tone. “I'll cut a check today.”

Hardgrove sighed. “I'm sorry about this Bruce.”

Bruce shook his head though Barry couldn't see the gesture while Bruce spoke. “It's fine Barry. Look, come by at lunch and I'll give you the check, all right.”

Barry sighed. “Not a problem. See ya soon Bruce.”
Bruce hung up. He knew that Jack hadn't blown all that money...and it was a LOT of money. Jack wasn't stupid—his little brother was never stupid, especially with money. Bruce rubbed a hand across his face thinking about Jack...wondering why he would have moved his money and knowing Jack, it was probably untraceable. He bought a lot of clothes, fast cars, bikes, but he wasn't stupid enough to go broke was he?

Bruce shook his head. No. Jack was genius level intelligent. Jack was smart, crafty even if he was prone to violence and his moral compass seemed...askew. His little brother had simply moved the money somewhere else. The question was why?

Bruce thought about calling Sage for a moment, asking him to trace the money, then decided against it. That wasn't any of his business. He would trust that Jack had a good reason, for now.

That morning Harley woke to the warm feel of Jack's arms tight around her, her senses were filled with Jack. The taste of him on her mouth, the smell of him against her nose, the softness of his skin in her embrace; she wanted to remember the smell of every part of his body, the feel of every part of his skin where it touched hers. She loved him more than words could express, she loved him and now he was her husband. She smiled at the sound of his voice, the soft whisper of Jack's voice, his fingers stroking through her hair softly. “Mmm...my Harley.”

She giggled, just a faint whisper of a laugh on her lips before opening her eyes slowly to gaze up into Jack's blue eyes. Jack's smile spread across his face as he whispered.

“There's beggary in the love that can be reckon'd.”

She opened her eyes fully with a smile. “Shakespeare?”

He chuckled softly brushing his thumb along her cheek, then against the corner of her mouth, before he pressed his mouth over hers, kissing her gently. Harley wrapped her arms around him, then a leg around his hips. Jack laughed nipping at her mouth.

“My frisky little murder kitten, Mrs. Wayne.” He chuckled softly. Harley laughed sliding her tongue once more into his mouth. Jack made muffled sounds of pleasure rolling completely on top of her. Harley laughed, wrapping both legs around him. Jack nibbled at his wife, rocking both of them back and forth laughing, kissing and nibbling.

Their kissing had just began to become more heated, Jack’s erection pressing against her. Her warm body, the softness and sweet smell of his wife taking over his senses when there was a knock at the door, then the sound of the locking mechanism springing loose. Jack reached over grabbing her dress, rolling off of her and draped the dress over her, then swiftly grabbed his jacket to throw it over his lap just as Dale stuck his head in carrying a tray. From the smell of it, the tray contained breakfast.

Dale grinned a little sheepishly. “Sorry to disturb you guys, but I wanted to let you know that we are short staffed today. Apparently a lot of Halloween parties ran over last night and a few guards over did it with the partying. Anyway since we are so short staffed right now, all patients on the sixth floor are eating in their rooms. I thought I would bring you guys breakfast and I can probably buy you another hour, maybe two before I have to take you guys back to your rooms.”

Jack grinned. “Dale my friend, thank you. I would go over there and kiss you, but I'm a little under dressed.”
Harley rolled over, holding the wedding dress to her and waved with a laugh. “Thanks Dale! Tell Sandra thank you for me too!”

Dale blushed setting the tray on the floor. “I will—see you both in an hour or so.”

Dale then stepped out, quietly closing the door behind him. They could hear the locks reengaging. Jack kissed Harley on the forehead before standing up and hurrying over to pick up the tray. “You stay right there pumpkin and I'll serve you breakfast.”

Harley laughed, “Oh puddin!” while watching Jack jump to his feet, toss the clothing aside, then naked walk over to the tray on the floor. She grinned running her tongue over her teeth, her eyes on his tight ass and long lean thighs. He bent over, lifted up the tray (which gave Harley a mouthwatering view) before he walked back over to sit cross-legged in front of Harley. She pushed herself up. The tray was filled with heaps of scrambled eggs, a pile of toast with butter and jam on the side and some of the flat cardboard like bacon, along with two covered white plastic cups with hot black coffee. Little plastic containers of cream and sugar, the ones usually found in a diner, were on the side of the tray. It wasn't the best food, but this morning it was a luxury meal. Harley's stomach made a loud growl. Jack chuckled handing her one of the plates.

“Our first meal as a married couple!” Jack grinned picking up one of the plastic spoons on the tray and handed it to Harley. She giggled as she took the spoon. “Married. I'm married to Jack Wayne,” she said his name dreamily.

Jack laughed and took a large spoonful of eggs. “What are you talking about? I'm married to Harley Quinn! The sexiest woman in Gotham. Hell, the sexist woman on the planet.”

Harley giggled, blushing. “I love you Jack...my puddin.”

Jack smiled reaching over to stroke his fingers along her cheek. “My beautiful wife.”

Harley laughed picking up some toast, spreading some butter on it and took a bite.

Jack took a bite of bacon while he spoke, pointing at her with the bacon. “We need to think about how we are going to get out of here.”

Harley picked up her coffee, poured some sugar and cream into her plastic coffee container. “How Jack? There are guards, orderlies, doctors...” For a moment she looked defeated. She set the coffee down; her voice cracked a little when she spoke. “I just...” She angrily wiped her eyes. “Jack...Crane isn't going to let us go...let me go...he wants...he...Crane...Crane thinks he loves me. He said he wanted to...to rebuild me. Destroy me, then remake me into...something of his...I...”

Jack put his food down, moving over to sit beside her, catching her chin with his fingertips, turning her to look at him. “What did he say exactly?” Jack's touch was tender, but his voice was cold.

“He said he wanted to make me into something better...his creation.” Harley swallowed, one tear slowly trailing down her cheek, her voice a whisper. “He wants me to be a representation of fear Jack, his representation of fear. He wants to destroy you too Jack.”

Jack smiled at her and wiped her tear away with his thumb. “He is not going to win Harley. Not against us.”

She smiled. “You're right Jack...you're always right.” Jack pulled her into his embrace, cradling her head against his shoulder holding her tightly.

Jack grinned. “I know just who is going to help us,” he said softly.
Harley frowned against his shoulder. “Who Jack?”

Jack smiled. “Dale and Sandra.”

Harley sat back so she could look into his eyes. “You think they'll help us?”

“Yes I do. You can tell they're dissatisfied with how things are run around here, with how we're being treated. Plus they helped us to all of this...” Jack motioned around him taking in the solitary room. “…our wedding, so yeah...I just need to put Dale in contact with Alex and Frost. I don't think it will take much of a push to have them seeing the world the way we see it toots.” Jack kissed the tip of her nose before letting her go and picking up her coffee, putting it back in her hands.

“Is there like a phrase, a code word that only Alex would know? Like a secret safe word or something from you that you could tell Dale or Sandra?” Harley took a sip of the hot coffee, the warmth and caffeine chasing away her dread of Crane. Jack scooted closer beside her before picking up his plate of food and started eating again, but not before he giggled. “Safe word...heheh...”

Harley smacked him lightly on the shoulder, but she was smiling. “You know what I mean!”

Jack chuckled around a mouthful of eggs before he continued. “Actually there is a joke I've told Alex. I don't remember...a hundred times. It's become sort of an inside joke with us. Then the joke gradually became a signal. Anytime I told the joke during poker, it came to mean I was in trouble during a card game. Then Alex would make sure I got a card I needed.”

Harley gasped. “Jack Wayne—did you cheat at poker?”

Jack laughed. “That's what you're upset about? Yes, but only in the beginning when I was learning the game. Now...I can win without any help.”

Harley chuckled around a bite of her eggs. “What's the joke?”

Jack took a sip of his coffee before he spoke. “Okay. There was a man with one arm that came to America trying to look for a job, but since he only had one arm, no one wanted to hire him. So the poor man decided to kill himself by jumping off a building.

He went to the highest floor of the building and was about to jump when he saw a man on the street with no arms dancing.

So the man thought to himself...”I have one arm and I'm about to kill myself, but that man has no arms and he's dancing! I need to know his secret!”

The man comes down from the building and goes to the man with no arms and says. “I have one arm and I was about to kill myself, but you have no arms and you're here dancing. Tell me how you do it? How do you stay in such high spirits?”

The man with no arms stares at him and hisses. "Dancing? I'm trying to scratch my ass!”

Harley snorted almost spilling her coffee. “Jack!! That is terrible!”

Jack grinned picking up his coffee and taking sip. “I know!! The first time I told it to Alex, he laughed himself sick. After that, the joke became a signal. That joke was always just long enough for Alex to slip me a card or two during the game while I had everyone's attention. If Dale starts tell Alex that joke, he'll know it's from me.”

Harley gazed at him. “What message would you get to Alex?”
“Right now...help us find a way out of here. Well, at least to let Alex know we need help. If Dale can at least recite the joke, Alex will know we need help,” Jack concluded simply.

Harley nodded as she finished her coffee. Jack reached for her. “Harley. I want to make love to my wife one more time before our time runs out.”

Harley smiled softly swallowing down, a sudden twist in her chest and her eyes burning. “Yes puddin...I would like that...”

Jack pulled her away from the tray and into his arms as he laid back against the padded floor. Harley leaned on his chest gazing down at her puddin. She reached out and ran her hand across his fuzzy jaw. Jack chuckled and dumped her onto her side making her laugh before they rolled to face each other. Jack reached out, brushing his fingers along her jaw. “You are the most beautiful girl I've ever seen Harley.”

She smiled softly gazing with love in her eyes. “You are the most handsome man I've ever seen Jack. I love everything about you.”

He played with a lock of her hair. “Everything?”

Harley nodded. “I love everything about you. Everything we've done together...all of it, every minute of it.”

Jack’s grin was bright. He tugged at her hair gently. Harley brushed her fingers along his collarbone and down his chest, tracing his tattoo, then along the flow of his lean muscled pecs, then lower, over his breast bone. Jack let go of her hair, his fingers tracing a line along her cheek, then slowly caressed the shape of her lips, his gaze drinking her in. Harley brushed her fingertips along his jaw. Jack chuckled and dumped her onto her side making her laugh before they rolled to face each other. Jack reached out, brushing his fingers along her jaw. “You are the most beautiful girl I've ever seen Harley.”

He whispered, his breath warm as it caressed her flesh. “There is no life without you Harley. You are my everything.”

He slid lower, a kiss between her breasts, a lick along her navel, a tender bite at her hip before he pressed his lips to her stomach, dragging the tip of his nose from the curve of her belly back up the flow of her body to between her breasts again. He pressed his soft lips against the nipple of each breast, his tongue flicking out to tease each nipple as if he were paying homage to a goddess before he returned to gaze into her light blue eyes.

She could feel him, hot and hard against her body and she wanted him inside her immediately; her body ached for him to fill that part of her, not just physically, but her very essence needed him. Jack reached down between them, touching her tenderly, a soft stroke of his fingers between her legs. Jack took a moment to grab one of her legs, kissing her knee. Then he stroked her again with his fingers playing along her clitoris. Harley moaned in response spreading her legs wider. He directed himself to her wet opening and slowly glided inside, the two of them becoming one again. Jack groaned, the way her body seemed to fit around him so perfectly made him melt into her. He loved her with every fiber of his being, he wanted to lose himself in her.

Harley brought her legs up to wrap them around his waist, her hands slowly caressing his face and shoulers tenderly while Jack began to move in a slow, tender rhythm that her body fell into easily. Soon they were rocking together, her hips meeting his slow thrusts. Each time he buried himself deep inside her, they would both groan as one. They moaned softly, staring into each others eyes, nipping at each other lips and tongues. Harley stroked his face, as if she were trying to memorize each plane, each angle with her fingertips while Jack leaned on his elbows, his fingers stroking through her silky hair, his mouth exploring her lips and tongue. Jack kissed her tenderly before dragging his lips along her cheek then to her ear where he whispered while his teeth grazed across her ear, his breath coming in heated pants across her skin.

“Love alters not with his brief hours and weeks,

But bears it out even to the edge of doom.

If this be error and upon me proved,

I never writ, nor no man ever loved.”

Harley groaned arching her hips to met his thrust. She gasped and wrapped herself tightly around him, hooking her ankles around his waist, her hands grabbing fistfuls of his hair. “Jack...uuhh...Jack.”

Jack smiled thrusting deeply yet not fast; he kept his movements as slow as possible wanting her to feel each inch of him pressing into her just as he wanted to feel the way she enclosed him, wrapped around him in a tight wet embrace. Jack's movement sped up just a little, not too much, just enough to cause them both to gasp, their shared breath coming in deep pleasurable pants, when her body clenched and her breathing became more rapid. “Uuuuhhh...Jack...Jack!!”

Jack groaned softly, brushing her hair, the sides of her face. “Harley...Harley...”

The sounds of their panting mixed with the soft smack of flesh hitting flesh...

Harley groaned sliding her legs down to hook her feet around his thighs, her hands pulling tenderly at his hair before sliding down his back, feeling the musical way his muscles moved when he pushed himself up on his hands, the stretch and pull of muscle when he arched his back, pressing his hips toward her. Her hands skated back up where she wrapped one arm around his shoulder, her other hand gliding down his side while she kissed him hard and feverishly. She could feel that warm burn rising, racing to completion, bursting then spreading out from her groin through her entire body, opening like a flower to the morning sun.

When Harley came, her cries were muffled against Jack's tongue and lips when he caught her mouth, catching her orgasm. “Mmmhhhuuuhh...” Harley's fingers pressed hard into his skin, her body arching up, her legs tightening around him.

Jack's groans mixed with hers, his thrusts taking up speed feeling her orgasm around him. He tried to remain slow, moving gradually, but it was so difficult. She was so wet, so warm and welcoming that he wanted to let loose and pound her until he came like an eruption, but he dug his fingers into the floor padding and kept his thrusts slow, careful. Jack rose up on his knees slightly, taking one of her legs and hooking the limb over his shoulder then slowly pressing back, pressing into her, leaning down to kiss her. She reached up, her hand threading through his hair, returning his kiss with a smothering passion. Jack placed one hand over her head, the other at her side leaning in slowly, gradually pressing into her then picking up a slow rhythm of gentle thrusts, his lips and teeth catching her tongue and lips in a burning kiss.

Jack's mouth dragged along her lips, across her cheek to her ear, his tongue tracing out of the edge of her ear sending tickles down her spine while his hand dragged down her neck to her breast. He cupped her breast in his long fingered hand and squeezed gently. Harley moaned softly, a whisper of pleasure as she wrapped her arms around him, her hands skating over his sides then around his back holding him to her while his hips moved, thrusting in and out.

He dropped her leg back down again, sitting up on his knees, holding himself on his hands and continued the same slow, sensual thrusting, his mouth back to caressing her lips and tongue. Jack’s breath came in deep moans, his hips thrusting in smooth movements.

“Harley...” Jack moaned her name.

Harley glanced down watching the way he moved his shaft in and out of her causing her to shudder. She made a guttural sound of pleasure then her body jerked toward him. “Ahh...ahh...puddin...ah...grr...harder Jack! Harder!!” Harley growled on the end of her moan which caused Jack to jerk, the combined sound of her pleasure mixed with the waves of erotic heat from her body made Jack shudder. He smiled and sat back on his knees pushing Harley’s legs forward, his hands spread across the backside of her thighs as he started to thrust faster, harder, slamming his hips against her. He grinned, watching the way she jerked with each thrust, watching her breasts bounce each time his thrust met her body. Harley’s hair was spread out around her head like a golden halo; the dim light made her glow.

She smiled up at him, her hands resting on his stomach, sliding to his hips watching his face, or the way his body met hers. Jack whimpered slightly, mixed with a groan. He pressed his hands into her flesh thrusting harder, faster, watching her breasts bounce, the expression of pure bliss on her face.

“My girl...ahhh...uuh...God. My Harley!” Jack felt that warm tickle just before he burst, his orgasm ripping through him causing him to ejaculate in a rush of pleasure. He arched his back, digging his fingers into her legs almost painfully.

Harley screeched in surprise when he came, triggering another orgasm that made her almost vibrate as the pleasurable warmth rippled through her.

Jack collapsed on top of her exhaling. “Damn.”

Harley giggled wrapping her arms and legs tight around him. “I love you Jack.”

Jack nuzzled her neck. “Mm...I love you too my Harley.”

He chuckled softly licking her neck, his teeth brushed the softness of her throat while he whispered. “Find what you love and let it kill you. Let it drain you of your all. Let it cling onto your back and weigh you down into eventual nothingness.

Let it kill you and let it devour your remains.

For all things will kill you, both slowly and fastly, but it’s much better to be killed by a lover.

...Being without you Harley, is killing me slowly,” Jack whispered.

Harley held him tight, her hands gliding gently down his back, then back again in a tender caress. Her hands glided over his shoulders. “Me too puddin...me too.” Her voice broke just a little.

“I'm going to get us out of here Harley. I am going to get us out,” Jack promised.
Before long both Jack and Harley were back in their separate rooms. It was afternoon, nearly one in the afternoon. Harley was lying on her cot holding her hand up and dreamily examining the slightly smudged “ring” on her finger. She grinned. She was married, married to Jack Wayne. She pressed her lips together on a wave of intense emotion when she heard a light knock at her door.

She turned to look out the clear wall to see Sandra standing there looking pale and unwell. Harley sat up. “Sandra?”

She sighed. “Crane wants you.”

Harley blinked in surprise, noticing the lack of a wheelchair. It was only a little thing, but it made her smile. She stood up, slipped on her shoes, and walked over to the door.

“Let's get this over with,” she muttered.

Back in his cell Jack was practicing some magic tricks with his cards. He had been doing push-ups earlier, breaking into a sweat, his focus on his night with Harley. But now he was sitting cross-legged on the floor. He had been smiling all day, his thoughts on his wife, on his Harley and their evening together when Dale came to the door.

“Mr. Wayne...I mean Jack,” the orderly corrected himself. “You have a visitor,” Dale said as he scanned the door lock. Jack lifted a brow noticing the lack of wheelchair and straightjacket.

Jack frowned sliding his cards into a deck and set them on the nearby cot. “Is it Alex again?”

Dale waited while Jack slipped his shoes on. “You mean the man from last time with the one arm?
No. This is an older gentleman. He looked like a butler from one of those old British crime movies if you ask me.”

Jack's face lit up. “Alfred!”

Jack hurried out of his cell stopping for a moment before turning around to stare at Dale. “No wheelchair?”

Dale smiled. “Do I need one Jack?”

Jack gave him a bright smile. “No, no you don't.”

Jack started walking again with Dale walking behind him. “Hey Dale, could you do a favor for me?”

Dale paled only slightly. “Depends,” he said noncommittally.

“I need you to make a phone call for me to that guy who visited me last time. The only thing you need to do is repeat a joke.” Jack grinned over his shoulder at Dale showing off his perfectly straight white teeth. Jack's blue eyes flashed in the light as they walked, for a moment giving Dale a chill that was quickly gone.

“I suppose I could do that,” Dale said softly, seeing little harm in repeating a joke.

Jack grinned. “Perfect. Now, here is the joke you need to memorize and don't worry, my friend will know exactly what it means.”
Dale nodded silently and intently listened to Jack's joke.

Harley arrived at Crane's office only to find another dress, shoes and a bag of makeup and hair supplies waiting just as before. Harley balled her hands into fists, glared at the dress, a navy blue tank dress with little rhinestone details around the collar, a pair of black flats and a little white shrug. Harley ground her teeth for a moment contemplating ripping the dress to shreds, but before she let herself lose control she took a deep breath and let it out slowly. She could do this—for Jack's safety, she could do this...it was just...she guessed lunch this time, just lunch.

She turned around to face Sandra who was standing in the doorway watching Harley. “Let's do this Sandra,” Harley said with a growl.

Sandra nodded giving her a small smile.

This time Harley didn't leave the office. After dressing, having her hair and makeup done by Sandra, the orderly left her in the office. A few minutes later Crane came walking in briskly.

He smiled. “Ah, look at you! Don't you look lovely today!”

Sandra had done Harley's makeup light and fresh, pulling her hair back in a high youthful ponytail. She was sitting with her hands folded on her lap when Crane walked in. She thought about attacking him, grabbing something off the desk, anything that could bash his head in or gouge out his eyes...but then when she let the thought run its course. She realized that she had no idea how to get Jack out, how to get out of the asylum...that getting caught again might be worse...killing Mel and Jack killing Hurd was one thing...Crane clearly had the means to cover those things up...but killing Crane. Harley steeled herself, telling herself she could get through this...

Crane swept into the room, dressed in a tailored pale three-piece blue suit with pale white vertical stripes, an eggshell dress shirt with matching tie and pocket square; he looked elegant, in control. The door behind him had just begun to swing close when an orderly came in pushing a cart right behind Crane. Harley's nose wrinkled with displeasure...she smelled fish.

Crane moved a few things from his desk to make room for the orderly to set out the plates of food. Harley watched as two plates loaded with fish, along with little green onions and what smelled like garlic. Harley gave Crane a sour look. “I hate fish.”

Crane, who had been arranging the silverware, glanced over at her in surprise. “You do my dear?”

“I do.” Harley narrowed her eyes at him.

The urge to grab the plate of fish and plaster it all over his face was strong, but she didn't move. Crane frowned, then motioned at the orderly. “Take these away and bring us each an avocado and egg sandwich Brian, but leave the wine and dessert.”

The orderly, Brian, paled and looked slightly scared for some reason, but he nodded taking the plates and headed off at a quick pace out of the office. Crane smiled, reaching over and taking the bottle of wine from where it rested in a pitcher of ice. He took a moment to open the bottle of wine. “That my dear is precisely why our dining together is so important. It's a way for us to learn each others likes and dislikes.” He poured her some wine and handed the glass to her. Harley reached across the table, taking the glass of wine from him. Crane dragged the tips of his fingers along hers when they touched. Harley suppressed a shudder of revulsion and anger as she took her seat again, but then she downed the wine in one fairly quick swallow. Crane lifted a brow. “More my dear?”

She nodded on her swallow. “Please,” she said after she had gulped the wine down and held the glass out. Crane leaned over his desk and filled the glass to the top. Harley sat back and downed the wine in several hard swallows.

Crane gave her an amused grin. “I thought today, my dear Harleen, we would discuss your past.”

Harley narrowed her eyes at him over the rim of the glass. “My past? What about it?”

Crane smiled. “I was reading more thoroughly through your file. Did you know that Guy Kopski died?”

Harley didn't react except to mutter. “So?” she downed the last of her wine from the glass.

“You filed charges against him for attempted rape did you not?” Crane crossed his legs sipping his wine, his eyes boring into at her.

Harley frowned. “So, he deserved what Jack did to him.” She held her glass out.

Crane smiled, stood up and filled her glass once more before taking his seat. “Like your step-father did? I assume he isn't actually missing, just dead. Didn't he beat you? Did he, your step-father, attempt a sexual assault on you at any point Harleen?”

Harley gripped the glass tightly in her hand; the glass creaked in protest. She stared at him before she took a sip. She rolled the red wine in her mouth then swallowed before speaking. “What are you getting at Dr. Crane?”

Crane took another sip of his wine. “Just trying to understand you Harleen. Understand why you changed your name or rather...didn't you allow it changed? I thought I would give in to your little identity crisis and call you Harley, but I've decided that since you are going to be my creation...Harleen would be better. But back to my original question, why the change? Why is that Harleen? Are you scared of yourself Harleen? Is that why you created Harley? Does Harley represent something to you? Something about yourself?”

Harley stood up growling. “Not another word!! You stop it!!”

Crane stood up as well, setting his glass of wine down before he began to walk slowly over to her. “As a doctor, like myself, surely you see what you are doing by creating another personality...but let me create her for you Harleen. These men in your life: dishonest, disloyal, hurtful...is that why you're with Jack?” Crane stressed Jack's name, giving a “k” a hard crack of his tongue. “A man, clearly going insane...I mean, he bit the throat out of our friendly Dr. Hurd...that is not the action of a sane man.”

As Crane spoke, he stepped around his desk slowly, carefully, forcing Harley to either let him get close or move out of his way. She realized when she took a step back, she was a little dizzy...the wine...too much on an empty stomach she supposed.

Crane continued. “Is that why you want to shed your skin? Become something new, something glorious? A woman who can kill without regret, take charge of her life? Well, my dear, dear Harleen—that is exactly what I am offering you. I'm offering you not just power, but the strength of fear. Once you become what you are destined to be...my Lady Crow...then all will fall at your feet.”

“You're crazier than Jack and me put together if you think I will become your Lady Crow or whatever!” Harley wobbled then, nearly tripping over her chair and dropped the wine glass where it shattered on the floor. Crane reached for her, but she shoved her hands against his chest.

Crane looked down at her hands, then his eyes widened. She let go, taking another step back from him, but his hand snapped out grabbing her left wrist in a painful grip. He yanked her arm up and stared at her hand.

Crane snarled. “What is this?”

He was staring at her ring finger where Jack had written, “Property of Jack.” Crane's left eyelid twitched. “What is this?!?”

His grip was painful, but Harley just smiled.

Alfred sat on a stiff plastic chair by the partition, glancing around the room. The place was unsavory and it made Alfred's stomach turn to know that Master Jack and Miss Harleen were in here. He could only imagine what it was like within the confines of the asylum itself. Alfred rubbed his hands along his thighs, straightening out imagined creases in his black slacks, and then the door on the other side of the partition opened. Jack was escorted into the room by a heavily built orderly with a stern face.

Alfred frowned when he saw Jack. The awful black and white asylum outfit hung on Jack...he had clearly lost a little weight. His hair had grown out some, just a little, but enough that only Alfred would notice, long strands framing his face as they hung loose instead of slicked back as he usually wore it, and Jack clearly hadn't shaved since he had been committed. The young man looked disheveled, which would be a mild statement. What made Alfred's stomach roil was that he could see the fading remnants of bruises on Jack's face. They were faint, but being a man who knew Jack's face well (for all intents and purposes Alfred was Jack's father) and he recognized, from years of Jack getting himself into fights, the slightly yellow and dim purples on the young man's face of recent bruising.

Jack took the chair across from Alfred. Jack's smile had started off slightly mocking, as if he were putting on a show, but when his blue eyes landed on Alfred Jack's expression broke, a real smile replaced the fake and there were hints of tears in his eyes, just at the edges of real genuine happiness at seeing the older man.

Alfred leaned forward placing his own hand on the clear plastic. He could see the healed scrapes on the young man's hands. “Master Jack. How are you doing?”

Jack frowned, dropping his hand. He glanced back at the guards and orderlies. “It's...” He swallowed. Seeing Alfred had triggered feelings in Jack that made him uncomfortable, but he loved the old man, trusted him.

“It's awful here. They're keeping Harley and me apart Alfie.” Jack's voice broke slightly.

“Master Jack. I'm sorry.” Alfred frowned slightly. “Is there anything I can get you? Anything I can do?”

Jack smiled, the words said with a slight laugh. “Well I could really use a cigarette and a couple of bottles of bourbon...” Jack chuckled, but he could see that Alfred was serious. Jack tilted his head studying the older man. He laughed again, but it wasn't a mocking laugh; it was a laugh filled with pain as he said. “Wanna break us out?”
Jack said it with a smile, not really serious, but Alfred looked serious, deadly serious. There was no hint of mocking in his voice or tone, his face was a cross between seriousness and being upset. Jack could see that the man was barely holding himself together.

Alfred said softly, just loud enough for Jack to barely hear, “I'll look into what can be done Master Jack.”

Jack blinked in surprise leaning forward. “Really?”

“Yes Master Jack and I'll talk to Master Bruce.” Alfred frowned and nodded as if confirming something to himself. “You and Miss Quinzel do not belong in here. This place, from the little I've seen is...unsavory. I'm not sure what Master Bruce is thinking...but I will discuss this with him, I promise you that.” Alfred was frowning deeply when he finished.

Jack smiled, his heart tightening in his chest. It felt...good to know that Alfred cared about him that much.

“Have you heard how Miss Harleen is doing?” Alfred asked with clear distress in his eyes. Jack glanced around and leaned forward with a whispered. “I got to see her last night. She is holding on Alfred. It's hard on her...” he hissed. “They've hurt her Alfred, they hurt my girl. ”

Alfred felt a chill race down his spine, and he could see the pain in Jack's eyes.

Crane surprised Harley when he nearly yanked her off her feet glaring at her left hand. He dragged her close, his grip on her wrist was tight enough that she felt the pain racing down her arm and the limb began to tingle, an ice chilling numbness began to spread down her arm, but she giggled. “It's my ring. I belong to Jack. We got married right under your nose! I'll never be yours!! NEVER!”

Crane narrowed his eyes at her, glaring down at her. He wasn't sure if she was lying or not. He could interrogate some of the staff, but he didn't want to draw attention or to sow discord among the ones he did employ for his extra sessions and experiments. So he could do the next best thing...

“I will break you Harleen. I will destroy you and remake you into my creature.” He shook her a little as he continued. “I was going to save this, but I see you have forced my hand.” Crane's smile didn't reach his eyes, but just before she could land a kick or a blow, he lifted his hand back, exposing something under his wrist. She didn't quite see it, didn't know what it was under his wrist, but suddenly a cloud of greenish gas hit her in the face. Harley gagged then coughed. She continued to cough violently.

“There, there my dear—let the toxin do its work. Do you like my new form? Gas, absorbed through the pores and each breath you take sucks it down into your lungs. It should be hitting the bloodstream now, the effects are almost instantaneous. Tell me, what do you see? What is it you fear, my dear?” He yanked her forward and wrapped his free arm around her waist, tugging her against him as if they were about to perform a dance. Harley continued to cough, her struggles becoming weaker. She looked up as the room around her wavered, becoming grey and indistinct, the room's existence didn't seem solid any longer. Her blue eyes shifted to Crane, whose face seemed to waver and morph like the room, insubstantial as if it couldn't decide on a form, as if it were made from puddy. Crane's face elongated, the flesh blackened and tore away to reveal the muscle, then the bone underneath. Harley started to panic, breathing became difficult while she watched in horror as Crane transformed.
In the next beat of her heart, the skin reformed and she saw her step-father. His eyes glowed and his smile stretched and streaked across his face, blood started to leak slowly from his eyes running down his face.

“Now, now Harleen...what is it you're seeing?” Crane's voice came out of the monstrosity that was her stepfather, then his voice changed and it was her stepfather's voice.

“Little Harleen. You stupid fucking little bitch. You know no one wants you. That's why your mother lets me beat on you. She's hoping I'll kill you one day. No one wants you, little slut.”

Harley dropped to the floor cowering from whatever her his toxin was helping her mind to form. “NO!!”

“I'm going to hurt you Harleen. Teach you a lesson!” The voice of her stepfather seemed to come out in a roar like a beast. She looked up again and screamed when the face changed, melting and morphing until she saw half of the face as Guy. “You fucking cunt. I'm going to teach you a lesson. No one will ever want you, love you? You think that fucking rich boy loves you? He only wants to use you...you're his toy, you mean nothing to him. You mean nothing to anybody!”

The face changed into Jack's and he was laughing. “I don't love you Harley...how could anyone love you?”

Harley chin trembled, but then the face transformed again, the mouth too big, the eyes filled with green flames, the teeth elongated into fangs that moved closer.

She screamed.

One of the orderlies walked over laying a hand on the Jack's shoulder, his squared off fingers pressed down into Jack's shoulder, digging in until Jack was forced to lean to the side. This orderly wasn't especially tall, but broad shouldered with a military style haircut, a jaw so square that the angles looked like they might cut glass and deep set brown eyes. His name tag read Norman.

Jack glanced up at Norman. “Time up Mr. Bates?” Jack grinned at his joke though the orderly showed no response. Jack sighed. “Doesn't anyone watch the classics anymore?”

Norman grunted and pressed his fingers into Jack's shoulder a little harder. Alfred saw the younger Wayne jerk uncomfortably.

Jack frowned. “Well, I guess our time is up Alfred.”

Alfred frowned looking around for someone of authority, anyone he could speak to as he protested. “I was told I would have an hour!”

Norman tugged on Jack forcing the young man to his feet. He said in a surprisingly high pitched voice, “Talk times over mister. Wayne, back to your room.”

Jack hissed at Alfred. “Get us out Alfred!! Please!”

Jack struggled, pulling away from the orderly named Norman. “Don't let Bruce keep us here Alfred!! This place isn't what he thinks!”
The orderly reached out and grabbed Jack yanking him back and forcing him to turn around before he shoved Jack to the door causing the younger man to stumble. Jack turned and yelled, “Please Alfred!” Then he was shoved through the doorway.

Alfred stood up glaring at the guards who started to file through the door leaving. “I want to talk to someone in charge! This is unacceptable!”

No one answered him.

Jack was shoved down the hall by Norman who was flanked by two guards, each with their batons out. “Hey where's Dale?” Jack turned to ask the orderly named Norman. Norman said in a voice with little color to it except for its high pitch. “He's busy Mr. Wayne. Now don't give me any trouble. I won't hesitate to sedate you.”

Norman shoved Jack along until they came to the fork that led to the elevators and back up to the sixth floor. Jack started to turn, but Norman grabbed his shoulder and roughly steered Jack in the other direction. “Hey, where are we going?” Jack stumbled.

“Someone has a score to settle with you Mr. Wayne. So you're going to the aviary.” Norman finally smiled.

“What?” Jack tried to turn, but he was roughly shoved forward. As they passed another hall, Jack happened to glance down it and nearly stopped. He stumbled staring as he was shoved past, but he could have sworn he saw his father. Jack’s heart seemed to skip a beat and he allowed himself to be roughly shoved, but Jack felt himself break out into a cold sweet. That couldn't have been his father...could it?

Crane smiled, crouched down next to Harley to study her. Her reaction to his toxin had been immediate and he couldn't be sure yet, but it seemed more extreme than last time. But he needed to test it. He reached out to stroke her hair which caused her to sob and cower, pulling herself into a tighter ball. He smiled broader, pleased.

She was on her knees, her arms over her head sobbing. He stood over her watching her, basking in the beauty of her fear, just as the door open and the orderly came in with their lunch. The young man stopped in his tracks when he saw Harley sobbing on the floor.

Crane turned; he had just started to walk toward his desk. “I want her taken to the blackout box.”

Brian frowned. “But...”

Crane stopped on his way around his desk, his fingers resting on the top of the desk. Crane spoke without turning around. “Do it or you can look for another job.”

“Yes sir.” Brian put the sandwiches down on the desk and hurried over to Harley. He struggled to get Harley on her feet. She cried and pushed back on the orderly, taking a swipe at him, her hand connecting with his face as she yelled. “DON'T TOUCH ME GUY!!!”

(To Harley she was seeing Guy who was laughing, his face distorted and monstrous, maggots leaking from his mouth as he hissed. “I'm going to fuck you up Harl...going to make you mine. Jack Wayne doesn't love you, never did...you belong to me—just like you always have.” )
Harley screamed again, struggling against Brian. The young orderly was talking soothingly to her, trying to hold her steady. “It's okay miss, it's okay.”

Crane sighed, walked around his desk and yanked open a drawer. He searched for something while the young man was struggling to get a hold of Harley. The orderly continued to mewl nonsensically at her while he struggled with getting a hold on her; it was quite embarrassing and made Crane quite irritable. The man was supposed to be an orderly, but clearly, competency could not be assumed. Crane picked up a case from inside the desk, a flat, black case and snapped it open. Inside were four syringes with a strange greenish liquid inside. Crane picked up one of the syringes, held it up and tapped the cylinder. He stepped over and without hesitation plunged the needle into Harley's neck while she struggled with the orderly. Within seconds she collapsed.

Crane smiled. “There. Now take her to the blackout box and don't forget to turn on the sound system.”

Brian struggled to hold onto Harley's dead weight. He trembled, but answered, “Yes sir.”

The young man lifted her up into his arms and walked out of the office carrying Harley's unconscious body. Crane walked back around to his computer and sat down, flipping open his computer and with a few taps of the keys he had his monitors up.

“This should be most interesting,” he said softly to himself.

Alex frowned setting his phone down. He knew Jack was in trouble...the obvious part of that trouble was being committed to the asylum, but now...he had just received a call from some man named Dale, an orderly who worked at Arkham and claimed that he knew Jack. Alex had been about to hang up when the man on the other end proceeded to tell a joke...that old terrible joke that Jack always told when he was in trouble...usually at cards. Jack hadn't used it in a long time...mostly because Jack never got into trouble that he couldn't get himself out of...

Jack hadn't used the joke in so long that Alex had almost forgotten about it until he received that phone call.

Alex sat back, his features twisted in contemplation, leaning against the headboard of his bed. He was usually asleep at this hour since he was active at night, not during the day, which was another reason the phone call had been odd.

Alice who was lying on her stomach partly asleep, mumbled next to him, wrapping her arms around her pillow. “Who was it Alex?”

He frowned. “Someone from the asylum.”

Alice came awake and sat up surprising him. “What did they want? Are Jack and Harley being released?”

Alex shook his head. “Nah...it was a message...from Jack I think.”

“You think?” Alice frowned at him.

Alex sighed putting his arm out. Alice slipped closer and laid her head on his chest, wrapping her arm around his middle. Alex continued. “Jack used to tell this awful joke about a man with one arm. Anyway, I don't remember how it started, but Jack would tell this joke every time he was in trouble at a card game. Anyway, this guy from Arkham just called me, said he was a friend of Jack’s and told the joke.”

Alice frowned against his chest then she whispered. “He's asking for help, right?”

“I guess so. I mean...well, I told you what it was like when I went to visit...” Alex sounded preoccupied when Alice said softly. “Then you have to help them Alex. You have to help them get out of there. I bet that's what that call was about.” Alice sat up and took Alex's face in her hands. “We have to help break them out of Arkham.”

“How do we do that?” Alex asked.

Alice smiled. “I think we first need to get a hold of that guy who was driving them...what was his name? Freeze? Snow...something cold...” Alice murmured.

Alex grinned. “Frost.”

When they arrived at the aviary, Jack was shoved through the door. He stumbled inside and the door was yanked closed behind him. Jack stood by the door gazing around. The place had clearly been left to rot. The glass walls that ran up the sides like a greenhouse were covered in grime and moss. There were a few ferns and other plants in here that had been left to run wild, taking over the stonework and the cages that Jack could see hanging from the ceiling or displayed along the walls. There were also old trees with long branches that hung alongside artificial branches that hung throughout the aviary, covered in the ancient waste of long dead birds.

Jack wrinkled his nose. The place smelled dank, mixed with rot and decay. He looked around slowly, trying to figure out what was going on when he saw Ernie step out of the darkness. “Hey pretty boy, time to pay the piper.”

Brian carried the unconscious patient to “the room” on the sixth floor where they kept the blackout box. It was a small box, three feet long by two feet high and two feet wide, just big enough for the patient to be curled up inside with no room to move. Unlike the original type of blackout box the CIA used to use for interrogation, the asylum—or Dr. Crane—had at least put in air holes for the patient. Other than that, it was the same as what the CIA used to interrogate prisoners.

Brian had heard about the blackout box from the other orderlies who laughed about how the patients would react. They joked about the screaming and the crying. About how freaked out the lunatics would be when they finally pulled them out of the box. The stories had made Brian sick. Yet here he was carrying a patient to the box. For a moment he considered just walking out, but he needed this job and what did he know; maybe this treatment actually helped?

The box was just a basic wooden box, mostly used on the sixth floor patients since they were usually, though not always, the most violent patients. Though Brian hadn't heard of it being used since he started to work here, which was about six months ago, here it was. But today...he felt his stomach do a somersault as he flipped the lid open with his foot and placed the woman he was carrying inside. No sooner had he lowered her in than her eyes flew open. She jerked as if someone had pinched her, then looked at him. For a brief moment Brian thought about how pretty she was, with her long blonde hair, blue eyes...a sweet face, but then she screamed and her eyes went wild. The patient started to stand. Brian panicked slamming his hand down on her head and shoved her down hard back into the box before grabbing the lid and slamming it on top of her, probably hitting her head pretty hard. She cried out in pain and tried to push on the lid, but Brian sat down on the box, working in a frenzy to find the lock. He found it after a few moments of struggling to keep her inside the box, flipped the lock that was dangling by one of his legs into place before he hurriedly slid the padlock—that had been hanging on the latch—into place and locked it as the woman struggled and screamed.

Once she was secure, he jumped off and backed away. The woman screamed again, banging against the box. “LET ME OUT!! LET ME OUT!! THEY’RE IN HERE!! PLEASE!!” Brian stood there for a moment staring at the box, his own fear making him tremble. He was shaking, listening to the woman screaming, then her screams dissolved into crying. He looked around for the sound system that Crane told him about. When he saw it he walked quickly over and turned on the system. Brian turned on the system and the loud sounds of a squalling baby echoed through the room via hidden speakers. Brian stared at the box for a moment; over the maddening sound of a tortured baby over the speakers, he could only just barely hear the woman crying inside before he turned and rushed out of the room.

Inside the box the fear toxin worked through Harley. She couldn't move, the box was too small, too cramped, making any movement difficult. A little light worked its way through the tiny holes in the lid, but it wasn't enough to see by, only enough to make the darkness seem to move and shift around her. Harley whimpered, she was sure she saw something crawling along the inside of the box, but then the sounds of a baby's cries filled the tiny space.

Harley whispered in pain. “No...oh please no...”

And then she heard the voices. First Harleen's voice whispered. “You don't think he could possibly love you, do you?”

Then the voice of her stepfather hissed at her. “You worthless slut...”

Then Guy's voice. “You whore...”

Then the crying child and Jack's voice. “You let our child die Harley...”

Then something in the box rose up, a thick blackness that wrapped itself around her, sucking all the air from the tight space. Harley gasped, suddenly unable to breath. That was when she started to feel the touch of things on her skin. Simple brushes, light, a breath moving the hairs on her arm, on the back of her neck...then more solid touches as if something were trying to burrow into her flesh.

Harley jerked trying to brush whatever it was off, but she couldn't move, but then the shadow voices started again.

Her stepfather's voice hissed. “You always were a dumb bitch. You deserve every beating I gave you...little cunt.”

Guy's voice drifted over her skin. “No one would find you attractive...you always were so stupid. You little whore...”

She shuddered as the things that she felt crawling on her skin increased in number, rolling over her then through her flesh, burrowing into her. Harley was crying, sobbing then screaming as the darkness...the fear and all her monsters sank into her.

Sandra had just come on duty. She was assigned for the night shift, which started around five o'clock. She had just stepped off the elevator and was heading over to the employee 'lounge' which was a small room with a beat up couch, a TV from the last century, a coffee machine, tiny employee refrigerator, snack machine and a soda machine. She had just started to turn into the room when she saw Brian running down the hall and straight for the elevator.

“Hey Brian.” She waved, but he dashed by her and into the elevator, turning to slam his finger on the buttons. Sandra turned frowning at him. “What's wrong?”

Brian stared at her. “Crane had me put that blonde he likes in the blackout box,” Brian hissed just as the elevator doors closed. Sandra stood there for a moment holding her bag lunch in one hand, her purse in the other. “What?” she said softly in disbelief. Sandra dropped her bags and turned rushing for the room where she knew the box was kept.

*

Ernie grinned. “Told you I was going to make you my bitch. Lucky for me, couple of the orderlies are old buddies of mine. They were more than happy to give me this space so we can have a little private time.”

Jack giggled. “Oh look at you! Feeling all confident about yourself! Decided you could take me on all by your lonesome! I'd be impressed if you weren't so stupid.”

Ernie snarled and stalked closer. Jack was sure the man figured his size was intimidating, but Jack thoroughly believed in the old saying; the bigger they are, the harder they fall. Jack stepped backwards letting Ernie think he was intimidating him while on the inside Jack was angry and bored.

Ernie continued to grin, which Jack felt did absolutely nothing to improve the man's face. “Back in Blackgate I had little bitches sucking me off willingly...they wanted to be mine...wanted what I could give them, protection...things ain't going to be any different here. You're going to go down on your knees and when you'er done sucking me off...you'll be lucky if all I do is beat you senseless for what you did ya little bitch.”

Jack chuckled. “What I did? You mean stand up to you? Kick you in the dick? Or when I said you had a small dick?” Jack's smile spread across his face. “Oh that was just the flirting Ernie. What I'm going do to you right now is the main attraction and believe me...you are going to be screaming.”

Jack decided he wanted this over quickly. When Ernie was closer, Jack rushed forward and slammed the side of his hand against Ernie's Adam's apple, immediately sending the man gasping and choking. Ernie stumbled back, but Jack next took a couple of swings, landing hard hits to Ernie's ugly face. Ernie stumbled backwards a couple of steps, but no stranger to violence, he came back with a quick lunge, actually surprising Jack when his hand shot out and grabbed Jack around the throat before he punched him in the face, his meaty fist cutting over the skin on Jack's left cheek. Jack yanked his head back, broke loose from Ernie's hold, stumbling with the strike, though the blow split his lips. Jack tasted blood. His knees hit against a stone planter smarting for a moment. Ernie followed him, pressing his advantage, but Jack pushed himself away from the planter rolling to the left so that Ernie's next swing missed.

Jack chuckled. “What's the difference between your penis and a joke?”

Ernie snarled and took a swing at him which Jack easily dodged continuing to talk. “Nobody laughs at your jokes!”

Jack snickered, but Ernie landed a hit, striking Jack in the side. Jack expelled a burst of air wincing Ernie grabbed him and threw Jack to the mossy, dirt covered walkway. Ernie reached down to grab him, but Jack twisted his legs, surging to his feet with his fists following in a flurry that landed a hard hit to Ernie's mouth bloodying the big man's lip and leaving cuts on Jack's knuckles from the other man's teeth.

Jack danced backwards, breathing hard, but grinning. “That all you got?”

Ernie hissed. “You fucking bitch!”

He swung, his fist snapping straight out at Jack's face, but Jack's arm snapped up to deflect his opponent's wrist while twisting his hand to grasp the other man's wrist tightly and forced his arm upward. Jack struck out with his right fist, but Ernie grabbed Jack around the throat. Jack grabbed the man's wrist trying to pull Ernie's large ham sized fist off his throat while keeping the other hand up in the air. Ernie panted, hissing through his teeth, sweat rolling down his face. Jack ground his teeth struggling. Ernie was not just big, he was strong. They stayed like that, locked in a dance that only gave a step or two to each partner when the stalemate was broken when Jack walked Ernie back a step or two, then let go of the hand at his neck, swung that hand up between them, smashing his forearm hard enough into Ernie's forearm to break the big man's hold. He wrapped that arm around Ernie's and thrust his fist into Ernie's diaphragm with two hard jabs, leading with his knuckles so that the punches hurt more.

Jack's fist struck Ernie in the chest to little effect, but Ernie turned slightly and slapped Jack's second hit to the chest away, throwing Jack off enough that Ernie could get a hit in, his big knuckles giving Jack a glancing blow to his chin. Jack hissed in anger, backhanding Ernie.

Ernie broke free of Jack's hold, dropped himself forward, leading with his shoulder and rushed into Jack. Ernie grabbed the slimmer man around the waist before throwing him to the floor of the aviary. Jack gasped as the air was knocked from his lungs in a painful whoosh when his back slammed into the stone walkway.

Ernie straddled Jack, reaching down toward him, but Jack punched upward just as Ernie leaned over trying to wrap his hands around Jack's neck. Jack thrust upward with the palm of his hand to slam Ernie in the nose, which broke with a sound like hard fruit being hit with a hammer.

Ernie roared in pain and grabbed his nose with both hands. Jack bucked then swiftly shimmied himself out from under Ernie just as the big man stumbled to his feet, blood gushing from between his fingers.

Jack, panting painfully, blood flooding in thick rivulets down his cheek, nose and lips walked toward Ernie who was actually making little liquid sounding wheezing noises. Jack grinned and reached forward grabbing the big man's pants and with an economical amount of movement Jack had the guy's pants down to his knees. Ernie looked at Jack askew then grinned despite his painful bloody nose. “Decided to see the light did ya pretty boy?” Ernie chuckled stuffily.

Jack chuckled. “Oh I know exactly what I want big boy.” Jack grinned grabbing Ernie by the balls, digging his fingers in painfully.

The sounds Ernie made went from liquid wheezes to higher pitched gasps of pain, choking and gagging at the new level of pain. Jack smiled, his teeth covered in blood. “Now Ernie, isn't this what you wanted? I mean I'm willingly touching your cock, ain't I?” Jack twisted his hand digging his fingers in until he felt the warm ooze of blood as skin tore open under his assault. Jack spit blood while he spoke standing causally with his hand wrapped around Ernie's now bloody testicles.

“You know, I thought about killing you. It would make my life a lot easier, but then I thought...that's just not funny! I mean, locked in an asylum you have to get your laughs where you can right?” Jack smiled at Ernie who was continuing to writhe and groan, sweat now pouring down his face. His hands weakly grasped at Jack's wrist and then Jack cocked his head to the side. “Don't you think it would be funny if I castrate you? Because I sure do.”

Jack twisted and yanked with all his strength feeling his hand flood with blood. Ernie howled in pain, but then with a quick hard yank, Jack tore tubules, connective tissues, and wrenched Ernie's testicles off. He casually threw them across the aviary though he didn't quite hear the wet splat of loose flesh hitting the ground over Ernie's strangled cries. The large man dropped to his hands and knees, howling in pain, blood pouring from between his legs. Jack wiped his bloody hand on Ernie's shoulder before he smiled and brought his foot down hard on one of Ernie's hands, using his heel to grind down on Ernie's fingers, bringing his foot up to slam the heel down again, then grind again, the fingers of that hand snapping and splintering. Jack stomped down with all his strength a few times in quick session, the man already in too much pain to fight back as Jack crushed Ernie's hand. Ernie topped over onto his side gurgling, covered in his own blood, his hand a mangled mess, fingers twisted at odd angles.

Jack crouched down, balancing on the balls of his feet smiling down at Ernie. “I hope we have an understanding now. No one touches me but Harley, no one touches my friends either. And lastly, no one is the big “dog” around here but me...got it?”

Ernie twitched on his side groaning, whining and gurgling. Jack watched him a moment longer, then smiled. “Nice talk.”

* Sandra raced down the hall to “the room.” Everyone new about the blackbox. Sandra had been here long enough that she had seen Crane use it only once on a woman named Becky Albright...his other interest. It did not end well at all. Sandra didn't want to see Harley end up like Becky...

Sandra burst into the room. The box was located in the middle of the room, sealed shut, the sounds of a crying infant continuing on and on. Sandra hurried over to the sound system where it sat on a plain table and turned it off, but once the room was quiet, something else made her go still, her blood got cold. No sounds emanated from the interior of the box.

She raced over to the box, grabbed the lock; she yanked on it, but it was locked tight and she had no idea where the key could be...it had to be in here somewhere...or would Crane have it? The orderly cursed under her breath as she raced out of the room. She didn't go to Crane, not only would it take too long, but there was no guarantee he would give her the key. Instead Sandra raced to the supply closet.

* Jack stepped away from Ernie, watching the man lying on his side whimpering like an agonized child. Jack giggled licking blood from the corner of his mouth when four guards came rushing into the aviary, finally responding to the screams of Ernie. Jack turned and waved. “Hey boys! We had an exciting first date! We even got to second base! WooWoo!”

The guards saw Ernie lying on his side in a spreading pool of blood. Their reaction was instant, the four guards rushed him, yanking their batons out at the same time. Jack grinned winking at them, then made a kissy face before he threw his arms out and took a perfect stage bow. The men rushed in and surrounded him. Jack didn't fight them; he let them beat him, dropping down on his knees, putting his hands on the back of his head. He clenched his jaw, kept a smile on his face, closed his eyes and focused on Harley, his Harley. As they hit him, knocking him flat to the ground, grabbed his arms yanking them behind his back, Jack smiled, his focus on his wife.

Sandra raced down the hall, turning to run down to the end of another hall and yanked open the supply closet door. She knew that some of the janitors kept a tool box in here. They weren't suppose to...no dangerous items on the sixth floor, but she knew they hated having to run downstairs if they needed a wrench or a hammer. Sandra reached up yanking on the cord that hung from the ceiling. The bulb above her clicked on, the white light almost too bright. She searched frantically until she saw it, the plastic tool box shoved behind the piles of toilet paper. Sandra grinned.

She grabbed the box, yanked it out and threw open the lid. Inside the box she saw a wrench, hammer, pliers, nails...she grabbed the hammer and took off, leaving the door open in her haste. She raced back to the room where Harley was, sliding up to the box and with all her strength she took the hammer to the lock. Sandra had to hit the lock four more times before she finally broke it, ripping the metal that was attached to the wood off the box. She dropped the hammer and yanked the lid up.

Harley was inside, curled in what looked to Sandra like an impossibly tight ball. She neither moved nor made any sound at all. Sandra crouched down and scooped Harley out. Harley didn't react to Sandra. The orderly frowned, but she held her close and hurried out.

Sandra carried Harley to her cell, awkwardly opening the door and carrying her inside. She laid the young woman down, easing her legs down, then tried to tug Harley's hands away from her chest. Harley opened her eyes then, and Sandra could see they were bloodshot.

“Jack hates me,” Harley whispered, her eyes glazed at full of something that made Sandra fearful.

Sandra narrowed her eyes and reached out grabbing Harley's left hand and held the limb up forcing Harley to look at her hand.

Sandra hissed. “You see that, on your finger? He loves you. He married you. That's the drugs talking. I know you're strong enough to fight whatever Dr. Crane did to you. You're a fighter.”

Harley's eyes focused on the words on her ring finger. They were smeared now, but still mostly legible. “Property of Jack.” Harley said it out loud.

Sandra nodded. “Don't let Dr. Crane win Miss Harley. Please.” The big woman reached out and gently stroked her fingers over Harley's hair, her voice soothing. “You know Jack loves you. I've never seen anyone love someone like you two...Don't give in. Don't give in to any of...this.”

For a long few minutes Sandra was terrified that she had been too late, that Harley was gone and that Crane had won, but then Harley took a deep breath and hissed. “I'm gonna kill him Sandra. I'm going to rip his tongue out and make him eat it.” Harley giggled, tears springing to her eyes. “I'm gonna make him pay.” She giggled again, turning to smile at Sandra.

Sandra smiled sadly stroking her hair. “Dale and me...we are going to get you guys out of here. I promise.”

Harley sat up and wrapped her arms around Sandra. The big woman held her and gently stroked her back. Sandra didn't care what these people may have done or whether or not they were truly unstable, but no one deserved to be treated like this...she would find a way to get them out.

Jack was being dragged between two guards, laughing the whole time. “You guys want to hear some eunuch jokes? I bet Ernie would appreciate them right about now!”

One of the guards, a homely red-headed man with a badly pock-scarred face hissed. “Shut the fuck up or we'll make you a eunuch!”

Jack chuckled but continued on, not the least bit intimidated by the guard's threat. “A guy goes to a doctor and says, “Doctor, I want to be castrated.” The doctor is taken back and wonders why the man wants to be castrated.

“Are you sure?” asks the doctor.

“Yes. My wife insisted on it.” He replies.

The doctor raises his eyebrows and says, “You know very well that this process is not reversible. It is permanent and cannot be undone at all, right?”

The man, now getting impatient, shouted at the doctor,” Hey! Are you gonna do it or do I get someone else for the job?”

The doctor agreed to the man’s pleas and proceeded to castrate him. Later the man is taken to the ward to recover.

The next day, he had problems walking to the loo because of the pain in his groin and as he walked, he saw another guy walking more or less like him. He approached him and said.

"So you also decided to undergo the operation?"

“Yes,” replied the other man. “My wife insisted that if I wanted to sleep with her, I had to get a circumcision.”

“Damn!” said the guy, his face turning pale. “Circumcision! Circumcision! Circumcision! That was the word! My wife is gonna kill me!!

One of the guard's dragging Jack snickered which earned him a hard swat from the red-head, but they had arrived at Jack's cell.

“Toss him in,” the red-headed man snarled.

Jack was tossed into his cell without any medial treatment, the door slamming shut. “I hope you rot.”

The red-head guard hissed before walking away.

Jack lay on the floor of his cell and gave the retreating guard the finger laughing to himself as he did so. He winced a little as he pulled himself up using the edge of his cot for balance. His whole mouth tasted like blood and everything hurt a little. Jack snickered muttering out loud. “Bet I feel a hundred times better than old Ernie.”

He dropped onto his cot, dropping his arm over his eyes when he heard someone move in his room. Jack was immediately on alert. He very carefully and slowly moved his arm turning his head toward the sound.

“It's me Jack.” His mother stepped closer, the little light coming into the room danced over her skin. Jack stared, his expression a cross between hope and fear. It was her, just as he remembered her. She wore her hair in a bob, her soft brown hair curling just under her ears, her smile warm and inviting and her eyes, a soft light blue, were filled with love, just the way she always looked at him when he was little. She was the only person who had ever looked at him with such unconditional love...until Harley.

“Mamma?” Jack looked at her confused, his hair falling across his forehead making him look even younger. He stood up, running his tongue over the split in his lip, the sting telling him that he wasn't dreaming, that this had to be real. She was dressed exactly like she had been the night she was killed, the dark blue dress that brought out the light blue of her eyes, the black wrap around her shoulders, everything was as he remembered it in graphic detail, all the way down to the pearl necklace round his mother's neck.

Part of him wanted to dash forward and wrap his arms around her, to be lost in the scent and warmth of his mother's embrace...her unconditional love, but he knew she couldn't be real. It had to be a trick, a drug...something that was causing him to hallucinate; she couldn't really be here no matter how much he wanted her to be. Jack knew he wasn't completely sane by conventional thinking...but Jack knew he wasn't insane either.

“You're not real,” Jack stated his voice cracking slightly. He blinked rapidly fighting the pain in his chest, the tears that were slowly welling at the corners of his eyes, threatening to spill down his cheeks. “You're dead. I saw you die. You and Daddy. I saw you both die.” Jack's voice came out in a hoarse panicked whisper.

“Oh Jack, I'm real sweetie.” Martha smiled and held her arms out. “Let me hug you and you'll see that I'm just as real as you, my little boy. You have been through so much pain. I'm so sorry. Let me hold you.” Her voice was tender, just like he remembered. Jack could feel himself starting to tremble. He hated that he was being so weak!! This was not real. His mother was dead. Dead. Dead. Dead.

Jack took an involuntary step back, his legs knocking against the cot, tears gathered in the corners his eyes. When he blinked, they slid slowly down his cheeks, but he gave them no notice, his eyes fixed on the woman in front of him.

His voice came out in a whisper again. It was as if speaking louder would either somehow confirm his insanity or would keep the vision of his mother from gaining reality. Jack whispered as if he were talking to himself, trying to convince himself of the reality he knew. Jack pointed at her.

“No...no...I...I watched you die! I watched that man shoot you...you and Daddy both! There was so much blood!! Blood everywhere!” The tears ran down Jack's cheeks, falling without his notice. “That man hurt me! There was so much pain and then Daddy died...then you died...there was so much blood...even Bruce cried...” Jack's voice faded to less than a breathy whisper, distracted, as if he were talking to himself. “You didn't move...Daddy didn't move...Bruce was crying...the pearls were everywhere...dropping, bouncing, rolling like drops of water...” His voice dropped until he almost sounded like the little boy who had lost his parents that night.

Martha smiled. “Oh my sweet little boy.”

She stepped closer and when she reached out and touched him, Jack jerked away in shock. He could actually feel her fingers on his cheek. Jack tried to remain calm, but he had no idea what was happening. He started to breathe heavily, panting almost. He felt slightly dizzy, cold, confused, breaking out into a colder sweat.

“This isn't real, this isn't real.” Jack muttered, his eyes stared at her with a cross between a plea that she really was there and his adult denial that any of this was real. But when she reached out grabbing him and wrapped her arms around him Jack felt a sliver of his mind shatter. His mother whispered. “Oh Jack! My sweet, sweet Jack.”

Jack went rigid; he could feel her arms, feel her, she was breathing, warm, alive, solid. For a moment Jack didn't react, he simply stared into the darkness of his room, but then, when her arms tightened around him, Jack burst into tears wrapping his arms around her in response, his voice came out in a hoarse pained whisper. “Momma...”

He didn't see the needle that seemed to ooze out of her skin and form onto the palm of her hand. She pulled her hand back and plunged the needle into the back of his neck. Jack gasped in shock, the pain of the needle was nothing compared to the confusion he felt. Jack shoved away from her.

“Momma? What...what're you doing?” Jack asked in confusion. He reached behind his neck and yanked out the needle. He gazed down at it in confusion, the pale ambient light made the metal needle glimmer in his hand. His body felt oddly sluggish, as if he had had too much to drink; he was losing control, his legs felt like rubber, his entire body seemed to lose its ability to stand. He stumbled back, hit the cot and flopped onto it, the metal frame rattling from the impact.

“What did you do?!?” Jack asked his voice slurring.

“Nothing dear...nothing at all.” His mother smiled at him, that same tender smile he remembered as a child. Jack fell backwards against the cement wall, starting to slide sideways as he lost all of his ability to control his body. His mother came forward, shifting his body so that he was lying on his back. She brushed his hair away from his face when Jack laid back on his cot staring up at her with shocked blue eyes. Her fingertips trailed along his bloody swollen cheeks and split lip.

Jack's eyes fluttered as he continued to stare up at her. He struggled to speak, his voice came out barely whisper “Momma?”

She smiled. “Oh Jack. You really should consider joining me and your father. You are really no good here are you? Bruce, poor dear Bruce, he shouldn't be burdened with a little brother like you. You have done nothing but cause him pain. Think about it Jackie. Think about a world of no pain, nothing...”

The drugs lulled Jack's eyes closed. The last thing he saw was his mother bending over him.

*

Jack came awake with a start, the feeling of stinging pain on his lips made him groan. “Ouch.”

“Just lay still.” A woman's voice answered him.

Jack frowned as his vision cleared slowly, though his head felt like it was stuffed full of cotton, too heavy to lift. He gradually looked around, blinking constantly under the harsh white light, trying to figure out exactly where he was at the moment. Jack tried to move, tried to sit up, but he realized he was strapped down to a gurney. As Jack's vision focused, he could see that the walls were painted that horrible watery blue-grey mixed with white tiles colors that hospitals seemed to favor.

A woman came into view, leaned over to dab his lip with something that stank like a son-of-a-bitch. Jack hissed, “Fuck,” and yanked his head away. The woman narrowed her grey eyes slightly. “Mr.
Wayne. If you do not stop struggling, I will be forced to sedate you. Do you really want that?”

Jack gave the woman a dirty look. The nurse—her face seemed to be carved from marble—pretty he supposed (though everyone paled next to Harley as far as he was concerned), but her eyes lacked any life to them. They were dull, hard and humorless.

Jack gave her his most stunning smile. “What did the nurse say when she found a rectal thermometer in her pocket?”

The nurse didn’t answer him, she simply continued to clean his face then moved over and picked up her suturing kit. She set the kit down near his head, popped it open and began to work roughly on the pressure wound on his cheek. She held a needle up just where he could see it. “Going to numb the area—this will sting.”

She shoved the needle against the wound causing Jack to jerk with pain though he didn't make a sound. Jack grinned at her when he saw she was annoyed. Good, he thought. Jack continued undaunted, finishing his joke.

“Some asshole has my pen.” Jack chuckled, but the nurse simply gave him a dead pan look.

The nurse stuck the needle through his skin before the numbing agent had begun to work. She gave a hard pull on the needle through the pressure wound on Jack's cheek, tugging the skin as she did so, a hard painful tug that for a moment felt as if the needle was ripping his skin. Jack hissed wincing a little. He didn't want to give her the satisfaction of seeing that she had actually caused him some pain, but it was hard not to react to the sharp needle pulling through the skin on his face. He took a steady breath before he continued, doing his best to act as if she had done nothing to hurt him, instead focusing on his joke.

“Nothing? Not even a smile? Wow, you are a nurse Ratched aren't you?” Jack chuckled. That was when she shoved the needle through his skin again, roughly, making Jack hiss loudly.

He chuckled. “Didn't like that, eh? Did I insult your sensitive nature?”

The nurse spoke through her teeth. “You mean nothing. You are just another crazy lunatic who we're wasting money on trying to cure.”

Jack made a face. “Wow. Geez, glad to see you enjoy your job.” After a couple of seconds he said softly not really speaking to her, but needing to say what he saw out loud. “I saw my mother.”

The nurse snorted. Jack glanced away from her and toward the wall. “I did. I'm not crazy. At least not like Dr. Crane thinks.”

The woman snorted. “Dr. Crane is a special man. Gifted. I don't know why he wastes his time on lowlifes like you lot.”

Jack hissed. “Crane is a narcissistic, obsessive psychopath and I'm going to kill him.”

The nurse jabbed Jack in the cheek with the needle. Jack jerked away from her in pain, but since he was strapped down he couldn’t really move far. She tugged hard smiling when Jack winced again. Jack glanced up at her his eyes finding her name tag. Mallory.

Jack grinned. “Hey nurse Mallory, did you know that Mallory means unfortunate? Which I suppose fits you perfectly because you unfortunately have the personality of a thunder-cunt.”

“Mr. Wayne, one more word and I am going to sedate you,” Mallory promised between her teeth.
Jack just grinned at her, but he didn't say another word, instead settling for mocking and annoying expressions until she was done. Mallory picked up her suturing kit, cleaning up and putting it away before she turned toward the door. The way Jack was strapped down and the way she had been hovering over him he hadn't seen the guard who now came over and grabbed the gurney that Jack had been strapped down to. “Get him back to his room,” Mallory said indignantly.

The guard nodded. “Sure thing miss.”

The guard backed the gurney up and turned Jack around so that his feet were facing the door. Jack was wheeled out, but he arched his head trying to see past the guard as he yelled loudly. “You know, I don't know if there is such a thing as a cunt-bag, but if there was you'd be it!! Congratulations thunder-cunt!!” Jack started laughing hysterically while he was being wheeled back to his cell.

Mallory snarled to the empty room. “I fucking hate him.”

*

Once back to his room, the lights were out. Jack curled into a fetal position on his cot facing the wall, his face throbbing a bit. He was running over the vision of his mother he had had...that had to be it, there was no other explanation for it, a vision, no matter how vivid it seemed. But if he were having visions that were that clear, that concentrated...he had felt her arms around him, he smelled her perfume...but at the same time the syringe...His mother could never have done that, Jack was sure of that, she could never have hurt him. Jack curled in tighter wishing Harley was there with him. Jack fought the urge to cry, but tears leaked from his eyes regardless of his wishes. He tried to focus on the memory of Harley in his arms. As he focused his attention on Harley, he told himself that his mother had just been an illusion...she hadn't been real. Why he had dreamed her up after all these years he didn't understand, but she couldn't possibly be real...

Later that night in Crane's office, the doctor was livid. That orderly had completely destroyed his experiments with Dr. Quinzel! She had dared to “rescue” her instead of leaving Harleen in the box like any other orderly would have done. His first reaction had been to storm out of his office and demand Harleen's return. He was sure he might have broken her, cleaned the slate to create his beauty...but now it had all been ruined!

Thoughts of pumping the orderly full of his fear toxin, ripping her psyche in two and leaving her a whispering mess had danced merrily through his thoughts, but he had dismissed them. This orderly...he searched his mind...yes...Sandra...he remember her, a swooning student at one point before she began working here at Arkham. Crane smiled. Yes, yes he had thought about using her once in his experiments. She had a phobia of heights, he remembered from a class discussion...quite a severe one if he recalled correctly. She had been here at the asylum for long time, so firing her would not be something he could simply do...perhaps he didn't need to fire her, perhaps he simply needed her out of the way. Dr. Arkham would be easy...Sandra Millner could simply be moved to another floor, denied access to Dr. Quinzel. Besides, he hadn't really expected to use the box on Harleen...his anger at seeing Jack Wayne's name on her finger had caused him to lash out.

Crane tapped his fingers against his lips as he walked over to his desk and opened the bottom drawer where he kept a bottle of gin and a glass. He poured himself some of the drink and swallowed it quickly. Maybe he could use Harleen's affection for the orderly against her...he smiled slowly. Yes, yes...that just might be a good idea.

The following morning when Sandra came into work, she was stopped at reception.

The woman there, a young lady from Texas named Nadine, with long brown hair and a sweet smile stopped her. “Sandra honey, I was told to give you this when you came in today.”

She handed Sandra an envelope. Sandra frowned setting her purse and lunch down before opening up the envelope; inside was a note from Dr. Arkham.

“I am to inform you Sandra Millner that you are being moved to the second floor where we keep our more delusional, though harmless patients. You are being moved for now because it has been brought to my attention that you have been interfering with patient care. Further interference will result in disciplinary action.

Sincerely,

Dr. Jeremiah Arkham.”

Sandra stared at the note her heart sinking. Inside the envelope was another key card, only for the second floor. Nadine frowned with a slight wince. “I was told to get your old key card from you.”

Sandra nodded, pulling the card from around her neck and handing it to Nadine. With a sigh she headed off to the second floor. What would Harley do without her? Sandra glanced over at Nadine who was giving her a sympathetic look...clearly the asylum gossip machine had already been at work and news of her being moved had made the rounds, though she doubted anyone knew the real reason. Sandra chewed her bottom lip in thought. She needed to let Dale know.

That morning at Wayne Manor, Alfred carried a breakfast tray up to Master Bruce’s bedroom. Bruce had been out rather late last night fighting crime on the streets of Gotham as Batman. He had come back early this morning with several bruised ribs, a blackening bruise on his left cheek and a bloody lip. Alfred sighed. Yesterday before Bruce left for the night, Alfred had tried to talk to him about Jack and Miss Harleen. When he had mentioned going up to the asylum to visit them, Bruce had been most upset, telling the older man that it was not because of the visit that he was upset, but because he had not wanted Alfred to see how far Jack had fallen. Alfred had tried to approach the subject of bringing Jack and Harley home, but Bruce had not been in the mood to talk yesterday about his brother. Alfred had let the subject drop, but this morning he thought he would try one more time. He owed it to the youngest Wayne.

Alfred knocked on the door and Bruce's muffled voice came from the other side. “Enter.”

Alfred had set the tray down on a table by the door; he now opened the door, picking the tray up and carefully entered the room. Master Bruce was doing several high intensity sit-ups. Alfred frowned. When Bruce worked out with that much speed and focus, it usually meant he was unhappy about something.

Alfred set the tray down turning toward Master Bruce. “I was hoping we might revisit our aborted discussion of yesterday.”

Bruce sighed, stood up and grabbed a hand towel he had flung over the back of a chair, running the cloth over his face and chest. “Alfred, Arkham Asylum is one of the best mental care facilities in the state.”

“Yes, I understand that Master Bruce, but if you had seen...” Alfred started, but Bruce held up a hand. “Look, I asked you not to go visit him Alfred. Jack manipulates you, he always has, and Dr.
Arkham had advised against visits. But...” Alfred had started to interrupt, but Bruce cut him off. “I did hire someone to look into Arkham Asylum.”

“You did Master Bruce?” Alfred smiled looking relieved.

Bruce nodded. “Yes. I know Jack and I have never seen eye to eye Alfred, but you can't think I'm monster enough to leave my brother someplace bad for him, can you?”

“No, never Master Bruce. Forgive me. I...I just didn't like seeing Master Jack like that.” Alfred looked pained and tired. “He didn't look at all himself and I never had the chance to see Miss Harleen before I was ushered out.”

Bruce stepped over to the butler and wrapped an arm around his shoulders. “I understand. Don't worry Alfred, I'm sure Jack and Dr. Quinzel are getting the best care possible. But the man I have hired to look into the asylum is one of the best.”

“Next to you Master Bruce?” Alfred lifted a brow in question.

Bruce smiled slightly. “I—yeah. I didn't want to do the investigation myself Alfred, I didn't want to muddy the waters with my personal investment in Jack's welfare...I didn't want to be blinded by my relationship with my brother.”

Alfred nodded. “I understand. Just promise me Bruce, “ (Bruce noticed that Alfred dropped the Master part which demonstrated the intensity of his feelings) “that you will get Jack and Harleen out of there if there is any hint of impropriety at that asylum.”

“I swear Alfred,” Bruce said softly.

That morning when Dale came to pick Jack up for breakfast, Dale looked a little pale. The rumor mill had circulated the building and Dale had heard that Sandra had been moved down and forbidden from coming onto the sixth floor. Dale was angry and scared. The rumor said the order had come from Crane through Arkham, which really wasn't surprising. Everyone knew that Crane was the real power in the asylum. The other rumor that had been making the rounds of the asylum was not a rumor at all, but the story of what Jack Wayne had done to Ernie Chubbs. That assault was going to have some frightening consequences...not just for Jack, but possibly Harley and maybe even him. Dale arrived at Jack's door distracted and worried.

Inside Jack was doing push-ups and clapping between each push. He had his shirt off, a fine film of sweat covered his lean muscular body indicating that he had been at this for a while, his eyes focused on the wall in front of him. Jack's focus was on the push, clap, push clap rhythm and the song he was singing, his voice alternating from loud to soft. Jack was singing loudly at the moment (much to the annoyance of a few of his fellow inmates.) But the singing was helping him focus and ignore the hallucinations he appeared to be having...four times now, seeing his father (as recently as half an hour ago, he could have sworn his father had walked by his cell)...and then the visit from his mother...seeing his father he might have been able to dismiss as a trick of his mind under stress, but his mother? That hallucination had been the worst, the thought that he was losing control of his faculties frightened him.

Jack started singing loudly again, singing without sounding out of breath, the workout not taking away from the quality of his voice.

“...I try to make you see my side
Always try to stay in line
But your eyes see right through
That's all they do
I'm getting tired of this shit
I've got no room when it's like this
What you want of me, just deal with it...

Jack did a few more push ups then came to his feet smoothly, hissing the last of the song, ending with a growl...

"...If you were dead or still alive,
I don't care..."

Jack wiped his unshaven face off with his hands letting out a loud breath and ran his fingers through his shaggy hair thinking to himself that he didn't care...not about Bruce. Bruce...his brother, someone he should have been able to depend on, someone who should have understood him...or at least tried. Jack's eyes teared up angrily as he reached down and grabbed his shirt off the cot and threw the black and white shirt on. He loved Bruce, despite everything his brother had done to him, he loved his big brother and there was a part of him that still wanted Bruce's approval. It angered Jack that he couldn't stop loving his brother. Jack smiled sadly then huffed wondering if he would spend the rest of his life pursuing that love and understanding from a brother too emotionally stunted to give it to him. Jack closed his eyes. Why was his brother's understanding so damn important to him? Maybe it was because Bruce was his only close blood family...who knew...

That was the moment he noticed Dale coming up to the door and scanning his card. Dale slipped in not closing the door, but bringing it partly closed.

Jack frowned at the orderly. “What's up?”

Dale looked worried. “What you did to Ernie Chubb is making the rounds. Ernie used to run this boxing jig called The Second Ring in Gotham before his arrest, lot of the guards here used to hang out there, some of them even participated, making a few bucks on the side, so a lot of the men here knew Ernie...owed him something. You just made yourself a whole of lot enemies besides Dr. Crane with what you did to him.”

Jack frowned but shrugged. “I'm not worried about it.”

Dale frowned. “You should be. Right now they are focused on you, but it won't take long before they shift that attention to your girl...I mean wife. Everyone knows about you and your girl. If they started to think they can't get to you, they will try to get to her sir.”

Jack went still, frowning. His voice dropped to a deadly whisper. “I will kill all of them if I have to...”

Dale frowned paling at the determination in Jack's voice. Dale figured that meant more people on the Arkham staff would end up dead besides Dr. Hurd. Dale sighed, not sure what his feelings were on that subject...it surprised him how little he actually cared about any of them outside of Sandra. With a sigh Dale motioned Jack to follow him. As they stepped out, Dale handed him an apple. Jack frowned in confusion looking at the fruit then at Dale. Dale shrugged. “I'm going to do something that might get us both in trouble, so you're skipping breakfast for this...but. Anyway...well Sandra is gone.”

Jack took a bite out of the apple giving Dale a quizzical look. “What do you mean gone?”

“She was moved off the sixth floor. I don't know all the details yet. I'll see Sandra at lunch and find out, but I heard it had something to do with your Harley. She helped her in such a way that she pissed off Crane. He had her taken off the sixth floor.” Dale sounded upset.

Jack stopped, putting a hand on Dale arm. “Hey, she's fine Dale.”

Dale nodded. “I know, just don't like the fact that Crane knows about her helping Harley. Puts a target on her back.”

Jack frowned taking another bite of the apple. Dale put his hand on his shoulder encouraging Jack to keep moving. Jack fell into step next to Dale. Jack glanced sideways at the big man. “So where are you taking me?”

After a couple of seconds Jack noticed they weren't going to the cafeteria, the gardens, or Crane's office. “Dale, what's going on?”

Dale smiled. “Miss Harley is in the common room. I figured you wouldn't mind skipping breakfast to catch a few hours with her. I dropped her off myself. The guards on duty right now are a bunch of newbies—freshmen we call ’em—they won't bother you as along as you behavior yourself. The few orderlies there won't lift a finger unless provoked, so I think you'll be safe enough. I also figured we're pretty safe considering that Crane is not on the property yet. He and Dr. Arkham had some meeting downtown this morning. They're going to be gone for a couple of hours.” Dale gave him a smile. “It was Sandra's idea to get you two together while he was out...she had suggested it yesterday.”

Jack grinned. “Dale, I really do love you. Give Sandra a big wet kiss for me too.”

Dale blushed as he thought about Sandra and chuckled. “Sure thing Jack.”

*

The two men picked up their pace and headed to the common room. Jack passed one of the halls, glanced down and nearly stumbled when he saw his mother standing there. He had accidentally took two steps past the corridor and had to double back a step or two, but when he looked back, she was gone. There was just some custodian standing at the end of the hall sweeping. Jack felt his blood turn cold, but his heart sank as well. He shook his head. This place was really getting to him, but his eyes stung and he wiped them, angry at himself that he was letting not just his mind get the better of him, but that he was letting himself feel so intently for a mother that was long dead.

*

The common room had a few more of the sixth floor patients occupying it currently than was usual.
There was Tabitha and Babs sitting together playing a game of Jenga, Arnold Vesker was on the couch with his sock puppet, clearly engaged in an intense conversation. Zsasz and Aaron Helzinger were playing Go Fish at one of the tables and Robert Greenwood was sitting in a corner on the floor coloring. Lastly, Jack saw Jervis sitting by an old CD player. There was music playing. Shinedown's “Her name is Alice.” Jervis was leaning across the player not too dissimilar from a cat laying across speaker, a contented smile on his face. There were five guards and four orderlies lounging against the walls of the common room talking and only keep a peripheral view on the patients. As long as everyone seemed occupied the guards and orderlies were content to leave them be. Dale leaned close and whispered to Jack. “They let Jervis have the CD player. Whenever they allow the player in the common room, if Jervis is in here, they let him choose the music. He gets really volatile if he doesn't get to control the music. He's convinced its part of his tea party, but if you play along with his delusion, he'll usually take requests.”

Jack nodded just as the music changed to the song “White Rabbit.” Jack made a face and giggled. “He has a theme I hear.”

Dale shrugged. “Well, he does think he's the mad hatter. Anyway, there she is...”

Jack’s eyes followed Dale's pointed finger to see his Harley. Her back was to the door, her long blonde was hanging down her back in a loose braid, her feet were hooked around the legs of a chair and she seemed to be intently coloring. Jack glanced at Dale giving the big man a grin before he slowly walked over to her. Dale watched him go with a grin.

As Jack approached Harley, he glanced over her shoulder. She looked to have drawn a characterization of Crane and was using a red crayon to draw what he hoped symbolized blood, all over the stick-figure picture.

Jack chuckled. “I do like the use of red. Red usually is the color of assertion, strength, romance, excitement, vitality, physical power, outgoing behavior, ambitious and impulsive. Or I'm guessing in your case, the color of murder.”

Harley turned looking up, her blue eyes widening. “JACK!!”

She leapt up, knocking her chair back and threw herself into his arms, throwing her arms around his neck. Jack grinned taking a step back when her body impacted with his, lifting her off her feet. The guards and orderlies all glanced toward them, but made no move to break them up. Jack squeezed Harley tight, holding her against him and burying his face against her neck.

His voice came out muffled while he pressed kisses to her neck, jaw and ear.

“Mmm...Harley.” He purred kissing her cheek, then her eyelids, the tip of her nose and lastly her lips.

Harley smiled. “Oh puddin I missed you.”

“I missed you too pumpkin.” Jack gave her a squeeze, holding her tightly then pressed his lips to hers again. Harley opened her mouth against his, her tongue sliding into his mouth to wrap with his tongue. Jack reached up to cup her head, his tongue diving into her mouth to caress her tongue. Harley made a soft whimper, tightening her grip on him, her fingers digging into the material of his asylum uniform, pressing her body against his and never feeling she was close enough. Jack dropped his hands down to grab her rear yanking her close against his hips. He growled gently, pressing his fingers into her soft flesh hard enough to bruise her.

One of the guards started to move toward them to break them up when Tetch started to yell. “NO ROOM! NO ROOM!! WHY'S A RAVEN LIKE A WRITING DESK?”

Babs stood up and yelled. “Shut up Tetch!”

“Don't call me that!!” Tetch yelled back.

Babs giggled. “Oh why? Would Alice not like it?”
Tetch stood, his eyes wild. “DON'T YOU MENTION ALICE!”

One of the orderlies, a young man with wavy blonde hair and a nice smile who had been leaning against the wall flirting with one of the guards, a big dark skinned man with large brown eyes, came over. “Shh...all right you two, enough yelling. What's the issue Hatter?”

Tetch pouted glaring at Babs. “No room.” His tone was that of a petulant child.

Babs made a face and stuck out her tongue taking her seat across from Tabitha again.

Dale came over putting a hand on his fellow orderly. “He just wants to change the CD. Hold on I'll go get them so he can pick, Reggie.”

Reggie, the new guy, nodded. “Thanks Dale!”

Harley grabbed Jack leading him over to the far side of the room. She sat on the floor tugging Jack with her. Though Harley tried to sit on the floor Jack grabbed her, yanking her onto his lap.

Jack kissed her rubbing his nose against hers saying softly. “Dale says Crane is not here yet today, thinks we might have a few hours together.” He grinned at her before leaning in to nibble on her ear. Harley giggled, leaning into his attentions, his lips and teeth on her ear and throat sent goosebumps racing down her skin.

“I heard what happened with you Jack, everyone heard what you did to that man,” Harley said softly. “I heard these new guards talking about it when we first came in after breakfast. They think the other guards are just making it up to scare them.”

Jack chuckled. “Oh, I did it. Ernie Chubb is going to be singing soprano.”

Harley giggled laying her head against his shoulder, her arm around him while she caressed his chest with her other hand. Jack reached up brushing his fingers along her ear, then through her hair kissing the top of her head. Harley closed her eyes, one tear sneaking free and sliding down her cheek. Being here with him in his arms was all she ever wanted. She would stay strong just to be with him again. They were both quiet for a few minutes, just enjoying being with one another. Jack pressed his cheek against the top of her head, caressing her cheek tenderly with his long graceful fingers.

“When we get out of here Harley, we're going find our own secret place. Maybe that house on the island I told you about. We are going to live away from everyone, plan our revenge on Bruce...do what we want and no one will be able to stop us again.” He sighed softly rubbing his nose against her hair.

Harley giggled. “Oh puddin.”

She sighed contently pressing herself harder against him. Jack continued to caress her hair and thought about telling her that he had seen his father...his mother...about the fact that his delusion had been strong enough that he felt his mother's arms around him, but before he could say a word, Harley whispered, her voice laced with pain. “Did you hear about Sandra?”

She felt Jack nod before he spoke. “Dale told me just before he brought me here. What happened Harley? Dale said she had done something with you that upset Crane,” Jack asked while his fingertips glided softly her cheek, he decided to wait on telling her about seeing his parents, it was only a small concern. Maybe later, he told himself. He kissed her forehead before pressing his cheek against the top of her head.

Harley frowned closing her eyes trying not to imagine the box or the things she had heard or seen while inside. “Crane put me in a box to punish me. Sandra got me out. Simple as that.”

She felt Jack stiffen beside her, his voice a deadly whisper, she could almost feel the ice of it race across her skin. “What? What did he do?” Jack asked.

Harley pressed closer. “He saw your name on my finger. I was stupid, but I wanted to piss him off, wanted to make him angry so I rubbed it in his face that we got married under his nose....he gassed me with his fear gas and threw me in a box.”

Jack tightened his hold on her. “I swear I'm going to kill...”

“Jack I...” Harley started but Tetch yelled loudly, “CLEAN CUPS!”

They both heard the sound of the CD player being popped open and then quickly snapped closed, the clear sound of plastic snapping into place then the sound of new music started to play, the mellow vocals of Frank Sinatra rolled through the common room singing “It Had to Be You.”

Jack kissed her ear, brushing his nose against her ear, and his tongue followed, tracing the ticklish, sensitive skin. He stared off, anger burning behind his blue eyes despite the affectionate licking on Harley; his mind was racing with how he was going to punish Crane. The thought of how many people he was going to kill for what had been done to the both of them, but mostly for what they had done to his Harley...his girl. Jack was going to laugh watching this place burn to the ground. He was going to burn everything, he thought to himself: Arkham, Gotham, Wayne Manor...all of it would burn one day and he was going to laugh watching it all go up in flames.

But for now Jack wanted to focus on his girl, on what he could do to help her. Jack smiled against her ear wanting to make her forget what had happened to her, wanting to make her happy, make her laugh. “Dance with me Harley. While we're together, dance with me.” Harley rolled her head to face him, catching his lips gently with her teeth, brushing her nose against his skin, taking a deep breath, smelling his skin, feeling the warmth of his body against her.

“Yes Jack.” She giggled in delight. “I'll dance with you.”

Jack stood, lifting her with him while he grinned ear to ear. He pulled her into his arms, one arm around her waist, the other hand holding hers, then together they started to waltz from their corner to the center of the common room. Jack grinned down at her. “Ever see the movie Living in a Big Way? 1947? Gene Kelly? Marie McDonald? No?”

Harley chuckled and shook her head. “No puddin, I haven't.”

Jack did a spin with Harley; everyone in the room was watching them.

“Oh pumpkin!” Jack lamented. “I need to have a whole afternoon of showing you old movies my sweets! Okay, well, just follow my lead pumpkin pie.” Jack grinned at her. He sang while he moved her around the room. (Some of the patients grabbed furniture scooting it out of the way so that Jack and Harley could twirl past.)

“For nobody else gave me a thrill

With all your faults, I love you still

It had to be you, wonderful you

It had to be you...”
Jack smiled down at her taking both her hands and holding them in his, swaying with the music while he smiled at her. Harley couldn't keep the smile off her face; Jack always made her smile.

He let her go of her hands, then both of them spun, their shoulders touching as they rolled along their backs, then back to facing each other again. Jack laughed as he took her hand, wrapping her arm around his and swayed with her, their feet crossing over the front of each others, dancing forward before the two of them spun together slowly while the music played over them. Harley giggled, for the moment she forgot all her troubles. Her only focus was Jack's blue eyes, his smile, his sexy, bright, perfect smile, his body touching hers, and his hands wrapped around her hands.

No matter where they were, Jack made her happy, she thought. Harley reached down grabbing the skirt of her asylum uniform, swaying the skirt with her as she moved, dancing, nearly prancing in the common room to the music with her husband.

Jack turned letting go of her arm to slide his hand up her back, spreading his hand and pressing the flat of his palm between her shoulders, holding her against him while they swayed gently before he grabbed her hand again, dropping his other hand down to her waist and twirled her around the room.

Everyone watching (including a few orderlies) clapped or hooted as Jack led Harley in a full waltz around the common room, the two of them only having eyes for each other.

Jack sang to her again with a broad grin on his lips.

“It had to be you, it had to be you
I wandered around and finally found, that somebody who Could make me be true
Could make me feel blue
And even be glad just to be sad, thinking of you...”

*

While they were dancing, the music had changed to “Somebody to love” by Jefferson Airplane. Jack chuckled, grabbed Harley's hands, the two of them weaving together to the music, shimmying down to a crouch then back again. Jack yanked her back, wrapping his arms around her. Harley wrapped her arms snug around his neck, their body pressed together as they swayed and weaved to the psychedelic music.

Babs and Tabitha stood up and started to move to the music, the two woman grinding and swaying against each other as they laughed. Zsasz tapped his foot smiling while continuing his game with Aaron who was bobbing his head in time to the rhythm. Arnold had stood up and was dancing, his cheek pressed against the head of his sock puppet who had its head laying on Arnold's shoulder. Robert was clapping to the music watching everyone else while Jervis just smiled and leaned against the CD player contently.

Nurse Mallory shoved the door to the common room open. She had heard the sounds of music drifting down the hall. She had been looking for Dr. Harleen Quinzel, but had found the patient missing from her room. Mallory had been sent to fetch the patient for Dr. Crane who had returned early. Mallory was in a foul mood. She was a head nurse, not some common orderly sent to fetch patients! Yet here she was. If she didn't admire Dr. Crane...and hope to garner his attention, she would have refused. But here she was, in a foul mood searching for a missing patient.

When she flung the door open to the common room she was appalled by the scene before her. She stood in the doorway glaring. Patients were dancing!! To music!! The common room was for quiet and contemplative tasks, or mind-numbing boredom, she didn't really care, just as long as they were quiet!

She narrowed her eyes seeing Jack Wayne dancing with the patient she had been sent to fetch, Dr. Quinzel. Mallory's expression went from exasperated to reddened and ugly as she marched over to the orderlies who were just watching the patients without doing anything to stop the ruckus they were causing! What on earth were they even employed for if they couldn't do their jobs, she thought.

Across the room, Dale saw her approach like a storm sweeping in and destroying everything in its wake. He muttered under his breath. “Fuck.” The younger man he had been speaking with, a man name Lorry glanced over and hissed. “Oh shit Nurse Ratched!”

Mallory growled when she was close enough. “Why are there so many patients in this room at the same time? And who allowed the music? And those two...” she pointed a finger at Jack and Harley who were spinning around the room laughing together. “Why are they being allowed to...to...frolic in the common room like that? This room is for quiet!” Lorry had to struggle not to laugh at the use of the word “frolic.” He opened his mouth to answer her, but then snapped it shut when Nurse Mallory turned on Dale instead, her face contorted in an ugly expression of rage.

“I want these patients taken back to their rooms and I want that music off—there is to be no music in the common room. Ever.” She pointed behind her angrily.

Dale narrowed his eyes. “Look Mallory. I know you've just transferred here from Gotham General, but the patients are allowed some music in the common room.”

Mallory glared right back. “I'm the head nurse in this institute and I say: no music.”

Mallory turned away from Dale muttering under her breath. “If you want something done...” She stomped over to where Tetch was practically laying over the top of the CD player smiling happily as he watched Jack and Harley dance. Nurse Mallory shoved him aside.

“Off! Now!” She hissed at Tetch shoving the shorter man away from the CD player.

Tetch's eyes widened in what would have been a hysterically funny expression, Dale thought, except for the violent outburst that followed.

Tetch yelled at the top of his lungs throwing himself right in Mallory's face, spittle flying from his lips. “HOW DO YOU FIND OUT THE WEIGHT OF A WHALE?!”

Everyone stopped and turned toward the little man as the sounds of “Incense and Peppermint” started to play in the background.

Jack yelled back at Jervis and Mallory laughing. “I DON'T KNOW? HOW?!”

Tetch replied as Mallory tried to yanked the CD player away from him. He scuttled over grabbing the player and, holding it to his body, yelled back while glaring hatefully at Nurse Mallory. “YOU TAKE HIM TO THE NEAREST WHALE WEIGHT STATION!”

All the patients started laughing. Mallory pressed her lips into a hard thin line, her nose wrinkled up as she sneered at Tetch and the other patients. She reached out shoving Tetch up against the wall. She grabbed the CD player out of his hands.
Tetch screeched. “NO!! NO ROOM!!”

Jack laughed and yelled. “Hey Thundercunt! Let him have his player!”

Mallory turned and glared at Jack. “You shut up or I swear I will stick you in a hole you psychotic.” She turned her attention back to Tetch. Her anger spiking, Mallory yanked the cord out of the wall and threw the player across the room, forcing Jack to grab Harley and spin her out of the way as the player hit the floor and burst into plastic pieces. Everyone in the room froze for the space of two heartbeats before Tetch screamed. “Futterwacken!!!”

The man threw himself at Nurse Mallory, knocking the woman off her feet, Tetch going down with her. “I will prick you!! Cut you!! Cause you to bleed!!” He started giggling as he yelled in a singsong voice just before he started to beat on Mallory.

Jack snorted and yelled. “Beat the Thundercunt Hatter!! She stole the tarts!!”

Harley giggled hanging onto Jack.

The guards began to swarm toward Mallory pulling out batons or tasers while the orderlies started to yell at everyone to settle down, but the other patients rushed to Jervis's aid. Babs and Tabitha rushed the orderlies, Lorry and Reggie. Babs slammed into Reggie, knocking the man to the floor, the two of them sliding against the wall. Babs giggled while grinning down at the young man. “This is fun!” Getting to her feet, she dragged Reggie with her before she slapped him across the face hard enough that he went down.

Tabitha kicked Lorry in the balls with an annoyed sigh.

Robert leapt to his feet laughing and yelled “DINNER!” rushing toward Nurse Mallory, but one of the guard's was ready for the cannibal, moving after the shorter man and hitting him with his taser at the same time knocking him across the face with his baton, breaking the cannibal's nose.

Zsasz smiled and stood up holding out his hand to Aaron. “Shall we?”

Aaron laughed. “Been a while since I was in a brawl.”

Two guards yelled at them. “On your knees!”

Zsasz laughed. “Oh I don't think so, not this time.”

Jack, holding Harley's hand, made a rush for the door. Jack wasn't sure what he was thinking, he knew the chances of them getting out like this were zero, but he had to try. No sooner had he stepped toward the door, two guards rushed to block them. Jack was about to drop Harley's hand and rush one of the men, but it was Harley who dropped his hand.

She snarled. “I'm so sick of this place!”

She took two quick steps forward then leapt up and spun, the move clearly something she knew from being a gymnast. Jack grinned watching her, angry and graceful, her foot connecting with the guard's face in a bright spray of blood when she broke his nose. She whipped around using her whole body to spin, transferring her weight to her right leg as she brought her left leg around for another swift kick that knocked the guard's head to the side.

Jack moved swiftly. He struck out, his fist hitting the guard in the bend of his arm the impact strong enough that the guard was forced to drop his taser. The guard brought his fist up, impacting across Jack's jaw. Without the taser in his other hand, the guard was free to punch Jack with that free hand, though Jack leaned back in time that the fist only grazed across his chin. The guard tried again to hit Jack, but Jack brought his arm up, blocking one blow, then the other with his left forearm. Jack then let his arm drop, but brought it forward to drive his knuckles into the guard's diaphragm, then up again with the same fist, striking the man across the cheek causing his head to twist and the man to drop like a dead weight.

Jack glanced over to see Harley's guard landing next to Jack's guard, both unconscious. Jack grinned at Harley. She winked at him just as an alarm started to blare loud and long. The sprinklers came on, drowning out any sound and soaking everyone in the room.

Jack reached for the door but it was kicked open and several of the old guards, the ones Jack now knew had a vendetta against him and Harley, burst into the room, accompanied by several doctors. All of the guards and doctors had on gas masks.

Jack hissed. “Fuck me running.”

The guards, armed with riot shields started yelling. “DOWN ON THE GROUND!! DOWN ON THE GROUND NOW!”

One of the guards threw what looked like a grenade into the small common room, which immediately erupted into smoke causing everyone without a mask to start coughing. The next few moments were complete chaos. Jack grabbed Harley's hands yanking her backwards as the older guards swarmed into the room. Jack pulled Harley behind him, but one of the guards hit him with a shield knocking him off his feet, though Jack maintained his hold on Harley and pulled her down with him. In seconds several of the guards had both him and Harley, along with the other patients on the floor, facedown on the floor while the doctors roughly, efficiently administered sedatives. Jack struggled when he heard one of the guards saying, “That Dr. Quinzel's to go to Crane's office, he wanted to see her as soon as he returned. Don't drug her, but you might want to cuff her.”

One of the doctors, an older man with a hound dog face shook his head. “I won't put her out, but she isn't going to cooperate if we don't give her something.”

The guard threw his hands up. “Okay doc, your call.”

Harley let out a vicious scream. Jack started to struggle snarling incoherently, his blue eyes following Harley as she was carried struggling out of the room. Someone was helping nurse Mallory who was leaning on one of the doctors.

“Put Wayne in solitary! And Tetch too!” Mallory, soaked to the skin and looking like an ugly drowned cat, caught Jack's eye as she was escorted out. The smile she gave him was nasty and full of malice.

Harley blinked. She was only dimly aware of the two female nurses setting her down in a chair in Crane's office, stripping her and changing her into a soft pale yellow cap sleeve tea dress. She blinked in confusion at the young nurse who put her makeup on and the other one who brushed her hair out and blew it dry until it shone in golden waves along her shoulder. The two young nurses also put plastic restraints on her wrists and ankles leaving her trussed up like a turkey for Crane.

The drug she had been subdued with was just starting to wear off when Crane came into the room, dressed in a three-piece black and red plaid suit with a gold chain running across his stomach. A young man behind him carried in a tea tray. She watched as tea was set out and the young man left giving her a confused and quizzical look. Crane lifted open his laptop, his eyes scanning something before music started to play, Mozart's Requiem.

Crane sighed. “Sorry for arriving so late my dear, but an institute like this requires financial assistance to continue and thus sometimes, we must go and present our best faces.” He smiled at her. “Tea?”

Harley struggled to say something, the drug losing its effect, but it had made her mouth dry. “Yes please.” She hated sounding so pathetic, but she needed a drink.

Crane smiled. “Very good dear.”

He poured off the tea into two cups, adding cream and sugar to hers. He walked around the desk carrying the cup and gently placed it in her cuffed hands, waiting until he was sure she had a good hold on it. He smiled as he returned to his chair. “Now, I must apologize for the box. You...upset me yesterday.”

Harley just watched him over the rim of her cup as she greedily sipped at the tea.

Crane smiled watching her, his eyes taking in every detail. “You look stunning today.”

Harley narrowed her eyes; the urge to throw herself over the desk and beat the shit out of him with the tea cup in her hand was almost overwhelming. She was tired of being his victim, but instead she said softly. “Why are you so obsessed with fear?”

Crane blinked, taken aback by her question. “What?”

Harley, feeling more and more herself as the sedative wore off and angrier that this man was doing his best to manipulate her, twist her and break her. No one would do that to her...no one. She sat up straighter. She was a psychiatrist too. She could manipulate and twist with the best of them.

“Why fear?” she asked.

Crane frowned, studying her as if he were looking for something in her demeanor that would tell him why she wanted to know. He continued to stare at her for a long moment. Harley smiled at him, her best, “I'm a sweet innocent” smile. After another few heartbeats she seemed to have won him over.

Crane ran a hand over his tie and vest; he decided to be honest with her, she was after all going to be his lady, Lady Crow to his Scarecrow, (the moniker 'Scarecrow' seemed fitting and had just come to him.) When he had fully crossed that line he was working toward, the line between Crane disappearing into the nightmare of the Scarecrow, all would be so much better. Crane smiled, he would need to tell her after he recreated her that is, about his mission...his desire to rule Gotham by fear. But for now he would tell her about his obsession.

“My father started me on my study of fear. It was his fear that kept him from saving my mother from a deadly fire. He became obsessed with overcoming his fear...of working to create an antidote to fear.”

Harley sipped her tea. “I'm assuming he wasn't successful?”

Crane shook his head. “No, no he wasn't.” Crane's eyes took on a distant look as he peered into the past. “He experimented on me, trying to force me to face my own fears as a child.” Crane glanced toward her before picking up his tea cup and taking a sip. He continued. “He may have failed in eliminating all fear, but he did inspire me. Fear cannot be overcome, but it can be controlled, used, harnessed, turned into a weapon. It's not about overcoming fear, but rather it's about using fear. Using it to subdue others. To remake, protect...to use fear as a means to an end...or simply as a means to destroy...” Here Crane leveled his gaze at Harley.

Harley felt a shiver run down her spine but she did her best to keep her response from her features. “What is it you fear Dr. Crane?”

Crane lifted a brow at her with an amused expression. “And why ever do you ask Dr. Quinzel? Do you think knowing will give you some sort of power over me?’’

Harley smiled. “No, just professional curiosity.”

Crane rubbed his chin with his finger and thumb. “There is nothing to fear but fear itself...that...that is what I'm scared of—fear.”

Harley tilted her head. “Explain.”

Crane smirked at her professional tone. “I think that's enough Dr. Quinzel.”

Harley smiled. “Maybe you're right, telling me would give me some power over you. Maybe that's the answer right there, you're scared of being powerless. Is that why you want to control people's fears? Because of the power it gives you?”

Crane narrowed his eyes. “That's enough.”

Harley smiled. “Why? Did I hit the nail on the head Dr. Crane...that's what scares you isn't it, lack of power...to be powerless...”

He stood up and went to his office door, opened it, spoke to someone waiting outside. “Take her back please.”

Nurse Mallory was waiting outside the office door. “Of course Dr. Crane.”

Mallory came into the room pushing a wheelchair. Harley made a face, but she grinned at Crane. “Now I know what scares you!”

Crane gave her a narrow eyed look of anger which just made Harley grin more.

Jack was dragged down the hall to solitary. He was deliberately being a dead weight, forcing the two guards to drag him down the hall while he grinned the entire time. One of the guards laughed squeezing his arm painfully. “Guess what Mr. Wayne, Mr. Hoity Toity, Mr. Blue Blood, you get to stay in solitary for the rest of your time with us here at Arkham and God only knows how long that will be. By the time you get out, they'll just turn right back around and throw you back in because you'll be batshit crazy. I'm sure Mr. Bruce Wayne likes not having to share all that money with a nutjob retard like you.” Jack made no reply except to catch his feet on the floor almost causing all three of them to go face down. The guards stumbled, making Jack titter. They roughly yanked him along, his weight going dead again in their hands forcing them to drag him.

The same guard muttered. “Seems you really pissed off Nurse Mallory. You know what that means? She is going to make your stay fucking hell buddy.”

Jack chuckled. “Well, you can tell Nurse Thundercunt for me that she wins the gold metal for extreme-cuntness!”

The guards made no response, but Jack had laughed himself to tears when the guards tossed into solitary. The door slammed shut on him before he could get his feet under him, and rush toward the door. He did it anyhow, slamming his fists against the padding with a laugh while yelling. “You can also tell her that she's a colossal cunting fucknugget!” Jack snickered sliding down to sit on the floor with a sigh. He looked around, the shadows were deep and inky on the rim of the one sickly yellow light that came from above. He frowned running a hand through his disorderly hair when something made his skin crawl, like a breeze had blow over him. That was when he heard someone move in the shadows.

“Hello Jack.”

Jack watched in horror as his father stepped out of the shadows. Jack stared up at the towering imposing figure of his father. Thomas Wayne looked down at his youngest son, his expression grim.

Jack whimpered. “No, no no...this is not happening.”

His father smiled at him. “I was waiting for you Jack. Following you, watching your every move. You are such a disappointment Jack, but I suppose you always knew that. You were never as good as your brother. He is the perfect son while you...in an insane asylum? I should have known. Your constitution was weak, always weak...like your mother.” Jack pulled himself away pressing back against the wall shaking his head in denial. “No no no...you...you would never say that. My father loved my mother...he loved me...” His father shook his head, the shadows playing across his features made his face look like that of a skull. Jack squeezed his eyes shut while his father continued. “Love you? How on earth could I love such a weak and pathetic boy like you Jack. Jack, Jack...the family disappointment, the family nutcase. It's good that Bruce locked you away. I never wanted you. Neither did your mother, did you know that? She cried when she saw what she had given birth to...”

Jack wrapped his arms around his head and screamed. “NO!! GO AWAY!! YOU ARE NOT MY FATHER!”

Then he started to laugh, a sound that quickly turned into sobbing. “You're not my father,” he whispered as if trying to convince himself. “You're dead. You died. I saw it, you, mother, I saw it...blood everywhere....”

His father stepped closer laying a hand on his head. Jack jerked, lurching away and into the shadows. He watched in horror as the figure in front of him morphed and shifted until his mother was standing in front of him. She smiled. “Hi Jack.”

Jack started to laugh, a high-pitched desperate sound.

“We'll talk again son...real soon I promise,” his mother whispered.

Jack didn't see her leave. He gripped his head, bending into himself giggling. “Not real, not real.”

Dale walked swiftly down the hall and slipped into the first supply closet he came across, closing the door. He didn't bother to turn the lights on as he leaned against the wall breathing heavily. He had just had a confrontation with a couple of the guards. Nothing really dangerous, but they had questioned him about Jack Wayne and Dr. Quinzel. Dale had diverted their attention...answering vaguely before he steered the conversation in another direction, but it was becoming clear that some of the guards were noticing his relationship with Jack Wayne. Dale snarled to himself slamming a fist into the wall that left a large hole.

Dale shook his hand out, the pain giving him focus. He wasn't about to abandon Jack and Harley.
That just wasn't his style. Besides, Sandra would never forgive him. Dale rubbed his knuckles against his chest muttering out loud. “Damn that Nurse Mallory. Damn that bitch.”

She had only been at Arkham two days and already she had caused more trouble than... he shook his head. All right, she had Jack moved permanently to solitary which would make it difficult to get him and Harley more time together. Dale could go over her head, but he was fairly confident that would just put a target on his back. It wouldn't take much for Crane to have him moved off the sixth floor too, and with Sandra gone, that left only him on the sixth floor to help out his friends. His brow furrowed. Friends. Is that what they were? He shrugged, unsure of the answer, but what he did know was that they would need help in here.

He frowned, he needed to do something, but for now the only thing he could do would be to stay on duty as long as he could. Today that would mean an almost twenty-four shift. One of the other orderlies, a young woman named Nancy, had been trying all day to get someone to cover her shift tonight so she could be with her daughter for her birthday. Well, Dale decided he was going to take her shift so he could get Jack and Harley together.

Dale took a calming breath. He needed help in getting them out of the asylum. He would simply have to talk to Jack, but for now, he would do what he could to get them time together.

*

It was nearly midnight when Harley heard a soft knock on her cell door. She rolled over to look at the clear wall and saw Dale standing there. She stood up quickly, slipped on her shoes and moved over to the door just as it popped open. Dale motioned her out the door.

“I meant to be here sooner. They took Jack to solitary. Nurse Mallory has made it so that Jack will be in solitary for...” Dale shrugged. “The foreseeable future.”

“What?” Harley spun around to face the big orderly, her voice rising.

Dale put a hand on her shoulder and turned her around to head down the hall. “I'm sorry. I can't do anything about that, but I can take you to see him. I'm pulling a double shift just so I can do this.”

Harley stopped again and threw her arms around Dale hugging him tightly. Dale blushed bright red making his whole bald head look like a tomato. “It's okay Miss Harley...I mean...it's...no need to thank me.”

Harley smiled and gave him a loud kiss on the cheek.

It was dark in the solitary hall when Dale and Harley arrived. Dale frowned muttering. “There should be a light on down here.” He looked around until he found the switch and flipped it, the hall suddenly lighting up. As the two of them made their way down the hall, they could both hear the faint sounds of Jervis from behind the door of one of the cells. He was singing to himself. “Twinkle twinkle little bat! How I wonder what you're at...”

Harley frowned. He sounded so sad. Dale turned to the other cell and scanned his card then pushed the door open. He looked down the hall as he ushered her inside. As soon as Harley stopped through the door, Dale snapped it closed behind her.

She stood there looking around the room. Just as last time it was dark inside the padded cell, the only light coming from a dim fixture above. She stood near the door looking around and frowned trying to peer into the darkness. “Jack?” she called softly.
She heard movement, shuffling then Jack's voice. He sounded hoarse and in pain. “Harley? Is that you or are you an illusion too? My mind is breaking, you know.” He giggled. “I'm going quite mad.”

“Jack?” Harley stepped further into the room searching for him. She couldn't see him at all. “Jack? Where are you? What are you talking about? Of course it's me.”

“You didn't answer me, are you real?” His voice drifted through the darkness.

“What're you talking about Jack? Of course I'm real.” Harley frowned in confusion.

Jack seemed to surge out of the darkness grabbing her by her shoulders and slammed her up against the padded wall. His blue eyes looked wild and his fingers pushed into her shoulders painfully. Harley gasped in pain, her voice strained. “Jack, you're hurting me!”

Jack leaned close, his eyes boring into hers, his grip becoming tighter, harder, as if his fingers would dig into the bones of her shoulders. Harley gasped in pain, cringing, and repeated louder. “Jack, you're hurting me!”

Jack snarled at her, “Are you real?!” He yanked her back and slammed her against the wall again.

Her head bounced against the padded wall, the impact knocking the air from her. Harley gasped in pain her voice coming out in a sob. “Jack! Jack...it's me...I'm real, I'm real!”

She put her shaking hands up on his chest. “Jack...it's me.”

Jack squeezed her shoulders, glaring at her until she was sobbing. “Jack please!!” Harley pleaded.

He hissed, spittle hitting her face as he leaned in close, madness clear in his blue eyes. “How do I know it's you?”

“Because I love you. I love you Jack.” Harley whimpered, the pain becoming unbearable as she looked into his eyes pleading with him to know it was her.

Jack's grip dropped and he yanked her into his arms. “Harley. Oh god Harley, I'm so sorry.”

Harley wrapped her arms around him, burying her face against his chest. “Oh Jack.”

Jack hugged her, stroked his hands over her hair, then pulled her back to cup her face between his hands. “Forgive me?”

Harley blinked back tears. “Yes, of course Jack.”

He wiped her tears away with his thumbs and kissed her, whispering her name over and over again. “Harley Harley Harley...my Harley...”

He covered her face with kisses, then against her mouth. He brushed her lips with his tongue. Harley opened her mouth to him, wrapping her arms around his neck. Their kissing immediately turned desperate, passionate. Jack grabbed desperately for her, pulling her against him, sinking to the floor of the cell. Harley grabbed at his shirt struggling to get it off of him while at the same time unwilling to take her mouth away from his lips. Jack let her go only long enough to swiftly unbutton his shirt. Harley yanked at her dress, pulling the heavy thick dress over her head, dropping the dress to the floor, then just as quickly she stripped off her undergarments. Jack sucked in a breath as the dim light danced over her pale skin. “My Harley,” he uttered softly.

Harley growled in response and immediately grabbed Jack's shirt to yank it off his shoulders, her mouth attacking his with licks and bites. Jack groaned, reaching for her again, but Harley pushed him onto his back, moving down to his pants, her hands working desperately and quickly to undo the slacks, grabbing them and yanking them down his legs, taking everything with them until he was naked too.

Immediately Harley ran her tongue up the length of his already hardening shaft; forcing his legs apart, she laid herself down between his thighs. She wrapped a hand around his erection at the same time that her lips greedily wrapped around the hard shaft, sucking him deeply into her mouth. Jack groaned loudly, his fingers grabbing fistsful of her blonde hair holding on as if he needed to make sure she remained real, he thrust his hips up into her waiting mouth, arching his head back with a loud groan of pleasure. Harley wrapped her tongue around him, sucking on him in desperation. She slowly lowered her mouth down on him, relaxing her throat to feel the smooth satin of his shaft against her lips and tongue, taking him all the way into her mouth. She shoved her hands up his torso worshippings his body in the way only a lover could.

Jack jerked when Harley took him deeply. The drag of her lips, the twist and jerk of her hand on him, had him whimpering. He needed her badly. Needed to know he really wasn't alone, that he had her...she was real...his Harley...

She coated him in her saliva sucking slowly, tasting the salty flavor of his pre-ejaculation on her tongue, dragging her lips up his length, her tongue twirling around the head of his penis with delight. She grinned taking pleasure not just in the little moans Jack was making or the way his fingers felt, their grip tight in her hair, but also in the way he was trembling, groaning her name over and over.

“Harley, Harley...my Harley...uuhh...” Jack's body arched toward her.

She bobbed her head slowly, sucking and pulling until Jack couldn't take anymore. He yanked on her hair pulling her up. Harley giggled, moving up his body to straddle him, Jack swallowed feeling how wet she was against his stomach. Jack smiled up at her, his perfect harlequin, the light made her hair dance like a golden halo.

“Am I real enough Jack?” she asked in a sweet whisper.

Jack chuckled. “I don't know Harls. I think I need a little more proof.”

Harley grinned. “Oh you do?”

She slid back and reached down, grabbing his shaft holding him as she lowered herself down on him. Harley groaned. The feel of Jack filling her, stretching her, sent ripples of heated pleasure up her spine. “Oh Jack!” Harley groaned, arching her body. She moved slowly at first, her hands running up his chest before she dropped down, her elbows on either side of his head. She kissed him tenderly whispering.

“I'm real Jack. I'm real,” while she bit his lips, her tongue caressing his in a slow sensual dance.

Jack wrapped his arms around her torso holding her close to him, the warmth and dampness of her surrounding him, his need to have her combined with the feeling of helplessness he had been feeling just prior to her being with him intensified their love-making. Harley brushed her fingers along his face, tracing his cheeks and mouth, while continuing to move her hips slowly up and down, grinding then a slow piston, her mouth never leaving his own.

Harley whimpered when she came, her body tightening around him, her fingers reaching up to grab fistsful of his hair when she groaned out his name. “Jack...uuhh...Jack...”
Jack followed swiftly behind her, the feeling of her holding him tightly. The pleasure of her orgasm yanked his own from him. Jack gasped, bursting into her, his entire body reacting to the orgasm. “Harley...” he groaned, his grip around her tightening.

Neither one of them wanted to move. Jack lazily stroked her back, the tips of his fingers weaving up and down her spine. Harley had her head nestled against his neck, her blonde hair covering her face. She occasionally kissed his throat or his jaw but otherwise she didn't really move much.

After a few minutes, Harley whispered. “What happened Jack?”

He frowned staring up at the ceiling. She started to move, but he stopped her. “No, don't. I want to stay like this...” He smiled, playfully thrusting up. Harley giggled tightening her thighs around him in response.

She waited for him to tell her, but he remained quiet. She gently caressed his brow, her fingers playing softly over his ear or along his jaw. After a few more moments Jack said softly. “I've seen my mother and father.”

It was early evening though the wind had picked up and the rain that started to fall outside made it look a lot later. Alex was sitting in a booth at the diner where Alice worked, tapping his foot trying to remain calm, using his one hand to slowly turn his cup of coffee around on the table. Alice came over and leaned against the table in his booth.

“Alex, don't worry so much.” She reached over and ruffled his hair.

He looked up at his girlfriend who was smiling as if nothing at all was or could go wrong. She was dressed all in pink and white today, looking adorable Alex thought; he definitely didn't deserve her..

He sighed. “I...”

He didn't get to finish when Alice came to attention, her focus drawn to the front of the diner. Alex turned in his seat to see the man Frost come in. It was easy to tell that man was an ex-cop just by the way he held himself, his eyes darting around the room looking for trouble, but remaining calm and ready. He glanced in their direction and Alice waved at him.

“I'll go fetch him for you,” Alice said bending over to place a quick kiss on the top of Alex's head. A moment later, Frost was sitting across from Alex. The two men nodded.

Alice smiled. “Get you something Mr. Frost?”

“Coffee, black and ah...you guys wouldn't happen to have any apple pie would you?” Frost asked with a hint of a smile.

“Sure do sweetie, just give me a moment. Alex, honey, you want some pie too?” Alice smiled at her boyfriend and he sighed. “Sure honey, thanks.”

After she left, Frost leaned forward. “So, Jack and Harley—you got a plan?”

Alex shook his head. “No, not yet, but last night I did a bit of looking online, found some old maps that had been scanned into the system, Arkham apparently has not only an extensive old sewer system that runs underground, but they also have extensive storm tunnels...all of it unused, just laying there underground waiting for a couple of smart minded individuals to form a break-in.”
Alex grinned brightly picking up his coffee and taking a large hot swallow.

Frost nodded. “Are they safe? I mean, it doesn't do us any good to get them out if we die because a tunnel collapsed on us.”

Alex sighed. “Okay, that I don't know.”

“We need someone on the inside,” Frost muttered just as Alice came back with his coffee and pie for them both. She slipped into the booth next to Alex. “You guys talking about breaking Jack and Harley out, a rescue mission?”

Both men nodded. “And you never got the name of the guy from the asylum who gave you the message?” Alice asked. Alex shrugged. “He didn't really give me a chance,” he muttered.

Alice frowned running a finger along the pocked and scarred surface of the table. “Maybe I can go visit Harley, see what I can find out?”

“Hey, actually that is a good idea.” Alex grinned.
Fed Up

It was late. Jack wasn't sure exactly how late, only that he was exhausted. Harley was curled against him with her head on his chest and her hand resting against his stomach while she slept. Once or twice she had cried in her sleep and he would tighten his grip around her, holding her close until she settled down. She murmured in her sleep a few times, calling out for him...cursing Crane. That had made him laugh, but mostly she cried for him. Jack held her tight. He didn't want to sleep. He wanted to cherish every moment with her, to be here, to comfort her when she dreamed...but he was also scared to close his eyes.

Jack chewed his bottom lip in thought. He was scared and that made him angry, furious. He had been scared so many times in his life and he would lash out when that happened until he had found a way to control his fear, but now...was he losing his mind?

He had told Harley about what he had seen, his parents. She was convinced that Crane was behind it. He smiled softly. She had so much confidence in him, she trusted him. Harley had kissed him and told him she didn't care if he was losing his mind; she loved him and told him she would lose her mind with him; wherever he went, she had said she would follow.

Jack smiled and squeezed her close, closing his eyes. Harley was his only solace, his partner and other half. He would find a way through this for her. Besides, if he was losing his mind, the thought of having her with him, just as crazy, was comforting.

The following morning, Bruce was drove into the city despite the day not being a work day. He had a date with a model, a gorgeous French model who was named Camille Lenoir; tall, slim, blonde and she had just flown in from Paris this morning to spend the day with him. It would actually be nice, a chance to put his worries on the back burner and maybe put thoughts of Selina aside. It bothered him that he just couldn't get her out of his thoughts. She haunted his dreams and his mind, which had only been made worse by the call. He wished she would make contact again, but he had heard nothing. Bruce sighed; he would focus on today. He didn't love Camille, but he did enjoy her company. Their relationship was more friends-with-benefits than anything more serious. They both liked it that way and perhaps that was best all around. He wasn't meant for love and family, Bruce thought to himself. Maybe none of the Waynes were...

Bruce smiled, shaking off the gloom and looking forward to the day, especially after how badly he had slept last night. He had awakened from a bad dream this morning, a dream about Jack that had been dark. Jack in the dream had been laughing, that laugh that had always overcome Jack when he was in the midst of one of his fits, usually after he had done something violent...it would always take days to calm him down again. Bruce hated those times, Jack alternating between laughing and crying. The worst times when Jack was like that, but there was no evidence that he had done anything...that always left Bruce feeling cold. He hated not knowing things.

Bruce shuddered and wondered sometimes if Jack still had those fits, except now he was much better at hiding them? Bruce felt a cold chill rush over him.

Bruce shuddered, shaking off the hazily-remembered dream like raindrops and let his thoughts return to his plans for today when his phone rang. He reached down hitting the button, unable to see the displayed number; immediately the phone was on speaker. “Bruce here.”
“What the hell are you doing Bruce Wayne?!” The voice was loud, deep, resembling the smoking purr that Lauren Becall's voice was famous for having. The sound of it almost had Bruce veer off the road in shock. “Aunt Agatha?”

“Yes it's your Aunt Agatha. What the hell is your brother doing in the asylum?” He couldn't be sure, but it sounded like she was in a car, a convertible with the top down. If Bruce knew his aunt, she would be speeding and driving dangerously.

Bruce and Jack's Aunt Agatha was not a typical aunt. She was a lot more like Aunt Mame from the movie than a little old lady—not that she was 'old' exactly—but she wasn't a young woman anymore, though no one would dare to say that in her presence. Agatha Wayne was statuesque, model beautiful with short black hair cut in a young boyish style and brilliant blue, intelligent—canny—eyes seemed to see everything. She was almost as tall as Jack and Bruce, but she had a presence about her that made her seem much taller. She had never married and had never had any children, preferring to spend her time traveling, which was why she didn't take the boys when her younger brother was killed—she just wasn't 'mother' material. She loved them, but she knew she wouldn't be good for them, not in the stable home foundation way they needed.

“Aunt Agatha...why are you calling?” Bruce was confused as he turned down a street trying to keep his focus on the traffic.

“Because I just heard about what you did to your brother, that's why. Really Bruce, how could you do that?” Agatha sighed. “I mean, I knew you boys butt heads, but to have him committed? Really Bruce, I'm shocked and disgusted.” Agatha's tone was low and would have conveyed her displeasure even without her words.

“Aunt Agatha it's...look, Jack has been violent in the past. He beat a man to death—what was I suppose to do?” Bruce sighed.

“I emasculated a man once with the heel of my shoe, but your dad didn't have me committed! You were supposed to get him the best help money can buy and let him stay home. Besides the fact that you're rich enough for that, those places are never as good as they claim to be. I should know.” Agatha was speeding down the autobahn, a cigarette between two of her fingers, one hand on the wheel and an opened bottle of vodka in her cup-holder. She smiled as she expertly handled the 2017 Jaguar F-TYPE SVR AWD Convertible purchased by her latest boyfriend, a German businessman who made his money...well she didn't know how he made his money nor did she care, all she cared about was that he spent it on her.

“And did I hear right? Jack's engaged too? God Bruce...I'm just...ugh. Is it true you committed her too? What is going on with you? Maybe you should have thought about having yourself examined? Anyway, I called to let you know I'll be state side in a few days, a week at the most.” Agatha took a puff off her cigarette.

Bruce hit the gas too hard receiving some honks and colorful shouted insults at his accidental jerk reaction with the car. “What?” Bruce glanced down at the phone for a moment as if the inanimate object would have some answers.

“I'm coming to visit. I want to know exactly what is going on with your brother and...you Bruce dear, what is going on with you. This is just not how the Waynes do things. I'll call again when I arrive.” Agatha's phone cut off without a goodbye.

Bruce started to say. “It's not that eas...” But then the phone went dead. Bruce groaned before he hit the auto dial for Alfred. Bruce spoke on as soon as the phone clicked.
“Alfred, we have a little problem coming.”

“What is it Master Bruce?” Alfred inquired with that calm that he always seemed to have even when upset.

“We have a code ten,” Bruce said his eyes hard as he drove.

Alfred groaned. “I'll stock up the vodka.”

Dale looked exhausted. There were bags under his eyes and he was moving slower than usual. He was about to go off duty when he came to pick up Harley from solitary, wanting to get her back safely to her room.

Dale knocked and opened the door slowly hoping that they were both dressed.

He spoke softly. “Sorry, but I need to get Harley back to her room before the shift change.”

Jack and Harley were dressed, lying curled around each other when the knock came. Jack sighed holding Harley against him, his face buried against her neck. She could feel just a slight tremble coming from Jack as he whispered, “I love you Harls.”

Harley held him tight, sniffing, trying not to cry; she didn't want to leave Jack crying. “I love you too Jack...my puddin.” She gave him a soft sweet giggle which made him smile. Jack stroked his fingers through her hair and along her neck. He could feel her shivering in his arms. He pressed a kiss to her ear, then along the soft place just under her ear. “I will get you out of here Harley. I swear. We're going to get out and we 're going to rain hell on Gotham.” He chuckled. Harley smiled, squeezing him.

They both stood up slowly, then Jack cupped her face between his hands and kissed her. The kiss was the kind that made every inch of her feel as if it were on fire, butterflies bursting in her stomach, her heart swelling. Tears came to her eyes despite her best efforts and slowly ran down her cheeks. Jack leaned back, frowning at her tears then kissed them away.

“Don't cry Harls,” Jack whispered.

“T'm sorry puddin. I just...I can't take this much longer.” Harley whispered, struggling to hold back her tears. Jack brushed his nose against hers. “I know Harls. We are going to get out. I swear.” The conviction in his eyes had Harley nodding in agreement.

Harley wrapped her arms around him one more time, kissing him hard before she let go and swiftly walked over to the door, dashing past Dale. Dale glanced over at Jack with a sad smile. “I'll try to bring her back tonight.”

Jack smiled and nodded at Dale. “Thanks.”

Then the door closed and Jack was left alone again.

*

Harley frowned, walking just in front of Dale and angrily wiped away the tears that just wouldn't stop falling. Her walk was brisk, but Dale caught up to her placing his hand on her shoulder more just in case someone saw them, but also to give her a bit of comfort.
“When do you think I'll get to see him again?” Harley asked as they made their way down the halls.

Dale yawned as they walked. “Should be able to tonight. I switched all my shifts to night shift. That will make it easier for me to get you away from your cell without anyone noticing. The night shift is always a little more lax.” Dale gave her shoulder a reassuring squeeze. “I wish I could stay on duty twenty-four hours, but...” He shrugged. “And with Sandra gone...”

Harley reached up and squeezed his hand. “You know we appreciate everything you're doing for us Dale.”

Dale smiled with a slight nod. “Thanks.”

After Dale had dropped Harley off, he made his way to the employee lounge to pick up his book and head downstairs to clock out. He had just stepped into the lounge when he heard a couple of the other orderlies talking, one man, one woman that Dale knew only in passing.

“God did you hear who they brought in to replace Sandra?” The one man—Dale struggled to recall his name....Norman! Norman usually worked on the fifth floor, but sometimes covered for the sixth. He was an okay guy, nothing special; he didn't go out of his way to cause the patients any issues, did his job, no more, no less. The younger woman he was speaking with was Essie. Nice, calm, did her job well. He knew Essie was friends with Sandra.

Essie hissed. “It's not true is it? I heard it was Daisy Maverick from long term care.”

Norman nodded. “It's her all right.”

“I thought she had been fired after that incident with those patients dying six months ago.” Essie leaned on the wall sipping her soda.

Norman shook his head. “She was put on administrative leave for like two weeks. Those patients didn't have any family, so no one put up a stink. I think Arkham only gave her that long because he wanted to be sure there was something on record of some sort of discipline. I don't know. All I know is that she's on our floor now.”

Essie shuddered. “Shit.”

Norman shrugged. “Well, look at the bright side. Everyone on this floor is violent. If Daisy is stupid enough to try anything with the patients here, she might just get more trouble than she can chew.”

Essie hissed. “Norm that's terrible!” But she chuckled.

He laughed. “I know, I know...”

Dale paled. Everyone had heard about Daisy Maverick. She was not just a hard-ass with patients, she was one of those nasty type of people who liked power and liked to used it making people feel small and useless and he had heard stories of her cruelty. He closed his eyes for a moment. This was the last straw; he had to get Jack and Harley out of here....he just needed to come up with a good plan.

*

It was late in the morning by the time someone came to get Harley to take her to the showers.
Breakfast had been running late and ended up being served as a cold breakfast (cereal, fruit and some luke warm tea) in their rooms because something had happened with one of the stoves in the kitchens. Harley had heard a couple of nurses talking about it as they walked by her cell, something about one of the stoves catching on fire and that had pretty much thrown everything off schedule, which meant the patients on the sixth floor would be spending most of the day in their cells.

The orderly that came to get Harley was another that she hadn't seen yet. She was a big woman, like Sandra, but where Sandra's homely features were pleasant because of how sweet and caring the woman was, this woman looked like a freaking Frankenstein monster with her military short hair cut and hard features. Her eyes looked like little black beads and her lip-less mouth was just a slash across her face. She wore her uniform more like a military drill sergeant. She even had a belt on around her middle where Harley saw what might be a pair of metal handcuffs, a baton, and a stun gun; she certainly was prepared Harley thought with a grin. The woman orderly scanned her card, opened the door, and snarled.

“Put your shoes on—showers.”

Harley slipped her shoes on and stepped over to the door with a broad smile. “I'm Harley.” She put her hand out, but the woman gave her a derisive look as if Harley was the most disgusting thing she had ever seen.

“I'm Daisy and I'm the new head orderly on level six. You will not make small talk with me. I am not your friend. You will do what you are told when you are told. Got it?” Daisy glared at her, her little black eyes were cold and humorless.

Harley grinned and shrugged. “Sure thing Daisy. Though you don't look like a Daisy to me, you look more like a Frank.”

Daisy glared at Harley. “I know exactly who you are; you're that bitch who's engaged to Bruce Wayne's retarded brother aren't you? You're Dr. Crane's little pet. Nurse Mallory told me all about you. How you're suppose to be treated differently than everyone else here because Crane likes you...well, I don't give a flying fuck what Crane or Mallory wants. I run this floor the way I see fit.
There are no favorites, no favors, especially for little whores like you. Think you're somebody by trying to marry the rich man's crazy brother? Think you're hot stuff because you're so pretty. None of that matters here. I'm going to make an example out of you...everyone will know what happens now that Daisy Maverick is in charge. So any backtalk is going to land you in a world of hurt, got that?
Or do I need to teach you a lesson?”

Harley was quiet for a long moment; she wasn't sure what had gotten into her, but she was tired, tired of nasty, bossy people who thought they had power over her and over Jack, tired of people telling her what to do, and just plain tired of this whole fucking place. She grinned wide and giggled as she said loudly. “I guess wearing a mask for you on Halloween is redundant with a face like that.”

Daisy grabbed Harley by the front of her dress. The woman held Harley up, having lifted her up off her feet just enough that Harley had to wrap her hands around the larger woman's arms to keep herself from adding too much strain and ripping her dress. Daisy hissed, her tiny black eyes like hard little rocks. “I'm going to let that one go, but you insult me again it won't be pretty.”

Then Daisy practically threw Harley out of her cell, sending Harley stumbling a few steps down the hall. “Get going, another word and I will stun you and fucking drag you to the showers.”

Harley made a face as she started walking in front of Daisy. The showers was a large room with five shower heads along one wall with divides between each shower. There were no curtains or doors, everything was in the open, the divides only offering the illusion of privacy. When Harley arrived she saw Babs and Tabitha were already washing, one of the other female orderlies was here leaning against the wall, on her phone only half paying attention while Babs and Tabitha chuckled about something they had been discussing while washing their hair. When Harley came in with Daisy, the big woman shoved Harley hard enough that the rubber soles of her shoes slipped on the damp tile floor, causing Harley to fall forward, crashing to the floor.

Daisy chuckled. “Oops.”

The other orderly started to come over to help Harley to her feet. “Oh my god, you okay?”

Babs and Tabitha turned, staring at the confrontation.

Daisy turned on the other orderly snarling. “Out. I got this under control.”

The younger woman stopped in her tracks, fear washing across her face. She started to protest, but Daisy glared at her. “Not another word—you know who’s in charge here. I have this, now get out.”

The younger orderly nodded and hurried out without another word. Harley had gotten to her feet when Daisy grabbed her by her wrist and yanked Harley across the floor to the shower. Harley started to struggle.

“What the hell is wrong with you?” she yelled trying to hit the big woman, but Daisy held her out easily, clearly far stronger than Harley. She yanked her to one of the showers, whipping out a pair of old fashion metal handcuffs from around the belt she wore around her uniform, yanked Harley’s arm up and cuffed her wrist to the shower head.

Harley yelled. “What are you doing?! Let me down!!”

Daisy snorted. “Watch me blondie.” Then she turned on the shower head full blast. Harley gasped in shock as ice cold water hit her in the face.

Harley dangled, her toes just barely touching the floor trying to keep her face out of the water gasping for breath. Babs and Tabitha were both watching when Babs hissed. “You can't do that!”

Daisy turned on the slimmer woman and stepped within arms reach of her, her black eyes hard. “I can do whatever I want sweetheart.”

Then Daisy whipped out her stun gun and jabbed Babs in the side, startling the young woman. Babs cried out in shock and pain, slipping on the wet tiles and landing with a thud on the floor. Tabitha let out a yell. “Don't you touch her you bitch!”

Daisy hissed. “You have a problem there black barbie?”

Tabitha went very still. “What did you just call me?”

Harley had reached up and grabbed onto the shower head with her other hand, dangling, her rubber soled toes scraping against the wet floor. She was so angry she almost couldn't think straight. She hated this place, hated the mean, nasty people who worked here, the cruelty for no other reason than to have power over someone else. She hated Crane for hurting Jack and her, for treating them like objects instead of people. She hated Bruce for being so weak and self-righteous and right now, she fucking HATED Daisy for taking Sandra's place, coming in here like she owned the place and immediately trying to hurt her. Harley was tired and she was fed up.

She lifted herself up. Luckily, despite not keeping up with her gymnastics like she should, her upper body strength was still sufficient for the task. She was able to lift her legs up, after kicking her shoes off, and put her bare feet against the wall, though it was difficult with the ice cold water blasting down on her. She couldn't keep her eyes open and she kept having to jerk her head to the side in order to catch a breath of air. She could hear the heated exchange going on between Tabitha and Daisy despite the power of the water hitting her constantly in the face. From the sound of it, it was only a matter of time before Tabitha made a move and Harley wasn't about to force Tabitha to fight Frankenstein's monster alone. Besides, Harley had had enough of being the victim of this place. She was terrified of whatever it was that Crane was doing to Jack...the plain, raw fear in Jack's voice when he spoke of seeing his parents last night. Her puddin was shaken and scared, thinking he had completely lost his mind. Harley put all her weight against the shower head, hauling back as hard as she could. The metal of the shower head groaned. Harley squeezed her eyes and mouth shut against the constant spray of water. She thought she heard the electrical “zap” of the stun gun again at the very moment the shower head broke free, dumping Harley down hard on the slick tiles.

She hit her head hard against the tiles, which immediately sent her head and vision swimming. Harley blinked, watching the water come down in a flood like from a faucet instead of the blast from the shower. Dizziness nearly overwhelmed her. Harley giggled thinking she had hit her head pretty hard. Probably a concussion, she thought wryly. She rolled groggily onto her side to see blood mixing with the water that flowed down the drain. Harley laid on her side trying to get her bearings and clear her head.

Tabitha hissed in pain when Daisy hit her with the stun gun. Even naked and wet, the younger woman had moved quickly enough that Daisy hadn't been able to completely press the prongs of the weapon against her, but even so the shock had hurt. But Tabitha didn't drop. She had backed herself against the shower wall, her hands balled into fists and glared defiantly at Daisy. The big woman gave her a nasty grin at the same time that she yanked free her baton.

Now armed with both a stun gun and baton, Daisy stalked toward Tabitha. “You are in for a world of hurt missy. Daring to strike an orderly? Trying to interfere with my work? Just might end up in solitary and you know...I've been known to forget to feed people in solitary from time to time.”

Tabitha glared hatefully at the older woman...her dark eyes glanced toward Babs once, who still lay on the wet tiles after Daisy had zapped her. Babs had pulled herself into a fetal position against the shock of the weapon. Tabitha growled. “No one touches Barbara.”

“Looks like I just did and I touched you too.” Daisy grinned. “I can do a lot more too...no one here will raise a finger against me. I have Arkham on my side, Crane, Mallory. I have full authority to do whatever needs to be done to keep you lot of in line. I own this floor, just going to use you three as my examples. Make sure the rest of you know who the boss is.”

“Whose floor is this Frank?”

Daisy turned at the sound of Harley's voice to see the drenched, shivering, with watery blood mixed in her damp hair. Harley stood there snarling, her hair stuck in long curling wet strands to her face making the little blonde look like a maniac. Harley held the shower head in her right hand, her hand still cuffed, but now free of the wall, and swung with all her strength, using her entire body for the hit, using the slick tile flooring to twist herself fully as she struck Daisy across the face with the remains of the shower head. Daisy went down exactly how Harley thought a sack of potatoes would go down. Daisy lost her hold on both the stun gun and the baton, which went skidding across the tiles.

Harley giggled. “Well that was easier than I thought.”

Harley grinned at Tabitha, but that was the instant Daisy's wrapped her hand around Harley's ankle and yanked. Harley let out a yelp of surprise, her feet going out from under her. But this time she didn't hit her head. The instant that Harley began to fall, she twisted her body around, landing on her elbows which sent a jarring rattle through her entire body. Harley hissed in pain, one of her arms going numb and the air was knocked from her. Daisy hissed and snarled like a wild animal. “You think it was going to be that easy? You think you can hurt me missy! I know all about hurting patients, all the ways to make you scream.”

Harley pulled herself forward on the slippery tiles and snarled right back. “You know, for a minute I did think it was going to be that easy! What the hell is wrong with everyone they hire here?! Don't they have you guys fill out a psych eval!!”

Harley twisted her body and slammed her bare foot into Daisy’s face. Tabitha launched herself at Daisy landing on the woman's back and doing her best to grab her by her short hair. Daisy held onto Harley's ankle yanking the smaller woman toward her, her lips bloody and staining her teeth.

“I'm going to rip your face off!” Daisy hissed.

Harley giggled. “Eww!!” she kicked again yelling. “I'm so fed up with this place and you are butt ugly!!”

Tabitha yanked back on what little hair she could get a hold of on Daisy’s head. This time Harley's strike with her foot broke the woman's nose with a sickening crush of bone. Daisy let out a scream, releasing Harley who scrambled to her feet, but Daisy reared back knocking Tabitha off her back.

Daisy grabbed her bloody nose gurgling. “You fucking bitch!”

She started to move at Harley when suddenly the big woman jerked, her feet slipping and she hit the tile floor hard. Standing behind her was Babs holding the stun gun. Babs looked pale, wet and naked, but she grinned at Harley. Harley chuckled and walked over to Daisy who groaned.

Harley stood over her, her hands on her hips. “Now, whose floor is it bitch?” Then she kicked Daisy in the face as hard as she could, knocking Daisy out.

The orderly who had been sent away came rushing back into the showers. “I heard a commotion, what's....”

She looked at the three women in shock but Harley smiled and held out her cuffed hand. “Can you help a girl out? I really want to take a shower after that.”

Jack lay on his back, wearing only his asylum pants, bare chest and bare feet, his legs crossed at the ankles, staring at the darkness. He was on the edge of the single light. The weak yellow light made him sick to his stomach. He preferred the darkness. He closed his eyes and let his mind drift. He could hear the muffled sounds of Tetch talking.

“Everything is QUEER TODAY!!”

Then the sounds of Tetch in the other cell singing to himself.

“The me I never knew

Begin to stir sometime this morning

The me I never knew

Appeared without a word of warning
You smiled and you uncovered
What I had not discovered
You made me, seethed me
I never knew ...”

*
Jack let Jervis's singing lull him, closing his eyes, the words flowing over him. He grinned and sang along softly, his voice a whisper.

*
“The me I never knew
Has learned to love and love the feeling
The me I never knew
Can see a world I've been concealing
Today a new song's playing
The words are simply saying
"From now, I'll be the me, I never knew...”

*
His mind was drifting, working, thinking of ways to escape and dismissing them. Jack pressed his lips together into a hard line. He was fed up. His girl was hurting, he needed to get her out of this place and he was definitely fed up. Fed up with this treatment, fed up with the loss of control and fed up with feeling weak, powerless.

At one point, as he laid on the floor, almost in a meditative state, he thought he heard movement at his door, but when nothing happened Jack dismissed it. The door didn't open and there was no knock. He knew it was far, far too early for Dale to be on duty and bringing Harley back. Though he desperately wished she was here, he couldn't function without her...he felt incomplete without Harley beside him. Jack squeezed his eyes tight on the pain, then took a breath and let it out. No, he was getting tired, tired of all of this.

He was going to make so many people pay.

Jack shook himself, allowing himself a little smile. Jervis started singing a new song, the little man's voice cut through the padding.

“Curiouser and curiouser I find I grow curiouser
But each time I ask a question why there’s no reply
Some days are gloriuser and gloriuser
They can’t be more gloriuser
But soon as those days begin to die I’m back to why…”

*

Jack smiled, letting himself drift, the song carrying him and ignoring the sounds outside his cell figuring they were nothing more than the scurrying sound of those rats this place employed. Except for Dale and Sandra… which was another reason Jack needed to bust out of here and rescue those two from this place and open their eyes to the possibilities the world had to offer on the outside.

Jack smiled to himself when he started to smell the scent of cookies? Jack’s eyes flew open and he saw barely a haze of greenish gas in the air. Jack shoved himself up pushing himself backwards into a corner watching as the gas drifted into the room like an entity, filling the available space.

“No, no, no,” he hissed, anger mixing with fear as his nostrils flared.

Crane, it had to be Crane, he thought and that fucking fear toxin he had been dosing Harley with…he wasn’t sure what the man wanted with him, but he was confident it wasn’t to try to make him better. He could feel the gas beginning to take effect as the shadows around Jack’s room moved. He struggled, fighting off the narcotic’s effects, but it was difficult.

Jack’s vision became wobbly, his head spinning and nausea over came him. He giggled for a moment thinking to himself if Crane wasn’t such a fucking douchebag and after his girl, they might have a lot to talk about, share, with Crane’s use of “fear” gas and Jack’s own toxin he had been working on before Harley stole all his attention. Jack giggled again. He would do it all over again though…Harley was far more fun than any of his “experiments” had been...

Jack was pressed up against the padded wall, willing his heart rate to slow, when the door to his cell opened and his mother slipped inside. Jack groaned in pain as he slid down the wall, brought his knees up, and covered his head with his arms. “Not again...no no no...not real.”

His mother came over, squatting down and stroked her fingers through his hair. Jack jerked away scrambling to the other side of the room. He felt the warmth from her body and the gentle caress through his hair. It made his skin crawl to know his illusions—no, delusions he corrected himself—were so real.

“Oh my poor little boy, all alone in the world. No one wants you sweetheart,” Martha cooed softly. She was dressed as before, in the last outfit Jack had seen her in while alive. “Isn’t that your biggest fear Jack, that no one would ever want you?”

Jack had brought his knees up close, wrapping his arms around his head while his mother continued. He was doing his best to wish her away, to ignore the words that came at him like daggers, slicing at his defenses.

“That’s really why you attacked that man wasn’t it...because he was going to take away someone you thought loved you. How could Harleen Quinzel ever love someone as pathetic as you Jack. Oh my boy...I wish you had never been born. Always wanting someone to play with, but no one wanted to be near you, not even your brother wanted you...” She smiled at him and Jack narrowed his eyes glaring at her. The drug was making him nauseous and fear kept fighting to overtake him, but Jack wasn’t going to give in without a fight. Something in him broke a little more. He was fed up.

Jack squeezed his eyes closed as his mother continued to say hateful things, but when Jack wasn’t looking at her, his mother’s voice changed to his father. “Pitiful. I wish you had never been born.”

Then his mother again whispered, her voice slightly sing-songy. “If only I had miscarried...”
Jack squeezed his eyes shut, tears starting to leak from under his lashes when his mother whispered. “So alone. So unwanted.” Jack had always feared he wasn't wanted. They had Bruce, handsome, perfect Bruce, why would they want a skinny, ugly son when they had Bruce? Jack squeezed his eyes closed, all his old fears, old pain, the loneliness, the isolation, the inability to make Bruce love him. Jack tried to fight the tears but he couldn't. All he had ever wanted growing up was Bruce's approval...

Jack gathered himself, letting his anger lead him, the unfairness of everything he had endured, the great fucking joke that none of this mattered. His mother didn't matter. His father didn't matter. And Bruce...Bruce didn't matter. The only think in his whole world that mattered, that was really important, was Harley...Harley willingly sharing his view of the world...Harley wrapped in his arms. His Harley.

Jack raised his head, his eyes a hard clear blue, his voice dripping with venom now. “You're the one who left! You're the one who left me all alone, left me and Bruce alone with NO ONE!! You and Dad were the ones that died!! Neither of you were strong enough!! I hate you!! Alfred was a better parent than you ever were!”

Jack wiped viciously at his eyes, the tears making them red, which only made the blue of his irises glow in the dim light. Tears flowed freely down his cheeks despite his efforts to stop them. His voice dropped for a moment as he groaned in pain. “You left me alone. You took everything good with you. Everything good in me you took with you when you left me behind! But Harley brought some of it back. Do you hear me? Harley brought me back. Harley loves me! Loves me like no one else ever has and no one ever will!! You hear me?!”

By the time Jack was done yelling, he had risen to stand, his chest heaving. His mother stared at him with pity in her eyes, but then she morphed and shifted, her body wrapping around and into itself as she became Bruce. Bruce in one of his black suits, the blue of the tie almost a perfect match to his blue eyes. He was every inch the playboy billionaire, adored by the Gotham public for his good deeds, big pocket book and his willingness to spend. The man at whom women threw themselves, begging for his bed. The man everyone loved, admired, wanted to be near or to be like. The fact that he was good looking on top of it was just icing on the cake. Jack stared in horror at the transformation, not understanding what was happening.

“Oh my little pathetic brother. You were always so weak and afraid, crying about everything. Weeping all the time over our dead parents. Do you have any idea how freeing it is not to have to deal with you anymore?” Bruce laughed.

“They finally be the only heir, not to have to drag your pathetic ass around!” Bruce smiled at Jack, the smile not reaching his eyes, his deep blue eyes, so much like their father's, flashed in the dim light. “You pathetic weak joke...you always were a joke, Jack. Did you know that Alfred and I would talk about what a waste you were behind your back.” Bruce sneered at him. “Alfred never liked you Jack. Taking care of you was hard on him. He wanted to smother you in your sleep Jack.” The laugh that came from Bruce was horrible, something that made Jack shiver.

Bruce stepped closer, smiling nastily at Jack. “Now, maybe...I think I need to add that girl of yours to my list of conquests...I'm sure she was only using you to get my attention anyway, and boy did she ever get my attention. She has a body that doesn't quit and I'm planning on finding out just flexible she is. Yes, yes I think when we're finished here I'll go visit her myself.” Bruce laughed. “Can you imagine how excited she will be to get me instead of you?”

Jack had taken a step back when his mother had changed into Bruce. But now he was practically vibrating, his eyes stoney as he stared at his brother. Jack's hands balled into fists.
Bruce stepped closer still. “Everyone will be so happy when you're dead Jack. Especially your girl.”

Jack let out an incoherent snarl. While Bruce had many conquests over the years, Harley had been Jack's first, the first woman he had been intimate with, and she would be the only one...the only woman he ever wanted. He would not let Bruce take her away from him. Bruce talking about Haley like that, mentioning her name, talking of making her his was enough to snap Jack out of his black depression.

“DON'T YOU TOUCH HER!” Jack launched himself at his brother grabbing Bruce by the front of his suit and tossed him across the padded room. “I fucking hate you Bruce!! I love you and I hate you!!”

Jack's eyes were crazed, tears of pain and rage falling freely...and he laughed. Laughed at himself for ever caring what Bruce felt about him, crying over the boy he never was...tears began their slow descent down his cheeks while Jack continued to laugh at the fact that he did indeed both love and hate his brother with equal passion.

“I fucking love you Bruce, but I hate you so much. I hate everything about you from your perfect life, perfect looks to your perfect law and order attitude!! And I swear if you lay a hand on Harley I will rip it from your body and fucking beat you to death with it!!” Jack snarled.

Bruce had just gotten to his feet when Jack charged him again, this time slapping his brother across the face. He didn't notice the way the skin vibrated unnaturally or that there was a slight shift in his brother's features along with the blood from a split lip and now bloody nose. Jack was too angry, too hurt, and if he was in the correct frame of mind to admit it, too scared to care. He had had enough, he wanted to fight back, to tear apart all the things he had thought he loved, his parents, Alfred, Bruce...the only thing in his life that was sacred to him now was Harley. The only person to stay by him, to stay by his side through everything was her, and he would kill anything and anyone who stood in their way—or anyone who touched her...even his brother.

Bruce took a swing at Jack, making contact with Jack's face, the hit created a smart meaty sound of bone hitting flesh. Jack didn't back away despite the pain that blossomed along his cheek. He immediately felt the hot wet flow of blood down his face, and from his nose. He tasted it on his lips and tongue. Jack laughed.

Jack lunged as he let out an exuberant, “Yeah!” He grabbed Bruce around his head, holding on tight, digging his fingers in (again he failed to noticed that his fingers sank into his brother's flesh a little too much, too easily.)

Bruce tried to kick Jack between the legs, but Jack let go, dancing back from Bruce with a snarl. He lunged, grabbing Bruce around the back of his neck again, shoving Bruce backward up against the padded wall before he slammed his forehead against Bruce's head hard enough that Jack blinked, seeing stars for a split second as well as opening a pressure wound on his forehead causing blood to run down between Jack's eyes. Bruce let out a groan reaching up to try to grab Jack around the neck. Jack slugged his brother three times hard in the face, bloodying both Bruce's face and Jack's knuckles, but then Bruce grabbed a hold of Jack and threw his little brother with enough strength that Jack went flying across the room hitting the padded floor hard.

The air was knocked from Jack’s lungs in a painful rush when he hit the wall then the floor, but Jack gasped in air and started to laughed against the pain. His laugh came out in a strange choking croak before it became a true, yet slightly hysterical laugh.

Gasping for breath between the laughs, his teeth and lips bloody, tears in his eyes, Jack glanced up at his brother. “Come on Brucie!! That all you got!! Hit me again, you know you want to!! You've always wanted to, but your perfect control never let you!! Brucie Brucie always in control of his temper!!"

Bruce seemed to grow in size. Jack couldn't be sure if it was the fear gas, the hits to his head or he was that crazy now, but he was sure that Bruce grew. Bruce roared, sounding nothing at all like his brother, reaching down to grab Jack, hauling him to his feet. Jack laughed and punched his brother hard in the diaphragm making sure to use his knuckles, hitting with as much power as he could right under his brother's breastbone. Now he felt the strange give of his brother's body, but he didn't have a chance to understand what was happening.

Bruce gasped, dropping Jack, but Jack was ready, landing on his feet in a crouch. Jack surged up and twisted his lean body, using his elbow to smash into his brother's face. He then shoved Bruce, causing the taller man to stumbled backwards into the wall. Jack leapt into the air with a roar of his own, bringing his fist down onto his brother's face. Jack struck again three times in hard succession, as fast as he could, blood flying from his brother's face.

Jack was laughing the whole time. “Oh lookie lookie!! Who's the pretty boy now!!”

That was when Bruce face dissolved, melted away like mud or putty and another man's face emerged. Jack blinked going still in shock, his bloody fist poised for another strike. Jack let go of the other man in shock, stumbling backwards his eyes round. “Who the hell are you?!”

The man staggered toward the door, but Jack snarled, gritting his blood covered teeth. “Oh no you don't…”

He rushed the strange man grabbing him around the middle, surprising the new man when Jack growled and lifted him up in the air just before Jack rolled the man over his shoulder and slammed him into the padded floor. Jack jumped him straddling the stranger and sitting on the man's torso, his fists swinging away with crazed eyes. He didn't know who or what this man was, but he had had enough. Enough of the pain, enough of the deception, enough of people using Harley.

Jack hissed. “I'm going to fucking kill you!”

The man threw his arms up blocking a couple of blows before he bucked and twisted, tossing Jack to the side. Jack started to roll to his feet, but the other man hit him across the shoulder and into his cheek throwing Jack off and sending him tumbling into the darkness of the cell. Jack winced, his lips cutting against his teeth. The man got to his feet. He turned at the snarl of Jack rushing out of the darkness. The man let out a yelp throwing both arms up at the same time that his appearance changed to that of Martha Wayne.

“Oh Jack, Jack please sweetheart, you wouldn't hit your mother would you?” She smiled and held her arms out to him.

“Oh Jack, Jack please sweetheart, you wouldn't hit your mother would you?” She smiled and held her arms out to him.

“You're not my fucking MOTHER!!” Jack snarled coming in hard and fast, his fists connecting first with one cheek then the other. He laughed, crying at the same time as he seemed to beat his mother until she collapsed at his feet. Jack's knuckles were bloody, scraped and he was panting out of breath. There were several minor wounds on his face and his lip was split again, but as he looked down at the beaten up form of his mother Jack giggled. “How's that mother? Didn't see that coming did you? But you made a fatal mistake pretending to be Bruce. You might have managed to break me, but Bruce…” Jack laughed. “And threatening Harley? You really are stupid. No one threatens my girl.” Jack reached down, his mother transforming back into the strange man. The man on the floor put his hand up trying to protect himself from Jack. “Please, please don't kill me!! Crane made me do it! I had no choice.”
Jack stopped, his hands in front of him, fingers spread to wrap around the throat of the man who had been plaguing him. “What?” Jack asked softly.

“My name is Basil Karlo and Crane has my daughter!” Karlo pleaded. He started to cry. “My daughter is a patient on the second floor, suicide attempt while I was in prison. My estranged wife put her here, but Crane promised if I broke you he would release us both, allow us to disappear.” Karlo stared with pleading eyes at Jack. “I had no choice, you have to understand. My daughter means the world to me...”

Jack took a few steps away from the man. He shivered, suddenly chilled. He was covered in a thin film of sweat, bloody and still very angry, but he took a few calming breaths. He chuckled then, running a hand over his face then smiled down at Karlo once he trusted himself to speak. “You know, I might have to thank you. Beating up my brother was cathartic. Granted, you don’t fight as well as him...but still...” He shook out his arms, taking a few breaths before turning back to the shivering man.

“Crane put you up to this?” Jack asked

The man nodded. “Yes. He brought me from Blackgate.”

“And you can change how you look...” Jack’s voice trailed off.

Karlo nodded. “Yes. I can’t let them keep me daughter.”

Jack smiled. “Then maybe Basil Karlo, you can be my few best friend.”

*

Basil Karlo left solitary...looking like one of the guards and blending in to the background of Arkham Asylum just like Jack Wayne had suggested to wait for the signal...whatever that was going to be, but Jack Wayne had promised: when they broke out, they would be taking Karlo and his daughter with them. Basil wasn’t sure whether he should trust the young man, but he could have killed him, killed him for what he had done to him, but Jack Wayne had instead chosen to help him. It was a much better deal than he was getting from Crane and who knew? Maybe with Jack Wayne's help, Karlo might be able to put his skills to some real, money making use.

*

It was much later in the afternoon. After the incident in the showers Daisy was taken to the infirmary. Harley was not looking forward to their next run in. She suspected it wasn't going to be pleasant and she wasn't going to have to the backup of Tabitha or Babs next time, but she didn't care. Harley was done, done with all of this...she wasn't going to be the victim any longer. Her mood was still with her when Nurse Mallory showed up at her door with two guards armed with batons and tasers. Mallory glared at Harley from the other side of the door. “Behave Quinzel or I have Crane's authority to put you down. Either way, you are going to his office.”

Harley smiled. “Look at you, Miss Fetch and Carry.”

Mallory sneered, but said nothing, she simply scanned her car and stepped out of the way, the two guards rushing into the room. Harley yelled and fought, but they were trained and before she had put up much of a fight they had her slammed up against the wall, rolled her struggling into her straightjacket and strapped her to the wheelchair. The ride to Crane's office was carried out in silence which was fine by Harley; her tongue felt sharp today and she wasn't much in the mood for trying to be nice. As Mallory wheeled her by the other cells Harley saw Babs sitting on the floor of her cell.
She saw Harley and grinned, waving with enthusiasm which made Harley grin.

*

When they arrived at Crane's office, there was the usual waiting for her. A dress was hung up on the wall, this time a black dress waiting for her. This one was more “Gothic” in look and design than the previous dresses, a sleeveless black tea-length dress with a sweetheart neckline, and a pair of stylish black heels, which made Harley's heart skip a frightened beat. For a moment she was reminded of the scene in the movie “Legend” where Lilly is given the black dress...though she had to laugh...Jack was her dark prince charming, he gave her death and violence like roses and jewelry, appealing to that dark part of herself that she never knew was there; Jack knew her, he was part of her, the deepest part of her. There was nothing left of her that didn't belong to him and vice versa...Crane could only pretend to be like Jack, but he would never have her...never.

But the other thing waiting for Harley in Crane's office that caused the blonde to break out into a wide smile was Sandra.

Harley squealed with delight, the entire wheelchair squeaking with her excitement as she rocked forward. “SANDRA!"

Mallory hissed at the large orderly. “You get her dressed, fix her hair and make-up, then you leave—got it.”

Sandra nodded. Mallory gave her a narrow eyed glare then stepped out, slamming the door. Harley was vibrating in the chair. “What are you doing here?” She was all smiles, despite the situation.

Sandra came over quickly, her smile pensive. “I guess Crane figured you wouldn't fight me getting you ready so he brought me here just for this. How are you doing? I've been so worried and then I heard you were part of an attack on Daisy Maverick?”

Harley giggled while Sandra went about freeing her from the wheelchair and then the jacket. “Yeah, it was me Babs and Tabitha this morning in the showers. That Daisy was being a royal pain in the ass.”

Sandra frowned taking the dress off the hanger after she had freed Harley. “You really need to be careful. That woman...she is nasty. There are so many rumors about her. They suspect she killed a couple of patients in long term care and abused some others in the eating disorder area. She doesn't work well with anyone. Actually I'm sorta surprised it took them this long to put her on the sixth floor. Your level seems to be where all the bad ones end up.” Sandra sounded sad as she helped Harley into the dress.

“How did you get onto the sixth floor?” Harley asked while Sandra zipped her up. The big woman smiled. “I wanted to make a difference. I don't think you guys are violent for no reason. Every one of you has a reason. Find the reason, start helping from there.” She shrugged. “I don't know...just have an attraction to extreme personalities too...plus it didn't hurt that I saw Dale one day and found out he worked on the sixth floor.” Both women giggled together as Sandra pulled out a chair and sat Harley down, reaching for the bag with the cosmetics and hair supplies. She started to brush Harley's hair, skillfully sweeping the thick blonde hair up into a graceful updo that made Harley's face look young and fresh.

Sandra hated to leave Harley in Crane's office after fixing her up, but she didn't have a choice. She sighed, grabbed her purse and headed out for lunch. Usually she ate lunch on the grounds (or with Dale lately), but today she was feeling down, missing Dale and worried about Harley. So she decided to treat herself to lunch downtown at a little family owned restaurant that had some of the best food she had ever tasted. She was considering asking Dale out to dinner, a real, go out to dinner stay the night in my apartment type dinner. She blushed at her own thoughts, stepping out of the elevator when a female voice greeted her. A female voice of someone becoming very upset.

“Why can’t I see her? There is no rule against friends coming to visit is there?”

The agitated woman was at the reception desk, dressed in a pair of simple jeans and a like pink t-shirt, her hair pulled back in a pony tail and a large white fake leather purse over her shoulder. She was snarling at the receptionist.

“Well, then I want to speak to someone in charge! I'm here to see my friend and I find it really suspicious that she isn't allowed to see anyone!” The young woman glared at today's receptionist. Sandra frowned seeing that this young woman was yelling at Kelly. Kelly was new, a temp who was taking Agatha's place. Agatha had still not said whether she was coming back or not. Sandra sighed. She hated to see anyone having a difficult time so she walked over to the receptionist desk.

“Maybe I can help you miss, who are you wanting to see?”

The young woman turned, glaring up at Sandra. “I'm here to see Miss Harley Quinn!”

Sandra blinked in surprise, then grabbed the woman by her upper arm and hauled her away from the receptionist window.

The woman yelled. “HEY! Whatyathinkyerdoing!!”

Sandra glanced to Kelly who looked relieved and was speaking to one of the nurses. Sandra bent down. “I know Harley. I'm going to lunch—come with me and we can talk.”

The woman frowned, looked back at reception then nodded. “Okay. I'm Alice by the way.”

Sandra smiled in a way she hoped would relieve some of Alice's tension. “Sandra.” The two women were seated at the back of the busy restaurant, the smells of garlic bread, pizza and other more traditional Italian dishes filled the small space with delicious scents. Sandra had a plate of Pansotti alla genovese while Alice had ordered Fettuccine Alfredo. Both women decided to eat a few bits of their food before they started really talking. The drive over her had been quiet, but now Alice swallowed and gave Sandra a hard stare.

“Okay, so why can’t I see Harley?” Alice took a sip of her soda.

Sandra frowned. “Because right now she is with Crane, though I doubt he is going to let anyone see her.”

Alice looked annoyed. “Why not? Alex got to see Jack. Although the visit didn't last long, but...”

Sandra sighed. “It's complicated, but Crane has taken a special interest in Harley. He isn't going to let just anyone see her.”

“Special interest?” Alice asked before taking a bite of her food.

Sandra nodded, glancing out the restaurant's front window. “Yeah...” Sandra glanced down at her food then back to Alice. “How would you feel about helping me break them out?”

Alice, her fork half way to her mouth grinned, her eyes dancing. “Oh, you are just the person I was hoping for Sandra. I have a few people you need to meet.”

Sandra grinned. “I have someone else who can help us.”

Alice took a bite of her food speaking around it. “I knew coming here was a great idea!”

*

Harley was waiting for Crane, sitting in the chair across from his desk. Sandra hadn't cuffed her, but Mallory had marched right back in and put the plastic cuffs on her wrists. Harley was occupying herself with imagining ways to kill Nurse Mallory when Crane walked in, dressed in a tailored beige suit with thin dark brown lines, a chocolate colored dress shirt and a tie that was a deep burnt orange with a hint of blood red, a guard walked in behind him instead of an orderly, pushing a cart. The smell of beef stew wafted from the covered dishes. Crane came around his desk smiling, picking up the bottle of wine that the guard had set down as he did so, and opened it up with a pop of the cork. He filled two glasses, picked up one, and leaned over handing the glass to Harley. She took it carefully in her cuffed hands, sipping the red wine with a rich heady flavor.

“I’ve decided to bring our lunch in today my dear, from a nice French restaurant downtown called Rye. I ordered us Bœuf bourguignon.” Crane lifted up the lid of his laptop, his eyes moved as he looked through his music selection holding his wine in one hand while with the other long fingered hand, he scrolled through his computer files.

The guard set out the dishes and left without a glance at Harley. Harley wrinkled her nose. “Smells like beef stew.”

Crane chuckled. “I suppose to the untrained nose it does, but it is beef simmered in red wine. Ah, here we are...”

Crane hit a button on his computer and the music started to play, Chopin's Nocturne in B-flat minor Op. 9 No. 1. He smiled and closed his eyes for a long moment before he gazed at Harley. “Now. Tell me about your issue in the showers today.”

Harley frowned at the food in front of her after doing her best to scoot her chair closer. Her stomach rumbled, which made her sigh. She couldn't really accomplish anything if she starved herself. Crane smiled at her taking a bite when she started to eat. After he took a few bites Crane dabbed his mouth with a napkin. He noticed her reluctance to talk and decided to tell her about his plans instead. “I’ve decided that it is time to take your transformation to the next level.”

Harley, who had shoved a huge bite into her mouth looked up at him startled. With her mouth full she mumbled. “Next level?”

Crane smiled. “Yes. I'm planning on moving you to a more secure area, away from the asylum and the influence of your fiance or the other patients. I have a place of my own, inherited from my father. I think it will be a perfect spot. We still have much to do.”

Harley dropped her utensil. The silverware made a clatter against her plate. Harley stared at him. “You can’t do that.”

Crane smiled. “I think you will find that I can my dear. In the paperwork for your commitment, it seems your Mr. Bruce Wayne was not as thorough with the details as he should have been in his need to be done with you and Jack both. He gave me leeway to enact whatever treatments I deem necessary, that also included taking my patients wherever and to whatever facility I deem necessary. So you see dear, you will be coming with me. The move will take place within the next forty-eight Crane picked up his glass of wine and took a sip, smiling pleasantly.

Harley's voice trembled. “I won't leave Jack.”

Crane smiled. “My dear dear girl, you have no choice. Don't worry, once I am done with you, you will see everything differently.”

Harley didn't think before she reacted. She snarled, grabbed the fork from the table at the same time kicking her heels off, and launched herself across the desk. Crane was so surprised by the violent outburst that he didn't react except for his eyes to go wide when the blonde was suddenly over his desk and in his face.

Harley's lunge knocked the food everywhere, the fork wrapped between her bound hands. Crane yelped in surprise, his deck chair flying backwards with Harley on him. The unexpected weight and Crane's reflex of flinching back caused the chair to fall back, both of them going down with it. The chair tilting back and Crane throwing his hands up was enough to knock Harley's strike off, missing her intended target, Crane's neck. Instead Harley buried the fork in his shoulder, ramming it with enough strength to pierce straight through his three-piece suit and into the flesh of his shoulder.

She screamed yanking the fork out painfully. “I'll never be yours! NEVER!”

She had the bloody fork over her head, about to stab Crane again. She hadn't heard the door burst open, but just as she raised her cuffed hands over her head with the knife poised for a lethal strike, two taser prongs hit her in the side. Harley jerked, her teeth snapping together, causing her to drop the fork from rigid, uncooperative fingers. Crane shoved her back, sending Harley sprawling on the floor. He rolled in the opposite direction yanking open the bottom desk draw where he kept more than just his fear toxin syringes, but he also kept sedatives for patients...just in case. Crane grabbed for the case where he kept the syringes while the guard who had burst in at the sound of Harley's attack, yanked his baton out.

Harley gasped in pain when the electricity stopped coursing through her system, shakily pushing herself up on her knees and slamming against the side wall with her body, struggling to get her to feet. The guard rushed forward with a shout. “GET DOWN!”

Harley snarled, her eyes going from the guard to Crane, but by now Crane had what he wanted.

He stood up, his perfectly combed hair falling across his brow and into his eyes, his suit slightly wrinkled, but he smiled as if he found her behavior adorable. “All right Harleen, I understand you're upset, but really my dear—is this any way for you to behave?”

“I'm not going anywhere with you!!! EVER!” Harley snarled.

Crane sighed as he turned to the guard. “Hold her.”

The guard moved swiftly, grabbing Harley's upper arm and shoved her forward. She tried to fight back, but the guard threw her up against the wall. Harley's face hit painfully and she felt her teeth cut into her lips, evoking a sharp intake of breath at the pain. She started to use her bound hands to push herself off the wall when the guard shoved the side of his baton against the back of her neck, pressing her up against the wall with the baton and his body weight. Crane walked around the guard while Harley snarled and struggled. Her hair had fallen loose from its updo, falling into her eyes which were full of hate as she glared at Crane. “I will never be what you want me to be!! You are never going to make me yours!! I hate you!”
Crane smiled. “Oh my dear, I will make you mine. You do not need to worry about that.”

Without further words, he brought the syringe up and, despite her fighting, he stuck the needle into her neck. It was only a matter of seconds before Harley slumped against the wall and into unconsciousness.

*

It was early evening, around six in the evening. Dale had slept heavily through the daylight hours, exhaustion knocking him out as soon as he had hit the pillow. He hadn't even had time to shower before he was out for the night. He had gotten up maybe an hour ago, showered and was now making himself something to eat before he drove back to the asylum for the night shift which was seven to seven. He would arrive after dinner, the patients all left in their rooms. Lights out began at 10 pm. An hour after that Dale would be able to transfer Harley to solitary for the night if everything went as planned.

He was just finishing off the scrambled eggs he had made himself when his phone went off vibrating against the count top.

“Shoot,” he muttered.

The phone had gone off a few times during the afternoon. He had only been dimly aware, just enough to dismiss any messages and he thought he had heard it go off while he was in the shower, but had forgotten about it when he went to make something to eat, the demands of his stomach overriding anything else.

*

Dale walked over carrying his empty plate to the sink and picked up his phone. It was a text from Sandra. The text read:

Dale, met someone who is friends with J & H. Wants to help break them out. Heard rumor before leaving work that H is going to be moved by C soon. Heard 48hrs. Must get out tomorrow night. Call Alex.

*

Then a number was provided. Dale stared at the number and Sandra's text. Break Jack and Harley out of Arkham? Tomorrow? Dale cringed. How on earth could they accomplish that? And should he help? That would be making him an accomplice to a crime...wouldn't it? Dale sighed. Even if it wasn't a crime, it would be his job. He would call Sandra at his lunch break if he called at all. He needed to speak with Sandra, but she would be sleeping soon and he didn't really have time right now...

“Damn it,” Dale groused.

When Harley regained consciousness, she was back in her cell, dressed again in her asylum clothing, lying on her cot, and feeling a massive headache coming on. She had apparently slept through dinner because when she sat up, she saw that there was a tray waiting for her on the floor. Harley winced, tossing her legs over the side, moving slowly because she felt a little dizzy. She let herself sink to the floor by the tray. When she lifted the lid all she found was cold, mushy oatmeal...someone's idea of a joke...probably Mallory if Harley had to guess. She dropped the lid back in place not really hungry after all. She leaned back against her cot with a sigh. Crane was going to move her away from Jack.
Someplace no one would probably find her...she wrapped her arms around herself. She couldn't leave...it was bad enough being apart from Jack in this place, but then to be taken someplace where she couldn't find him, couldn't hope to see him, to be completely under Crane's thumb...Harley shuddered. She needed to do something now. She had just stood up, thinking that maybe pacing would help her think, come up with some form of escape when there was a knock at her cell door. She turned to see Dale waiting for her. He smiled scanning his card and opened the door. He motioned her out while whispering quietly.

“We need to hurry. Can you make your cot look like there is a figure in it?” Dale asked, his eyes shooting back and forth down the halls. Things had been strange when he came on duty tonight. No one would talk to him, no greetings, nods—nothing. Usually someone would wave or nod hello, but tonight it was as if he had made some sort of shit list. The other thing he noticed was that the guards were a lot of the older ones, the guys he knew for a fact were chummy with Ernie Chubb. Dale's heart had sunk to his stomach when he realized. Something was up. He wasn't sure what exactly, but he had a really bad feeling which was why he had hurried down to get Harley as soon as he could. He wasn't sure what was in the air today, but something was definitely wrong. He was sure he was being watched too. Every time he turned around, someone seemed to be there. It was as if every eye in the place was on him; orderlies, guards, nurses...doctors...everyone was watching his every move. It had been creepy. Which was why, as soon as he realized he was alone at one point, he had rushed down here to get Harley.

Harley did as Dale asked as quickly as she could before hurrying over to him. She slipped out of her cell and the two of them started walking.

Dale frowned. “Just...something is up.”

Harley frowned. “That might be my fault. I attacked Crane, stabbed him with a fork. Oh...and I did attack one of the orderlies.”

Dale blinked. “Both of those were today?”

Harley nodded. “Yep. I was in a pissy mood. What can I say!” Harley giggled.

Dale frowned deeper. “You weren't disciplined for either altercation?”

“Well, no, I guess not. I suppose being Crane's favorite has its advantages.” Harley spoke softly clearly uncomfortable with that idea. “Crane says he is going to move me in the next forty-eight hours..., well quite a few hours less now, give or take. That's why I attacked him. I'm getting fed up Dale...fed up with just letting stuff happen to me, to Jack...” Dale was about to open his mouth when both he and Harley heard a long low whistle. “Well lookie there Jackson, it's that orderly Dale...ain't he the one that everyone says is playing favorites with the patients?”

Dale stopped in his tracks reaching out to grab Harley by her upper arm. They were in one of the halls near solitary. This hall had no cells and was near the laundry room. The halls were big enough to comfortably walk two, maybe even three abreast making it a long, dark, and wide hallway. There was no one here, only a few lights that lit this hallway at the best of times, and now it looked as if a few of the bulbs were out casting shadows down the hall. Standing at the end of the hall was the man who spoke, Billy North, a tall thin bald man with a thick brown mustache (Harley immediately thought “pornstache” and shuddered.) The man was bareheaded, wearing just the basics of his guard uniform, but he had his baton out smacking his opposite hand with it. Next to him stood Jackson Smith, another of the older guards and a man Dale knew for a fact was one of Ernie Chubb's friends on the outside. Jackson had dark skin and he was missing a couple of his teeth. The gap toothed “Well, well, if it ain't that pretty little patient that has Crane all in a ditzy and Dale...the ass kisser. Where are you off to with that pretty little patient Dale? Thinking to slip her into solitary with her boyfriend and after what she did to Daisy? And Crane for that matter, not that I'm shedding any tears over Crane.” Billy walked forward, his attention back on Dale. “You think we're all stupid, that ain't any of us figured out you been making sure those two get time together?” He used his baton to point at Harley. “That fucking murderer Jack Wayne gets to have his bitch? Crane thinks he can play with that whore too and what about the rest of us? We're suppose to watch our friend get emasculated by that faggot Wayne and do nothing about it? Well, Jackson and I feel that that just ain't fair, right Jackson?”

Jackson who had his baton resting on his shoulder like a bat, had said nothing and he didn't say anything now except to grunt. Billy continued stepping closer. “See me, Jackson and few others think you need to be put in your place Dale. And as for you blondie, we think you need a lesson too...a lesson for your boyfriend that is...no one gets to be favorites around here. We don't care what Crane says.”

Dale hissed at Harley. “Get behind me.”

Harley blinked in surprise, then replied quietly. “Don't worry Dale—we can take them together.”

Dale turned to look at her in surprise when Billy rushed them, swinging his baton at Dale. He slammed the baton down on Dale's shoulder, pain radiated down from the impact, but Dale (thought he wasn't a fighter) was a big man and while the impact hurt, it didn't do much more than make him grunt. He lashed out using the palm of his hand to hit Billy in the face. The sound of the man's nose breaking was loud despite the sounds of the four people fighting.

Jackson came at Harley. She focused herself on the lessons that Jack had given her and her gymnastics and her anger that had only been brewing all day as things kept happening to her. She ducked back avoiding a swing from Jackson's baton, brought her right hand up and slammed the palm of her hand against his forearm, forcing the man's arm away from her. She brought her leg up, doing a slight spin when she did, the side of her lower leg catching Jackson in the side knocking him off balance. The man took a few steps forward, but he spun, surprising her when his baton smacked her hard across the face. A split along Harley's cheek opened up and she tasted blood in her mouth. She smiled at him with bloody teeth and giggled. “One for you.”

*

Billy lunged, but Dale jumped to the side, the man started to go past him in the narrow hall, nearly knocking into Harley and her opponent. Dale turned and kicked Billy in the ass sending him sprawling down the hall. Billy snarled and rolled quickly to his feet. “I'm going to fucking kill you Dale!”

Dale had his hands up. “Look Billy, I don't want any trouble. Just let us go, no one else needs to get hurt.”

Billy chuckled at that. There was blood running down over his lips from his nose which he wiped away with the back of his arm. “You know what Dale? You brought trouble with you.”

Billy charged at Dale. He swung his baton at Dale, but the larger man grabbed his opponent's arm forcing Billy's arm downward, as he brought his knee up, smashing his kneecap into Billy's elbow with an audible crunch and a howl of pain from Billy. The guard dropped the baton and the weapon skittered down the hall into the darkness.
Harley was dancing out of Jackson's way, pretty much letting him tire himself out as he continued to take swings and punches at her while she lightly danced out of his grip even with the limited space in the hallway. She giggled. “You know what? I'm going to kill you. Not for anything you've done to me personally...though you are trying to hurt me right now. But I'm going to kill you because of all the crap I've put up with since being in this GOD forsaken hole! You're gonna wish I had the bat my puddin bought me because what I'm going to do to you is going to hurt a lot worse!”

Jackson hissed a simple. “Bitch!”

He lunged at her, but Harley was ready for him. She caught his arm with her hands, spun herself around so her back was to him, brought her knee up and smashed his wrist against her upraised knee in three hard and quick smashes until his hand let go of the baton. She dropped his arm, caught the baton and spun away from him while lashing out with the weapon. She hit Jackson in the side of the head hard enough that a loud echoing crack sound that vibrated down the hall. Jackson stumbled, falling to his knees and grabbing his head. Harley was panting, but she hissed holding the baton up for a moment.

“Who wants scrambled eggs!!” Then she brought the baton down on top of Jackson's head, her eyes wide as she continued to hit the man over and over again giggling while she did so with a hissed. “Oh, well...almost as good as my bat.”

Dale and Billy were not evenly matched, the baton gone. Dale took a couple of quick jabs at Billy. He had taken boxing when he was in high school and college. Granted that had been ages ago and he still didn't think of himself as a fighter, but he still remembered some of the basics as he weaved and jabbed at Billy. It was clear by the way Billy was holding his arms that the only real fighting training he had had was...not much. He blocked a few of Dale's jabs, but Dale broke through his defenses and his large fist connected with Billy's nose, smashing against the already broken bone.

Billy howled in pain. In a blind rage, he grabbed Dale by the front of his uniform and threw the big man down the hall. Dale tried to roll with it, trying to lead with his shoulder, but instead he hit the linoleum floor awkwardly sending shooting pain through his shoulder. Dale rolled some, stumbling to his feet, but Billy was already charging him, ramming him in the gut with his shoulder and carried Dale off his feet for a few seconds before twisting and slamming Dale up against the wall.

Dale let out a blast of painful air from his mouth, wincing in pain. Billy tried to hold Dale against the wall, but Dale wrapped his one hand around Billy's arm, bringing the fist of the other down on Billy's nose, smashing against the already broken bone.

Billy dropped to his feet wobbling, but kept from falling over. Billy had stumbled back, sweating and panting as well. Both men could hear the continued “whacks” coming down the hall from Harley, wet, meaty sounds and her giggling.

Billy came at Dale again, his fists flying as he tried to score a hit on Dale. Dale's boxing was coming back to him as he slapped away Billy's blows. Billy lowered his strikes from trying to reach Dale's face to focusing his strikes at Dale's chest and abdomen. Dale knocked two or three strikes away, but Billy slipped one under Dale's guard. The punch to his midriff nearly knocked the air from Dale's lungs. Dale reached out to grasp Billy by the shoulder, his large hand squeezing painfully, but Billy backhanded Dale, forcing the large man to stumble backwards. He shook his head to clear it, the hit to his face causing him to see stars for just a moment.
Dale stepped forward then, the two men exchanging a series of blows, none of them hitting as they blocked one another. Dale knocked Billy's hands away reaching for the man's head. He grabbed Billy around then skull and slammed his forehead down on Billy's with a sickening 'thud', making both men stagger. They exchanged a few more blows, each knocking the other's strikes away until finally Dale scored a stunning hit to Billy's temple. Dale reached out, grabbed Billy and spun the man around while at the same time wrapping his other arm around Billy's neck. Billy struggled like a mad dog, but Dale held on, putting one hand on Billy's head, digging his fingers in around his skull while he tightened the pressure of his arm around his opponent's neck. Billy hissed and seethed, struggling against Dale, but the orderly was a little taller and a little stronger. He leaned back putting pressure on Billy's throat, pressing down hard, stumbled back until Dale hit the wall. Billy kept struggling, Dale pulled back harder and harder, his nails cutting into Billy's scalp. Billy's tongue was sticking out and he was making horrible choking noises, but Dale didn't stop, couldn't stop. He was terrified—all he could think about was what these men would do to Sandra, to Miss Harley, to Jack...the horrors of working at Arkham, the things he had seen, the horrible, terrible abuses he knew about, but said nothing. All the times he said nothing, let things happen that he knew were wrong...and before he realized what he had done, Dale had choked Billy North to death.

The moment Dale realized what he had done, he dropped Billy's body to the floor. The finality of the sound of Billy North's body hitting the floor made his blood go cold in his veins.

“Oh shit...oh shit...” Dale whispered, his eyes large, his hands shaking. Dale stared down at his hands. “Oh shit no.”

Harley stepped over to Dale with a grin revealing her bloodstained teeth. She was splattered with droplets of blood and brain matter. “Oh wow Dale. I guess you're one of us now. That was impressive!”

She smiled brightly and patted him on the arm.

Dale paled more. He didn't know what to do...He glanced over to the other guard. The man's head was smashed in and there was blood on the wall. He would have thought there would be more, but it looked as if most of it was on Harley. Harley just smiled at him and Dale realized that maybe he had been wrong about Jack Wayne and Harley Quinn...maybe they both really were crazy, but now he had committed murder...because of them? For them? Did it really matter? They hadn't asked him to kill for them, he had just.... Dale took a shaking breath then let it out slowly. “Can you help me move these bodies?”

Harley smiled brightly, and in a chirpier voice she said. “Sure thing Dale!”

Together the two of them dragged the bodies, one at a time, into the laundry room. No one would be there until morning. That gave Dale a little more time to think of what to do. Harley tilted her head gazing at him and smiled as she realized what he was probably fretting about.

“Jack will probably be able to tell you what to do with the bodies. My puddin is a genius.” Harley smiled.

Dale nodded dumbly, clearly in shock. “Ah...let me grab some bleach and clean up, then I'll take you to Jack.”

Harley smiled. “Sure thing, but I'll help.”

*

It only took them a few minutes to clean up the blood and other....things. Disposing of the sponges was easy, but the bodies still laid there in the laundry room, like rocks around Dale's neck. He took a steadying breath, wishing he had some whiskey and hurriedly took Harley to see Jack.

*

When they arrived, despite the hour, they could hear Jack and Tetch singing back and forth, their voices muffled by their cell doors, but still audible. Jervis was singing loudly. “Off with their heads!
Get a Hatchet! And Just Detach it!! We'll be much better off with them dead!!”

Then Jack voice would answer Tetch. “Off with their heads! Separate them! Abbreviate them! And I'll trust you to pick up the threads!” followed by the sound of Jack laughing.

Dale scanned his card and opened the door. Harley dashed in past Dale. “JACK!”

She rushed into the room to see Jack standing in the middle under the pale light wearing only his asylum pants, the remains of dried blood on his face. Never in all her life had Harley seen an image of desire, lust, sexiness like the image of a half naked Jack, bloody mouth, shaggy hair, unshaven and that smile. He made her entire body tighten with desire, but her heart swelled at the sight of him, his blood pumping hot. He was her lover, her partner and her port in the storm of life. The one person in all the world who knew her soul. Jack smiled, raising his arms to her with that wicked smile of his dancing across his face. Harley ploughed into his embrace. Jack laughed and held her close, picked her up and swung her around once then promptly followed that with a deep, knee weakening kiss. Dale stood in the doorway looking back and forth while Jack and Harley kissed.
Harley ran her fingers through Jack's hair, biting and sucking at his mouth and tongue. Jack's arms were tight around her, pressing her body flush with his, needing to feel every inch of her.

Dale hated to interrupt them, but he cleared his throat. He needed to do something with those bodies.

“Harley said you might know how to dispose of a body?” Dale asked softly and realized that it sounded strange coming from his mouth.

Jack tugged on Harley's bottom lip, then glanced over her head lifting a brow at Dale as he tilted his head to the side. “Oh? And what have you two been up to today?” Jack glanced down at Harley with an amused look.

Harley giggled. “We had to kill two guards on the way here. Friends of Ernie Chubb.”

Jack held Harley close, his gaze serene, smiled at Dale. Only Harley saw the flicker of anger that danced across his blue eyes and felt the way his grip on her tightened. “Oh?” Dale nodded, but when he started to speak his voice sped up as if a top had come loose and everything poured from his mouth. “I...I didn't have a choice...and...Sandra met with someone named Alice, gave me Alex's phone number...they want to get you out...and Sandra said there's a rumor about Crane taking Harley...seems we need to bust the two of you out tomorrow night.”

Jack's grin spread across his face, though again, only Harley saw the darkness, the shadows behind his blue eyes. “Really? Well, it seems that circumstances have made a turn in our favor, my sweets.”
Jack licked the tip of her nose before he continued. “I just made a new friend today who will be a big help then.” He looked down at Harley. The calm was a mask; she could feel the tension in his body, the way his fingers tightened against her. “Crane plans to what?”

Harley reached up to stroke her fingers along his jaw. Jack grinned as his eyes scanned her face, his smile expanding at the droplets of blood on her face. Harley whispered softly. “He plans to move me outside of Arkham.”
Jack stiffened even more, like a predator about to strike, every inch of him vibrated with the need to lash out. His grip on her was almost painful. “What?”

Harley nodded. “He told me at lunch.”

Jack made a low, barely audible snarl. Harley reached up and cupped his face between her hands. “We need to get out puddin.”

Jack nodded though he didn't trust himself to speak quite yet.

Dale, looking nervous, pressed. “Harley said you could help me with the bodies...”

Jack waltzed over and leaned against the wall keeping his other arm tight around Harley holding up his free hand and counting as he went over in his head what Dale would need. “You need some acid, you know, to destroy their fingerprints, faces. Then you're going to want some pliers for the teeth, then simply leave them, I mean the bodies, in a drawer in the morgue.” He shrugged. “It'll probably take a day or two before anyone even finds them...but we only have to worry about one day.” Jack’s eyes lit up as something occurred to him that had a smile dancing across his face. “Dale, how do you feel about being dead?!”

Dale stared at Jack in horror, but Jack laughed. “I mean when we escape...leave your name tag and wallet with one of the bodies...why not? Give yourself a clean slate my friend.” Jack smiled.

Dale looked between them, his face pale, but he took a breath and seemed to make up his mind. “I'm...I'm going to take care of that...then I'll give that Alex a call. We're getting you two out tomorrow night.” With a nod, Dale stepped out pulling the door closed. Jack and Harley heard the locks click into place.

Jack grinned as he looked at Harley. “Things are looking up Harls!”

Harley reached up to place her fingers along his cheek and force him to look down at her. Her eyes caressed his face while her thumb slid across his lips. Her voice was soft while she traced the new wounds on his face. “After tonight, we are never going to be apart again.” She frowned slightly then. “What happened Jack?”

Jack didn't want to talk any longer, he didn't want to do anything but devour her, love her. He pulled her closer to cover her mouth with his, his arms going tightly around her pulling her up against him. Harley moaned softly, her arms circling around his neck. Jack sank to the floor taking Harley with him. They were on their knees when Jack hissed. “Get that dress off Harley.”

Jack pulled the tie on his pants watching Harley strip, licking his lips slowly, that burn he felt for her consuming his entire being as he slipped out of his pants. His breath picked up, a slight pant, the desire in him burned through his body, his need for her hurt him. Every moment without her killed him slowly. He reached up, grabbed her hips and yanked her down. He slid one hand into her hair once she had dropped to her knees, wrapped his hand in a fist around her hair to pull her head back. Harley grinned, gasping at the pull of Jack's hand in her hair, forcing her head back. He leaned close, biting her throat slowly, tenderly, his other hand covering her breast while his lips and teeth worried at her neck, sucking on the tender exposed skin, working to leave a deep purple mark. He wanted to sink into her, to take her slowly, leisurely, enjoy every moment with her. He deliberately slowed himself down, his mouth brushing along her tender throat, sucking softly, his fingers tangled in her hair tugged ever so gently, sucking on her soft skin until he was sure he had left a purple bruise. He smiled—his favorite color.

Harley's hands reached up to wrap around Jack's shoulders holding him to her, caressing the back of his neck and along his shoulders. She lowered herself down to the padded floor sitting back on her rear and spreading her legs around him. Jack sat back on his knees, his mouth continuing its journey along her throat. Harley leaned back, her legs spread around him, inviting Jack to feast on her. She made a soft noise of pleasure, her core burning bright when he lowered his mouth to her breasts, dropping his free hand from her body to lean on his hand while his tongue caressed her breasts, long, slow licks across each nipple sending shivers down her spine to her groin where she ached with need. Next to her nipple Jack sucked on her skin, bruising her with his mouth again, marking her as his with another purple mark.

He kept the one hand in her hair, pulling, tugging her hair, forcing her head back. Harley scooted herself closer to him when Jack released her hair grabbing her up and yanking her onto his lap.

She groaned softly feeling his erection, warm, hard between her legs, but he didn't take her, didn't do what he wanted, which was to shove himself deeply into her and pound his way into blissful, mindless pleasure. Instead, Jack wrapped his arms around her, kissing her with a tender sensuality, taking his time to feel every inch of her lips, to drag his tongue along her chin, tasting her skin, then returning to caress her lips with his tongue while his hands worked to touch every inch of her, to feel the smooth glide of her body under his fingers.

Harley's fingers slid into his hair, massaging his scalp, their bodies moving as if they were making love, her damp opening rubbing against him, coating him with her fluids, feeling that delicious ripple with her clitoris as she rubbed against his hard length. Her body rolled and glided over him. Harley made small moans and pants, pressing down and rubbing just a little faster.

Jack's hands snaked up her bare back, his fingers gliding over her flesh, then back down where he spread his fingers wide to hold all her smooth curving backside, pressing her down on his shaft, enjoying the feel of her rubbing against him. Jack hissed with desirable agony, groaning at the wet, warm and sliding feel of her against him. Jack kissed her chin, then dragged his tongue along her left shoulder pressing his teeth into her skin.

Harley gasped quietly. It hurt just a little because she was sore from her fights today, but it was a pleasurable pain, the hard press of Jack's teeth into her skin, then he sucked and bit her shoulder leaving another mark.

One of his hands crawled up her side to cup the side of her breast, the pad of his thumb finding her nipple and rolling it slowly, leisurely, grinning at the way Harley's breath caught, her little gasps of pleasure.

Jack purred, his mouth against her lips. “I want you Harley. I want to fuck you, bury myself in you...” Harley kept rolling against his hard member. Her clitoris rubbed against him, building slowly. She rubbed harder, a little faster panting.

Harley groaned. “Oh Jack yes...fuck me Jack...puddin...”

Jack grinned. “Say 'fuck me puddin.' Say it Harley.”

He pinched her nipple, not hard, but just enough to make that tickle in her groin jump and spread further. Her hips rolled over him just as that tickle exploded into a full orgasm. Harley pressed her fingers hard into his skin when she moaned low, gasping. “Oh fuck me puddin...”

Jack grinned, feeling the flood of her orgasm against him. He sat back on his rear, bringing her back to his lap where he held himself steady and lowered her down on him unhurriedly, wanting to feel each inch sliding into her. Jack groaned when her body welcomed him, stretching then tightening around his member. Jack wrapped his arms tight around her, thrusting up leisurely and plunged into her depths.

Harley moaned, her arms wrapped around her lover, her body undulating with each thrust of his hips. She arched back while Jack’s mouth caressed down her neck to her breasts. She squeezed her thighs around him meeting his thrusts with her own gasping. “Oh puddin...uhh...Jack...”

Jack smiled and leaned her back until she was against the floor. His continued to kiss her, not willing to part from her lips. Jack lifted up on his hands, continuing his slow thrusts into Harley. She spread her legs wide running her hands down his chest. Harley arched her head back moaning while Jack continued his slow plunge into her, their hips rolling and thrusting together. She reached up to cup Jack’s neck, then slid her hands up to his face covering his mouth with hers and moaning on each breath. “I love you Jack. I love you...”

Jack’s brow furrowed with the intensity of his feelings for her, both emotional and physical. Harley felt almost too good. He pressed his teeth into his bottom lip, fighting off the urge to let go, to climax...Jack groaned. “Harley...Uuh Harley I love you.”

Harley pushed herself up on one elbow, wrapping a leg around his thigh and moaned. “Faster Jack...oh please faster.”

Jack growled and began to thrust harder, faster, their panted breaths mixing together. Jack grabbed her hip, holding her firmly and thrust deeply. Harley cried out arching back, her orgasm rippling through her. Jack hissed dropping to his elbows and burying his face against her neck when he came with her. They both continued to thrust, riding out their shared orgasm until finally Jack collapsed against her.

Harley giggled, rubbing her fingers in his facial hair as she kissed his brow. “Mmm, my puddin.”

Jack chucked rolling off of her and out, pulling her toward him. He rolled onto his side to face her, his arms tight around her.

“We are going to get out of here Harley. We are going to be free soon and things are going to be different.” He kissed her lips, then her eyes causing Harley to giggle.

“Different?” Harley asked caressing his face.

Jack nodded. “Yup. We’ve been letting society hold us back. Been trying to play the game in secret. Not anymore...Bruce and Gotham think I’m a monster, that I’m crazy? Then I’m going to give them a monster Harley. I’ll show them crazy.”

Harley giggled in response wrapping herself around him and whispered. “I'll follow you anywhere Jack...anywhere at all.”
She's a Tear in My Heart

Dale was sitting nervously outside on one of the old benches that sat out here for smokers and let the cold Gotham night clear his thoughts. His right leg bounced as he watched his breath come out in steamy puffs. It had taken a lot of work, but he had done exactly as Jack had instructed. He had found some acid in the morgue (for a moment he had to wonder why there was acid in the closet, but he didn't dwell on it) which was located in the basement. A few other rooms were down there, one for storage supplies for the morgue and another that was for...well, he wasn't really sure, but there were definitely some strange things in that room; a chair that looked sort of like a dentist chair, and some tools he could only hazard a guess at...but all of it had looked unpleasant.

Once he had the acid, Dale had then moved each body down to the basement in a laundry cart. No one paid any attention to him as he pushed the only slightly squeaky cart. He had found out on his way to retrieve the cart that neither Billy nor Jackson were on duty that night...thank God for small favors, so they wouldn't be missed right away. Even if they were supposed to be on duty tomorrow, it would be another day or so before anyone realized they were missing, and hopefully he would be gone by then, disappearing along with Jack Wayne and Harley Quinn into the shadows of Gotham...though the idea of putting Sandra in danger, making her an accomplice and on the run too...he didn't want that for her. Maybe there was a way to get her out of this before she became involved any deeper; though if things worked out, no one would ever know Dale had anything to do with the bodies at all.

Dale had brought the bodies down to the morgue and put them each in on a slab that slid into one of the many drawers on the wall. They didn't get a lot of bodies down here, which was why the coroner for the asylum only worked part time, so Dale knew the bodies would be able to sit down here for several days and maybe—if good luck was with him—a couple of weeks before they were discovered. The coroner was in and out of the asylum, only really working if someone died, and even then he just prepared them for pick up by the funeral home. An autopsy was only performed if the patient died under mysterious circumstances, and then only if someone pressed for the autopsy. Most of the time deaths were just written off or got lost in the miles of paperwork...these were mostly unwanted people...a few deaths didn't bother anyone.

Once Dale had the bodies on their slabs, he systematically used the acid while wearing a pair of thick rubber gloves he found in the supply closet down here. Dale carefully removed fingerprints, then, after the horrible and intensive work of removing their teeth, he had used the acid to destroy their faces.

Dale felt weak and shaky. It had been some of the most disturbing work he had even done, yet he had done it, without stopping, without hesitation. Now he was sitting outside, fumbling as he lit a cigarette he had bummed off one of the other orderlies. When he finally had the cigarette lit, he took a deep pull on it and immediately started coughing, hacking like he was going to spit up a lung. Dale had given up smoking years ago...but now seemed like a damn good time to start up again. Dale took a slower pull, letting the smoke burn his lungs and the nicotine soothe his nerves before he pulled out his phone. Dale chuckled a little, the laugh just on the verge of hysterics. He had a pocket full of bloody human teeth and was dialing a number to a stranger to help him break out two patients. Let's be honest, Dale, he said to himself, two lunatics who he now was bound to. Where on earth had his life taken this turn? Dale wondered as he typed in his text and hoped that this Alex would pick up so they could get the ball rolling on an escape. He didn't think he could stay at the asylum longer than a day or so knowing those bodies were down in the morgue just waiting to be discovered. Dale inhaled on the cigarette, thinking he might stop and buy a bottle of whiskey on the way home as he used his thumb to text; years of texting this way made him agile with his large thumb on the small
“This is Dale Armstrong at Arkham, was told to contact you about breaking out J & H.”

Within seconds he had a response. “Don't use yr whole name fucker! Stupid. Meet me at the House of Pancakes as soon as you get off. A.”

Dale sighed taking a long drag on the cigarette. On to the next step.

It was almost half an hour before Dale would be off for the day. The sun was beginning to rise on a grey morning while the air was becoming more and more crisp as winter began to settle throughout Gotham. Dale wished he had thought to bring his coat with him; it was getting colder all the time. He yawned and rubbed the back of his sore neck with one hand, while under the arm of the other he had a fresh dress for Harley. Dale sighed, wishing he had another cigarette since he seemed to be back to smoking again. He twisted his lips thinking about collecting Harley's bloodstained dressed...stained with the blood of...Dale shook his head. Mustn't think about what happened. Getting rid of Harley's bloody dress, unlike the bodies, wouldn't be an issue. It was a little surprising how many patients had to have their clothing changed because of bloodstains...it was such a frequent occurrence that no one even batted an eye about it, no matter how much blood was involved.

Dale cracked his back and made his way to solitary in order to move Harley back to her cell when he saw a guard standing by the door. Dale stopped and stared, his heart speeding up and his blood going cold. Did that guard know what Dale had done? Was he here because he knew that Dale had killed a man? Dale didn't recognize the guard, something about the way he was slumped against the wall seemed off...his clothing didn't seem quite right either. The man turned to look at him and Dale's frown deepened. No, now that he was looking at the man, he did recognize him. He looked like this actor he had seen in that cable show..."Orange is the New Black." The guard looked like the electrical engineer from the show...what was the character's name? Dale narrowed his eyes, as if that would help him recall, until finally...yes, Joel Luschek. Dale frowned...that was weird. As he stepped closer the man smiled.

“You the orderly named Dale?”

Dale nodded and slowly said, “Yes.”

The man smiled. “I'm a friend of Mr. Wayne's.” He tossed his head over his shoulder at the cell door behind him. “He asked me to come back just before shift change to meet a friend of his named Dale and to meet his girl.”

Dale looked confused. “I don't recognize you. I mean...I do, you look like this actor.”

The man grinned, his face morphing. “That's because I don't actually work here.” Now the man looked like Basil Rathbone...another actor.

The squeak that went up from Dale would have been loud and high enough in pitch to do a cheerleader proud, if the big man hadn't slapped his hands over his mouth to prevent the loud shriek of surprise escaping his lips. He stared in round-eyed horror and shock from watching the man change appearance, his face, the flesh moving and shifting like Silly Puddy!

The guy grinned. “Name's Basil Karlo, but you can call me Karlo.” He put his hand out to Dale. Dale stared at the hand not sure what to do, but ultimately decided not to touch him.

Dale nodded, his eyes still wide and his hands over his mouth. Karlo shrugged, taking his hand back. then gave Dale an expectant look. “You ah...gonna open the door?” Dale nodded, his hands still over his mouth as he stepped past Karlo. He dropped his shaking hands down from his mouth and slid his key card through the reader. The door's latches disengaged and Dale pushed open the door, focusing on the immediate task rather than who—or what—was right next to him.

Jack and Harley were both dressed again, curled together and sitting up against the padded wall. Jack held his wife close while he stroked his fingers lovingly through her hair. He spoke softly for only Harley to hear.

He had explained to her his experience of seeing his parents, that it had all been the work of Dr.
 Crane, that the man had somehow found a face-changing actor named Basil Karlo who would be helping them escape. Harley frowned while Jack played lazily with her hair.

“He has Karlo's daughter here in Arkham under lock and key. The young lady tried to off herself when her dear old dad went to Blackgate. I don't know if that part's true, but I wouldn't doubt it...anyway, I guess when Crane learned about dear old Karlo's neat ability, he decided to use the man's daughter to get Karlo to work for him..trying to drive me crazy.” Jack said the last part with a hiss of anger. Harley squeezed her arms tight around him. Jack smiled softly relaxing into his wife's embrace. “So he's now going to help us get out in exchange for getting his daughter out too?”

Jack nodded. “Yep. Karlo can't get her out himself...he can't hold an appearance for too long, especially if he's stressed or gets the shit beat out of him like I did to him.” Jack giggled before he continued. “Anyway...he might come in handy on the outside...and it's always good to make new friends Harls; to be social. At least that was what one of my doctors said when I was a kid.” Jack chuckled at the memory.

They both heard the sound of the cell door open.

Dale stuck his head in cautiously. “I brought you a clean dress Miss Quinn.”

“Oh thank you Dale! This one is stiff with dried blood. Really uncomfortable!” Harley gave Jack a quick kiss on the cheek before she hurried over to take the dress from Dale just as Dale stepped in, a strange man behind him. She wrinkled her nose, but slipped into a darkened corner to change behind Jack. Jack stood up with a wide smile and threw his arms out. “Look at my new friends!! We are going to have such a great time together!!”

Dale still looked pale and uneasy, but Karlo looked determined, pleased even.

Jack grinned. “All right my friends, we need to plot our escape...I was thinking we might start festivities off with explosives!”

*

An hour later Dale was walking Harley back to her room after speaking with Jack and Karlo. The plan they had come up with was only tentative since Dale would be speaking with Alex in another hour or so to see what exactly they were going to do to attempt this escape. Jack had wanted to blow off his cell door, but Dale had talked him out of it. An explosion would sound alarms and bring down the guards, making their escape that much more difficult. They had discussed it back and forth, eventually agreeing to no explosives (much to Jack's disappointment.) Instead, Dale would bring Jack a guard's uniform so that Jack could slip out and hopefully slip unnoticed through the asylum to their meeting spot.
Karlo would create a distraction while Dale would make sure Harley's cell door was left unlocked. He would have already gone to retrieve Karlo's daughter, while Karlo would pretend to be one of the dead guards, which had upset Dale. Harley had suggested Jackson since that was the man she had killed and not the guard that Dale had been forced to eliminate. Dale agreed, but again he didn't like it; not one bit. And they were all to meet in the basement to access the storm tunnels...that was all they had so far...no map of the tunnels...no pick up at the end. Hopefully when Dale met with Alex they would be able to close the loose ends in their plan...which, as far as Dale was concerned, were a lot. When they arrived at Harley's cell, she turned around and threw her arms around the big man's neck hugging him tight. “Thank you Dale, thank you so much.”

Dale held his hands out away from her awkwardly looking around to make sure no one saw her hugging him. After a couple of beats Dale sighed and returned her hug. “It's okay Miss Quinn.”

* *

Dale had just stopped off at the lounge to pick up his things when he decided to take a quick trip down to the laundry room to make sure everything really was cleaned up. He felt like he had left his stove on, that there was a nagging, tickling sensation that kept making him think he had forgotten something...though he supposed it was actually just fear and doubt...

He was on his way when his phone went off. Dale looked around; he was in one of the halls that contained a few of the patients rooms, though it was early and many of them were still asleep. He pulled his phone out of his back pocket and answered. “Dale.”

“Hey Dale!”

Dale's face brightened. “Sandra—good morning.”

He could hear the smile in Sandra's voice. “I just wanted to make sure you got my message.”

“I did. I texted him. We're meeting in just a little while,” Dale replied as he leaned against the wall. He was unaware that in the cell next to him, Robert Greenwood's eyes came open. He laid there on his cot unmoving except to close his eyes once more and listen.

“Going to get them out tonight,” Dale said closing his eyes with exhaustion. “Sandra...I...”

“What is it Dale?” Her sweet voice relaxed him. Dale wanted to tell her what he had done, but not now...not like this and not over the phone. It would hurt more to tell her in person, but he needed to because he wanted something more with Sandra, and because of that he wasn't willing to lie to her. But for now... “It's nothing. Yeah, going to get Harley and Jack out tonight. I'll let you know when I learn more.”

Sandra replied softly, giving in to her impulse. “Love you Dale. Call me and let me know how I can help.”

Dale's eyes flew open wide at her words. They were so sweet, so innocent...so special...after what he had done last night...killing a man, Dale wondered if he deserved her, but he smiled and whispered back. “I love you too Sandra. I'll call, I promise.”

Dale ended the call. He smiled as his heart skipped a beat. Despite everything, those three little words had made him forget about the mess he found himself in. He pushed away from the wall and hurried down the hall.

Robert rolled over onto his stomach with a large vicious grin.
It was still dark out when Dale parked his car. He shivered, walking down the rain soaked street the neon lights of the Pancake House up ahead reflecting off the wet sidewalk. Dale hurried inside running a hand over his damp head and looked around. The place wasn't too busy yet. It was still early, but he saw a man sitting in a booth who stood up and waved, a man with one arm.

The interior of the House of Pancakes restaurant had warm yellow lighting, wood paneled walls and wooden chairs along with booths with burnt orange vinyl seats. The walls were decorated with poster size images of pancakes, crepes and other breakfast dishes all photographed in a high fashion art style. The entire interior smelled of maple syrup and pecans.

Dale stepped quickly over to the one-armed man's table. Sitting with Alex was a young sweet looking young woman. She smiled and spoke. “You must be Dale! You look exactly how Sandra described you!”

Dale blushed.

Alex put his hand out. “Alex. This is my girl Alice, and Frost should be here soon.”

Dale shook hand and slipped into the booth. “Sorry Sandra can't be here.”

Alice waved him off. “Don't worry, she texted me...work. I figured you and I will both send her the details about tonight.”

Dale frowned. He started to say something, but a young dark-skinned woman came over to their table. “Would you like some coffee sir?” She smiled at Dale.

Dale nodded. “Yeah, sure, thank you.”

“I'll get that right way and be back for your order.” The waitress hurried off.

“So, what's the plan?” Dale asked looking between Alex and Alice just as a shadow fell over them.

“I think the storm drains are going to be our best bet,” a quiet voice said. Dale looked up to see a tall man in a nice suit looking down at all of them.

“There you are, thought you might have fucking ditched us. Dale, Frost—Frost, Dale,” Alex said motioning with his one hand between the two men as Dale scooted over to allow the new man to sit.

“Sorry, got caught over on the bridge,” Frost explained taking the seat next to Dale.

Alex leaned forward placing the elbow of his one arm on the table. He had just started to speak when the waitress returned with coffee. She blushed deep red at the sight of the other man who had just joined them. “Coffee sir?”

Frost nodded. “Thank you.”

She hurried away returning swiftly to pour Frost a cup of coffee. “Are you ready to order?”

Everyone glance at one another as if they weren't sure whether conspiring to break someone out of an asylum was supposed to be discussed over pancakes, but Alex leaned back. “How about Pigs in a Blanket for me...” He glanced at Alice. “Coconut Pancakes?”

Alice giggled. “Aww, you remembered!”
Alex grinned. “Course I did.”

Frost frowned. “Just buttermilk for me.”

Dale frowned in thought for a moment. “You have blueberry pancakes?”

“Sure do.” The waitress smiled, her eyes lingering on Frost.

Dale nodded. “Then that's what I'll have.”

She grinned. “I will get that order for you folks right away.”

Frost watched her walk away with a small smile on his face.

After she left, Frost sipped his black coffee. “After looking at the maps, I think the storm drains are our best bet. Should be able to get them completely off the asylum grounds. There's a tunnel that leads straight to the river near Aparo Park where I can pick them up. If the maps are accurate, you can access the storm drains from the basement of the main house.” Frost glanced at Dale with lifted brows.

Dale nodded. “There's a closed off section down there...just an old piece of wood boarding up this one area...that might be the old access tunnel. But what if it isn't?” Dale looked at everyone in concern.

Frost glanced at Alex. Alex sighed. “I don't know man. If we had more time, we could come up with something better. I guess if you can't get to the tunnels, then contact me....I'll think of something.”

Alex flopped back against the vinyl seating with a sigh. He hoped he could think of something...

*

It was late afternoon when it started to rain heavier outside. Harley was sitting on her cot daydreaming about Jack and what they would do when they got out of Arkham as she brushed her fingers through her hair. She was humming softly, then just as softly, almost a whisper under her breath, she sang to herself thinking about her husband.

“You'll never know just how much I miss you

You'll never know just how much I care

And if I tried, I still couldn't hide my love for you

You ought to know, for haven't I told you so

A million or more times?

You went away and my heart went with you

I speak your name in my every prayer

If there is some other way to prove that I love you

I swear I don't know how

You'll never know if you don't know now...”
Harley hummed softly, swaying her head back and forth to the music when she heard the beep that indicated that her door was open. She glanced over to see one of the nurses, not Mallory (thank goodness Harley thought to herself), but a young woman with dark hair and equally dark eyes.

The young nurse smiled. “Wow, you got a great voice.”

Harley giggled. “Aw, thank you. What's up?”

“Heading to the common room,” the nurse said with a slight smile and stood aside for Harley to exit.

Harley, surprised, popped up from her cot. “Really? I thought after last time...”

The woman shrugged. “I just do what I'm told.”

Harley giggled, slipped on her shoes and hurried pass the nurse. Harley saw her name tag read Duncan.

Duncan smiled while the two of them began to walk down the empty hall. “Guess a couple of you guys are acting like restless zoo animals with the rain outside. Lots of pacing, plus Mallory isn't here right now so a group of us nurses voted to let you guys hang out in the common area for an hour, maybe two depending on behavior, and whenever Mallory comes back. Come on.”

Harley fell into step in front of the nurse. “So, where is that orderly Daisy?”

Duncan shrugged her shoulders. “Don’t know, don't care. Though I think she is down in HR doing something. She is supposed to be back on the floor in an hour or two.”

“Won't she be mad about a bunch of us nut jobs being in the common room?”

Duncan laughed. “Not her call. It's the nurses' call and like I said, Mallory ain't here and we took a vote. Though some time in the common room would be better than trying to sedate you all.”

Harley made a face. “Yeah,” she agreed. “Much better.”

*

The common room was crowded by the standards of the sixth floor. Babs and Tabitha, as always, connected at the hip, were curled together on the couch with a book opened on their shared laps. Zsasz was sitting across from Arnold and Sockie, the two—or maybe it was three, Harley wondered—men playing a game of Chutes and Ladders. Zsasz glanced up and gave Harley a small wave.

Harley could see Robert Greenwood over at one of the tables coloring with vicious intent, crayons spread all over the table along with what looked like hundreds of pieces of paper all with tears and scribbles on them. Aaron was silently putting together a jigsaw puzzle while the TV droned on, more like white noise than an actual show. Harley glanced up at the TV; some talk show was on...one of the hundreds that looked like every other talk show, the audience members jumping up and down shouting with joy at whatever the talk show host was doing or saying, a short haired blonde woman was dancing as the audience went wild.

Harley’s gazed shifted from the TV to someone she hadn't seen before, a young woman. The new patient—or maybe she wasn't new, just that Harley had yet to run into her—was a skinny woman, almost skeletal, with long, nearly white blonde hair. She sat in a corner facing the wall, her arms wrapped around her legs while rocking back and forth. There were a couple of guards that Harley had seen before...they glanced at her, and one of the men winked at her before making a rude gesture with his tongue. Harley made a disgusted face, giving him the middle finger which made the other guards laugh, and turned away. She saw several orderlies, all people she had seen before, two nurses, both young women who were being ogled by the guards, and a couple of doctors, one of which was trying his best to get the nurses' attention. The other doctor was standing near the rocking woman trying to speak to her, trying to get her to stop rocking, while the rest were talking among themselves. One of the nurses was on her cellphone busily texting at hyper speed with her thumbs.

When Harley stepped in, everyone looked up. Babs waved. "Harley come here!"

Harley smiled making her way over to Babs and Tabitha. "How are you guys?" Harley asked as she plopped down next to them.

"Oh we're fine. We both got an ice bath as punishment for kicking Daisy's ass, but other than that we're good." Babs smiled while Tabitha made a face.

"Anybody seen her today?" Harley asked glancing around the room. "Daisy I mean."

Babs snorted. "Nope though I heard on the grapevine she would be in today. Blah..."

Harley chuckled. "Guess we couldn't be lucky enough for her to quit."

Babs chuckled. "Yeah..."

"So what're you and Tabitha reading?" Harley asked glancing again at the TV.

"Oh we're just plotting our honeymoon when we get out of here." Babs giggled.

Tabitha sighed. "Vacation, not a honeymoon."

"Whatever." Babs chuckled throatily.

"You!!! Come here!!" someone shouted. All three women turned around to see Robert, crayon in hand pointing at Harley. Harley made a face pointing at herself. "Moi?"

"Yeah you—come here." Robert grinned.

Harley made a face glancing at Babs and Tabitha. "Should I ignore him?"

"Nah, better go see what he wants. If you ignore him he'll get louder and we'll all end up back in our cells."

Babs sighed grumpily. "Though holler if you need help. Kicking ass is becoming a specialty."

Harley giggled and said, "Will do!" She stood up giving the two women a salute before she walked over to the table where Robert had been coloring. She pulled out a chair across from him and sat down.

"So what do you want?"

Robert had sat back down and leaned across the table. Harley's lip curled in disgust. He smelled like rot and ammonia. "Are you mentally divergent?"

"Are you mentally divergent? I am. That's why I eat people...eat women...because I'm mentally divergent." Robert giggled. "You know what crazy is? It's majority rules!"

Harley narrowed her eyes at him. "Did you actually want something or are you just going to sit there and spout off oddities at me?" She folded her arms over her chest staring hard at him. The little man rubbed her wrong and not just because he was a cannibal. There was something just...off about him...something worse than being unstable, he made her skin crawl.

Robert picked up a red crayon and started to eat it as he murmured. “I heard something interesting today!!”

Harley tilted her head. “Oh, that the red crayons taste like cherries? They don't. Don't believe everything you hear.”

Robert laughed and pointed at her. “Ahh...I heard someone is gonna try and get out of here.”

“What?” Harley's voice dropped to barely a whisper, more just a breath. “What did you say?”

“You heard me girlie. No more monkeys jumping on the bed!!” Robert chuckled. “You're getting out. You're going to take me with you.” Robert leaned forward and smiled, the red wax of the crayon staining his teeth, hunks of the red wax caught between his teeth.

Harley leaned forward and kept her expression neutral. “I don't know what you're talking about.”

“Oh, yes you do. I overheard big and bald talking on his phone to his delicious girlfriend...chomp chomp!” Robert chuckled. “He was saying you two are escaping tonight. You take me or I will tell everyone here...I'll tell Crane. I bet he wouldn't like to hear his little pet bird is wanting to fly away!” Robert picked up an orange crayon and started to eat it.

“You wouldn't dare.” Harley hissed back.

Robert grinned, orange wax mixing with the red. “Oh wouldn't I?”

“I'll kill you,” Harley snarled low, her blue eyes hard. “Don't fuck with me Robert. It will not end well for you.”

But Robert only laughed. “Ooo, I'm so scared. I've eaten girlies like you, all soft and squishy. You don't scare me.”

Harley's eyes twitched. “You haven't met me.”

Harley sprang up from her seat knocking the chair back and flung herself across the table grabbing a hold on Robert's shirt and yanked him back across the table with crayon's scattering everywhere. One of the guards started to move, but his buddy put his hand on his chest grinning. “Let's just see who wins. Just make sure the other nuts don't get involved.”

The doctor who had been doing his best to communicate to the woman on the floor, yelped loudly and gathered his patient up ushering her out of the room. The nurses started to react. “Hey!” The same guard who had stopped his buddy said, “Hey guys, I'm taking bets: Blondie verses the Cannibal! Who's in?”

*

Harley threw Robert to the ground and kicked him in the side. She was in a panic, though her face didn't show it. She couldn't let him talk!! He would ruin everything and she certainly wasn't going to bring the cannibal with them either. Which only gave her two choices, kill him or make it so he couldn't talk.

Robert scrambled away from her rolling across the floor as he moved to put some distance between them. He tried to kick her at the same time that he came to his feet quicker than Harley expected he could. Harley rushed him though, swinging with her fists and hoping to put him down quickly. First right, then left, snarling while she swung. Robert dodged Harley's first swing, but her second punch connected, her knuckles slamming into Robert's shoulder when he dodged.

The two guards hooted. “Come on sexy nut bean, beat the shit out of him!!”

Robert snarled, gnashing his teeth at her. “I'm gonna take a bite! Taste me some sweet sweet meat.”

Harley made a disgusted face before she growled. “You're pathetic! You only eat woman because you know there is no woman on this entire planet who would have you!!”

Robert growled and took a swing at her, but Harley brought her forearm up to block his strike. Harley hopped back and twisted her entire body, bringing her leg around in a full swing, the side of her foot connected with the side of Robert's head sending him stumbling back into the guards. The nurses squealed, but one of the guards turned Robert back around and shoved him back toward Harley.

“You gonna let her get the best of you? Go get her!” The guard laughed.

Robert sucked on his bleeding bottom lip and glared at Harley. “I'm gonna tell...” he said in a sing song voice. Harley narrowed her eyes, panting slightly, a thin film of perspiration making her skin shimmer in the yellow light of the common room, her fists up as she bounced lightly on her feet. “You're not telling anyone anything.” She sneered with a dangerous shine in her blue eyes.

Robert came closer, took a jab at her. Harley swung her right fist at Robert's face, hitting him across the cheek with the hard smack of flesh against flesh, snapping his head to the side and making him stumble with the blow. When his head came back around, Robert was bleeding worse from his lips. She didn't give him more time to recover before she snapped her right fist out again, striking the cannibal square in the face, his nose making an audible snap accompanied by Robert's cry. “Fucking BITCH!”

Harley couldn't stop the grin from spreading across her face. She shook out her right hand before wrapping her fingers in a fist again. Robert snarled and let out a yell, charged her. He ploughed through her defenses, grabbed Harley around the waist, lifted her just enough that her feet were off the floor, and like a bull, rammed her backwards until her back hit the wall.

She nearly tripped over a chair before he shoved her up against the wall knocking the air from her in a painful whoosh. Harley struggled, slammed her elbow down on Robert's back as hard as she could with several sharp strikes. He grunted, then he twisted while she hit him. He ducked his head down lower and buried his teeth in her side. Harley screamed when he took a bite at her hip before releasing her and started to stagger back when one of Harley's elbow slams struck true, hitting him squarely in his neck. As the cannibal staggered a step back from her, Harley snapped her leg up to kick Robert in the face, her foot smashing into his already broken nose.

“You little weasel!” she hissed and hit him a second time with her foot, snapping her leg up, the toes of her shoe catching him in the mouth a moment after the first kick caused Robert to stagger back, his hands rising to cover his ruined nose. Harley snarled raising her leg up again, but this time she brought her leg straight up then slashed downward bringing her foot down on Robert, hitting the hands he had covering his nose and knocking him backwards when he tried at the last moment to deflect her blow.

He stumbled back, his face a bloody mess, but Harley followed him with a spin kick, using her entire body along with the grace of her gymnastics training to hit him again, knocking him back another handful of steps. Harley bounced on her feet for a split second after she landed and twisted around the opposite way for another full body spin kick, this time knocking the cannibal off his feet entirely. Robert slid over the floor.

Everyone who was watching the fight gasped in surprise, dashing out of the way as Robert slid and slammed up against the wall. Harley let out a scream of rage, rushed across the floor toward Robert and before he could push himself up, Harley was over him. With a snarl she brought her foot down on his neck in several quick hard stomps, slamming his jaw, cheek and neck in hard succession screaming the whole time. “YOU FUCKER!! YOU CANNIBAL BALLSUCKING FUCKER!”

The guard who had wanted the fight yelped. “OH shit!! Stop her!!”

He yanked out his stun gun, his partner doing the same as both men rushed toward her and hit Harley in the back at the same time.

Babs screeched, trying to go to Harley, but Tabitha held her back. “HARLEY!!”

Harley wasn't aware of what was happening. The double jolt of electricity hitting her in the back caused her to collapse on top of Robert, sliding off and hitting her head against the floor with a “thunk” that anyone nearby could hear. She blinked, a wave of dizziness accompanied by pounding pain washed over her. She could hear yelling and the sounds of a struggle from somewhere off to her side. One of the nurses with short dark hair appeared at her side yelling. “I'm going to sedate her then we can move her.”

Harley wasn't aware of the response before she felt the sting of the injection and then the warm fuzzy feeling of drugged darkness descending on her. She slumped, instantly out.

The nurse stood up. “Move her to…”

The other nurse, a young blonde, motioned. “Hey let me get a chair. We should just dump her with Crane. He'll know what to do with her.”

“Okay, get this one to the infirmary. I think she broke his jaw, maybe worse”

“I'm getting really tired of these fights in the common room.” The dark haired nurse sighed. “Completely disrupts the day,” agreed the other. “It's getting to be a daily occurrence…and you notice that blonde.” The woman pointed at Harley. “She seems to be the main instigator or at least at the center of it every time a fight happens lately.”

The dark hair nursed frowned. “There is always one who has to be a problem child.”

When Harley regained consciousness, the first thing she noticed was the classical music playing. She found herself in Crane's office and lifted her head up with a gasp looking around in confusion. She had been cleaned up and dressed again. This dress was a green midi dress with a black velvet motif that started at the pointed collar and extended to the decorative buttons, cuffs, and waistline. The material had a checkered design, and flannel-like fabric that made the dress comfortable. Someone had pulled her hair back from her face and braided it and she was also wearing a pair of black velvet Mary Jane wedges with pointed toes and knotted straps. Harley could even feel lipstick on her lips. All of it made her feel nauseous and angry at the violation again. All of this just fed her resentment at being used, at being some man's doll!! She snarled and jerked, but she was strapped down in a wheelchair. Instead of a straightjacket, she was simply handcuffed, her wrists firmly held to the arms of the chair and her ankles to the foot rests. She struggled, but all that did was make the wheels jerk forward or back and threaten to topple her over onto her face or side.
She had just settled back in her chair when the door opened and Crane himself entered. He was carrying a cup of tea. Today he was dressed in an almost chocolate brown suit with thick red stripes that formed a checked pattern, with a crisp white shirt underneath, and a white tie with a deep red floral print. He smiled when he entered. “The music, Satie’s Gnossienne No. 1, one of my favorites. I find it calming.”

Harley snarled as she again shook the wheelchair. “I don't find it calming! I find it irritating!”

Crane sighed, took a sip of his tea and set the cup and saucer down on his desk. He sat on the edge of the desk, one leg over the corner and folded his arms over his chest as he looked sadly at her. “Because of your little performance in the common room, I am forced to take action sooner than I intended my dear. Your room isn’t quite ready, but since I must do something with you after your behavior, I will simply move you sooner rather than later.”

Harley stopped struggling and stared at him in dawning fear. “What?”

As if on cue, the door opened and four people entered the room, four large men dressed in black tailored suits. Crane smiled. “Is the car ready?”

“Yes sir.” One man would have reminded Harley of The Rock except for the odd set to his eyes answered Crane.

Crane smiled. “Good, go ahead and take her. I will be along shortly.”

Harley screamed in panic. “NO! YOU CAN’T!”

Crane smiled at her. “You will find my dear, that I can.”

The men stepped over to Harley who started to scream and struggle against the handcuffs, rattling her wheelchair dangerously back and forth to no avail. “DON’T TOUCH ME!! JACK!!”

She didn't know why she called for Jack, but she didn't know what else to do; everything was falling apart. Harley struggled, but one of the men shoved a ball gag painfully into her mouth, strapping it on around the back of her head while two of the others lifted up the wheelchair and simply carried her out of the room with Crane calling after them.

“Please be sure to use the back exit.”

Crane watched them go, picked up his tea cup and took another sip before frowning down at the contents with a muttered, “Cold. How sad; there is nothing worse than cold tea.”

Deep in the middle of Gotham, Sage groaned as he cracked his back. He hated early mornings or early afternoon, pretty much any time of the day before six in the evening. As a private dick he usually kept late nights, but for the job he was working on for Mr. Wayne, Sage needed to be up early...or at least earlier so he could hit the library. Some of the records he wanted to access were available online, but surprisingly quite a few were not available online yet which forced him to head to the downtown Gotham library...the main library in Gotham from which all other city's libraries connected. The front of the library looked like a tribute to ancient Roman architecture with its large Corinthian columns to the massive marble tympanum which depicted the nine Greek muses. Sage thought that it was a beautiful yet imposing building. The inside was just as overwhelming with seven floors one could easily become lost navigating.

Wishing he had a cup of coffee or a cigarette, Sage was sitting at an old microfiche reader looking through even older newspaper clippings about Arkham Asylum. He had been surprised when he found out he would have to use a microfiche reader and even more surprised to learn the library still had one. Apparently while the Gotham City library was modernizing, the process was slow and the older newspapers were way down on the list of library archives to modernize.

Sage frowned scribbling on his notepad while he fished through the Gotham Gazette. The incidences by themselves at Arkham were not all that surprising...missing patients, unexplained deaths, injury...but as Sage made notes, he started to realize that Mr. Wayne's suspicions were on the money. This place wasn't what it seemed. There was clearly something going on at Arkham Asylum...and it wasn't about helping patients.

With his hands behind his back, Jack paced his cell while wearing only his asylum pants. He had tried to sleep, but sleep just wouldn't come. It was partly the excitement of knowing that soon he and Harley would be free again, but this time they wouldn't even have the constraints of being part of the Wayne family to stop them. They were really going to be free. He grinned with excitement and anticipation.

He danced around the room at one point while singing at the top of his lungs, his voice carrying melodically down the halls of the sixth floor. With his eyes closed, he swayed and waltzed, pretending his wife was in his arms.

“I don't care where I go when I'm with you
When I cry you don't laugh cause you know me
I'm in you
You're in me
You gave me the love, the love that I never had
You and I don't pretend; we make love
I can't feel anymore than I'm singing...

*

He laughed when he heard Jervis from his cell, his voice muffled, but the shorter man was singing loudly joining Jack.

“I'm in you
You're in me
You gave me the love, the love that I never had...”

*

Later, Jack alternated from pacing with doing push ups, doing them until he was covered in sweat and his arms were shaking with fatigue. Next he jogged around the small, dark enclosed space until lunch. Eventually, lunch was brought—a turkey sandwich, milk and some carrot sticks...not even a pudding cup. How medieval, Jack thought as he sat and ate.

He had spent his afternoon practicing katas; punches, kicks, jabs a few roundhouse kicks, and other maneuvers...practicing every bit of martial arts, boxing...everything he knew until he was finally so worn out, sleep was the only thing his body was capable of doing. He dropped down to the padded floor lying on his back, his eyes closed, his thoughts on Harley. He grinned for a few minutes imagining her on top of him, naked, her blonde hair falling around her shoulders, tickling the tops of her breasts, the way her skin felt under his hands, silky, soft...creamy. The way she felt when he was buried inside her, that warm wetness, the way her muscles tightened, squeezing him, that feeling of pumping into her...the little sounds of pleasure she made. Jack pressed his teeth into his lip just imagining her.

That was the image he took with him when he fell asleep.

He wasn't sure how long he had slept, but he woke to the sound of his door opening. Jack sat up and rose to his feet in a swift, graceful movement. Dale moved swiftly stepping into the room. Jack could see he was carrying a duffel bag with him.

“We have a problem,” Dale said grimly.

*

When Dale had come into work that evening, he had been surprised to see Sandra waiting for him. The large woman was pacing, looking pale and worried. When she saw Dale getting out of his car she rushed to him and threw her arms around him. “Oh Dale, it's awful!”

Dale, happy to hold her, relished the feel of her in his arms before he asked. “What's awful?”

She leaned back from him, though she didn't leave his embrace. “It's Harley Dale...she's gone.”

“What do you mean gone?” Dale felt himself go cold.

“Crane moved her ahead of schedule...because of a fight in the common room. She attacked Robert, beat him up pretty badly, his Adam's apple and jaw are both broken.”

Sandra shook her head. “Anyway, rumor is going around that Crane took her...I went to check her room...she's gone Dale.”

Dale frowned holding her close as Sandra began to cry. Damn it, he thought angrily. Damn it, damn it!! But...they would still get Jack out...had to...from there they would just have to figure out how to get to Harley.

Dale took a deep breath before lifting Sandra's face up to his, cupping her face in his larger hands. Her eyes were red, her nose stuffy, but she was still beautiful to him. “I'm going to get Jack out, then we'll go after Harley. Jack isn't going to do nothing, you know that.” He gave her a smile then kissed the tip of her nose. “No worries Sandra.”

She nodded and hugged him once more. “I...I'll figure out where Crane lives! I can do that while you're getting Jack tonight!”

Dale nodded. “That's a good idea.” He pressed his mouth to hers, Sandra opened her lips to him kissing him back with a passion that made Dale melt. No matter what happened, Jack and Harley had given him this; without them he may have never found his way to Sandra.

After another full minute Dale released her. “I better get in there.”

She nodded. “I'll text you with a location. I know you can't get her tonight, but...”
Dale nodded then shrugged. “I don’t think Jack will want to wait...not sure how tonight is going to play out, but—but I will see you soon.”

Sandra caressed his face with a nod before she stepped out of his arms and hurried to her car. Dale watched her go with a sigh before he turned and headed into the asylum, yanked out his phone and texted Alex.

*

“What do you mean we have a problem?” Jack went still, predatory still. Dale immediately felt the need to turn and flee, but he fought it. He took a breath. “This afternoon Harley beat up Robert Greenwood in the common room. No one is sure what the fight was about, but Harley crushed his throat and broke his jaw.”

While Dale was talking, a smile spread across Jack’s features at the details of Harley’s assault on Robert. That was his girl! He giggled then shook himself. “So what’s the problem?”

Dale sighed. “Crane moved her this afternoon instead of tomorrow.”

“What?!” Jack grabbed Dale, surprising the larger man when Jack yanked him forward nearly off his feet, causing the big man to drop the duffel bag he was carrying. Jack had grabbed him with a strength Dale would never have guessed that Jack possessed. Dale reached up to grab Jack’s wrists. Jack’s face transformed into something crazed, insane. Mad. Jack’s blue eyes were wide and Dale would swear at that moment—and he would recall in the future—that they glowed with a sinister inner light. “Where is she?!”

Dale stuttered, feeling real fear for the first time, real fear of Jack. “I...I don’t know for sure, Jack, but Sandra thinks Crane took her to his estate. I guess it was his father’s estate, but she’s working to get the address. But I...we’re going to break you out now...we need to go...now. Jack...Jack?”

Jack was staring at Dale, but it was clear he wasn't really seeing him. Dale pleaded. “Jack?”

Jack closed his eyes for a moment. Dale could almost see the turmoil in the other man, but then Jack took a breath and seemed to come back to himself. “All right.”

Jack released Dale and slowly took a step backwards. Dale didn't move for a couple of heartbeats waiting to see what Jack would do, but when Jack didn't attack him, he reached for the bag. “I have a guard uniform in here for you. Dress and meet me down in the basement. I'm going to move Karlo's daughter and Karlo should be down there waiting for you. I've included a key card with the uniform.”

Jack nodded and picked up the bag. He looked pale, shaken. Dale frowned watching him. “Jack?”

Jack’s eyes snapped to Dale. “Let’s go. I'm getting Harley back tonight.”

*

Dale left the door open to Jack’s cell and slipped Jack one of the key cards that had belonged to one of the dead guards from last night. It would be at least twenty four hours before anyone realized that Jackson hadn't actually come into work that night despite his card being used. Hopefully, Dale thought...

Jack seethed with rage. His Harley was not here, Crane had moved her, taken her...he was literally shaking with unspent violence. Sitting on top of the pile of clothing was a flashlight, not a heavy duty one unfortunately; it was a fairly cheap flashlight, but it would do for the tunnels. Jack picked it up and clicked it on and off before he set it aside. When he yanked the guard outfit out of the duffel bag, Jack was surprised to see a baton fall out of the rolled slacks and hit the padded floor near his bare foot. Jack looked down at the baton, a black heavy high-density plastic stick. He frowned, studied the object before he reached down and picked up the baton. A slow, vicious smile spread across his face.

Jack dressed quickly. He slipped on the black slacks and dark blue shirt, slid on the heavy duty vest, then pulled on the heavy military style boots, knee pads, and shoulder guards. Included with the uniform was a dark face scarf. Jack pulled it down around his neck before pulling it up to cover the lower part of his face.

He smiled under the cloth. “This is going to be fun.”

Jack left his cell with the key card around his neck. The first thing he did was scan the door to Jervis Tetch’s cell. The door popped open. Jack pulled the door open to see Jervis sitting cross legged in the middle of the room, the one light shining down on him. He looked up at Jack. “Is it my unbirthday?”

Jack laughed. “It’s everyone’s unbirthday!”

*

Two of the guards were talking as they walked down one of the halls. One of the men, a tall lean dark skinned man named Tom was talking with a shorter pale man named Quincy. “I’m telling you that Barbara chick...she just needs the right guy you know? That’s the only reason them chicks are lesbians...they haven’t had the right guy. Now you let me have a few minutes with her, I could turn her I’m sure of it.”

Quincy gave Tom the stink eye. “Man, you're sick you know that. They don’t want anything to do with you. You just being a perv.”

Tom chuckled. “What's wrong with that?”

Quincy shook his head. “Man, you dirty.”

Tom laughed. “Maybe...what about that other blonde. What's her name? Harley...now that one...Mmm...yeah...”

Quincy shook his head. “Dude, you need to shut up.”

“I agree with your friend. You should really shut up.”

Both men turned at the sound of a voice to see a guard running at them. Grinning ear to ear, Jack didn't slow down. He ran up to them so swiftly that neither man reacted before Jack had hit Tom across the face with the baton. The man let out a groan, grabbing his bloody face where Jack had broken his nose and split his lips, Jack followed the hit to the face with another vicious slug to the back of Tom’s head. The guard went down quickly as Jack landed another vicious blow and then another, cracking open Tom's skull. Quincy struggled in shock to pull his stun gun free of his belt, but Jack twirled around like a dancer, flipping the baton and holding it with both hands. He slammed the heavy stick into Quincy's side in a series of hard thrusts, then smashed its end into the guard's chest, cracking the man's breastbone. Jack raised the baton and swung it with all his strength across Quincy's face, shattering his nose and breaking two of the man's front teeth. Quincy dropped to the floor, groaning, but barely conscious.
Jack laughed. “Hahaha!! Hehehe!!”

He hit Quincy three times in the back of the head before he sidestepped around the two downed guards and gave them a jaunty salute. “Sorry boys!! Got places to go, people to kill!!”

Jack didn't encounter anyone for a few more minutes as he made his way to the some of the cells. Most of the patients were sleeping, but Jack slid his stolen card through the card readers to release the locks of Babs' cell, Tabitha's and Zsasz's before he made his way to where he knew one of the nursing stations was located on the sixth floor. He grinned darkly, his blue eyes flat.

He heard talking as he approached the station. Two women. He peaked around the corner to see a large woman with a short military haircut...he couldn't be sure, but judging by the bruises on her face, the tape on her nose, swollen lips, he was going to guess that she might be the orderly Daisy that Harley had told him about last night when they were together, laying in each others arms...Jack shuddered then, the rage boiling over again making him see red at the edges of his vision knowing she wasn't here. He held onto the rage, better that than the overwhelming pain of escaping, but not having her at his side; his whole being hurt without her, his Harley, his love. He took a steadying breath and focused back on the now. The other woman was dressed in a simple nurse's outfit...not Mallory, though. This woman was short, strawberry blonde. Jack smiled. Taking care of her would be fun, a great bit of therapy before he left Arkham and something he could tell Harley about...she would love that.

The two women were talking in hushed tones, but Jack was close enough to hear them.

Daisy snarled. “I can't believe Crane moved her. I was going to give that fucking bitch the beating she deserves after what she did to me.”

The nurse, a young woman named Allison who had a small crush on Daisy grinned. “Well, you can always beat on the other two, Barbara Kean and Tabitha Galavan, they're both still here. And if you do, can I watch?” Allison looked at Daisy with adoring eyes.

Daisy grinned reaching out to stroke Allison's jaw. “You sure can honey.”

Allison giggled.

“Hey, bearded lady! Beauty is only skin deep ...but ugly goes all the way to the bone!” Jack laughed doing a little finger wave from around the corner.

Daisy reared up startled and stared at the guard. “What the fuck did you just say?”

Jack giggled. “Oh, ugly and deaf? Wow, here, how about this one: I'll say it really loud for you. Which sexual position produces the ugliest children? Ask your mother!!!!” Jack leaned on the wall laughing at his own jokes.

Daisy came around the nurses station. She snarled and huffed like a bull. “I'm going to beat the shit out of you, little man.”

Jack grinned behind his mask. “Do you wanna lose ten pounds of ugly fat? Cut off your head!”

Daisy charged him, which was exactly what Jack hoped she would do. He needed this...the guards were satisfying, but this woman had hurt Harley, had planned worse and Jack really needed someone to get his frustrations out on, someone to pay for Harley not being here.

Daisy rushed him and Jack strolled forward, his arms back, his left foot leading. He swung his back hip toward the ball...or in this case, Daisy’s face, his arms following his hips, Jack extended his arms and the baton met with Daisy's face in an almost beautiful perfect baseball swing. For Jack it was almost as if the whole thing happened in slow motion.

The baton struck the orderly square in the face, shattering the large woman's already damaged nose, reopening her busted lips and creating a thoroughly bloody mess of her face. Jack hit her with enough power to knock her back several steps before she toppled over like the giant from Jack and the beanstalk. Jack jumped up and down, squealing with delight. “AND HE KNOCKS IT OUT OF THE PARK!!! THE CROWD GOES WILD!” Jack added his own fake cheering.

Allison screamed and grabbed for the phone on her desk, but Jack saw her from the corner of his eye and dashed over the few steps before he leapt over the counter to slam into the young woman and drove her bodily to the floor.

“That felt invigorating! Nothing like expressing your anger!!” Jack rolled his shoulders and shook his head back and forth with a light growl.

Jack frowned when he heard Daisy groaning in pain and starting to stir on the floor. “Damn...tough woman.”

Jack strolled over to her while spinning the baton between his fingers. He took a position over her, his feet on either side of her shoulders. He gave her a smile as her eyes focused up on him.

Jack chuckled. “Lady, you're harder to kill than a cockroach on steroids.”

“Who are you?” she asked, her words slurred on the blood and bits of broken teeth in her mouth. Jack grinned.

“I'm Harley Quinn's husband, bitch.” Jack swung the baton and yelled. “FORE!”

Dale arrived at the room where Karlo's daughter was being held. The floor was quiet and lacked the amount of guards that the sixth floor had roaming around. He saw a couple of nurses on his way here, but they simply nodded a greeting or did nothing at all, not even batting an eye at his appearance on their floor. He had stopped and picked up a wheelchair on his way here and quietly slipped into the young woman's room.

Dale stopped in his tracks when he saw the young woman. She was tiny, thin and no older than twenty, if that. Her wrists were bandaged, but what made him pause was the IV. He could tell simply by the color of the liquid that she was being fed a powerful sedative to keep her under...probably on Crane's orders. Dale shivered. He had always known Arkham was bad...the sixth floor being the worst, but this...an innocent young woman in need of real help being used as a pawn to control her father...that was low. Dale sighed and wheeled the chair over to her. He carefully worked to disconnect her from all the IV's and monitors, shutting them off carefully to make sure he didn't raise any alarms (the guards where were talking over by one of the nurses stations, when both looked down at the same time a buzz went off from their belts signaling that someone had tripped the silent alarm in Karlo's daughter's room.) After removing the IV's and bandaging her up, Dale easily lifted her into the chair, placed a blanket over her thin legs and a strap around her waist to prevent her from slipping out of the chair.

Dale wheeled her to the door, opened it and looked both ways; the coast was clear. He wheeled her out of the room and immediately headed to the elevators. He had just arrived and hit the button when he heard movement behind him. He turned to look down the hall where he saw two guards walking toward him. Dale's eyes widened. They were walking with that determined stride, clearly on their way toward Dale.

“Shit, shit, shit!” Dale hissed hitting the button on the elevator even though he knew pushing the button again would not make the thing arrive any faster. Dale looked around frantically and saw the door to the stairs...He spun the chair around unbuckling the unconscious young woman. One of the guards yelled. “Hey, you there!”

But Dale lifted the young woman up and heaved her over his shoulder, turned and made a run for the stairs.

* *

Jack whistled while he strolled down the hall to the elevators, spinning his bloody baton easily. He had made a detour to open up Wesker's cell and Aaron's just because he felt like opening their cells, before he decided to stop at the employee lounge on this level, just on the off chance there was someone there he needed to teach a lesson to on rudeness and because he was craving a Snickers candy bar.

Approaching quietly, Jack could hear the low level sounds of a TV playing. Jack peered around the corner; the only light was coming from the TV. He could see two orderlies sitting on the couch in front of the television. Jack couldn't been sure from here, but something about them seemed familiar... Maybe they all looked alike, the orderlies tended to all share a similar theme in regards to appearance, big bodies, tiny heads and ugly faces. Except for Dale and Sandra of course.

Jack tilted his head, watching when one of the men turned to speak to the other. For a moment both men's profiles were highlighted by the TV and Jack was sure he knew them, from the electrical shock treatment. Jack's eyes narrowed and his nostrils flared slightly. They had both been there, once when he was being shocked, and then with Harley. Jack's smile froze in a rictus grin that didn't reach his eyes. The anger in him became hotter, a burning rage. He crept into the room, sliding along the wall to move closer, all while remaining absolutely silent. The men's profiles came into view again when they turned to speak to each other. Yes, Jack thought, he did remember them...strapping Harley down, holding her down...the same when he had his treatment. He recalled their vicious smiles, saw that they took joy in his pain, in Harley's pain.

One of the orderlies that Jack elbowed his friend. “Hey, you check out that new nurse on the day shift yet?”

The other man growled. “And how would I do that? She's on day shift, stupid.”

“If you wait around in the parking lot you can see her come in! Geez man. She wears these tight little white nurse uniforms...” The man giggled while his friend just said flatly. “They all wear the same thing.”

“Oh, not this one. You can tell hers is extra...tight.” The man held his hands up and in the light from the TV Jack could see the man do an hour glass figure. The other orderly sighed. “Okay Ollie, I'll hang out after shift to see her okay?”

The man named Ollie nodded. “That's the spirit Ed!”
Jack crept up slowly. Just when he was behind the one man named Ollie, he grinned holding the baton like a bat and whispered to himself. “He sneaks up on the ball, he eyes the pitcher. The crowd watches intently. Will Jack Wayne hit the ball out of the park? Will he hit a home run, ladies and gentlemen? Or will it be just a sloppy, bloody mess of bone, brains and revenge? Stay tuned folks!”

Jack swung the baton as hard as he could. The heavy plastic stick connected with the side of Ollie's head with a sickening sounding “whack” and “crack.”. Ed, sitting next to Ollie, yelped when a warm splatter of blood hit him across the side of the face. Within the next heart beat the man was throwing himself off the side of the couch in surprise.

“What the fuck!” Ed yelled.

Ollie went down quickly, falling forward limply with blood leaking from his skull without ever knowing what had hit him. The other orderly tried to make a run for the door, but Jack grinned and put himself in the offending orderly's way. “Going so soon? I mean really—how rude. I thought I would stop by and have a chat with you...you know about cruelty to patients, being complicit in abuse...that sort of thing.”

Ed reached down toward his belt, his hand wrapping around a taser.

Jack chuckled. “Mm...so it comes down to a quick draw...how fast are you compared to how fast I am, eh? But you see, Ed is it? Ed...while you have fear of death on your side, I'm pissed—very pissed.”

Ed moved throwing his arm out with the taser, but Jack brought the baton down in a vicious swing that hit the man's extended arm. The crack of the plastic striking meat and bone was loud. Ed's arm went numb though he managed to shoot the prongs from his taser, hitting Jack in the chest. Jack hissed jerking slightly at the initial shock, but he reached up with his left hand and yanked the prongs out with a laugh.

“Oh Ed! Darling, bad, bad choice.” Jack laughed and swung his baton to hit Ed across the face, whipping the man's head to the side, blood flying from his mouth, highlighted by the flashing colors of the TV.

Ed dropped to the floor with a muffled cry of pain and surprise. Jack smiled happily and stepped closer to take a few more golf-like swings at Ed's head, just to be sure he was down before he turned to look around the room. After a second or two, he spotted the candy machine.

“There you are darling!” Jack cooed. “Now, what a growing psychotic needs is a Snickers. What's that commercial? You're not yourself if you're hungry? Well, I'm definitely not myself.”

Karlo was pacing the basement wearing his true face. It had taken a lot more work than he had expected, but he had removed the plywood to reveal the old storm tunnels. Karlo had stepped inside to take a look. The smell was of old water and wet stone with an undercurrent of rot. He had shone his flashlight around looking at the old brick. The tunnel was wide enough for two people to walk abreast. The first few feet would require them to walk bent over, but after that they would be able to walk upright easily enough. It was pitch dark in here; hopefully he wouldn't be the only one with a flashlight.

Karlo stopped his pacing to pull something out of his back pocket. He held it up and shined a light on it. Between his fingers he held a photograph of a young girl. In the picture, she was no older than fourteen, skinny with long brown hair, but with a smile that transformed her face into something special. Karlo teared up looking at his daughter hoping this plan worked and they were able to escape together.

*

Dale was doing his best to get down the stairs as quickly as he could with the thin body of Karlo's daughter over his shoulder. He could hear the guards behind him occasionally yelling. “Stop! Come back here!”

Dale snorted. Like that was going to happen. He shoved the door open, bursting out onto one of the floors. He wasn't sure where he was as he ran with the young woman and turned a corner. His heart did a leap; there was an elevator at the end of the hall he had chosen to turn down. Dale rushed for it hoping that he could get the elevator to arrive before the guards found him. He slammed his finger on the button.

“Come on, come on!” he hissed jamming the button.

Dale cursed, “Fuck,” when he heard the doors open and the guards' voices.

“Which way did he go?”

“I don't know—should we split up?”

Dale was sure he was going to have a heart-attack when the elevator dinged. The doors began to slowly open when he heard the sound of footsteps. He turned to see both guards running down the hall toward him. “Stop right there!”

Dale turned toward the elevator to see Jack Wayne standing there. Jack grinned taking a bite out of a Snickers bar. “Hey Dale.”

Dale choked. “Mr. Wayne? I mean, Jack?”

Jack grinned. “Yep.” He saw the guards coming down the hall and grabbed Dale by the front of his uniform yanking the big man and the young woman he was carrying, into the elevator at the same time that Jack stepped out.

“Jack what are you doing?” Dale yelped, but Jack grinned. “I'll be along in a second. I haven't worked out my anger issues just yet. It's therapy time!”

The doors closed on Dale's surprised face just as Jack shoved the last bite of his Snickers into his mouth and swung his baton. “Hey boys.” Jack chuckled.

The two guards were confused for a split second at the guard stepping out of the elevator and letting the man they were chasing rush into the elevator behind him. They stopped running as the man they had originally been pursuing disappeared behind the elevator doors.

“What the hell!! We're trying to stop that man! He's kidnapping a patient!” One of the guards, a burly man with a beard that ran up his cheeks, exclaimed angrily.

Jack turned to look behind him at the closed doors. “Oh, you were? Sorry.”

He smiled turning back around and walking toward the guards as the two men rushed up to meet him. The younger of the two, a sandy-haired blonde, stopped when he saw the blood on Jack's face. “Hey man, you hurt?”
Jack smiled wide. "Why yes, yes I am hurt. My girl isn't here, a part of me was torn away and I'm beyond feeling anything but pain at the moment. And so are you."

Jack dropped low, not quite a crouch and swung his baton from the side, slamming the hard, heavy plastic into the blonde's knee. The sound of the man's knee cap breaking filled the hall. He let out a squawk of pain and fell back. The burly guard yelped. "What the..."

Jack rose in a graceful move, grinned and continued his swing, this time driving the baton in an upward sweep, the end of which caught this bearded guard under the chin and snapped his head back. The man fell backwards hitting the floor hard, his head bounced against the floor, out cold. The young blonde was trying to drag himself down the hall with a scream for help. Jack danced past him with a bounce of his head and a smile as he turned, swinging the baton downward to clip the guard in the forehead. The blonde dropped without another word. Jack frowned for a moment before he decided to beat the blonde's head in, then did the same for the other guard. Jack snarled, but smiled using the baton in a series of quick overhead strikes, his smile never faltering, until the backs of their heads were a gruesome mix of blood, bone and brains.

Jack grinned. "Life's a bowl of cherries fellas and this is the pits!" Jack laughed, then frowned. He took a breath and paused to wipe the sweat from his brow with the back of his hand, smearing blood across his skin. He smiled again. "That was fun. Harley would have loved this."

With a pained sigh, Jack turned and strolled to the elevator. He pushed the button, slipped inside when the doors opened. He chuckled and waved at the two bloody and dead men. "Tootles."

*Karol was holding his daughter gently to him, Dale standing next to the man and clicked on a flashlight he had clipped to his belt just as Jack stepped off the elevator. "Are we ready?" Jack asked, walking quickly toward them.

"Yeah, did I hear an alarm?" Dale asked glancing up toward the ceiling listening. Jack nodded. "Yeah, started about a minute ago. Guess they've started finding the bodies."

Dale's face complexion paled, his voice a whisper. "Bodies?"

Jack shrugged. "I wasn't going to leave Akrahm without leaving a few gifts behind." He smiled. Dale broke out in a cold sweat, but Karol had already slipped into the tunnel. "Come on! We need to get moving."

Jack walked past Dale. "We have a map right?"

Dale didn't follow right away, but Jack stopped in the tunnel's entrance. "You coming?"

Dale swallowed and nodded thinking to his own dead body in the morgue. "Yeah...yeah I'm coming." He pulled out his phone. "Alex sent me a map a few minutes ago. Let's get going."

Jack smiled and patted Dale on the back as they entered the tunnels together. "You're a good man Dale."
Better Run, Better Run

Crane studied himself in the mirror of his private room while he finished knotting his tie around his neck. He smiled with the thought that tonight he would begin the process of rebuilding Harleen, truly rebuilding her to create the woman that could stand alongside his new identity. He had wanted to take the process much slower, to break her apart piece by piece until there was nothing of her former self, but circumstances had prevented that. He would have to begin tonight using far harsher methods than he had previously used, but he was flexible, at least where his experiments were concerned. He enjoyed order, but fear had taught him that sometimes a little chaos was good. Chaos kept him on his toes and forced his brain to work quickly to come up with a solution. Crane smiled again. Harleen was forcing him to work on the “fly” so to speak. She was quite a woman, just what he wanted to stand at his side when he rebuilt Gotham.

He had just finished fixing his tie to his satisfaction when his cellphone rang. Crane frowned; no one should be calling him at this hour. He reached over and picked the phone up from the dresser, glanced at himself in the mirror and fixed his hair as he hit the button to answer.

“Crane here,” he answered holding the phone to his ear while he adjusted his suit jacket and ran a hand over his hair.

“Sir, we have a problem at the asylum. Jack Wayne has escaped. He also released some of the other patients on the sixth floor. It’s turning into chaos here!” The voice on the other end was like many of the other voices of the men he hired to work at the asylum. They all sounded the same to him.

“What?” Crane kept his voice calm, but his anger flared at being called when he had work to do, and it took a few seconds for the actual words to sink in. “Jack Wayne has escaped?”

“Yes sir, he killed at least two guards and two orderlies, and there might be more. We think they’ve gone to the basement.” The voice of the guard on the other end sounded panicked.

Crane’s brow furrowed as he tried to imagine why the basement. In the next second he knew.

Crane whispered. “They’ve?”

The man at the asylum sounded on the verge of hysterics. “He has an orderly helping him and a guard...they’ve a hostage too.”

Crane asked with confusion. “A hostage?”

“A young woman who was in the suicide ward,” the man said.

Crane’s eyes widened. A young woman from the suicide ward...a guard helping him...Karlo. Crane’s lips twitched. The anger that filled his eyes would have been frightening if anyone else had been in his presence to witness it. Karlo was working with Jack Wayne, Crane realized. Against him!!!

Crane snarled. “Where did you say they were headed?”

The guard’s voice trembled at the sound of Crane’s fury. “Ah...the basement sir.”

Crane started to pace the room. “They are heading to the storm tunnels.”

The guard sounded confused. “Storm tunnels sir?”
Crane took a calming breath and answered as if he were speaking to a child. “There is a boarded up section of wall down there, behind that is a tunnel leading into the old Gotham storm tunnel system. It will take them into the city if they follow the correct path. That is where they are headed. The storm tunnels. Send men down there. I don't care what you have to do, stop him. Kill him if necessary.”

“Kill, sir?” The man asked in shock.

Crane nodded though the man on the other end wouldn't be able to see him. “Yes. I don't want Jack Wayne leaving the asylum, ever. Do you understand?”

The guard on the other end sounded nervous. “Yes, yes sir, I understand. Uh...what about the other patients?”

“Do I have to explain to you how to do your job? Restrain them and get them back in their rooms!” Crane snarled.

“Yes sir,” the guard replied swiftly. Crane ended the call and slipped the phone into the inside pocket of his jacket with a smile. The storm tunnels, how perfect, he thought. They had no idea what was down there, what they would be walking into...like Birthday Boy, Crane had other little...experiments that he kept. What lived in the tunnels was another one.

The one in the basement had become a little troublesome, thus the blockage between the tunnels and the asylum, not that it kept him out, but it did give him pause. But Crane had kept his pet entertained with gifts through the months. This pet was not a failed one...oh no...Barton Mathis was many things, but he was certainly not a failed experiment. Crane chuckled. They would most likely run into his friend down there...Mathis hadn't had living flesh to work with in such a long time. It would be such a treat for him to have something alive and kicking. Crane smiled. It would be a fitting end for Jack and his traitorous friends.

Harley woke slowly, stiff; her whole body ached. She groaned and rolled onto her side. She felt as if the orderlies had carried her around like a sack of potatoes, maybe even dropped her a few times. She had only been on her side a few minutes when she realized that she wasn't on her cot in her cell, but on an actual bed. Her eyes flew open and Harley pushed herself up to a sitting position, a little too quickly; a wave of dizziness forced her to lay back down. She groaned, putting her fingers to the bridge of her nose. She let herself lay there for a few minutes, letting the vertigo ease before she tried to sit up again.

The first moment of relief she felt was realizing she was still in the dress she had been wearing when she was in Crane's office. Well at least she hadn't been stripped again she thought to herself, just her shoes were missing. The next thing she realized was that there was a light on, a bedside table light. Harley frowned as she examined her surroundings; though the light only illuminated a little of the room clearly it was enough for her to see where she had been taken. She was on a large queen size bed with an off-white comforter, no designs on it, no decoration at all. The bed itself was a simple rectangle of basic dark wood, all sharp edges and squares, nice, but lacking anything one could call character.

The room was white, the walls had that “modern” white look to them, but the white only made the few decorations on the wall stand out in sharp contrast. Along one wall were two rows of African tribal masks. On another wall, there were five masks that all looked to be from India and on the last wall were tribal masks that looked to be South American. She couldn't see them clearly from her position on the bed, but it looked as if each mask display had a little plaque underneath, like a museum exhibit, and now that she thought about it, that was almost exactly the feel she was getting from the place, the sterile, perfectly preserved sense of a museum. There was even the same eerie quiet that prevailed in a museum, that unspoken agreement that everyone and everything should remain still and silent when viewing art or gazing at relics of the past.

All of the masks on display gave Harley a feeling of unease, a sense of fear. Each one showed a horrible face, twisted, demonic, nightmarish. She frowned and shivered. She slowly turned and placed her feet on the floor. The wood floor was cool, but not cold. Harley eased herself up to a standing position. Whatever drug Crane had used on her made her legs feel rubbery, which resulted in another wave of vertigo that made her contemplate sitting down again, but Harley kept her feet under her with an effort. She took a steadying breath, clenched her fingers into fists, and walked slowly toward the bedroom door, which was slightly ajar. She pushed the door open carefully—no creaking, she thought with relief—and looked out into the hall.

The hallway was much like the bedroom; the walls were a plain harsh white, but rather than masks, the walls held several large paintings, each hung in the center of wide sections of the wall, putting the images clearly on display in such a way that one's vision was drawn directly to the painting. The stillness that she had felt in the bedroom continued out here in the hall. Harley frowned at the track lighting above each piece of art that ran down the hall and whispered to herself, “This guy needs a new hobby.” Harley walked carefully and stopped at the first image. It was a large photograph in black and white. The focus was an extreme close-up of someone painted up to look like a demon. Under the image was a little plaque with the title of the picture, “Eater” by Moppee.

Harley made a face and walked to the next image. It was a large painting of a sightless head, its mouth open and all sorts of horrors were spilling into the gaping mouth. The colors were all blacks and pus yellow, the background of the image showed the remains of buildings that looked to Harley as if they had been bombed, reminding her of images she had seen as a child. It had been in a school book, a photo of the destroyed remains of cities in Poland during World War II. The sky in the painting was the same sort of jaundiced quality as the large head. The painting was untitled, the artist Zdzisław Beksiński.

The doctor part of Harley's brain kicked in. If this was Crane's home, then the man was more than just obsessed about fear—he was consumed. But there was a strange sort of balance between the look in his home and what he was displaying. It was clear to her that he was trying to maintain a balance between the violent and gruesome world of fear, versus the tightly controlled order of his home and office. Two opposing forces clashing and pushing against one another. In Harley's expert opinion, something was going to break. The masks, the art work, some of which she had seen in his office, were all extentions of his compulsion. The man worshipped fear, at least that was Harley's opinion, but it was more than that...all of this was Crane's attempt at controlling fear. That was what he wanted to do, control it and thereby control others. She had suspected as much, that not being in control, lacking power, was Crane's biggest fear, just like she had told him. But seeing this house, this fanatical need for order and cleanliness...Harley shivered.

She wrapped her arms around herself as she continued down the hall and saw that each section of wall contained a new image of horror, of fear from paintings by Nicola Samorí to drawings by Aaron Bussard. It wasn't until she was near the end of the hall that she heard the first strands of music, a sound of a mournful violin.

Then she heard Crane's voice, though she didn't see him. “Tartini Violin Sonata in G minor "Devil's Trill Sonata," one of my favorite pieces.”

Harley looked around the corner into the living room of the house. It was a grand living room with tall almost cathedral-like ceilings. All the walls were the same stark white color, each holding a work of art. As Harley stepped into the room, she saw that one wall was all glass, a wide clear window that looked out on the Gotham skyline. She wasn’t sure where she was, but the house was clearly located on the outskirts of Gotham, close enough and high enough up that Crane had a rather gorgeous view of the city. There was a fireplace against the far wall trimmed in an only slightly different shade of white from the walls and a fire burned within it providing a little bit of warmth to this room that the room she had just left lacked. Over the fireplace was a sculptured panel replica which depicted Lord Narasimha killing a demon, (at least according to the little plate description near the fireplace.)

The floors were pale, almost grey wood with a long couch with plain clean lines, also in grey. A white coffee table with nothing on it, nothing to mar the perfection of the surface, sat perfectly before the couch.

Harley gazed around. Everything in the room was arranged just so; no clutter, no mess, everything had a place. There were tall white bookshelves on the wall, the books lined up on the shelves in perfect order. No book stuck at an odd angle, or taller than the rest, nor shorter. Each book was perfectly aligned with the other books on the shelves. In this room there was the addition of grotesque and nightmarish sculptures. One stand had a replica of a marble piece by Eugène Thiver's work “Nightmare” which was of a nude woman reclined on her side with a nightmare creature perched on her hip, the woman reaching out in agony to try to push it away.

The sculpture next to that was a human-animal hybrid, with the body of a big horn sheep, yet the face was human. Harley made a face of disgust, yet at the same time, fascination. She walked around the piece to view the plate with the name on it, Kate Clark “Tale.”

The strange and frightening art pieces extended onto every wall space that wasn't taken up with something else. She could see a large dark painting of the darkest, terrifying imagery. She seemed compelled to step closer as if being drawn by the image. When Harley stopped in front of the image, she realized it was a large print instead of an actual painting. Harley stood there staring at the image, her eyes almost overwhelmed by how much was occurring in the image. She realized instantly it was a painting of hell. Her eyes wandered over the image. The center of the print was dominated by a large black furred devil devouring a human, surrounded by smaller devils torturing and shoving humans toward the center devil. Every space of the painting showed the torture of humans with horrible bestial demons along with them. The image made her skin crawl. That was when she heard Crane's smooth voice behind her.

“It's a print of a fresco, painted by Giovanni da Modena. The image represents a scene from Dante Alighieri's Inferno. Some find the image disturbing, but I find it quite peaceful.” Harley turned around to see that Crane stood by the fireplace with a glass of something amber in his hand. He was dressed in an all black three-piece suit, the only color coming from the red tie he wore. His hair was slicked back making it look darker in the dim firelight. Her heart skipped a beat. She hadn't heard him come into the room; he had moved without making a sound.

He smiled at her. “So, do you like my home?”

Harley stood still, but her body was tense. She was ready to run or fight. “It's a bit sterile.”

Crane shrugged. “Perhaps. I enjoy a certain level of order.”

Harley frowned. “Odd, since fear is a little disorderly don't you think?”

He took another sip from his glass and set it on the mantel. Harley watched him, her eyes narrowed. “What do you want from me?” she hissed, her blue eyes shooting around the room looking for something she could use as a weapon.
Crane smiled. “Want? Why my dear, I've been perfectly clear on what I want from you. I want you to become something greater than yourself. But I brought you here because I wanted to show you something, to show you the next step. To share with you something that is very important to me. Something I've created that is special.”

He stepped away from the fireplace. Harley took a step back. She felt vulnerable without her shoes, barefoot in a dress. She held herself in such a way that it was clear she would flee the first chance she had, but Crane simply walked over to the couch and sat down.

“Come here, my dear.” He patted the seat next to him. Harley didn't budge from her position. She only narrowed her eyes further, giving him a dirty look. He shrugged and pulled out a case from under the coffee table and set it on the table in front of him. The case was the size of a large briefcase, metal, with a clean silver look to it.

He clicked opened the tabs and flipped opened the case. “Would you like to see my mask?”

“What?” Harley asked in confusion.

“We all wear masks Dr. Quinzel. You as a doctor of the mind should know that. We wear masks both figuratively and literally. I want to show you mine. It is a mask that is helping me become my true self.”

Harley stared at him for a heartbeat. She had no idea what he was getting at, but she didn't like it...she didn't like any of this. She stared at him in confusion, but then Crane smiled at her, a condescending, pitiful smile. Before he could do anything else, she dashed from the room. She raced out of the living room to head toward the other side of the house where she discovered another hall as she searched for a door. She found one within second of entering the hall. She nearly slammed into the door when she slid across the floor. She reached for the knob, grabbed it with both hands and twisted. Nothing happened. She tried again, still nothing. The knob didn't budge.

“Shit, shit, shit!!!” Harley hissed struggling with the knob to no avail.

She ran her fingers over the door, looking for a locking mechanism, something that would open the door, but there was nothing, just the smooth surface of the damnable white door. She reached for the knob once more, but the knob wouldn't move.

She heard Crane's voice, again she hadn't hear him stepping up behind her.

“Did you know that fear drives everything? Every decision we make is motivated by fear. We find someone to share our lives with because we fear being alone, we work because we fear starving, we have children because we fear disappearing. Fear is the glue that holds society together, fear is power my dear. Fear is what starts wars, makes people turn to religion, fear is the great motivator, the great equalizer as well. Without fear, we are nothing. Even lower animals experience fear; fear is what makes living worth while, it tells us we're alive. And if you can control your fear, you become a god.”

Harley turned around when she sensed Crane was right behind her. What she saw wasn't Crane any longer, but a nightmarish figure. The man before her wore a twisted gas mask, the face of which reminded Harley of a scarecrow, only this one looked as if the burlap face was melting, formed against his face and illuminating the skull underneath. The mouth of the mask, the lips, were stitched together in wide stitches that showed Crane's mouth underneath and he was smiling. Over the creepy mask Crane wore a hood that hid his hair and head, making him looked less human, like a type of Grim Reaper, stalking her. In addition to the mask, Crane wore a noose around his neck which Harley found even more frightening since he wore all this over his suit, the mix of order and chaos.
But what really made Harley's blood run cold were the needles. The contraption that Crane wore over his chest and arms looked positively medieval yet highly sophisticated, almost reminding her of a bomb the way the cylinders wrapped around his torso. Several tubes circled his torso, each containing a viscous looking orange fluid that seemed to move on its own in the cylinders, moving and shifting in a hypnotic wave. Long thin tubes ran from the large chambers around his torso, over his chest and along his shoulders where they continued to run down his arms, held in place by metal bands around his biceps and forearms, along the back of his hands to the syringes that were worn over the tops of his own fingers, or were his fingers in the syringes? Harley couldn't tell, all she could see was that the fingers of each hand ended in syringes, the needles dripping with the noxious orange fluid. Additional syringes were worn at Crane's shoulder, wrapped around him like ammunition, each filled with more of the strange orange fluid.

Crane stepped closer, his arms held out to his sides like a scarecrow that had been plucked from a field. “Witness my rebirth...” he hissed.

Harley's eyes widened. As Crane stepped closer, she could see his eyes looked milky, cloudy, like the eyes of a corpse under the mask. “Come with me my dear, take the last step, be the Lady Crow to my Scarecrow,” Crane cooed softly, stepping closer. “Overcome your fear! Become what you are meant to be!”

Harley hissed. “Never. I belong to no one but Jack and he belongs to me, you demented Halloween prop!!”

She began to turn, ready to run again, to try to find an escape, but Crane moved surprisingly quickly to slam her up against the door. As her head banged into the door, she felt the syringes on his hands jab into her upper chest right under her collarbones, immediately pushing the toxin into her.

Harley screamed in pain as the syringes expelled their toxin into her body. The pain was like nothing she had experienced. The toxin burned into her muscles, spreading acidic fire through her upper torso and into her neck and face. Crane yanked the syringes back and immediately the liquid raced through the tubes on his body to fill them again. Crane tilted his head and gazed down at Harley.

“Soon you will see what I have done for you and you will thank me.” Crane smiled behind his mask, dropped into a squat, and caught Harley before she sank completely to the floor. He held her in his arms, stroking his hand over her hair while Harley convulsed.

Dale held his phone up in front of him. The light casting back into his face made him look eerie and undead; the light created an almost skeletal look to Dale's features. It was almost enough to make Jack laugh. Jack walked over to Dale, twirling his baton as if he were simply on a casual stroll.

Back behind them, Karlo was holding his daughter in his arms, the young woman having yet to wake up. Jack glanced behind him, watching the man cradling his daughter. He actually felt sorry for the former actor. He knew how he would feel if it was Harley...Jack closed his eyes for a moment as an intense wave of pain washed over him; his whole being ached without her. How he had endured all these weeks without her next to him he didn't know, but now, just when he had thought he was about to have her again, she had been plucked away from him. Jack pressed his lips together on the anguish he was feeling. Killing those people had helped, a way to vent his pain, but he needed her and he needed her now. Just knowing that Crane had her someplace, alone...trying to make her his...trying to take her from him...Jack's whole body vibrated with rage. He took a deep calming breath. Focus now, murder later.

Jack let his thoughts drift and he smiled thinking about his hands around Crane's neck, squeezing the life slowly from the psychiatrist. Squeezing, squeezing...no, no, that would be too easy a death.
Something more graphic, something to draw out Crane's suffering...He let out a breath he hadn't been aware he was holding. He would kill Crane...slowly. In the most painful way possible. He promised that, not just to himself, but for Harley. Crane was going to suffer for all he had done and then some.

*

Jack rubbed a hand over his stubbled cheeks, glancing back the way they had come. He could see the asylum behind them, cast in a thin light, then the dark frame of the tunnel entrance leading into the darkness where they now stood. For a moment he wondered if this was how Alice felt falling into the rabbit hole, a clear separation between two worlds. Jack gave a slight snort thinking that Jervis would enjoy the imagery. Jack let his flashlight beam roam over the walls where he stood. The tunnels were made of brick which was now covered in a thin film of slime and moss. The smell of rot and old water filled their nostrils. There were puddles of stale water where they were standing, the water looked black in the dim light from Dale's phone and the flashlights, looking like liquid darkness.

Dale's eyes were moving rapidly over the map he held in his hand, his brow furrowed in confusion. The map was not only small on the phone screen, it wasn't exactly clear either. “I...I'm not sure this is going to help much.”

Jack came over to take a look at the map, leaning against Dale and draping an arm over the bigger man's shoulders. Dale gave Jack a sidelong look, but said nothing, simply moved the phone to give Jack a better view of the downloaded map. Jack frowned studying it. The map was indeed confusing and it wasn't just a map of the storm drain tunnels; there was an overlaid map of the sewers tunnels, and some other tunnels that were unmarked creating an almost surreal image of an extremely complicated chutes and ladders game board.

Jack chewed his bottom lip studying the tiny map then pointed at the small section on the phone's map. “I think...” He glanced from the phone, then shone the flashlight he held before him, the beam moved through the darkness, but all the light showed was that the tunnel just went straight on into darkness.

“Well I suppose we just keep going straight for right now.” Jack chuckled. “Straight ahead and onward. Can you text Alex? Maybe he can clarify the map some?”

Dale shook his head. “I can't get any reception down here.”

Jack swung the flashlight around looking at the old brick overhead. “Well, I guess it's just us and the darkness.”

Dale paled. Why did Jack have to say it like that? The big man thought to himself.

*

Karlo was a little ways behind the two men, leaning against the wall as he gazed down at his daughter. She looked nothing like the happy girl he remembered. Of course, he hadn't seen in her well over a year, but he was sure this was not the girl he remembered. She was so thin and pale, her hair looked limp and lifeless which made him wonder if she had been starving herself too. He glanced down at her bandaged wrists. The light coming from the basement was thin, but he could see the stark white bandages against her skin clearly as if the image was burned into his mind.

Karlo felt tears burn the back of his eyes. He had failed her, his little girl—he had failed her. This was all his fault, he thought. If only he had...he shook his head, as if to expel the negative notions.
He saw no point in dwelling on what he should have done—now he could only focus on what he needed to do, which was get her out of here and someplace safe...away from him and away from her mother. She didn't need either of them in her life. She needed good, caring people to watch over her, not two self-centered assholes like her parents. Clearly they weren't suited to raise such a delicate, beautiful flower as their daughter. Especially now that her father had been turned into some sort of monster, a freak. Karlo frowned, maybe he could take her out of state, get her to Metropolis where his parents lived. They would take her, hide her without question...if he can only get out of here alive with her... Karlo's eyes widened. The elevator had just arrived which could only mean one thing. He pushed himself up from the wall, hurrying to join the other two. “We need to move. Someone's coming!”

No sooner were the words out of his mouth than the elevator doors opened. The elevator practically vomited out a group of seven guards.

Karlo looked back in a panic. “Come on, we need to move.” The actor took off down the tunnel without a light and quickly disappeared into the darkness.

Jack glanced behind him. “Oh goodie, maybe we can ask for directions?”

Dale hissed. “Oh for fuck's sake.”

Jack giggled. “Come on!” He took off at a run down the tunnel. Dale shook his head clicking on his flashlight and shoved his phone in his pocket as he cursed at their misfortunes. “Fuck, fuck, fuck!”

*

Alex looked down at his phone muttering to himself. “Fuck, fuck, fuck.”

The four of them were sitting in a large black SUV that practically screamed, “Getaway Car.”

They were parked in Aparo park, hidden among some trees and bushes which were providing modest cover for the SUV, along with the darkness and cold of the Gotham evening which was keeping those who would frequent the park at night inside which was great for the vehicle's occupants.

Frost sat behind the wheel. He turned around, placed his arm along the back of the seat and frowned at Alex. “You know they're underground right? They ain't going to get any reception down there.”

Alex sighed. “I know, but I was fucking hoping we would hear from them before they hit the fucking tunnels. What if something went the fuck wrong? What am I saying? Something always goes fucking wrong.”

Alice, who sat beside Alex, put her arms around him and squeezed him. “They'll be fine. Jack and Harley are smart and they have help. They'll be here before you know it.”

Alex muttered, leaning into Alice's embrace. “Just wish I had time to find a better fucking map or come up with a better fucking plan.”

Sandra was sitting in the front with Frost. She had been fairly quiet since they picked her up. Clearly her mind was on her boyfriend.

She murmured. “I just hope they're okay. Dr. Crane is a monster.”

Frost turned back to her. “Why didn't you and Dale ever go to the police if you knew he was doing shit to the patients?”
Sandra frowned, her cheeks flushing with shame. “Fear. Like I said, the man is a monster, but we couldn't really prove anything. If we had gone to the police, Crane would have simply covered up what he was doing. What's more, Arkham and Crane are respected doctors while Dale and I are just grunt workers. Who do you think the police would have believed?”

Frost studied her then reached out and patted her hand that she had settled on her lap. “Sorry. Didn't mean to sound like a dick.”

Sandra shook her head. “No, it's all right. We should have...gone to the police. But Crane runs Arkham and...I've seen and heard things...”

Alice leaned forward putting a hand on Sandra's shoulders in a show of support. “Hey, don't worry about it, you and Dale are doing something now.”

Sandra nodded reaching up to touch Alice's hand. “Thank you.”

Alex groaned dropping his head back against the seat. “I fucking hate waiting.”

Harley sank to the floor as the fear toxin burned in her bloodstream causing her to feel nauseated, left her head spinning, and her heart felt as if it were beating hard enough that it would rip through her chest. She blacked out or passed out, she wasn't sure which, only that she was dwelling in the darkness for a few moments before her vision snapped back. Her hands shook when she reached up to touch her face.

The room around her seemed to waver and shift. The stark white walls were too white, blinding, while at the same time the walls weaved and wavered, as if there were creatures living under the surface of the walls, twisting, shifting, ready to break through in places along the perfect white, ready to burst like blemishes. There were spots on the wall where the blackness began to leak through, a slow spreading stain, just a dot of darkness that spread like ink on the surface of water.

Harley's head felt heavy and each movement caused her vision to spin, her stomach to roil. Her muscles and stomach felt jittery. Her vision was dragged upward when she saw something move, a thick black shadow against the perfect, blinding white. The shadow seemed to grow, lengthening, spreading along her field of vision while accompanied by a sound, like a moan that had gone on too long, the sound like a stretched out groan, creaking, the sound becoming higher, longer as if pull and yanked along a painful surface, growing until Harley cried out and covered her ears staring up into the face of a monster.

The Scarecrow loomed over her. It's large hollow eyes glowed a deep molten orange mixed with a brown rot that wove through the color, reminding her of pumpkins left too long on the porch, where they began to sink in on themselves. The Scarecrow's mouth opened wide, tugging against the thick stitches in it lips that held the mouth together. The hollow of the mouth was filled with teeth like the sharp points of needles. The burlap face seemed to melt back showing the skull underneath with living things moving and shifting under the fabric like the walls were doing. The monster leaned over her, its very presence forcing her back to the floor. She pushed herself up on her hands, stared at the monster, her muscles trembling, but unable to move her away from her tormentor. She could smell the sweet decay of rotting death on its breath while the figure loomed over her.

“Tell me Harleen...tell me what it is you see...let the fear take over, let it shatter you and leave you stripped bare.” The Scarecrow's voice was a combination of thick honey and oozing pus that rolled over her skin and seeped into her pores.
Harley whimpered trying to push herself away from the Scarecrow, inching backwards across the floor, her bare feet making soft squeaks against the floor’s polished surface while she pushed herself backwards, but the Scarecrow seemed to move toward without ever shifting its position. It reached out with long needle like claws. The orange glow of the liquid looked harsh against the backdrop of the monster's darkness. The creature grabbed her by her shoulders, preventing her from moving any further.

“You are my pretty little lady now Harleen. There is nowhere for you to go, no escape for you. The only place you can go is into the fear...let it consume you. Fear will lead you down the path to me...it will clear your mind and set you free to become the creature of nightmares I know you can be...”

Harley screamed and tried to push herself away from it, but the Scarecrow's fingers seemed to melt into her flesh. Harley began to cry. “NO!”

She jerked, trying to break free, but it's fingers were in her, the needles pushing deeper. It was as if her body was absorbing the monster into herself. Harley screamed as tears ran down her cheeks.

“You are going to belong to me now...” The Scarecrow leaned foward, its mouth widening, a large endless cavern filled with a deadly orange light drawing her, pulling her toward him.

Harley screamed as the Scarecrow expanded, grew to become a creature so large it filled the room, while the orange light from its mouth and eyes filled her vision. She screamed until she was hoarse trying to shove herself away from the monster, but for what seemed forever to her, she couldn't move. Then, just as suddenly, she was unable to move, she found herself sliding across the slick floor backwards, but his hands were part of her and she couldn't move far, the extension between them yanking her back. Harley felt hysteria claw at the edges of her mind. “NO!”

She yanked back, but she couldn't break free.

“Give in Harleen, give in to me...” Scarecrow leaned in closer, his mouth opening wider, becoming a vast cavern that wanted to suck her under. Then the things under its skin burst forth to spew maggots, fat black spiders, thick black snakes and other slime-coated creatures that she had no name for, spewed from every orifice along with a thick, black, noxious fluid that dripped thickly from the teeth and lips of the Scarecrow. The whole of the toxic mixture poured from the mouth and eyes. Harley screamed shrilly. She lashed out, her fist striking Crane in the face. Crane let go of her in surprise, his hands coming up to grab at his nose in shock at the flash of pain that was accompanied by a gush of warm blood from his nose. Harley had broken it.

Harley twisted her body around, coming to her feet. She struggled for a moment trying to gain her momentum, but the floor was slick and she was terrified. Her feet seemed incapable of finding purchase, they slipped against the surface threatening to throw her face first into the floor, but just when she was about to give up, she gained ground. She was able to propel herself forward away from the nightmare.

Crane snarled. “RUN! GO AHEAD AND RUN! THERE'S NO PLACE FOR YOU TO GO!! THIS IS MY REALM YOU'RE IN! I KNOW EVERY HALL, EVERY ROOM. YOU CAN'T LEAVE!!”

Harley stumbled, pitched forward for a moment, the walls and floor twisted and turned like a funhouse mirror. She reached out trying to steady herself, but when she touched the wall, things spewed forth and raced up her arm. Harley screamed again, trying to deny what she saw, but she felt them too. “NO!!”

Shaking, hystertical, the hiss and snarl of something close behind her, pursuing her and forcing her forward, Harley ran again while swiping the nightmarish insects and other things from her arms. Harley raced down the long hall. She turned to see the Scarecrow lumbering toward her, its body swaying side to side, its steps like that of a prowling predator as steam hissed from its deformed mouth while a black substance dripped from its mouth, splattering the floor in great wet plops of goo. The Scarecrow lurched after her while hissing her name. “Harleen, come here Harleen, come to me...”

Harley raced away, heading down the hall that suddenly seemed to stretch on in front of her forever...no matter how much she moved, the white hall kept extending beyond her, lenghtening...

“Come here pretty, pretty!!” the creature behind her yelled.

Harley closed her eyes. “Not real, not real...” ,p>The Scarecrow laughed. “Oh, I'm very real.”

*

The three men hadn't delved very far into the tunnels when they heard the first gun shot crack behind them accomanpied by the beams of several flashlights. The echo of the gun shot reviberated down the dark tunnel. Everyone ducked with Jack saying in surprise.

“They're shooting at us? I call foul!”

Dale hissed. “Oh fuck, fuck, fuck!”

They kept running, their flashlights wobbling in the darkness ahead of them, joined by the flashlights of their pursuers creating an almost strobe-like affect ahead of them, creating a dizzying sight. They had run another few dozen feet when another shot rang out and someone yelled. “STOP!!”

Jack yelled back. “Stop or you'll what? Shoot?? Not much incentive there!” Jack muttered. “Why do they always yell stop? How stupid do they think we are?”

Panting, Dale pointed. “Up ahead! There's a fork in the tunnel.”

“Which way?” Karlo asked breathlessly

Dale fumbled with his phone, the sounds of the pursuring guards' footfalls echoed in the ancient tunnel. Jack grabbed Dale. “We don't have time for that! Come on.” They took off running as more shots rang out, one coming close enough that it shattered the brick wall by Jack's head sending bit of debris flying. Jack winced as slivers of exploded brick hit him in the face, cutting into his cheek.

Jack cursed as white hot pain ripped across his cheek followed by the hot ooze of blood.

“Fuck! Dale, move it!!” Jack turned the bigger man and shoved him down the tunnel to the right.

The sounds of spalshing water mixed with the noises of shouts, the flashes of beams of light and bursts of gun fire followed behind them. They kept running until there was another turn in the tunnel, this one to the left. Jack slipped in the water on the floor of the tunnel and slammed his shoulder up against the wall. Dale slipped as well, dropping his flashlight, which skittered across the floor, then spun creating a crazy disco ball effect as the light shone everywhere for a heartbeat showing everything and nothing at the same time. Karlo was ahead of them, Jack could hear the splash of the man running. Jack just barely caught a glimpspe Karlo as Dale's light spun around highlighting the man's back at the moment he turned a corner up ahead. Jack pulled himself from the wall, another gun shot rang out blasting brick, morter and slime that burst next to Jack's head.

Jack ducked and hissed. “Shit!”
He grabbed a hold of Dale by the shoulders and shoved the man ahead of him again.

“Go! Go!” Jack snarled.

Dale stumbled, almost pitching forward with the strength of Jack's push, but he kept his feet under him and took off, Jack close behind leaving the flashlight behind. The two men ran down the tunnel, turning the corner to follow Karlo. Now with only Jack's flashlight to provide any light, the tunnels were more confusing. Jack focused on keeping Karlo in his sights while they ran in complete darkness with only the one flashlight and no idea where the tunnel was taking them. The sounds of gunfire followed reverberated from the walls again, punctuated by the guards yelling. Jack turned to look over his shoulder once, the bright flash of the gun and the beam of a flashlight blinded him for a split second.

Jack shielded his eyes with his hand, but it was enough for the beam of light to disorient him for a moment. He turned back only to nearly stumble in his effort to keep up with Dale and Karlo, his vision filled with spots.

As the three made their way down the next tunnel, the ceiling seemed to suddenly drop, the side walls closed in, narrower, which forced them to crouch and move slowly, but they kept going straight ahead. They had to run in single file, pushing forward as the space became smaller. Jack heard the guards close behind them shouting to one another, but he could tell they were right behind them. He pushed through the tight space when the tunnel sudden burst open again into a larger room. Jack stumbled out behind Dale, panting lightly as he took a second to shine his light around. He could see Karlo where he stood in the middle of the room looking around, his daughter held tightly in his arms. Dale was panting, his hands on his knees. Jack moved his flashlight around the room in a quick circuit; they had three choices, left, right or forward.

Another gun shot went off, this one striking Jack in the back of the shoulder. The bullet ripped through Jack's shoulder and out the front in a spray of blood, causing him to stumble foward and dropped to his knees. The seven guards came stumbling into the room, spilling in like rats, the first having gotten the shot off that hit Jack, but the others were being forced into the room in single file, unable to shoot right away as they struggled to become oriented and spread out at the same time.

Karlo put his daughter down as quickly and gently as he could before he rushed the man who shot Jack. Karlo, like before when he had killed those people that put him in Blackgate, experienced a “blackout,” his rage taking over and he moved surprisingly fast, without thought of the possible consequences of rushing an armed man. Karlo grabbed the man's outstretched arm; his hands wrapped around the guards wrist, then in the next moment there was a loud snap. Karlo had given the guard's wrist a hard, decisive twist, breaking the wrist. The guard let out a bloodcurdling cry of pain as he dropped his gun from useless fingers.

Jack, hurt but not down, rolled out of the way as Karlo threw the guard across the room. The flashlight the guard had been holding hit the ground and spun, putting on a light show in the chamber as the beam spun crazily over the walls.

Jack lunged and grabbed the fallen weapon in his hands and rolled at the same time, coming up on one knee with the weapon aimed toward the guards.

The roaming beams of the flashlights made it hard to focus, but Jack grinned. Jack knew by the feel that he was holding a Colt 1991 which held eight bullets. He couldn't be sure, but he was going to guess the man had only fired the one which had gone through his own shoulder. Jack grinned; that left him seven bullets, more than he needed. Jack didn't hesitate as he shot the first guard that he saw illuminated in a beam of light from the spinning flashlight, hitting the man square in the chest. That seemed to cause a chaotic reaction, the other guards shouted, shots were fired randomly which sent bullets ricocheting in the chamber. Karlo threw himself down in a crouch hoping to avoid bullets and flying debris.

Jack rose to his feet after the first shot and rushed forward, doing a slight spin like a dancer swinging his body to the side as he shot another guard in the head. (Dale, as soon as he saw Jack grab the gun rushed over to Karlo's daughter, picked the young woman up and rushed her out of the way to the far end of the chamber, using his body to protect her and hoping to God that no stray bullets found their way into his back or other body parts.)

Karlo rose up as soon as the ricochets seemed to stop and grabbed another guard by the front of his shirt, surprising the man who had clearly not seen him in the dark if his shocked expression was any indication. Karlo flung the man toward Jack like he was throwing skeet for Jack to shoot. The man stumbled toward Jack with neither his gun nor flashlight aimed at anything for a few seconds, which was enough time for Jack to grab the startled man by the collar, yank him to the side with one hand wrapped around the front of the guard's shirt and at the same time he shot the man in the head. Jack dropped that guard with a laugh.

The three remaining guards shuffled back putting some space between them and Karlo, one taking a shot at the older man while the other two tried to shoot Jack. Karlo threw himself to the floor, but the shot nicked him in the thigh and sent the actor stumbling to the ground where he hit hard, the fall knocking the breath from him.

Jack snickered with a hiss. "You know guys, violence is never the answer. It’s just a really good solution."

Jack laughed with maniacal glee.

He rushed forward, not giving the guards room or a chance to react, grabbing one by the neck and shooting him in the forehead before he threw the body into one of his companions, knocking that man off his feet. The last guard opened fire on Jack. (Dale kept his body protectively over Karlo's daughter, his hands over his head praying.) Jack felt one of the bullets brush painfully against his face, a hot graze. It almost felt to Jack like everything was in slow motion. A beam of light from one of the dropped flashlights illuminated the bullet that was speeding past him, yet close enough that he felt the wind from it, then the burn as the bullet skidded along his jaw, burning skin as it flew past him. Jack grinned viciously, the pain only heightened his senses, the blood running down his from his face felt good, invigorating. Jack lunged forward, the gun held in front of him, but his arms were not extended; they were held close to his body. The fallen guard had just gotten back to his feet as one of the spinning flashlights spun around to show the two guards Jack coming for him. They both panicked and shot wildly.

Jack was in front of both guards in an instant, reaching out and grabbing the barrel of his gun (Jack ignored the heat of his barrel against his palm) as he yanked the man forward with his left hand. Jack jammed the muzzle of his pistol against the guard's temple and shot the man twice in the head. He then spun out of the way as the other guard tried to shoot him. Jack rolled under and to the side, the guard making the mistake of holding his arm extended that held the weapon. Jack brought his right arm up, hitting the man's gun arm out of the way before Jack thrust his own weapon under the guard's jaw. Jack grinned at him, his blue eyes twinkling in the spinning lights from the fallen flashlights.

Jack hissed. "Yathzee!"

Then pulled the trigger.

*
Batman was perched on one of Gotham's many gargoyles that littered the buildings throughout the city. He was monitoring the police scanner with the communication device built into his cowl. Tonight was fairly quiet, though there had been an unusual robbery; the criminal had robbed a jewelry store, but had left a few clues...all in the form of riddles. Batman had gone to the scene and spoken with Gordon with a promise to work on the riddles while the GCPD detectives worked on them as well. He would contact Gordon if he learned anything. Right now though, Gotham was filled with the usual low end criminals stalking the night. He had left a few bad guys for the cops to pick up, but right now was a lull between work.

Batman frowned when he picked up the signal from the police radio. There was a problem at the asylum, apparently some of the patients had escaped their rooms. Batman listened...sixth floor, the violent patients were loose and causing issues at the asylum. Someone there had called the police. Bruce's heart sank...Jack. He hoped Jack was not in danger.

He leaped from the roof as he put in a call to Alfred. “Alfred, did you hear about the asylum?”

“Yes sir. You don't suppose Master Jack or Miss Harleen are in any trouble do you?”

“I'm on my way to find out. I'll keep you informed.” Batman cut off the call just as the Batmobile slid up next to him. He jumped in and took off, heading for Arkham.

* Karlo hurried over to his daughter as best he could. He was bleeding and limping badly. Dale had gone over to check on Jack who had flopped down on the wet floor, his arms resting on his knees as a fit of giggling shook his torso. Dale dropped down next to him lifting his face. Flashlights were scattered around the room making the room resemble a dance floor.

“Damn Jack. That looks bad.” Dale hissed before he moved to examine Jack's shoulder. Jack hissed in pain. “Don't worry, chicks dig scars...isn't that what they say?”

Dale huffed. “Shit...okay, I'm going to need to stop the bleeding. How are you doing Karlo?” Dale called over to the other man who had moved his daughter to his lap and was stroking her hair back from her slack face.

“I'm okay, though...yes, I'm bleeding still.”

Dale nodded. “Okay. I'm going to take care of Jack first, then you Karlo.”

Karlo nodded leaning back against the wall holding his daughter. Dale stood up going to the bodies of the guards and started to strip the shirts off of a couple of them. While Dale was busy doing that Jack frowned when he thought he heard a groan. He turned around to see the guard Karlo had dropped with a broken his wrist—the man was still alive. Jack pushed himself to his feet and walked over to the man who was lying on his side groaning loudly. The idiot, Jack thought to himself.

Jack stepped calmly over to the guard, who had his back to Jack and the others. Jack pushed his foot on the man's shoulder and rolled him onto his back. The guard couldn't be more than twenty-five, maybe twenty-eight at the most, but Jack doubted it. He had brown eyes and a mop of brown hair. Jack kicked the man's arm down that he was cradling against his chest and put his foot against the man's broken wrist. The guard screamed in pain.

Jack just smiled. “So smiley. Why were you shooting at us instead of using your delightful non-lethal ways of taking us in? Hmm?” Jack pressed down on the man's wrist.

The young guard screamed. “CRANE!! CRANE WANTS YOU DEAD!!”
Jack stuck his bottom lip out. “Aww...he don't wanna play with me anymore? I feel so...I'm just...pissed.” Jack smiled, having lowered his voice on the last word. “You know what...I doubt you're going to crawl your ass out of here, but if you do, you radio that prick and you tell him I'm coming for him and I'm going to hurt him, really, really bad.” Jack ground his foot on the man's wrist. “You got that buddy?”

“GOT IT, GOT IT!!” The guard yelled.

Jack grinned. “Fantastic.”

Then he kicked the guard in the face, knocking him out. Jack stopped for a moment and sighed. “Shoot...probably shouldn't have done that. Oh well, live and learn.”

Dale came over to him grimacing at the guard whose wrist now looked as if he would be lucky to ever use his hand again...Dale shuddered. “Here sit down—let me bandage that shoulder.”

Dale made Jack sit and carefully tore the fabric away from the bullet wound in the front, then made Jack lean foward while he did the same in the back.

Dale hissed. “This is going to leave an ugly scar, but I don't think anything vital was hit, like an artery, since the bleeding seems to be slowing on its own.”

“Oh goodie,” Jack said deadpan.

Dale took several minutes to check Jack's pulse then wrapped the wound up as best he could with what he had, which were the torn up remains of the dead guards' shirts. Dale padded the wound on both sides then wrapped the ripped cloth around Jack's shoulder. Dale next examined Jack's face, frowning as he checked the wound before shaking his head. “Not sure what I can do about that. You really need a doctor.”

Jack smiled. “I promise when we get out of here and get Harley back I'll find a doctor. Alex has one I'm sure that will work under the radar...or maybe Alfred...”

Dale didn't know who Alfred was and he wasn't sure he wanted to know, but he nodded and checked on Karlo. After a few more minutes, both men were bandaged the best Dale could do with what he had available to him. Dale sighed, tired and beyond feeling really anything at all except exhaustion. He pulled out his phone to examine the map, hoping they hadn't gotten themselves hopelessly lost.

Jack came over, moving a little slower than usual, but not by much. He stopped on his way over to Dale to search the bodies of the guards taking as many extra rounds as he could find for the gun he had confiscated. He glanced over at Dale and Karlo while removing one of the dead guard's holsters and ammo belt, before putting them on himself.

“You know, you both should take a gun. Crane wants me dead, I'm sure he would be happy enough to cut two more loose ends.”

Dale shuddered slightly. “I don't like guns.”

Jack adjusted the belt. “You might want to learn Dale. But, all right. I'll protect ya big guy.” Jack smiled, finished with the belt.

“Karlo?” Jack asked reaching down to pull one of the weapons from a dead guard's hand. Karlo looked up from his daughter then nodded. Jack grinned and waltzed over with the weapon. He handed the gun over before rejoining Dale who was studying the map on his phone. Jack leaned on Dale putting his undamaged arm around the big man's shoulder looking down at the tiny map on the phone.

Jack twisted his lips. “I don't know about you buddy, but I have no idea where we are.”

Dale nodded in agreement. “We might be here.” He pointed to a section which he then magnified with a stroke of his fingers. The section of the map was clearly a large chamber with three passages leading off from it. Two of the passaged looked like they might actually turn back toward the asylum while the third option seemed to lead away. There didn't seem to be any other large chambers on the map though several smaller ones were sprinkled throughout the complicated system of bends and turns on the map.

Jack narrowed his eyes and nodded. “I think you're right. If we go down this way…”

Jack pointed with his finger, tracing a line in red that seemed to lead in the basic direction they wanted to go. “We should hit an opening out of these drains.”

Dale nodded glancing back Karlo. “You want me to carry her?”

Karlo shook his head. “I can handle her.”

Karlo stood up shakily, his wounded leg wobbled a bit, but he managed to keep his feet under him. He shifted his daughter's weight holding the young woman close to his chest, then nodded. “Which way?”

Jack glanced at the map, then Dale, before he pointed to the tunnel opening that led straight ahead. “That way.”

The men followed the tunnel for several feet, coming to yet another cross-roads, one way which continued straight, the other option turned left.

Dale studied their map, but he still couldn't be sure if he was reading it correctly. Both Jack and Karlo were dragging, their wounds draining them, exhausting both men. Dale glanced back at them. Karlo was leaning against the wall, sweat dripping down the side of his face. Jack seemed better, but he looked pale; the dim light from the flashlight made Jack look like a ghost. Both men had lost a lot of blood...Dale pressed his lips together in worry. There was nothing he could do for them that he hadn't already done...they would just have to keep moving.

They continued for nearly an hour when all three of them heard the sound of music. It was difficult to tell where the sound came from as it seemed to echo along the tunnel walls. Jack frowned tilting his head to the side while he listened.

“It sounds like it's coming from straight ahead,” Jack murmured.

Dale frowned. “Do you think there is an opening to the outside there?”

Jack, who had been walking in the lead, turned around to walk back to Dale. “Bring the map up.”

Dale did while Karlo leaned against the wall clearly exhausted. Jack sighed. “I don't think we have a lot of choices. Onward and upward!!” Jack grinned though his features looked strained.
Dale nodded. Karlo pushed up weakly all of the, heading toward the sounds of music.

The music became louder, drowning out any other sounds. The three men followed the music until they all stepped into a small room, lit only by old carbide lamps and a few standard white glow sticks. It was a small room, black moths flittered around the lights, big, fat black death head moths, along with tiny white moths all of which danced around the lights as if seeking something. The pale light illuminated the cobwebs that were draped along the walls and hanging from the ceiling, giving the space the same look and feel of an old horror film. Here were rickety looking shelves that had been put up against the walls on all sides; the shelves were crammed full of bottles and jars. It was hard to see what was on the shelves in the weak light, but where the light danced across a jar it was clear there were body parts floating in some sort of amber tinted liquid.

In the corner was a dress-maker's mannequin, with pieces of what looked like tanned hide or skin sewn together like a coat. Beside that was a table where four mannequin heads sat, each with a different patchwork mask, sewn crudely together from the same source as the coat.

Against one wall pressed flat against the shelves of jaws, was an aquarium, the water or fluid inside a bright almost fluorescent shade of green made all the more brilliant because of the several glow sticks that had been tossed inside it. Laying at the bottom of the tank was a human head, staring up at the water with blind filmy eyes. Alongside the aquarium and in corners throughout the room were dolls, little to big, but they all shared one feature—they were all made from human skin.

In the middle of the room were two long rusted metal examination tables; each held a partly skinned and gutted corpse, though there wasn't enough skin or features left on the bodies to determine the sex of either corpse. Light music was playing from an ancient looking CD player that sat on the corner of a rusted surgical table. The upbeat tune of "Pump up the Kicks" was playing while a figure was bent over one of the bodies, working carefully and skillfully to remove the scalp, careful to keep the hair attached. The figure wore a long, ankle-length surgical white gown with a heavy leather apron of black worn over the top of the white outfit, along with a pair of milky looking plastic surgical gloves in which he held a pair of stainless steel forceps and a scalpel. The figure moved his body to the tune, singing under his breath while he worked intently at his task. Despite the music's high volume, the three men could hear the muffled high-pitched voice.

“All the other kids with the pumped up kicks
You'd better run, better run, out run my gun
All the other kids with the pumped up kicks
You'd better run, better run, faster than my bullet
All the other kids with the pumped up kicks
You'd better run, better run, out run my gun
All the other kids with the pumped up kicks
You'd better run, better run, faster than my bullet...”

Suddenly the figure turned around, holding the perfectly removed scalp in his hands to see the men standing there.
In the dim light all three could see that the “man” wore a mask that completely covered his face, clearly made from stitched together pieces of human flesh. His brown eyes were wide under the mask. The man's laugh was high and piercing. “Oooh new dolls!! Living dolls!! It's been so long!!! Dr. Crane promised and promised, but now here you are!” Jack pulled his gun up with one hand, but before he could fire a shot, the man in front of them yanked a glass capsule from a pocket and threw it at them. The capsule hit the floor, shattered and sent up a putrid yellow gas. Jack gasped when the gas hit him, burning his eyes and throat. Jack fired his weapon, but he couldn't see. He dropped to his knees just as Dale collapsed beside him.

The last thing Jack was aware of was the horrid mask of the man coming close to him, his breath smelling of decay and formaldehyde and his high pitched voice. “You are going to make such a pretty doll.”
When Batman arrived at the asylum, the GCPD were already there, the cruisers' blue and red lights flashing against the buildings in a colorful display. Fluffy snowflakes had begun to fall, mixing with the cold rain creating a deep chill in the air. Batman parked his vehicle down from the asylum, hidden by the darkness and just out of reach of the lights before he made his way to the front of the building. He could just see Gordon talking to a few uniforms, the ruby glow from his cigarette pinpointing his presence. The smoke from the cigarette mixed with the clouds of frozen breath and the heated air from the car engines to create a fog-like atmosphere around the front of the asylum. Batman made his way to Gordon, waiting until there was a moment when the man was alone to suddenly appear behind him.

“What is the situation?” Batman asked in his low rumble of a voice.

Gordon jumped and turned around. “God, I hate it when you do that!” Gordon put a hand to his chest nearly dropping the cigarette he was holding between his teeth.

Batman made no response, not that Gordon was expecting one; the veteran law-enforcement officer could always count on a no-nonsense attitude from the masked crime fighter. “Well, it looks like we got an early gift from the asylum this Christmas. Seems there was some sort of break out on the sixth floor. We have several missing patients, one possible hostage, maybe more, and at least six bodies, another two in critical condition.” Gordon stopped and rubbed the bridge of his nose. Privately, Bruce felt a chill run through him. Could any one of those patients have taken Jack or Harleen...or both? What if Zsasz had taken his brother! It didn't even have to be about money...Zsasz could have taken Jack to torture him...just for fun. Or knowing Jack and his smart mouth, his brother could have simply gotten himself into trouble with any of them. And Harleen...Jervis had a love for blondes; he could easily have taken her. Bruce closed his eyes for a moment, trying to avoid thinking of all the possibilities, the 'what-ifs'. But his first thought was that his little brother was in trouble and needed him...Bruce let his feelings fall to the background, once again letting Batman take the lead. He couldn't let his personal feelings prevent him from doing his job.

“Do you know which patients or patients killed those people inside?” Batman asked, gazing toward the asylum and bringing his thoughts back to the issue at hand. He was positive Jack had nothing to do with the deaths inside, though a tiny part of himself said he couldn't be sure...not really, though Bruce refused to believe his brother was capable of murder. If he were to hazard a guess, he would place the blame on Zsasz, but he would reserve judgement until he had all the evidence. For a moment he felt a spike of guilt. If he hadn't put Jack in here, his brother might be safe at home right now with Harleen, but instead his brother could be anywhere...or even dead and it was all his fault. Bruce closed his eyes. He loved Jack. He did and the thought that his actions could have put his baby brother in more danger was killing him inside.
Batman brought his mind back to the current situation. He had just opened his mouth to ask what else they had found when a young officer yelled. “Gordon! We found two more bodies, but these ones...sir, they're a mess. In the morgue and it looks like there was a boarded up tunnel access down there.”

“Tunnel access?” Batman asked. Gordon motioned for Batman to follow him.

*

Soon the two men and a handful of police officers were down in the asylum's morgue. Two of the cabinets were opened, revealing the remains to two men, their faces and hands destroyed by what Batman guessed could only be acid. Someone had removed their teeth as well...tough job, making identification more difficult, though not impossible. A couple of police were searching the pockets of the corpses as the young cop beside them spoke.

“I wouldn't have found them if officer Jacobson hadn't been...well, messing around sir, and opened up one of the cabinets. After we found the one body, we began to search the other cabinets, which is how we found the second one sir.”

One of the cops held up a badge they had found on the body. “Sir! I think we found our missing orderly.”

Bat wrote watched Gordon walk over to speak with the young officer while he went to investigate the tunnel entrance, unclipping a flashlight from his belt. Another young officer named Renee Lucas had told Gordon just a moment before that someone had sloppily tried to cover the entrance into the tunnels, but they found it easily. Batman shone his light into the tunnel entrance, only partially paying attention to Officer Lucas who stood nearby. There were some foot prints in the dust of the tunnel entrance, and judging by the thickness of the dust, it had been weeks since anyone had bothered with the tunnel; there were several prints here, shuffling marks, but there were too many to determine the number of people who had used the tunnel, only that it had been used within the last three to four hours, give or take. Officer Lucas had reported that they had only walked in a short way —further damaging evidence Batman noted to himself—but it was oppressively dark without a flashlight and they weren't ready to go further inside. She had also speculated that the tunnel could simply be a dead end, that someone had made it look as if the escapees had gone down the tunnel only to have fled the asylum another way. Batman thought it was a good point, but he was fairly confident one or more of the inmates had fled the asylum down this tunnel...but who? How many? And was his brother among them?

Bruce thought about his brother. Would he have gone this way? Probably, if he were trying to sneak out of the asylum...or was taken forcefully. This would be the best way to get an unwilling hostage out without being seen. Bruce scowled, but let himself fall away so that Batman could work.

Batman studied what he could see of the tunnel; old brick, damp moss and a wet film covered everything. Officer Lucas was correct. Without a light, these tunnels would be hard to navigate if not impossible. Batman was only slightly familiar with the storm tunnel systems of old Gotham. He instead spent most of his time in the sewer tunnels pursuing any number of Gotham criminals...which made Bruce remember his brother's kidnapping. Bruce cursed, but swiftly regained control. Batman also knew the old Gotham subway, a favorite hide-out for many of Gotham's underworld patrons. However, if these tunnels were anything like those, without a map, whoever had gone down here would become hopelessly lost. Again his thoughts raced straight to his brother, imagining Jack lost down here.

“Damn it Bruce, stop!” he swore at himself mentally. “Focus.” But that was easier said than done.
Batman narrowed his eyes behind his mask while his heart beat hard inside his chest with real fear. What if Jack had come this way or had been taken this way? What if right now his little brother was trapped, lost, hurt, or worse? Bruce felt real fear for Jack. He swore to himself he would never let his own fears get in the way of helping his brother again. He should have been the one there for his brother instead of locking him away in this place. He doubted Jack would forgive him, doubted he could forgive himself—especially if something happened to either Jack or Harley—but then Bruce shook his head. No, if Jack had come this way, then his brother wouldn't have done it without some sort of plan. Jack was impulsive, careless and violent, but he definitely was not stupid and if Jack had been forced to come this way, his brother would have utilized some that genius level intellect; he would mark his passage if possible...if not, Jack would find a way out. He was smart and resourceful, Bruce had to believe that.

Batman turned back toward the asylum morgue just as Gordon stepped to his side. “So what’dya think, Batman?”

Batman glanced back into the tunnel with his light, shining it over the walls and ceiling. “I think someone came this way...not sure who, but I wouldn't send officers in there without a map.”

Gordon nodded. “I got someone trying to find us one now. Just got a call of a sighting of two women hitching a ride into the city, might be Barbara Kean and Tabitha Galavan based on the descriptions. Sending some officers to check it out.”

Batman nodded. “I'm going to see if I can pick up Zsasz's trail or Tetch; keep me informed about the tunnels and I'll let you know if I learn anything.”

Gordon nodded agreement. “What about Jack Wayne or Dr. Harleen Quinzel?”

Batman frowned. “I fear that either of them could be hostages for any of the escapees. Either one of them would be worth a fortune in ransom to Bruce Wayne. I'll contact Wayne, ask him to contact either of us if someone makes contact with him.”

Gordon nodded with a look at the tunnel and turned to say, “Good luck.”

But Batman was already gone.

The first thing that Jack was aware when he came to was of the blasted singing again. He could hear the high-pitched whine of the man's voice over the music that resonated in the small chamber. Jack squeezed his eyes shut, wishing for a gun or a knife so he could put his eardrums out of their misery. With a nearly silent sigh, Jack opened his eyes again. The ceiling above him had some heads dangling on hooks. Each head was missing large sections of skin from their faces. Jack contemplated the slowly rotating heads for a few moments. All of them had been scalped, a couple had their lips still while the rest did not. Jack curled his lip in disgust. There were also a couple of arms and a leg sprinkled throughout, all slowly spinning in the dim, flickering orange light of the carbide lamps that were set all throughout the room. The place smelled of sulfur, death, rot, old blood, and formaldehyde. Delightful, Jack thought to himself.

Jack struggled just a little, testing to see if he was tied down, which he was; his arms were strapped to a metal table by the wrists, his legs by his ankles, and another strap was around his chest, effectively holding him down to the cool metal table where he found himself. Jack figured he might be able to break free, but with his wounded shoulder, it would be difficult. He shivered uncontrollably for a moment. The chill of the damp room seemed to sink into his flesh and combined with his wounds, the chill settled deep in Jack's bones. He thought perhaps it was shock. Jack mentally groaned. His shirt was missing, but his arm had been re-bandaged, which meant that their strange little friend had undressed him. Fanfuckingtastic. Jack figured he should be happy that he at least still had his pants on.

Jack looked around slowly, not wanting the singer to realize he was awake. He could see Dale, slumped against the wall in a corner. By the way the big man's shoulders looked, thrust forward, and by the way Dale seemed to be leaning, Jack guessed that his hands were bound behind his back. Jack couldn't see Karlo anywhere from his limited view, but he did see the man's daughter on a bed, strapped down like Jack. She wasn't moving, her face slack. Jack could only assume the poor girl was still under...good for her, Jack thought, because this stinks.

Jack could see shadows moving on the wall as the man who had captured them swayed with the music that was playing while he worked on something just out of Jack's line of sight. The man's voice was only slightly muffled by the mask he wore.

The high-pitched off-key singing voice continued:

“Dear Prudence, won't you come out to play
Dear Prudence, greet the brand new day
The sun is up, the sky is blue
It's beautiful and so are you
Dear Prudence won't you come out and play...”

*

Jack lifted his head to try to get a better look at his surroundings, groaned loudly, and let his head drop back to smack against the metal of the table to which he was bound. “OM MY FUCKING GOD, you're murdering that song.”

The singing stopped abruptly. Jack lifted his head a little bit to see that the shadow had stopped moving, though the head seemed to be turned in his direction. Jack spoke up, unable to resist prodding his captor.

“Maybe try a different song. I really loved Lennon's “Happiness is a Warm Gun.” Gotta love all the sexual innuendo in that piece. Makes me think of my girl. Which you, my friend, are preventing me from getting to and that really annoys me. But back to music. Try that song. I'll sing a little for you.”

“Happiness is a warm gun Happiness bang, bang, shoot, shoot
Happiness is a warm gun, mama Happiness bang, bang, shoot, shoot
When I hold you in my arms Oo-oo oh yeah
And I feel my finger on your trigger Oo-oo oh yeah
I know nobody can do me no harm Oo-oo oh yeah...”

Jack sang with his soulful voice despite his current situation, putting a purr of want on the words that would have made Harley melt at his feet.

A moment later a face popped into view over Jack's face, startling Jack.
“Fuck!” Jack hissed.

“You have a pretty, pretty voice. You will make the most wonderful doll!!! I can hardly wait to get started on you. First I will need to replace that arm and shoulder. A hole just won't do! Fix damage to your pretty face...You must be the perfect doll!!”

The masked monster leaned in closer, his mouth almost touching Jack’s, his crazed eyes staring into Jack’s while the man leaned closer yet, as if he wanted to kiss Jack. The mask was even more hideous up close Jack thought, the putrid smell harsh and tangy on Jack’s tongue when he breathed. The masked man tilted his head. “Must be careful with you—don’t want to harm such beauty. Then you will be mine to play with forever!”

The man rubbed his gloved fingers over Jack’s cheek in a caress, then probed the wound on Jack’s jaw. Jack didn’t flinch, though the wound on his jaw burned and he felt the slime of old blood and other...things on Dollmaker’s gloved hand. Antibiotics and antivirals after getting out here. Yep, Jack thought. And a thorough, scalding shower. Maybe with lye soap, or bleach.

The man whispered. “Mustn’t replace too many parts, then you will no longer be the doll I want. But your eyes...such pretty eyes...must keep thoses...so pretty blue, could look at all day...and your lips...perfect pretty lips...” (In the background the music had changed to David Bowie singing “Oh You Pretty Thing.”) Jack could see Dollmaker licking his own dry lips as he studied Jack’s mouth.

The masked creature started to touch Jack’s lips, his eyes focused on Jack’s mouth with a hungry look when Jack spoke. “So...what do I call you?”

The man stopped just short of touching Jack’s lips, then tilted his masked head like a dog hearing a strange sound. “Me? Why...I’m the Dollmaker. I create beauty in this darkness!”

He threw his hands up to take in the entirety of the room. The man leaned back over Jack, his eyes wild behind the eyes of his flesh mask.

Jack smiled his most charming smile. “Why not.”

Dollmaker stared at the smile, then shivered with happiness before he hurried away. Jack could hear the sounds of things being scooted around and thrown. While Dollmaker was looking for something to show Jack, Jack heard a moan. He turned to see Dale moving just a little. Jack glanced back, as best he could, the way Dollmaker had gone. He couldn’t see the man so he hoped he wouldn’t hear Jack.

“Dale...Dale...”

The big man slowly lifted his head, blinked his eyes, and tried to focus. Jack hoped Dale didn’t have a concussion—that would make things a little more difficult. “Dale, come on buddy, need you to focus.”

Dale’s eyes finally shifted to focus on Jack. He started to move, but realized belatedly he was bound up and nearly toppled over.

“Shit!” Dale started to struggle, but Jack hissed. “Stop, settle down.”

Dale did as he was told, his eyes wandering around the room. There wasn’t a great deal he could see from where he was against the wall, shoved between two large bookshelves, but he could see the medical table that Jack was on...the bits and pieces of discarded flesh and bone on the floor, and the blood—dried blood and not-so-dried blood, pooled in sticky puddles. Dale pressed his lips together as he forced the urge to vomit down. Even orderlies working in an asylum like Arkham had their limits. He tried looking around for Karlo. He could see the body parts and other things that flickered in the light of the room, hanging from the ceiling, a few jars filled with milky fluid that had things floating inside. (He thanked god he couldn't see clearly what was floating inside the jars.) Then he saw a shape lying just at the edge of a pool of weak light. Dale turned to Jack, started to tell him that he thought he saw Karlo, but snapped his mouth shut just in time.

That was the moment that Dollmaker popped back into view over Jack, holding a small figure. Jack jerked back as much as he could when Dollmaker shoved the doll in his face. It looked like the body of a Barbie doll was the base of the thing that Dollmaker presented. Jack thought he could see glimpses of the beige plastic flesh, but that was the only thing “plastic” about the doll, the entirety of it was covered in dead skin, tanned to a leather-like consistency and sewn over the body of the Babrie doll like a suit with ragged, irregular stitches. Cloudy and rotting rat eyes had been sewn into the eye sockets, connected to the tissue around them and human hair had been sewn into the scalp. Dollmaker smiled behind his mask-like face, an unhinged child pleased with his work. Jack could just see hints of chapped lips along with yellow and blackened teeth behind the flesh mask Dollmaker wore, grinning when he held the doll up.

Jack gave Dollmaker a huge smile. “So, I'm guessing you're a big Ed Gein fangirl, eh?”

“This is my first pretty doll,” Dollmaker said, ignoring Jack's comment. “But now I make them bigger! Here, here I'll show you!” Dollmaker patted Jack on the chest excitedly and dropped the smaller doll on Jack's stomach before he disappeared.

The man vanished again in the bowels of the room.

Jack made a face and muttered. “Oh he's fun...” before he turned to Dale and whispered just loud enough for the bigger man to hear. “Do you see Karlo? His daughter is over here, but I don't see him.”

Dale, his skin pale, eyes dazed, his palor giving him an overall sickly appearance, looked around the poorly lit chamber from his position on the floor, but he couldn't see much. The shadows, where the light didn't reach, were thick, creating unpenetrable pools of darkness. After a full minute in which both men could hear Dollmaker muttering to himself, or singing along to the song that had started to play, his high voice warbled while he threw things around and created a loud clatter to accompany his vocals:

“Twist your head around

It's all around you

All is full of love

All around you...”

The singing of the morbid little man made everything seem more surreal to Dale, as if he were trapped in a horror movie. He shuddered, working his wrists while he tried to find Karlo, hoping the man wasn't dead already. Finally, Dale's eye had adjusted to the dim lighting of the room and he spotted a man shaped shadow nearby, halfway resting under one of the tables. Dale couldn't be a hundred percent certain it was actually Karlo and not a corpse, but he decided to err on the side of hope. The figure was lying on his side, his arms behind his back in such a way Dale assumed his hands were tied at the wrists like him. Karlo wasn't too far from Dale, just six or seven feet distant and hopefully only unconscious.

“Yes, I see him,” Dale replied, also whispering.
Jack opened his mouth to reply when suddenly Dollmaker was back leaning over Jack, his rotten tooth grin spread wide behind the mask.

“Look, look!” The man giggled excitedly before he thrust a dead face into Jack's field of vision. The head that Dollmaker held, his gloved fingers balled into the hair, (which Jack thought, if the little maniac wasn't careful and judging by the way the stitches were pulling, he might just yank the scalp clean off...) had once been a woman—maybe? Half the face looked female, but the other half was male, held together by crude stitching. The “doll” had two different colored eyes, the nose and the mouth, judging by the different color of the skin, might belong to two additional people, making the face an accumulation of four individuals. Dollmaker yanked the “doll” up showing Jack a male torso, with no lower half.

Jack smiled and muttered under his breath. “Guess you side on the Ed Gein idea of a woman's head on a stick, eh?”

“Work in progress!” Dollmaker announced. “You, you will be a new work...”

He dropped the “doll” which fell to the floor with a meaty sound, to lean over Jack again. “Such a pretty, pretty face. Such pretty lips.”

Dollmaker reached over to stroke Jack's face again. Jack did his best not to wince, but Dollmaker suddenly stood up. “Much work to do first!! Then make you into a doll I get to keep!! Forever!”

The man rushed over to where Karlo's daughter lay. Jack followed with his eyes, where Dollmaker picked up a brush and started to brush her hair while he sang to himself.

“I made a dress from a choir girl's skin
I wore it to church, the preacher said I'd sinned
Forgive me Father for my fashion crime
Your skin is so nice I'll use yours next time...”

*

Jack muttered to himself. “Charming.”

He pressed his teeth into his bottom lip. This was his chance. He started to move the wrists of both hands back and forth, trying to keep his movements subtle to prevent making any noise that might draw the doll-faced man back to him, while at the same time shifting his wrists back and forth with as much effort as he could. Judging by the feel of the straps around his wrists, he had been tied down with...Jack closed his eyes, focusing on the feel...leather...belts?

Jack twisted his right wrist, which faced away from Dollmaker, back and forth as hard and quickly as he could, yanking up with his shoulder every few seconds, doing the same with the left, though not as urgently since that was the side that faced Dollmaker.

He yanked up on his arm, hissing to himself when he felt the skin burn a little. “You got this Jack...”
a little giggle bubbled pass his lips as the ridiculousness of the situation settled over him along with Dollmaker's singing.

“Serial killers are people too
If you take away the voices I'm just like you
I'll hack you up and bury you in my yard

But why does making friends have to be so very hard?"

*

Jack moaned to himself. “Save me from badly singing psychopaths.”

Harley dashed down the hallway and stopped short, her bare feet skidding on the slick floor when she saw that the hall opened up into a large state-of-the-art kitchen. The hall continued down and pass the kitchen just a little more where it looked to divide into two hallways, one way leading left, the other right.

Harley dashed immediately into the kitchen looking for anything she could use as a weapon. The kitchen, like everything else in this house, was white with only a little light grey in the floor tiles and the silver stainless of the stove and the microwave to break up the blinding white. Everything else was a smooth, flat, shiny white. There were no handles on anything and nothing sat on the cabinets, no pots, nothing holding utensils, no baskets of fruit—nothing at all. The whole room didn't look as if anyone ever cooked or even ate in here.

Harley reached for one of the drawers, yanking on it with all her strength, but while she heard things inside shaking and clattering together, the damn thing wouldn't budge. She reached up for a cabinet and met with the same problem. Nothing would open.

Harley was muttering to herself in a panic. “No no no...”

Her head snapped around when she heard the monster coming down the hall singing in a soft whispery sing song voice.

“Hangin' in a field you'll never know I'm out here

I'm telling you people best beware

I creep into town, I'm hunting my prey

Back on my post by the crack of day

Lock your doors, watch your back, it's true

Turn around how do you do

I'm the scarecrow man, I'm the scarecrow man...

She saw the shadow creep across the white wall.

*

Harley's head shot up and her eyes widened as she watched the shadow crawl across the white wall, it's back hunched, the needle fingers clearly visible. The shadow swelled, taking up the whole of the wall. She could see the shadow of things swerving and crawling across the monster, its voice a sing song.

“Coming for you....coming ...coming...can't hide...I'll always find you.”
Harley whimpered. She looked around the kitchen frantically, but none of the cabinets or doors had visible ways of opening them. She took off, dashed into the hall hoping to get ahead of the monster chasing her, but no sooner had her bare feet hit the hallway than the Scarecrow loomed out at her. “Harleen!!”

Scarecrow lunged for her knocking Harley to the floor with one arm. She screamed and rolled to her back. She looked up into the Scarecrow’s face. All manner of bugs spilled from every orifice on its frightening face, swollen black bodies ready to burst crawled along the creature’s head, and the mouth of needle sharp teeth clashed together leaning closer, its breath smelling of sweet decay and dead things. At the same time, the Scarecrow leered over her while it’s sharp needled fingers seemed to grow in length as he came down at her, dripped with their deadly venom.

“Come to me Harleen!!” The Scarecrow hissed at her.

Harley screamed. “NO!!”

She thrust her hands out and pushed on the monster, trying to keep it away from her, but her hands seemed to melt into its chest only bringing her closer to it, allowing it to sink nearer.

Harley screamed again and called for her husband. “NOOO!! JACK!!”

Crane snarled; her calling for Jack angered him more than her struggling. He grabbed her by the top of her hair, the needles cutting across her scalp when he grabbed a large handful of her hair and hauled her head back before smashing her head against the floor.

“Stop STRUGGLING!!” Crane hissed, spittle flying from his lips.

Harley’s blue eyes were round with fear. The voice she heard was a mix of the voices that sparked fear in her throughout her life, the voice of her step-father mixed with the voice of her ex-boyfriend Guy twisted with the melodic sound of Crane’s own voice, creating something new and frightening. Harley’s breath came out in a shudder, but she wasn’t going to let this monster win. She had to get back to Jack. She brought her feet up and kicked the monster in the chest with as much force as she could muster; her feet landed squarely against the monster’s chest with an impact that choked off the monster’s air for a full breath, which was all she needed.

Scarecrow was caught off guard, flung backwards to land on his back knocking the air from his lungs. Harley rolled to her feet and took off down the hall, sliding when she turned left and slammed up against the wall, smashing into a copy of Hieronymus Bosch’s “The Garden of Earthly Delights,” which was framed in a heavy gilded frame. The entire side of her body hit the wall and the replica of the painting, the impact hard enough that her shoulder went numb for a few seconds, the painting tilting wildly before it crashed to the floor. A sharp tingle ran down the length of Harley’s arm to her fingertips and she gasped at the unexpected flash of pain. For just a moment, her feet slipped and she began to sink down the wall, but at the last second she caught herself and kept going.

The hall was extremely long with dark alcoves suggesting more doors. Down the hall she had just fled from, Harley could hear the Scarecrow laughing. “You can't escape me Harleen!! This is my house!! Built to my specifications! Just like H. H. Holmes, this is my domain!! There is nowhere for you to go Harleen that I can't find you!!”

Harley took off down the hall. She nearly ran past the first door, just barely stopping herself in time to turn around and grab the nob. She yanked on it and, to her surprise, the door opened.
Jack glanced over to Dollmaker, who was singing to Karlo's daughter in tandem with the song that was currently playing. Still, his high-pitched voice burned Jack's ears as he completely destroyed the song. Jack grimaced, but then he was forced to stifle a giggle when he overheard Dollmaker, in a sing-song voice whisper. “It puts the lotion on its skin.”

Then Jack heard other sounds, thick chopping sounds, followed by a wet tearing sound accompanied by Dollmaker's high pitched singing. For a moment everything that was happening was forgotten as Jack choked on his laugh thinking to himself...Great, he's trapped in Silence of the Lambs with a Bufflalo Bill cosplayer!!

Still struggling to hold back his laugh, Jack glanced back over to Dale who was clearly struggling with his bindings. The big man's shoulders were twisting with limited movement while Dale struggled, his face dripping with sweat while he concentrated, working to free his hands.

Jack leaned over as far as he could toward Dale and whispered. “Can you step through?”

Dale looked up. “What?”

Jack motioned with his head. “Step through, step through your arms?”

Dale frowned and shrugged. “I don't know.”

Dale stood up slowly, he gazed in the general direction of Dollmaker, while at the same time keeping his body hunched. Dollmaker was singing loudly again, the sounds of metal hitting metal could be heard, but neither man could see what the crazed man was doing. Dale lowered his arms as far as he could behind him, and tried to step back through the circle created by his tied wrists. He, like Jack, was bound with a leather belt. Dale had just started to ease one leg backwards, doing his best not to step on his own hands. Just as he started to try to step through the circle of his arms, Dale immediately started to pitch forward. Jack grimaced watching the big man, turning his head occasion ally to check on Dollmaker. Dale struggled for a tense moment to keep his balance, stumbled back against the wall and jammed his bound hands between his body and the cold, slimy bricks.

Dale made a noise of pain.

Jack turned back to Dale with a hissed warning. “Careful.”

Dale glanced over at Jack making a face at him. Jack just smiled in response. Dale took a breath, steadied his nerves to try again. Both Dale and Jack could hear Dollmaker talking to Karlo's daughter.

“There, there now, you are ready...I want your hair for my new doll, clip clip...your torso will make something pretty pretty...”

Dale eased his arms back down again, slowly, pressing his left shoulder against the wall behind him to help him balance while he struggled to step backwards without tripping himself up and falling on his face. He could feel the strain in his shoulders, the pull, pain shooting down both limbs, his balance wobbled as he squatted down at the same time. Dale hissed in pain, his muscles and tendons straining. He shuffled back a little then started to step, but when he brought his foot down, Dale squashed one of his fingers and toppled to the side, hitting one of the bookshelves which caused the jars on the shelves to clink together. Dale, one foot through, leaned heavily against the wall trying not to fall completely to the floor. He was pretty sure if he did, he wouldn't be able to get up. He leaned heavily against the stone wall and waited.
If Dollmaker heard the sounds of the glass jars clanking together or noticed the cloud of dust that went up from Dale hitting the shelves, he made no indication as his high-pitched voice wailed up on a high note.

“So knives out
Cut him up
Don't look down
Shove it in your mouth...!!”

Dale waited uncomfortably until the count of ten before he started to struggle again. His fingers brushed the floor as he eased his other foot back. Dale started to step back through the circle of his bound hands, thinking that he had it, then awkwardly, almost falling onto his side again, he tried to hop his other foot through. At the same time that he pushed his foot through, blinding pain hit him bringing tears immediately to his eyes. Dale brought his hands forward, but he stumbled back and slammed back against the cold stone on a hiss of intense pain, tearing rolling down his cheeks. He looked down at his hands; the left wrist looked odd. His hand seemed lower, not precisely aligned with his wrist. Dale felt a wave of nausea mixed with the pain.

Jack grinned. “Good job!”

Dale wobbled and flopped down, the pain and nausea threatened to make him vomit.

Jack whispered to his friend, “Get over here and get me free.”

Dale nodded, stood up, and making his way over to Jack in a slight daze.

This close Jack saw Dale's wrist. He could see that the wrist was already swelling and by the strange angle in how the wrist hung, it was clearly out of socket, but he said nothing, needing Dale to focus on his next task. There wasn't much he could do to help Dale until they were out of here. One task at a time Jack thought to himself. It wouldn't do them much good to worry about Dale's wrist only to end up skinned and mounted for one of Dollmaker's insane toys.

One handed, Dale worked to free the leather belt from around Jack's right wrist, at the same time Jack was yanking up his hand, trying to pull himself free as quickly as possible. Dale found his task to be difficult, using only his fingers from one hand. Each movement jostled his damaged wrist, but Dale bit down on the pain and focused his efforts on getting Jack free. Dale just barely loosened the belt when Jack yanked his hand free in a painful jerk which caused the gun wound on his shoulder to flare in agonizing pain and immediately start to bleed again.

Jack began to work on his other hand, rolling to his side within the confines of his bindings, his fingers yanking at the belt, while Dale worked to free the belt around Jack's middle. Once the torso belt was free, Jack sat up and started to work on freeing his feet as he hissed at Dale.

“Go get Karlo.”

Dale nodded hurrying over to the shadowy figured he hoped was Karlo.

Jack sat up, rushing to free his ankles when Dollmaker shrieked. “What???!! My pretty doll!! What are you doing?”

Jack turned at the sound of Dollmaker's voice to see the masked man racing toward him with a bonesaw in his hand. Jack yanked his last foot free and threw himself over the side of the autopsy table he had been laying on, hitting the floor on the side with his bullet wound. Pain vibrated through Jack's shoulder causing him to blow out his breath at the hot pain while, for just a second, his vision was framed in black, his head feeling that wavery lightheadedness that meant his body wanted him to pass out. Jack snarled, but his attention was swiftly diverted to Dollmaker.

Dollmaker came rushing around the table screeching. “Cut off your legs!! Cut off your legs!! Then you stay pretty!! My pretty!!”

Jack rolled onto his back just as the masked man lunged. Jack kicked, caught Dollmaker in the knee, and made the man stumble and yelp. Jack rolled onto his feet, spinning around just as Dollmaker lunged again to slash at him with the bonesaw.

Dollmaker shrieked. “Stop! Stop!”

The saw nicked Jack along the side, deep enough to sting, but not enough to stop him. Jack danced back, though the room didn't provide a lot of space to move. Dale grabbed Karlo with one hand and yanked the unconscious man back out of the way of the fight, struggling to get the ties off of Karlo's hands while at the same time he was pleading. “Come on man, wake up! Wake up!”

Dollmaker slashed a few more times at Jack. Jack avoided the saw's blade, then grabbed frantically behind him for something to use as a weapon. His hands wrapped around a jar that he threw at Dollmaker. The jar burst on impact with the Dollmaker's chest, splashing onto him a thick foul-smelling liquid—along with a hunk of flesh, maybe a heart, Jack couldn't be sure. The mound of dessicated flesh hit the floor with a wet meaty sound followed by Dollmaker's wail. “My pretty bits!! You spoiled my pretty bits!!”

Jack chuckled. “You really need to rethink your aesthetic, friend.”

Dollmaker howled as he slashed at Jack, but Jack was letting the adrenaline of the fight carry him, his pain forgotten; his only focus now was on killing the flesh-masked man. He allowed Dollmaker to come in close, weaving deftly as he avoided a couple of clumsy slashes that Dollmaker made with the bonesaw, then Jack struck. His fist shot out to strike the man in the face, across his upper cheekbone. Jack's fist connected solidly with Dollmaker's face, knocking his head to the side and making the psychotic stumble back with the force of the blow.

Dale glanced up at the fight, wincing in pain while he worked to free Karlo.

When Dollmaker stumbled, Jack lunged, coming in under the man's arms, using his wounded shoulder to strike Dollmaker in the diaphram. Jack lifted his opponent off his feet and threw him to the floor. The crazed man rolled with the throw, coming back up on his feet with surprising speed, but Jack was ready for him and kicked the man as soon as Dollmaker had his feet. Jack's foot struck the other man in the chest and sent him stumbling backwards again, hitting trays and tables filled with tools, other jars filled with noxious fluid and other unidentifiable “fleshy” bloody “things” crashed to the floor. One of the carbide lights fell over, the flame going out and casting more shadows about the room.

Jack's grin widened when he saw the plate of surgical tools that had twisted across one of the tables when Dollmaker stumbled back. Jack lunged, grabbing a hold of two scalpels, one for each hand.

“Now we're talking!” Jack laughed.

Dollmaker yelled. “PRETTY!”

With the bonesaw held over his head like an axe, Dollmaker charged. Jack chuckled and lashed out with one hand, smacking Dollmaker's arm up higher, rolling underneath Dollmaker's raised arm. He plunged one scalpel into and across Dollmaker's leg. He rolled away when Dollmaker let out a yell of frustration and pain and took a swipe at Jack. Jack ducked, using one of the scalpels to stab Dollmaker in the stomach, then rolled under the arm that held the saw. Dollmaker twisted with Jack, but Jack ducked and slammed the blade of one scalpel into Dollmaker's other thigh.

Dollmaker stumbled and dropped to one knee as the muscles of both of his legs quivered from the damage they had just taken. Jack took that opportunity to plunge the other scalpel into Dollmaker's back. Dollmaker let out a horrid little shriek, but he threw his head back catching Jack in the side of his head when he had bent over with the blade. Jack stumbled back, leaving the scalpel in Dollmaker's back. The masked man regained his feet, but Jack grabbed him and threw the flesh-masked man back against one of the tables, keeping his opponent off balance. He plunged the remaining scalpel into Dollmaker's chest with several hard thrusts and spurts of deep red blood.

With the fourth thrust, the scalpel became stuck just under Dollmaker's collarbone. The smaller man reached up and dragged the saw across Jack's forearm. Jack hissed in pain, stumbling backward. Dollmaker surged to his feet, yanking the blade out and lurched after Jack.

“I'll cut off all your limbs!! Then your pretty head!! Keep all the pretty parts of you!” The man tittered and giggled with glee.

Jack was sweating as he could feel his strength threatening to leave him, the sticky feel of fresh blood running down his arm and his jaw burning with pain. He was searching frantically for another weapon when he heard Dollmaker yell. Jack turned just as the maniac tried to catch him again with the saw. Jack blocked the strike, his forearm catching Dollmaker's forearm and preventing the man from landing his blow. Jack quickly followed with the elbow of his other arm, smashing the man in his flesh-masked face. Dollmaker stumbled back a few steps then lunged with the saw. Jack was ready to block, but Jack was ready to block, but proving surprisingly quick again, the man slid under Jack's guard, stepped alongside Jack, the saw slicing along Jack's abdomen. Jack gasped. The pain was sharp, probably not life threatening, but enough to make him gasp and grab his stomach. Dollmaker kicked Jack, sending him stumbling forward. He snapped a hand up to grab Jack by his wounded shoulder, his gloved hands digging into Jack's wound before he yanked him back and threw him off balance.

Jack crashed into another small table sending hundreds of items, jars, books, bits and pieces of human bodies, along with a number of miscellaneous “things” crashing to the floor. Jack fell back on his rear, his feet going out from under him on some sort of slippery slime that leaked from many broken jars, but he pushed himself to his feet just as Dollmaker rushed forward grinning.

“My pretty doll!!! I will love you always!” The bonesaw was raised over his head in a maniacal rush. Dollmaker lurched. Jack did the only thing he could; he brought both arms up blocking the overhead swing, while at the same time he grabbed at the man's arms struggling to prevent the bonesaw from coming down on him.

Dale, sweating and pale with pain and fear, had freed Karlo and was desperately trying to get the man awake.

“Come on, wake up!!” Dale hissed trying to shake the man with his one good hand. Pain lanced up Dale's arm from his dislocated wrist, threatening to take him under into unconsciousness each time he moved his hands. Both hands were still tied together, but Dale fought off the threat of unconsciousness knowing that if he did, that might be the end for him. Karlo's eyes snapped open.

*
Jack wrapped his hands around the arm that held the blade and spun his body around. Jack twisted his body, putting his back to Dollmaker, the man's arm over his left shoulder. Jack gritted his teeth, then with a grunt of effort, he yanked down and was rewarded with a satisfying pop and snap as Dollmaker's elbow either broke or was dislocated; either way, it forced the lunatic to drop the bonesaw.

Jack turned, trying to keep a hold on the man's arm, but Dollmaker shreiked, slamming his forehead into Jack's, disorienting Jack as bursts of light and dark exploded before Jack's eyes. He stumbled backwards away from Dollmaker, his back hitting a shelf of books painfully. Panting, Dollmaker grabbed up another weapon without looking, from a table, a bone chisel.

Karlo sat up, gasping for air, then groaned. “My daughter!! Where's my daughter?!”

Dale reached out, but Karlo smacked his bound hands away without really seeing the man. The smack wasn't exactly hard, but it wasn't light and pain shot up Dale's arm. This time, it was too much for the injured man. Dale's eyes fluttered and he fell over unconscious. Karlo barely spared him a look before he was on his feet searching the room for his daughter. He saw Wayne and a strange man in a creepy mask fighting, but then his eyes landed on his daughter. He could barely see her in the flickering light and shadows, but he was sure it was her. Karlo hurried to his feet, stepped over Dale and rushed to his daughter's side.

What he saw made him go very still, a chill settling over him. His daughter stared back with lidless eyes. Karlo began to shake. He reached down a shaking hand to touch her hair only to realize at the last moment her scalp was no longer attached and as he was closer now, he could see that one of her arms had been sawed off and her face was an angry, skinless red.

And then a moan of pain escaped his daughter's lipless mouth, but it was more than just a groan, it was followed by the word, “Daddy?”

*

“You are going to be my best doll yet, my masterpiece. Your face will be with me forever!” Dollmaker smiled. “I will love you forever.”

Jack giggled. “Oh darling, I'm flattered, really, but my face, lips and body already belongs to Harley Quinn and she isn't one to share.”

Jack fumbled behind him, his hand wrapping around a piece of broken glass. Dollmaker lunged forward, the bone chisel hitting Jack just under the hollow of his throat, smashing against the bone, but Jack brought his hand around that held the piece of broken glass, shoving it sideways into Dollmaker's throat. As glass sliced into flesh with a faint tearing sound, a wail of complete anguish went up and filled the chamber. Everyone turned at the sound.

Standing in the middle of the room was Karlo, who held his daughter in his arms, her face gone, stripped from her, leaving only the exposed muscle and tendons underneath. Her upper body had also been stripped of its flesh, one arm missing, and it was clear she was dead, her sightless eyes staring back with her mouth in a toothy grin though her lips were gone.

Karlo roared in anguish, his mouth becoming wider, melting open, his jaw drooping to his chest. His face oozed, clumps of flesh shifting color and sinking down his neck, melding with the rest of his flesh. His skin began to bubble, oozing and roiling, twisting and clumping in on itself. Large fleshy bubbles formed and popped as he began to gain size, his body expanding, ripping the clothing he wore as more flesh seemed to melt and expand, losing all semblance of anything human. The actor's skin turned into a creamy brown that melted and oozed, sliding down his torso to cover his daughter's body. Karlo's roar was a mix of his physical and mental pain, while he dropped to his knees as he continued to melt.

Dollmaker and Jack seemed frozen in mid-fight watching the spectacle before them.

Karlo's cries became strange choking, gurgling sounds, his body now losing mass, melting. His daughter's body was completely lost in the amount of goo from Karlo's melting form. Together, both Karlo and his daughter melted and oozed away until there was nothing left.

Jack blanched. “Ew.”

Then he shoved the glass shard deeper into Dollmaker's throat. Dollmaker let go of the bone chisel to reach out and caress Jack's face, his voice a moan. “You were so pretty...”

The man jerked and coughed, bloody spittle spraying Jack in the face.

Jack watched the man's body drop to the floor, his blue eyes narrowed.

“I really hate Dr. Crane and his friends.”

Jack took a deep breath through his nose, then let it out slowly. He forced himself to smile and turned.

*

Harley fell into the room, lights clicking on automatically and the heavy door swinging shut behind her. She landed on all fours, but she scurried to her feet looking around frantically for anything she could use against the monster chasing her. As she stood up, she stopped in shock as the interior of the room sunk in. This room wasn't a bedroom or a study; rather, it was more like a...shrine?

The walls, unlike the walls of the rooms outside, were painted grey. The lighting was dim, but situated around the room in order to highlight the pieces of art that dominated the room. The room was clearly dedicated to a Greco-Roman theme while each piece illuminated by the lights was from that era or inspired by that time period. Harley frowned as information she forgot she had, buried along with other memories of an art history class she had taken in college, came to the forefront of her mind. The images depicted Deimos and Phobos, the Greek gods of fear and panic. Deimos was the god of fear and dread, Phobos, panic and flight. Throughout the room were images of the two gods, from a modern painting showing two beautiful young men embracing, their features identical, both fair-haired handsome young men dressed in white togas; to an ancient marble sculpture of the two young men, again depicted as beautiful men; to a small vase that showed Phobos with the head of a lion fighting alongside his brother. In one corner of the room was a large ancient vase, lit from below. The terra cotta vase had an image in black and red that depicted Ares driving a chariot, his sons, Deimos and Phobos driving their chariots alongside their father heading into battle.

There were other images throughout the room such as a large marble sculpture that resembled an altar. Here the two gods were depicted fighting a large serpent. Along one wall was a tiled Greco-Roman mosaic of the god Phobos with his lions head holding up a spear and threatening a group of armed men. Next to this work of art was another, a vertical painting in the Greco-Roman style, depicting the two brothers surrounded by armed men, the group sweeping into battle with a much larger foe. Here and there throughout the room were large, authentic looking Roman shields with images of Phobos depicted on them while others contained images of Deimos and their father Ares. Harley stepped further into the room and her impression of a shrine became even stronger when she saw a shield lying on the floor.

The large black shield was sitting on the floor between two large marble Roman columns. The large shield was set in such a way that it resembled a bowl and in it Harley could see something liquid, dark; the lights made the surface of the liquid shine. She couldn't be sure without going over and touching it, but it looked like blood...the light reflected off the surface of the liquid, but in a thick, heavy way, as if the liquid was pulling that light down within it.

Harley felt slightly ill. She grabbed hold of a pedestal that held a large Roman vase, her vision wavering, the room spinning, each of the figures her eyes passed over seemed to move and shift, pulling themselves free from the confines of their individual works of art, turning to stare at her with hateful eyes The battle scenes seemed to come to life slowly as she watched, the figures moving stiffly, yet to her fear addled brain, they were indeed moving.

Harley swallowed down her scream, her eyes searching frantically for a weapon. She could hear the monster behind her calling for her.

“There is no place to go Harleen, no place at all. Just give in. Be mine.” The creature's voice was soft, caressing, but that only made her skin crawl. For a second, fear and despair threatened to overwhelm her. There really was no place for her to go; she was alone, lost without Jack. She wanted Jack so desperately that her heart ached, her body yearned for him. And she was terrified. She wanted him beside her, to help her fight the monster. But she knew she was going to have to do it herself and fight her way back to him...she was just scared that she wasn't strong enough.

Harley blinked back tears and searched around for something to use as a weapon, but the room contained little except for artwork. She was considering leaving the room and trying another room...there had been at least a few more doors she had glimpsed before she had come through this one...another one had to open, but then she heard what sounded to her like the scrape of nails down a chalkboard against the door she had come through. The sound made her teeth chatter and her skin crawl...

“Come out, come out.”

Harley dashed further into the room, looking for something, anything, still hoping for a weapon, a means of escape, or a way to call for help. She had moved out near the “altar” when she saw a shadow on the floor. She missed it at first, but when she started to walk over the area, she felt the seam of the door beneath her bare feet, a slight indentation in the smooth floor that shouldn't have been there. She walked backwards a couple of steps to make sure she had actually felt something, then dropped down to examine the floor. She frowned and blinked. The way the light shone down, creating deeper shadows along what looked like a...Yes, she thought, a seam? It almost looked as if there was a door set into the floor just in front of the bloody shield. She used her bare foot to feel the floor, then her fingertip...yes there was a slight indentation. Harley glanced back toward the door she had used to enter the room. She could hear the monster talking to her.

Trembling, Harley dropped to her hands and knees and began to run her fingers along the perceived door. Her heart was hammering hard, painfully against her breastbone as her fingers ran over the seam. There was only the slightest divet in the floor, just enough for her to insert her middle finger and lift. She pushed the door up until it clicked on a hinge, propped open to reveal a trap door that descended into darkness.
Harley didn't waste any time deciding whether she should go down or not. She turned and lowered a leg down, her bare foot hanging in space for a few seconds just as she heard the door across the room begin to creak open. Her foot touched something that felt like a ladder rung. Panicking, she swung her other leg down, caught the rung, then as carefully as her panic-stricken mind would allow, she dropped into the darkness reaching for the trap door and pulling it as quietly as she could down on herself, plunging her once again into complete darkness.

Crane entered his shrine with a curse on his lips. He should not have left this room unlocked...an unacceptable slip on his part. He gazed around the room looking for Harleen, his eyes caressing over the images. It wasn't that he exactly worshipped the gods of terror and flight, but he did respect them, respected what they represented. Modern man didn't respect fear enough...and that was why he would be able to mold the world using fear. First Gotham, then who knew?! Fear would be his to command and thus people would flock to him out of fear. Crane chuckled, ah the dreams he had...but for now he must focus on Harleen, his partner in all this; once he had her “reprogrammed” properly. He had pumped her with enough fear toxin that it should completely shatter her mind, giving him a clean slate to work with, but if he didn't get to her soon, he ran the risk of her dying on him. The mind could only take so much before it completely shut down and that would simply ruin his plans.

However, he had to admit he was proud of Harleen. She was strong—surprisingly strong—her mind still fighting his toxin. He admired her. When he did finally find her breaking point and started to rebuild her, she would be glorious.

Crane peered through the eye slits of his mask. There wasn't anywhere for her to hide in here, so why wasn't he seeing her? She wasn't small enough or thin enough to hide behind any of the displays. For a moment he considered that maybe she hadn't actually entered this room, he didn't see any sign of her...Crane frowned turning back around thinking that maybe he had simply missed her running down the hall when he stopped short, slowly turning back around .

“The lab,” he said in a whisper. “You sly, smart girl.” Definitely strong and impressive.

*

Harley held on tightly to the ladder that led down into who knew what...all she could see was darkness, and heard sounds...she couldn't decipher what the sounds were, but the fear toxin had her thinking of all sorts of monstrous creatures. Her heart was beating hard enough that her chest hurt. Her whole body was shaking, vibrating with fear, and a thin sheen of perspiration had broken out on her face and arms. What she wouldn't give for a hefty dose of valium right about now, she thought. She held onto the rings of the ladder, her eyes screwed shut doing her best to fight through the overpowering fear. The urge to scream was so strong that when she sucked in a breath, the fear threatened to pour out of her in a long loud wail. She leaned her head forward against one of the ladder's rungs, tears dropping from under her lashes.

Out loud she whispered to herself. “Jack...I love you Jack.”

Thinking about her lover, his laugh, some terrible joke he would make that would irritate whoever was bothering Jack...all that made her smile. Jack wouldn't let the fear overtake him, he would laugh in its face. She just had to survive, she told herself...Harley Quinn would survive this...for herself and for Jack.

Harley took a steadying breath. She knew she couldn't go back up into the room above, so she slowly made her way down the ladder, forced to rely solely on her tactile senses. She took a few more deep breaths, along with several tense moments of simply holding on tightly to the ladder, before she lowered herself down the ladder as carefully as she could in the dark. Harley ignored the shuffling and other horrid sounds she heard in the room behind her; she simply focused on finding the next rung. Then suddenly, her bare foot touched the icy cold floor of a room, a basement her mind imagined. She eased herself down from the ladder, turning slowly so that she could press her back up against the ladder, the solid feel of it behind her made her feel less adrift in the darkness.

Harley didn't move, trying to allow her eyes to adjust to the darkness, but the fear toxin made shadows appear in the thick, inky blackness, large sections of shadow seemed to separate and move. Harley closed her eyes again hissing at herself, tears slowly rolling down her cheeks.

"Not real. It's not real."

She reached out to the sides, her right hand touching the smooth surface of a wall. Her fingers moved along the cool surface of the wall, grasping for a switch—she knew there had to be a light switch. She tried to ignore the moving shadows by keeping her eyes closed until she felt a switch. Immediately she flicked it up and was rewarded with a low hum, followed a few seconds later by the click of fluorescent lights that flickered to life.

Harley opened her eyes as the fluorescent lights began to light up the room. Harley blinked bringing up her hand to shield her eyes, watching the room slowly come alight. The room was clearly a lab of some sort. It was filled to the brim with equipment. There were three long lab tables with the required multiple and variously shaped glass beakers, bunsen burners, tubes, chemplates, microscopes and stereomicroscopes that all mad scientists required, she thought; along with hundreds of other bits and pieces of laboratory equipment that Harley had no clue what exactly they were or what they were used for, but each piece looked important.

She stepped further into the room slowly, her heart pumping quickly in fear, her fight or flight response making her as jumpy as a rabbit. A fluorescent green liquid moved through the vast tubes, bubbling and making low hisses while the substance dripped into glass beakers. There were plastic replicas of DNA strands, several skeletons and an old fashion flip chalk board with hundreds of mathematical formulae scribbled on its surface with unintelligable notes jotted down in corners of the board. Along one wall she could see X-rays on display as well as photographs, some of them gruesome, reminding Harley of murder scenes in content and the way the photos were taken, all in black and white. As her eyes roamed the room Harley saw jars along one side, all clearly organized, much like the art work on the floors above, labeled and sorted with perfect precision. When Harley stepped closer to the row of jars, she could see that there was something floating in each jar. Her eyes dropped to the labels that read: pituitary gland and adrenal gland...there were dozens of jars each containing a tissue sample, all of them either pituitary or adrenal glands.

Harley turned to look back at the lab, searching for a weapon when she heard the soft shuffling squeaks and soft moans. The sounds made her jump, shuddering with fear. She wanted so much to run back up the ladder, but the bigger monster was up there. She stopped moving, took in a shaking breath, holding her hands in tight fists at her sides trying to calm her heart. It felt like she was going to have a heart attack. After a couple of deep breaths Harley moved carefully toward the sound despite her hammering heart and palsy like shaking. She needed to know what was making the sounds, fear of the unknown was worse than knowing, she reasoned. She stepped carefully, the cold from the floor transferred up her legs to her torso making her tremble as the cold seeped into her.

She moved slowly until she found the source of the sounds. Along one wall she found several cages, rows of them with cages on the bottom topped with cages that reached nearly to the ceiling of the basement lab. Each cage held one or two animals—at least Harley thought they were animals. Her vision continued to shift...sometimes they were animals, then in the next second they were monsters, twisted and deformed. She saw plump white rats, rabbits and even some small monkeys. Some had little strange contraptions on their heads, others had clearly had some sort of surgery, missing eyes, missing limbs, tubes in them pumping green glowing liquid into their little bodies. When she forced herself to approach the cages, the animals scurried away into the dark corners of their cages making horrible keening noises or chittering or squeaking in terror. She let out a little shriek and backed away. She stumbled into one of the chemistry sets, hitting a couple of beakers with her hands that sent them crashing to the ground along with rows of syringes, filled with the orange toxic liquid inside. All of it came crashing to the floor.

*

Above, Crane had reached for the trap door when he heard the sound of glass shattering. He stopped, having just begun to lift the lid of the trap door, going very still and listening. He was sure he heard a muffled scream or a gasp. He smiled. She was down there...and there was no place else for her to escape to except back up the ladder...he had her...and maybe her finding his lab wasn't such a bad thing after all.

*

Harley fumbled around and stumbled; the fear toxin made everything waver. The caged animals, some of them transforming into beasts as she watched, grew larger and screeched at her. Harley cried out bringing her hands up to clamp over her mouth, her wide eyes immediately shifting to the trap door.

That was the moment she heard the thump of a door. Then she heard the monster.

“Harleen...Harleen my dear...there's no place for you to run anymore...why not just give in?”

Harley watched in horror as the monstrous scarecrow started to come down the ladder. She looked around frantically for anything she could use as a weapon and a place to hide. The only thing she saw was the shattered glass of the beaker she had broken. She quickly crouched down, grabbing the largest piece of broken glass, cutting her palm on it, but she didn't care. She wrapped her hand around the glass and ducked down under one of the lab tables, her other hand over her mouth, tears rolling down her cheeks as she had nowhere left to run and watched the monster come for her.
Devil's Trill Sonata

Harley scrambled under a table with the bloody piece of glass clutched tightly in her shaking hand. A couple of the syringes filled with the putrid liquid had fallen to the floor. One rolled toward her, then another. Harley watched them coming for her as if the vials were homing in on her, rolling slowly across the cool stone texture of the floor to bump against her toes. It took everything in Harley not to jump up with a shriek and throw herself away from the syringes, though she jerked slightly when the cold glass touched her bare toes. She couldn't be sure if it was real or not, but it felt almost as if the cold, putrid liquid inside was reaching toward her through the glass, sending a chill through her entire body. Harley stared down at it, watching the liquid reaching for her, but then her attention was drawn to the sounds of something moving in the shadows.

She leaned out as far as she dared from her hiding place to see the shadow of the monster descending into the lab.

*Scarecrow crawled slowly down the ladder, easing his feet down to the floor silently when he came to the last rung. The small eye slits in the mask made quick navigation hard in this heavy darkness, despite the flourescent lights, but Crane knew his lab like the back of his hand. He gazed around; nothing looked to have been touched, everything in its place. He could hear the animals in the cages, the whines and small shrieks of terror. He smiled slowly. Their sounds of fear gave him great pleasure, he had worked hard to cultivate that response. Crane continued to scan the room for her. The lab was quite large, this being only the first or three rooms that ran under his home. Each room was connected to this main room by hidden doors; that way if even anyone were to stumble upon his lab, they would only see a small part of what he was working on, though this room held many important aspects of his work. Unless Harleen had stumbled upon one of these doors, she was effectively trapped in this room. It was only a matter of time before he found her.

But, as Crane scanned the lab, he didn't see anything, which only meant she was hiding, and hiding well at the moment. There was no place to go, as far as she knew, except through the trapdoor.

Crane walked slowly, carefully, silently. He smiled and whispered, his voice a soothing sing-song as he turned his head one way then another, scanning for the tiniest sign of her presence.

“There is no place to run Harleen. You've run out of options. It would be so much easier if you just came to me instead of fighting it.”

He stepped carefully, each footfall pressed to the floor silently. “Just think of what I'm offering you...power, to never be afraid again, to be free Harleen. Together we could show Gotham what fear really is.”

Crane stopped at the first lab table, his hand lying on the table's surface near some of his equipment. He drummed his fingers lightly, the tips of the needles at the ends of his fingers clicked against the table. He glanced at the chemical moving slowly, like blood pumping through a body, watching the orange toxin, mesmerized by his own achievement. It really was beautiful. He had spent years working on it, testing it, distilling, mixing, extracting glands from patients, both animal and human, in order to develop the perfect serum. Testing it over and over on numerous human subjects, watching and cataloging with intricate detail his results. Crane touched his formula lovingly. It was perfection, his legacy, but if all came to fruition as he planned, then Dr. Quinzel would bear him another legacy, a child.
That was the ultimate goal with all of this, not only to create the perfect compliment to himself with her, but to have her carry on his creation...someone who was a perfect blend of the two of them, their intellect mixed with the toxin. Crane smiled, just imagining what this child would be like...who he would give Gotham to as a gift, his birthright—it would be perfect Crane thought. He was brought out of his musings when he heard a light sound, really barely a sound at all, more like a shift in the air than an actual noise. His head snapped around searching the shadows for the source. The animals were making shuffling noises accompanied by chattering and squeaks; they were clearly aware of his presence and quite possibly hers as well. Crane narrowed his eyes behind his mask. There were only so many places she could hide.

“Come out Harleen. Let us stop with this game. You are not going to win, you can't escape me,” Crane cooed. “I will set you on a pedestal, my Lady Crow, my equal. I will give you all of Gotham!! So come Harleen, come to me, tell me what you are scared of?!”

Crane walked slowly. He was in no hurry. Now that he had Harleen here, in his private abode where he controlled the environment...everything, she would not sleep, would not eat or drink unless he allowed it. Another dose of the toxin and she should be more easily controlled; the fear should theoretically, break her mind and from there the rest should be easy for a brilliant mind like his. Daily doses of the toxin, re-teaching her, molding her...until her fear broke her. And then she would fear nothing; she would be his. Crane really was looking forward to it all, playing with her. But right now he had to focus on breaking her mind, while the rest would come in time.

He walked over carefully to a corner of the room and smiled, pleased, when he saw what was still there, leaning against the corner wall—his hand sickle. For a moment Crane crouched, simply reached out and touched it, stroking the object with the very tips of his fingers over the wood surface of the sickle's handle, a flood of memories returning to him when his fingers touched the wood. His father. That was where all this began, his father, and the experiments in fear...the cellar...the clank of metal against metal, the wicked curve of the sickles hanging from the ceiling of the cellar, something made them move, the metal tapping against metal, the eerie sound had filled him with dread when he was a child, trapped in the cellar alone and pumped full of his father's experimental fear drug. The shadows were filled with sinister sounds and creatures he couldn't see in the darkness. Now he used the tool as a weapon; it had become part of his new persona, and it was a reminder...Crane shook away the memories, grasped the handle of the sickle before he stood up.

Under the table Harley shivered, her hand clutched so tightly around the shard of glass that it was cutting deeply into her palm, but she seemed not to notice. Her arm was shaking uncontrollably, her entire body poised to spring into action, her breath coming to her in shuddering gasps. She had never been so terrified as she was at this moment. She didn't notice the drops of blood falling onto the floor at her feet, creating small “plops” of sound, the blood splashing across her bare feet and staining her skin red. Harley held her free hand still pressed against her mouth to stop herself from making noises the monster might detect. Her fingers pressed hard enough across her lips and cheeks that she was going to leave bruises. Harley knew she needed a way to distract the monster, somewhere to focus its attention... that might give her enough time to race for the ladder leading out of here and hopefully to Jack. Harley shook for a moment as fresh tears sprang to her eyes at the thought of Jack and a rising fear. What if Crane had hurt him...killed him...No. No, she told herself. She wasn't going to focus on that. Jack was at the asylum waiting for her. She would get out of here, away from the monster and back to Jack. That had to be her focus or she would never be able to fight back, not if she thought something had happened to Jack.

She peered around the dimly lit room looking for something, anything she could use, when her eyes landed on one of the larger cages set on the floor with smaller cages on top of it. She hadn't noticed the bigger cage before, but now that it had her attention, she saw movement in the shadows of the cage, then something shifted closer to the bars. Harley swallowed a squeak of fright as the dog-like muzzle, powerful jaws, thick canines, and close set eyes of a baboon seemed to form from the shadows of the cage, coming into focus for a moment before the face morphed and twisted before her eyes. Its back hunched, the mouth widened filled with row upon row of wickedly fanged teeth.
The clawed hands that wrapped around the bars were gigantic, the claws long and wicked looking.
The thing on the other side of the bars was terrifying, but even as Harley's heart pounded painfully against her chest, the sight of the monster gave Harley an idea.

Deep in the dimly lit room of the Dollmaker's abode, Jack made his way over to Dale and dropped down weakly to his knees in order to shake the big man's shoulder. Jack's own shoulder was soaked in blood which had run down the front of his shirt; the pain had moved beyond that of burning pain, to a intense stabbing pain. A pain that was now consuming his attention along with all the numerous deep cuts and nicks that he didn't even notice; all of the wounds that he had suffered during his fight with Dollmaker combined into a ball of constant aગañaony, all of them bleeding, all of them burning and all of them doing their best to yank him into darkness. Which only served to annoy Jack. He would use the pain, he would not give in to it. He fought back the pain and the encroaching unconsciousness, to shake Dale again, snarling at the large man.

“Hey, Dale! Come on darling I can't carry you. You need to get to your feet or I might just have to leave you behind.”

Dale groaned, his eyes fluttering. “Wha—what happened?”

The big man sat up slowly clearly dazed, pale and wobbling a little, his head swimming as he struggled to focus. Dale looked around the room in confusion for a second wondering if he was still asleep, lost in a nightmare. He saw the Dollmaker laying on his back and staring up at the ceiling, a bloody piece of glass sticking out of the side of the man's neck, but then the image of a melting Karlo came rushing back to Dale's conscious mind causing the blood to drain from his face as he realized this wasn't a dream, but brutal reality.

“Wha...where's Karlo?” Dale asked struggling to stand. Jack stood up, looking around the room.

Jack frowned. “Well, not really clear on that sweetheart, but I have a feeling whatever it was that very thing that made our friend such a...unique actor, that may have...well...released under the pressure of finding his daughter dead. I can only describe what happened to Karlo as...disgusting.”
Jack grimaced at the memory, sticking his tongue before he continued.

“Anyway my friend, we need to get out of here and as much as I'm learning to love you big guy, I'm in no condition to carry you out of here. So, can you get to your feet sweetheart?”

Dale nodded slightly.

Dale let Jack wrap his good arm around his waist. Jack did his best to help lift the big man up to his feet. Once Dale was standing he felt better, though he now noticed that Jack had additional wounds.

Dale grimaced. “Are you all right?”

Jack grinned. “I'm alive which is more than Dollmaker and his toys can say.” Jack chuckled then frowned at Dale. “Do you still have your phone?”

Dale frowned in response his eyes going wide. “Shit!”
He quickly stood up straight, letting go of Jack. He began patting himself down with his one good hand as he felt around for his phone, but he felt nothing.

Dale looked slightly panicked. “I don't feel it.”

Jack cursed turning from Dale, holding his wounded arm against his stomach to face the room. “Fantastic.”

Dale muttered walking over and began to pick his way through the numerous disgusting objects on one of the tables. “It has to be around here somewhere...”

Dale turned back around to search the space where Dollmaker had him tied up; he had just started to squat down and search, when he saw sitting on a shelf, pressed between two jars of what looked to be eyeballs, was Dale’s phone. Dale made a slight yelp of pleasure grabbing up the phone (purposely ignoring the floating eyes that were staring at him). He pressed a button on the phone and with a sigh of relief he saw the phone come to life.

“Great, maybe things will start looking up.” Jack said with a huge smile as the two men looked down at the map.

The flakes were gathering density, coming down fuller and in greater quantity. Alex was standing outside the SUV, the collar of his coat up, smoking angrily on a cigarette. Jack should have been here by now. Alex and the rest had been here for hours. He hated to admit how worried he was becoming. Frost was clearly upset but he was remaining a lot calmer than Alex, though it was clear that Sandra was worried sick judging by the way she kept scrolling nervously through her phone.

Alex sighed taking a deep pull on the cigarette. He just knew his friend was in trouble, he just didn’t have any idea what to do about it, how he could help; waiting here, doing nothing just wasn’t Alex’s style. Going into the tunnels after him was stupid, but standing out here in the freezing darkness watching the few drops of rain turned to snow, wasn’t helping his mood either; Alex just took a long pull on the cigarette, wishing he had brought his cigars instead and maybe a bottle of tequila and waited. It was all he could do for now.

A few seconds later, Alice slipped out of the SUV. She pulled her scarf up over her mouth and nose, while yanking an adorable pink cap with a pompom on the top down over her ears against the chill. She went to stand beside Alex, watching the snowfall become heavier.

Alex glanced over at her, the snowflakes were sticking to her eyelashes and her eyebrows. He smiled. She looked adorable. “What the fuck you doing?” he asked. “It's fucking cold and you don't smoke.”

“Coming out here to make sure you're okay,” Alice responded with a smile, leaning against his shoulder. She wrapped her arms around his middle.

“Not used to seeing you this upset Alex.” she said softly. “Jack and Harley really mean a lot to you.”

Alex smiled tossing his cigarette to the ground, crushed it with the toe of his boot before he put his one arm around her shoulders. “Well, like I said, Jack saved my fucking life. And he’s one of the few fucking friends I have, someone I trust. And Harley? I trust her like I trust Jack. The two of them together made me think that 'Hey! Maybe I can find love too' and next thing I fucking know, here you are, all because I was hanging out with them.” Alex gave her a smile and a wink which had Alice giggling before he continued.
“But yeah, Jack and Harley, they're fucking special. Next to you Alice, they're the only fucking people I trust. I don't trust a lot of fucking people.”

Alice smiled kissing his cheek. “I understand Alex.”

Alex smiled. “Thanks.” He shrugged. “Plus, ya know...what his brother did to them, it ain't fucking right.”

“It's okay. You don't have to say anymore.” Alice kissed the side of his mouth.

Alex smiled at her and tightened his grip around her shoulders.

They were both quiet, just looking up at the once clear Gotham night turn thick and heavy with cloud cover, watching the flakes falling in increasing numbers when Alice whispered.

“We're going to get them both. Don't worry,” she said leaning her head on his shoulder.

Alex nodded. “I'm not fucking worried.”

Alice chuckled. “You're a fucking liar.”

Alex snorted on a laugh, especially to hear his girlfriend curse; Alice never cursed. He smiled and tightened his hold on Alice glancing up at the flakes that were coming down thicker still.

“If the snow keeps up we're all going to be fucking stuck in this fucking SUV until fucking spring.”

Alice laughed at Alex's assessment.

Batman stepped back into the tunnel and clicked on his light. He stood there for a moment, running his light along the brick of the old tunnel. Except for the sighting of the two women, no one had seen the other escaped patients, so either they had left through these tunnels or they were out in Gotham already having somehow slipped away without anyone noticing, but Batman was willing to bet they had come through here. Either way someone needed to check these tunnels out and it was probably best that it be him. He was at least equipped with the tech to get him out if he became lost.

Batman stepped into the storm tunnels, shining his light carefully, looking for any clues that would tell him who might have come this way and which direction they might have taken. Alfred had only moments ago sent a map which Batman downloaded to his visor and was currently examining on the holographic display in front of his eyes. It wasn't much of a help, but it would have to do. It was the best that Alfred could do on such short notice. The storm tunnels crossed over the sewer tunnels as well as the remains of the old and abandoned subways. The tunnels became a confusing mess of interconnected pathways that created a Minotaur-like labyrinth. Batman could only hope an actual monster wasn't waiting for him at the center. A small voice inside hoped his brother hadn't been taken this way or if he had that somehow he found his way out again. Bruce closed his eyes for a second, taking a steadying breath.

As he walked carefully, doing his best to follow a trail that the maps showed him, Batman contemplated that there were a million and one ways that someone could become lost down here. For a moment Bruce felt that cold chill race up his spine and through his veins. The image of Jack, dead...or worse, lost, in these tunnels came to him. And what if something had happened to Harleen. Jack...he didn't think his brother could handle her loss. No, Bruce was sure that losing Harleen would break his little brother completely. Then he worried about Alfred. In the last several weeks since Jack and Harleen's admittance to Arkham, he had seen the old butler age dramatically. The stress had been brutal, enough that Bruce had to wonder, question himself about his choices. That was yet another reason he needed to find them, he needed a chance to set this straight...to help Jack and Harleen properly. Maybe his aunt had been correct.

He squeezed his eyes shut, shoved his worries aside yet again, and let Batman take over, let the caped crusader calm his nerves. He would find them. He had to find them. There was no other choice.

Gordon had watched him step into the tunnels reluctantly. He couldn't authorize sending his people down here without some assurance that they wouldn't become lost, but he couldn't stop Batman. It had been plain on Gordon's face when Batman had stepped away that he wanted to stop him, but he knew his ally well enough that he didn't try to hold Batman back. And he had to admit, the tunnels needed to be searched. Gordon had simply told Batman what channel he could reach Gordon on his walkie and that he hoped Batman would keep him informed. Batman had simply nodded.

Batman took a deep breath letting his worry as Bruce Wayne and Gordon's concerns, fade away to the background, this time for good. He instead turned his mind to solving the task at hand...which was to follow the clues that had led him down here and to hopefully rescue Jack Wayne and Dr. Harleen Quinzel.

Harley crept slowly from her hiding spot. It was difficult to move, staying crouched, the glass in her hand leaving a bloody trail as she slipped closer to the cage. She didn't want to approach the cage; the creature inside kept making loud huffing and snarling noises. It had retreated to the back of the cage so that she couldn't see it among the shadows that sat in the back of its prison, which only made the experience worse. Despite the fact that she already had seen the monster, not seeing it somehow made the noises coming from the cage more terrifying.

She was finally close enough to reach out. The cage had a simple slide and bolt sort of mechanism. Lucky for her, Harley thought. Her fingertips had just brushed against the cage when she saw the creature inside. It's eyes glowed red in the shadows at the back of the cage and its angry eyes bored into hers. She snatched her hand back from the cage, but the monster did nothing. It didn't try to grab her or rush the front of the cage...at least not yet. Harley glanced from the slide lock to the monster, but the glowing red eyes were gone. Harley made a startled hiss as she sucked in her breath in surprise.

She bit down on her bottom lip and reached out again, her fingers trembling. She grabbed the bolt and slid it to the side to release the cage door when she heard a voice behind her.

"There you are my precious."

Harley spun up on the toes of her feet, stumbling back onto her rear, her back slamming up against the cage door which made the whole tower of them shake and set the creatures inside to wailing and screaming. The hairy monster behind her screeched, but Harley's attention was on the monster in front of her. She looked up to see that the creature had changed. Not only had it grown larger in size, seeming to block out the little light that was in here, the monster had grown thin and skeletal. She watched in horror as the monster's features shifted, forming a new face. A deep orange glow burned from the eyes and mouth as if those holes were portals to hell. The body had grown taller, thinner, and at a cost to any humanity that it may have possessed before—the bones seemed to rip through the thin, grey flesh. Ropes of muscle pulled taut over the yellowed bones that stuck out where the flesh had pulled apart, the sharp edges of ribs punctured through the papery flesh, the twisted and distorted ridges of the spine pushed out through the flesh with pitch black feathers unfolding from the spine like spikes creating a ridge of twisted bone and feathers.
The clothing the monster wore was in tatters, hanging off of it in strips that seemed to almost form parts of its body mixing with the muscle and flesh.

The monster loomed closer filling her senses. She was almost overcome by the scent of decay; the sickly sweet smell of death wafted over Harley.

“There you are Harleen,” the monster hissed menacingly, but with a hint of satisfaction in its tone. Its voice seemed to come from the bowels of the earth, triggering a gut reaction in Harley.

She screamed.

Behind her, the monster in the cage responded to her scream with one of its own. The trapped monster behind her, reached through the bars and grabbed at Harley’s hair and shoulder, claws ripping into her skin, pulling her hair when it yanked back on her. She screamed again, yanking herself away from the cage, twisting around and slashing at the monster with her jagged piece of glass. The claws of the creature ripped across her arms, tearing through the sleeve of her dress and into the skin beneath, but her piece of glass sliced deeply along the creature’s forearm causing it to howl with a mix of fury and pain, yanking itself back into the darkness of its cell.

Harley threw herself forward and to the side just as the creature behind her burst from the cage that confined it with loud roar bursting from its lungs. Her shoulder hit against a table leg hard enough that the table vibrated causing the tinkle of glass beakers and a few minor objects to crash to the floor. Harley yelped and pulled herself into a fetal position while glass beakers full of toxin fell around her.

Crane had just stepped forward when Harley let out a blood curdling cry of fear and pain. The fear had been simply delicious for Crane, but no sooner had the sound escaped her lips than something big and nasty burst through the cage door behind her. Crane barely had time to react, before the baboon leapt from the cage.

The animal had been part of Crane’s experiments from nearly the beginning. It had been a large, aggressive male when he had purchased the animal on the black market over a year ago, but through the months that Crane had owned the animal, he had taught it real fear. The animal had helped in the slow development of Crane’s toxin by being his main test subject.

The baboon had lived in a state of constant, heightened fear thanks to daily exposure to Crane’s fear toxin. Part of the experiments involved a device that Crane had invented that was attached to the animal’s back with tubes that ran into the animal’s brain, sending a directed amount of fear toxin into the creature’s brain and blood system. Crane had been impressed with the primate’s ability to endure a constant low level supply of fear toxin, and over the weeks, Crane had slowly increased and changed the dosage until he had come up with the perfect amount that enhanced the animal’s fear levels to mind erasing levels. This had given Crane the perfect dosage to use on Harleen.

The baboon shrieked in terror, racing out of its cage only to be met by the monster it saw before it, a thick green and brown mass of madness. The animal stumbled in confusion and slammed into one of several chemistry sets that Crane had down here in his lab. The chemistry set on the table, like all the others, contained one of Crane’s many versions of the fear toxin. The monkey crashed into the set causing glass and the liquid fear drug to come tumbling down to the floor. The loud sounds mixed with the drug induced images sent the baboon into a frenzy.

It surged toward Crane, canines and claws reaching out to destroy the monster it saw.
The drug had been pumping for so long into its system that everything the monkey saw was a monster, a predator of some sort, there to rip it apart. It focused its attention on Crane, the biggest monster in the room, screeching and shrieking, lashing out with claws and teeth wanting to tear away the nightmare and escape.

Crane hissed in surprise, taking several quick involuntary steps back, lashing out with his sickle when the baboon attacked, its claws catching him along the arm and chest, slashing quickly and deeply. The pain seared through Crane, burning across his skin. The monkey was too drug-addled to attack with the sort of power and direction it would usually have had. The animal could not properly see the coming attack from Crane which was why Crane's first strike with the sickle was able to catch the baboon easily. The blade sank into the monkey's side puncturing its lung and heart in one vicious, deadly move. Crane yanked the sickle back, the monkey falling to the ground in a pool of its own blood to die within seconds. Crane sighed in frustration. He really hated to waste good materials.

Harley barely spared the battling monsters a glance before she was on her feet rushing for the trap door. The floor was a mess of spilled liquid and shattered glass. Her bare feet slipped, going out from under her. She crashed to the floor and cried out in a painful rush as the air was knocked from her and slammed her chin against the floor. She scrambled, rolling under another table and going still, wincing at the feel of a couple of slivers of glass that had cut into her knees at the same time she lost her grip on her broken piece of glass, her only weapon. The large shard had slid across the floor and away from her.

Crane yanked the sickle out of the baboon's side, the creature twitching on its last few breaths. He stood up with the bloody sickle and looked around. He had caught sight of her for a moment just before the monkey attack then in the next instant he lost her.

"Come along Harleen. You are only delaying the inevitable."

Harley was doing her best to control her breathing and to bite down on the sounds of pain she wanted to make when she reached down to pull a couple of small pieces of glass from her knees. Her hand was shaking as she slowly pulled the glass out and laid it on the floor beside her instead of tossing it.

Crane snarled. "Harleen!!! Enough of this!! Come out!"

Crane walked past where Harley was hiding under one of the lab tables. She made a small sound, a tiny gasp when she saw his legs next to her. She scrambled in the opposite direction, staying under the table. Crane heard the tiny sound and whipped around.

"Come on, Harleen my love. Enough games." Crane was losing his temper...some of the toxin had been wasted, one of his test subjects was dead and he had been hurt. He was angry; Crane did not like to become angry. When he was angry he became like his father, violent. It was messy and he hated messy. But when he spun around he let his temper take over, Crane let the blind rage that he worked very hard to control fuel him now. He reached out, grabbed the table where more of his delicate lab equipment sat and flipped the table to the side. He roared, spittle flying from his lips. His eyes behind his mask were inflamed.

"You can't hide!! There is nowhere to go!!!"

Harley scrambled, gaining her feet and she ran, but Crane was surprisingly quick. He grabbed her by her hair and yanked her backwards.
“And where do you think you are going?”

Jack and Dale had been walking forever—at least that was what it felt like to Jack. Jack stopped and leaned against the brick wall holding up one of the carbide lamps they had taken from Dollmaker's room. His wounds were sapping his strength. Dale was staring down at the map on his phone when Jack spoke softly, his eyes closed. He was trying to gather his strength. “It's starting to get colder. Have you noticed that we are starting to be able to see our breath?” Jack opened one eye and looked over at Dale who glanced up from the map frowning. He blew out a breath.

“You're right.” Dale replied quizzically. “What do you think that means?”

Jack smiled. “I think it means we might be on the right track.”

Dale grinned. “An opening.”

Jack nodded. “Yep, an opening.”

They both heard a noises. At first neither of them could be sure what they were hearing, the slight sound echoed, bouncing down the tunnel. They both remained quiet, Jack holding the lamp out, the flame reflecting off the mirror around it and casting a bright light out into the tunnel ahead of them. After a couple of seconds they heard the sound again.

Jack frowned puzzled then hissed. “I think it's a squeak.”

Dale frowned too. “A squeak?”

Jack nodded and started to say something when they both saw a shadow bouncing against the wall as whatever it was came racing down the tunnel toward them. Jack reached into his pocket pulling out the scalpel he had taken from Dollmaker's room. It wasn't much of a weapon, but it would do. He tensed ready to attack whoever or whatever was coming toward him, when something burst into the lamp's radius of light.

Dale let out a yelp of surprise, jumping and stumbling backward, but Jack started to laugh as the rat raced by the two men and disappeared into the darkness of the tunnel.

Dale, who was holding a hand to his chest as if he had had a heart attack glared slightly. “What is so funny?”

Jack's smile spread across his face. “It means we are indeed on the right path my friend. The way out is ahead of us!”

Dale blinked for a moment then smiled as he realized Jack was correct. Jack pushed himself away from the wall chuckling. “Come along my darling!! I don't know about you, but I'm sick of these tunnels!”

Dale nodded. “Me too.”

The two men started to walk again with more purpose.

*

Harley was yanked backward by the monster, she could feel her hair being ripped from her scalp when the monster practically tore her off her feet. Harley reached up trying to grab at the monster's clawed hands, her nails scraping uselessly over the creature's hand as she struggled to keep her feet under her.

Crane yanked her back and spun her around, his anger getting the best of him causing him to lash out and punch her across the face, snapping her head to the side at the same time that he let go of her hair. Harley yelped in shock; the pain lanced through her face and she tasted blood on her tongue. Crane let go of her, the suddenness of the strike and the confusion caused by it made Harley drop, hitting the floor hard. Crane sighed. He dropped down to crouch over her reaching out to grab her chin. He turned her face one way then the other. He had hit her fairly hard, bloodying her nose and splitting her lip.

“Now look what you made me do Harleen!! I didn't want to hurt you, but this is getting ridiculous. I do not like to repeat myself and I do not like things to be messy. And you my dear have not only caused damage to my lab equipment, but you caused me to kill one of my prize test subjects. I thought this might be enjoyable, but I find myself becoming very annoyed with you right now.”

Harley frowned in confusion looking up at the monster. For a moment it wasn't a monster, but Crane in a mask. The image confused her, but she didn't have time to ponder it before Crane stood up yanking Harley to her feet with him.

“Now, my lovely. You are going to come with me and we are going to see just how much of my fear toxin you can take before you break. I need you broken, you understand. We simply must get through this part in order to realized the second part of my plan.”

Harley gasped in pain, but she smiled and hissed. “I see you...I see what you really are!! You're pathetic!! There's nothing scary about you! You don't scare me!”

She giggled, blood dripping down her chin and then she spat in his face.

The bloody spittle hit Crane's mask rather than his skin, but it still angered him. He shook her, then surprised himself when he punched her in the stomach. Harley dropped to the floor gasping, struggling to catch her breath.

Crane glared down at her. “This could have been easy, but I suppose you would not have been perfect for me if it had been. You are strong and I do admire that Harleen, I really do...which is why I chose you. Beautiful, strong willed, a delicate flower with an iron will, intelligent...it is as if you were made for me Harleen. My perfect match.”

Still struggling to catch her breath, Harley glared up at the monster. The two images, one of Crane in a mask and the other of a nightmare scarecrow were overlapping, but her system seemed to be processing the fear toxin or working its way through it because she was seeing less and less of the monster and more and more of Crane.

“I'm not your perfect match you freak!! I'm only for Jack.” She giggled then, with a sneer at Crane. “He is going to hurt you when he gets a hold of you.”

Crane laughed. “Oh your Jack Wayne isn't going to live through the night Dr. Quinzel.”

Harley stared at him, but she refused to believe him. “Liar!”
Crane smiled as he crouched down. “Why lie? The truth is so much more entertaining.”

Harley narrowed her eyes. “Jack Wayne is twice the man you'll ever be and he's far more frightening. You don't scare anyone! You're a coward, a freak!! You're just an egghead with an inferiority complex trying to be a big man now and failing!” Harley giggled. “Jack would say you aren't even funny!”

Crane moved so suddenly and quickly that Harley didn't have a chance to process what was happening until he had lifted her up and thrown her across the room. She hit one of the lab tables, slid through glass beakers and other equipment until she hit the wall, slamming hard enough into the plaster that she created an impact crater against the wall, the cracks reaching up towards the ceiling.

Crane rushed over, grabbed her by her hair again, and yanked her to her feet before he shoved her against the wall. Harley's face was covered in blood from her nose, busted lip and now a large slash across her forehead. Crane snarled, putting his masked face against hers and screamed in her face.

“You will be scared of ME!”

He backhanded her across the face. Harley gasped, tasting blood in her mouth. Crane yanked on her by her hair painfully and slammed her up against the wall a second time. “You will be scared!!! YOU WILL BE SCARED!!”

Harley laughed through the blood on her teeth and lips, her blue eyes clear as she ground out, “I'll never be scared of you, you pathetic loser.”

Harley slammed her forehead against Crane's as hard as she could. She saw stars flash in front of her eyes, but it was worth the pain to watch Crane and the monster that overlapped him stumble away from her in confusion. Harley tried to zip by him, but she wasn't fast enough, her head still spinning from the headbutt and her other wounds. Crane reached out and grabbed her, causing her to fall forward and slam into the floor. Harley gasped, the air knocked from her, but then Crane had grabbed her by her ankle and flipped her over with surprising strength. Harley snarled raising one foot and kicking him in the crotch as hard as she could.

Crane yelped, buckling over for a split second. Harley climbed to her feet, but he recovered too quickly reaching out and grabbing her to yank her forward and backhand her across the face hard. The needles on the end of his fingers cut thin, rough gouges into her cheek. Harley yelped in pain.

“Fuck!”

Crane sneered. “I'll just have to inject you with my fear toxin again, a higher dose—the highest I have yet to try should work on you.”

Harley lashed out with her fist, punching him in the face. She didn't have the strength she might have usually had behind her punch; the drugs, head butt and the punishment she had already taken made her weaker. Crane chuckled.

“Cute that you think you can defeat me Harleen. I am the master of fear, of pain and of suffering.”

“You are the master of jack shit!” Harley hissed. She ducked in low just as Crane reached for her again and punched him in his kidney, then she brought that same fist upward, slamming Crane under his chin and snapping his head back.

Crane snarled in pain and frustration and charged her, his shoulder coming in under her guard to strike her in the diaphragm. His attack lifted her off her feet and threw her across one of the lab tables. She slid off the other side in a hail of broken glass.
Sandra had her hands wrapped around her phone. Her eyes were closed though she wasn't sleeping. She had her scarf wrapped around her nose and mouth even though Frost had turned the SUV on to warm up the vehicle and everyone inside. The snow was beginning to collect on the vehicle and had grown heavier in the last hour. She was doing her best not to worry, to just focus on Dale getting here. Dale would get here with Jack, then they would go and get Harley. It was all going to work out—it had to work out. She kept repeating this to herself, it had to work out, it had to work.

Her phone rang.

The sound of the ringing phone made everyone in the SUV jump, causing the whole vehicle to shake. Sandra fumbled the phone nearly dropping it on the floorboards; her fingers were cold as she looked at the number on the screen.

She nearly shrieked which again made everyone in the SUV jump. “IT'S DALE!”

She quickly hit the answer button and held it to her ear. “DALE?”

She could hear Dale's tired voice on the other end. Never had she heard a more magical sound.

“Sandra? We're out...we're out...”

The frightened animals in their cages let out shrieks and roars of fear while Crane and Harley fought. Crane tried to grab Harley, but she held her arms up, which were covered in nicks and cuts from the broken glass around the room, her hands clenched into fists. She swung her right elbow, twisting her entire torso to land the blow to catch him across the chin. Crane jerked to the side and grunted in pain. His defenses were down (she could only guess that he underestimated her), which allowed her to hit him again with her other elbow. Crane surprised her after her second elbow strike. Even though he was staggered, his hand shot out and grabbed her around the neck. He shoved her back, slamming her against the wall, but Harley brought both her arms up, holding her hands, one around the other to create a larger fist and slammed her balled fists down on the joint of his arm as she twisted to her left, breaking his grip on her. She then grabbed Crane's head by his mask, yanked him forward and down as she brought her knee up to smash his face before she shoved him away.

She made a break for the ladder, but her escape was across the room from her. She might make it she thought...maybe find a way out of this house, but Crane grabbed her by the back of her dress. The cloth tore, the ripping sound filling the room as Crane yanked her backward and threw her to the floor. She gasped in pain as her breath was driven out of her lungs, bits and pieces of glass fragments cut into her face as her body smashed into the broke glass that littered the lab floor. Crane tore his mask off, threw it down, his eyes wild and his hair in disarray. He reached down to grab her by her throat, yanked her up and into his arms. Harley felt too weak to break his hold, letting him yank her to her feet. He held her close, his lips brushing hers when he spoke.

“I will haunt your nightmares Harleen. I will be the one thing you will always fear, but all else will be yours. My Lady Crow...that is what you are meant to be.”

He pressed his mouth to hers, forcing his tongue between her lips, gagging her. Harley shoved back, struggling to push him away, tears rolling down her bloody cheeks as he forcefully kissed her, but she was hurt, weak and the drugs still kept trying to assert control over her; the second wind she had for a minute seemed to be rapidly fading. She wanted Jack, but he wasn't here, she would simply have to save herself. She dug the fingers of one hand into Crane's suit jacket, while with the other hand she reached for something, anything, her grasping fingers sliding along one of the lab tables, sticky with the spilled fluid, her fingers dusting over tiny pieces of shattered glass while with her other hand she pushed on Crane trying to break the kiss that he just wouldn't stop. Despite his thin frame, the man was surprisingly strong, perhaps nearly as strong as Jack, she realized fearfully. He held her pressed against him, kissing her, pressing his mouth painfully against her split and bloody lips completely unaware or ignoring her tears, forcing his mouth against hers. He had wrapped one arm around her waist, holding her while his other hand reached down to grab her rear and press her hips against his own.

Harley reached desperately for something, her fingers stretched out to find something, anything...then she felt something. It was large, glass...a cylinder. She reached for it, but the cylinder tried to roll away, she stretched her fingers as far as she could, the tips of her fingers brushed the glass...it started to roll away again, just when she thought she had lost it, it rolled toward her. Harley wrapped her hand around it, lifted it up, her eyes wide as she saw out of the corner of her eye it was a syringe filled with the dark orange liquid fear toxin. Harley didn't hesitate, she shoved the syringe into his neck and mashed down on the plunger.

Frost had turned the heat on full blast. Jack was shivering, his whole body shaking; between his wounds and the cold, the man had gone ghost white. It was clear he wasn't feeling his best, but his anger was currently sustaining him. He sat between Alice and Alex, shaking and leaning back tiredly in the seat. Sandra was clearly concerned about both men, hissing low to Dale about infection, fever, but Dale waved her off.

Alex was cursing while he slipped off his coat and threw it around Jack's shoulders. “Fuck me running! What the fuck Jack! Look at you!! You're a fucking mess! Ya both fucking stink too. What did you guys find down there, a fucking alligator and you decided to wrestle it?”

Jack laughed, shivering at the same time. Alex frowned, his brow wrinkled in worry. Dale, who was squashed in the front seat between Sandra and Frost was shivering too though Sandra was quickly warming him up with kisses. She had wrapped her coat around the big man, and held his face between her hands covering his bald head in numerous kisses then made a squeak of distress when she saw his dislocated wrist which had swollen up greatly. As Jack watched the two of them, he felt a wave of intense jealousy. He wanted Harley bad enough that his entire body ached to have her in his arms. His worry for her was all-consuming now that they were out of the tunnels and he was that much closer to seeing her and killing Crane. He forced his attention back to Alex.

Teeth chattering, Jack grinned. “Well, we did meet a charming little fellow who liked to make dolls out of human flesh.”

Alex leaned back giving Jack a look, then snorted. “You're fucking with me.”

Jack grinned. “Yes, I'm fucking with you. Now, we need to get Harley.”

Sandra turned around holding up her phone “I have Crane's address, he lives right outside Gotham.”

“We need to hurry,” Jack demanded quietly, but his voice carried weight.

Sandra frowned. “You and Dale need to see a doctor. You're both in bad shape. We could...”

Jack snarled. “No doctors!! HARLEY! NOW!”

Frost quickly backed the SUV out. “On it Boss.”
Batman stopped in shock, staring into the chamber he had found. The first thing that he noticed was the bodies of several men wearing uniforms from Arkham. All of the men had been guards judging by the uniforms, all of them dead, stacked up in a corner of the room like wood. The next thing Batman saw were the other bodies—or parts, skin, limbs, jars of...pieces. The room was equipped like a laboratory from a monster film about Dr. Frankenstein. There were old autopsy tables, surgery equipment, old blood, the smell of decay and the evidence of a fight. No fresh bodies were evident, though he found signs of fresh blood.

Batman walked through the room looking for clues. There was so much blood, both old and new mixed together that he wasn't sure taking a sample would be worth the trouble, but when Batman came to one of the tables he stopped and examined it. It was an old autopsy table, but it had been equipped with belts...old leather belts. Batman examined them. By the position of the belts, two would hold someone's wrists down, another two the ankles the last one would go around the middle.
Clearly someone alive had been held down here.

Bruce felt a sinking in his stomach as he fingered the belts.

He found another couple of leather belts on the floor, a piece of bloody glass and a strange substance...like clay, but nothing else, no clues to tell him where anyone had gone, who had been in here...only that whoever had occupied this room had a sick mind and needed help. He could only hope that if Jack had been here he had escaped unharmed...

Batman pulled some sample kits from his belt and proceeded to take samples of the blood.

Crane's face contorted in pain as the toxin hit his system. Harley had no idea what the dosage had been or which one of his “formulae” might have been in the syringe, but she didn't care, all she cared about was that it was clearly affecting him.

He released Harley, backing away from her, taking the syringe that was still sticking out of his neck with him. Harley watched as his eyes dilated, becoming so wide that the white of his eyes seemed to disappear, the black dominating. The man's face continued to morph between monster and man in Harley's vision, the drug struggling to stay in control of her senses, but Harley smiled. She was winning, and while the monster still seemed real, she now knew it wasn't.

Crane groaned. “Father? No! No no no, not the cellar again!! No!! Not the room!”

Harley frowned, watching Crane. Whatever he was seeing, he was clearly terrified of it. For a heartbeat, she felt bad for what she had done...but that second of time quickly dissolved as everything Crane had done to her and Jack, everything he had intended to do to her, came rushing back to her.
The torture, the pain...the kiss.

She didn't wait another moment. Without giving it much thought, her hand slowly closed into a fist, er her arm snapped out, and her fist connected with the face of the monster/Crane thing before her, striking right at the center of the monstrous, morphing face. Harley was rewarded by the sound of bone snapping and the Crane/monster falling backward grabbing at his nose in shock as blood gushed out in a stream of bright red. He stumbled backwards, hit a table behind him with his hip, then rolled to the left falling to the ground when there was nothing there to catch him. When Crane hit the floor, Harley hauled back and kicked him as hard as she could in the stomach, (though she had been aiming for his crotch once more). She kicked him once, twice and a third time without stopping. Though she was barefoot, her feet themselves a bloody mess of nicks and cuts, her anger granted her a burst of violent energy. She hoped she heard a rib crack as she kicked him again while tears of anger started to roll down her cheeks, leaving lines in the blood on her face.

“You FUCKING ASSHOLE!! I’LL NEVER BE YOURS!! NEVER!! You can take your Lady Crow bullshit and STUFF IT UP YOUR ASS!!”

Crane jerked with each kick, curling into a fetal position and groaning loudly, but Harley wasn’t finished. She turned slightly, pivoted on the ball of her foot, and with all her might, kicked him again in the face, right under his chin, snapping his head back and knocking him unconscious.

Harley grinned, breathing heavily, glaring down at him, her face smeared with blood and tears. Her whole face and body hurt, but her smile was bright despite her swollen lip. As soon as she was sure Crane/the monster was unconscious, Harley dropped down to search him for keys.

She did her best to avoid being frantic because she didn't want to miss what she was looking for in her excitement. But she kept telling herself in a steady voice, he had to have keys on him...Crane would have keys...he had to...she touched something metal in his inside jacket pocket. She grinned thanking Jack for all the jackets he wore or she would never have thought that there were inside pockets on jackets. She pulled out the keys and held them up as fresh tears began to stream down her cheeks. Keys. A ring with several keys. She had a way to escape.

Harley hurried over to the ladder and made her way up.

*

Jack, his teeth no longer chattering, leaned forward. “How far out of the city is Crane's place?”

Sandra looked at her phone. “It’s going to take us...maybe half an hour.”

Jack groaned. He leaned his forehead against his arm that was lying across the back of the front seat, pressing his eyes tightly closed on a wave of pain and exhaustion. It had already been too long...anything could have happened to her in the time they were apart...in the time that Crane had her all to himself. Jack felt tears threatening and he angrily rubbed at his eyes sitting back, dropping his head back against the seat, his eyes closed, and his breath ragged.

Alice waited patiently, glancing over Jack to Alex who looked pale and upset. She opened the first aid kit that Sandra had brought with her, looking to see what they had to work with, which wasn't much, some bandages, gauze, first aid ointment...

Alice frowned. All that would work for the minor nicks and cuts, but the bullet wound in Jack’s shoulder and the ripped burn along his jaw looked like they all needed to be disinfected with more than the simple cream that came in the first aid kit. While Alice looked Jack over, she realized there were probably several wounds that needed stitches too. There were deep slices along his arms and torso that looked nasty and jagged, like someone had used a saw on him! God only knew what kind of infection he would get, she thought. Then there was Dale's wrist which was looking worse by the second. Alice sighed. She knew by the look on Jack’s face, they were not going to get him to a hospital. She knew Alex had some people on his payroll that could help, but she didn’t think that was going to happen until they had Harley.

Alice took a deep breath and began doing what she could; she used the gauze, ointment and bandages, stealing Sandra's scarf to make a makeshift sling for Jack's wounded arm. Jack never moved, never made a sound of pain while she worked doing the best she could with the supplies they had.
She shared a look of concern with Alex, but he just shrugged.

Jack opened his eyes when Alice was done. “Alex, you got any cigarettes on you?”

“Yeah man, 'course.” Alex frowned pulling out a cigarette and handing it to Jack. Alice frowned in disapproval, but said nothing except, “Why don't we switch seats, then you can open the window."

Jack grunted. It was a little complicated to switch seats and while it was clear by how pale Jack became that moving hurt, he never said a word. Alex handed him his lighter and Jack lit the cigarette. He held it to his slightly swollen lips, staring out into the cold night taking a long deep pull on it, holding the burning smoke in his lungs for what seemed a long time before he blew the smoke out slowly staring out the window while Frost drove as fast as he could toward Crane's home.

*

Harley stumbled when she came up the ladder, her bloody bare feet hitting the slick floor. Every part of her hurt and she was covered in blood; her feet, legs and arms were covered in a thousand tiny nicks and scrapes. She had a large swelling under one eye that was turning purple, her lip was split, a pressure cut on her chin was bleeding slowly and her mouth tasted only of blood. Her dress had been torn forcing her to keep pulling it up and there were places where she could feel glass stuck in her skin, but she ignored the pain in her need to escape. She rushed toward the front door as soon as she hit the first floor, racing toward the door with Crane's keys in her hand. The house was filled with the sounds of Tartini Violin Sonata in G minor "Devil's Trill Sonata” playing through the sound system.

When she arrived at the door, Harley leaned against the nearby wall and frantically began to search through the keys on Crane's ring to find the one that fit the lock. Behind her she had left a trail of bloody foot prints that stood out in sharp contrast to the rest of the white room.

Harley muttered. “Damn it, how many keys does he have?”

Each one she tried refused to fit the lock and she was beginning to panic more, the fear toxin still doing its work in her system, despite her fighting through it. She glanced up when she thought she heard a sound, like something grunting and groaning with effort...

*

Crane sat up, for a moment forgetting where he was or what had happened.. Blood covered his lips, not only from the fact that his lips were split and swelling, but also from his nose which was swollen, clearly broken, blood leaking from both nostrils. His cheek on one side was round and puffy and his eye on the same side was starting to swell shut. There was more blood oozing slowly down the side of his head from another wound hidden by his hair. He could feel that he had two broken ribs, possibly three. When he reached up to touch his mouth, he reached in between his lips and pulled out part of a tooth. Crane dropped the tooth with numb fingers and looked around his lab slowly, the shadows of the room rose and fell like the tide coming in, bend over moving and shifting nightmare creatures just out of his field of vision. He could feel the fear, like a creature wanting to pounce, ready to drag him under burning through his bloodstream.

Crane stood slowly, his head hurt, his heart hammered hard against his chest feeling as if it were threatening to break free, sweat poured down his body and he was trembling. The sounds of the animals were like chattering alien creatures that echoed everywhere. He put his hands over his ears trying to block them out. Where was his Harleen...

The ladder...he needed to get to the ladder...
Harley started to cry as she flipped through the keys trying one after another. She didn't want to cry, she couldn't help it, but she was still scared and frustrated. She knew what was happening, that the fear toxin was still in her system despite the fact that she was working through it. She was terrified and she was panicking, which made her movements clumsy. Then she heard a groan. Harley turned toward the sound. It was coming from the hall she had just fled...

“No...no no no...” she hissed.

She dropped the keys, the metal hitting the floor with a loud clatter. She heard a voice that sounded liquid and mumbled.

“Harleen.”

She turned to see Crane standing at the end of the hall, leaning against the wall, his face a bloody mess. He was swaying slightly, one hand against the wall to hold himself up, the other hand on his side. “You—you cannot leave Harleen. You belong to me.”

Crane’s words slurred slightly. He could see her, but her figure seemed to pull and stretch, deforming before his eyes like a funhouse mirror. He frowned in confusion then stumbled a step backwards when, instead of Harleen he saw his mother standing there.

“Oh my little boy,” she purred.

“Mother?” Crane stood in shock, but then he saw his mother ripped apart, a creature tearing through her flesh, a horrid hybrid of woman and crow...his Lady Crow.

“You have failed me!!” she screeched, her voice mixed between a crow’s call and a woman's scream.

Crane grabbed his head, his hands over his ears. “NO!!”

The figure melted away before his eyes and he saw Harleen fall through his front door. “NO!! HARLEEN!! Come BACK!!”

Harley jammed one of the keys into the lock and this time she was rewarded when the key slid into the lock easily. Her hands trembling, fear making her think that the key fitting might only be an illusion, but then she turned it, flipped the tumbler and the door came unlocked. Harley grabbed for the knob and fell out of the door, at the last second grabbing the keys out of the lock as she stumbled through.

Harley landed on her knees when she fell through the door, the pain from the impact vibrating up her body. For a moment she couldn't believe she was actually outside. The air was cold. Clouds covered the night sky, hiding the stars and heavy flakes of snow had begun to fall. The chill cut through her and the thin ripped dress she wore, the cold settling into her very bones in a matter of seconds. From the outside, the house looked to be a one-story ranch-style home, though an extremely large ranch-style mansion, a simple, though expensive home with a well tended front lawn and a car parked in the drive way. No one would ever expect what was happening on the inside.

Harley pushed herself to her feet, taking a second to look around. She could see the Gotham skyline, but she had no idea where she was exactly. But when she saw the car in the driveway, a dark blue Bentley Arnage T highlighted by the yellow trace lighting that ran down the driveway. Harley made a soft breathy gasp of hope. She started to run to the car when Crane lurched out of the door.
“NO!!! You're not leaving!! You belong to me!!”

Crane ran into her, trying to grab her and hold her, but he stumbled slamming into her instead. Harley fell forward, hitting the concrete hard enough to knock her breath from her again and open the wounds on her chin and mouth further. She started to pull herself away, but Crane, who had fallen with her, reached out and grabbed a hold of her ankle, trying to yank her back to him. To his eyes, his hand sank into her flesh. For a moment the illusion scared him, but then Crane was taking a firmer hold on her and yanked toward him.

Harley screamed.“NO!”

She was too close to escape to be stopped now! She rolled over onto her back and kicked, hitting Crane repeatedly in the face with her barefoot. Crane cried out as her heel connecting with his broken nose. His grip on her ankle loosened and Harley dragged herself away a few inches. Crane grabbed for her once more, pain and the toxin making him see a wavering mix of his mother and Harleen; his fingers brushed her calf as he tried to make another grab for her, but Harley lunged to her feet and raced to the car. She was shaking trying to find the key to the car when Crane pushed himself to his feet.

“You cannot LEAVE!!” he hollered at her plaintively.

Harley was panting, her breath coming in hard painful gasps when she realized the car key had an automatic locking mechanism attached to it. She hit the button and the car beeped as the doors unlocked and the alarm disengaged.

Harley grabbed the door throwing herself into the vehicle and hitting the lock button just as Crane slammed up against the driver's side window. His dilated eyes rolled wildly as he screamed.

“You belong to me!!”

Harley, sobbing and terrified, rammed the key into the ignition and thanked the makers of Bentley's when the car started right up. She put the car into reverse and slammed her wounded foot onto the gas pedal hard. The car sped backwards knocking Crane to the ground as she did so. He struggled to his feet again. Harley was about to spin the wheel around and drive off when she saw Crane standing there glaring at her. She turned on the car's headlights, which better illuminated the man.

Harley snarled and hit the gas, the Bentley roaring forward. Crane saw something coming toward him, the lights had turned into the huge glowing eyes of a monster, the car morphing and transforming into a large scarecrow’s head. He stared in shock.

Harley screamed in fury as the front of the car connected with Crane. She watched as he rolled over the hood, smashed into the windshield before he rolled over the side and hit the pavement.

Harley's gasping heavy breath filled the car. She stopped to stare at Crane's body. She waited a few seconds, but Crane didn't stand up. She swiftly reversed the car driving backwards then swung the car around, the screech of the tires filled the night. For a second she saw Crane's body lying in the driveway, unmoving. Harley giggled then hit the gas and took off, leaving Crane's home far behind her.

*

Harley was shivering, her whole body shaking uncontrollably. Her hands on the wheel were tight enough that her knuckles were white. After a few seconds of driving like this, Harley was able to force one of her hands loose to reach out and crank the heat up. The blast of hot air from the car's heater helped her relax a little, allowing her to think a little more clearly. She glanced at herself in the rear view mirror. She was a bloody mess.

The toxin was still causing her to see...things...along the road and in the shadows. She was giggling now every time she saw some nightmare on the side of the road watching her... but it was happening less and less as she drove. She did her best to follow the street signs until she was sure she was heading back into downtown Gotham. Except now that she was free, she had no idea where to go.

Jack was still in the asylum as far as she knew...she couldn't go there...especially since she hoped she had just killed Dr. Crane.

She couldn't go to Wayne Manor...she didn't trust Bruce to listen to her. Alfred might help, but she couldn't be sure...not enough to risk her freedom to go there...

She had no friends in Gotham that she trusted except maybe Jack's friend Alex. She knew where his one apartment was located in the city, but Alex kept so many places according to Jack, she couldn't be sure he would be there...Alex could be anywhere and the more time she took, running around looking the way she did in a stolen car, the higher her chances of being caught and returned to Arkham. She didn't know where Sandra, Dale or Alice lived and had no phone to contact any of them, even if she had their numbers. She couldn't show up at Alice's work like this...even if Alice was working, which she couldn't be sure of...that left her only one place she could go...someone who might help her at least find Alex.

Harley drove and headed back out to the outskirts of Gotham.

She wasn't sure how long it took her to arrive at the gates of the manor home, but by the time she arrived at Cobblepot's, she was struggling to stay awake.

Frost slowly pulled up the driveway to the large ranch-style mansion. Everyone was leaning forward looking out the front windshield. The door to the house was hanging open and there was a small pool of blood by the door, but there was no sign of anyone. Frost pulled the SUV to a stop by the front door. Jack immediately exited the SUV and headed to the door without stopping to see if anyone was following him. Alex hurried after him along with Frost who pulled out a handgun and followed the other two men. Alice, Sandra and Dale all stayed behind in the SUV, watching the three men walk inside.

Jack stood in the hall looking around slowly. The place was so white that the bloodstains stood out in sharp contrast. There was blood on the front door, bloody foot prints in the hall...a trail of blood splatter that led deeper into the house. But everything was silent. The only sound came from the low classical music that emanated from speakers in the living room. (Jack noted the music was Gabriel Faure's Requiem Op. 48.) Otherwise, he could see no sign of anyone here. Frost went through the house checking the halls and the rooms he could get into while Jack squatted down, reaching out to touch one of the smeared footprints. He frowned looking at his bloody fingertips.

Frost returned quickly. “Most of the rooms are locked somehow. I found one opened that was a bedroom and another that was some weird Roman art room with a basement. Boss, there was a fight down there, some sort of lab. Saw a dead baboon, some other caged animals and lots of blood, but no bodies...there isn't anyone here,” Frost concluded glumly.

Alex was examining some of the artwork, his nose wrinkled in disgust. “Man, this Crane dude is one sick fucking puppy. You get a look at some of this shit he has hanging on his walls? What the actual fuck?"

That was when Alex's phone rang. The other two men stopped to look at Alex who pulled his phone out and frowned at the name that appeared on his phone...Oswald Cobblepot.

*

Harley leaned out and pressed the button on the gate. Every movement of her body was an effort. She was in a lot of pain and exhausted by the time she found Cobblepot Manor and all of it was accumulating, catching up with her, slowing her down and making each movement an effort of will. But she had found the place, she was here. She could only hope now that he would see her and help her find Alex.

The speaker by the gate came to life on the fifth push of the button.

“WHO THE BLOODY HELL IS THIS??!!”

Penguin's voice squawked loudly back at her causing her to jump.

“Harley, Harley Quinn. I...I need your help.”

Oswald didn't answer her, nothing happened for a long minute. She had just thought of pushing the button again when the gates slowly opened, squeaking loudly on their rusted hinges.

*

A few minutes later Harley was sitting in front of a warm fire that burned merrily in an old fireplace. She was in a large old deep blue winged back chair, wearing a pair of grey sweat pants and a t-shirt that were far too big for her, hanging on her frame making her look younger, like a teenager instead of a young woman. Her hair was damp, but clean and all the blood had been washed way leaving only the ugly cuts and bruises behind. The cuts, nicks and slashes on the bottom of her feet hand been cleaned, stitched, and bandaged, her other nicks and cuts were stitched and cleaned with fresh white bandages over them and a pair of too large grey socks were on Harley's feet. At this moment, a young man dressed in black pajama pants and a white bathrobe, barefoot, bare-chested, his hair rumpled as if he had just arisen from bed, was quietly stitching up the palm of her hand while Harley sipped gratefully from a warm cup of tea after taking the two vicodin that Oswald had given her. Cobblepot sat across from her with his own cup of tea.

He was dressed much like the young man, in matching sleep pants and robe, but where the young man was bare-chested, Cobblepot was wearing a matching nightshirt to his pants. He had on a pair of fluffy black and white slippers and his hair was combed back. Next to Cobblepot's chair was one of the young women that Harley had seen him with at the fight club, a dark-skinned beauty with radiant brown eyes. Like Cobblepot and the young man, she was dressed in matching nightwear...which made Harley wonder if the three of them had been in bed together...but she let the thought drift away and focused on her current situation.

Oswald looked at Harley over the rim of his cup.

“So, Dr. Jonathan Crane, eh? Interesting. And you say you killed him?”

Harley frowned and shook her head. “I...I don't know. I hit him with his car.”

The young woman standing by Cobblepot giggled. “Good job,” she said quietly.
Harley gave her a smile.

Cobblepot smiled giving the woman next to him an indulgent grin. “No matter my dear, don't you worry your pretty little head about the car either. I have ways of taking care of such things. But yes. I will contact Alex for you and have our mutual friend come and pick you up. You do realize that your fiance...”

Harley interrupted him. “My husband.”

Cobblepot lifted a brow. “Husband? When did that happen?”

“In the asylum,” Harley said taking a sip of her drink, wincing only slightly as the young man finished up his stitches in her palm and began to wrap a bandage around the stitched up wound.

Cobblepot grinned. “Husband...yes. Your husband will owe me a favor in return—a big favor.”

Harley nodded. “I understand. I just didn't know who else to go to.”

Cobblepot grinned. “Oh now, don't look so glum my dear. I'm happy to help a lady in distress and you made the right decision. Besides, what's a favor between friends?” Oswald thought to himself that having this little...favor to hold over Jack Wayne...for whenever he was out of Arkham (which Cobblepot had no doubt would happen soon since his little girlfriend...no wait...his wife was now loose), but this favor would be quite useful and quite valuable. He would have to hold onto it for just the right moment.

“Now, just relax my dear. Let the pain medicine work. You are perfectly safe now.”

*

Alex frowned looking between Jack and Frost.

“It's Cobblepot. He says he has Harley and would like me to come pick her up. Says she was looking for me.”

Jack went very still. “What? He has her?”

Alex nodded with a grin. “That's what he says. I don't think Penguin would fool around about something like that...he knows I would kill him.”

Jack grinned manically, a cross between excitement and anger. “Then what are we waiting for!!”

*

Harley was waiting with Oswald on the doorstep of his home when the SUV pulled up. Harley was leaning against the door frame; between the pills and her sheer exhaustion it was will alone that was keeping her on her feet.

The back door opened and Jack stepped out.

Harley sucked in her breath in shock. He looked banged up, bruised and beaten, his hair flopping around his forehead, his face unshaven for weeks, but she had never seen a more beautiful sight than Jack walking toward her. Harley stepped away from the door walking toward Jack as if an invisible string was pulling her toward him. He smiled, his blue eyes bright as they wandered over her face, noting the numerous bandages, her busted lip and bruises on her face as well as the fact that she was limping slightly.
Harley's expression was pained when she saw the burn along his jaw, his own bruises and cuts, his arm in a makeshift sling, but all that paled when compared to the smile that graced his face while he gazed at her.

Jack reached out and stroked a lock of her blonde hair back from her face, sliding the still slightly damp hair back behind her ear.

“Hey pumpkin,” Jack said softly.

Harley's lips trembled. “Hey puddin.”

Jack reached for her, wrapping his good arm around her waist and pulled her close, pressing his mouth to hers. Tears began to roll down her cheeks. She returned his kiss, her arms going tight around his neck.

They were finally free.
Harley had her arm around Jack's waist, practically holding him up when they arrived at one of Alex's many abodes located in Gotham. Alex was on the phone cursing up a storm ahead of them. It was clear by how agitated he was that if he had another arm he would be throwing his hand around expressively.

"I don't fucking care what time it is. I fucking pay you to be at my beck and call and if you can't fucking do that then I will pay someone who can. I will be making your life a fucking nightmare you know that right? Oh yeah...you can bet this is going to go fucking bad for you after this...it all fucking depends on how fast you get your fucking ass over to me. Got it? Yeah."

Alex hung up and muttered. "He's dead. I'm going to make it so he can't find work on this fucking continent, let alone this fucking planet! That fucking crazy old man!" Alice pressed her lips together on a smile as she put her arm around Alex's shoulder while they all walked onto the elevator at one of the most expensive apartment buildings in Gotham, the Ashland building located right off Robinson Park.

Alex had Frost park the SUV around the back of the building, driving into the parking garage underground from a single entryway that had a keypad to open the gate. Once inside, their small group took a private elevator—again, a keypad code was required to get into the building's elevator. The elevator took their group up to the penthouses where the doors opened up on a private hallway. Alex led them down the hall to one of only two apartments on this floor. He opened the door and ushered everyone inside.

"My fucking casa is your fucking casa!" Alex said with a grin. The place looked nothing like what Harley thought an “Alex apartment” would look like. Unlike the place where she and Jack had dropped him off when he was plastered that one night that seemed so long ago, this place looked as if it had been pulled off the cover of Interior Designers digest! Harley was momentarily stunned until Jack groaned a little. The apartment walls were all a warm subtle shade of gold with large windows that took up the entirety of two walls. The view looked out over the top of Robinson Park and Gotham city. The floors were highly polish stripped wood with alternating light and dark wood panels. There was a grand piano by one set of windows, bookshelves stuffed with books (which Harley noted were not in an orderly fashion like Crane's had been), an extremely large flat screen television, expensive looking furniture; the blue-grey couch was big enough to hold ten to fifteen people easily while the chairs—all in a nice cream colors—looked as if one would sink into them. A clear glass coffee table sat in front of the couch with a few books and art magazines scattered across the top of it, while on another wall rested a large, complex stereo system.

Alex frowned at his friend and immediately pointed Harley down a hall to the right. "The third fucking door on the left is the guest room. You guys are welcome to fucking stay for a long as you like. There should be some fucking clothes in there. Go ahead and shower, change. That fucking doctor of mine should be here soon. Oh and that goes for everyone. Dale, Sandra, there's a room on the right you guys can use, Frost..." Alex pointed. "There's another room down that way and Alice and I'll be heading to my room to freshen the fuck up."

Harley smiled at the one-armed man. “Thanks Alex.”

Alex waved her off with a slight shrug. “No problem Harley.”

Their small party split up, all heading into their rooms to freshen up. Harley helped Jack walk as they made their way to the room.
Harley flipped the switch on the wall when they stepped into the room. The bedroom was large, large enough to be a master bedroom containing a queen size bed covered by a thick, warm brown and gold comforter, and two huge fluffy looking pillows, that dominated the middle of the room. A large picture window looked out on the city, dark wood floors, an elegant coffee table and matching chairs, a flat screen TV that hung on the wall across from the bed, along with its own bathroom that included a tub and shower completed the comfortable bedroom. Harley sat Jack down in one of the chairs, touching his face as she gazed at him with concern.

“Will you be all right for a moment puddin?” she asked with concern.

Jack smiled at her. “Sure pumpkin. I got you here now. Nothing in the world can be wrong as long as you're beside me.”

Harley leaned in and pressed her lips to his mouth. Jack reached up with his good hand and cupped the back of her head, opening his mouth to return her kiss with a low burning passion. Harley made a soft, pained moan of need. She pulled away from him reluctantly.

“I'm going to go start the shower.” She said pointing over her shoulder.

Jack grinned. “Don't be gone long sugarplum.”

Harley giggled softly as she hurried over to the bathroom to start the warm water before limping back. Jack noticed the limping and it made the anger in his chest flare up and burn. He remembered at Crane's house...the bloody footprints. His girl, hurt by that...Jack growled, then slumped in the chair. Harley had just hurried back into the room when she saw him slump, exhausted and pale.

“Oh puddin,” Harley said softly. She dropped down on her knees wincing as she hit the cuts she had taken on her knees from broken glass. Jack noted each time she winced or her face turned pale with pain and it just made the anger in him boil that much hotter. When he got a hold of Crane he was going to make it painful...agonizing. Harley reached up stroking his hair back from his face, smiling softly and dragging her fingers tenderly over his unshaven face. Jack leaned into her touch with a whispered. “My girl.”

Harley blinked back tears. “Okay, let's get you out of those clothes and into the shower. Should I take the bandage off your shoulder?”

Jack nodded. “The bullet wound needs stitches anyway.”

Harley nodded. She was as careful as she could be when she removed the bandage, but she felt him twitch ever so slightly.

Harley pressed her lips together, her eyes shimmering with tears of pain and anger.

She quickly and carefully took off his clothing, noting every bruise, every cut and nick on his body. The gun shot in his shoulder worried her, but Alex had promised a doctor. It hurt her to see her puddin in such bad shape and it angered her. She wanted to lash out at someone, hurt someone for hurting him. She sighed, knowing that any retribution would have to wait and then she led him into the bathroom.

Though she had started the shower only a minute before, the steam filled the bathroom with warm moist air cutting through the chill of the room. Harley worked carefully to remove his clothing, the bandage, and his makeshift “scarf” sling at the last moment before helping him into the shower. Jack groaned loudly, leaning against the wall to the water from the shower head hit him in the face, using his good arm to hold himself up by pressing it against the back wall. Harley stripped out of her borrowed Cobblepot clothing and slipped into the shower behind him. She eased her arms around him and leaned her head against his back. Jack pushed up and laid a hand against one of hers that rested around his waist. He smiled leaning back slightly.

“I missed ya Harls,” Jack said softly.

Harley smiled kissing his back, brushing her nose against his skin. Part of her was terrified that this wasn't real, that Crane's fear toxin was messing with her head, but Jack sounded and felt real. She squeezed him a little and said softly, “I missed you too puddin.”

She pressed her face against his skin, her eyes closed, just taking a moment to reassure herself he was there before she gently moved her arms from around him and leaned down to grab up the soap. She lathered her hands and began to gently wash his back. It looked horrible, but her husband didn't react to the water washing over it as watery blood washed down his back. She eased the wet gauze away noting that—as Jack had said—the wound was in need of stitches.

“Jack. Who shot you?” Harley asked as she carefully washed him, avoiding touching the wound directly, just letting the water do its work, washing over the wound. It must have stung she thought, but Jack didn't react to the water, even after the bandage was removed, though he did react to Harley's touch, leaning in when her hands stroked over his back and down his hips.

Jack shrugged. “A guard at the asylum.”

“They shot at you?” Harley asked in disbelief, her soapy hands moving along his sides and over his ribs.

Jack turned to face her. Harley ran the soap over his chest and down his stomach. There were so many small cuts and bruises on his body, he looked as if he had been through a long, difficult battle. Her heart tightened in her chest. She wanted to kill whoever had hurt him, she wanted to rip their eyes out and make them eat them. Jack felt her building tension, reached out and ran his hands down her shoulders, caressing her gently. Harley relaxed and laid her head against his chest taking a few, slow and deep breaths before she looked back up.

Jack's lips pulled into a grin. “There's my girl.”

She smiled and then chuckled. “You smell like you were in a sewer.”

Jack laughed. “Close enough. Had an interesting time, I must say. Met a man down there who liked to make dolls out of human skin...real interesting person.”

Harley smiled running her hands careful over him. “Serious?”

Jack laughed. “Yep, seriously. You can ask Dale all about it.”

Jack watched her while she rubbed the soap over his chest and down his stomach. They were both quiet while Harley washed his body. She turned him around to rinse him off while she grabbed up the shampoo and filled her hands with the liquid and stood up on her toes to wash his hair.

Jack licked the swollen part of his lip, reached up, tugging her hand down that had the long line of stitches across it so he could examine it. Harley stopped, going still behind him, dropping her other hand from his hair to his shoulder. Harley had removed the bandage over her hand before stepping into the shower. He had noticed that using the hand hurt her, that her fingers were stiff, but she kept using it to wash him despite the pain it was clearly causing her.
“You—do you wanna talk about what happened to you Harley?” he asked softly letting her reclaim her hand.

Harley frowned, reached back up to focus on his hair. “Not...not yet,” she said softly. “But soon.”

Jack frowned turning to rinse the shampoo from his hair before he asked. “He didn't...”

Harley shook her head. “No, he didn't—I swear.”

Jack pressed his lips together and Harley could see tears at the edges of his eyes. “I'm sorry Harley. I'm sorry he hurt you so badly.”

Harley looked confused while she washed his arms. “Why should you be sorry Jack?”

“What happened to you. I...I should have found a way...it shouldn't have happened...I shouldn't have let it happen. I promised to protect you.” Jack squeezed his eyes shut, but Harley grabbed his face roughly between her soap-covered hands. “Don't say that Jack. You did everything you could. You know whose fault this is, all of it? Bruce. It's Bruce's fault. Not yours.”

Jack stared at her. Her blue eyes were hard and he could see a burning hatred behind them. He stared into their depths until Harley smiled at him. “You did everything you could Jack. You came looking for me.”

Jack nodded and cupped her face in both hands.

“If he hadn't put you in there...in that awful place...” Harley choked, tears springing to her eyes. Jack grabbed her, tugged her into the circle of his arms. “We're together now Harley. We'll talk about Bruce later. I just want to focus on the fact that we're free and I have you in my arms right now.”

Harley smiled, took a steadying breath. “Me too puddin, me too.”

Jack smiled, then raised an eyebrow when he felt her soapy hands slide down over his stomach to his groin. “Harley Quinn! Are you trying to seduce me?” Jack smiled, releasing Harley and gave her that big gorgeous smile of his that Harley loved so much, the old Jack twinkle back in his eyes.

“Mm...maybe I am? Is it working?” Harley purred and dropped to her knees in front of him.

Jack eyes burned looking down at her, wet, naked...here. He stepped back to let the water run down and wash away the soap.

She kissed his thighs, her teeth catching the soft sensitive skin gently, then she bent down to lick his scrotum, her tongue running up slowly. She then nipped and kissed all around his penis, letting his shaft bounce or stroke against her cheek, but never her mouth. She licked along his stomach, biting softly at his skin wherever there wasn't a scratch, before she once again knelt low and sucked on his scrotum until Jack through he might keel over.

Harley grinned. With a hand on his hip she tugged him back to her leaning in to run her tongue over his quickly hardening erection. Jack's eyes rolled at the feel of her tongue, so much warmer than the water around them. Her lips were soft and warm, soothing, exciting. Even before she started her exploration of him, he wanted her, though right now he thought she was doing a fantastic good job of driving him crazy right now.

Jack groaned. “You want to wait...”

Harley didn't answer except to suck all of him into her mouth, her warm tongue playing over him
Jack's knees went weak and he was forced to move to the wall, leaning back his hands going down to rest against her head. Harley grabbed his hips (careful of her one hand). Harley relaxed her jaw, taking all of him into her mouth while she looked up at him. Jack gazed down at her, his mouth open just a little as he stared down at her. Their eyes locked as Harley rolled her tongue along the sensitive bottom of his shaft pressing her lips down and pulling up slowly letting him feel every moment her lips were pressed against him until she was at the head of his penis. She grabbed him with her good hand, holding him while her tongue swirled around him.

She then slowly wrapped her lips around the head of his shaft, her hand raising up slowly then up and down his length while sucking on him at the same time. Jack groaned loudly. Harley continued to suck and use her hand, but she kept her eyes on him smiling as she sucked. Jack watched her, licking his lips. She grinned dragging the very edge of her teeth along his length then nipped playfully at the soft head of his erection. Jack hissed between his teeth watching her.

She gave him a devilish smile, her blue eyes dancing before wrapping her lips round him again and tugging her lips tight against him, her tongue sliding back and forth along the underside of his erection with a loud moan on her own. She reached up and cupped his testicles in her hand squeezing gently while she sucked, never breaking eye contact with him enjoying him watching her.

She could feel Jack was close. She stuck the fingers of her injured hand in her mouth then slid her hand under, sliding her fingers between his rear cheeks, gliding her fingers against his anus back and forth in a slow teasing motion, listening for Jack's reactions. He groaned, closing his eyes for a moment, spreading his legs a little more. Harley smiled and gently slipped a finger into him. Jack groaned loudly arching his hips, his fingers in her wet hair spasmed. Harley grinned moaning with pleasure, taking that as a good sign and began to slowly, gently added a second finger, sliding her fingers in and out of him at the same time sucking on his erection, her mouth and fingers moving together in an erotic rhythm.

Jack looked down at her just as Harley's eyes rose back up to met his gaze. But it was when she smiled around his shaft and winked that Jack lost control and came with a loud groan. Harley sucked him down, swallowing, continuing her rhythm of sucking and using her fingers while Jack cried out and shuddered his fingers tight in her hair. “Oh God Harley!” Jack gasped struggling to keep his balance; his orgasm caused his legs to go weak, but Harley's continued attentions were causing him to spasm and jerk, the pleasure almost more than he could bear, until finally Harley sat back grinning like a cat licking her lips with a decidedly satisfied expression on her face.

“Now, you need to get in bed,” Harley grinned pleased with herself.

She stood up and Jack grabbed her around the back of the neck yanking her close, covering her mouth with his in a passionate kiss. He pulled away, both of them breathless.

“Oh I'm going to bed,” Jack purred.

She put her finger to his lips. “In the morning. You can have your way with me then. Right now you need rest, food, and pain killers.”

Jack started to protest, but Harley smiled kissing the tip of his nose. “Don't argue with me puddin.”

Jack pressed his lips together on a smile of pure joy to have her back. “Yes ma'am.”

It wasn't long before there was a knock at their door. Harley had Jack in bed, propped up with pillows, using a towel to cover his bullet wound front and back. She had found some clothing in the room's closet, just as Alex had promised, so that Jack was now in a pair of sweat pants, no t-shirt until his wound was properly taken care of and some warm socks. She was wearing a different pair of sweat pants and a t-shirt that hung to her knees along with some socks, though she needed new bandages on all of her wounds too. She wore her wet hair in a braid over her shoulder making her look a great deal younger. She was pale and tired, the bruises on her skin looking bright and painful. The sight of them made Jack want to kill something, his mind dancing with the thoughts of what he could do to Crane. (Harley told him about hitting the doctor with the car, but Jack suspected the man wasn't that easy to put down). Harley was sitting on the bed curled beside Jack watching the news report about the break out at Arkham when the knock on the door came.

After a couple of knocks Jack yelled. “Come in!”

Alex stuck his head in. “You guys decent? I have the fucking doctor here and I ordered some early morning breakfast. I bet you guys are fucking hungry!”

Alex walked in pushing a cart with one hand, followed by the warm smells of bacon, toast, coffee, and cinnamon trailed by a bald man in a pair of grey slacks and a matching sweater carrying a black doctor's bag.

“Guys, this is Dr. Henderschott. He is going to look you both over and stitch up that fucking crater in your shoulder Jack.” Alex indicated the man behind him as he pushed the cart over to the bed.

The doctor stepped over with a smile. Despite the argument between him and Alex on the phone, Dr. Henderschott seemed nice enough.

“Now, I was told you are both my patients? Which one is...ah...yes, I see.”

Harley had removed the towels from Jack's shoulder. Henderschott nodded. “All right, let's start with you.”

*

By the time Henderschott had left, Jack had his wound repacked and bandage, the doctor deciding it was best not to stitch it up because of the possibility of infection. He did stitch several of Jack's smaller wounds, and re-bandaged most of Harley's leaving them with care instructions and a bottle of vicodin. Alex stayed to make sure the doctor did a good job then paid that man in cash and walked him out.

Alex returned a few minutes later with Alice, Dale and Sandra in tow. Frost had headed on home letting Alex know his phone would be on if they needed him.

Alex grinned at the two of them. “Well, finally got you two out of the fucking loony bin. So, what’re your plans now?”

Jack, who had four pills in his hand, tossed them back downing them with a swallow of hot coffee and grinned. “Get back at Bruce.”

“Not going back?” Alice asked.

Jack shook his head. “No. I don't trust Bruce not to throw us back in first chance he gets. And I don't trust myself not to smash his face in,” Jack added.

Harley was sitting beside him stroking his hair. “So what are we going to do?”

Jack narrowed his eyes. “I have a few ideas, but for right now I want to disappear for a while.”
Alex nodded. “Well, you guys are fucking welcome to stay here as long as you like. I pay the fucking staff under the table for their silence so you won't have any problems with one of them fucking squealing to the cops or your brother. But if you don't want to stay here, I got a lot of fucking places throughout Gotham.”

Jack smiled. “Thanks Alex and thank you too Dale, Sandra, Alice...without you guys...”

Harley nodded in agreement. “Yes, thank you guys for everything. Especially you Dale for getting my puddin out of there.”

Dale, whose wrist looked to have been set and was in a sling smiled. “No problem.”

Jack laughed. “No, it was a big fucking problem, but you stayed which says a lot. I appreciate it and I take care of my friends.”

Dale blushed and nodded while Sandra smiled. “Thank you, both of you.”

Alex yawned. “I'm moving Dale and Sandra to one of my other fucking places so you guys can have this one to yourselves. Told Dale they both need to lay fucking low for a while.”

Jack nodded. “Thanks Alex.”

Alex made a rude sound which had Alice giggling. “Okay, well you two get some fucking rest. You can call room service for anything you need. Don't you fucking leave this apartment though, for the next couple of days at least—you two fucking got it?”

Alex gave them both a serious look which had Harley snorting on a laugh. “Okay Alex, okay.”

Alex grinned. “Good. You fucking call me when you get up, okay?”

He put his arm around Alice's waist who waved. “Good night you guys.”

“I'll ah, talk to you later.” Dale nodded giving Jack and Harley a smile.

Sandra smiled and waved, closing the door behind them when they stepped out.

Harley yawned, the pills had begun to work to ease her pain and the sheer exhaustion from the last few hours washed over her. She sagged, starting to sink down into the bed. Jack chuckled getting up to grab some food from the tray Alex had brought in with him, removing lids to reveals eggs, bacon, toast and cinnamon rolls. “HEY! No going to sleep until you've eaten, sweets.”

Harley nodded, yawning again wide enough that her jaw cracked and her eyes watered. “Sure thing puddin.”

Jack smiled broadly as he loaded her plate with bacon, eggs and a cinnamon roll. “I want you to eat it all.”

Harley giggled and sat up straight. “Okay, okay, geez.”

Jack filled his own plate before crawling into bed beside her. Jack took a sip of his coffee, the hot caffeine having no power to work against the pills nor the absolute exhaustion he felt, but it did taste good. Jack took a bite of egg, then asked, “How would you feel about renewing our vows?”

Harley, who had her mouth full of bacon, turned to look at him in surprise.

“What?” she asked with wide eyes.
Jack smiled, warming to the idea. “Well, we got married in the asylum. That was one part of our lives, We’ve shed that; we are now going to reinvent ourselves! So...we should renew our vows, have another wedding for this new part of our lives, free, shedding ourselves of the asylum and starting anew! We are now apart from the Wayne name and all the obligation that name holds. We are going to make ourselves a new name. We are free agents, with the freedom to do what we want. And I think a good way to pursue that—to set ourselves on our new path—is a wedding, this time with our friends in attendance.”

Harley giggled, Jack was talking with such enthusiasm.

“It would be nice to have a wedding with our friends there, the people that really care about us,” Harley mused around a bite of bacon.

Jack smiled taking Harley’s plate and setting it with his on the cart. “And after we have renewed our vows, we can start planning our revenge. How does that sound?”

Harley snuggled in close to Jack with a soft giggle. “That sounds divine puddin, absolutely divine.”

Jack grinned, yawning. They snuggled down into the pillows looking for a comfortable way for them both to lay. After a few seconds of shifting around they finally settled on spooning. Jack wrapped his arm around her waist, pulling Harley up close against him. He kissed her ear, then her shoulder. Harley sighed happily.

Jack rubbed the tip of his nose against her ear and whispered. “Non posso vivere senza di te.”

“What’s that mean puddin?” Harley asked sleepily.

Jack kissed the soft spot just behind her ear. “I can’t live without you Harley. Sei tutto cio’ di cui ho bisogno. You are everything I need,” Jack murmured softly holding her tightly.

“For verily love knows not ‘mine’ or ‘thine;’
With separate ‘I’ and ‘thou’ free love has done,
For one is both and both are one in love:
Rich love knows nought of ‘thine that is not mine;’
Both have the strength and both the length thereof,
Both of us, of the love which makes us one.”

Harley fell asleep with a smile on her lips, safe in Jack's arms. Jack kissed the top of her head, holding her close. He promised himself, no one...no one would ever seperate them again...ever.

Master Bruce had been very quiet when he came in that evening. Alfred was waiting for him down in the cave as usual, but Bruce had parked the car and walked by the older man as if he wasn't even there. Alfred frowned, watching the young man walk over to the computers, pulled out his seat and began looking through files. Alfred noted they were the files of a couple of criminals that Batman had tangled with before, Zsasz and The Mad Hatter, but other than that Bruce gave no indication what was bothering him.
That boy really needed to learn how to talk about his feelings, keeping so much of himself bottled up inside wasn't good for him, Alfred thought as he headed up the stairs to the kitchen to make some hot tea and a peanut butter and jelly sandwich for Bruce. The best way to get the boy to eat was to simply place something in front of him and a PB and J sandwich always worked.

Alfred made his way downstairs into the depths of the batcave again where he found that Bruce had removed his cowl and was staring at a picture on the batcomputer of him and Jack when they were younger. Alfred frowned standing by the doorway with the tray of tea and the plate with the sandwich watching Bruce. Bruce stared at the picture, his elbows on the console, holding his head. Bruce looked stricken and it looked to Alfred that there was a dampness around the young man's eyes.

“Master Bruce?” Alfred inquired softly.

Bruce didn't look at Alfred as he spoke, his eyes never left the image on the screen. It showed Jack, young and skinny, his arm around his older brother's shoulder, laughing, his bright perfect, infectious smile across his face as he leaned against Bruce. Bruce was smiling in the image too, though not with the same abandon as his little brother.

Bruce's voice was soft and there was an edge of pain in it when he spoke. “I failed him Alfred. I failed Jack.”

Alfred walked over and set the tray down, picking up the tea and setting it in front of Bruce. He picked up his own tea, taking a steadying sip before he spoke. “What do you mean Master Bruce?”

“There was a break out at the asylum, all patients from the sixth floor, the violent patients. Jack was on that floor. He was put in there with...murderers. So was Harleen...I knew that...part of me knew that was wrong, but I didn't...” He shook his head. “I trusted the doctors to know what to do. Jack was violent...I couldn't...” Bruce stopped his rambling and continued. “When I arrived, both Jack and Harleen were missing. One of the patients to escape tonight was Victor Zsasz...I have no proof Alfred, just...Zsasz believes he is freeing people when he kills them. He kills with a knife and carves a tally mark somewhere on himself for every victim, for every soul he thinks he liberates. What if he liberated Jack? Or Harleen? Or what if he took Jack? I'm worried he was taken Alfred, that one of those patients figured they could get a ransom for Jack and took him...or worse...they just wanted to kill him. Jack isn't good about keeping his mouth shut. You know he likes to smart off, say something cocky or sarcastic...or even make one of his terrible jokes, but to someone like Zsasz or Tetch or any of those violent, unstable patients who escaped...they could have taken Jack someplace to...” Bruce swallowed and covered his face with his hands for a long moment before he spoke again.

Alfred remained quiet, watching, listening. It had been many years since he had seen the younger man this emotional. Bruce always kept a tight hold on his emotions.

Bruce continued to speak softly. “I found blood in a chamber in the tunnels. I just received the results...some of it belonged to Jack, Alfred. A great deal of the blood, in fact, was Jack's. He bled down there in those tunnels...a lot of blood. And I lost the trail. What...what if he's dead Alfred?”

Alfred paled. “But you didn't find a body, remember sir.”

Bruce nodded, but Alfred could tell he wasn't convinced. Alfred swallowed a gulp of tea then asked softly. “What of Miss Harleen?”

Bruce shook his head. “Nothing. She was just gone. Alfred...no sign of her, no blood...nothing. What did I do, putting them in there?”
Bruce looked up at Alfred, pain and self doubt clear in his eyes.

The next morning some police were sent around to Dr. Johnathan Crane's house. He hadn't reported in to work this morning and while the GCPD didn't do wellness checks on citizens who were not senior citizen or teenagers home alone, it was decided, after the incident last night at the asylum, it would be best to go and check on the doctor. When the two detectives rolled up to the esteemed doctor's residence, Detective Marcus Wise let out a whistle. “Now that is a damn big house! How many rooms you think a place like that has?”

His partner, Charlene Fields (or Charlie as she liked to be called) laughed. “More than you or me could afford on our salaries.”

Wise chuckled. “Yeah, more than the whole department put together.”

Charlie grinned and pulled their unmarked car up to the end of the driveway and came to a stop. They both sat in the car staring for a heart beat. The front door was open and there was a pool of something dark near the front door.

Wise hissed. “Is that blood?”

“I think it is,” Charlie said softly.

They both exited the vehicle and drew their weapons. Together they approached the front of the house, easing around the blood pool and entered the residence where they found more blood, bloody footprints and signs of a struggle. Together, calling out that they were police, they made their way down the hall, following the blood trail until they came to another room. The whole time they were following the trail Wise kept looking around him with his mouthing hanging open. Wise hissed. “Man, get a load of the artwork in here. It's morbid as fuck.”

Charlie gave her partner a look before they enter the room ahead of them, telling him with her eyes to shut up. Wise frowned, but when they stepped into the room full of the Roman-Greco art. Wise let out a whistle and muttered. “Yeah, Dr. Crane's a freak.”

Charlie sighed rolling her eyes and continued to follow the trail of blood where it led to a trap door. She shared a look with her partner. Wise frowned. “Wanna flip for it?”

Charlie rolled her eyes again and shook her head. “I'll go.”

She made her way down the ladder calling out a warning, but she was only answered with silence until she had made her way down the ladder and turned stopping cold when she saw the room before her.

“Marc...ah...you need to see this.”

Agatha Wayne shoved her sunglasses up her nose with an irritated sigh, leaning against the back seat of her limo. It wasn't because the sun was out that Agatha had her sunglasses on—there was a thick cloud cover which was threatening more snow soon—but rather it was the massive hangover that had her wearing sunglasses to hide her bloodshot eyes. There was no booze to make the hangover go away (she had to change planes from her private jet to a commercial airline after her pilot was arrested and this close to Christmas she had a hard time finding a new pilot) and she hated any form of sunlight...watery grey or not...she simply couldn't face daylight without a drink in her hand. She had just arrived in Gotham nearly an hour ago at the local airport, her plane being delayed because of the weather; then it had taken another hour to get her baggage...she was ready to start ripping the airport staff a new one when her bags were found...and then there was the line to rent a car.

The woman at the car rental place had been a nasty tight ass. Yes, yes, she should have called ahead she thought to herself, but really...the rudeness of people when she had tried to explain...They really should consider letting people drink on the job, would have done wonders for that woman's personality! Trying to rent a limo in Gotham on a snowy day shouldn't have been this hard!! She had finally settled for an SUV limo. It was big, roomy and had the wheels to get through snowy Gotham roads.

She supposed she could have called Bruce for a ride, but she wanted to surprise him. And she wasn't quite ready to confront him...she hadn't had anything to drink in the last few hours and it was making her grumpy. She really needed to have had a few drinks in her system before taking on Bruce. That boy was so much like his daddy it was frightening. But finally, she was now on her way to Wayne manor she had discovered that the limo wasn't equipped with a mini bar!! Whoever had made such a bad design decision should be fired instantly! No bar? Really? She would have to go without a drink for who knew how long! Barbaric, she thought to herself frowning as she watch Gotham zip past her window. On top of all of that she had forgotten how simply freezing Gotham was this time of year!! She was wearing a mink coat...not one of those faux fur ones, but a real one. Yes it wasn't politically correct, but she figured sometimes it was worth pissing off a lot of people to look good. Though she would never admit to anyone that she did feel a little guilty and had donated a large some of money to the Mustelid Rescue in the UK.

While she sat in the back of the SUV brooding, she muttered to herself about Gotham's awful winter weather. The snow hadn't really started to come down, but she could see it, hiding in the clouds waiting to dump on them and freeze the nuts off everyone.

It was a few days until Christmas and it seemed as if all of Gotham was out on the streets making the horrible Gotham traffic a thousand times worse. Agatha made a face glancing out the window at the street decorations. If she ever needed reminding of why she never visited Gotham...

Agatha sighed again. She didn't have to be here, but she felt that she had to come personally to give Bruce a tongue lashing and to see about getting poor Jack and his fiancee out of the awful place. The asylum. Agatha frowned thinking back to when Thomas was alive. When the boys had been children. Her wild and unpredictable nature had almost landed her in Arkham back then...she shook her head closing her eyes. Idiots—the eldest Waynes were always idiots, she thought to herself.

*

It took another hour before they arrived at Wayne manor on the outskirts of Gotham. Agatha groaned, it was snowing prettily heavily by the time she arrived. The driver pulled up to the gate and hit the button. After a moment she heard the muffled sound of Alfred's voice.

Agatha scrambled to the front of the vehicle and leaned over the drivers shoulder to shout at the speaker.

“Alfred love!! Its me!! Agatha!!”

On the other end Alfred paled. He took a steadying breath and hit the button to buzz her end muttering to himself. “I better spike my tea.”

*
Agatha came barreling in through the front door and wrapped her arms around Alfred. “ALFRED!! Lord you look even more handsome than I remember!! Age suits you!” She grabbed his face in her hands and planted a kiss on Alfred's lips. Alfred was too shocked to do anything except stand there.

When she released him he let out a mumbled. “Ah...yes. Thank you Miss Agatha.”

“Oh stop with the “Miss” Alfred! It's just Agatha! You know that.” She gave him a cheeky grin and bopped him in the hip with her own as the driver brought in her luggage and set it down. Agatha turned, all bright smiled.

“Aren't you a dear! Here ya go big boy.” She turned and planted a hundred dollar bill in the man's hand. He looked surprised, but a large smile spread across his face. “Thank you Miss.”

Agatha tittered and waved him off before turning back to Alfred.

Alfred smiled a little. Agatha still looked like a woman a couple of decades younger than she actually was, so full of life and just as beautiful. But she was also a whirlwind handful of constant energy.

She would be trying the nerves on a man in his twenties!

Alfred stepped over to her bags to pick them up. “So how long can we be expecting to have the delight of your company Miss Agatha? I do hope you are planning on staying through the holiday?” Alfred smiled. Actually having her here through Christmas would be nice. She would bring a much needed bit of life to what was promising to be a rather solemn holiday with Jack and Harleen missing. Thinking that made Alfred's heart tighten in pain. He hoped that Master Bruce was wrong, that Jack and Harleen had simply gotten away and were even now planning on coming home. The alternative was too horrible to contemplate.

Agatha smiled. “Actually, I am Alfred. The holidays with my family. I'm hoping to have Jack and Harleen—or is it Harley?” She touched her chin in thought before she continued. “I really do hope to have them out of the awful place and back home where they belong. I really want to meet this young woman who managed to steal my youngest nephew's heart! I really wondered about that boy. He seemed so uninterested in relationships of any sort!”

Alfred had begun to walk up the stairs, carrying two of Agatha's many bags with him. “Well, I'm not sure they will be home for the holidays Miss Agatha,” Alfred explained solemnly.

Agatha stopped and her tone conveyed her sudden worry. “What do you mean?”

Alfred turned once he reached the landing. “I'm afraid there has been an incident.”

“And incident?” Agatha hurried up the last few steps, coming up alongside Alfred. He nodded.

“Yes Miss. There was a break-out at the asylum where Master Jack and Miss Harleen were patients. “Along with several very dangerous patients,” Alfred said slowly and clearly despite the pain the words made him feel, “they are missing. We have no idea if they were taken against their will or if they left on their own accord, but we've heard nothing one way or the other.”

Agatha snorted while Alfred turned to lead her to her room.

“You don’t seriously expect them to show up here if they did leave Arkham on their own do you Alfred? Not after what Bruce did to them? I mean, I don't know this Harleen or Harley or whatever her name is and I haven't seen Jack in years, but he never struck me as a stupid boy. If my brother had done to me what Bruce has done to him, I would take my money and disappear, have nothing else to do with the family.”
Alfred frowned. “Master Jack loved his brother though, I don't think...”

Agatha laughed. “Alfred, Jack may love Bruce with all his heart, but try to see this from Jack's point of view. His brother betrayed him; do you really think you would trust someone, especially someone that close to you, not to betray you again if they did it once? And I'm assuming Bruce has power of attorney over Jack because of all of this?” Alfred nodded and Agatha shrugged. “There really isn't any reason for Jack to trust Bruce enough to come back. No, if they left the asylum I doubt you'll hear anything from them soon. Now, if one of the lunatics took them...” She shivered. “I rather hope Jack and Harleen simply left and disappeared.”

Alfred nodded, but said nothing.

*

Jack woke with a smile on his face. His whole body hurt like he had been beaten up. Oh yes—he had been beaten up, he thought to himself with a chuckle, but Harley was in his arms and they were away from Arkham. Everything was right with his world at the moment. He had his girl and nothing else mattered.

Jack pulled her closer nuzzling his nose and mouth against her ear. Harley giggled sleepily. He smiled, kissing the back of her ear and settled down again. His sleepy mind contemplated revenge.

Jack laid there holding Harley, letting his thoughts drift. He thought about the order of how he wanted to do things. He didn't want to kill his brother. No, nothing like that, but he did want to make Bruce suffer for what he had done. Not just putting him in Arkham but forcing Harley to commit herself, putting her in Crane's cross-hairs. That alone would have gotten anyone else murdered by Jack, but no matter how angry Jack was at Bruce, he couldn't contemplate killing his brother...not yet anyhow. There was a part of him that still wanted Bruce's love and approval. It hurt badly that Bruce had thrown him away so quickly, tossed him into that hole that was Arkham; but he still couldn't bring himself to want to see his brother dead. No. His revenge would have to be something else. A life lesson on manners and familial duty. It really was Jack's obligation to help improve his brother morally.

Bruce could wait, but that didn't mean he and Harley couldn't have some fun! Nurse Mallory was still alive and they both really owed her some payback. And then there was the orderly Daisy, who might still be alive...he should really find out. And of course Crane, unless, as Harley thought, he was already dead, but Jack's gut just kept telling him that the man wasn't dead, that he was out there...There was also Dr. Arkham. He may not have had any direct connection with either of them, but he needed to be taught a lesson for letting it all happen within the walls of his asylum. Responsibility and all that.

Jack smiled at the thought of what he and Harley were going to do...but first he was going to focus on something good, remarrying his Harley.

Jack laid there thinking to himself when he an idea came to him; a wonderful, awful idea. They would break into Wayne Manor and steal back their wedding clothes, the ones they had picked out together! Maybe they could get married on Christmas? It wasn't that far away...

Jack smiled. Now that would be fun!

Jack nibbled on Harley's shoulder, excitement for his plan making him feel jittery, cheerful and full of energy. He gently rolled her onto her back. Harley rubbed her eyes sleepily. “Puddin, something wrong?”

“Well...” Jack chuckled lifting her shirt up to kiss her belly.
She giggled softly. “What're you doing?”

“I want to talk to you about doing something fun tonight,” Jack purred slipping under the covers. Harley groggily pushed up on her elbows as Jack positioned himself between her legs keeping the covers over him.

From under the cover, she heard Jack's muffled voice. “Yep, I have a plan!”

That was when she felt him nibble her thigh through her sweatpants. Harley squealed and giggled, the sensation ticklish. “What are you doing?!”

Jack pulled the covers away from his head to grin at her. “Shhh...just listen and all your questions will be answered!”

Harley giggled and turned her head to the side a fraction to look at him sideways. “Jack...”

But he had dived back under the covers to continue nibbling at her inner thighs through the fabric of her pants. Harley wiggled in response. “JACK!!”

He sat up, throwing the blankets back and grabbed her pants, yanking them past her hips and with some maneuvering (and Harley’s help) pulled one of her legs through, leaving the pants halfway on, attached to her other leg. She wasn't wearing panties (as Alex didn't have any for women in his room) which only cheered up Jack that much more. “We are going to Wayne Manor tonight. We are going to sneak in. And we are going to get our wedding clothes!” Jack said with triumph in his tone before he began to nibble on bare her inner thighs. Harley squirmed, the sensation of his hot breath mixed with his teeth was very ticklish. “Break in? Tonight? How?” she asked between giggles and moans. Jack dragged his tongue along the inside of one thigh marveling at how soft she was and how good she smelled. He kissed the soft skin, brushing his lips back and forth along the delicate flesh. “I know the alarm codes. It should be easy.” His voice purred along her skin sending a vibration down to her groin that made Harley wiggle again.

“What if we get caught?” Harley asked in a blissful voice.

Jack eased down her thigh before pressing a kiss to her vagina, a sweet yet passionate press of his lips. When he spoke, his warm breath brushed over her sensitive areas causing her to moan softly while Jack spoke. “How often is Bruce ever home? Seriously! When was the last time my brother was home at night? And I'm not really worried about Alfred. It's not as if he would call the cops on us.”

Harley licked her lips, then shivered when she felt the flat of his tongue press between her intimate lips and slide over her clitoris in a wonderfully tantalizing manner for a moment, making her forget her next question. His whiskers tickled against her sensitive skin combined with his licking had little trembling shudders of pleasure racing up her spine. Jack licked her slow and easy a few more times before Harley was able to ask her question and only because he stopped for a moment.

“We won't hurt him right?”

Jack chuckled. She could feel the breath of his laugh caress her. “Of course not Harls! It's Alfred! Never!”

Jack leaned close to press his lips to her clitoris and sucked gently. Harley groaned, arching toward his lips. Jack grinned and sucked a little harder, slowly pressing his finger into her at the same moment. Harley moaned deeply with a gasp. “Oh puddin...” Harley, who had been on her elbows for a little bit, but now she dropped back against the pillows with a loud groan.

Jack kept his tongue flat and soft as he licked up from the bottom of the labia to the clitoris in a long slow lick that had Harley moaning loudly, digging her fingers into the pillow over her head. He moved his tongue up and down, then side to side, slowly, but kept up the sensual rhythm. He used his tongue to explore a little, tracing her opening with the tip of his tongue, and nipping at her intimate lips with just enough pressure to tug teasingly before he was back to her clitoris where he continued to suck and lick alternately. Jack smiled moving his finger slowly, curving the digit just a little finding her g-spot, sucking and licking, building her up at a slow pace. It was a little difficult with his wounded shoulder, but the pain was easy to ignore when he was pleasing Harley. He didn't care about his personal pain; it faded to the background when it came to pleasing Harley, his wife, the woman he loved beyond anything else in the world.

When he felt Harley grab him by his hair, he knew she was close, which only made him grin wider. He shifted his position a bit, just enough to allow him to wrap his arm around her and use his hand to gently pull the hood of her clitoris back and press his mouth to her, sucking just a bit harder. Harley glanced down just as Jack's eyes looked up; the sparkle in his blue eyes was what sent her spiraling over the edge. Harley bucked and cried out, her orgasm breaking over her and spreading in a warm rush. Jack grinned, continuing his attentions to her clitoris until she was begging for him.

“Jack...oh GOD Jack please!! I need you!!”

Jack sat up with a chuckle, wiping the back of his hand over his mouth. “Oh you do?”

Harley grinned and commanded, “On your back, Mister Wayne.”

Jack laughed. “Yes ma'am!”

He laid down smiling brightly at her. Harley smiled back blinking back tears in her happiness. She leaned down pressing a kiss to the tip of his erection before she crawled on top of him to lower herself onto him slowly. Jack reached up to grasp her hips, his fingers digging in to hold her as she came down fully on him, piecing her body with his shaft. He bent his legs, spreading them wider at the same time, his hands holding onto her hips. Jack groaned his lips trembling as he stared up at her.

“Harley...my Harley...Amore Mio...”

Harley groaned running her hands down his chest just as she began to rock her hips riding him in a slow, steady rhythm. She stared down at him, her eyes hooded with passion. She loved him so much it felt as if her chest was going to simply burst, her heart break with how much she loved him, needed him. Harley dug her fingers into his chest, grinding her hips then lifting up until she threatened to pull off of him completely, then to slowly lower herself down again, feeling him pierce her body again. She groaned and threw her head back, arched her spine, her inner muscles squeezing around Jack causing her husband to gasp loudly while she groaned out his name. “Oh Jack...”

Jack pressed his teeth into his bottom lip, watching her. It was so difficult not to orgasm right away. He had missed her so much, had feared for her, needed her and now here she was riding him. The bruises and cuts just enhanced her beauty as far as he was concerned, his tough lady, his fighter, his equal in everything. He loved her with his entire being. He reached up cupping her breasts, his thumbs dragging over her hard nipples, squeezing gently while he just watched her.

Harley whimpered softly leaning back, her thrusts becoming more forceful. She was quickly approaching her orgasm. She reached around forcing Jack to drop his knees so that she could lean farther back, grabbing a hold of his knees as her thrusts became harder, faster.
Jack groaned, panting heavily, his hands having slid down her torso. He kept a hold of her hip with one hand (ignoring the pain in his shoulder) with his other he began to run the pad of his thumb over her clitoris, rotating his thumb in a circle, which caused Harley to jerk and let out a gasp of pleasure thrusting against his thumb.

Together they began to move into a frenzy of thrusting, both of them panting together as they bodies built toward climax. Jack continued to moved his thumb over her clitoris the fingers of his other hand digging into her hip while Harley's hands dug into his knees. Together they rose, then Harley dropped forward onto her hands attacking his mouth with hers at the very moment she came. Jack wrapped his arms around her with a deep groan, his orgasm rising up to met hers. Together, their cries mixed, the two of them held on to each other in their shared climax.

Later that afternoon, with a towel wrapped around his shoulders and wearing a pair of black jeans and nothing else, Jack sat in a chair in front of the TV watching the afternoon news report with a frown. The man on the TV, Reese Getty, an older man with dyed blonde hair and the look of having had a few too many “lifts” around the eyes, was reporting with enthusiasm about the fact that renowned psychiatrist from Arkham Asylum, Dr. Johnathan Crane was missing. There was evidence of foul play found this morning at his home, but no body was discovered. The Gotham police department was asking anyone with information to contact them.

Jack called over his shoulder. “Harley! Did you hear that?”

Harley came out of the bathroom with a bowl of shaving cream, a straight razor and a towel over her shoulder wearing a pair of little short shorts and a tank top, her hair up in a ponytail at the moment, (Alice had come over on her way to work to drop off some clothing that she and Alex had purchased for them). Her clothing that she would actually be wearing out tonight was lying across the bed, a pair of black leggings and a tight black sweater.

She stepped over to Jack and set the shaving cream down on the floor. “So what did they say?”

“That no body was found at Crane's place.” Jack leaned his head back as Harley picked up the brush and dipped it into the shaving cream then gently lathered Jack's face. She looked slightly pale as she worked. Jack reached up and wrapped his hand around her wrist.

“Don't worry Harley. I'll find him and I'll kill him as painfully as possible. He'll never touch you again.”

Harley looked down at Jack, half of one cheek covered in shaving cream. She smiled down at him. “I love you Jack.” She leaned down and kissed his forehead.

He took her hand and softly pressed his lips to her knuckles. “I love you too Harls. Never again, we will never be apart again. I swear it.”

As Harley leaned down and kissed him, Jack reached up to wrap his hand around the back of her neck and gently tugged her close, their tongues brushing passionately against each other before he released her. She stood back to work, covering his face in shaving cream.

“Well I hope I hurt him enough that he is suffering in some hole somewhere,” she said with a slight snarl. Jack grinned closing his eyes and relaxing while Harley picked up the straight razor and began to shave his face.
After the shave, with his hair brushed back from his face (his hair was long enough now that it brushed the back of his neck so Harley had brushed it back and wrapped a ponytail holder around it), wearing a white t-shirt and black sweats, sat down in front of the piano in Alex’s living room. He worried at his bottom lip, gazing down at the keys. Harley was curled on one of the couches, flipping through a magazine that she had found. She was looking comfortable, her hair in pig tails, a crop top of pink on, along with some grey sweat pants. Jack glanced over to her with a smile. She looked adorable and it did his heart good to have her with him, only a few steps away from him. He ran his fingers over the keys. The piano was surprisingly tuned Jack thought. He grinned wider, cracked his knuckles, wiggled his fingers before he began to play. Harley smiled at the sound of his playing, looking up from her magazine. She grinned wider as she realized he was playing Black Sabbath’s “Paranoid.” She watched Jack with his eyes closed while he played, his entire body moving to the music, his fingers not slamming against the keys exactly, but he was playing with power, his long elegant fingers flying across the keys. If he was in any pain, Jack didn't show it. Harley caught her bottom lip with her teeth, her body heating and tightening for him while she watched him, the most beautiful man she had ever seen, but her heart...God she loved him so much.

She stood up and walked over to him, stepping up behind him and wrapped her arms around his neck, pressing a kiss to his ear, then his clean shaven jaw. Jack didn't stop or hesitate in his playing; he simply leaned back against her smiling contently.

*

It was nearly midnight when the two of them left the apartment on Jack's little adventure. Alex (who had disapproved of their plan, but knew when he couldn't talk Jack out of doing something) had arranged for there to be a car waiting for them in the parking garage, a black 2016 Series-2 BMW. Jack had his hair pulled back in a tail at the nape of his neck, dressed in black jeans, a black turtle neck with a black leather jacket. (Earlier, Harley had observed that both of them looked as if they were going to a midnight Goth funeral.) He jangled the keys as they approached, but Harley stepped forward quickly to put herself between him and driver's door.

“Oh no you're not,” she said, her hands on her hips.

Jack frowned or at least tried to frown. A smile kept tugging at his lips looking at Harley, her face in a scowl which only made her look cute, her tight black clothing making her figure look delectable. Jack lifted a brow at her while trying not to grin. “Oh no I'm not?”

“Hand over the keys mister. I'm driving.” Harley stuck her hand out.

Jack frowned more, his bottom lip sticking out slightly. “Why not?”

“Your shoulder! You don't need to be aggravating it.” Harley frowned at him.

Jack narrowed his eyes. “You'll aggravate your hand.”

“Better my hand than your shoulder.” Harley grinned. “Plus if you let me drive I'll make it up to you puddin.” Harley dragged out the “puddin” sticking the tip of her tongue out suggestively as she did so.

Jack stared at her mouth then grinned trying to look grumpy and failing.

“Ugh! Fine you win!” Jack tossed her the keys. Harley grabbed them out of the air with a smile and headed to the car, a bounce in her step that made her rear wiggle delightfully Jack noticed as he stared at her backside and followed her to the car.
It took them almost an hour to get to Wayne Manor, between the steadily increasing snow and the increase in holiday traffic, despite the late hour. As Harley pulled up alongside the main gate they could see that no holiday lights were on the manor house, but a few trees along the front had light wrapped around them shining brightly in the crisp snowy air. The lights of the manor itself were out except for a light on the second floor and maybe another around the side of the house, but from their position on the outside and on the other side of the gate, it was difficult to determine.

Jack motioned to Harley. “Drive around to the west side, there's a side road there and some bushes, it should be a good place for you to park the car where it won't be seen from the house. There's another gate over there too, a small one meant for the garden staff. From there we can make our way across the lawn to the conservatory. There is a door there that leads into the conservatory, then into the main body of the house.”

Harley drove to where Jack indicated. She pulled the car into some bushes and the two of them hopped out. Jack took Harley's hand, holding on tightly to her as he moved through the darkness with confidence, knowing exactly where he was going. They arrived at a smaller iron gate, big enough to drive a riding lawn mower through onto the main property. Harley saw a keypad built into the gate. Jack bent over, the outside lights from around the manor providing the only light, but it didn't seem to hamper him as he quickly punched in the code. The gate made a soft click and then sprang open. Jack pushed it open further and bowed, one arm out toward the manor.

“My lady, our burglary awaits!”

Harley giggled at him and took a step to slip past him, but not before Jack wrapped his arm around her waist nearly lifting her off her feet as he pressed her body against his own, wrapping his hand around her rear and squeezing. “I like you in these tight body hugging outfits Harley. Makes me hot for you.” Jack waggled his eyebrow with a low growl in the back of his throat.

Harley giggled. “Mmm...puddin.” She rubbed up against him. “When we get back?”

Jack smiled, brushing the tip of his nose against her. She could feel the warmth of his breath against her mouth, a tender caress, a promise of fulfillment.

“Yes, most definitely,” Jack purred squeezing her rear which made Harley press her lips together on a giggle of pleasure.

He let her go, stealing a kiss before the two of them slipped through the gate, then together, trying not to giggle, they started to race across the lawn, but Harley stumbled in the snow that had accumulated on the grass. Her feet were bandaged, but it still hurt her to put too much pressure on them for too long; there was no amount of cushioning that would protect her feet from the pain of running until she had more time to heal.

Jack turned and started to pick her up, but Harley squeaked. “Jack! Your arm!!”

Jack frowned in thought then grinned like a little boy. “Okay, hop onto my back.”

“But Jack...” Harley started to protest. “Your shoulder...”

Jack sighed with a slump of his shoulders. “Harley come on! It'll be fine. We stand out here arguing though, we're gonna get caught. Come on...trust me sweets. I promise I'll be fine..” Jack gave her his stunning mischievous smile and Harley melted.

“Fine.” She pouted.
Jack chuckled crouching, both arms behind him for her to hop onto his back Harley climbed onto his back slowly, doing her best to be as careful as she could with his wounded shoulder. If he felt any pain, however, he didn't give any indication as he stood up using both hands tucked under her thighs and lifted her up. Harley stifled a squeal against his shoulder, one arm going around his neck, but then Jack was dashing across the lawn as if she weighed nothing.

By the time they made the house, both of them were laughing. Jack set her down by the door that led into the Wayne Manor conservatory.

“See? Told you!” Jack hissed with a giggle.

Harley wrinkled her nose at him. Jack dropped to a crouch to examine the door. It was even darker here with little light except for a single, small yellow light shining down from above the door. The door had a key lock above the knob instead of a keypad and they had no keys.

Harley frowned looking down at the door. “How are you going to get it open?”

Jack stretched his fingers out and wiggled them.”Watch and be amazed!”

Jack grinned and pulled two paper clips from the pocket of his jeans. He held them up for Harley to see. “Thanks to Alex, I have all the tools I need.”

Harley tilted her head and quietly watched as Jack put one paperclip between his finger and worked to shape it quickly into what looked to Harley like a hook. Next he took the other paperclip and pulled it out into a long straight piece. He took the more hooked edge, slipped it into the keyhole, pushed the straight paperclip in over the top of that one and started to work the lock. Harley watched him, smiling softly. His face was so intent, his blue eyes focused on the task. She reached out and stroked her fingers along the side of his face. Jack looked up at her and smiled softly. He winked at her which made Harley all giddy inside. Within a minute of Jack working at the lock, he had it opened with a grin.

He turned the knob and bowed to her. “My lady.”

Harley giggled, slipping into the dark conservatory with Jack right behind her.

The two of them—holding hands again—made their way quietly through the house. They hurried down the hallway and through one of the ballrooms, headed through the gallery when Jack pulled Harley against the wall into the shadows. They both leaned forward a little when they heard the sound of footsteps echoing down the hall. Jack leaned forward to look down the hall, Harley leaning with him. They both caught a glimpse of Alfred. He looked weary as he walked slowly, a cup and saucer in his hand. He seemed to be headed toward the Great Hall, possibly going to the kitchens. Seeing him made Harley's heart ache. She wanted to run to him and throw her arms around the kindly older man. She felt Jack squeeze her hand. She glanced at her lover to see that his blue eyes looked hurt. He followed Alfred with his eyes until the older man disappeared from their sight.

Harley whispered. “You okay?”

Jack nodded. “Yes, just...yes, I'm fine.” He gave her a weak smile bringing her hand that he held up to kiss her knuckles. Harley leaned in and brushed her lips across his, but didn't say another word.

They waited a couple of minutes until they heard nothing, but the house settling before they hurried down the gallery to to the Great Hall and toward the stairs.
Both of them suppressed giggles of excitement as they made their way up the stairs. It felt funny to be breaking into a house they both lived in. Jack pulled Harley to the top of the stairs, tugging her into his arms where he kissed her passionately a soft growl on his lips. Harley leaned in to Jack, her arms going around his shoulders and her hands grabbing the tiny tail of hair at the back of his neck and tugging while kissing him. Jack gave her rear a squeeze before he released her, turning to head toward his room where their wedding clothing should still be when they both stopped in their tracks.

Standing there in a long champagne colored silk bathrobe decorated with Japanese cherry blossoms and fuzzy pink slippers, holding a bottle of vodka in one hand and a tumbler in the other, was Jack's Aunt Agatha.

She stared at the two of them, her blue eyes wide. “Jack?”

Jack blinked in shock. “Auntie Ag?”

“Oh MY GOD!! Boy what are you doing here?!” Agatha exclaimed as she came rushing over to wrap her arms tight around Jack, almost knocking the younger man off his feet. Jack didn't have a chance to catch a breath before the older woman was smothering him in a hug (careful not to drop her drink). Jack made a pained face that Harley found comical, her hand coming up to cover her mouth to stop herself from laughing out loud.

Jack groaned struggling to catch a breath. “Auntie!! Shhh!!! Please!! No one's suppose to know we're here!” Jack hissed, hugging his aunt back at the same time wincing again as the woman managed to hit every single wound Jack had before she pulled back to look at him, holding her bottle and glass to her chest.

“Oh, oh!” Agatha grinned. “Follow me—hurry!”

She quickly took off down the hall in the opposite direction with Jack and Harley right behind her. She came to a door that was partly opened and hit it with her hip, swinging the door the rest of the way in and hurried inside with Jack and Harley following close behind her. Harley turned and closed the door softly before turning around to face the room. The room was one Harley had never been in before. The guest room had a large king size bed, rich dark wood paneling with its own small fireplace, a crystal chandelier, thick beige carpet, wood furniture, flat screen TV, full bathroom and built in bookshelves. The room wasn't as big as Jack's room, though it was bigger than the room Harley had stayed in when she lived at the manor. There were also several open suitcases with a woman's clothing and makeup littered everywhere.

Agatha grinned. “Sorry about the mess luvs, I just got in today.”

Agatha set her vodka and glass down, then dropped to sit on the side of the bed. “So, what's going on Jack? I came to lecture Bruce when I heard he had had you committed to Arkham. Who by the way, still hasn't come to say hello. That boy breezed in here and breezed out without a 'Hi Auntie Agatha' before he was off with some woman or something. I mean, not that I care. I go out every night myself, but really...I at least stop to say hello.” She rolled her eyes before she continued. “I still can't believe he did such a thing, and to his little brother. Waynes take care of Waynes. Sometimes your brother is just too much like your father. Anyway, is this the Harleen Quinzel I heard so much about!! Oh goodness dear, you are lovely!”

Agatha jumped right back up and grabbed Harley into an embrace. Harley's eyes bugged as she looked to Jack for help. Jack was grinning and shrugged at her.

“Aunt Ag, this is Harley Quinn, my wife.”
“Your wife?? What?” She let go of Harley, though she kept her hands on the younger woman's upper arms to hold her in place while she looked her over.

“God damn, you are a pretty little thing!” Agatha exclaimed with a smile. “Good job Jack!” She grinned at Harley with twinkling eyes.

“Oh goodness, here I am being rude. Sorry darling you'll just have to get used to it. I'm the rude one in the family. Would either of you like a drink before you tell me everything?”

Jack glanced at Harley, who still seemed a little stunned as she shook her head.

Jack smiled. “No thanks Auntie.”

Agatha grinned, giving Harley a quick kiss on the cheek before releasing her and took her place on the bed again, grabbing up the bottle and pouring herself a generous amount of vodka into her glass. “All right, what is going on and why are you two sneaking into your home?”

Jack took a seat, pulling out a chair and tugged Harley onto his lap, wrapping his arms around her as he spoke.

“Long story short, Bruce had me committed. Harley committed herself to be with me. Some bad shit happened in the asylum.” Here Jack's features darkened, but he continued. “We were given the chance to break out and we took it. We also got married while we were in the asylum—Bruce doesn't know yet, about us being married or us breaking out, and I'm not inclined to tell him yet.” Jack smiled at Harley, brushing his lips briefly across hers before he continued. “We decided not to come home because I'm not ready to face Bruce yet. But we wanted to renew our vows since we're now free. You know, sort of a symbolic gesture, about to start our lives anew sort of thing.” Jack gestured vaguely as he continued. “Anyway we decided to break into the house and get our wedding clothes without Bruce knowing. Bruce doesn't know we're out yet and I want to keep it that way.”

Agatha sipped on her vodka. “Not ready to tell Bruce you're out.” She nodded sagely. “I understand, though you know he'll probably find out in a day or two.”

Jack shrugged. “He doesn't need to know where we are though.”

Agatha nodded. “True, true. And you want to renew your vows in front of friends you trust and maybe some family?” She smiled with her chin tilted down a fraction and her eyebrows lifted sightly, clearly indicating herself. She finished off her glass and poured more of the clear liquid into it. “When were you wanting to renew your vows?”

Jack glanced at Harley who answered for them. “We were thinking Christmas.”

Agatha nodded sipping her drink. “I have a counter proposal for you two. How about you let old Auntie Ag work a little of her magic. You two wait until New Year's to renew your vows...much more symbolic if you ask me...and I arrange everything.”

Jack frowned in confusion. “What do you mean?”

“I mean, you let your Auntie throw you a proper wedding. Oh and before you get your panties in a twist Jackie, I won't tell Bruce. I won't tell anyone you don't want to know, but that's no reason you two can't have a decent wedding!!”

Jack gave his aunt an incredulous look. “Are you serious?”

Agatha sighed. “Nobody ever believes me when I'm telling the truth. I guess it's the curse of every devastatingly beautiful woman. Yes, I'm serious!! No nephew of mine is going to have a shoddy wedding!! First things first—new wedding clothes! You can't use the ones you have...I mean we're talking new beginnings correct? Well new beginnings means new my dears! Besides I get the impression you bought the dress with her?"

Agatha looked between them. Jack and Harley nodded.

“Well that simply won't do! Harley you said? Not Harleen?” Agatha turned the full force of her attention on Harley.

Harley nodded, suddenly wide eyed and with no idea what was about to come next. “Yes.”

“You, my dear, have to go shopping with me!! I always wanted a daughter to buy a dress for! Well not really, because that would have meant getting pregnant which would just have ruined my figure! Can you imagine me a mother?” Agatha laughed. “So, you two scurry off back to hiding. Get yourselves a phone. I'm assuming you don't have one at the moment.” Agatha stood, taking her tumbler of vodka with her and hurried over to the desk in the corner where she pulled out a notebook and pen quickly jotting down something which she brought back over and put in Jack's hand.

“That's my number, dear. You call me when you have a phone. We are going to plan a secret wedding for New Year's Day!! It will be fantastic! I promise! And Bruce will never know a thing!”

*

Later that evening as they drove back to Alex's apartment Harley asked.

“Aunt Agatha...you never mentioned her before.”

Jack chuckled. “No...that's the first time I've seen her since we were teenagers.”

“She is sort of like a hurricane making land isn't she?” Harley chuckled.

Jack laughed out loud. “Yes, yes she is.”
Retributive Strikes part I

Harley found herself in a dark room; she could only assume it was a room because she felt claustrophobic, as if walls were closing in around her. She was standing in the middle of the room, but she could hear sounds of things moving around her, shadows shifting, the sounds of grinding, but whatever was making the sounds remained just out of her focus.

“Jack?” Harley called, her voice trembling. “Jack are you there? Please...I don't want to be here without you...”

Then she heard his voice, a voice that made her blood run cold; Crane's soft, melodic voice. “I'm here for you Harleen. I'll always be here, waiting...in the darkness...always waiting for you.”

Harley took a step back, but she couldn't be sure where the voice was coming from. It seemed to come from everywhere and no where; it was so dark and she was...scared...terrified. She started to tremble. “Don't touch me!” she screamed, her body shaking, wanting to flee, but wanting to fight too and too frightened to do either.

“Where's Jack?” she cried out and Crane's voice answered her. “Jack? Oh Jack won't be coming for you; you'll be mine...forever...I killed Jack...do you want to see?” Harley turned just as Crane's face seemed to push through the membrane of the darkness, ripping through it and in his hand he held Jack's bloody head.

Harley screamed.

“Harley!! Harley!! Wake up!! Wake up, it's a dream!!”

Her eyes flew open, she was covered in a sheen of sweat. A weight pressed down on her chest while something tried to grab her hands. Harley screamed again. She lashed out, her fist connecting with something just before her wrists were grabbed and her arms were pinned over her head.

Harley sobbed. “No!! NO!! Let me go!!! JACK!”

“Ow! Damn Harls, your swing is getting better. Hey, hey it's me sweets. It's your puddin.” It was Jack's voice talking to her.

She was finally able to focus and looked up, realizing there was actually a little light in the room to see Jack sitting on her, leaning over her holding her hands down.

He smiled at her with lifted brows. “Hey sweets.”

“PUDDIN!” Harley burst into tears. Jack released her, rolling off of her and swiftly pulled her into the circle of his arms, pressing her head against his chest. She wrapped her arms tight around him sobbing. “Puddin...it was him again.”

“Shh...it's all right Harls; I have you. I have you.” Jack stroked her hair, holding her close. He kissed the top of her head and started to sing in a low, soft voice, gently rocking her.

“Only you can make all this world seem right

Only you can make the darkness bright
Only you and you alone can thrill me like you do
And fill my heart with love for only you...”

They stayed like that for a long while. Jack just holding her and caressing her hair or running the tips of his fingers down her spine.

Harley whispered against his chest. “I'm sorry puddin.”

Jack smiled. “Don't be sweets. You did the same for me last night.”

Harley sniffled and smiled. “We're quite a pair.”

Jack chuckled. “We are. At least we have each other.”

Harley shifted a little so she could see Jack's face. He reached out and used his thumb to stroke her cheek. “I'm never going to let you go. No one is ever going to hurt you again.” Jack brushed his nose against hers before he kissed her lips and whispered, “I won't let anyone take you from me ever again Harley.”

Harley moaned softly, returning his kiss, then pulled back just enough to murmur, “I won't let anyone take you away from me again puddin...no one.”

They held each other tightly and fell into sleep again, their embrace keeping away the nightmares.

Several days later, when Christmas dawned in Gotham, it was a white Christmas. During the night, snow had dumped onto Gotham city, covering everything in white. Alex and Alice had brought a small tree over—already decorated—to the apartment which had filled Harley with excitement. The small tree was set up by the large windows near the piano. (Jack had managed to acquire a phone from Alex to keep him in contact with Aunt Agatha over the last few days as well.)

Christmas morning Harley woke with a happy smile on her face. Neither of them had bad dreams in the last few days. She knew as a psychiatrist that the lack of dreams didn't mean the PTSD both of them were suffering was gone, but they were having a period without the horrible nightmares and she was happy about that. And it was Christmas and her puddin was in bed with her. What more could she ask?

Jack was curled up behind her with an arm around her waist. She could feel the warm tickle of his breath against her hair. She snuggled down into the pillows squeezing her eyes closed, her teeth pressing into her bottom lip smiling from ear to ear. This, right now, with Jack's arm around her was the best thing she could ask for this Christmas; she didn't want anything else in the world but him. If Santa Claus was real she would kiss the big jolly man right on the mouth and tell him thank you!

She sighed happily thinking that maybe she should get up and see about putting some coffee on and doing something about breakfast when Jack's hand slid down, his long fingers searching lower until he found the hem of the oversized large night shirt she had worn to bed. Harley giggled and squirmed a little.

“Puddin, you awake?” Harley asked only to be answered by his fingers making their way down between her legs. Harley shivered feeling the heat of his fingers transfer through the fabric. He pressed lightly which caused her to moan softly. “Puddin...it's Christmas morning!”

Jack mumbled back against his shoulder. “I know...it's time for Christmas morning nookie.”
He stroked over her through her panties causing Harley to squeal with delight. “Jack!! Alex and Alice will be here soon, along with the tattooist for our Christmas gifts.”

Jack purred licking along her ear. “Then we'll just be quick.”

Harley giggled then pouted slightly when Jack removed his hand from between her legs, but it was only in order to slide his hand along the back of her hip and under her panties shoving the thin fabric down. She giggled helping Jack slip her panties down her legs where she kicked her legs until the cloth reached her calves before she managed to kick the panties down, losing them somewhere at the end of the bed where many socks had disappeared as well over their time here.

Jack grinned and chuckled. “Mm...soft, warm skin.” His hands rolled over the curve of her rear spreading his fingers and squeezing. Harley giggled pressing her backside up against him. Jack took his hand away from her and she felt him shifting a little before she felt the warmth of his erection pressing against her backside.

Jack purred. “Take your top off Harley.”

She sat up, keeping her back to Jack as she pulled the t-shirt over her head. Jack watched her, the light, dim and liquid coming through the part in the curtains shone against her pale skin in a way that made his mouth water with desire. Her golden hair tumbled down her back in a soft wave. Harley glanced over her shoulder at Jack with a coy smile. He reached out and traced her spine with the tips of his fingers. “Mmm...you are the best present Harls.”

Harley giggled still not turning around as she snuggled back into the bed and pressed herself up against him, feeling the warmth of his body pressed against hers, the tight way he held her against him made her feel happy and secure. Jack ran his nose against her hair, his hand sliding down again to press between her legs. He rubbed gently, sliding his middle finger between her intimate lips, grinning at the moist heat he was generating with the slow stroke of his fingertip over the nub of her clitoris. Jack pressed his hips up against her, loving the way her body molded to his, as if she were made for him. Harley groaned, rubbing against his erection, the warm heat mixed with the satin softness of his hard member felt good, made her ache for more.

Jack switched his soft gentle strokes to something a little more aggressive, pressing down and rolling the tip of his finger, finding that perfect spot that had Harley rolling halfway on her back toward him, her arm going up to encircle his neck, seeking a kiss. Jack leaned toward her, kissed her gently, passionately. He slid his other hand under her, wrapping around to grasp a breast, catching her nipple between his thumb and forefinger. Jack licked her ear rolling the pad of his finger around her clitoris, slowly, but with enough force that caused Harley to gasp and groan, coming hard and fast, her body arching against Jack's, the ripple of pleasure racing up and bursting like a firework in her. Jack giggled pleased with himself for making her orgasm. He closed his eyes, enjoying the sounds she made while he touched her, the way her body moved, his nose pressed against her neck, surrounded by her scent. He loved her so deeply that sometimes it hurt.

After she came, he recovered his hand, reaching for his shaft. He slid the head between her round, firm butt cheeks, delighting in the warm satiin of her backside

Jack cooed softly. “Harley, you're my best present.”

Harley giggled. “Mm...puddin...”

Harley lifted her leg, wrapping it back behind her over his hips. Jack pushed himself inside her, the warm dampness of her surrounded him. Jack entered her with a groan that matched her own, pressing his hand to her hips once he was buried deep within her and started to thrust, moving slowly, sensually, pulling back then thrusting forward enjoying the feel of her firm buttocks against his pelvis.

Harley groaned and bounced forward a little before she reached behind her to grab onto Jack's hip digging her fingers into his skin and grinding backwards. Jack released her hip instead grabbing her leg that she had hooked around him and lifted her limb up, wrapping his arm around her leg, his fingers squeezing her inner thigh while Harley slid her other leg between his, her foot hooked around his calf. He shoved firmly, thrusting up with a quick, deep jerk of his hips picking up a steady bouncing rhythm.

Harley moaned deeply as she arched against him, Jack's mouth was against her shoulder, biting, sucking at her skin, while thrusting into her. His arm that was under her moved to grasp her hand. He held her hand while thrusting into her.

Harley twisted partly back in order to see Jack. He smiled down at her, letting go of her leg to wrap his arms tight around her, cupping her breast. He released his hold on her hand, cupping both breasts, kissing her slowly, passionately, his tongue playing with hers in a sweet caress, his hip movements slow, almost agonizing as he moved in and out, thrusting against her causing her to purr with pleasure.

Harley groaned digging the fingers of one hand into the blankets, her head thrown back. “Harder Jack...”

Jack grinned picking up speed, thrusting hard and deep into her which caused her to cry out louder. “Ohh...yes Jack!!”

Jack grunted against her throat. “Damn Harley...uhh...”

Once he started to fuck harder Jack couldn't stop himself, she felt just too good. He was thrusting hard and fast enough that the entire bed began to bounce with them, their cries mixing together. Her body twisted part way around toward him, her breath coming in pants and gasps; Harley wrapped her hands around Jack's where he held her breasts.

“Jack...oh Jack...” she panted hard until she couldn't form words any longer. She climaxed with a gasp, her body clamping down on Jack's erection which sent him spiraling after her, bursting inside her, his cries mixing with her own.

He continued to thrust for a few more seconds, his body refusing to stop right away until finally he became still, holding her tightly against him.

Jack chuckled. “Merry Christmas.”

Harley responded with a giggled. “Happy Holidays.”

They were both laughing, snuggled close together, Jack kissing her softly between their shared giggles, when they heard the sound of a buzz at the front door of the lavish apartment followed by the sound of the door opening then Alex's voice.

“You two better not be making a fucking porno because Alice and I are coming in and we brought the fucking tattooist with us. We have some food and I ain't sharing if you guys are fucking naked!”

Jack laughed yelling back. “You just missed the climax already!!”

The sounds of Alex's loud groaning. “Aw man, get fucking dressed you two!!”
His voice was followed by Alice's laugh.

Alice called out. “We brought breakfast and coffee!”

Jack snickered kissing Harley's ear. “He called us pervs! Not sure if I'm offended or flattered.”

Harley kissed his chin. “It's Alex, I think flattered.”

Jack nibbled on her lips then down her chin, squeezing her breasts whispering. “Mm...I'm a pervert!!”

Harley squealed with laughter as he started to tickle her.

Alex called out. “Oh MY GOD will you two get the fuck in here! It's Christmas goddammit!”

*

For Christmas, Harley and Jack had decided to get matching tattoos on the insides of their right wrists, a heart and a spade, the heart to represent their love, their joy in each other, the spade to represent the darkness, the death of their old selves and the beginning of something new. Plus, as Jack had said with a laugh, he really enjoyed cards. Alex and Alice had set up breakfast, and the tattoo artist, who Alex was paying a pretty penny to be here early on Christmas morning, was setting up her tools in the kitchen at the breakfast counter.

Harley was lounging on the couch with Alice sipping coffee and eating a muffin. Jack had his hair pulled back into a tail, dressed in black slacks, and a white dress shirt, which he currently had untucked, and unbuttoned (Harley found that made her want to throw him down and lick his chest,) the sleeves of which shirt were rolled up to his elbows. He sat in the kitchen on one of the tall stools, his feet clad in a pair of pointed brown and white oxfords. He had his arm lying on the top of the island table while the tattoo artist, a young woman with a purple mohawk named Circe, perched on the edge of her own stool, intently bent over as she worked on the tattoos on Jack's wrist. Harley, her wrist already covered in a light bandage was dressed in a pair of black leggings with a red cable knit crop-top sweater that showed just the right amount of enticing skin. Her blonde hair was piled on her head in two balled up ponytails and as far as Jack was concerned, she was the cutest thing in the room. She was sitting with Alice, who was wearing a thigh-length pink sweater dress and boots, where the two women were discussing wedding dresses from piles of magazines that Alice had brought with her, while Alex sat on a stool near Jack drinking black coffee which he had spiked heavily with some whiskey.

Alex grinned. “So, you two up for some ice skating tonight?”

Jack frowned glancing up from watching Circe work. “Ice skating?”

Alex nodded taking a sip of his coffee. “Yeah, it's part of my Christmas present for Alice. I rented out the whole fucking Sky Ice Rink on 23rd street for the night. It'll be fun and you can see me making a fucking fool out of myself on ice skates. It'll be a fucking riot,” Alex said with a clear indication he was not looking forward to it. Jack laughed. “That's sounds wonderful!! Are we going to beg the girls to wear some of those tiny ice skating outfits? Because I would be very happy to see Harley in one of those tiny skirts.”

Alex snorted. “Perv.” Jack waggled his eyebrows at Alex who laughed harder and leaned forward. “Hey man I tried man, I fucking tried, but Alice said we would have to fucking wear one too. Can you see me in a fucking sparkly leotard?”
Jack laughed hard enough that tears sprang to his eyes and Circe gave him a dirty look for moving, but Alex protested. “Hey man, you got the fucking figure for it! Me? Fuck no! I want Alice to stay my girl, not run off fucking screaming.”

Jack shook his head. “Oh well can't have everything I guess.”

Alex snorted. “Well yes, you can, but I'm not willing to fucking humiliate myself. Anyway, I invited Dale and Sandra too. They're going to meet us there and we can all look fucking stupid.”

Jack smiled. “I think Harley would love it, so yes count us in.”

*

A little while later Jack was sitting on the couch with Harley, his arm around her shoulders chuckling as he watched Alex while he tried to one-handedly act out something neither Jack nor Harley had been able to figure out as the two couples played charades. Jack leaned in to Harley and whispered.

“I think he's suppose to be miming Rudolph the red-nose reindeer, but I'm having too much fun watching him prance around to guess!”

Harley laughed leaning against his shoulder. “I think you're right puddin! Though I agree with you, watching Alex parody having a red nose is hilarious!”

Alice was beside herself with the giggles. Jack and Harley put their heads together laughing when Jack's phone rang. Jack reached for the phone, a new slick phone with a purple and gold case that Alex had picked up for him.

Alex gave Jack a dirty look. “Oh I know you two aren't even fucking trying to guess and now a phone call? I call a fucking foul!”

Alice and Harley were both laughing as Jack answered. “Jack here.”

“Fucking Rudolph...oh, I don't even want to know. Anyway... Merry Christmas to my current favorite nephew!” Aunt Agatha's voice came over the phone with a jolly laugh and maybe a slight slur of drunkenness Jack thought.

He smiled. “How's my favorite Auntie?”

“Oh, I'm fine sugar. Had old Alfred bring me a bottle of your best bourbon and some cookies. I'm having a grand time. Bruce is still asleep. You won't believe how late that brother of yours came in last night, or should I say this morning? Anyway must have been some date!” Agatha laughed. “Anyway, I called you to ask Harley if she wants to go dress shopping tomorrow? We'll just throw a wig on her, it'll be great!” Agatha laughed again, the sound becoming muffled as she stopped to take a sip of something.

Jack lowered the phone. “Auntie Ag wants to know if you want to go shopping for dresses tomorrow?”

Harley beamed in response. “I would love to! Can Alice and Sandra come?” Harley looked over at Alice. “Are you free tomorrow?”

Alice's smile was broad as she nodded. “I actually am!”
Jack chuckled. “Harley wants to bring her girlfriends, Alice and Sandra.”

“Oh the more the merrier I say! Tell Harley I'll pick her up outside your building around one pm...I don't even want try to wake up before noon.” The older woman laughed.

Jack snickered. “I'm so glad I can be your call service. I'll let her know.”

“Good boy Jackie! All right you dears have fun, eat drink and be merry!” Agatha laughed again and hung up.

Jack smiled wrapping his arm around Harley's shoulders. “Not sure how I feel about you picking out a new dress without me.” He gave her a little pout.

Harley leaned against him reaching up to run her finger over his bottom lip giggling softly. “Just think how fun it will be to see it on the day.”

Jack kissed her forehead with a whispered. “Well, that's very true. I love you sweets.”

“Mm...I love you puddin.”

Evening came quickly and soon the four of them were off for the skating rink. Jack had on a long black coat on with a black fedora pulled low over his features, the only feature on the hat that indicated it was Jack was the playing card he had stuck in the brim, the Joker which he told Harley he always found to be his favorite card in any card game. Harley had on a burgundy knee-length coat with a matching cloche hat over her blonde hair. Both of them wore sunglasses regardless of the fact that it was evening, but no one in Gotham would find this little feature strange on the two well-dressed people and so Jack and Harley were able to leave the building without anyone noticing that they were Jack Wayne and Harleen Quinzel.

When they made their way out to the parking garage, Alex and Alice were waiting for them in a black car. Alex rolled down the window with a wink when he saw them. The one-armed man sat in the drivers seat. “Get in ya' filthy animals! We're going fucking skating!!”

Alice smacked Alex in his shoulder, but she was chuckling. Jack and Harley laughed, piling into the back of the black 2018 Cadillac CTS-V. Alex grinned over his shoulder at them once they were in the back seat.

“Like this little Christmas present? From one of my customers. Fucking nice, eh?” Alex nodded grinning from ear to ear.

“What'd they do?” Jack asked while admiring the interior of the car.

“Oh, he thought he could fucking cheat me. Now he thinks he can fucking buy me to let him keep his balls. Little does he know, I can't fucking be bought; which is why he is probably having his fucking balls kicked to the roof of his mouth right now. He's just lucky it's fucking Christmas!” Alex laughed and started the engine which purred to life. The speakers came to life, the sounds of Flo-Rida filled the interior singing “Low.”

Alex stepped on the gas and sped out of the parking garage as fast as the car allowed.

*

The Sky skating rink was a large building that actually contained two skating rinks, each 12,000 square feet, along with a huge parking lot, a gear shop, and a small restaurant. The Gotham City Giants played and practiced here, which was why the outside of the rink was plastered with the Gotham City Giants logo. The rink also had free skating, figure skating lessons and competitions as well as ice skating camps.

When their group arrived at the rink, the place was quiet, closed for the holiday. Jack and Harley were the first to spot Dale and Sandra waiting outside the building, cuddled together by the doors, both of them dressed in thick bubble coats, scarves around their faces and winter hats pulled down low over their ears. The snow was coming down a little heavier, the parking lot lights catching the flakes and making them sparkle in the light. Alex pulled up near the entrance and parked the car, leaving tracks in the fresh snow. Sandra waved when she saw the car. The next moment everyone pilled out into the wintery outside. “Merry Christmas everyone!” Sandra grinned, continuing to wave.

Harley hopped out of the car and waved back enthusiastically. “SANDRA!!” she yelled before racing over to throw her arms around the bigger woman. Sandra caught her lifting the much smaller woman off her feet.

Dale still didn't quite look himself; there was still a haunted look about his eyes, as if he were still struggling with the turn his life had taken. But his wrist was now out of the sling, though still in a cast and there was a certain happiness about him now that he and Sandra had moved in together over the last few days. He smiled and inclined his head.

“Hey everyone.”

Jack strolled up and wrapped his arms around the big man, giving him a sincere hug. “Nice to see you Dale. You doing okay?”

Dale shrugged. “Yeah, I'm getting there. Sandra's helping.” The big man smiled gently.

Jack gave the man another squeeze. “It's good to have a good woman to love and who loves you in return.” Jack glanced over at Harley, keeping an arm around Dale, but his eyes were soft for a moment as he stared at her before returning his attention to Dale, patting the big man on the stomach. “I'll be back on my feet soon. I know I said it before, but it bears repeating; I promise, after what you did for me Dale, I'll take care of you and Sandra.”

Dale paled for a moment before he nodded.

Alex grinned walking over to the two men. “Okay guys. Let's go make fools of ourselves on the fucking ice. Giving our ladies a good laugh is almost as good as sweeping them off their feet to guarantee we all get fucking lucky tonight!”

Alex led the way to the main doors. He knocked, doing a strange rhythm before the door was pushed open and a little elderly man opened the door and poked his head out. The elderly man had long white hair—despite his bald spot directly on top of his head—tied at the nape of his neck. He wore a janitor's navy blue uniform.

“Hey Mr. Alex, right on time. Come on in!” The man stepped aside letting everyone into the building.

Alex grinned. “Hey Clint! Thanks for opening the doors man. Everyone this is Clint the fucking janitor, but a man of class and pretty damn good with the dice.”
Clint grinned nodding to everyone before taking Alex's hand and shaking it while he spoke. “Right this way. Got the music you sent over set up Alex and everything is ready to go. Kate and Darrel showed up about half an hour ago with the popcorn cart and the cotton candy machine, and Mike came over to do the lighting; so we were all just waiting for you and your friends to arrive.”

Alex grinned when Alice made a little squeak of surprise. He turned to her. “See, I remembered what your two favorite treats are...”

“But I just said that in passing!” Alice seemed shocked, but Alex grinned at her pulling her close with his one hand going around her waist. “I remember fucking everything you say,” he said quietly before he kissed her.

Jack giggled watching Alex and Alice.

“Our little boy is in love,” he said as he put his arm around Harley's shoulders grinning from ear to ear like a proud father. Harley put her hands together against her cheek. “Oh honey, they grow up so fast.”

Alex glanced over at him. “You're a fucker, Jack Wayne.”

Jack grinned. “Yes I am.”

Both men laughed.

“All right fuckers and girls who are stupidly with us...let's go skate!” Alex led the way into the skating rink.

*

Deadmau5’s “Slow down, Start over” played over the speakers as a rainbow of colored lights danced across the ice. The music was thumping when Jack finished tying his skates and glided onto the ice with the ease of experience, taking Harley's hand just as she stood up and pulling her along with him. He twirled around, taking her hands, grinning at her while he skated backwards, moving with ease, his hips swaying to the music. Harley giggled, unable to take her eyes off him. Jack held his fingers against hers; she trusted that he wouldn't let go of her hands or lead her astray while Jack glided her across the ice. She swayed to the music too, grinning at her husband, her hips picking up Jack's rhythm. They slowly built up speed, skating faster until Jack let go of one of her hands and, like a dancer, he flowed backwards, then twisted around until he was skating beside her. He kept hold of her one hand, then with a gentle tug, he pulled her up onto his thighs. Harley followed his lead, instinctively knowing what Jack expected her to do. She brought her left leg up, Jack caught her just under her knee and pulled her close, giving her a little lift onto his thighs. He kept hold of her one hand, then with a gentle tug, he pulled her up onto his thighs. Harley bent both knees and rested them easily against his thighs at the same moment she threw her right arm over her head in an elegant move like she had seen most dancers do, her left arm around Jack's shoulders. She arched her back like she had seen figure-skaters do while Jack easily balanced her, arching back just a little to provide counter balance.

He laughed with pleasure setting her easily back on her skates, the two of them taking a turn around the rink holding hands still and swaying along with the music.

Alex, who had seen their “fancy” skating move, yelled at them as they skated by. “Fucking showoffs!”

Jack laughed, holding Harley's hand as they skated pass Alex and Alice. They both, at the same time, gave Alex the middlefinger, laughing as they zipped pass. Alex grinned giving them the finger Jack spun Harley around, this time holding her around the waist as he lifted her into the air, doing a slow spin and holding her above him. His eyes danced in delight, his gaze only on her. If lifting her aggravated his shoulder wound, Jack gave no indication. He spun her around one more time before he placed her back on her feet, but this time he brought her up beside him, his right hand holding her right hand in his, her arm extended across his chest. Harley placed her left hand at her hip and Jack placed his left hand over the top of Harley's hand, lacing his fingers with hers. They skated side by side, as if they had always been skating together, the two of them smiling into each others eyes.

Jack leaned in and stole a quick kiss while the two of them glided around the rink.

“How would you feel about going out tomorrow night, just the two of us Harls?” Jack asked.

They glided in a circle, flowing easily over the ice. (The music changed to “In My Mind” by M86 and Susie Q played over the speakers while the lights changed to a deep blue and purple). They skated past Sandra who was helping Dale to keep his balance on the skates, the two of them staying near the entrance to the rink. Sandra had her arm around Dale's waist, the two of them laughing, sharing an intimate moment together. On the other side of the rink, Alex was skating with Alice, doing a pretty fair job of skating while Alice skated around him smiling and laughing at whatever it was that Alex was saying to her. Harley, who had glanced over to the others, smiled back at Jack.

“What did you have in mind puddin?” she asked, quirking her brow at him.

“Well I thought it was time for some retribution my sweets. Thought we might pay a visit to good old Nurse Mallory, now that we're free,” Jack confided, releasing her left hand. He spun her out in a dancers' move.

“Oh, you know, start tying up some loose ends before our wedding and the end of the year. A little present for my sweets. First we find that bitch Mallory, find out if I left that orderly Daisy alive...maybe seek out a few others, other orderlies, nurses, guards...we do have the rest of the wee—might as well spread the holiday cheer.” Jack kissed her fingers before releasing her hand, wagging his eyebrows at her. Harley giggled with delight. “That sounds perfect puddin!! I would like to start the new year with a clean slate.”

Jack spun her around into his arms, skating up to the back wall where he pressed the length of his body up against hers. Jack's eyes swept over her face, lingering on her lips.

“That's what I thought too, my pumpkin, a clean slate for our new lives.”

She sighed wrapping her arms around his waist, sliding her hands down Jack’s back to grip his rear. “I do wish I knew for sure if Crane was alive or dead...if he's alive, I want to know where he went…”

Jack kissed her lips, nipping them gently. “No worries sweets. That can be our new year's resolution! Find and torture Crane before we kill him.”

Harley purred. “Mmm...I like the sound of that puddin.”

Jack chuckled, nipping at her chin with a light brush of his teeth. “I thought you might.”

Then he kissed her. A deep, knee-wobbling kiss that made Harley's insides turn to butterflies.

“Hey if you two are going to make out, go to the fucking back of the skating rink where the rest of us don't have to fucking see it!” Alex yelled as he and Alice skated by. Jack didn't stop kissing her, instead he just threw his arm behind him and gave Alex the finger, which was greeted with laughter.

*

The next morning Bruce was downstairs having tea with Alfred when Agatha came into the kitchen, bursting into the room like a rampaging buffalo.

“Well there you are Bruce. Didn't think to see you up this early after you came in so late last night.” Agatha floated over to Alfred giving him a big lipsticked kiss on the cheek.

“Oh Alfie, sweetie, can a girl get some eggs and a pot of very strong coffee?”

Alfred’s cheeks turned bright red. “There is a pot already brewing Miss Wayne.”

“Oh, you are a dream Alfred. If I ever decide to settle down, you are my first choice for a husband!” Agatha grinned hurrying over to the pot of coffee, pulling a mug down from one of the cabinets and pouring herself a cup of black coffee.

Bruce watched her as she chugged the coffee down without adding any additional flavor to it.

“Going out today?” he asked taking a sip of his tea.

She smiled. “Yes I am actually. Going to do a little shopping. You know, after-Christmas sales.” She smiled taking a seat while she waited for her eggs which Alfred had begun cooking, sunny side up just as she liked them with some crisp toast.

“What are your plans today nephew? Searching for your brother?” She said this with a tone of voice Bruce wasn’t sure he understood. He detected a slight hostility under the words, but something else he couldn’t quite put his finger on.

“I'm going to the police to file a missing persons report on Jack and Dr. Harleen Quinzel.” Bruce sipped his tea again. Agatha frowned, but nodded. “Oh, already? Well, good luck with that, I hope the Gotham police prove better in finding your brother and his fiancee than they are with solving any other crimes in Gotham.”

She gathered up her mug of coffee after refilling it, and her plate of eggs giving Bruce a smile and blowing a kiss to Alfred before she left the kitchen.

Bruce watched her go with a frown. “That wasn't the reaction I was expecting,” he said glancing at Alfred.

“Your aunt is a very...unique individual,” Alfred said sagely with a smile.

“I know that, but I thought she would be happy about me filing a report or at least interested, especially since she came back to Gotham just to get after me about Jack. I don't know...I just expected more of a reaction.”

“Perhaps she is distracted?” Alfred offered picking up his tea.

Bruce's brow furrowed. “Maybe.”

Jack was lying on the bed, on his stomach, his chin in his hands, dressed only in his black pajama pants watching Harley as she dressed. He was upset that she was going without him, partly because he wanted to help her shop for a dress, but mostly because he didn't want her out of his sight. He thought he would be all right with it, but he was feeling anxious about her being out there without him, unprotected. It was enough to drive him mad, but he kept his fear under control. He didn't want to spoil this outing for her because he could tell she was excited. Still, he didn't want to let her out of his sight after everything that had happened to them. He didn't trust anyone else to watch out for her, protect her but him...

Which was why Alex had hired someone to shadow them at Jack's request, a bodyguard named Slade Wilson who was an acquaintance of Alex's and someone Alex had hired in the past. Jack was just impressed that Alex was able to find someone on such short notice. Slade was to stay close, but not to let any of them know he was trailing them, which was why Alex had slipped Wilson in to be the ladies' driver. Jack knew his Aunt wouldn't be driving herself around Gotham, so with a little work from Alex and his connections, Wilson would be the ladies' driver and invisible bodyguard. This was the only reason Jack was willing to let Harley out of his sight. Alex had assured him that Wilson was one of the best, he could be trusted as long as he was paid, and if he was paid well, the man was a perfectionist. Jack still didn't like it, but it would do...it was the only way he was letting her out of his sight.

Harley smiled softly, finishing up braiding her hair into two braided tails that rested on her shoulders before she pulled the grey beanie down over her head and put on the fake heavy black framed glasses that she had requested from Alex. Jack watched her, amazed at how such a little accessory as a pair of glasses could so dramatically change her appearance. She was also wearing a pair of skinny jeans, a white collared shirt with a large shapeless beige sweater over that and a pair of high-top tennis shoes. She looked cute Jack thought, though no one would mistake her for the Harley Quinn that had been running around Gotham with Jack Wayne.

She turned around with a big grin. “How do I look?”

“Like you should be taking my coffee order,” Jack said with an amused grin. “Mm...I'll take my coffee in bed thank you very much,” Jack playfully growled at her.

Harley giggled and stuck her tongue out at him before she stood up and came over to flop down on the bed next to him.

“You all right?” she asked reaching out to stroke her fingers through his shaggy hair. Jack closed his eyes and leaned into her touch. “I'm fine. Just makes me uncomfortable to have you out of my sight right now.”

“I'll be with your aunt,” Harley said gently.

“I know sugar bear, but...no one can protect you like I can,” Jack said soft taking her hand in his, kissing the inside of her palm. The press of his lips sent a warm tickle up her spine and through her body. If she wasn't already dressed and it wasn't so close to time for her to go...she would jump him right now.

Instead Harley smiled. “I know Jack.”

He sighed. “I'll be fine. Just hurry back.”

“I will. Alex is coming over to hang out with you right?” Harley asked and Jack nodded. “Yeah, we have a few things to discuss...about our future. Maybe play some cards...” Harley nodded running her fingers down his spine, the tips of her fingers stroking back and forth. Her touch eased the tension in his body. She leaned down to kiss his shoulder.

“Did you find Nurse Mallory's address?”
Jack turned to look up at her beaming. “I forgot to tell you didn't I? Yes I did.”

Harley giggled. “I'm looking forward to tonight.”

Jack smiled, “Me too my sweets, me too.”

Harley leaned down to kiss the top of Jack’s head, but he surprised her, rolling over and swiftly grabbing her which caused Harley to squeal as he rolled her on top of him. He wrapped his arms around her once he had her flush with his body and kissed her passionately. Harley moaned wrapping her arms around his head, straddling his body, her hands tangling in his hair, returning his kiss with just as much passion. They only came up for air when there was a buzz at the door. Jack held her against him continuing to kiss her, his teeth brushing against her tongue and dropped his hands to her rear where he squeezed, pressing her hips against him.

They both heard the door open and Alex yelled. “I swear, you guys better have some fucking clothes on!!”

Harley pulled away from Jack’s mouth only far enough to laugh softly. “That means Alice is waiting for me. I gotta go puddin. I love you.”

Jack brushed his nose against hers licking her mouth. “I love you too Harls. Have fun and be careful. Get back early enough we can nap before we head out tonight, maybe a little something else since you're leaving me all hot and bothered now.”

She giggled and placed a kissed the tip of his nose before getting to her feet. “I'll be back before you miss me.”

Jack grinning sitting up and grabbing his t-shirt from the side of the bed with a laugh. “I'm holding you to that. Go, scoot...” He managed to reach over and smack her rear before she was out of reach. Harley squeaked and laughed heading out to the apartment's living room.

Jack heard Alex out in the living room say. “Hey Harley. Alice is waiting in the garage for you.”

“Thanks Alex, you boys have fun.” Harley waved and headed out the door.

A couple of seconds later, Jack entered the living room. Alex, who had walked into the kitchen carrying a canister of coffee he had brought with him, stopped in the middle of pulling the coffeemaker out from the wall to stare at Jack.

Jack stopped in his tracks, stared down at himself, then back at Alex. “What's up?”

“You know, except for your asylum uniform, I don't think I've actually ever seen you dressed so...basic.” Alex frowned as he turned back to the coffeemaker. “It's a little weird.”

Jack laughed while he walked over to flop onto the couch. “Sorry I offend.”

Alex laughed with a shake of his head. “No man, just weird. Hey I brought a baseball bat you asked for...do I want to know what you and Harley are going to do with it?”

“Nope,” Jack said propping his socked feet on the coffee table.

Alex finished with the coffeemaker, hit the on switch and nodded. “Okay, good enough for me. So what the fuck did you want to talk about without the ladies present?”

Jack chewed his bottom lip before he spoke. “I wanted to talk to you about the Red Hood.”
Alex turned around and stepped into the living room. “The fucking Red Hood? You mean that old Gotham gang from the ‘40’s?”

Jack smiled. “Yes. I'm thinking about bring the Hood back to Gotham.”

Alex walked over and flopped into the chair opposite Jack. “You're fucking serious aren't you?”

Jack nodded and leaned forward, his elbows on his knees, hands folded between them. “Oh, I am—deadly serious. This town needs a new class of criminal and I'm going to bring it to them. Bruce thinks I'm bad news...the bad seed in the Wayne family that needs to be locked up. Well, I'm going to show him just how bad I can be.” Jack smiled slowly, a wickedly nasty smile that spread over his face and gave Alex the shivers. “I'm going to bring Gotham something new...something deadly.”

*

Aunt Agatha and all three of the other women were piled into a limo. Agatha was dressed in all black, black wide legged slacks, a black silk blouse and a wide brim black hat, but she wore a coat of shockingly bright purple with a large, gold flower lapel pin. She also wore a pair of almost outrageously round black sunglasses which she told Harley was to allow her to drink all day and never show it.

“So my kittens! We are going to go dress shopping at Neil Richards' wedding dress salon The Mad Mod!” Agatha giggled.

Alice sucked in a breath and Sandra gasped, but Harley looked confused.

“Neil Richards? Mad Mod?” She looked between everyone.

“Oh my sweet, sweet darling!! You don't know who Neil Richards is?” Agatha, who was sitting across from the three ladies took Harley's hand and patted it. “That's all right my dear, your Auntie will teach you the ways of fashion.” She giggled. “Though I'm sure our Jackie has been keeping you well dressed? I mean, before the unfortunate vacation at Arkham. The boy has always known how to dress!”

Harley smiled. “Actually, yes he has. Jack's been picking most of my clothing. He has such wonderful taste.” She beamed.

Agatha nodded. “Jackie always was the one with the eye for fashion and a flair for the drama that comes with it. Bruce was always the more somber of the two. I swear that boy doesn't have a stick of color in his closet! He only wears black or dark grey! Travesty! Anyway, yes I called this morning and Richard agreed to have us come in. I got the boy his start, introduced him around when he was an up and coming fashion designer, so this is the least he could do for me!”

*

Neil Richards bridal bouquet, Mad Mod, located on west 20th was a large shop that took up nearly as much floor space as Kleinfield's, which was located on the same street. The limo pulled up and their driver, Mr. Wilson, who was well over six-foot wearing a black suit, with dark blonde hair and hard blue eyes, stepped out of the vehicle and opened the door for the ladies. Agatha exited first running her hand along Wilson's arm when she exited the vehicle. “My, my they do make drivers much better here in Gotham I must say. You wouldn't happen to be free tonight Mr. Wilson?”

Wilson grunted. “Sorry ma'am, I have another job.”

“Oh that is too bad. I would certainly like to climb your tree.” Agatha laughed especially when their driver seemed to blush. “All right, come along ladies! Time to buy a dress!”

The inside of the shop was all white, gold and crystal; every inch of the shop was a testament to bridal elegance. Harley's eyes widened, as did Alice's and Sandra's who were standing beside her as Agatha turned throwing her arms out. “Tada!!”

A few seconds later a man wearing a 1960's British Mod-inspired suit which consisted of a slim-fitted tonic and mohair fabric suit along with narrow pants and lapels all in a mix of greens and reds, matched with a red turtleneck, (the bright colors stood out sharply against the rest of the store) came rushing toward them. He was shorter than Agatha by a good two to three inches, with flaming thick red hair that he wore shaved on the sides, and a thick, red mustache that curled on the edges accompanied by thick, black, horn-rimmed glasses.

“AGATHA!! Darling!!” His thick London accent surprised the younger women as Neil rushed toward Agatha and threw his arms around her. “OH, I was so happy to get your call this morning!! Why didn't you tell me you were in Gotham??”

Agatha hugged the shorter man in return. “Oh darling, I only arrived a few days ago. I'm here to do some shopping.”

Neil held Agatha back for a moment his hands on her shoulders his mouth hanging open. “Are you getting married??? Has the world come to a end?”

Agatha laughed. “Oh, God forbid! No, no...a...a friend of mine, her daughter is my...my God-daughter and I wanted to buy her a dress. Now we do have a little problem, she will be getting married this weekend. It's all so romantically whirlwind you know. But, Neil, darling, can you save us? Can you find us the most romantic, sexy dress for this weekend and price, my dear, is not an issue...go above and beyond!” Agatha threw her arms up dramatically.

Neil giggled. “Oh my lovely darling, I always did like shopping with you. Now...” He turned his attention to the three young women behind Agatha. “Which of you darlings is the lucky bride?”

Harley shyly put her hand up. “Ah...me.”

Neil rushed over snatching the hat and the glasses off Harley so quickly she didn't realize what had happened until they were gone. He frowned looking at her then gasped as recognition hit. “Wait a...”

Agatha rushed over grabbing the glasses and tossing them back to Harley. “Now Neil, sweetie...this has to be secret.”

Neil grinned and puffed his lips up with air for moment. “OMG...all right, come with me ladies. Let's set you up in one of our private, elite dressing rooms and get started.”

Neil motioned with his hands, ushering the ladies forward. Agatha hung back. “Now Neil...”

Neil grinned. “I know exactly who she is! I saw her picture in the paper...oh months ago, that is Jack Wayne's fiancee! But I thought they were both in Arkham?”

“It's a long story, but I really need you to be quiet about this.” Agatha frowned at him, her eyes serious.

“Oh Aggie please,” he assured her. “A word will not leave these lips!”

Bruce drove by watching as his Aunt and three younger women exited the limo she had left the manor in, not that Agatha being driven in a limo was all that surprising, but something about it had just rubbed Bruce wrong; he just knew something was up. He frowned not recognizing any of the young women, not that he had been able to get a very good look as he drove by and they were all bundled up against the winter chill...but why was his aunt at a bridal shop with three strangers? He had caught a glimpse of the driver and thought he recognized the man, but he couldn't be sure...

He wanted to stop and go in, but he knew he would stand out and he did not need the Gotham rumor mill talking about seeing Bruce Wayne in a bridal shop. Perhaps he was being paranoid. His aunt had a lot of friends, she could simply be buying a dress for a friend or the daughter of a friend, all of which were very plausible where his aunt was concerned. Bruce frowned and shook his head. Something just felt off though...

Jack sipped his coffee watching Alex.

Alex frowned. “Well, if you want to be the fucking Red Hood—and want to start your own criminal organization—you should start small, build the brand as it were. But,” Alex shook his head. “All this to get back at your brother?”

Jack looked up at the ceiling in thought. “It's more than that Alex. I have always known I was meant for more...for bigger things. Being the youngest son of a billionaire surgeon living in the shadow of how great my father was, leaving under the tragedy of their murder and then there's Bruce...talking about living under a shadow! Bruce's perfect shadow, the billionaire playboy, man about town, always doing good deeds to balance out his playboy lifestyle, while his crazy little brother just continues to become worse, a blight on the family name. I'm just as smart as Bruce if not smarter, but I knew I could never live up to any of that. But this...I've always been cast as the “bad Wayne.” So, time to live up to the title.”

Jack's smile spread across his face making Alex uncomfortable, but he nodded. “Okay man, what do you want me to do?”

“I want you to find me a few expendable people.” Jack chuckled.

The ladies had been at the bridal shop for a couple of hours, but the hundreds of dresses had finally been narrowed down to one dress, a white lace and tulle A-line with cap sleeves and a chapel train. Agatha walked around Harley as she stood in the wedding dress.

“Wow!! My dear, you are so beautiful!! This is just perfect! Do you like it honey?” Agatha stopped to stand in front of Harley who was blushing. She glanced towards Alice then Sandra, both of them looked smitten with the dress too. Harley ran her hands down it. It seemed so strange to be wearing another wedding dress...she never had the opportunity to wear the one she had purchased with Jack and the one she had actually gotten married in had been bought for her at a discount store. Agatha was right, however; her first dress wouldn't be “right,” but this dress was beautiful, fresh...unstained by any of the events that had occurred. Harley grinned. “It is perfect.”

Agatha squealed. “Oh darling, you are just gorgeous!! I know just the person to do your hair too! How do you feel about a Grecian style, with ringlets around you face, and a few around your neck and shoulders, and some simple flowers in your hair! Oh, and some diamond earrings! Mmm...we still need something borrowed, something blue...OH I know just the thing for the borrowed!! You can borrow one of my bracelets! I have the perfect one too! It's wrapped in single- and baguette-cut diamonds!! It will look lovely on your wrist! Much better than a necklace—don't want to spoil that gorgeous neckline. Besides, I'm sure Jackie would appreciate getting to see your long lovely neck...hmmm...”

Aunt Agatha fluttered around Harley until Harley's neck was starting to hurt from keeping up with Jack's aunt circling.

Alice spoke up when Agatha stopped to take a breath. “I might have an idea for something blue...”

All the women turned to Alice. Alice blushed at the sudden attention. “Well, I...I could make some paper flowers, like forget-me-nots...in a bouquet since I know flowers are going to be hard to come by this time of year...or at least really expensive and well...”

Agatha gasped. “That's perfect!! I LOVE IT!! What do you think Harley?”

Harley smiled. “I actually like that idea too Alice, thank you.”

Alice grinned.

Agatha clapped her hands. “Now we just have one more thing to do before we leave. I'm assuming these two are your bridesmaids?” Agatha glanced over expectantly at Harley gesturing at Alice and Sandra.

Harley looked startled, but nodded. “Ah...yes.”

Alice and Sandra both looked thrilled.

“Well then, you both need dresses!! And I need something to wear since I'm going to give you away to my nephew. I mean, yes I know you're already married and all, but what's the fun of renewing your vows if you don't get to be given away! Come ladies!! Harley, you must tell me: what colors do you like?”

Agatha charged out of the dressing room before Harley could utter a word. Harley giggled. “I guess whatever color you like Aunt Agatha...” she said to no one in particular.

*

Jack was pacing the apartment in a fit of rage. No...he was angry, but he had to admit he was mostly scared, terrified, the fear of losing her again came rushing over him, the nightmares he had been plagued with as of late washed over him as well. Every nightmare had involved him losing Harley...every single one. He should never had let her go without him! He should have insisted, he couldn't trust anyone, not even his aunt or a hired bodyguard to keep her safe! He couldn't lose her, not again...It had been hours since Harley left!! Hours!! He had texted his aunt's phone once, but she had texted back. “Keep YR breeches On have her back soon.”

It had now been nearly six hours! Alex had left four hours ago and Jack had been pacing ever since like a caged tiger. The urge to leave was so strong that he had walked out of the door several times only to turn around and come back...what if she returned and he wasn't here? He had received one text, he assumed from Harley, though the number was his aunt's phone, stating she would be home soon, but that had been over an hour ago.

In the mean time, he had done what he could to distract himself. He knew he was overreacting, but he couldn't seem to stop the fear from bubbling up, which only made his hatred of Crane more acute.
Jack decided to occupy himself with physical activities, sit-ups, push-ups, he had even tried to jog in place. The urge to smash things or pull the kitchen knives out and throw them at the wall had been almost too much to resist, but he had...reluctantly. He did hit the wall with his fist a couple of times which had aggravated his shoulder wound enough that the pain calmed him down for a little while.

*

It was close to six in the evening when the door opened and Harley came rushing into the apartment, panting as she struggled with several bags.

She slammed the door shut behind her with her foot, looking around frantically, having trouble breathing. Her chest felt constricted; she needed Jack. She had almost been in tears before his aunt finally brought her back—in tears and on the verge of violence. If it wasn't for Sandra noticing how frantic she was becoming and actually requesting they take Harley home, Harley might have done something unforgivable...but she was here and Jack was nowhere to be seen.

“Jack? Jack! I'm back! I'm so sorry!! Your aunt wouldn't bring me home until we had done everything, the dresses, not just for me, but she insisted on dresses for everyone. I keep telling her I needed to get back, but then she wanted to buy shoes and see a hair dresser and a makeup person she knows...She just didn't understand...then she wanted me to see...” Harley had hot tears in her eyes. Being away this long had been unbearable and while Jack’s aunt was nice enough and nice to be helping them, and she had enjoyed picking out the wedding dress, Aunt Agatha just didn't understand. Harley needed to get back to Jack. Her heart had been gnawing at her, she had started to feel panicked and empty without him, her chest aching with her need to be with him and the fear that simmered under the surface, the fear that she would lose him, that something would take him from her. She had chided herself for ever going without him!! How had she been so stupid!

Harley walked further into the apartment her eyes darting around, but she didn't see him anywhere. She dropped off the few packages she had on the floor, which contained a variety of things that Aunt Agatha had insisted on buying for her, the shoes to go with the wedding dress, a sexy corset, garter and stockings to wear underneath and a few other things. There had been so much that Harley wasn't even sure what was all in the bags any more. Then she had insisted on lunch. Harley had tried to ask to borrow a phone but Agatha was such a whirlwind of energy that Harley had only managed to snag the phone from Agatha once to text Jack before his aunt was hauling her off again.

Harley walked into the bedroom, kicking her shoes off as she did so. Now she could hear the sounds of the shower running. She made her way to the bathroom. She could see Jack's silhouette, just barely through the steam covered shower door, one hand leaned against the back wall of the shower, his head under the current.

Harley stepped closer sliding the door open. “Jack?”

Jack's hand snapped out so quickly that Harley didn't react before he had grabbed her by the front of her shirt and hauled her into the shower shoving her up against the wall hard enough to nearly knock the air from her lungs. Harley gasped in surprise the water running down over her face. He reached up yanking the glasses off of her face and threw them out of the shower, the frames skittering across the floor.

Jack held her there, his arm trembling and glaring at her through the thin streams of water spilling out of the showerhead.

He was pressing hard against her chest, keeping her against the wall, the water soaking through her clothing. Harley wrapped her hands around his forearm staring back at him. “Jack? Jack I'm so sorry!!” Tears were now running freely down her face mixing with the shower water. Just seeing him, even though he was upset, seemed to quell the ache in her chest.
That was when she noticed he was trembling. He was angry, she could tell, but he was also scared. “Harley...you...you were gone too long...” Jack's voice was low, dangerous, but there was a quiver of fear in the tone of his voice.

Harley could see the rage in his blue eyes, but it was tempered with fear too. She reached out to cup his face with one hand. “I'm sorry Jack. It will never happen again. I will never leave without you. I swear. It...I had to get back...I just had to, but...Your aunt...she just didn't understand, she doesn't have anyone, doesn't love anyone...she doesn't understand what we have. She doesn't understand us and she wouldn't listen...”

Jack stared at her then he yanked her forward and crushed his mouth against hers.

Harley groaned, wrapping her arms around his neck as the hot water rained down on them, but neither of them cared. Jack began tearing at her clothing, struggling to pull her free of the wet cloth. He yanked her coat off her shoulders; Harley struggled out of her jacket while Jack moved his attentions to her pants. He yanked her pants down. She kicked off her socks (which was a bit of a struggle) then Jack was grabbing her shirt and shirt yanking them up over her head. Harley threw her arms up, helping him to disrobe her. The cloth hit the floor of the shower in great wet sounding plops. His tore at her panties while Harley struggled with her bra, finally kicking her pants and panties down to the floor, until she was finally naked. Jack lifted her up and Harley wrapped her legs around his waist, her hands grabbing fistfuls of his wet hair, her mouth attacking his lips. She was desperate for his attentions.

He carried her out of the shower heading toward the bed where he dropped her naked and wet on the edge of the mattress. There was no slow seduction, no teasing, he grabbed one of her legs and pushed the limb back against her body.

Jack groaned, his voice edged with pain and desperation. “You're really here, right Harls? You're here...every night I dream I lost you...”

Harley moaned back. “Feel me Jack...I'm real, I'm here...”

Harley spread her other leg wide reaching up to wrap her hand around his hand which was pressing her leg forward. Jack grabbed his erection in his other hand, directing himself into her, sliding the head of his erection against her wet opening before he pushed into her with a hard thrust. Harley cried out, her fingers over his hand dug into his skin while her other hand dug into the damp comforter. Jack laid her leg against his shoulder, leaning down, his hands on either side of her head as she shoved himself inside her as deeply as she could. He held it for a moment, their two bodies connected, the pleasure of filling her, feeling her around him; he felt complete.

Harley groaned softly sharing that feeling of completeness. She needed him inside her like she needed to breathe.

Jack began to move again, thrusting his pelvis hard and fast against her, slamming into her, his breath coming in pants, a tear slowly trailing down his cheek from the corner of one eye. Harley reached up grabbing fistfuls of his hair in her hands forcing his mouth down to hers. They kissed with desperation borne from fear, pain and need, the fear of existing without the other.

Jack pulled away from her mouth, gasping for breath. He stayed away from her mouth long enough to grab her other leg, biting her knee as he did. Harley groaned when Jack grabbed her hips, yanking for forward against him, thrusting hard and fast. Harley grabbed onto the edge of the mattress and cried out when he pressed so deeply into her that she thought she might see stars. She could feel the swift build of pleasure between them.
Harley came hard, her orgasm rippling over her causing her whole body to arch off the bed. Jack leaned in and followed her, his orgasm bursting from him in an explosion of pleasure that had him collapsing on top of her.

Jack wrapped his arms around her holding her tight, his head against her chest, both of them flowing, sinking off the bed to the floor. Harley wrapped herself around him laying her head on his shoulders, their bodies still connected. “I’m so sorry Jack.”

“Shh...” He ran his hands up and down her back holding her close to him. “You’re here now.”

Later that same night Jack was behind the wheel of a series-4 black BMW provided by Alex with no questions asked. He was drumming his black gloved fingers on the steering wheel in time to the music, holding a cigarette between his lips. Harley was next to him as Kaleida's “Think” played on the Cd player, tapping her fingers along the baseball bat that lay across her lap in time to the song blowing a bubble with her bubblegum and popping it. Jack chuckled. “Where on earth did you get that?”

Harley grinned. “Alice.”

Jack nodded. “You are adorable my sweet little cookie!”

Harley giggled then smiled at the bat before glancing over at Jack. “You have everything?”

Jack nodded. “Yep, everything was in the car like Alex promised, zip-ties and a ball gag.”

Harley giggled. “Perfect!”

They were driving toward the Gotham Heights neighborhood located in the northern part of the city. Nurse Mallory lived in a five-story walk up apartment building on a modest street in a modest neighborhood.

Jack smiled as they drove past, took the cigarette out and released a long stream of smoke. “Oh look Harls, it's one of those little places where nothing bad ever happens.” Harley giggled. “It is! It's really too bad that something bad is going to happen.” Harley put on a fake high-pitched voice. “I can't believe something like that happened here! This is such a nice neighborhood! Nothing bad ever happens here! Mallory was such a nice, quiet person...blada...blada...”

Jack snorted on a laugh. He stuck the cigarette back between his teeth holding it in place while he spun the wheel and turned down an alley next to the building, hiding the car in deeper shadows. They both stepped out of the car blending into the winter darkness themselves. Jack went around to the trunk, popping it open and pulled out a tire iron before he tugged Harley close for a kiss.

They were both dressed in black, with Harley wearing her blonde hair tucked up under a knit cap, wearing a black men's coat that was huge on her and Jack wearing his fedora and black coat from earlier flicking the cigarette butt into the darkness.

They made their way quietly up the steps at the top near the main door. There was a buzz-in system for guests. Jack reached out a gloved hand for the outer door handle, pleased to find that the lock was either broken or no one kept it locked at all. He grinned thinking that after tonight they would think better of leaving the main door unlocked. They both slipped inside without anyone seeing them.

Mallory's apartment was on the third floor. Jack took Harley's hand in his and together, doing their best not to giggle, they made their way up the stairs to the third floor. Once on the third floor Jack and Harley made their way down the hall to where Mallory's apartment was, conveniently located at the end of the hall.

Jack winked at Harley and gave a light knock on the door. When nothing happened, Jack knocked again. This time they heard someone moving in the room then the slide of a chain lock and the door opened. In the crack was the blurry eyed gaze of Nurse Mallory, her hair pulled back in a ponytail, slightly messy indicating that she had most likely been in bed.

“What?”

Jack grinned. “Peekaboo.”

He shoved the door open, snapping the flimsy security chain and wrapping his hand around Mallory's mouth in the same instant, shoving her back into the apartment. He moved so quickly that she didn't have time to react before he had turned her around and was holding her up against him, his gloved hand covering her mouth, the tire iron held across her body. Harley came in behind him and quietly closed the door.

Jack chuckled. “Shhh...don't want to wake the neighbors now do we? Harley, the gag please.”

Harley skipped over and grinned at Mallory, who was dressed in a long t-shirt and pajama pants all in shades of baby blue. Harley wrinkled her nose as she put her hand into the pocket of Jack's coat and came up with the ball gag. Jack removed his hand from Mallory's mouth, but before she could do more than gulp, Harley jammed the gag into her mouth while Jack swiftly zip-tied her wrists behind her back.

“There! Now we can talk before you die,” Jack said pleasantly, shoving Mallory forward and into the apartment's living room. He gave a little push, directed her onto one of the chairs in her living room. There was one lamp on providing a limited amount of light, but the room had the slick style of a modern city dweller. Harley came up to stand next to Jack, held her bat over her shoulder, the two of them standing over Mallory.

Jack took his hat off as did Harley, letting her blonde hair tumble out.

“Hey Mallory, remember us?” Harley asked with a smile then blew a bubble and popped it.

Mallory's eyes went wide and Jack laughed. “Oh Harley, I think she does! “

Harley grinned at Jack. “Well puddin you do have one of those unforgettable faces. You're just so handsome.”

Jack grinned. “Aww...Harls you're gonna make me blush and in front of the nurse!”

Harley giggled.

Jack sighed and looked back at the bound nurse. “I bet you're wondering to yourself, 'Now why are Jack Wayne and Harley Quinn in my apartment? It couldn't possibly be because I was a raging thundercunt of a nurse could it?'” Jack smiled pleasantly tapping his chin in contemplation. “Well Mallory, you would be correct—it is because you're a thundercunt.”

Harley started laughing. “Thundercunt?”

Jack grinned. “I thought it was funny. She is a cock juggling thundercunt.”

Harley snorted on her giggle. “Puddin!! You're terrible.”
“That's one of the many things you love about me.” Jack grabbed her, wrapping his arm around her waist and yanking her against him for a deep passionate kiss.

Harley purred against his lips. “Mm...puddin.”

Mallory watched them in horror, not sure what to do. She couldn't seem to make herself move.

Jack gave Harley's lips a quick lick before returning his attention to Mallory. “I bet you feel pretty helpless right now, don't you? Well, now you understand how Harley and I felt trapped in that fucking asylum under the oh-so-tender care of sadistic people like you, people who are supposed to be helping the mentally ill, but instead you took pleasure in the power you have over them. And that Nurse Mallory, just isn't right, is it pumpkin?”

Harley shook her head with her bottom lips jutting out. “Nope, it isn't.”

Jack nodded. “If only you had been decent, then this might be less painful...but you were a horrible shit, so...”

Jack stepped back with a slight bow to Harley. “If you would my dear. First swing should always go to the lady.”

Harley grinned. “Sure thing puddin.”

Mallory leapt to her feet to run; Harley giggled and swung, using her entire body to swing the bat out, the very tip of the bat catching Mallory in the hip. The woman went down, skidded across the floor face first. Harley stepped over to stand over Mallory. She grabbed the woman by her head and yanked her head back looking her in the eye.

“This is for everything you did to my puddin, bitch.” Harley dropped her head and smiled, holding the bat like a golf club and swung, hitting Mallory in the head with a sickening “thawk” sound of wood hitting flesh and bone.

Harley stepped off of Mallory as Jack came over and lifted her up, pulling her to her feet by the back of her night shirt and setting the woman on her couch. Mallory wobbled, blood running down the side of her face, her eyes rolling and barely staying conscious.

Harley giggled dancing over and swinging her bat, singing.

“My baby's fit like a daydream
Walking with his head down
I'm the one he's walking to
So call it what you want, yeah, call it what you want to My baby's fly like a jet stream
High above the whole scene Loves me like I'm brand new
So call it what you want, yeah, call it what you want to ...”

Jack grinned watching her as she danced around the room swinging her bloody bat around with glee while she sang. He smiled gazing at her lovingly before he let out an almost swoon like sigh and turned his attention back to Mallory.

Jack snapped his fingers in front of her face.

“Ya still with us Mallory?”

Mallory's eyes fluttered. Jack chuckled. “Well good, wouldn't want you to check out too soon now would we? This is all about retribution Mallory, debts being paid. You understand that, right?” He waved the tire iron in front of her. Mallory started to scream around her gag, tried to push herself up, but Jack snapped the tire iron up, catching her under her chin and knocking her back onto the couch. This time, she didn't move.

Jack smiled turning to Harley. “Pumpkin, wanna help me finish up here?”

“Oh sure thing puddin!” Harley came over with a smile her eyes narrowing just a little. “Head or tails?”

Jack smiled. “Ladies choice.”

Harley giggled and kissed his cheek. “You are always so sweet to me puddin.”

“Well, you know I would do anything for you Harls,” Jack said with a grin.

*

An hour later Jack held the door open for Harley. She stepped through, blood splatter on her face and clothes, followed by Jack who was just a blood splattered.

He smiled putting his arm around her shoulders.

“You know Harls. I think we should go back to the apartment, shower and order some sushi.”

“That sounds perfect puddin!” Harley giggled jumping on her toes to plant a kiss on his lips before they headed back down the stairs.
A couple of days later Gotham was under a severe weather alert. The snow that was in the forecast had started to fall and the temperature had fallen below the freezing mark and threatened to drop lower. Jack was bundled up in a black parka with a thick purple turtleneck underneath, a thick fur-lined Bomber hat with the flats down over his ears, and sat behind the wheel of a Jeep Cherokee following close behind an ambulance that was transporting Daisy Maverick, the orderly from Arkham who Jack had beaten in his escape. The medical transport was taking her to a special facility in Blüdhaven to recuperate at the request of her family. But if Jack and Harley had anything to say about it, she was never going to make it.

Harley was dressed in her own fur-lined parka, also in black with a matching Bomber hat, wearing a pair of fleece-lined, red and black argyle patterned leggings with a red sweater underneath, leaned over and put a lit cigarette in Jack's mouth while he drove. He glanced sideways holding the cigarette between his teeth as he grinned, his gloved hands on the wheel, and gave her a wink. “Thanks sweets.”

Harley grinned. “Anything for my puddin!”

She sat back in her seat and picked up her gloves from where she had tossed them onto the dash. She pulled on her pair of red leather gloves before reaching over and sliding the lighter back into his parka's inside pocket, planting a kiss on his cheek as she did so. The street lights briefly caught the hilt of one of Jack's pistols snug in its underarm holster, a Glock 17, just like the two that Harley carried under her parka. The ambulance ahead of them wasn't speeding yet, but they were unaware that they were being chased.

Jack glanced sideways at Harley, pulling out the cigarette. “You got the guns that Alex gave us? I completely forgot to grab them?” He grinned. “I would leave without my head if it wasn't attached.” Harley giggled. “Oh puddin!”

Jack grinned at her making her want to jump him right now...except—car chase. Jack grinned. “I have the pistols on, but I completely forgot the other weapons in the excitement to get moving.”

“Don't you worry puddin! I have them right here!” Harley leaned over and pulled up two sub-machine guns, MP-5s, yanking them out of a large bag she had been carrying.

Jack grinned at her and wink. “You are a doll. I got the best girl in Gotham.”

Harley giggled with a slight reddening of her cheeks. “Aw, thank you puddin.”

“When we get back, I'm going to show you just how much I love ya.”

Harley giggled, wiggling in her seat. They drove for another couple miles, maintaining a safe distance from the ambulance, but keeping within sight. The streets were fairly quiet, but they were looking for a good place to come up alongside the ambulance, a place where they could drive it off the road without being seen. While Jack drove, the radio which had been playing in the background started to play a Britney Spears song. “Oh, I love this song!” Harley giggled and leaned over to turn the radio up louder. She rolled her shoulders back and waited for the music, then sang along.

“...But mama I'm in love with a criminal

And this type of love isn't rational, it's physical Mama please don't cry, I will be all right

All reason aside I just can't deny, I love the guy

He is a villain by the devil's law

He is a killer just for fun, fun, fun, fun...

She winked at Jack as she sang making him laugh. She continued dancing in the front seat and singing along until Jack took a pull on his cigarette, blowing out a stream of smoke holding the burning stick between his fingers. “Okay Harls, get ready; we're going under the bridge.”

Harley stopped singing and nodded setting one of the sub-machine guns back on the floor of the vehicle before picking up the one on her lap. She rolled down the window as Jack switched lanes and maneuvered the Jeep alongside the ambulance. Harley leaned out her window, pulling herself out so that she was sitting halfway out of the window, the submachine gun in hand. Jack reached over and squeezed her knee making her giggle.

“That's my girl.” Jack laughed rolling down his window and threw out his cigarette. Harley leaned back in snagging a quick kiss before she settled herself on the edge, her entire torso out of the window, flakes of snow blowing into the cab. “Ready puddin!” Harley yelled to be heard over the rushing, cold wind.

The ambulance driver was a heavy-set man with a crew-cut named Martin. Martin had a wife, two young daughters and a mistress named Jill. He also had a lover named Jacob. He enjoyed his job arriving on scenes to help people in need and he liked easy transportation jobs like tonight, moving a patient from one facility to another. He wasn't clear on all the details of what happened to the woman in the back, but he gathered from her file, the woman had worked at Arkham Asylum until there was an escape. Martin frowned, sighing in thought. He had seen a segment about the escape on the news, right before Christmas. The news lady with the helmet of blonde hair had put up the pictures and names of each of the escaped patients with warnings about them being dangerous, not to approach, but to call 911; they also gave a list of other numbers. Martin hadn't bothered to write any of them down. Gotham was a big city and the chances of him running into any of them were slim to none.

But what had stuck out in Martin's mind was when the news lady reported about Jack Wayne and his fiancee, Dr. Harleen Quinzel. They had both been in Arkham at the time of the escape, but, unlike the others they didn't list Jack Wayne as an escaped patient. Rather, they had listed him as missing. Same with Dr. Quinzel, who happened to be engaged to Jack Wayne. Missing, as if they had been taken or something.

That had made Martin think, if Jack Wayne didn't have all that money he would probably be on the escapee list too. Guess money could buy all sorts of stuff. He glanced over at his partner, Felicia. She was a tiny auburn headed woman who looked no bigger than his twelve year old daughter. She was a great partner though—quick, smart. She was going to college with plans for medical school. Right now she had her headphones in and was listening to some language tape, trying to teach herself French or something. Martin shook his head looking back out onto the road when movement at his window caught his attention. Martin turned, his eyes going wide when he saw the woman from TV...Harleen Quinzel, sitting halfway out her car window with a submachine gun in her hands. She waved at him, then aimed her machine gun at him with a wide grin and opened fire.

Harley laughed with glee when she shot the driver in a rapid burst of bullets. Blood splattered across the wind-shield and the ambulance immediately veered to the right.

“GOT 'EM PUDDIN!!” Harley giggled, slipping back inside the cab, flakes of snow glittering on her cheeks.

Jack laughed. “That's my girl!”

Harley grinned brightly at his words, then gasped leaning over to turn the radio up. “Oh, I love this song!”

Birdy Nam Nam’s “Dance or Die” filled the cab of the Jeep. Harley started to move to the music, holding her sub-machine gun in one hand and licking her lips while grinning at Jack. Jack waggled his eyebrows at her, smiling and hitting the gas.

* * *

Inside the ambulance, Felicia screamed as Martin's blood splattered her, his body falling over in her direction. She unbuckled herself swiftly, leaning over his dead body to grab the wheel, just barely yanking the wheel to the left. The ambulance skittered against the concrete wall of the tunnel sending sparks flying. She climbed over Martin's body, shoving him out of the way before dropping herself into the driver's seat. She pulled the ambulance back under her control before hitting the gas. She had no idea who was shooting at them or why, but she figured her best bet was to outrun them and get out of the tunnel. In the back of the ambulance, Daisy groaned. “What's going on? Was that a gunshot?”

She tried to sit up, but she couldn't move. Daisy was on a stretcher, strapped down for her safety for the transfer to Blüdhaven. She had been recovering decently from the head trauma she suffered at Arkham, to the amazement of her doctors, and she was well enough to move to Blüdhaven now. Her family had wanted to have her closer, parents, brother, two sisters, and a few cousins. There she would be able start her physical therapy and live with her parents instead of being alone in Gotham.

Daisy was still weak, but her prognosis looked good.

In the back of the ambulance with her were two paramedics, a young Latina woman with short dark hair and a young man, slim with a sort of “boy scout” look to him. They had both screamed when Martin was shot, then did their best to hold on as the ambulance tipped wildly for a moment, swerving along the road, but their patient couldn't see what had happened. Without a word the two paramedics had agreed not to tell her what was going on. The woman, Selma, leaned forward over Daisy checking the straps that held her to the gurney. She glanced at her partner, Jeff, who looked terrified.

Jeff fumbled for a moment before he said, “No, no just a patch of ice on the road. Nothing to worry about. Everything is under control.”

Selma nodded glancing down at Daisy. “Yes...you just relax all right?” She pulled up Daisy's blanket around her shoulders.

* * *

The ambulance came back under the control. Whoever was driving now had hit the gas and began to pull away from them.

Jack hissed. “Damn, someone thinks fast under pressure up there. Ready for another shot sweets?”
Harley winked at him. “You got it puddin.”

Jack laughed and swung the Jeep directly behind the ambulance. He grinned, the lights on the tunnel ceiling catching his perfect white teeth as he hit the gas and slammed the Jeep's fender into the back of the ambulance and shoved the vehicle forward. At the last second, he reached over putting a hand on Harley's chest preventing her from falling forward since she wasn't strapped in. She jerked forward with the movement of the Jeep, but Jack's hand prevented her from hitting the dash. Both of them started to laugh.

*

Inside Jeff yelped. “What is going on?!”

Felicia yelled from the front. “Just hold on! They're trying to ram us!”

She hit the gas again and the awkward ambulance sprang forward.

Jeff yelled back, his voice cracking. “Who?! Why?!”

Felicia shook her head blinking back tears of fright. “I have no idea!”

Selma reached across Daisy and grabbed Jeff's arm. “Just focus on the patient.”

Jeff looked down at Daisy who was just now starting to looked scared, he nodded. “All right, all right.”

*

Jack swung the Jeep around coming up on the ambulance's left again. Harley leaned out her window and covered the side of the vehicle in a rapid spray of gunfire. She littered the entire side with bullets.

Inside the ambulance everyone screamed and ducked, though Selma threw herself over Daisy. Jeff yelped as a bullet caught him in the shoulder, dropping him to the floor of the ambulance.

The driver of the ambulance screamed and ducked, but she continued to try to pull away looking for any exit she could find.

Jack snarled when the ambulance started to put a little distance between them. “I really hate some people trying to be all heroic!” He twisted the wheel to the left then hit the gas.

He sighed. “Hold on Harley!”

She made a small “Eep!” sound grabbing a hold of her seat belt holding on to it like a life line as their vehicle accelerated. Harley squealed, her entire body started to slam toward the right, but Jack reached over grabbing a hold of her parka and yanking her toward him. She fell against him and he held on to her at the moment their vehicle slammed into the side of the ambulance. The Jeep leapt forward alongside the ambulance, then in the next second he swung the wheel violently to the right, the Jeep side swiping the ambulance with a loud crash and squeal of metal hitting metal.

*

Felicia finally saw her chance to escape the psychotics who were attacking the ambulance. An exit out of the tunnel came into view just up ahead. She smashed the gas pedal to the floor, pulling away from the Jeep.

*
Jack frowned. “They really want to make this difficult don't they.”

Harley sighed. “Well, if it was easy it wouldn't be worth doing.” She shrugged. Jack grinned reaching over to brush her chin with his fingertips.

“You're right Harls. Besides, the chase is half the fun!” Jack laughed. Harley joined him leaning over to kiss his cheek.

The ambulance, with the Jeep right behind, burst out of the tunnel onto the main streets. For a moment Felicia thought she was going to get away from whoever was after them.

*

Harley leaned out the window again. The chill wind and the flying snowflakes stung her cheeks, but she smiled closing one eye as she aimed the sub-machine gun at the tires of the ambulance. She fired a pair of controlled bursts, blowing out both back tires.

Jack hooted and hit the roof of the Jeep with his fist. “That's my Harley!!”

*

Felicia screamed, suddenly losing control of the ambulance. She tried to bring them back onto the road, but the ambulance was dragging and the vehicle listed hard to the right. Then, as she struggled to regain control, the front tires hitting a slick spot and she hit the wall just at the exit leaving the tunnel to slam into the concrete corner hard enough that she lost completely lost control. The ambulance flipped onto its side and skidded out of the tunnel, sparks flying as the metal scraped against the street.

Jack laughed. “Hot damn Harley, good job!”

Harley grinned. 'Why thank you puddin.”

The ambulance came to a stop just ahead of them. Several cars zipped by...no one wanting to get involved especially after the Jeep stopped, others thinking that someone was taking care of the accident (though one person made a call to 911 as they continued on by). Jack and Harley hopped out of the Jeep, both of them pulling their pistols as they walked over. Jack stopped, drew out a cigarette and his lighter, holding his hand against the snow and wind to light the cigarette. Harley waited next to him until Jack had the cigarette lit, blowing out the smoke before grabbing her, wrapping his arm around her waist to yank her against him. Harley smiled against his mouth, biting softly at his tongue before kissing him deeply. Jack growled playfully deepening the kiss and leaning her back just slightly before he let her go. Harley giggled booping his nose before she headed over to the front of the ambulance, Jack smacked her rear as she walked away. She giggled jumping a bit, glancing over her shoulder at Jack and winking at him.

The snow had begun to pick up, the flakes big, fluffy, and wet as Harley walked over to the front of the ambulance with a slight dance to her steps while Jack moved to the back of the vehicle.

When she arrived at the front of the ambulance, Harley smiled, bending over to look inside. The driver was twisted around at an unnatural angle. The windshield had spider-webbed and it looked like the little lady who was driving had smashed her face into it. Harley would guess by the weird position that the driver's back was broken. A quick inspection showed Harley that the woman's legs were definitely crushed, but surprisingly the young woman was still alive. Harley frowned as the woman looked up at her, blood leaking from her lips and nose. The young woman shuddered her lips moving as she tried to speak.
Harley sighed. “I'm sorry you got caught in the middle of this...but you know...” The blonde shrugged. “But I will do you a favor.” Harley smiled sweetly as she aimed her pistol at the young woman. Harley smiled at her one more time, then she pulled the trigger.

Strolling to the back of the ambulance, whistling Britney Spear's “Criminal,” Jack stopped at the back and tried the doors. Jack snarled in frustration. The doors were jammed. He put his gun back in the holster, flicked the remains of his cigarette out onto the road and put his foot against the bottom door, then with both hands he grabbed the handle and yanked backwards with all his strength. After a couple of seconds of yanking and kicking at it, the top door popped loose.

Jack sighed. “Finally!”

Harley came around from the front just as Jack threw the door up. Harley peeked inside. There were three people inside; Daisy who was strapped to a gurney, which was lying against the side of the ambulance and two paramedics were in the back with her. Jack frowned. One of them looked to be dead, though the other was still alive, a woman. Jack smiled at her. “Sorry about this, should have called in sick,” he uttered in a forlorn tone before he shot her in the forehead. Harley frowned.

“Should I crawl in there and unstrap her?” referring to Daisy.

“Nah, I'll do it sweets.” Jack grabbed her by the front of her parka and tugged her close, kissing her passionately.

Harley purred. “Mm...Jack.”

He rubbed his nose against hers, reaching up to tug playfully on one of the ear flaps of her hat. “Be right out.”

Jack grabbed the side and crawled into the back of the ambulance. Harley stood watch outside. No one stopped; she watched the cars zip by, Gothamites off to wherever, counting on someone else to take care of the problem. She grinned as she watched the snow falling in slow lazy flakes, looking lovely in the streetlights she thought. They probably thought that was what she and Jack were doing, helping. She rocked on her feet humming to herself occasionally, sticking her tongue out to catch some snowflakes. She heard Jack moving around in the back of the ambulance, the sounds of banging then Jack's muffled voice. “God damn it! Fuck!” followed by the sound of more banging.

She finally turned around when Jack called. “Hey Harls, can you help me out here?”

Harley hurried over. Daisy was groaning and weakly struggling, her eyes fluttering, but she wasn't really “awake” while Jack struggled with her. The woman was a ton of dead weight and the confined space of a lopsided ambulance with an additional two dead bodies inside and with only the one door opened, made it hard to yank her out. But working together, with Jack shoving and Harley pulling, they both heaved the large woman out of the back of the ambulance, dropping her to the pavement with a meaty sounding plop. Jack hopped out, dusting himself off before he crouched down in front of their victim. He reached out to grab Daisy with both hands, hauling her by her hospital gown to move her up to a sitting position.

Jack slapped her across the face. “Hey, come on. Focus!”

He then snapped his fingers in front of the woman's face until Daisy finally opened her eyes fully to look at him. Jack smirked. “Sleeping beauty is up Harls.” Harley crouched down in front of her too. Daisy's face still had some of the signs of Jack's beating, there was a fading bruise around one eye, more fading bruises around her forehead and it looked like she had some stitches across one cheek.
Harley crouched down next to Jack and waved her hand in front of Daisy's face. “Hey there Daisy, remember me?”

Daisy frowned in confusion looking between the two of them. “You? I know you!”

Harley giggled. “Oh, I think she remembers who we are puddin!”

Daisy started to struggle, but Jack easily shoved her back against the ambulance with one arm. He smiled and drew out one of his guns.

“Daisy, Harley and I are trying to wrap up a few things before the end of the year and well, when I learned you were alive, and after what Harley had told me happened concerning you...well, I simply couldn't let you live. I mean really...I never leave a job half done! That's very unprofessional. And as my girl and I started out on our new career path as criminals...” He glanced over at Harley and winked. “I really can't start knowing I left a job half done. BUT because of how you treated my girl. I'm going to let her finish you off.”

Jack smiled at Harley who grinned. “Oh puddin! You don't have to!”

“Well Harls, I thought it might seem better coming from you than me.” Jack smiled sweetly at her.

Harley waved him off. “Nah, you started it, you go ahead and finish her puddin. I'll just watch this time.”

Jack tilted his head. “Are you sure pumpkin poo?”

“I'm sure puddin.” Harley leaned over and gave him a quick kiss. “Do it,” she urged with wide eyes.

Daisy groaned. “You're both insane!”

Jack grinned brightly at the Arkham orderly. “Why thank you Daisy! Nice of you to notice!” Then he shot her in the forehead.

They both stood up, turning at the sound of sirens in the distance.

“Oh, guess that's our signal to skedaddle!” Jack reached over and wrapped his arm around Harley's waist tugging her close to rub his cold nose against hers.

Harley sighed happily. “You know, I feel like a weight has been lifted off my shoulders.”

Jack nodded as they both walked back to the Jeep. “Me too sweets. Though I don't think we're going to get to Arkham before new year's is past.”

“That's okay puddin. I mean except for Crane and Arkham...she was the big one to get. I mean we did take care of a few of those guards the last couple of nights. I feel pretty good about it all.” Harley said happily as she climbed into the Jeep. “Closure,” she said simply.

Jack climbed in on the other side. “You know darling, you're right. Let's go home.”

*

Later, Batman was standing next to Gordon watching as the bodies were taken away and the tow truck for the ambulance was getting into position.

Batman frowned. “That's at least the sixth person to work at Arkham that's been killed this week.”
Gordon blew out a line of smoke. “You think it's one of the escapees from the asylum?”

Batman nodded. “Could be Barbara Kean and her girlfriend Tabitha Galavan. This isn't Zsasz's MO or Tetch's.”

Gordon nodded. “The person who called 911 only reported a black Jeep Cherokee, no license plate number. The person who called thought they were stopping to help. Saw two people, but couldn't tell us if they were men or women by the way they were dressed. Had a couple of other calls on this, one about a chase. But again, vague, nothing to really go on. By the wounds I'm guessing a 9mm, but those are easy to get.” He shrugged and took a puff of his cigar. “The bullet holes on the side seem to be from a machine gun. Whoever it is, they're wearing gloves. No finger prints.” Gordon shrugged again. “But my money is on Barbara and Tabitha.”

Batman nodded. “Let me know if you learn anything new. I'll keep you informed of anything I learn as well.”

Gordon nodded.

Jack and Harley stumbled out of the elevator, their mouths practically glued to each other. They rolled across the wall stopping for a moment to attack each other. Jack grabbed her face, holding her jaw in his hands as his lips mashed against hers, his tongue exploring the feel of her teeth, the wetness of her tongue, then he ran his tongue over her chin, licking her cheek before sinking his teeth into her jaw, a firm, but gentle bite. Harley grabbed onto the sides of his parka, her hands in fists, biting at his lips and tongue. Jack smiled against her mouth reaching up to pull the zipper of her parka down before reaching in to grab her waist and balling her sweater in his hand, then shoved his pelvis against hers. Harley let go of his parka, grabbing his face between her hands growling while she kissed him trying to devour his tongue and lips.

He grinned pulling away from her mouth long enough to groan. “Watching you hang out the window and shooting that gun...sexiest damn thing I ever saw. You got me so fucking hot Harley.”

Harley giggled, her cheeks red, drops of water glistened on her lashes where the snow had melted. “Mmm...puddin, watching you kill Daisy was such a rush.” She reached around and grabbed his ass squeezing and pressing him against her. “I loved it puddin.”

Jack growled, keeping a hold of her while he turned to open the door to the apartment, both of them falling inside. He kicked the door closed with his foot while yanking her back against him again. Harley reached up to yank the hat off of him, his hair tumbling loose over his forehead as she threw the hat over her shoulder. He did the same, though he smoothed his hands under the hat to caress her hair knocking her hat to the floor while grabbing fistfuls of her hair, biting her lips while he kissed her.

Harley grinned and took a step back from him, running her tongue along her upper teeth grabbing the zipper of his parka and ripping it down before she shoved it off his shoulders. Her mouth attacked Jack’s with a playful growl. She ran her hands over his pistols in their holsters right under his arms, caressing them as if she was touching his manhood. She purred, undulating her hips to rub against his bound erection. She could almost feel the heat of him when she pressed against the mound causing Jack to hiss. He did the same with her coat, ripping it from her shoulders, then followed by yanking her gun holster off her shoulders, the weapons making a hard, heavy metal sound as they hit the floor. He pulled his gloves off with his teeth which made Harley's groin ache just watching his teeth press into the leather before he slid his hands under her sweater, craving the feel of her skin under his hands. Jack force walked her backwards, yanking her sweater up and off at the same time until the back of her legs hit the side of the couch causing them both to fall.

Harley laughed hitting the couch cushions, her legs dangling off the arm of the couch. Harley licked her lips. “How about some mood music puddin?”

Jack laughed. “Anything for you baby. Alexa (the voice operated app. That Alex had in the apartment)—music. Nostalgia’s “Who you Talkin’ To Man?” started to play.

Harley purred. “That'll work..come here puddin.” She reached out for him.

Jack wrinkled his nose playfully putting one knee on the couch and dropping his other foot to the floor for balance before he began to work his way down her torso taking bites of her soft silky skin, rubbing his nose against her and inhaling her fragrance. Harley arched her back throwing her head back with a groan, the feel of his teeth, the mix of pain and pleasure had her wanting more.

He grabbed the middle of her bra with his teeth pulling on it, waggling his eyebrows when he looked up at her.

Harley looked down at him and laughed. “Puddin!”

Jack growled, reaching up with his hands to grab the cups of the lacy red bra she was wearing and pull them down off her breasts exposing them to the cool air of the living room. Her nipples were already hard, but watching Jack slowly extend his tongue, his eyes on her the whole while and flick each nipple with his tongue, had her dropping her head back with a deep groan. “Oh god Jack!”

He snickered playfully tracing each nipple with his tongue before taking a full lick with the flat of his tongue then catching each nipple with his lips and tugging. Harley shivered making little gasps and groans of pleasure.

Jack snaked lower, biting a little painfully, but pleasurably, his hands gliding down her sides, only his fingertips caressing her skin, until he was at her pants.

It was a little awkward, but Harley kicked off her boots just before Jack glided to a standing position between her dangling legs. He took a moment smiling down at her to slide his shoulder holsters off, dropping them to the floor with a loud thud, then he reached over his shoulders to pull his turtleneck off. Harley didn't move, she just watched, running her tongue over her lips, her eyes tracing every delicious detail of him. Her love and lust for him burned hot and passionate. She felt that if he didn't take her soon, she would combust!

Jack winked watching the way her gaze was devouring him. He reached down to unbutton his pants and kick off his boots at the same time. He slid his slacks down, boxers and all, kicking them off and to the side before he reached down to yank off his socks.

Harley watched every movement like a hungry predator. She started to reach down and undo her own pants lifting her hips up and start shoving them down. Jack kicked away the rest of his clothing with a snarl because it took too long; he reached down and grabbed her pants yanking them down her legs, panties and all, tossing them aside before he crawled on top of her.

Jack grabbed her hips, his fingers digging into her flesh pulling her toward him, her hips on the arm of the couch then at the last moment he flipped her around nearly tossing her off the couch.

Harley squealed and giggled, laughing as she grabbed a hold of the couch cushion just as Jack positioned his erection and slid inside of her. She cried out with pleasure when he plunged into her, a deep hard thrust that had her back arching as he seemed to go deeper than ever. He yanked her back a little more before he started a hard in-and-out thrust of his hips.
“JACK!!” Harley groaned. She bent her legs, crossing her ankles so that her feet weren't touching the floor, holding onto the couch cushion while Jack grabbed her hips and started to thrust harder into her. She was so wet, her vagina and ass squeezed around his erection causing Jack to jerk, a ripple running up from his erection through his entire body. It only made him want to pound into her harder. The room was filled with the musical combination of their bodies coming together which created a wet smacking sound of flesh meeting flesh, mixed with the music playing through the speakers. The entire couch bounced with their fucking. At the same time Harley’s hips were bouncing against the arm of the couch it was causing her clitoris to rub against the fabric of the couch arm making her shiver and shake.

Harley screamed with pleasure. “Puddin! Jack!”

He grinned watching the way her backside bounced with each thrust of his hips, his fingers digging in to her skin, his shaft plunging deep into her, feeling that hot wet core of her surrounding him. Jack sucked on his bottom lip as he jerked his hips up a little which was greeted with a gasp of pleasure from Harley. He brought one hand up, squeezed her buttcheek with a grin, then he surprised her with a playful smack.

Harley moaned, the smack on her rear being the catalyst to her cumming with a cry, her back curving. “YES! JACK!”

Jack grunted watching her, feeling her climax wash over him until he couldn't hold back; he came hard and fast. He grabbed her ass, his fingers digging into her, arching his back as he cried out. “HARLEY!”

The following early afternoon Aunt Agatha came downstairs all smiles. Bruce happened to be home, there to discuss some work be done on the one of the upstairs bathrooms. Bruce was looking to modernize it a little bit more, and he was having some plumbers coming over this afternoon to give him some estimates. He was sitting in the kitchen wearing slacks, a light blue dress shirt and a beige cable knit sweater looking the casual billionaire while he had coffee and chicken salad sandwiches with Alfred when Agatha came bursting into the kitchen with her usual bull-in-a-china shop whirl of energy, wearing a pair of thigh-high black boots, black leggings with a black turtleneck, a leopard print jacket and a set of plastic pearls around her neck that were big enough to be golf balls.

Bruce looked up from reading the paper to lift a brow at his Aunt. “Where are you off to? It's pretty cold out there. Don't know if you noticed, but it snowed.”

His aunt laughed. “Bah, a little bad weather never stopped me from doing anything. You should have seen me shopping in Sweden last winter! I just have a few little things I want to do. I...I have plans this weekend and I just have a few last minute things to do.”

She was searching through the cabinets as she spoke, finally stopping to sigh. “Alfred dear, isn't there a portable coffee mug anywhere in this vast kitchen?”

Alfred smiled. “Oh course.” He stood up and moved over to one of the cabinets she had just looked through, pulling down a travel mug. Agatha laughed. “I swear I'm going blind in my old age!”

Alfred smiled. “You will never be old Miss Agatha.”

“Oh Bruce I swear I'm going to steal him from you!” Agatha grinned while Alfred took the mug and filled it with coffee for her.
“Well, you boys enjoy your afternoon.” Agatha waved over her shoulder as she left the kitchen.

Bruce frowned, watching her vanish. “Did I tell you I saw her with three young women going into a bridal shop the other day?”

Alfred frowned. “Really, how odd.”

“Yeah, that's what I thought. Do you think you can handle the plumbers?” Bruce stood up.

“Master Bruce, you are not going to follow your aunt are you?” Alfred looked surprised.

Bruce shrugged. “I'm just...she hasn't said much at all about Jack after she flew all the way back to Gotham to lecture me on him. I find that odd. So, I'm not following her exactly. I just happen to be driving in that direction.” Bruce grinned at Alfred.

The older man sighed. “Mhm, I don't know Master Bruce, if you don't mind me saying so, I feel that this is a bad idea.”

Bruce laughed heading out to grab his coat. “It'll be fine, Alfred.”

The next afternoon Harley woke to the feeling of Jack nibbling on her ear. She smiled, refusing to open her eyes. Jack's fingers slid down her naked body slipping between her legs. He rubbed slowly until he found the spot that made her gasp and jerk against his hand.

“Waaakkee uupp...” Jack hissed softly in her ear. “Club meeting this afternoon. Agatha and the others are coming over to discuss our wedding, which is tomorrow by the way! We finally get to have a real wedding!!” Jack cooed excitedly against her ear.

“It's afternoon?” Harley sat up the sheet falling away to show her naked breasts. Jack grinned. “Yes...but we have a few minutes!”

Then he lunged at her, leaping on top of her and pressing her down into the pillows burying his face between her breasts. Harley squealed. Jack started to nibble on her making Harley squeals turn to moans. Jack sucked on one of her nipples curling into her, his sucking soft and sweet. Harley moaned, one arm wrapped around him, stroking her fingers through his hair, her eyes falling closed on the pleasure of his tongue and lips sending ripples and tickles of pleasure that pooled in her groin.

Jack dragged the back of his fingers along her flat stomach, his nails tickling her skin causing goosebumps to shiver into existence until he had reached his goal between her legs. He rolled off of her, but curled himself against her side, using one leg to pull her legs apart gently. He continued to suck at one breast, his long fingers sliding up and down in a slow, rhythmic caress. He bit along her breast then back to her nipple teasing with his tongue, then slowly slid his middle finger between her legs sliding it slowly into her, curving his finger, then he gradually pulled his finger out, and slid it into her again.

Harley moaned arching off the bed just a little. Jack used his leg to spread her legs wider, continuing the slow movement of his finger in and out, then sliding up to caress her clitoris then down again, sliding his finger into her and easing out, crooking his finger as he did so. Harley groaned, thrusting her hips, meeting his touch. He smiled flicking his tongue across her nipple, picking up speed with his finger when he felt she needed him to, feeling the increase in wetness as she came closer and closer, until finally her legs stiffened and her feet pointed, her fingers in his hair tightened as she came with a loud gasp.
Jack grinned, sliding his tongue around her nipple continuing the slow thrust of his finger until Harley whined. “Jack...Puddin...I need you now!! Please!”

Jack brushed his nose against her breast. “Your wish is my command.”

He rolled on top of her. She hooked her legs around him as Jack slid into her, pressing himself deep inside her. Harley groaned wrapping her arms around him, her hands sliding along his back, gliding across his shoulders and into his hair, grabbing his hair in her hands as she stared into his blue eyes.

“Jack, I love you,” she whispered.

Jack brushed his nose against hers, smiling softly. “I love you my harlequin.”

They moved together, Jack thrusting slowly, with Harley meeting his thrusts with her own.

*

Alex was dressed in a thick brown parka and sported a heavy knit hat of orange with a big pompom on top. He and Alice, who wore a black down jacket came off the elevator with Dale and Sandra, both in thick matching thermal-lined bomber jackets, and lastly Frost, dressed in a wool top coat, all of them covered in snow. Alex started to open the apartment door when Alice put her hand on his one arm.

“Knock,” she said with a small smile.

Alex opened his mouth to protest, but Alice smiled. “Alex, just knock.”

“Ugh, fine!” Alex knocked and everyone waited.

*

Harley wrapped her legs around Jack, yanking him down for a tender kiss, her tongue playing gently with his, nipping at his tongue. Jack moaned against her mouth thrusting his hips several more times, plunging into her as their bodies climaxed together, sharing the intensity of their pleasure, just as they both heard the sound of a knock.

Harley giggled. “And again, they catch us undressed.”

Jack laughed snuggling into her, sliding his arms under her and squeezing, pressing his nose and mouth against her neck. “Maybe we need a huge sign that we put outside the door: SEX IN PROGRESS AT ALL TIMES!”

They both started laughing.

*

Harley put on a red sweater dress, a ribbed frock with cable-knit accents and a skirt adorned with pom-poms, paired with black leggings and some ankle boots and came back into the living room carrying a tray with mugs of hot cocoa nearly spilling over with marshmallows. Nearly everyone was sitting around the coffee table, though Frost was leaning against a corner as Aunt Agatha, who was standing up and pacing excitedly as she talked, told everyone what she had arranged for the wedding which was happening tomorrow.

Agatha took her cocoa from Harley glancing around. “So, introductions—who is everyone?”

Jack motioned to Alex. “My one handed friend here is Alex, Alice is his girlfriend who you met dress shopping. The big bald man here is Dale, Sandra's beau... And that is my best driver and bodyguard, Frost.”

Frost waved, but Agatha was looking him over like he was a piece of new, expensive jewelry. “Frost is it? Well, hello sugar.”

Frost turned red which only made her chuckle before she diverted her attention to the topic of the wedding, though she did give Frost a lingering look.

“I rented the entirety of Gotham Hall! I know the owner—we used to date you know—before he got married! Man was a beast in bed! Anyway, the place is just gorgeous! It has a towering domed ceiling with a dramatic central chandelier, a soapstone fireplace and inlaid marble floors! Oh it's just perfect! So glamorous!! And I have the tuxedos picked out for all of you boys. Oh and Jack, I found that little place you told me about and I grabbed that slim fit tuxedo you saw online, the three piece Italian violet colored one with the peaked lapels with a matching waistcoat, the dark violet purple shirt with black pinstripes, bi-color satin tie and the final touch, the pair of black and purple leather oxfords.” She finished counting on her fingers then flapped her hands in excitement. “It's just so you honey!”

Jack laughed. “Auntie, you are perfection!”

Agatha grinned. “Of course I am honey! Now, I have made arrangements for everything. I have a baker making your cake...”

Harley sat down next to Jack with her cup of cocoa between her hands. She was in the middle of blowing on it when she looked up. “Oh the caramelized vanilla cake with salted caramel butter cream and whipped dark chocolate ganache one you told me about the other day?”

Jack turned to look at Harley. “That is extremely specific.”

Harley laughed. “Sorry, we we talked about cake a lot on the phone call.”

Agatha pointed at her with a grin. “That's the one!”

Jack rubbed his stomach. “That sounds sooo good!”

Alice giggled with a groan holding her stomach. “I can feel the pounds already!”

Alex pinched her. “Don't you worry about a fucking thing...I'll work them off of you.”

Everyone hooted.

Agatha laughed. “Don't worry dear, I also have us a DJ so we can also have some dancing.” Agatha shook her hips back and forth.

Jack laughed. “My aunt thinks of everything.”

“Oh if there is one thing I know how to do, it's throw a party.” Agatha smiled. “Well, all the clothing for everyone will be dropped off here tonight. Make-up and hair will be showing up around noon, so I expect you all to be here before then, though I will expect you boys to be going somewhere else to dress. Oh, and I'll bring a couple of bottles of the best champagne from the Wayne cellar.”

Jack snorted. “You're going to steal from my brother?”

Agatha snorted. “It's not stealing! I'm family! And besides, think of it as a gift from your brother who simply cannot be there.” She grinned from ear to ear like a cat. “Now, I have limos ready to pick y'all up around four to get everyone to the tower and the wedding starts at six! Oh, and before I forget!!” Agatha rushed off to grab her purse, a large black pebble leather Couch purse. She dug around in it while everyone watched as she searched around talking as she did so. “I have a safe deposit box here where I keep a few things, so I stopped by the bank on the way here. I knew we were going to run out of time for rings so I thought these might be a nice substitute. They belonged to my parents, your grandparents Jackie.”

She searched around for a few more moments before she finally held up two boxes. “Bingo!”

She hurried over and handed one box to Jack and the other to Harley.

Jack opened his box. Insides was a man’s art deco wedding band, yellow gold with three diamonds set in white gold. Agatha smiled. “That belonged to your paternal grandfather. I remember it when I was a kid, always sparkling in the light while he worked.” She sighed before turning to Harley who had just opened hers. “Now, that one was my grandmother’s.”

Harley gasped softly. The ring was also art deco style, a single large diamond in the center with chevron cut diamonds on the shoulders and wooden bridge-like filigree structure all in platinum.

“Oh Aunt Agatha! I...I can't!” Harley exclaimed. “It's too much!”

“Pfftt...it's not! You guys need rings! They've been sitting in my safety deposit box gathering dust and you are family. Enough said!”

Harley hopped up to throw her arms around Agatha. “Thank you!”

Agatha laughed and hugged her in return. “Oh stop.” She embraced Harley, grinning at Jack over Harley's shoulder. “Oh I do like her Jackie!”

Jack smiled. “As do I.”

“Oh you two, that's enough, you're both going to make me smear my make-up!” Agatha fluttered her hands in front of her face.

Jack laughed taking Harley by her hand and leading her back to the couch, pulling Harley onto his lap. Agatha flopped down in one of the chairs. “Now, I have one more thing I wanted to discuss with you two. Now I know you don't need a minister or a justice of the peace since you're both already married, so how would you feel if I did your renewal?” She grinned looking between Jack and Harley.

Harley turned to Jack, her arms around his shoulders. “I love that idea.”

Jack smiled at her and rubbed his nose against hers. “So do I my sweets.”

Agatha giggled and clapped her hands. “Awesome!”

Bruce frowned driving past the Ashland building for the third time. His aunt still hadn't left the building. Something was definitely up, he just couldn't figure out what though. She had stopped by the Gotham National Bank on her way here. Bruce had slipped in after her, watching from a distance. She hadn't noticed him as she was led to the back where he knew the bank kept their security boxes. She was in there long enough that he could guess she removed something from her box or put something in, but what? Bruce frowned as he drove by slowly, the flakes of snow lazily drifting downward. Something in his gut told him it was something he needed to know...

*

“Well I'm off my darlings. I'll see you all tomorrow!” Agatha smiled. Jack stood up, wrapping his arms around his aunt and kissing her cheek. “Thank you for everything Auntie Ag. Harley and I appreciate all of it. Thank you for giving my girl the wedding she deserves.”

Harley hopped up and stepped over, throwing her arms around Jack and Agatha. “Thank you too!”

Agatha smiled. “Not a problem my darlings, not a problem.”

She kissed them both on the cheek with a laugh. “Now both of you get a good night's sleep! Tomorrow is going to be busy!”

She stopped at the door before she left, her gaze on Frost as she waved with her fingers. “See ya later big boy. Oh, I do like them young...it's so much fun to teach a younger man a few things.” She winked at him before she slipped out the door.

Alex burst out laughing. “Oh fuck Frost, she is going to eat you alive man!”

Frost looked embarrassed, but he was grinning a bit before he asked Jack. “So, ah...is your aunt off limits?”

Jack made a rude noise. “Ppfffft! Like I could stop her from doing anything she wanted. Go for it Frost, just let me warn you though, she loves to go through men.”

Frost grinned crookedly. “I'm certainly willing to be 'gone through'.”

Jack covered his ears laughing. “I didn't need to hear that!”

Bruce finally saw her leave the building, the car—a limo of course, only the best for his aunt—holding her rolled away. Bruce frowned as he watched the vehicle pull away. He had parked a little ways down from the building, his hands resting idly on the steering wheel and waited for her to leave. He looked up at the apartment building. He had parked and gone in a few minutes ago, a doorman letting him in only because he had recognized him as Bruce Wayne. There were no traditional mailboxes with names on them and the staff were hush hush about who lived here, even to Bruce Wayne. He hadn't been able to glean any usable information. Nothing. The staff were clearly well paid to keep quiet. Not unusual really, especially here in Gotham, but frustrating. Bruce sighed watching her go. Perhaps she was just seeing an old beau? With his aunt there were a lot of possibilities, but his gut just kept telling him that it was something important.

*

The next day Agatha came rushing down the stairs of Wayne Manor carrying a pair of Valentino Garavani rockstub t-strapped pumps in one hand and a Trouvé shaggy faux fur jacket and her purse (loaded down with two bottles of champagne from the Wayne Manor cellars in addition to the bottles of liquor she had sent over to the Gotham Hall yesterday) in her other hand, while wearing an Emery scoop back sequin midi dress, her hair and make-up done to perfection. She looked ready for a party.

“I'm running late!!” she yelled coming down the stairs as quickly as possible, just as Alfred looked up from where he had been dusting some of the paintings in the front room. He blinked in surprise at seeing Agatha so dressed up and barefoot.
“Oh my, where are you off to Miss Agatha?” Alfred inquired in surprise.

“Oh places! I have a party I'm attending; well actually I'm the host.” She giggled like a young woman before she hit the bottom of the stairs. “Is my car here? I didn't hear it!” Agatha slipped on her coat then hopped from one foot to the other slipping on her pumps while trying not to drop her purse.

Alfred frowned opening the door, shivering as a cold breeze came in along with a few flakes of snow. “Oh yes, Miss Agatha, your limo arrived just a few minutes ago.”

She grinned and kissed Alfred, but instead of a kiss on the cheek, she kissed him on the mouth surprising him into stunned silence. “Let Brucie know I won't be back until very late! Tata!”

She hurried out the door leaving a stunned Alfred watching her go. A couple of moments later Bruce came out of the library. “Did Agatha just leave? I thought I heard her.”

Alfred turned and said distinctly, “Ah, yes, yes sir she did.”

Bruce blinked in surprise seeing the stain of red lips on his butler's mouth. “”You all right Alfred?”

“Ah...yes sir.” Alfred seemed to shake himself coming back to himself, but he also seemed to be unaware of the lipstick on his mouth. Bruce did his best to keep a straight face as Alfred resumed his calm demeanor. “Yes sir, Master Bruce. I'm quite all right.”

Bruce patted Alfred on the back with a smile. “Well, I'm going out. I'm going to find out exactly what is going on with Agatha.”

“Sir, perhaps she is simply going to a party,” Alfred offered mildly.

“True, but my gut keeps telling me something is up Alfred. I won't be happy until I know what it is,” Bruce said, grabbing his coat from the coat stand near the door.

Alfred frowned. “Sir, did you every consider you might not want to know?”

Bruce smiled pulling out a knit cap from the pocket of his black coat. “Nope. See ya later Alfred.”

Alfred sighed.

Jack stood in front of the bathroom mirror at another of Alex's many residences, looking at himself as he finished putting on his tie and sliding the tie clip that Alex had given him in place. The silver clip had a tiny jeweled joker playing card on it, a little joke and a bit symbolic from Alex.

Alex had laughed handing it to him and said, “You always remind me of the joker in a deck of cards Jack. You're fucking independent, you're own person, unique. You're the fucking trump card, the wild fucking card in a poker game. I never know what you're gonna fucking do next, which is why you're my fucking friend.”

Jack chuckled softly touching the tie clip which stood out against the dark material of the tie before he ran a hand over his hair. He had just had his hair freshly cut and was looking more like his old self. He smiled at himself before reaching for the cigarette that lay in the ash tray by the bathroom mirror. He took a long slow drag on the cigarette, holding the smoke in his lungs before he slowly let it out, the smoke drifting quietly around him giving his face one more look. He had outlined his eyes in black which made the blue of his irises look startling and his lips were painted a deep red.
smiled enjoying the contrast of his red lips against his white teeth. He turned his head side to side inspecting his hair. Alex had brought in a guy to trim all their hair before the wedding which had been great; while he didn't mind the tail, he liked his hair shorter. He smiled at himself one more time before putting out the cigarette just when he heard Alex yelling from the next room.

“You fucking assholes ready yet? And I need someone to do my fucking tie because I ain't used to wearing one!”

Jack chuckled again and walked out of the bedroom. Alex had picked Jack up early that morning while dropping Alice and Sandra off at the apartment so the women could get ready for the wedding. The men had prepared themselves at one of Alex's other places just so Jack couldn't see Harley in her dress until the renewal. As Jack strolled out of the bathroom he saw that Dale was trying to help Alex with his tie, but the man was having difficulty, his one hand still in a cast making it hard for him to use his fingers while Frost was watching with an amused expression and sipping on a diet soda. Alex looked uncomfortable in his black tux. He kept tugging at the vest while Dale struggled with the tie.

Dale's own tie lay around his neck undone. Jack walked over and motioned Dale out of the way.

“Let an expert do it, my darling. Besides, you're still on the injured list.” Jack laughed.

With an expression of relief, Dale stepped out of the way letting Jack take over. Jack's fingers moved swiftly and nimbly tying Alex's tie within a matter of seconds. Jack stepped back and patted Alex on the chest. “There you go. Still homely, but now you're homely with a tie.”

Alex snorted. “You're such a fucking loser.”

Jack motioned Dale over and started to work on his tie as he laughed. “So are we all about ready?”

Alex nodded. “Yeah, we need to get going or we're gonna be late!”

Dale added. “Sandra called a few minutes ago, said the ladies are nearly ready.”

“Dale, you have the rings?” Jack asked. Dale patted the pocket of his tux. “Sure do Jack.”

Jack grinned. “Well, what are we waiting for boys? Time for me to get married! Again!”

He walked over grabbing up his leather gloves and slid them on before grabbing the long black pea coat his aunt had sent over along with the suit and headed out the door.

*

Back at the apartment, Harley tapped her feet nervously under her wedding dress while the make-up artist Agatha had sent over put some finishing touches on her make-up. Sandra and Alice were dressed, hair done and make-up set. They both looked lovely in bright red off-the-shoulder short dresses with red pumps. Agatha was fussing over a few minor details on the phone before she hung up and turned her attention on the ladies in the room.

“All right ladies, everyone ready?” Agatha looked around smiling brightly, her gaze landing on Harley as she stood up, her make-up finished. “Oh honey! You look gorgeous!”

Harley blushed. “Thanks.”

Agatha rushed over to inspect her hair and makeup. “Jackie is just going to die when he sees you!”
Harley smiled. “You really think so?”

“Oh hell yes! You look like you just stepped off of the pages of a magazine! All of you do! I'm just so pleased!” Agatha grinned brightly. “All right let's go!”

Harley slipped on the white, faux fur bolero jacket that Agatha had sent over with the dress. Aunt Agatha gasped. “Hold on—I must take some pictures!”

*

Outside the Ashland building, Bruce sat in his car waiting. Agatha had arrived at the same apartment building as before. He was fairly confident she wasn't going to be staying, that she was on her way somewhere else because there was no way she was going to a party at this apartment dressed as she had been when she left. At least that was what he suspected and again he was just following his gut on this. His aunt partied a lot, traveled a great deal and knew a lot of people. She could just simply be going to a party like she said, but something just felt...off. Bruce thought that maybe he was being ridiculous, but the feeling that something was wrong just would not go away. He was also out of sorts because a call to the GCPD this morning had given him nothing—there were no new leads on his brother's whereabouts. He prayed Jack was all right, but the more time that passed, the harder it became to hold out hope.

Bruce reached down for the cup of coffee he had brought with him and took a long sip of the hot liquid. He had been sitting out in the car for over an hour, and even with the engine on it was cold. He was thinking that maybe he should just give up and go home, that he was acting stupid when he saw the limo that had brought Agatha here, drive past him and turn the corner to head in the opposite direction.

Bruce frowned. When the limo drove by, he could have sworn that he had seen the shadows of additional passengers in the back. He couldn't be sure with the tinted windows, but...

Bruce counted to fifteen before he pulled away from the curve and started to follow.

Bruce stayed several cars behind the limo and parked a block away from Gotham Hall. He slipped out of the car, walking briskly the distance to the hall. Bruce pulled his knit cap down and the collar of his coat up as he hurried toward the building, grabbed the handle of the door and slipped inside unnoticed and out of the chill. He hadn't seen where the limo parked. He only followed it until he had seen that it had gone around the corner to the back parking lot of the building.

When he stepped inside, he saw that the building, while open, wasn't busy, though he did hear the sounds of classical music. He frowned slightly. He knew that tune, Bach's Cello Suite No.1 in G. Bruce followed the sound of the music.

*

The inside of the hall had been completely decorated. Harley looked around in stunned silence. She wasn't sure what she expected, but this was not it. Surely Aunt Agatha was a miracle worker. Even though their wedding party was only made up of seven people, Agatha had gone all out as if hundreds were going to be there. The hall was afool with flowers, purple hydrangeas mixed with red roses, burgundy ranunculus and dahlias were everywhere. How Agatha had found fresh flowers this time of year...Harley thought that had to have cost thousands of dollars. There was a small round table in the center of the room, a canopy, which was attached to a silver metal circle overhead than hung from the chandelier above that, from which sheer lavender cloth hung down around the table.
and chairs. The table was decorated with crystal vases full of flowers and candles. Just behind the table and chairs was a small archway had been set up, decorated with the same flower theme of purple hydrangea, dahlia, burgundy ranunculus, red roses, along with crystal and silver accents.

Agatha came up beside Harley and grinned as she put her arm around Harley's shoulders. “So, how do you like it? I mean, I could have done more if I had more time, but...”

She shrugged. “But I did the best I could on such short notice...”

The other three women stood with their mouths hanging open.

Harley swallowed looking sideways at Agatha. “This...is...amazing!”

Alice and Sandra both nodded in agreement.

Alice, her voice breathless with awe. “I’ve never seen anything so beautiful.”

Sandra whispered. “It's like...like a magazine layout. You know like those perfect weddings you see, but never believe anyone actual does...”

Harley turned to Agatha. “You are like a fairy godmother!”

Agatha grinned. “Aw, thank you dear! Now it's almost time. Let's get you hidden away so the groom doesn't see you too soon! Knowing Jackie he'll try and sneak a peek!”

Agatha made shooing motions, herding the women toward some doors leading out of the room. “There is some champagne in the back, drink as much as you want! I'm going to go get the boys in position.”

*

Jack and the others were sitting in what looked to be some sort of dressing room. They had arrived about twenty minutes earlier, becoming lost in the building until a young man who worked there had shown them to the room they were to wait in. The room had several beige leather couches, several wall mirrors, a dressing table and a coffee table. The walls were decorated with photographs of Gotham, the city at night, photos of Robinson Park, the bridges lit at night, etc. When they arrived at the room, they found two bottles of vodka along with five shot glasses waiting for them on the coffee table. Alex had cheered happily when he saw the bottles.

“Yes!! Just what this fucking party needs! Some hootch!” He flopped down grabbing the bottle and immediately filled the shot glasses to the brim with the vodka, grabbing one and holding it up. “To Jack and Harley! How the fuck Jack got such a damn hot chick to love him, the world will never know!”

Everyone else grabbed a glass, holding the shots up too. “To Jack and Harley.”

Jack laughed. “To Harley, my one and only. The only girl for me.” Jack smiled and said more softly so only he heard his words. “Find what you love and let it kill you.” Then he downed his drink.

Everyone else downed their shots as well. Alex was just about to pour everyone a refill when Agatha opened the door to poke her head in. “Hey boys, everyone decent? Or is Frost indecent? Because then I'm definitely coming in!” She giggled walking in and closing the door behind her looking around at everyone with a wide smile.. “Glad to see you made it in one piece boys. Oh, and you found the vodka!”
She hurried in when she saw the extra shot glass sitting on the table. She picked up the bottle of vodka and filled it immediately downing it quickly without flinching. Alex snorted. “Damn.”

Agatha grinned at the glass before filling it again. “God I needed that. Oh, you boys looks fabulous!” She grinned at Frost. “Mmm...” She gave him a seductive glance and a lifted brow (which had Frost squirming) before turning her attention to Jack. “Okay Jackie, do a spin, let your aunt see.” She motioned with her finger for Jack to spin around for her.

Jack chuckled as she asked, turning around, his arms out showing off the purple and black suit.

Agatha laughed and hooted. “Damn boy, you look fabulous! No wonder that girl married you. Wayne boys are pretty damn good looking.”

Jack stopped and struck a pose. “What can I say? I have good genes.”

Agatha laughed yanking Jack into a hug. “That you do Jackie, that you do.” She hugged him tight. “I’m so happy I get to do this for you. That you're out of that awful asylum. Just wish you and Bruce could make up. I know how much you always looked up to him, but...you know I understand. Your father and I never really got along either. Sometimes family is who you choose.”

Jack hugged her back. “Well I chose you and Harley, my friends, Alfred. Maybe...maybe I can forgive Bruce...soon though.” Jack sighed softly with real regret in his voice. “As angry as I am with him, I want to forgive him Agatha, I really do.” He frowned slightly as he spoke. “So, yeah, someday soon I think Bruce and I will be friends again.” Jack took a breath, letting it out slowly before he smiled at his aunt.

She gave him a hug. “I would like that Jackie. So would your mom and dad. They wouldn't want you boys fighting all the time.”

She hastily wiped at her eyes, banishing away any tears before they messed up her make-up and turned. “All right boys...” She clapped her hands. “The girls are secreted away now, so let's go get you all set up. Come along, follow me.”

*

Jack grinned brightly when he stepped into the room taking in all the little details. “Wow, Aunt Agatha. You really outdid yourself!”

Agatha grinned. “Thank you honey. Just imagine what I could have done with more time! I amaze even myself sometimes.” She laughed before she started to shove Jack forward. “Okay, now get up there under the arch. I'm going to go get Harley. Be right back.”

*

Bruce came around the corner, following the sound of the music just as he heard his aunt's voice. “Okay girls, it's show time!”

Bruce stopped and pressed himself against the wall. He could hear the sounds of laughter, voices, all female. Bruce turned to look around the corner just as the doors closed. He only caught a hint of a white dress and the sounds of women's voices and music coming from the other side of the door as it closed. Bruce frowned and walked over, placing just the tips of his fingers on the door. He could hear the sounds of music playing, the female voices were joined by male voices. He waited a heartbeat before he gently pushed the door open and stepped inside.
The soft sounds of a violin cover of “Crazy in Love” had started to play. Jack stood waiting under the arch when he turned toward the sound of the music. Then he saw Harley. She was standing there for a heartbeat before she started to walk toward him. The day they had actually married she had been more beautiful than any other time he had seen her, but this, he thought, this time took the cake. She was perfection. She smiled, walking toward him; his wife, his partner, his everything. Jack blinked feeling tears threatening. No one in all the world made him as happy as she did.

Jack put his hand out to her as she stepped closer reaching for his hand, her fingers wrapping around his own. He tugged her toward him.

“Harley, there is a madness in loving you, a lack of reason that makes it feel so flawless.” He spoke with a mixture of pain and love; the intensity of his voice washed over her.

Harley smiled her voice soft. “Oscar Wilde said that you don't love someone for their looks, or their clothes, or for their fancy car, but because they sing a song only you can hear.” She grinned at him then whispered. “My puddin, you are the one that sings my song.”

That was when Bruce's voice broke through the music. “Jack?”

Everyone turned as Bruce stepped further into the room, yanking off his knit cap. “Jack? But...where have you been?!”

Jack eyes flared. “Bruce.”

Agatha groaned. “God damn it Bruce! How the hell did you find us?”

Bruce toward to his brother, ignoring everyone in the room as he grabbed Jack in a surprisingly violent gesture, by the lapels of his jacket, which tore Jack's hands out of Harley's as he practically lifted Jack off his feet. Bruce shook him, his expression contorted with emotions he didn't seem to know what to do with, melding between angry, relief and pain.

“Where have you been?! I thought..I thought the worst had happened!! Those...those violent...insane...I've been waiting for a ransom call, or your body to show up, someone to call me and tell me you were dead...I filed a missing persons report, but you've been free and fine this whole time!! Why didn't you tell me!”

Jack snarled bringing his fists down to break his brother's hold. “Let go of me!”

He broke free of Bruce's grip and took a step back. “What the fuck Bruce? What did you expect me to do? Come running to you? You don't exactly inspire trust, you know! You put me in there in the first place!!! Do you have any idea what Harley and I've been through? DO YOU? Do you even care? Harley almost died! I almost died! You put us in hell, then expect me to come to you for help when I'm free? You're more insane than I've ever been!”

Agatha started to say something, but Bruce spoke over her, his voice steadily rising.

“I put you in there to help you Jack. Don't you understand?? You've been losing control for years. Since our parents' death I've been watching you disintegrate, turning into someone I don't know. I just wanted to protect you! Keep you safe! That is all I ever wanted to do!!” Bruce took an unsteady breath through his teeth before he continued. “But then she comes along...” Here Bruce pointed savagely at Harley. “...And you lose it completely! In front of all of Gotham practically! I had to help you! I love you Jack!” Bruce snarled. “I did it because I love you, I want to keep you safe Jack—even from yourself.”
Jack laughed and threw his head back a moment. “Love? Are you fucking serious? You love me? I needed a brother! Not a protector, not someone hovering over me, watching my every move. You hate me! In every action you have ever taken toward me Bruce, you've shown that you don't understand me and you never wanted to...I just wanted you to trust me Bruce! Believe me instead of everyone else! I wanted a brother!!” Jack snarled. “All I ever did was worship you. I loved you!! You were my hero, but you were never there for me Bruce, NEVER! I can't even trust you to love me like a brother. Instead you were always trying to be my father! Alfred isn't our real father, but unlike Thomas Wayne OR you, he was always there for me, believed me...trusted me. The only reason he isn't here is because of you!!” Jack was crying now, angry, hurt tears falling down his cheeks, black lines from Jack's eyeliner were running down his face. “I just wanted a brother Bruce. That's all I've ever wanted. But you couldn't even do that.”

Bruce sighed. “Jack...I don't hate you. I do trust you! You're my brother, my little brother. I just want what's best for you.”

( Everyone was watching silently, sharing looks since no one was sure what they should do.)

“HA!! That's a laugh! You have taken every chance you can to get rid of me! If you wanted what was best for me, then why didn't you ever fucking ASK!” Jack hissed, the tears flowing freely as he shoved Bruce. “Finally, someone comes around, someone who understands me, loves me, trusts me and you tried to get rid of her too. You tried to take her from me, but oh no! When that didn't work, you threw us both into the asylum. Yeah, you love me Bruce. I would be scared to see what you would do if you hated me.” Jack laughed.

“I didn't put Doctor Quinzel in there Jack,” Bruce objected.

“No, you gave her no choice Bruce. You just never understood what we mean to each other.” Jack said in response between clenched teeth. “What it's like to really love someone. That's something you just can't understand because you just can't bring yourself to care! That's your biggest fault brother...your constant need to be the stoic big brother, the untouchable pillar of Gotham. You know why you hate her so much? Because Harley's my family...my real family.”

Bruce reached for his brother again, but Harley threw herself between them.

“Don't you dare touch him.” She snarled.

Bruce narrowed his eyes at her. “I hired you to help and look what you've done.”

Jack growled. “Don't you dare blame her Bruce. Don't!”

Jack took a threatening step toward his brother.

Agatha groaned. “Boys please!”

Jack didn't hear her as he shoved Bruce in the chest again, forcing his brother backwards. “You don't understand anything Bruce, you never did. Harley is mine and I'm hers. Nothing and no one will stand between us, not even you. I choose my family and I choose her over you, over all of it.” Jack wiped viciously at his face smearing the black makeup.

“I choose her!!! I'll always choose her over you!”

Bruce wasn't sure why he snapped. His anger flared and he did something he would never have done if he hadn't let his emotions escape his control—something Jack seemed adept at bringing out in Bruce—he took a swing at his brother.
Harley saw the swing coming and did the first thing that came to mind, protect Jack. She stepped in the way in that split second...

Bruce's fist hit her in the face followed by the snap and crunch of bone.
Changes

Harley stumbled back, her hands automatically coming up to cover her face with a cry of pain. Bruce stared in shock as he saw blood rush down from her nose to cover her lips and chin. She made a soft sound of shock mixed with another gasp of pain. Agatha grabbed Harley, but the next sound that Bruce heard was a twisted sound of anguish mixed with rage, an almost inhuman sound. His eyes snapped to his brother, but Jack didn't look like Jack at all. The blind rage behind his brother's blue eyes sent a chill down Bruce's spine. Never had he seen a look so murderous in his brother's eyes before—or any eyes, and as Batman he had seen many killers. Bruce had no time to react before Jack had thrown himself at his brother, his hands wrapping around Bruce's neck.

Bruce went down under the sudden viciousness of Jack's attack. He didn't even have time to throw his arms up to defend himself before Jack was on him.

Jack snarled. "YOU FUCKER!! NO ONE TOUCHES HARLEY!! NO ONE!!"

Everyone made a sound of astonishment as Agatha grabbed Harley pulling her back from the two men. Alex started to go to Jack, but Frost pulled him back. "Let them fight for a bit. Might be what they need."

Alex shook his head and watched the event unfolding. "Fucking hell."

Jack hauled back his fist and struck Bruce across the face. Bruce gasped in shock, Jack's strike splitting his lip. Bruce could taste blood on his tongue.

Jack hit him again with a vicious snarl. "No one touches her EVER!! I will kill you for hurting her!!"

Bruce grabbed Jack by the front of his tux and heaved him to the side. Jack hit the floor with his shoulder, sliding a bit, but he stumbled to his feet just as Bruce pushed himself up to a standing position.

"I didn't mean to hit her GOD DAMN IT JACK!!" Bruce yelled.

Jack laughed without humor at his brother. "You talk about me being violent? Look at you Brucie!! Just look at yourself!"

Bruce charged Jack, shoving his little brother back and into the arch that had been put up for the altar. The entire thing came crashing down as Bruce landed two hits to Jack's side. Bruce grabbed Jack, one hand gripping an upper arm and another grasping his brother's coat tail, lifting him off his feet and threw him. Jack slammed to the floor and slid a few feet, but Bruce wasn't done. He threw himself after Jack jumping on top of his brother getting a few good hits in before Jack brought his legs up, kicking Bruce off of him.

Agatha yelled. "STOP THIS BOTH OF YOU!!"

But neither brother heard her or paid any attention to their aunt, both of them intent on hurting the other.

Jack staggered to his feet with a laugh, blood dripping from his nose and mouth and staining his teeth. "I bet this is what you always wanted!! A chance to beat the shit out of me isn't it? Well guess what Brucie!! You're just as fucked up as me!" Jack laughed at the situation.

"SHUT UP JACK!!" Bruce snarled swinging at his little brother, his fist connecting with Jack across the face, but Jack only laughed.

“Come on Brucie, hit me! Hit me until your knuckles bleed, then hit me again!! You can't save me!! You never could! No one can save me!! All you can do is save yourself, isn't that right?” Jack laughed just as the bigger man threw himself at him, his shoulder connecting with Jack's chest knocking the air from him. The two brothers went down, sliding across the floor and slamming into the table where Agatha had set up the chairs and glasses for afterward the ceremony.

Harley cried out. “Jack!” But Agatha held her back.

Champagne glasses crashed to the floor, sprinkling the brothers with broken glass. The table teetered and fell over on its side as chairs were pushed aside. Alice screamed at the sudden sound and the violence between the two brother. Alex wrapped his arm around her shoulder turning her away from the fight. He looked to Dale and Sandra. “Take Alice and wait outside, make sure no one comes in here and that no one calls the police okay?”

Dale nodded firmly. “Got it. Come on ladies.”

Jack rolled over Bruce, gaining the upper hand as he straddled his brother. He punched Bruce in the face once, but Bruce's arm shot up catching Jack under his jaw and snapping his head back. Bruce bucked, knocking his brother off of him. The two men separated, staggered back from one another.

Jack snarled. “Perfect Bruce! The prefect brother! I'm the one fucking thing you couldn't fix!”

Bruce shook his head and growled out. “It was never like that Jack!! I just wanted you to be normal!”

As soon as the words were out of his mouth, Bruce realized he had made a terrible mistake.

Jack's gaze narrowed with hate. He reached over to grab one of the fallen chairs, throwing it at Bruce, but his brother ducked the chair.

“JACK! Stop this right now!!” Bruce ducked away, but then Jack threw another chair.

“All you've ever done is take from me Bruce!! All I wanted was a brother, but you took that from me! I wanted your approval and all I got was shunned...the more I tried to pull you closer the harder you fought to push me away.” Jack was crying more fully now, not trying to stop the tears which had smeared black eyeliner down his cheeks.

“Then you tried to take my freedom from me, sticking me in a hole where you can forget about me...forget me? You just want to forget me don't you?! Then...then...I forgave you everything Bruce, EVERYTHING!! Don't you understand?? I love you, I wanted to forgive you...but this.” Jack's voice dropped low, dangerous. “…hurting my Harley…” Bruce saw the crazed lunacy in his brother's eyes and Bruce felt something break in him. Jack hissed low. “I can't forgive you...I can't forgive you for hurting her...never Bruce. You understand?”

Jack smiled at his brother then, a slow smile that spread across his face never quite meeting his eyes. Jack surged forward taking a few quick swipes at Bruce. Bruce stumbled back then brought his foot up with a snap kick to Jack's gut. He followed the kick with a series of quick jabs to Jack's sides.

Jack hissed, but he held his own, grunting with each impact, but he remained standing and ready.

Bruce leapt up, kicked out again with one foot, (surprising everyone with how high Bruce jumped with such ease), his foot making a solid connection to Jack's chest. Jack stumbled back as his brother did a back flip from the attack, landing in a crouch. Jack laughed spitting blood on the floor. More than one onlooker was surprised by the maneuver.

“Oh lookie who's been doing something besides fucking himself through all the single women in Gotham.”

Bruce hissed back at his little brother. “Shut up Jack.”

“Or what? Ya gonna hit me? Too late Brucie, your temper's showing.” Jack sneered.

Bruce let out a roar of rage, running toward his brother then doing a series of hard, sharp jabs at Jack. Jack weaved, avoiding all but the last which caught him just above his collar. Jack gasped for a moment, the sudden jab to his throat cutting off his breath for a moment. Bruce reached out and grabbed his brother's shoulder slamming Jack up against the wall.

“Stop this now Jack!” Bruce growled, but Jack sneered as he sucked in a breath. “Never,” he hissed in promise just before he slammed his fist down on the joint of Bruce's arm breaking the other man's hold on him. Jack shoved at his brother, but Bruce, larger and stronger, grabbed Jack and forced him backwards into the wall. Both of them were panting, covered in sweat by now. Jack twisted around, putting his back against Bruce's chest then used his elbow to smash his brother in the face with three quick backward jabs. Bruce gasped in pain, blood bursting from his nose and cheek. Jack spun away turning around to face his brother, but as Jack reared an arm back to hit Bruce again, his older brother swung, landing a hard right hook to Jack's cheek, a cut opening up and leaking blood down the side of Jack's face.

Jack spun with the punch. Bruce came after him for another hit, but Jack spun around and grabbed Bruce's arm with both his hands forcing Bruce back. He let go long enough to give his big brother a back handed fist to the face. Jack then brought his leg up, his knee connecting with Bruce's diaphragm. Bruce's breath rushed out with a heavy grunt, but he still shoved Jack back with a slap to his little brother across the face with his left hand. He grabbed Jack's lapels and forced the thinner man toward the wall, but Jack twisted on his foot bringing his left leg around to kick his brother in the side. Bruce tightened his muscles taking the impact, grabbed his brother's leg and shoved him into the wall. Jack's back struck against the unrelenting wall and gasped in pain. Bruce lunged forward to hold Jack up against the wall, slamming his fist into Jack's face; the back of Jack's head bounced against the wall. Jack shook his head as if to clear it and laughed.

“Good one, Bro. My turn.”

Jack's hands snapped up together and then out to loosen Bruce's hold. With a quick shift in momentum, he planted his palms against Bruce's chest and shoved, utilizing the wall with one leg to give him leverage to shove his brother back. Bruce brought his hands up to block Jack's follow up strikes, but Jack opted to go for body strikes—a right fist to the side, and then another to the shoulder. Jack's next strike caught Bruce under the chin, forcing a dazed Bruce to stumble back.

Bruce gasped as he shook his head to clear it. “Jack! You're acting crazy!! Ever since you hooked up with Harleen you've been worse!! Can't you see that?”

Jack's eyes narrowed. “Oh, I see Bruce. You're just jealous.”

Bruce coughed, spitting blood on the floor. “Jack, this isn't you!”

“How would you even know Brucie?” Jack asked with a grin and a waggle of his eyebrows. The two brothers now slowly circled each other. “You have no idea who I am anymore. Not that you ever knew. You have no idea what I've done, endured...my life was a nightmare until Harley walked into it. She completes me Bruce. She is my perfect partner, my friend, my lover...you have no idea what that's like to have someone who you trust.”

Bruce coughed before he answered. “You're losing your mind Jack. That woman is making you lose your mind! Please Jack, let me help you.”

“Oh, it's a little late now to want to help me Bruce. All you want to do is take from me: my freedom, my love, my girl. Well you can take your pity and your help and shove it up your ass, big brother.” Jack laughed.

Bruce growled. “Just...if I could get you away from her...”

Jack let out an incoherent growl of rage, surprising his brother when he moved so rapidly, grabbing Bruce by his shoulders just before he threw him. Bruce hit the floor hard, gasping as the air was knocked from him. His body slid across the slick floor, crashing into some of the chairs that were now scattered over the floor. Bruce quickly climbed to his feet stumbling a little when Jack let out another rage-filled cry and rushed his older brother, grabbing Bruce before he had time to recover, and spinning as he threw his brother against the wall. Bruce slammed against the wall, but he seemed to bounce back reaching for Jack before his brother could get out of the way. He grabbed Jack, the two men suddenly a tangle of fists and elbows striking, slamming and damaging the other. For a moment the two of them twisted in a circle, struggling against each other, both trying to get the upper hand on the other until Bruce threw Jack off of him and punched his little brother in the stomach. Jack gasped in pain, the air in his lung rushing out in a whoosh of pain.

Agatha, who had her arms around Harley still, screamed. “STOP THIS!! Both of YOU!”

Neither man heard her or seemed inclined to listen.

They grabbed each other again doing a spin as they struggled. Bruce leaned back and smashed his forehead against Jack's. Both men were bleeding, not just from their noses and mouths, but from numerous nicks and pressure cuts they had both received; their knuckles were scraped and bloody, but neither man seemed willing to let the other go. Bruce threw Jack to the floor with a grunt, knocking the breath again from his slim brother. Jack gasped, rolling away as Bruce tried to grab him again. Jack stumbled up to his feet grinning from ear to ear as he sidestepped a grab from his older brother.

“It's so nice to see you let loose Brucie. All that pent up rage finally boiling over eh? How constipated you must have been this whole time!” Jack giggled. Bruce closed his eyes for a second, clearly trying to get himself under control when Jack punched him in the face again, then again, two quick jabs with his right fist. Bruce stumbled back, but reached out to grab his brother around the waist and force him back against the wall with enough strength that Jack left a crater in the surface of the wall.

Both men were panting, struggling, vying for control of the fight. Bruce tried to hold Jack against the wall hissing at his brother. “That's enough Jack!! Stop it!!”

Jack laughed. “It will never be enough Bruce!! And I'm never going to stop!!”

Jack balled his fists together and slammed them down on Bruce's back. They both fell, sliding down the wall to the floor, both brothers going down in a disorganized heap, both exhausted, both hurting too much to pull away from one another. They stayed locked together for a few seconds panting, sweating, bleeding together. Jack pushed Bruce off, trying to get to his feet, but he stumbled back against the wall again and fell, sliding to the floor again. Bruce shoved himself up, wobbling for a few seconds, struggling to catch his breath before he stumbled down to a knee. He shoved himself up again, getting to his feet while Jack used the wall to pull himself to a standing position.
Jack grinned at Bruce, panting as he licked the blood from his lips. “It's over Bruce.” He took several breaths. “It's over between us.”

Bruce panted and struggled to get his breath. “Stop it Jack. Don't say that. You don't mean it.”

Jack giggled and then said with a bit of a scratch in his tone. “Oh, but I do.”

He took several swipes at his brother, but Bruce ducked and avoided them, barely. Bruce swung at Jack, but Jack caught his arm with an open hand and drove his fist up into Bruce's under arm, right into the arm pit. Bruce gasped in pain as the two quick, powerful upward jabs that Jack took dislocated his brother's shoulder. Bruce twisted and despite his shoulder being out of socket, he wrapped his arm around Jack's neck, falling back against the wall using the flat surface to support himself while he yanked back on Jack's throat, gritting his teeth against the pain in his shoulder.
Bruce held his arm around Jack's neck while Jack struggled, but he was weakening. The fight, the pummeling...all of it conspired to make it so Jack couldn't fight his brother's hold on him.

“Stop it, Jack! Stop resisting!” Bruce yelled struggling to hold on to his brother.

Jack clawed at Bruce's arm around his neck, choking. Speaking became difficult as Bruce cut off his windpipe. “Never!! I'm going to make you pay Bruce!! Pay...for hurting her...”

Jack choked; Bruce pulled back on his brother's throat again, the blazing pain of his shoulder becoming lost in the overload of other pains that Bruce felt everywhere.

Agatha screamed. “BRUCE!! You're killing him!!”

Jack's breath came in a hiccup. He had stopped struggling. Harley ripped herself out of Agatha's grip racing to help Jack who was gasping, but only a little, his face turning pale with a slight blue tinge, while Bruce kept yelling. ‘JACK STOP IT!! Stop struggling!!! I'm just trying to help you!”

Jack snarled, gasping for breath in the next instant, making a horrible strained sound as he struggled to breathe, but it seemed as if Bruce couldn't hear him, hadn't noticed that his brother had stopped fighting him. He yanked back hard on Jack again while Jack beat weakly on his brother's arm in one last attempt to get him to let go.

Harley, her face covered in blood, large angry blotches of blood stained her wedding dress as well, grabbed at Bruce's arm. “Let him GO!! YOU'RE KILLING HIM!”

Bruce looked up and went still, his grip on his brother relaxing as he stared into the barrel of a gun, but it was the realization of what he was doing that actually had Bruce releasing his brother.

Frost stood there calmly with a pistol aimed at Bruce's face. “Mr. Wayne, I need to ask you to let Mr.
Wayne go now.”

Bruce's arm dropped, numb. He stared at the gun and the cold gaze of the man who held it while Jack fell. Harley cried out grabbing for Jack and pulling him to her as she glared up at Bruce, her voice slightly muffled from her broken nose. “You're the monster Bruce! How could you do that?!”

Agatha was shaking as she stepped forward past Frost. She glanced at Harley and Jack then back at Bruce.

“Bruce, I think you should leave;” she said softly, but with a tone of command in her voice.

“I...I...” Bruce started, but his aunt held up her hand. “Bruce, you've said enough. Just go.”
Bruce looked down at Jack. His head was resting against Harley's chest. Harley was crying, holding him close and stroking his hair. Jack's tuxedo was stained with blood, ripped in places from their fight. Bruce was pale and shaky. He couldn't believe what he had almost done. He swallowed, then said softly.

“I'm sorry Jack. I know you don't believe me, but I love you. I always have...” Bruce turned and walked toward the door leaving without another word.

Agatha dropped down next to Jack and Harley. “We need to get you two to a hospital.”

Alex walked over. “I have a doctor who can see them. I'll call him now. He can meet us at the apartment.”

Agatha nodded then put her arms around Harley. “Come on dear, let's get you two home. Jack, can you walk?”

Jack nodded. “Yeah...” He blinked and licked a swelling, bloody lip. “I mean yes.”

He stood up slowly along with Harley. They put their arms around each other following Alex, Agatha and Frost out of the room and away from the remains of their wedding.

*

An hour later they were all back at the apartment. Alex had picked up some Chinese on the way here, the enticing aroma of which could be smelled here in the bedroom where Harley laid back against the pillows propped up on the bed, a ice bag on her nose over the splint that Dr. Henderschott had delicately applied. She looked tired and upset, set wearing a large pink and grey jersey sleep shirt, her hair pulled back into a messy bun on the top of her head.

The doctor smiled down at her from where he stood on the side of the bed. “I'll be back here in four days to perform a closed reduction surgery, which means I'll give you a local anesthetic and manually realign it. It's a pretty clean and minor break, should be just fine Harley. Until then, alternate with the ice to get the swelling to go down and take those pain pills religiously along with the antibiotics and rest. Lots of rest.” He gave her a pat on the hand.

That was the moment that Jack came back into the bedroom from the shower with a towel draped over his head. He was rubbing both his hands across the towel walking blindly through the room tugging his towel off and draping it over his shoulder in the next moment.

Harley winced when she saw her husband. Jack looked rough; he had suffered multiple cuts and bruises along his cheeks, chin, lips, and forehead. He was wearing only his pajama pants which allowed Harley to see the angry bruises blossoming on his torso as he walked over and eased himself down onto the bed. His knuckles were along scraped and bruised with some swelling around Jack's knuckles.

Dr. Henderschott sighed. “All right young man, I need to stitch that cut on your cheek. You're lucky you didn't break a rib from the look of those bruises...or your fingers! Not sure how you did it, but congrats on not breaking a bone.”

Jack chuckled. “I think Bruce was either holding back or he's not as good as he thought he was in a fight.”

Harley frowned, her voice stuffy sounding. “Not funny puddin.”

Jack pouted at her before sitting up straight on the side of the bed so that Dr. Henderschott could start stitching up the wound. “It's a little funny,” he tossed over his shoulder at Harley before turning back to face the doctor with a grin. “You think it's a little funny right doc?”
Dr. Henderschott grunted. “As your doctor, no and as just a plain man, I can't really say since I only know your brother through the media's lens.”

Jack grunted. “Oh yes, the cool and collected Bruce Wayne, billionaire playboy, man about town, and raging narcissist.”

Henderschott didn't say anything to that; he simply went about his task of stitching Jack up.

Harley stuck her bottom lip out, but tried to let herself relax and let the pain pills do their work. Dr. Henderschott put five stitches into the wound on Jack’s cheek and another three on his forehead. The physician stepped back to examine his work. “I think there shouldn't be any scarring, or if there is, it will be very light.”

Jack grinned. “Thanks doc.”

Henderschott smiled. “No problem, though I would recommend you two try to stay out of trouble for a little while between injuries.”

Jack gave the man a salute as the doctor picked up his bag. Henderschott chuckled leaving the bedroom. They could hear him say out loud once he was in the living room, having left the bedroom door open. “Okay, patients are taking care of. I would feel better if someone stayed the night with them, just for tonight, but after that they should be fine.”

Jack could hear his voices before they dropped volume, the sounds of people speaking quietly filtered through the doorway as Jack crawled into bed next to Harley, popping his own set of pain pills from the doctor that were lying on the bedside table. Jack sighed, sinking into the pillows beside Harley before he spoke.

“I'm sorry,” he said softly.

Harley turned to frown at him. Jack smiled gazing at her. Even with her nose in a splint and the bruising, she still looked adorable to him.

“What are you sorry about?” Harley asked gently. “You didn't do anything.”

Jack closed his eyes reaching over to tug her into his arms. “I...there had to be a way I could have prevented what happened. I shouldn't have let Bruce get under my skin like that. He just...” Jack snarled without words.

Harley reached up to caress his jaw, careful of his cuts and bruises. She frowned, but looked at him softly. “Jack, it's not your fault. Your brother...your brother is a jerk, to say the least. I know he was dealing with his own grief, but he abandoned you when you needed him the most, leaving you lonely, scared, and hurt. And now...now he...he just can't see you as the person you are. Instead he is always trying to make you into someone like him. Bruce has a very black and white mentality about good and evil, right and wrong...normal or deviant. And you're his brother, so he expects you to be like him. Since you're not, he just...he just can't handle it. He could never accept you before and if he knew the real you, he would throw you back to Arkham as fast as he could. But I love you Jack, I love the real you...” she whispered softly. “You and me against the meaninglessness of the world. Right puddin?”

Jack grinned. “Right pumpkin poo.”

Jack tugged her closer still, his mouth covering hers in a gentle kiss, their tongues playing slowly against each other until there was a light knock followed by...
“Fucking shit! Can't leave you guys alone in a room for five fucking seconds and you're all over each other!”

Jack and Harley separated, giggling to see Alex in the doorway of the bedroom with Alice. Alex had a plate of food, Alice had another plate and behind them was Sandra with a couple of cans of soda.

“It ain't much of a fucking wedding feast, but thought you to might be hungry,” Alex explained with a grin while the delicious scent of Chinese food wafted toward them. A few seconds behind them came Aunt Agatha holding another couple of plates. She flowed into the room with Frost and Dale. “I had the wedding cake brought over here while that delightful doctor was working on your nose dear.” She held up the plates to show two large slices of cake.

Jack's stomach growled loudly. “Thanks Auntie,”

She smiled and sat on the side of the bed by Jack after Alex and Alice handed over the plates.

Alex stood at the foot of the bed with Alice. “Alice and I are going to hang out here tonight. That fucking couch folds out into a bed, so don’t worry about where we’re sleeping. ‘Course if you two start fucking fucking, then give a shout beforehand so I can close your fucking door,” Alex said with a grin and a wince. “Though I might close your fucking door so Alice and I can...” He didn't get to finish his sentence before Alice slugged him in the shoulder.

“Ouch, fucking hell Alice.” Alex grinned rubbing his shoulder.

Agatha laid her hand on Jack's knee. “I'm going to let you both rest and heal. I'll come back over in a few days. I have something I want to propose to you two...all right?”

Jack looked intrigued, but he nodded. “All right.”

Agatha stood and kissed Jack on the cheek and leaned over to grasp Harley's hand. “I'll see you both in a couple of days—rest well.”

She turned to leave, then stopped and smiled. “You coming Frost?”

Frost flushed bright red glancing nervously at Jack and Harley. Jack snickered. “Don't let me stop you.”

Frost grinned turning back to Agatha. “Uh...yeah.”

He hurried over to her and Agatha put her arm through his, the two of them walking out the door and a few moments later, they all heard the apartment door close.

Alex shook his head. “Man, Frost is going to be walking fucking funny for a few days.”

Jack snorted on his food nearly choking. “Hey that's my aunt!” He laughed.

Alex grinned. “Hey, I'm just fucking calling it!”

*

Alfred was fixing dinner, hoping to make Bruce eat before he went out tonight as Batman. He was busy cutting up the sweet potatoes for a bucatini with winter pesto and sweet potatoes dish he was making for dinner when he heard the front door open.

“Master Bruce?” Alfred asked setting down his knife and wiping his hands on the apron he wore as he walked from the kitchen toward the door when Bruce came stumbling into the kitchen.
“Good LORD Master Bruce, what happened?!” Alfred gasped looking at the bloody mess that was Master Bruce's face.

Bruce closed his eyes and hissed. “Jack. I found Jack...”

Alfred looked shocked, then composed himself. He asked as he grabbed Bruce and began to lead him from the kitchen to the manor's small infirmary. “Did Master Jack do this to you?”

Bruce sighed. “We...we got into it,” he said. “I...Alfred...I...I almost killed him.”

Alfred stiffened slightly, but continued to lead Bruce. When he had him in the room, he forced Bruce onto the exam table and began helping him get his shirt off.

“Tell me everything that happened Master Bruce,” Alfred said, his voice lacking emotion.

*

Half an hour later Alfred was finishing up the last stitch on a deep wound along Bruce's forehead. Bruce was quiet after explaining what had happened, following his aunt, finding them in the middle of a wedding ceremony. Alfred finished and gently placed a bandage over the stitches.

“Well, I must say, you could have handled that much better. Did you break Miss Harleen's nose?” Alfred asked. Bruce could feel the tension emanating from Alfred though he neither said anything nor did he give any other indication that he was upset.

Bruce sighed. “I'm not sure, but from the amount of blood and swelling and the sound, yes...I think I did.”

Alfred let out an exhausted breath. His lips were set in a thin line and it was clear from his expression he was upset now. This was one of the few times Bruce had ever seen it. Alfred looked exhausted, exhausted to the point that he even leaned against the wall.

“Poor Miss Harleen...though you know Master Bruce, you are lucky. You could have done more than simply break her nose...you could possibly have killed her. She is a delicate young woman who you struck in the face with your fist Master Bruce. Do you realize what you could have done?” Alfred kept his voice calm though his words hit Bruce in the chest, the realization that Alfred was correct, that he could have easily killed her. Bruce closed his eyes as he leaned forward, his hands dangling between his knees. What was he doing?

Alfred took a breath and continued. “Master Bruce, Master Jack may be correct. I don't see how you are going to be able to mend your relationship with your brother after this...you not only ruined their wedding, but you struck the woman he loves.”

Bruce spared a look at the older man and then closed his eyes again. “What have I done Alfred?”

*

A couple of hours later, Bruce was upstairs in his room. He had showered and changed, getting ready to head down to the cave to change for the night when he stepped out into the hall to see his aunt and the man who had pulled a weapon on him at the ceremony, carrying bags down the stairs. He tamped down on his irritation at the armed man, realizing that he had just been protecting Jack.

Bruce frowned. “Aunt Agatha?”

Agatha, who was handing the man a bag, stopped to stare down the hall at Bruce. Bruce took a couple of steps toward her. “What are you doing?”

Agatha sighed. “I'm leaving Bruce. I've a room at The Kane Hotel. I'll be staying there for the remainder of my visit.”

Bruce rubbed the bridge of his nose. “Agatha, you don't...”

“Bruce...I'm very upset, very angry with you. You didn't just physically hurt Harley and Jack, you cut Jack to his very soul Bruce. You hurt him in a way a brother should never hurt their sibling. I'm...I'm not ready to forgive you yet and I need some space. I still love you, but right now...I think this is for the best.”

Agatha motioned Frost to go ahead down the stairs and she followed him. Bruce just watched her go, wondering what else he could screw up.

*

A few days later, Jack was dressed in black slacks and a slim fit bright purple Italian cotton dress shirt with light blue and purple circles contrast fabric at the collar and sleeves, which he had rolled up to his elbows, while he sported a pair of mint green/apple green socks with dark brown thin stripes. Jack sat with his feet up and crossed at the ankles on the coffee table next to Harley, who was dressed in a pair of brown corduroy overalls with a rib-knit pink sweater and wore a pair of pink socks with red ribbon print. Her long blonde hair was down and she wore a pink beanie on her head with little knit cat ears on it, and sat cross-legged on the couch next to Jack. The two of them were playing a video game together when they heard a knock at the door. Harley's nose looked much better, the doctor having come by yesterday. There was still some swelling and bruising, especially under her eyes, but she was healing rapidly.

Jack glanced over his shoulder at the door and yelled. “COME IN!”

Harley giggled. “HA!! Gotcha!”

Jack groaned. “No fair Harls!! I was distracted!”

“All's fair in love and war puddin! And this is war!” Harley giggled, slamming her buttons.

Jack snarled. “I'm going to get you pooh!”

Harley giggled. “Oh, you can try!”

Agatha laughed. “How are my two favorite people?”

Jack glanced over. “Hey Auntie!”

“HA!! Got you again puddin!!” Harley squealed.

Jack groaned loudly. “Yer a dirty cheat, you are!” He laughed reached up to pinch Harley's hip. She squealed, wiggling away from him. Agatha laughed coming around to sit on the couch next to Harley. “Glad to see you two are doing well.”

Jack chuckled. “Except for Harley cheating at this game, yeah we're good.”

Harley stuck her tongue out at him, pulling the skin under one eye down at the same time. Jack laughed and yanked her into his embrace, leaning down to nibble her lips causing her to giggle and snuggle into him. Agatha smiled at the two of them before she spoke.
“Well, I wanted to talk to you two about the house on the island, the wildlife refuge that's southwest of the Tricorner.”

Jack stopped playing with trying to tickle Harley and take her controller away from her to lean over and look around Harley to see his aunt more fully. “What about it?”

Harley giggled. “Oh you lost puddin.”

Jack stuck his tongue out at her.

“Well, I don't know if you knew this honey, but the house there...well...It technically doesn't belong to the “family” per se. Rather, it does belong to me. My father left it to me in his will. The house sits on the island, the majority of which belongs to the parks and services of Gotham, but there is around a five hundred yard diameter piece of land from the northern shore inwards, where the house stands, that belongs to me, divided by a stone wall and gate from the rest of the wildlife refuge. Anyway, I thought I might sign it over to you and Harley.” She smiled at her own idea.

She nodded. “I'm never here in Gotham and the house is maintained, but it needs to be lived in. I thought it might make a nice wedding present...and I won't tell Bruce. He'll never know you are there. The man I pay to maintain the grounds and the house will be paid to keep his mouth shut if you want. He's a discreet keeper.”

Jack seemed at a loss for words then smiled. “It's perfect!”

Harley leaned over and hugged Agatha. “Oh thank you!”

Agatha grinned, hugging Harley back. “Fantastic! I'll call my lawyer and we should have the papers drawn up and everything ready to sign by tomorrow.” Agatha hopped to her feet, bending over to kiss Harley then Jack on the forehead. “Okay kiddies, I'm off—got a hot date tonight!”

Jack smirked. “Please don't break my driver Auntie.”

Agatha laughed. “I'll do my best sweetie. As Mae West said, a hard man is good to find. I'll make sure to return him in one piece sweetheart! You kids have fun!” With a wave Aunt Agatha sailed out the door.

Jack pulled Harley back onto his lap. “A house of our own...a base for our gang.”

Harley grinned. “I can't wait puddin.”

Jack licked her lips just before his eyes lit up. “You know, I think we should go out, go celebrate!”

Harley frowned. “You think that's a good idea puddin? What if...I mean Bruce...”

“Pfft...He's off licking his wounds. He isn't going to bother us. Besides, we are going to go someplace Bruce never goes. We're going to go to a play! I just saw it online yesterday, there is a little theater in the upper west side called The Urban who are doing a play version of Victor Hugo's “The Man Who Laughs.” I thought we could take in the play and there is a great little diner down there that has the best hamburgers! It'll be fun!”

Harley giggled snuggling into his embrace. “That sounds fantastic puddin!”

*
Later that evening Jack was smiling behind the wheel of a modest Ford Fusion, tapping his fingers in time to the music, Daft Punk’s “Something About Us” while Harley moved her body to the slow, sensual beat of the music in the seat beside him. He glanced over at her. She looked adorable in her skinny jeans, hiking boots and a fuzzy red sweater, with a faux fur jacket on, her hair down under a red beanie and a pair of black framed glasses sitting delicately on her nose. Every time he gazed at her, he was sure he fell a little more in love with her. Harley glanced over, catching him smiling at her and winked at him. He looked dashing as always even if he was dressed down more than he would usually be when they went out, wearing a pair of jeans; a purple and black slim-cut dress shirt; a green, black and white plaid vest; and a pair of boots along with a long black coat. Jack also had a pair of square glasses on, which Harley thought made him look adorable, though they also made her want to slowly pull them off and lick his mouth…and other parts of his anatomy. She grinned brightly at him. Jack grinned in return, reaching over to squeeze her knee, but then left his hand on her leg as he drove. Harley placed her hand over his, lacing her fingers with his and squeezing gently. Jack’s smile widened as he drove and Harley thought as she gazed at him that she couldn’t be happier than she was right at this moment.

When they arrived at the theater called The Urban, Harley was thrilled. The theater had an old fashioned type of movie theater marquee over the double doors, with a ticket booth located out front which was a detached little booth just for the selling of tickets where a girl dressed in a red and gold sort of bellhop uniform with a little bellhop hat on her head and white gloves sat. The Urban was a little theater inside a grand old building. The theater itself had a large stage with a grand red velvet curtain. Even the walls were painted a shade of red, the chairs were red...everything was red of some shade. Stadium seating provided good views regardless of a person's choice in seats and even a small orchestra pit was available for some performances. When Jack and Harley arrived, she was actually surprised at the number of people coming out to see a play on a cold winter's night, but this was Gotham and Gotham never slept, Harley thought.

Harley loved the fact that even though it was a theater for live performances, the place had a concession stand like an old-fashioned movie theater. Jack bought them a large bucket of popcorn, sodas and a box of Jujubes for the two of them. Their seats where down near the front, right in the middle. Jack grinned picking up some popcorn and feeding it to Harley. “You know I love you wifey?”

Harley giggled around her bite. “I love you too puddin.”

*

The play was fun. It was a play based on the book by Victor Hugo, but mixed in elements from the 1928 movie of the same name, about a clown named Gwynplaine who, as a child, was disfigured by an evil man named Dr. Hardquannone, so that Gwynplaine would “laugh forever at his fool of a father” who the king killed in an iron maiden; Gwynplaine's father, Lord Clancharlie was a political rival. Gwynplaine was exiled and paraded in freak shows throughout Europe, his mouth carved into a permanent nightmarish grin. Gwynplaine was billed at these shows as “The Laughing Man” in the circus. When he grew up, the clown falls in love with a blind woman named Dea who loves him too, but Gwynplaine remained silent, never speaking of his love, thinking his disfigurement made him unworthy of her love. The rest of the play revolved around Gwynplaine being recognized as his father's heir, the Queen trying to force him into a marriage with a Lady Josiana, who liked his disfigurement and tried to seduce him. Eventually Gwynplaine ran away, giving up his title and his father's lands to leave with the circus and Dea. Harley decided it was all very melodramatic and romantic. Harley sighed as they walked out of the theater together. A light snow had begun to fall, the lights from the theater causing the tiny flakes to look like diamonds drifting down from the sky. Harley slipped her arm through Jack's as they set foot out on the sidewalk and started to walk to their car.
“Oh I really adored the play Jack! It was so romantic!” Harley cooed, softly laying her cheek against his shoulder.

Jack smiled glancing down at her. “Yeah, I liked it too. I saw the movie version once when I was a kid. I was always taken with the character of Gwynplaine.”

Harley smiled. “My favorite scene was when Dea said that God closed her eyes so that she could see only the real Gwynplaine...so romantic.”

Jack chuckled, stopping under a streetlight and pulling Harley into his embrace. He smiled down at her rubbing the tip of his nose gently against hers. Harley smiled gazing up at him and whispered. “I can see only the real Jack.”

Jack tightened his arms around her and kissed her passionately.

Someone drove by rolling down their window to yell. “GET A ROOM!”

Jack chuckled. “You know Harls, that guy is so lucky I don't have my gun on me.”

They both laughed and headed back to the car.

The diner that Jack had told her about looked like an old diner from the movies with a large wrap around window, a center counter with padded stools and booths that lined the window. It was almost midnight by the time they had driven here and found a place to park, but the diner was still doing a brisk business. Jack grabbed them a booth at the very back. Instead of sitting across from each other Jack pulled Harley into the booth beside him.

“So burger, fries, maybe a milkshake even though it's cold out?” Jack asked as he nibbled her ear.

Harley squirmed and giggled. “Perfect!”

The waitress came over to their table, an older woman with straight brown hair and a pleasant smile. Her name tag read Jodi, she wore a pink waitress's uniform with a little white apron, and lifted her eyebrows as she asked to take their order. “So, what would you two lovebirds like?”

Jack grinned, picking up the menu long enough to confirm the number. “Two number eights with cheese and two chocolate milkshakes with double the cherries.”

Jodi nodded. “Okay, I'll get the shakes out for you right away and the burgers will be a few minutes.”

“Thank you very much Jodi!” Jack grinned giving her a salute which a giggling Harley duplicated.

After the waitress had gone to put in their order Jack sighed, keeping an arm around Harley's waist. “So, in a few days, we'll go check out the house. Make it the meeting place for the gang. It'll be a perfect place to plan our first job!” Jack said with a slight edge of excitement in his tone.

Harley dragged her teeth across her bottom lip. “You have any ideas for the Red Hood's first job?” she asked quietly.

Jack frowned in thought. “I suppose it all depends on who we have in the crew. Alex is putting together a list of potentials he wants us to meet, but...I'm thinking I want to do something a little personal as the first job.”
Harley frowned, puzzled. “Personal? Like what?”

Jack smiled slowly. “There is this art gallery...one in which a certain Mr. Bruce Wayne may have donated a great deal of priceless art and...you know...if any of this art was vandalized, a certain big brother would be a little upset.” Jack grinned mischievously.

Harley blinked. She opened her mouth to respond, but that was when Jodi returned with two large chocolate milkshakes topped with whipped cream and two cherries each. She smiled. “Your burgers will be out shortly.”

“Thanks Jodi!” Jack smiled taking one of the cherries and popping it into Harley's mouth. He grinned at her. “It'll be perfect. And I'm going to make sure old Brucie knows it was us.”

“But puddin, won't he...you know...turn us in?” Harley asked swallowing her cherry.

“I don't think so. I don't think Bruce is gonna want all of Gotham to know that not only is his little brother not missing—escaped from the crazy house and all—but also turning to crime? The shame! The horror!” Jack put his wrist to his forehead and leaned back before putting on a thick southern accent. “I just don't know if my heart can take much more of this Miss Harley!”

Harley snorted. “Jack!”

Jack giggled sitting back up. “It will be hilarious Harley! Just you wait and see my pretty little peach!” Jack grabbed her pulling her against him and tickled her sides causing Harley to squeal.

Two days later, Jack, Harley, Agatha, Alex, Alice and Frost were all on a boat heading across the Gotham river on their way to the house that Agatha had signed over to them. It had started to snow again, nothing heavy, just light flakes, but with the water and wind, the chill was biting. Jack and Harley sat on one of the outside benches, bundled up against the cold. Harley was snuggled up against Jack who had his arms around her. She was wearing a cute red knit cap with a large pompom on the top with her heavy parka, a thick red scarf and thick red, lined mittens. Jack smiled. She was so cute he thought. He was wearing his own knit cap with a matching pompom to Harley's, though in a deep plum color with a matching scarf. He kept one arm around her, using his other leather gloved hand to pull Harley's scarf up to cover her mouth and nose; only her blue eyes were visible between the thin line of her knit hat and the scarf. He chuckled. “My little pumpkin,” he whispered leaning in to rub his nose against her.

Harley giggled, snuggling in closer. “My puddin.”

Jack smiled happily settling down to watch the island slowly coming into view as the 13.33m Baia 43 Motor Boat rode across the water. (The boat—which unsurprisingly his aunt owned and just had waiting for her whenever she happened to be in Gotham, which wasn't often—was named The Marlo Manners after one of Mae West's character.) Jack had warned the others to say nothing of the “gang” to his aunt. He didn't see any reason to get her involved any more than she already was in the feud between him and Bruce. Once she left Gotham Jack highly doubted he would hear from her for a long time. That was just how Agatha was; she would disappear for years, then come in like a wrecking ball, swinging every which way before she swung away again. She was a delight when she was here, but the one thing you could always count on was that she would leave just as quickly.

It only took six minutes to cross over to the island, the house instantly coming into view through the lightly falling snow. Harley's eyes bugged. The place was massive, easily dwarfing Wayne Manor. There were at least three towers that she could see, maybe five floors high. She couldn't be sure, but the place reminded her of a haunted Gothic Manor from every ghost story ever written. As the boat came closer she could see the dock come into view with a large boat house at the edge of the water. She had never seen anything like it. The boat house was made of heavy, cut stone, reminding Harley of an old Gothic-style cathedral with a pointed roof and its own tower and everything. The boat house was big enough to be its own small manor! The boat's captain pulled around and Harley could see the shore, the land around the house, covered in snow giving the whole area a silent, creepy vibe. But then in the next instant, her view was cut off as the boat turned to glide into the boat house.

Everyone hopped out of the boat with Agatha leading the way. She stepped out of the boat house to a series of stairs that led up toward the house. Harley craned her neck back. The house was even bigger up close, she realized. It was simply massive, a castle on the edge of Gotham. She had to wonder if she would ever be able to explore the whole house or would she need a map? She smiled as a slight blush lit her cheeks; christening all the rooms would be fun!

As their group made their way up the steps, Agatha smiled brightly.

“I had the caretaker—his name is William Cobb—make sure the house is ready for you to move in! He has been working for me for a few years. He has kept the house up, so the utilities are up to date. So along with the fireplaces there is an up to date heating and cooling system, electricity, water pumping...all the comforts of the modern world!! I even had a satellite dish hook-up installed when I decided to give you two the house. Oh, did you two want your things from Bruce's. I moved out and went to a hotel, but I'm sure I could have Alfred pack up your things...”

Jack shook his head. “Nah...I would...we...” He looked at Harley who nodded. “We want a clean slate...to start over.” He continued. “Time to leave that part of us behind.” Jack hugged Harley to him giving her a loud kiss on her cheek. She giggled giving Jack a kiss on the cheek in return.

Agatha grinned at the lovebirds. “Okay kiddos. I can understand that perfectly. I did much the same when I left Gotham when I was but a young thing. I left everything behind, including my wardrobe! I'm sure my old things are in a box somewhere in that house...but anyway... shopping was so much fun, reinventing myself!” Agatha said this with just a hint of longing in her voice before she continued. “All right everyone...this way! To the new Jack and Harley Wayne headquarters!” With that, the older woman jogged up the steps, the group of younger people forced to catch up.

*

Harley sucked in her bottom lip behind her scarf when she saw the double doors to the massive mansion. The entryway reminded her of the portal into Dracula's castle. The set of doors were made from heavy walnut, each with colored stain-glass set in the middle of each door, ornate metal trim and large metal door knobs with flowers and vines decorating the metal of the knobs. Instead of a large metal key—which was what Harley was expecting—Jack's aunt pulled out a modern looking key and slipped it into a modern lock located just under the heavily Victorian door knobs. Agatha unlocked the doors, shoved them open with a smile, her arms held out wide. “Welcome to Catherine House, my children!”

Jack and Harley walked in behind Agatha. Harley's mouth fell open as the surprises just kept coming. The main hall was almost like walking into a church; the ceilings were the highest ceilings she had ever seen outside of a church, arching upward. Right in front of them was a wide staircase that hinted of a labyrinth of levels above to explore—including at least one level below in addition to the five storeys above. The stairs were covered by a thick red and gold runner that stood out gorgeously against the dark wooden stairs. Harley's eyes followed the staircase. The stairs were actually not too dissimilar to the staircase at Wayne Manor, though these stairs were not nearly as wide.
The walls of the front hall were painted a soft cream, highlighted with dark walnut woods and accented with rich deep reds and maroons. The front hall had a large ornate chandelier and Harley could see into the next room to the right, which looked to be a sitting room. She saw there was another crystal chandelier, pear shaped, hanging from the ceiling in there and to her left there was another large crystal chandelier and a grand piano in that room. There were bronze statues of women in Greek clothing on either side of the entrance to the study, who were holding large round globes of light that acted as lamps, and there were paintings running down the halls, decorating the walls as well as other pieces of art which Harley was sure were all worth a small fortune, but there looked to be old photographs as well. It was just so much “stuff” that Harley doubted she would ever see all of it no matter how much time she spent in this house. Their house, she realized with a slight shake of her head and a glance at Jack.

Agatha grinned gazing around. “I don’t remember how many rooms there are...the kitchen is down that way...all modern appliances. Even though I’ve never lived here, I always like to have a place ready in case I decided to drop in. Anyway, the living room is down that way, there is a conservatory, music room, a game room where there is an antique pool table. I had the lastest TV’s installed in the living room and all the bedrooms. AND there is wifi!” She grinned. “You may look like you stepped into the 19th century, but I made damn sure over the years that this place had all the comforts of the 21st century.”

Alex let out a low whistle. “This place is like the fucking House of Usher, but with wifi.”

Jack snorted. “Oh listen to you Alex...making Edgar Allen Poe references.”

Alex laughed. “No man, I was referring to the fucking movie. Scared the shit out of me when I was a fucking kid. I was fucking worried I was going to get buried alive by Vincent Price!”

Jack chuckled remembering watching old Vincent Price movies with Alfred, just the two of them sharing popcorn while Bruce was at a party, or on a date...or something else that always managed to keep Bruce away. Jack smiled slightly at the memory before he said softly. “I always loved the way Vincent Price dressed.” He glanced at Harley giving her a wink before he gazed around the house. “...and the deep and dank tarn closed sullenly and silently over the fragments of the House of Usher,” he uttered softly.

Later that evening, Harley and Jack were alone in the massive house. Everyone had stayed for dinner, though they had yet to meet Mr. Cobb. Agatha promised to phone him and make sure the man introduced himself soon.

The wind was blowing outside, making the windows rattled. Jack and Harley were upstairs in one of the bedrooms, clearly the master bedroom based on the size alone, but the room had not just the biggest TV and the largest bed, but the room also had its own private bathroom with modern features (made to look period to the house) containing a large sauna-like bathtub and a multiheaded shower.

The bed was a queen-size, Queen Anne chestnut bed with the large and heavy ornate headboard and foot board with an antique gold, woven leaf damask on black comforter and gold sheets. The pillows, comforter and sheets all purchased new for the house, for Jack and Harley. Jack was lying on the bed, propped up by pillows, dressed in only a pair of microfleece purple and green pajama bottoms, no shirt, his bare feet crossed at the ankles. Jack had his hands behind his head, watching the flat screen TV that had been installed in the room looking completely out of place in the high Victorian interior design. The program playing on the TV was a local entertainment show. They were discussing some charity event that was coming up in the next few weeks that was being sponsored by Bruce Wayne. Jack narrowed his eyes at the mention of his brother when Jack Harley frowned glancing at the bedroom door. Harley had gone down to the kitchen to make hot chocolate, but she still had yet to return. Jack was just wondering if maybe she had become lost when Harley appeared in the doorway.

“Hey Jack, look what I found!” Harley stood in the doorway wearing a fleece, fair isle prince red and white onesie with a pair of fuzzy pink slippers as she held up a strange looking helmet. It looked to be metal or some sort of plastic, like a motorcycle helmet, but it was completely red and lacked a visor, though there were oval slanted “goggles” where the eyes would be; the sections over the eyes were pitch black so that anyone looking at the person in the helmet couldn't see the eyes of the wearer. There were what looked to be gears along the side of the mask, along with silver and black lines that Jack couldn't decide from his position on the bed, if they were for decoration or had some sort of function.

“What do you suppose this is puddin?” Harley asked turning the helmet this way and that.

Jack sat up in interest. “What the hell? Where did you find it?”

Harley walked over to the bed and handed it to Jack. “It was in the study on a shelf. I thought maybe the caretaker had left it. I was looking at some of the books in there while I was waiting for the water to boil...OH! The hot cocoa!! I'll be right back!”

Harley took off and he smiled as he listened to her hurried footsteps down the stairs. Jack held the helmet in his hands turning it one way, then another. He smiled slowly. Maybe it was a sign...a red hood...telling him that he and Harley were on the right path...the path to their destiny maybe? Nah, he decided; Jack wasn't a big believer in destiny. This whole world was just too fucked up for that...though if there were such a thing as destiny, Harley was certainly destined to be his...

She came back a few minutes later with two mugs filled to the brim with marshmallows. She giggled. “I thought I would never make it up the stairs! We need to see if this place has a dumb waiter or something.”

Harley, who had been glancing down at the mugs in her hand as she walked in stopped in mid-stride almost spilling the chocolate when she saw Jack wearing the helmet. She frowned. “Can you see out of it?”

Jack nodded. “Yeah. Really well, actually.”

“It covers your entire face puddin. It's a little creepy.” Harley frowned, placing their mugs down to allow her to crawl onto the bed. “And your voice sounds funny...deeper.”

Jack laughed pulling the helmet off, his hair flopping over his forehead. “I think our little gang just got a mascot.” Jack leaned over to place the helmet on the bedside table. “Red Mask, meet the red mask.” Jack grinned pleased with himself. “You know Harley, red is the color of rage, of passion, but most importantly to us, rebirth. The two of us being reborn.”

Harley reached out, gently running the tips of her fingers along his forehead, brushing his hair back with a soft smile playing across her lips. “I love you Jack. I'll be reborn as many times as you need me to be, as long as I'm always with you.”

Jack grabbed her pulling her toward him. Harley wrapped her arms around his neck letting him tug her on top of him, his mouth covering hers hungrily. He only pulled away from her mouth long enough to whisper. “I love you too Harls.”

Harley giggled. “Wanna make this the first room we christen?”
Jack growled. “Mmm...Yes.”

He rolled over forcing Harley down into the mattress, pressing his body on top of hers. She giggled softly wiggling under him in a way that immediately had him wanting her more...her body was warm and enticing...even in a onesie, but somehow she managed to make the garment look more sexy than cute. Jack brushed his nose against hers, nipping at her lips gently with his own, his tongue tracing out to trace her upper lip slowly. He ran his hands over her hair, his eyes wandering her face for a moment as something dark seemed to fall over him. He had a sudden feeling of foreboding, as if they were about to take a step onto a path that Gotham would never allow them to falter from.

“Will you follow me anywhere Harls?” Jack asked, his voice full of emotion.

Harley frowned at the shift in Jack's tone. She reached up to brush his hair back, her fingers caressing the line of his jaw as she stared hard into his blue eyes, her voice soft, yet firm. “Of course Jack. I will go anywhere you go. Wherever you lead, I will be right beside you. I'll always be with you.”

Jack smiled and kissed her tenderly, his mouth moving slowly over her, his tongue gliding over hers. He reached between them, dragging his fingers down the onesie until he came to the first button. The onesie she wore had buttons instead of a zipper, a little row of white buttons starting from between her breasts and running all the way down her stomach. Jack slowly and skillfully began to unbutton her pajamas, making the unbuttoning of each button a reveal as if he were at a strip show, teasing both himself and Harley as he eased each button free. He tugged gently at the fabric to reveal a small section of creamy, pale skin. He would just barely brush the tips of his fingers across the exposed flesh before he would move down to the next button. When he had made it to the last button, which was positioned at her navel, Jack dragged his teeth over his bottom lip staring down at the button and twisting the plastic back and forth. He glanced up once at Harley to see her watching him; her breathing had become soft panting. Jack smiled wrinkling his nose playfully before he unbuttoned the last one.

Jack slid his hands under the material to touch the soft skin of her stomach. His fingers glided along her soft, warm skin, then slowly up her torso until he was at her ribs. He caressed his fingers along her ribs, back and forth, his trimmed nails raising goosebumps along her skin. He dragged his thumb under her breast, feeling the soft round mound warm and inviting. He continued to caress her skin, the tip of his thumb rubbing back and forth under her breast. He leaned closer, his kiss deepening, hotter, but he didn't move his hand to cup her breast—he just kept teasing her. His tongue swam with her own, sharing their breath. She grasped his head and pressed her mouth to Jack's as if she needed his breath, his body heat.

Harley's breath quickened. Jack's tongue was gentle, but her reaction was intense. Her body was burning, singing to his, her need causing her to moan against his lips. Jack kissed the side of her mouth moving down to caress his lips along her jaw with deliberate and tantalizing slowness—not just to tease her but to tease himself—before dragging his lips down her throat. He stopped long enough to feel the jump of her pulse against his tongue, grinning with pleasure at her reactions, his harlequin's reactions. He peeled back her pajamas to expose her bare breast while he pressed his perfect white teeth against her throat. Jack lowered his mouth to her breast, the tip of his tongue caressing her nipple. Harley groaned softly, the fingers of one hand grasping his hair. She made little moaning sounds, tiny almost breathless gasps of pleasure when his hand slipped lower, under her pajamas, his fingers sliding between her legs. He rubbed slowly, taking time to feel her, the warmth of her, the slick dampness of her on his fingers while sucking on her breast at the same time grinning each time Harley groaned or gasped. He slid his middle finger into her, feeling her warm wet pool between her legs, thrusting his finger deeper inside her, thrusting harder before he switched his mouth's attention to her other breast. The onesie still covered her other breast, but he just dragged his teeth over the material feeling her hard nipple through the fabric. Harley moaned, Jack's finger moving in and out of her, hard, but slow.

“Jack...uuhh...let me...let me out of this...” she moaned reaching down to stop his hand. Jack chuckled; he loved it when she was so flustered.

“All right my little cupcake.” He rolled off of her to let her sit up. Harley giggled then, standing up on the bed and causing the mattress and box springs to creak and wobble. She giggled sliding her arms out of top part of her onesie. Jack licked his lips with a broad grin on his lips, watching her as she stripped out of the onesie, turning around so her backside was to him when she pushed it down over her hips, twisting her hips back and forth and glancing back behind her to grin at him and wink. She shoved the garment the rest of the way down her body with another wiggle.

Jack grabbed his own pajama bottoms and slid them down his hips, then brought his slim legs up to yank them off his ankles, all the while watching Harley. She kicked her own pajamas off the bed with a deep chuckle. Then, just as Jack was about to reach for her, Harley dropped down on him to straddle his shoulders, causing the entire bed to bounce.

They both laughed. Harley licked her lips and smiled down at him. Jack grinned catching his bottom lip seductively as he whispered. “My queen.”

Harley giggled, but then her expression turned lustful as she hissed. “Do you want me Jack?”

Jack growled. “I want you. I want to fuck you hard Harley. I want to feel you, hot and wet around me while I slam my hips against you, shoving inside you.”

Harley reached up and squeezed her breasts. “Mm...I like it when you talk like that puddin.”

He chuckled appreciatively and reached up to settle his hands on hips before he tugged her further up to his mouth. Harley gasped, dropping forward to put her hands against the headboard while Jack wrapped his hands around her, grabbing her rear and squeezing, pushing her up enough so he could press his mouth against her clitoris, sucking and licking while his fingers pressed into her hips. Harley groaned, her pelvis, her head hanging down. She tossed her hair back, looking down at him. She could feel his smiled against her sex, and his blue eyes danced as he looked up at her and waggled his eyebrows. Harley giggled which turned into a gasp when he flicked his tongue side to side. She began to thrust her hips more aggressively, while Jack groaned loudly. Jack pressed his fingers into her hips harder, holding on until she yelped in pleasure, arching her back, her climax rippled through her and up her spine.

She pushed back off of him, sliding down until she was at his hips. Jack grinned at her showing of his perfect smile as he whispered. “Hey baby.”

Harley grinned with a heavy breath. “Hey puddin.”

She reached down, grabbed his shaft, holding him steady while she lowered herself down on him with a groan of pleasure. Jack gasped, his hands moving up to grab her thighs. He wanted to watch her, just experience her. He didn’t really care about his own pleasure because there was her, and her pleasure was his pleasure. He squeezed her legs watching Harley grind down on him before she leaned back, grabbing his knees and thrusting forward. Jack groaned reaching up to run his hands over her stomach and down her hips, spreading the fingers of his hands wide. He slid both hands down, using his finger to spread her intimate lips further apart while he started to rub his thumb over her slick wet clitoris. Harley groaned loudly, jerking her hips into his touch, her muscles squeezing around him until Jack grunted with pleasure. She started to bounce a little, allowing his penis to glide in deep and then almost completely out again. Jack shuddered watching her, almost forgetting to roll his thumb over her clitoris; her bouncing not only felt good, but watching her move was amazing he decided. She was the most gorgeous creature and she was his girl...

He swallowed keeping his concentration on not just admiring her, but rubbing her until he felt her fingers digging into his knees, her muscles squeezing at the same moment that she cried out. “Oh JACK!! Ah!!”

Jack purred. “Mm...Harls...my Harley girl...”

She pushed herself up and smiled down at him then surprised him when she put her hands on his chest, pushing herself up on her feet, but remained squatted on him. She pressed her hands on his stomach and started to bounce, the strength in her legs making the bouncing more intense as she kept nearly perfect control. Jack hissed throwing his head back for a moment as a wave of intense pleasure rolled over him. He thought he might orgasm right then within seconds of her beginning to bounce on him. He dug his fingers into the sheets biting his lip trying to stave off the climax for a while, but she felt so good. He groaned getting himself back under control when Harley slowed her movements, not bouncing as intensely, taking him deep into her and instead rolling her hips in a circle. Jack slid his hands under her rear and helped to lift her up. He held her there and thrust his hips upward, thrusting deep inside her. Harley's eyes rolled as she sucked in her bottom lip. “Mmmm...puddin...” she groaned as Jack grinned. “Mm...yes Harley...”

He held her up a little, thrust his hips up one more time before Harley giggled and started to bounce again before she shifted her legs forward, her knees up and leaned back, her hands on his knees again and started to thrust forward, sliding her body up and down on him. Jack pushed himself up on his elbows hissing with pleasure watching the way he slid in an out of her, the heat of her body washing over him. He leaned on one elbow and reach forward to rub his thumb over her clitoris again, shuddering and watching the way her breasts bounced, his erection piercing her body. Harley's breath became ragged, she could feel him swelling inside her, coming closer to his orgasm. She thrust faster. “Uuhh...Jack...!” She squeezed him, her fingernails digging into his knees, cumming hard; the intensity of Harley's orgasm yanked Jack's from him, causing him to drop back down to the bed again as he came hard, thrusting up to empty into her. “Uhh...darlin...Harley...”

Harley rolled off of him with a groan of both happiness and exhaustion. Jack grabbed her swiftly pulling her into the circle of his arms. She giggled snuggling close feeling him wet and semi-hard still pressing against her stomach. She whispered. “I'm going to need another shower.”

Jack chuckled and wiggled his hips against her which made her squeal. “JACK!”

“Haha!” He smirked and held her refusing to let her go. “Mm...I love ya Harley.”

She settled down reaching up to stroke his face. “I love you puddin.”

Harley suddenly sat up. “Oh shoot! The hot cocoa's cold!”

Later that night Jack sat up in bed and picked up the helmet again. He had to wonder what something like this was doing in the house. Did his aunt know about it? What did it mean or was it simply some sort of strange motorcycle helmet left here by that caretaker his aunt had mentioned? He turned it back and forth in his hands. It fit what he planned to do and it didn't really matter, he supposed, but he was going to use it...the Red Hood was going to make a statement in Gotham and slowly, but surely they were going to start fearing the name.

*
Two weeks later, late at night, after Agatha had left Gotham, heading to Rio, two black SUVs pulled up in front of The Gotham Gallery, formally known as the Flugelheim Gallery, a medium size art gallery in Gotham's fashion district. The gallery was located in one of the older buildings occupying two floors while a restaurant that was part of the gallery occupied the third floor. Jack, wearing the red helmet, dressed all in black—black jeans, black motorcycle boots, a black dress shirt with a red tie and a calf-length black leather coat—hopped out of the back of the SUV followed by Harley who was wearing a black mask over her eyes that covered the whole upper portion of her face, a black turtleneck, red waist length jacket, black leather pants, motorcycle boots and red leather gloves. Her blonde hair was pulled back in pigtails which she had streaked with temporary colors of red and black through just the pigtails.

Everyone else, Alex, Alice, Dale, and Sandra were joined by the newest members of their “family” as Jack called them. (Dale had been reluctant to join, but Sandra had convinced him...partly because she was tired. She had told him she had been playing by the rules for so long and look what it had gotten them...nothing. Maybe it was time to try living on the other side of the law and she trusted Jack and Harley. Dale had agreed though part of him still felt...strange about it. Alex and Alice had agreed to be part of the gang just because it would be fun. Alex just had a feeling that Jack was on the verge of something, something new and exciting, something that was going to change Gotham and he wanted to be in on it when it happened.) Danny, their hopeful explosives expert liked to wear a beanie, one of which he wore over his red mask. Trope was a little tiny slip of a girl and was good with computers. Haskins, Duela, Rolf, and lastly Jason, all just minor criminals, all of them with criminal records, and all people that Alex knew in some fashion or other, whether they had done some odd jobs for him or had participated in Alex's many gambling ventures (not just poker) and probably owed him money. Now, they were all members of Jack's new gang. Each one wore a red hood of some sort over their faces. (Only the core of the gang had seen Jack's face. Their newest members had no idea who they were really working for...so far, they had yet to see either Harley or Jack unmasked and that was just how Jack wanted it. They also had no idea of the base of operations...they were on a need to know basis and Jack didn't feel that any of them needed to know. Instead they all would meet at a different location each time the got together, coordinated by phone calls filtered through Alex. )

Jack clapped his hands. “Okay boys and girls. This is just a sabotage mission. We don't need to worry about security...there was a strange mix up and no one is on duty.” (Which was all do to their computer girl Trope getting into their system and altering the schedule.) “We aren't taking anything because everything here would just be too much of a hassle to sell, but we are here to make a point...and just because it will be fun.”

Duela raised her hand. “Ah...so we are just going in there to destroy the place?”

Jack turned to face her. “Yes my dear, that is it. We are just going to bloody Bruce Wayne's nose.”

“Why?” Duela inquired.

Behind his mask, Jack rolled his eyes. He had already explained this to her twice. “Because my darling, Bruce Wayne pisses me off and this will piss him off—and because I want to.”

“But...it's a little...I don't know...” Duela started waving her hands about and she tried to explain herself, but Haskins dropped his hand on Duela's shoulder. “Don't worry Mr. Hood, Duela is just...confused, but I'll keep her on task.”

Jack grinned behind his mask. “Good. I would really hate to have to find someone to fill her position already. This is our first official act as the Red Hood Gang, it's one small step toward a much bigger future.” Jack smiled brightly behind his mask. “Now darlings, let's go broaden our minds!”
Jack waltzed up to the code pad by the door. He seriously doubted Bruce had changed the code and within seconds, he was rewarded as the alarm and door beeped in the clear. Jack pushed the door open. “In we go!” Jack put his arm around Harley's waist and waltzed in, grinning behind his mask. Harley chuckled leaning against Jack. Each member was armed with spray paint, knives and Harley had a red twelve pound mallet. The gallery was what Jack would call a typical high end art gallery with pure white walls. Jack didn't care what was destroyed, but he was specially after the works of art he knew that Bruce had donated to the gallery just in the last month. It was childish, it was stupid, but it would piss off his brother. And this was only the beginning. Jack didn't only plan on slowly building himself and Harley up as a criminal gang to be recognized; he planned on being a thorn in his brother's side, using his knowledge of his brother to steal, destroy and basically hurt Bruce at every turn. This was just a test run to see how his new gang followed orders...and it was going to be fun.

Jack grinned. “All right boys and girls! Have fun!”

Jack turned Harley to face him. She smiled, her face reflected in the mask he wore. “So my darling, ready to be destructive for the sake of it?”

Harley giggled. “Of course puddin!”

Jack grinned behind the mask. “Bruce donated all the Henri Matisse, Georgia O'Keefe and the Van Gogh's along with the Rodin and the couple of Henri Laurens...all priceless pieces of art...until we are done with them. Then they'll be worth nothing, sort of like my brother.” Jack chuckled darkly.

Harley hefted her mallet over her shoulder. “I always wanted to just smash something expensive for the hell of it!”

Jack laughed out loud. “Damn, I wish I had thought to bring some music!” He laughed, watching as Harley swung her mallet, performing a full body swing. The head of her mallet struck Henri Lauren's “Man with Clarinet” and sent the sculpture flying across the room to smash against the wall. That seemed to be the catalyst for the others of their group to start into the wanton destruction of artwork.

Harley jumped up and down. “Score one for the team!!”

Jack laughed with a clap of his hands. “That's my girl!”

It was well after three in the morning by the time Harley and Jack drove the boat back into the boat house to dock it and climb the steps to the mansion. Harley giggled pulling off her mask once they were inside. “That was so much fun!!”

Jack grinned brightly, tugging off his helmet and tucking it under his arm. “It was a small step, but it was fun. And while it was childish, it does give me a great deal of pleasure to do something stupid that will annoy my brother and be a complete waste...something that can never be replaced. The meaningless of something that was supposedly meaningful.”

They both laughed. Harley tucked her mask into the back pocket of her pants. “How about I make us a couple of sandwiches, you grab that grape soda out of the fridge, we take a shower and then eat naked in bed?”

Jack chuckled. “That sounds perfect, my pumpkin pie!”

Together the two of them went into the kitchen. The kitchen, unlike most of the rest of the house, was modern. The walls and cabinets were a soft eggshell white while the counter tops and the middle island all had that Victorian feel to them in design with dark wood accents that complemented the dark marble counter-tops. The center island also had a set of four leather covered stools surrounding it. The appliances were all ultra modern, probably having been replaced within the last year Jack guessed, and the light fixtures overhead were a series of pendant hanging kitchen lights with an oil bronze finish that gave the room an old fashioned feel despite the modern touches. Harley was humming softly to herself as she walked over to the refrigerator when she accidentally kicked the side of the throw rug that laid in front of the fridge. She didn’t think much of it until the light caused something to glint and shine, catching her eye just as she was turning away. She stopped, frowning, slowly placing the cold cuts she had just pulled out of the refrigerator on the island counter, and crouched down, running her fingers over the floor. Jack, who had been pulling glasses down for their drinks, glanced over noticing she had disappeared.

“Harley?” Jack frowned setting the glasses down and walking around the island to see her crouched on the balls of her feet and running her fingers along the floor.

“Darling? You all right?” Jack stepped over nearer to his wife.

Harley glanced up. “Come down here. I saw the light catch them and reached down to pick it up, but it's attached.”

Jack crouched down across from her. He couldn't see what she was talking about because she was casting a shadow over whatever it was, but when Harley took his hand and placed his fingers where hers had been, he felt it too. A small round disc, but with something carved into it by the feel of it. Jack stood. “Hold on a second Harls. There's a flashlight in the desk in the study.”

A few seconds later Jack had returned with the flashlight. He clicked it on and shone it down on the spot they had both felt. There in the floor, just barely visible, the size of maybe a dime was what looked like a round object. Jack leaned in close frowning then he made a soft, “Huh?”

Harley looked up. “What is it?”

“It looks like...an owl. You ever see the original Clash of the Titans?” Jack glanced up at her.

Harley shook her head. “No.”

Jack gasped. “Harls!! I'm shocked,..well...anyway there's a mechanical owl named Bubo...” Harley frowned at him. Jack shook his head. “Anyway, it was the owl of Athena...this sort of looks like that...like a button...”

Jack ran his fingers over it, then pushed down on the the symbol. They both jumped slightly when they heard the sound of a click. There was another sound and suddenly a small section of the floor beneath them started to move.

Jack and Harley jumped back as a section of the floor slid away to reveal a set of winding stairs going down below. Jack glanced over at Harley and whispered, “Beware the Court of Owls, that watches all the time,

Ruling Gotham from a shadowed perch, behind granite and lime.
They watch you at your hearth, they watch you in your bed.
Speak not a whispered word about them, or they'll send the Talon for your head.”
Harley looked up at Jack in confusion. “What was that?”

“You never heard that before?” Jack asked with clear surprise.

“No, never.” Harley stood up and walked over to one of the kitchen drawers. She searched around for a bit before she pulled out a flashlight. She flicked the switch back and forth a couple of times to make sure the light was working. She turned around and turned the light on Jack. He grinned at her and stuck his tongue out making her laugh lightly.

“What does it mean?” she asked as she walked back over and shone the light down at the opening in the floor.

Jack shrugged. “Not really sure sweets, just that every kid growing up in Gotham has heard that rhyme at one time or another. It was always a threat used on the playground too. You know...the Talon was going to come and get you.”

Harley shook her head staring at him and Jack shrugged. “Boy toots, you really missed out not growing up in Gotham.”

Harley chuckled. “I can see that.”

She shined the light down the trapdoor and leaned over looking down into the darkness; the light showed only stairs. “What do you suppose is down there?”

Jack’s grin was wide as he came to stand beside her. “Ghosts! Maybe some sexual torture devices! I always knew my aunt was kinky.”

“JACK!” Harley laughed but Jack grabbed her around the waist and yanked her close nibbling on her neck. “I don't know...tying you up might be fun, maybe spank you a little, eh?” He waggled his eyebrows at her.

Harley smiled wickedly. “Who said anything about tying me up...what about you puddin? Maybe you need a good spanking.”

Jack waggled his eyebrows even more ridiculously. “You can tie me up anytime you want sweets...anytime.” He pulled her close, his lips against her ear and purred, his voice like warm honey. “I've been so bad Miss Harley. I think I need a spanking.”

Harley giggled turning bright red. “JACK!”

He laughed grabbing the flashlight from her. “Come on my creamy cupcake! Let's go see what secrets my auntie is hiding in the basement!”

Jack hurried down the stairs with Harley yelling after him. “Jack be careful!”

She made a sound of irritation and quickly ran over to the oven. She pulled out the bottom drawer and grabbed the heaviest pan she could find, a cast iron skillet. She carried it over and placed it in such a way that if the door decided to snap shut on them, it would be forced to stay open because of the pan...or at least she hoped it would stay open. Once she was happy with its placement, she hurried down the dark stairs after Jack.
Jack chuckled hurrying down the steps, then stopped on the last stair, letting his flashlight move lazily over the room in front of him.

As Jack took the stairs leading down into the hidden room, it was clear from the amount of dust caked on the stairs, that this room hadn't been opened in a long while. The beam of light from Jack's flashlight movement silently over room. He could see that there were cobwebs hanging from the ceiling and draped across the room. He stopped on the last step of the stairs and from where Jack was standing, the light beam showed that the air was filled with little drifting motes of dust that danced in the air. Jack waited until he felt Harley behind him before he stepped off the last step, slowly shining the flashlight around the room again. (Harley had run her hand over the wall looking for a light switch, but found nothing. She muttered under her breath. “Creepy basement, no lights...I've seen this horror movie...”)

The walls were decorated with a variety of weapons, mostly blades, but mixed with the knives...and swords? (Jack grinned at those.) He saw a few guns...a Smith & Wesson model 29 .44 magnum, HK54...there were a few more, but he couldn't quite make out their make and model. The small flashlight beam didn't extend that far into the room.

Jack continued to let his beam move over the walls. He could see a couple of old framed photos covered in a layer of dust, though from where he stood he couldn't tell what they photos were of, all he saw were the vague shadowy impression of figures. He felt Harley step right behind him, her hand resting on his shoulder. His beam fell across the large bronze image of an owl's head on the far left wall, hanging directly in the middle, in a place of honor.

Jack stepped away from the stairs, taking Harley's hand in his free hand. Harley's mouth was open slightly as she hissed. “What is all this?”

They walked further into the room and realized that this wasn't just the one room; it was clear that this “basement” reached further, at least another three or four rooms. Jack couldn't be sure since the beam of light was relatively weak, but he thought that the basement might stretch the length of the entire house. The two of them walked slowly and stopped when they came to a painting hanging against one wall. The image was large, taking up nearly the entire wall. The painting was well done, in a style that was reminiscent of Rembrandt. Jack turned the flashlight on the painting. It was an image of seven people; men and women, all richly dressed and all wearing what he thought were creepy owl-like masks. The masks were all white, smooth ovals with the oval-shape eye slots that resembled the shape of an owl's eyes. Each mask came to a point, with just the hint of an owl's beak. The masks displayed no other features, looked alien, and yet there was something hauntingly familiar about the image the masks projected. No sooner had Jack thought the word creepy than Harley whispered at his shoulder. “Okay, those masks are creepy puddin.”

Jack chuckled in agreement. “Yep, those are creepy. Harley, am I seeing things or do those look like owl masks to you?” Jack glanced over at Harley.

She stared hard at the painting. She leaned in close and then nodded. “They do...like simplified owls.”

Jack was quiet, staring at the painting. Harley frowned examining his face; he was clearly lost in thought. “Jack?”

“Right after our parents were murdered, I remember Bruce talking to me late at night about how it hadn't been a random act...that they were targeted.”

Harley put her arm around Jack's waist. “Targeted?”
Jack nodded still staring at the painting. “Yes, he thought...well, he was sure that they had been targeted. He became obsessed with owls...the nursery rhyme, the whole court of owls thing. Started seeing owls everywhere. He was sure the court of owls had ordered our parents’ death. I was too young to really understand what was going on with Bruce...it wasn't too long after that Bruce started to pull away—from me...from everything.”

Harley leaned her head on his shoulder. “Did he actually find out anything about them? Or about your parents?”

Jack stared at the painting for a couple of more seconds before he turned away. “I remember—when Bruce's obsession was at its height—he was sure he had found something. He had been watching our parents' friends, business partners...compiling notes and observations on them, sure that one of them had ordered our parents' murders. He would share all of it with me. I didn't understand everything, but I was scared. Scared that what Bruce was saying was true...scared I would lose my brother when the Court realized he was on to them.” Harley watched Jack's face. His expression was sad as he spoke, but his eyes had shifted back to stare at the painting.

“Then one day, Bruce was sure he had found the place, the hideout for the Court of Owls. We took a taxi, sneaking away in the night. Bruce had us taken to an old abandoned house in Old Gotham. A huge old Victorian period building with boarded up windows. I remember how the wind sounded through that house...like voices of the dead. I clung to Bruce, begged him to leave, but he refused. Said he knew this was the place. He was going to find our parents' murderers.” Jack laughed softly, but it was a sound that lacked humor. “He actually found a secret door! Not unlike the one we found...the door into a secret basement room. Bruce was so excited! I don't think I had ever seen my brother so determined, so...happy, so sure he was on the right path. You should have seen his face Harley. He efforts were about to be verified.” Jack shook his head slightly before he continued. “We went down into the room and found nothing. Just dirt. But the worst part was that the trap door we found, it closed on us. I don't know if it was designed to close and not be opened, or if time and age had broken it, but Bruce and I were trapped...for over a week in the room with no way out.”

Harley made a little gasp. She wrapped her arms around him and buried her head against his chest. She felt Jack wrap his arms around her and hold her against him. He leaned his cheek against the top of her head and his voice moved her hair when he spoke.

“I don't remember much after that. I remember Alfred finding us...being in the hospital...I had nightmares about owls for months, mixed with the dreams about the murder of my parents...” Jack's voice trailed off.

Harley looked up at Jack. He was still staring at the painting. She gently reached up to place her fingers against his cheek. Jack's eyes rolled down to hers. His blue eyes looked haunted. She could only imagine what it was Jack dreamed about on those nights when he had nightmares. He still had nightmares and she would hold him until he fell back asleep in her arms.

She asked softly, “Did Bruce ever find out if that place was the Court of Owls, or did he ever find out if they killed your parents?”

Jack's voice was just a whisper. “No idea. He stopped sharing things with me not long after that. I think he knew it scared me, the idea of our parents being murdered by this frightening unseen force. He never spoke about what happened. But, I always thought the Court of Owls was something made up...or maybe I simply hoped that it was a story to scare kids into behaving. Not that it ever worked on me.” He grinned down at her. “It wasn't too long after that incident that my behavior became more...antisocial and I was sent to Willowood for the first time...the first of our separations, the first time Bruce and I started on our separate paths.” He grinned down at her and Harley hopped up a little to kiss his mouth. Jack chuckled and pulled her up to give her a full deep kiss. When he released her mouth he said softly. “But this—this room...the owls....this is all rather strange.” Jack gigged. “Bruce would be wetting himself about now if he knew about this.” He giggled again. “What do you want to bet this whole thing is just like the Hellfire Club, an elaborate masquerade for a bunch of rich fucks to get together and drink and have lots of sex.”

Harley giggled. “In old dusty basements?”

Jack shrugged turning her away from the painting. “Maybe dust is a kink?” He grinned and chuckled softly. “ Let's look around some more.” He smiled at his wife, as he took her hand in his, and started to walk around the room holding the flashlight out ahead of them.

They continued to look around the first room. There were other smaller images of people in the strange owl masks. Some were actually small paintings, others photographs, but every person in them wore one of the odd masks. They turned around a wall where there sat an old desk, covered in dust. Together they stepped closer. The desk had an old lamp resting on it along with what looked to be some sort of old CB equipment and rolls of yellowed paper. Lying in the center of the desk was a blade, an old rusted dirk knife. Jack picked up the rusted, dust covered blade. There was something dark on the edge...Jack would hazard a guess that it was blood, but it really could be anything he thought as he placed the blade back on the desk. In the corner was an old metal filing cabinet, rusted with age. Harley tried one of the drawers, but besides making a horrid metal warping sound, the drawer was rusted shut.

The room extended to the left where there was sort of a hallway. Jack reached out, took Harley's hand again, his fingers weaving with hers. They walked to the end of the hall when suddenly a light clicked on revealing a figure at the end of the hall. Harley jumped letting out a startled gasp. Jack pulled her protectively against him, but the figure at the end of the hall didn't move. Jack frowned, then slowly stepped closer. The figure never moved. Once they were close enough, Jack reached out and knocked the flashlight against the armored head. Nothing happened. Jack chuckled. “Just a suit.”

The whole outfit seemed a strange cross between a steam-punk metal suit and slick modern attire. The outfit was black, with a goggled owl cover for the face along with a medieval armor influence in the shoulder guards and gauntlets mixed with something worn by a ninja. The entire suit created a feeling of deadly stealth to the entire ensemble. The “owl” motif was clear in every line of the suit with the metal parts being cut and molded to resemble feathers, to the swept back parts along the helmet that looked like the feathers around an owl's eyes. There was even a small beak like cover over the mouth and the suit appeared to also have claws designed into the tips of the fingers of each glove. When Jack reached out and touched the finger of one, the claw caused him to hiss and snatch his hand back, a small cut on the tip of his finger.

Jack stuck his finger in his mouth glaring at the suit with a frown.

Harley stared her voice a whisper. “What on earth?”

Jack held the flashlight steady staring at the amour. “I think I should call Aunt Agatha.”

Harley reached up, her fingertips on both of his cheeks forcing him to turn around from the suit and face her. “Not tonight Jack.”

“But...” Jack started, but Harley stared at him hard while speaking softly. “This stuff has been in here a long time. You can tell from the dust Jack—it isn't going anywhere. Leave it until morning all right?” Harley leaned in to press her lips against his, her arms slipping around his neck. Jack chuckled softly against her lips and wrapped his arms around her waist while returning her kiss.
He pulled back slightly with a smile. “All right, I'll call in the morning.”

Harley smiled and took his hand. “Come on, we can do more exploring later.”

Jack let her take his hand and pull him away from the suit and its secrets, though he turned one last time to look at the outfit with a strange expression on his face. Harley hurried from the secret basement, her insides twirling with a cold mix of fear and unease. She didn't know what any of this meant...but she was scared to find out. They had almost made it to the stairs when Jack's flashlight danced across something on the floor behind the stairs, an object that reflected the light back for a moment. Jack frowned bringing the light back around to see an object wedged in a corner by the stairs. It was hard to see except that the flashlight danced across the white surface. Harley had been leading Jack back to the stairs when she was stopped abruptly by Jack who halted, shining his flashlight into the corner.

Harley turned around. “Jack! Wha...”

She stopped in mid-sentence, her eyes catching the object that the light had caught in its beam. She let go of Jack's hand and stepped closer, dropping down to a crouch to pick it up. She turned on the balls of her feet and showed Jack. She held two halves of a broken owl mask that looked those they had seen in the painting.

* * *

Then next morning, Jack was sitting up in bed. Harley was only partly asleep, her arm around his waist as Jack waited for his aunt to pick up the phone. It wasn't until the fifth ring that his aunt picked up.

“Hey! Jackie!! How is my favorite nephew? You guys enjoying that house? Working on making me a great aunt?” She laughed. Jack could hear voices in the background and then the sound of his aunt calling. “Oh and grab me a Painkiller? No, no the drink silly! Thanks honey! Now, how are you and Harley doing sweetheart?”

“Oh Harley and I are fine, auntie dear, but I did call you about something we found in the house.”

“Ah” Agatha sounded a little distracted.

“Jack smiled watching Harley as she hopped out of bed naked. He licked his lips watching her every movement as she walked over and picked up her robe which was lying on the floor. She slipped it on before turning around and making some comical hand motions which he interpreted as meaning that she was going to make coffee. He blew her a kiss and winked at her as she walked out of the room.

“Oh, what is it honey? Something wrong?” Agatha sounded a little distracted.

“Well, Harley and I found a room last night,” Jack began.

“Oh? I mean that house has dozens of rooms. Did you find something interesting...no dear, over there. Yes...oh did you get the oil...perfect just let me roll over....” Jack heard his aunt shift position then giggle. “Sorry Jackie dear, don't want to get burned. I have a very attractive young man named Aleixo offer to put some sunblock on my back. Isn't that nice?” She giggled again. “Now, what was this about a room?”

“Yes, Harley and I found a room...in the basement. Well, actually it's not part of the house's official basement. Regardless, this room opened with a button that had an owl picture engraved on it.” Jack reached over and picked up his pack of cigarettes, gently knocking one loose by patting it against his palm. Jack waited, but his aunt didn't say anything. He could hear her breathing, but she was silent for a few heartbeats while Jack picked up his lighter and lit the cigarette.
“Did you go down there?” she asked, her tone subdued.

“Yes we did and besides dust and cobwebs we found a lot of very interesting things.” Jack took a long pull on the cigarette, holding the smoke in his lungs for a half beat before blowing it out. “We found a lot of old weapons, a suit...”

Agatha spoke up, stopping Jack. “Does William Cobb know you both found that room?”

Jack frowned holding his cigarette out from the phone. “Who?”

“The caretaker—does he know you found that room?” Agatha asked again, her voice tight.

“No, no one does. Just Harley,” Jack replied his brow furrowed.

“Jack, listen to me. You and Harley need to forget that you ever found that room.” His aunt sounded serious. Jack frowned, not just serious, but deadly serious.

“Why? What is it? There was that painting of people wearing owl masks...we found a strange suit and a broken owl mask...” Jack said questioningly, but his aunt cut him off.

“Jack, there are a lot of things you and Bruce don't know about the Wayne family and I would prefer it stayed that way. Don't tell anyone else what you found...I'm assuming you haven't?” Her tone was sharp.

“No...no I haven't.” Jack replied. “Auntie, what's going on?”

“All right, I won't tell a soul and neither will Harley, but Agatha, you can't keep us in the dark forever. If whatever it is, if it's a deadly secret, you are going to have to tell us eventually because no matter what happens, we know and that won't stay a secret forever, especially with us living here,” Jack said softly.

Agatha sighed. “I know Jackie, I know...I knew when I gave you the house. I just hoped I had more time. I promise, soon I will tell you everything, but for now...you never saw any of it. All right?”

“All right.” Jack sighed.

He could hear the smile in Agatha's voice. “Good boy. Give Harley a kiss for me. Talk to you later Jackie.” She hung up. Jack frowned tossing the phone back onto the bedside table just as Harley came up with two steaming cups of coffee.

“So, what did she say?” Harley asked handing Jack his mug. Jack took it, leaning over to put his cigarette out in the ashtray. “She told us to pretend that we never found it and to tell no one.”

Harley sat on the bed cross legged blowing on her coffee. She frowned in confusion. “What?”

Jack shrugged. “She made me promise. She sounded scared Harls.”

Harley blinked. “That's so...you don't suppose this Court of Owls thing is real do you?”

Jack shrugged. “All I know is that I promised we would tell no one. I guess at this point it doesn't really matter. Might as well keep it to ourselves.”

Harley nodded sipping her coffee as Jack said, “Oh and she was especially concerned about whether the caretaker knew that we had found that room.”

Harley sipped her coffee before answering. “The caretaker?”

“Yeah. She was really concerned about him.” Jack sipped his own coffee.

“ Weird,” Harley muttered.

Jack smiled. “You know though, she didn’t say we couldn’t do a little research on the Court of Owls...and maybe we need to take a look at old Mr. Cobb too.”

Harley smiled. “I think you may be right puddin.”

“Well, anyway, we’ll put that on the back burner for now...what I really want to talk about is the next job for the Red Hood gang.” Jack grinned brightly.

Harley giggled. “What did you have in mind puddin?”

“How would you feel about us breaking into one of WayneTechs labs and stealing one of their prototypes, from a WayneTech lab in the upper east side?” Jack grinned.

Harley giggled. “Oh Jack, that sounds fun! What are you thinking about?”

Jack's smile was devilish. “The tech portion of the company has been working on these special materials, one that supposedly can make you invisible, though the last time I heard anything about it they were still having issues with the material overheating so the invisibility doesn’t last long. The other is bullet-proof material...so you could have a bullet-proof tuxedo if you wanted. Anyway, Alex has a buyer lined up from LexCorp...ready to deal in some high tech corporate espionage.”

Harley giggled. “Oh Bruce is going to be so pissed!”

Jack chuckled. “Exactly.”

Agatha looked pale. She couldn't believe they had found that room. She closed her eyes. She supposed she shouldn't be surprised. Jack was a smart boy, always had been—too smart. It was only a matter of time. She had been so stupid to set them up there, but she simply hadn't thought about it...it had been so long since she had even spoken to anyone in the Court. Now...

She knew that the Court had to already know he had found it. Which meant, like it or not, she needed to get back to Gotham ASAP. Even if the Court wasn't going to move in on him, she needed to be there; Jack and Harley were going to need her help. She had done everything she could over the years to protect those boys from knowing...especially Jack...but...she cursed to herself.

Agatha stood up from the lounge chair and snapped her fingers. A man with finely chiseled features, dark skin and even darker, piercing eyes quickly came at her call. “Yes Miss Agatha?”

“Call Joseph, tell him I'm coming back and that we need to talk,” Agatha snarled walking swiftly from the beach and heading toward the house.

Bruce groaned, hanging up his phone and putting his head in his hands while staring out at his office. Hundreds of thousands of dollars—perhaps millions when the damage was assessed—irreplaceable pieces of art...destroyed, vandalized. Some of the paintings might be able to be restored, but it would cost...Bruce sighed again. There was no evidence to say who had done it. Surveillance cameras hadn't picked up anything because whoever had broken in knew the code to disable them. Technically whoever had broken in, hadn't broken in at all. They had known the code not just for the security, but to enter the gallery as well...there had been some strange mix-up with the security guards too, some sort of computer error that had made it so that no guard was on duty that night...either way Bruce was out a lot of money and the world had lost irreplaceable works of art.

Bruce brooded over who it could be, but he soon decided he was fairly sure he knew who it was...Jack. It seemed like just the sort of thing Jack would do to get back at him, part childish, part nihilist and partly just...rude. Bruce sighed and the worst of it was that Bruce thought maybe he deserved it. Yes...he knew he deserved it and more for what he had almost done to Jack...for what he had done to Harley. Bruce closed his eyes. He could see himself as he was that night...he almost killed his little brother—his brother, the one person he should have been protecting.

He was also still deeply upset over Alfred as well. The older man had been withdrawn, not acting at all like himself. He was sure that what had happened between him and Jack had cut deep into the old man's heart. He and Jack were practically his sons. Bruce chewed his bottom lip. He had no idea how to make this right again, didn't know if it was even possible, but he promised himself he would try. Whatever it took he would try to make amends with Jack.

He stood up to pace his office, trying to work off some of the irritation he was feeling when his cellphone rang. He picked it up but the number was unlisted. Bruce frowned, thought about letting it go to voice mail, but opted to hit the button.

“Bruce Wayne,” he said.

“Hello, my love,” a sultry voice said over the line.

Bruce stopped moving. “Talia?”

“Yes my love, it's me. It's been a while hasn't it?” Her voice was soft, the slight accent she had never been able to fully abandon came through causing a shiver to run up Bruce's spine.

“What are you doing in Gotham?” Bruce asked, taking a chance in assuming that she was here in the city. His heart was beating quickly. He hadn't seen Talia since college. They had had a torrid love affair all through college. Bruce had even asked her to marry him, but she had refused, telling him that she had family obligations that prevented her from seeking her own happiness. She had left that day; that was almost ten years ago.

“I'm here on some family business, but I hoped...maybe we could have dinner?” He could hear and see the smile on her face when she spoke.

Bruce smiled, his blood running hot and fast. She was intoxicating, among other things. “I would love that Talia.”

Later that same night at one of Gotham's nightclubs, “Amoureus Perdus” was crowded. Dancers were packed on the dance floor, the lights a kaleidoscope of blues, purples and greens skipped across the dancers as the sounds of Faster Kill Pussycat permeated throughout the club. The Red Hood gang sat at one of the large round booths, the thirteen of them sitting with their drinks, a large map of Gotham on the table between them. Jack and Harley both had their disguises with masks on, both dressed in all black. Harley had the red and black dye streaked through her blonde hair which was up in pigtails again. (No one at the club gave them a second look as there were other people in masks, paint, and some costumes.) Sandra and Dale were sharing a fish bowl, Alex and Alice a rum bucket, while each of the other members all had their own drinks. Frost sat coolly on Jack's right looking like he would drop his drink and pull a gun at any second.

Jack lifted his mask just enough to take a sip of his rum and cola, only exposing his chin and lips, though the members of his gang paid little attention, before he stood up. Harley smiled watching him sipping from her Blowjob licking the whipped cream from her lips. Jack shared a glance with her, grinning when Harley gave him a wink, her tongue rolling along her bottom lip. He spoke loudly to be heard over the music, though their little booth was set in the back and a little distance from the dance floor so that he didn't have been yell too loudly.

“All right boys and girls...” Jack grinned at everyone around the table then pointed at the map, his finger landing on a space between the corner of Dillon Avenue and Murphy Avenue. “Right there my lovelies is one of WayneTech's many labs located throughout Gotham! And this, this my darlings is where we are hitting next.” Haskins, looking like he had slept in the t-shirt and jeans he was wearing under the heavy red duffel coat he hadn't removed since they came into the club, took a large swallow of his beer, letting out a loud belch. “So, we gonna do a real job this time? But like, ain't there going to be any money there?”

Jack narrowed his eyes. (Though Haskins couldn't see the expression on Jack's face through the helmet, the way Jack held his head and how his shoulders were set communicated his unhappiness with Haskins.) His helmeted head whipped around to glare at Haskins. Alex punched Haskins with his fist, hard in the other man's shoulder.

“Shut up, you fucking numbnut.”

Haskins gave Alex a disgruntled look, but shut up and slouched down in the booth. Jack smiled.

“Yes, Haskins, as you so elegantly put it, we are going to do a 'real' job. Our goal is to steal some precious and expensive Waynetech, and Alex here is going to be our seller. He already has a buyer lined up. All we have to do is walk in there and get the goods. Then we will have some 'real' money.”

Danny clapped her hands. “This is going to be great! I always wanted to get a look inside one of those WayneTech labs! See what's what!”

Jack grinned behind his mask and sat down again. Duela frowned, leaning over to study the map. She was a little wobbly, already on her third Jameson and ginger ale when she pointed in the rough location that Jack had just been pointing.

“Hey...ah...that's the upper east side right?” Duela glanced up to see if anyone was listening. Jack turned his helmeted head toward her, the light playing across it hypnotically. “Yes,” he said simply.

Duela frowned. “Ain't that were that new vigilante has been showing up?”

Jack glanced at Harley, the two exchanging a glance. Jack turned back to Duela. “New vigilante? Whatever are you talking about, my darling girl?”

Duela snapped her fingers trying to remember when Jason, who had so far been a fairly quiet kid, spoke up. “Black Spider.”

“Black Spider.”
Duela pointed at him with a big grin. “That's it!”

Jack chuckled. “Ooo, what names!”

Harley almost snorted into her drink with giggles. “Oh no!! Poor Batman, does he know about this?” she asked. “He's gonna hafta share!”

Duela shrugged taking the question seriously. “I don't know. I think so. I mean these two have only been popping up once and a while over the last month, but it’s getting to be more frequent from what I heard. They've been in the news at least once every week. I think I heard something about the Black Spider dude almost killing someone...not sure, I wasn't really paying that much attention.” She picked up her drink and took a sip clearly done with the subject.

Jack tilted his head which Harley found comical in the helmet. “I guess we need to pay a little more attention to the news, sweets,” he said to Harley.

Jack turned back to Duela. “I'm not too worried about this Huntress my dear. We will be in and out before her or even a Batman knows we're there.”

Alex smiled. “And another punch in the arm to Bruce Wayne.”

Jack chuckled as did the others, but Haskins frowned. “What's up your ass about Wayne? First the gallery, now this? I mean, yeah he's a fucking billionaire and all, but ain't he sorta like one of the good guys or something?”

Jack went still. Harley turned to stare at Haskins, her straw held against her bottom lip, and lifted an eyebrow behind her mask.

Alex shook his head and muttered. “Haskins, you're a fucking idiot.”

Jack smiled behind the mask and said with venom. “Do yourself a favor and ignore anyone who tells you to be yourself. Bad idea in your case.”

Haskins crossed his arms across his chest. “What the fuck? I can't be the only one thinking it.”

“Maybe darling, but you're the only one stupid enough to say something out loud.” Jack sighed. “All right meeting over, everyone go home, or go somewhere else, but go. You know the drill. We'll be meeting at The Pony Bar on First Avenue at midnight.”

Jack grabbed the map and rolled it up watching with narrow eyes as everyone but the core group left. Jack snarled. “Your friend Haskins is going to be a problem, isn't he?”

Alex sighed. “Fucking idiot. I thought he knew enough to shut his trap and follow orders.”

Jack sighed. “We'll have to see how he does tomorrow. So...” He turned to Harley. “Shall we go change and do a little dancing my sweets?”

Harley squealed. “I thought you would never ask!!”

She hopped up picking up the large purse she had brought in with her. Alex called out. “Don't forget to drop that off with Dez.” Harley giggled giving Alex a two finger salute.

Sandra and Alice stood as well. “We're going to go help Harley dress!”

Jack chuckled watching all the women head off to the restrooms. “Guess I should go change too. I promised my girl some dancing.”
Alex snickered. “I think I'll wait here.”

Dale chuckled. “Me too.”

Frost stood up picking up a duffel bag from under the seat and followed Jack to the back. Alex watched him go with a smile, picking up the drink he had been sharing with Alice and finished it off thinking to himself that hanging with Jack had always been interesting. Alex had not been one to become involved with the business outside of information gathering and selling, but with Jack Wayne, he opted to step out from behind his computer screens; he suspected that now they were heading into a whole new arena of fun.

Harley changed into the outfit she had brought with her, shedding the mask and brushing out the spray dye from her hair. With Sandra's help, she piled her hair up giving the thick blonde locks a kind of 1950's Rockabilly feel to match the sexy dress she had slipped into, a red and black mini dress with a diamond tulle crinoline underskirt under the red over skirt that was littered with black diamonds like a playing card. The middle of the dress was black mesh showing off her stomach as was the collar and sleeves. She pulled on a garter belt and a pair of black fishnet stockings, and to finish her look, a pair of black and red stiletto saddle shoes. She stuffed her other clothing into the purse before she turned around doing a spin for her friends.

“So, what do you think? You think Jack will like it? He hasn't see it yet.” Harley stopped and did a couple of poses. “I found it in one of the closets with a note attached to it from Aunt Agatha saying she found this and knew I had to have it.” Harley giggled. “She is so funny.”

Sandra smiled. “Jack is going to die, but I think you could wear a sack and he would have the same reaction.”

Alice laughed. “I agree with Sandra, Jack thinks everything you wear is gorgeous on you.”

Harley giggled as her cheeks turned red.

*

In the mens rest room, Jack quickly stripped out of the red hood helmet, black slacks, turtleneck and jacket he had been wearing, then pulled out a pair of slacks that were a shade of blue so dark they looked almost black. He pull out a folded dark green dress shirt, slid his arms through and buttoned up the shirt swiftly. Jack then threw on a deep purple pinstriped vest which he also buttoned all the way. He pulled out some eyeliner from the bag—all while Frost waited patiently—leaning forward to trace his eyes slowly. When he was done, he ran his fingers through his hair before turning. “How do I look Frost?”

Frost grinned with a nod. “You look good Boss.”

Jack chuckled. “Think she'll fall for me?”

Frost smiled. “Yes Boss, I think she will.”

Jack smiled with excitement. He walked over to Frost and elbowed the other man in the side lightly. “Then let's go get her shall we?”

Harley was already on the dance floor swaying and weaving her hips to the music, the lights flashing over her body, catching the little bits of glitter in her outfit. She bounced her hips to the rhythm, her arms over her head as she let the song carry her. “I Need You” by Armin van Buuren and Garibay played loudly while Harley twisted in the middle of the dance floor, clearly unaware of anyone around her. She had her eyes closed, her body moving to the music, her torso weaving when Jack saw her. He stopped in his tracks to stare at her. It was like he was seeing her for the first time again as all the other dancers just fell away leaving Harley alone on the dance floor. She turned in a circle with a soft smile on her face; the skirt of the little dress she was wearing bounced around her as she turned.

She opened her eyes, her smile blossoming across her face when she saw Jack standing there watching her. She grinned and pressed her teeth into her bottom lip while she motioned to him with her finger. Jack grinned in return, dancing toward her until he was close enough to place his hands against her hips, pulling her against him. Jack smiled down at her, brushing his fingers along her jaw and leaned close to her ear to be heard over the music. Jack hissed. “Did my heart love till now? Forswear it, sight, For I ne'er saw true beauty till this night.”

Harley giggled softly gazing into his eyes as she draped her arms around his shoulders swaying, her hips pressed against his, moving to the music as she covered his mouth with her own. They swayed and bounced to the music while they kissed until Harley broke away with a laugh, leaning back, trusting Jack to hold on to her. Sandra and Alice had returned to the booth. Frost was standing at the edge of the dance floor, his hands crossed in front of him watching. Alice sat down and Alex pulled her close watching Jack and Harley dancing. Alice leaned close to his ear. “They are something else, aren't they? I don't think I have ever seen anyone so much in love with each other. I'm a little envious.”

Alex chuckled. “Yeah, they are something.” Alex kissed Alice on the top of her head. “I love you, but their kind of love...”

Bruce drove home after his date with Talia. It had been nice—more than nice. Seeing her again had stirred up many old feelings that he had thought he was over long ago. They had been inseparable in college. He had thought she would be the one. After they graduated he was going to ask her to marry him. He had been training intently for...well, for revenge maybe. At that time Batman hadn't fully formed as a reality in his mind, but Talia made him almost forget all of it, the murder of his parents, his little brother slowly diving into insanity...the money, the family name. He would have given it all up for her then. But, she had left; their last year of college Talia had to go back home. She never told him why and even tonight, he had wanted to ask, but he didn't and Talia never offered to tell him why she had left him. But he supposed it didn't matter. The years apart had melted away...

Bruce smiled. Talia was going to be in Gotham for the next several weeks working on some business for her father. She told him tonight that she would like to spend her free time with him.

Bruce smiled, despite everything that had happened in the last several weeks, maybe things were beginning to look up.

Harley finished pulling her hair up into ponytails and carefully lined her eyes before she slipped on her mask. Jack was behind her doing a series of push up, counting out loud, clapping between each push up, the muscles of his back slick with sweat. They were getting ready to leave on the boat to meet up with the rest of the gang. Harley watched him as she put on her eyeliner, her mouth watering and groin tightening with lust. She smiled at herself.
“You better get dressed puddin.” She finished outlining one eye.

Jack counted out ten more before he hopped up. “Right you are pumpkin!”

Harley giggled. “If you hurry I'll outline your eyes for you.”

Jack laughed. “You can't see them under the helmet.”

Harley grinned and looked at his reflection in the mirror. “Yes, but I'll know...” She winked at him. Jack chuckled dashing into the bathroom. She heard the water come on just before she walked over leaning in. “I'm going to go down to the kitchen and grab a drink, you want anything?”

“No I'm good pooh!” Jack called back over the sound of the running water.

Harley smiled and headed downstairs. She was dressed in all black again except this time she had added a thick red belt around her waist to match the black and red in her hair. She smiled, her boots clicking on the stairs when she heard a knock at the door. Harley stopped and stared at the door for a moment. She frowned quickly removing her mask and stuffing it into her front pocket as the knock came again.

She narrowed her eyes going to the front door and opening it just a crack. One hand remained on the door latch while her other hand rested on the hilt of a knife strapped to her hip. The snow had melted outside leaving everything wet and soggy, though the air still contained a significant chill. Outside on the porch she saw two people, one of them she knew, at least a little, the caretaker William Cobb.

William wasn't a bad looking man; there just wasn't anything special about him that Harley could see except for his eyes. The man had creepy eyes Harley thought, black...like an owl's. Otherwise he had an above average handsome face, brown hair that seemed to lack any “life” to it and he was of medium build...forgettable really, she thought. He had another man with him. Where Cobb looked to be in his late forties, the man with him was younger, maybe in his thirties. The other man had long black hair that he had pulled into a tail at the back of his neck and soft brown eyes.

Cobb smiled. “Sorry to disturb you Miss Harley, I just wanted to come by and let you and your husband know that I will be having my...cousin staying with me for a little while and to let you both know that he knows the rules.” Cobb smiled.

But Harley noticed that Benjamin's eyes were glued to Jack and immediately her blood started to boil because she had seen that look plenty of times in some women...Meg...Lisa...

Then to Harley's complete annoyance, Benjamin stepped past her into the house, holding his hand out to Jack as he walked briskly forward. “It's a pleasure to meet you! Jack is it? I believe that's what my cousin said your name was...” Benjamin grabbed Jack's hand, his eyes roaming over Harley's shirtless husband with a look of clear lust that had Harley wanting to rip his eyes out.
Jack frowned taking the other man's hand. “Ah...yes, it's Jack.”

William hissed. “Ben, get back here.”

Benjamin smiled at Jack then said with the air of a love-sick girl. “You have the most incredible eyes.”

Jack smiled. “Well, thank you Benjamin, but ah...if you both will excuse us, Harley and I have plans tonight.”

William nodded. “Of course, I just wanted to let you both know about my cousin, just in case you happen to see him on the island.”

“Thank you Mr. Cobb,” Harley said, her voice cold as she glared at Benjamin who didn't notice at all, his attention on Jack.

Benjamin waved. “Ah goodbye. I hope we run into each other again Jack.”

Jack nodded, but his attention had already shifted. As the two men left, Harley slammed the door shut with a growl on their backs.

“I don't like that Benjamin,” she hissed, glaring daggers at the closed door.

Jack laughed. “Oh pumpkin, come here.” Jack reached out and grabbed her around the waist pulling her up against him.

Harley pouted. “Did you see the way he was looking at you? Like he wanted to eat you.”

Jack chuckled. “You are so adorable when you're jealous.” He rubbed his nose against hers, his hands sliding down to grip her rear. “I only have eyes for you Harley...only you. Forever and always, my pumpkin, my wife,” he whispered, his voice heavy with want. “And when we get home, I'm going to show you.”

Harley was still pouting. “Can I kill him?”

Jack laughed. “Benjamin?”

Harley nodded, her lip still out in a pout. Jack kissed her bottom lip, rubbing the tip of her nose with his own

Jack laughed. “Okay, if he tries anything, you can defend my honor.”

Harley smiled wrapping a hand around the back of Jack's neck pulling his mouth down to hers. “Good,” she whispered, then she kissed him in a way that had Jack considering strongly about taking her right there in the front hall.

*

Cobb and Orchard made their way down from the main house and headed around the corner along a stone path that led to the far side of the grounds near where the stone fence that separated the wildlife refuge from the house sat. Nestled near the fence sat a small stone house, Cobb's house. Orchard smiled as the two men walked beside each other.

“So, are you sure they found the room?” Orchard asked.

Cobb nodded. “Yes, the silent alarm on the door went off.”
Orchard smiled. “I think extending our offer to Jack Wayne will be a very good idea.”

Cobb narrowed his eyes. “A good idea for the whole or because you fancy him?”

Orchard grinned. “Why can't they go hand in hand?”

“What about his woman?” Cobb asked.

“What about her? Getting rid of her should be easy. I'm sure after that I can easily sway Jack to our side,” Orchard cooed.

Cobb shook his head. “I think you overestimate your charms and underestimate hers.”

“We'll see.” The younger man smiled as they two of them entered the cottage.

Jack wore all black except for the red helmet, and Harley was also all in black except for her red belt and a pair of red leather gloves and mask. They hopped out of an SUV along with the others of their group. Each member of the group was dressed in black with at least one piece of red on them, whether it was their mask, a shirt, belt...as long as there was one piece to show they were part of the gang. Unlike the last time, everyone was armed; Harley with a baseball bat that Jack had just recently purchased for her. The others were armed with knives or guns depending on their preference, Jack had a gun and a knife—he liked to have options. Everyone also wore an ear-bud with a throat microphone, (though Jack's was under his helmet) that kept them in communication with everyone else in the group. Not all the gang was with them for this; Alice had to work. Alex was their contact and information guy, so he wasn't with them. Rolf and Jason actually were not needed for tonight. Haskins had insisted on coming and wherever he went, Duela followed. Dale and Sandra remained with the second SUV and Trope, who sat in the back seat, her high power custom built computer on her lap. Which meant that the infiltration team consisted in Jack, Harley, Frost, Haskins, Duela and Danny.

The WayneTech lab that they were going to break into wasn't a large lab, located in a one-story building that stretched along a full block. Jack had always assumed it was a sort of in your face cover. They weren't actually hiding as the lab was clearly visible, which he supposed was to make anyone looking for anything of value assume that nothing important went on in this particular lab.

Jack was grinning behind his mask as he grabbed Harley around the waist and yanked her up against him. “Okay boys and girls!! Now on this job, we need to be quick, in and out! Grab anything you can that looks expensive...and break it if you can't carry it out. BUT do not forget, we have one goal and that is the materials they are working on, the invisibility and the bullet-proof material samples. Obtaining those is my job. Once I have those and Trope has downloaded the data from the computers, then we are out of here. Frost my sweet, your job is to make sure no one sees us or comes in the door here.”

Frost nodded with a grunt. “On it Boss,” he said with a last check of his weapon and extra magazines.

Haskins grumbled at Duela. “So there ain't any money actually here?”

Danny had opened her mouth to tell Haskins to shut up, but then Jack pulled his Glock and spun on Haskins so quickly that no one had realized what was happening until Jack had the barrel pressed up against the other man's forehead.

“Did you say something Haskins? Did you have a question about the job or were you just talking to yourself?” Jack asked, his voice sweet and calm though he had the barrel pressed against the other man's head hard enough that Harley was sure it would leave a bruise.

Haskins stared at the barrel, his eyes crossing. “No man.”

Though no one could see the smile, Harley could hear it in her lover's voice. “Oh good. Now, if you wish to discuss seeking employment elsewhere...well you can talk about that with me or my lady...or maybe if I'm feeling generous...Alex, but for now. Close your mouth and do what you're told. Okay? Jack tilted his helmeted head, the streetlights reflecting eerily off the eyes of his helmet.

“Oh my darlings! Let's go!” Jack turned and motioned for everyone to follow him.

Their small group made their way down an alley that ran alongside the building heading toward the back entrance, an employee entrance which opened up into the main floor of the lab. Once they arrived at the back, Jack leaned against the wall. Next to the door was an electronic touch pad. It didn't look like any touch pad he had ever seen at a Wayne facility, however. Very high tech, Jack thought. He smiled to himself thinking he might have to have Trope teach him and Harley a few things about computer hacking.

Jack spoke softly. “Trope my dear, you have the door?”

Trope, sitting in the back of the SUV with her red knit cap pulled down low over her strawberry blonde hair, her voice making her sound like she was twelve instead of twenty-three murmured back. Jack could hear the tap of her fingers against the keyboard. “Just a moment, almost have it...” Jack heard a final hard click then Trope's voice returned. “Now try it.”

Jack reached out, wrapping his gloved fingers around the handle, then turned it. There was a click and the door popped open easily. Jack smiled behind his mask. “Good job Trope, you get a cookie.”

Trope had a smile in her voice. “Thanks Boss. I like chocolate!”

Jack laughed softly. “Then chocolate cookies you shall have! Our treat.”

He could hear the sounds of Trope giggling as Jack turned and motioned to the others. “Come along kiddies!”

Entering the building all they saw at first was a dull grey corridor leading toward the mail rooms. On their left was a door leading to a small lounge-like room with vending machines, a table and chairs, a couch and even an ancient TV and tiny workspace refrigerator. There were a few photos hanging on the wall of the corridors while they made their way down to the main rooms showing employees in lab coats smiling in front of computers or lab equipment. Nothing unusual. As soon as they were inside the building, Jack grabbed Harley pulling her aside, but at the same time pressing her up against him as if he couldn't stand going very long without her touching him in some way. “You have the stick Trope gave you?”

Harley nodded. “Yes, I just stick it in and she said it should automatically start to download everything from the computer's memory, then it would automatically erase everything on the computer. I just wait until the light turns from red to green..”

Jack snickered. “That is horrible! I love it.” He reached up caressing the back of her neck with his gloved fingers. “Get as many computers as you can sweets. I would kiss you if I could.”

She giggled. “I would lick you all over...maybe later?”

Jack chuckled. “Oh, definitely.”
Harley asked softly. “Are you sure you can open the safe?”

Jack snickered. “Yes. I actually know the combination. It’ll be a piece of cake. Just have to take care of the security guards... the little robot sentries.” Jack tilted his head. “Okay darling, you ready?”

Harley heard Trope’s reply. “Yes, sure Boss. Just get me in the room and set the device down that I gave you. I’ll trigger the pulse and all those little pesky Wayne roomba robots will be fried.”

Jack laughed. “Roombas! This is such fun!” He caressed Harley’s cheek with one hand. Harley looked up at him, her face reflected in his red helmet, before he stepped away waggling his fingers at her. Harley smirked and hurried into the computer room before Danny, Duela and Haskins decided to trash any of the main desktop computers she needed.

Harley stopped in the doorway of the computer room and looked around swiftly trying to find a clue to tell her which computer would be the best one to use the little stick Trope had given her. The other three gang members were already in here with Duela and Haskins doing a desk by desk search of the drawers, searching for anything of value while Danny, someone’s laptop under her arm, searched a couple of filing cabinets.

The room contained a series of desks, all lined up in two perfect rows, each with a high end desktop computer resting on the clean desk surface. She thought at first that maybe she should just take any of the computers in the room, but her eyes wandered down the hall toward the end of the room where she spied another desk on the other side of a clear glass wall. This one was much bigger, the room clearly some uppity-up boss’s office. Harley grinned. That was the one.

* Jack moved carefully down the hall heading to where he knew the large safe was located. It was not just a simply safe in a wall, however. This WayneTech safe was an entire room where they kept any of the important discoveries, the samples, the prototypes... he had been in here once just a year ago when he, Bruce and some other members of the board were given a tour to show them exactly what they were working on in this particular WayneTech lab. Most of the tour had been a complete snoozefest until their guide had started talking about the chemistry involved with what they were attempting to make. Jack always loved chemistry, so much fun!!

He stopped when he entered the hall that actually led to the safe. He narrowed his eyes. He joked about the robots being roombas, and they did resembled the little cleaning robots, but these things were actually a type of laser defense grid. The robots moved, constantly casting a laser beam over the floor that led to the safe. What made them dangerous was that the laser grid didn't stay the same; there was no way one could learn the layout because it changed every twenty minutes. But Trope had given Jack an EMP machine of her own design. She had showed him how she had made it, a really ingenious piece of work that now that Jack had seen how it worked, he knew he could easily duplicate.

Jack waited, counting until he saw the little machine move, shifting the laser grid. He smiled and eased the tiny EMP machine into the hall, pressing it against the side of the wall and with a flick of his thumb the machine came on. It made no sound at all, the only indication that he had actually turned it on was the light on the side, a tiny red bulb coming on.

Jack heard Trope’s voice in his ear. “Count to ten Boss and then step out. You won’t notice anything, but I promise, it worked.”

Jack chuckled. “I’m going to hold you to that Trope.”
Jack silently counted then, with a wide and devilishly amused grinned, he started to walk swiftly down the hall, passing the now dead security “roombas”—as Trope had promised—and headed straight to the vault.

*

Harley reached for the doorknob grinning when the office door popped right open for her. She slipped into the office and plopped down in the comfortable office chair with a big grin. She did a little spin giggling to herself before she stopped and turned the computer on. She grinned. It had been left on sleep mode and did not require a password. She shoved the stick in and waited.

*

Outside it had begun to rain causing a deep chill to settle on Gotham. Two figures were crouched on top of a building that faced toward the WayneTech labs. One was a woman dressed in a purple and black bodysuit, her long black hair was worn loose, held back only by a purple mask. The Huntress, pulled her cloak around her shoulders a little tighter and glared up at the sky. “I swear, the rain is worse than the snow.”

The man beside her was dressed in a completely purple-grey suit that covered every inch of him, including his face, adorned with large black spider on the forehead, chuckled “You always complain about the weather.”

The woman in purple laughed softly. “Shut up spider.”

The man chuckled in response to his partner.

They were both quiet, the only sounds being the falling rain and the occasional car driving along a street nearby. With the rain, tonight had been pretty quiet which was all right with Huntress. Black Spider kept hoping something big would happen which would draw Batman to them. He really wanted to test himself up against Batman, but they had only been doing their vigilante gig for the last couple of months and clearly either Batman was ignoring them or they hadn't busted any criminals to make them worth Batman's time. Ultimately the goal for Huntress and Black Spider was a chance to work alongside Batman, to be out there cleaning up the streets of Gotham. Hell, Batman couldn't be everywhere all the time...Gotham was big enough for more than one vigilante...at least that was Huntress's theory. Spider was mostly here for the fun of getting to beat the shit out of some people. Though in recent weeks, Spider and Huntress were wondering if Batman wasn't tough enough on crime Gotham...sending them to jail was fine, but what about when they were back on the streets. Huntress still seemed to have some reservations, but Black Spider thought it was time to start thinking in terms of more permanent solutions.

They had only been on patrol for a few hours when they both decided to take a break from the rain, finding shelter under a patio set up that someone had on the roof of their apartment building. The two of them were crouched under a large, faded patio umbrella when Black Spider thought he saw something in the WayneTech labs window.

“Hey, Huntress, do they work late nights at the lab?” He pointed down and across the street to the WayneTech's lab.

Huntress stood up to get a better look. “Not usually. Why?”

“I...thought I saw a light coming from the lab.” Spider frowned then shrugged. “Though it could have been anything.”
Huntress stretched, putting her hands on her lower back and bending backward to crack it. “Well, it's probably nothing, maybe custodians, but it wouldn't hurt to drop down there and check it out.”

Spider stood stretching his arms over his head. “What I wouldn't do for a good bank robbery or a home invasion right now...warm up my muscles, feel like I'm getting stiff with the cold and rain.”

Huntress chuckled. “You're terrible. Aren't we supposed to be happy it's a quiet night?”

“Pffft! I suppose,” Spider mumbled, jumping up onto the building's ledge then, without another word, he leapt, throwing himself out into space with the confidence and grace of someone who didn't fear death or failure. Huntress watched him as he made it, landing on the roof at least fifteen feet below. She shook her head at her sidekick before she herself jumped down.

* *

Jack grinned, hurrying out of the safe room with the prototype materials in the large bag attached to his waist. He came running out, grabbing the EMP device at the last moment. “All right kiddies! Time to skedaddle!”

Harley came skipping out of seemingly nowhere to throw herself into his arms and kiss the front of his red helmet. “Ready!!”

Danny came next along with Duela and Haskins bringing up the rear. Danny grinned holding up her prizes, two laptops. “You think Trope will like these Boss?”

Jack laughed. “I do indeed.”

Duela smiled. “I found some money in a swear jar in the break room.”

Jack laughed. “That's good darling.”

Haskins muttered. “This was stupid.”

Harley felt Jack's arms tense around her; she was pretty sure Haskins wasn't going to make it with the Red Hood gang for much longer. Instead of saying anything to Haskins, Jack simply sighed.

“All right boys and girls, your tour of the WayneTech lab is officially over. You can stop by the gift shop on your way out!” He laughed. “Let's go!! Everyone back on the bus!”

They had just turned as a group to head out the way they had come when a female voice said:

“Oh, I don't think so. You guys get the honor of going to jail instead.”

Harley laughed and pointed at the woman and man standing in their way. “Oh my gosh puddin!! Costumers!! Like Batman!”

Jack laughed. “Oh I think I'm insulted pumpkin—we don't rate the Batman? Instead we get...” He waved his hand vaguely at them. “Whatever the fuck you two think you are...Hey, where's my guy?”

Jack could just barely make out the slumped figure of Frost just outside the doorway.

Huntress started to open her mouth to reply, but Jack talked over her in a tone that said he was both insulted and clearly annoyed.

“First, terrible entrance...where is the flash? The showmanship? I mean Batman knows how to make an entrance from what I've heard...this...it's pitiful really. Second, who the fuck are you? Purple girl and her sidekick The Bruise? And third, get the fuck out of my way.” Jack pulled his gun and fired.

Huntress yelped, but she moved out of the way, the bullet zipping pass her head and out the door.
Everything turned to chaos in the next second. Harley ran past Jack and swung her bat, her aim for Huntress. The woman threw herself forward in a gymnastics move that Harley actually knew how to do herself, a simple forward somersault. The woman landed on her hands and rolled, coming up in front of Jack. “I'm guessing by the red helmet you're the boss.”

Jack grinned behind the mask. “Oh, you are smart!”

Jack holstered his weapon so quickly that Huntress didn't see him move at first until that same hand snapped back, his fist striking her just under the hollow of her throat. She stumbled back a few steps coughing hard, which allowed Jack the second he needed to bring his right foot up and thrust kick her in the stomach. When Harley's swing missed, she dropped to her knees just as the Spider launched himself at her, the now empty space where Harley had been sent him flying over her.
Showing his training, he rolled in a somersault coming up on his feet just as Haskins pulled his own weapon. He was too close to Spider, however, who grabbed the barrel of the gun, whipped Haskins' arm to the side, chopping his fist down into the soft part of Haskins arm, the hollow space of his elbow. Spider's fist collided with the inside of Haskins' elbow breaking it and forcing the other man to drop his weapon and stumble backwards.

Duela let out a scream and ran making it down the hall and out of the building.

Danny hissed. “Get away from him!” She pulled her own gun, but Spider took three rapid steps toward her dropping down on his knees just as she fired her weapon. He slid toward her at the last second coming up on his feet and performing a full body flip. He brought his left leg up and slammed his heel down, catching Danny in the arm. She cried out and stumbled back still keeping a hold on her weapon, but Spider was quick; he moved forward, his fist flying out lightning fast. She shot her gun blindly at him, the shot passing just past his torso as his fist hit her in the shoulder.
Harley let out a yelp and threw herself to the floor, the bullet just barely missing her when she came back into the room. Haskins, who had fallen when Spider broke his arm, got up to his feet, but dropped down again trying to find his gun with his good hand cursing loudly. “YOU FUCKERS!!
Fucking fuckers!!”

*

Trope was yelling into their earbuds. “What's happening??!”

Dale hearing the fighting and the sounds of gunfire and hissed. “Oh fuck!” He started the engine yelling at Sandra. “Get ready to move on my call!”

“Okay got it!” She called back, her knuckles turning white on the wheel.

*

Danny gasped when the man in the spider suit came in right under her guard. She dropped her weapon throwing her hands up backing up until the back of her legs hit a desk. “Okay, okay you win!!”

But Black Spider didn't stop. He moved with such speed that Danny didn't have time to do anything as his fist struck her three times in quick succession in her throat. Danny fell to the floor, a dribble of blood rolling down her chin from her mouth. Spider smiled behind his mask and turned his attention to the other man whose arm he had broken, but when he turned Haskins had his gun pointed at him.
He was shaking and there was sweat rolling down his face as he held his broken arm to his chest. “Don't move motherfucker or I'm going to blow your head right off!”

*

Huntress took a few quick jabs at Jack, but Jack weaved swiftly surprising her with his speed and skill. She missed striking him, but just barely. She snarled in frustration, which made Jack laugh. “You know you really shouldn't be flirting with me like this, you're going to make my girl mad and you really wouldn't like her when she's mad.” He laughed.

Huntress snarled. “Can't believe a criminal like you has a girlfriend.”

“I ain't his girlfriend ya bitch! I'm his wife!!” Harley snarled and swung her bat. Huntress turned at the sound of Harley's voice, ducking, but not quite fast enough as Harley's bat caught her in the shoulder, the end cap of the bat hit the edge of Huntress's shoulder bone with a nasty sounding crack.

Huntress gasped in pain. Harley grinned viciously. “I'm getting really tired of people flirting with my PUDDIN!!”

She brought her weapon down in an over the head swing, but Huntress snapped out with a kick to Harley's knee, knocking her right leg out from under her. Harley yelped and stumbled to the side, the head of her bat slamming into the floor.

Jack hissed. “No one touches my GIRL!”

He came at the woman just as Huntress spun on her knee whipping her leg out, but Jack jumped, her leg catching only air. The man in the red helmet surprised her when he spun in the air in a half circle and slammed his heel into her face, knocking her back. She went with the kick, rolling away and coming back up on her feet just as another shot was fired. Everyone's attention was drawn to the sound of a gunshot only to see Spider lunge, his fist out, hitting Haskins in the chest with an impact that sent the man stumbling backwards and crashing into several desks.

Spider sprang forward with the intention of helping Huntress, but he moved too quickly without realizing just where his opponents were as he did a forward flip. Harley had turned at the same time, seeing him just as she did a full pivot with her hips, her hands tight around her bat, her arms close to her body as she snapped the bat up, catching Spider under the chin, knocking the vigilante's head up with the sharp impact. As the end of the bat smashed into his chin, several of his teeth cracked when his bottom jaw snapped into his upper jaw from the impact. Harley finished her spin, then twisted back around, the bat flowing with her as she smashed Spider again, this time in the side, cracking several ribs and then twisted the bat around for another back swing, which lacked the power of her first two, but was still damaging. Her third swing was shorter and more compact, hitting Spider more with the knob of her bat. The man went down in a heap and a groan. Harley squealed. “SCORE ONE FOR THE RED HOOD TEAM!! The CROWD GOES WILD!!”

She jumped up and down.

Meanwhile Huntress spun back around to face Jack, but he was ready for her and did a quick and sharp snap kick, his leg raise, snapping out from the knee, the side of his foot catching her in the face, knocking her to the ground.

Jack giggled, then raced over to grab Harley's hand. “Come on sweets! We need to get out of here!”

Haskins gasped getting to his feet. “Where's Duella?”

Jack shrugged. “No idea, she ran out of here screaming! Get Danny!”
Haskins stumbled over to Danny then stopped looking at her funny. He reached down and touched her throat. “Boss, I think she's dead.”

Jack hurried over and checked her, then hissed. “Fuck.”

That was when they all heard the sounds of sirens. Jack growled and hissed again. “Grab her body Haskins! Fuck, come on!”

Haskins cursed grabbing Danny up and tossing her body over his shoulder. They raced out of the building, stopping long enough to pull the unconscious Frost to his feet. Jack slapped him once across the face. “Come on buddy up and at 'em; time to run!”

Frost groaned as he blinked and staggered. “Okay, okay Boss.”

Then the four of them headed back to the SUVs...

*

Harley was limping a little by the time they returned to the house. They had dropped Haskins off at a place recommended by Alex where he could get treatment, no questions asked. They were all upset about Danny, but there wasn't much that could be done for her except to mourn her in their own way. Jack kicked the door open, carrying Harley, who was cradling her bat against her chest as he pushed the door open.

She giggled. “You can put me down. It's not as swollen now, I can feel it.”

Jack walked her over to the stairs sitting her down on the fifth stair up before he pulled his helmet off dropping it to the floor with a “clunk” before he walked over to the front door and closed it. Harley tossed her bat down for it to land with a thud next to his helmet.

“I can't believe our first job and we lost someone...who wasn't Haskins? Why couldn't it have been him?” Jack moved over to sit on the stairs next to her.

Harley laughed leaning back on the stairs and let out a sigh of exhaustion. “But we got the prototypes so...win!” She gave him a big smile. He grinned, giving her a kiss on the cheek before he leaned back to smile at her. “True my sweets, true.”

He sat back up and picked up one of her legs, laying her limb across his thigh and pulled her boot off. He tossed it to the floor, then her sock, tossing it down the stairs too, but the sock caught on the third step and stayed there. He continued, leaning over to pull off her other boot off, tossing it down the stairs to land next to the other one, then her other sock. He kicked off his own boots which tumbled down the stairs to land next to hers.

“I have to say pumpkin, you were beautiful with your bat.”

He grinned standing up to lean over her, grabbing her pants and started to yank them down her hips. She giggled lifting up her hips to make it easier for him. “Thank you puddin, and what are you doing?”

“I'm going to inspect your knee,” he explained as he pulled her pants and panties down her legs. She giggled. “That requires you to take my panties?” she asked with a grin and lifted eyebrows.

“It does. Call me thorough,” he said with all seriousness.

She giggled softly reaching up to pull off her mask before yanking her top over her head, tossing everything down the stairs and lastly her bra and gloves, though she slowly pulled her gloves off with her teeth before tossing them and her bra into the pile at the bottom of the stairs. She laid back against the stairs, her heels resting on the stairs just below her, her legs spread. Jack smiled reaching out to run one gloved finger down between her breasts.

“Mmm... so soft and biteable,” Jack cooed then he chuckled, his blue eyes roaming over her body. “You chilly Harley?” He looked pointedly at her breasts, her nipples hard before he very gradually circled the nipple of one breast with his gloved finger, grinning from ear to ear, watching the way her skin goosebumped again, her nipples hard. He licked his lips and gently cupped her breast with one gloved hand and brushed his leather clad thumb over her nipple, making her gasp. She arched her back into his touch, watching him through her lowered lashes.

He leaned close to her other breast to trace her nipple with the tip of his tongue, lowering himself down to his knees on the step between her legs and very slowly continued to circle her nipple until she was arching into his attentions with a deep moan of pleasure, her groin tightening, heat rushing through her body, making her feel tight and needy.

“Mm...” Jack smiled and brushed the tip of his nose against her nipple. “You are chilled. Look at that... look at how hard your nipples are...” He smiled kissing each nipple tenderly.

Harley grinned at him, looking coy. “Maybe puddin... maybe you just need to come over here and warm me up?”

Jack stood up and ran his fingers down her stomach, his gaze traveling the line of her body, pressing his lips together with a clear expression of want when his eyes traveled down between her legs, the pink wetness of her begging him to take her.

He tore his eyes away to glance at her knee. He winced, looking at her knee. She was right; the swelling did seem to have gone down some, but there was a deep purple and blue bruise forming. “Oh... Harley...” he said softly before he leaned in dropping back down to his knees on the stair between her legs and pressed a kiss tenderly to her knee. “My poor girl.” He slowly caressed her leg, running his fingertips up and down the inside of each of her thighs.

She watched him with a soft smile. “You're so sweet puddin.”

Jack caressed her legs gently, his fingers teasing as he dragged his nails down low, caressing the tender skin of her inner thighs. “I don't like my girl getting hurt.”

She leaned back against the stairs, grabbing the front of his shirt and tugged him toward her.

“Come here and warm me up Jack, please.” She rubbed her nose against his with a playful pout.

Jack leaned down, placing his hands on the stairs just at her shoulders, holding himself up as he leaned in to kiss her, a deep and tender kiss. He caught her tongue with his teeth, just enough to tease before diving his tongue into her mouth. Harley moaned softly wrapping her arms around his neck, sliding the foot of her unbruised leg down the back of his calf. Jack’s mouth moved down along her chin, sinking his teeth in tenderly then moved further down, biting at her throat sinking his teeth against her skin until she gasped.

Harley reached down between them working to pull open his slacks yanking the zipper down and shoving. She growled. “Naked, now Jack... now!”

Jack chuckled pushing off from the stairs and stood up. He grinned down at her running his fingers over the buttons of his shirt before he slid a few buttons free. He mimed licking her, then reached over his shoulder and yanked the shirt over his head. Then he slowly pushed his pants down his legs, swaying his hips for her before kicking off his pants, then his socks. He grinned down at her and very seductively pulled his gloves off with his teeth, just as she had.

Harley giggled watching him. “That deserves some dollar bills in your G-string puddin.”

Jack laughed. “Well I'll have to remember that and give you a real strip show sometime! Oh and buy myself a G-string. Ha!”

Harley laughed. “Oh I'm going to hold you to that! I want my strip show!”

Jack laughed tossing his gloves over his shoulder before he grabbed her, lifted her up and twisted around, sitting on the stairs with her. Harley wrapped her arms around his neck, kissing him passionately, placing her feet against the stair that ran just above Jack's waist, her fingers sliding through his hair before grabbing handfuls of his hair and tugging his head back slightly as she kissed him. She tugged herself forward, rubbing against his erection.

Jack groaned. “Harley...”

He ran his hands up her bare back, kissing her with fervor, reaching up to grab her hair. He pressed her hard against him feeling the teasing, wetness of her rubbing against him. Jack reached down between them, sliding his erection down just as Harley lifted up her hips, pressing himself past her barriers and deep into her; Harley immediately thrust herself down on him with a loud moan.

“Uh...Jack...my Jack...”

Jack grinned against her mouth yanking her hair to tug her head back and expose her throat to him, his teeth skimmed along her tender skin, biting down once or twice his way down her throat.

Harley moaned dropping her feet to the flat of the stair behind Jack's hips putting her in a squatting position. She used the stairs to give herself a firmer, more powerful thrust, dropping her hands to Jack's shoulders and squeezing. She held onto him while using the stairs to thrust herself up and down, rocking her hips forward at the same time.

Jack groaned dropping his hands to her hips looking down to watch the way his shaft disappeared into her body while she thrust and slid along his thighs. Harley groaned, her breath coming in gasps while she jerked her hips forward. Jack wrapped his arms around her, standing up just long enough to flip her around an press her up against the stairs. Harley gasped with a laugh, Jack's face buried against her neck, his teeth and tongue playing against her skin while he thrust hard and fast into her. Harley held on, her hands grabbing handfuls of his hair.

Jack grunted then groaned thrusting upward hard, burying himself deep inside her press her up the stairs. He shifted her while he kneeled on the stair, fucking hard and fast in a series of jerks that had Harley bouncing, the edges of the stairs rolling along her back. She hissed, wrapping her legs tight around him. She grabbed his hair again, attacking Jack's mouth, making him groan, thrusting up hard and deep again which made her orgasm in a loud cry that echoed through the large house. Jack hissed continuing to thrust and groaned against her ear. “You're so wet Harley...uuh...you feel so good..”

Harley groaned softly. “Make me cum again puddin...do it.”

Jack smiled. “Mmm...yes Harls.”

Jack held her close and let himself go, thrusting harder, faster into her, her whole body bouncing. He lowered his head to her breasts, catching a nipple for just a moment. Harley gasped, both of them panting and sweating. Jack's thrusts were hard, deep to the point she didn't think she could take more; it felt so good she couldn't think coherently, but then she arched, crying out, her second orgasm ripping through her in a way that shocked another loud cry from her.

Jack hissed. "Fuck!! Harley!!" Just as he burst inside her.

He couldn't stop moving, he had to thrust into her draining his entire being into the woman he loved.
Jack wrapped his arms tightly around her, holding her against him as if afraid she would vanish.
Harley held tightly to Jack covering his face with kisses. Jack returned her kisses, both of them slowing down, holding each other tightly. Finally Jack stopped moving, rubbing his nose against her ear, then gently along her throat. "Did I hurt your knee?" he asked with a hint of worry in his voice.

Harley chuckled. "I'm fine, I promise puddin."

Jack glanced up the stairs pursing his lips. "Think I can carry you up the stairs like this?"

Harley giggled. "No, don't you dare."

Jack's smile spread across his face, his eyes dancing with mischief. "What did you just say?"

"Jack...no! Don't you do it!" Harley squealed as Jack lifted her up, keeping himself inside her. She yelped and wrapped her limbs tight around his torso as Jack adjusted his grip, his hands grasping her rear. He laughed as he yelled. "HOLD ON!" just before he raced up the stairs with Harley laughing and squealing. "PUDDIN!!"

Back in the small house where Cobb lived, Benjamin Orchard watched the hidden camera with narrowed eyes. He wasn't suppose to be monitoring them...not yet. The Court had expressly forbidden it, but Orchard was focused. He wanted Jack Wayne...not for the Court...but for himself.
He reached over and shut the monitor down breaking the feed before Cobb could catch him at it.
Jealously burned in him, he wanted Jack for himself, but that woman he was with...he would have to figure out a way to dispose of her, but not just yet. He had to think of what he was going to do and how to do it, carefully...

When she was gone, he wanted Jack to be his...to be at the point that her death would mean nothing to him. He just had to figure out how...

*

It was early the next morning. Alfred was up having already put on a pot of coffee. He hadn't been able to sleep last night...not that it had been any different than the last several nights. Alfred thought that maybe part of it was heartbreak. He was heartbroken over what had happened between Jack and Bruce. Even more so because he knew exactly how much each of those young men really cared for one another. He was happy that Jack had Harleen, but Bruce was alone.

Alfred sighed. He had had such hopes when Jack fell in love, that maybe there would be children in the manor...life...love. He smiled as he pulled out some green onions from the fridge. Jack would make a wonderful father. The way he loved Miss Harleen, the two of them could be so happy together. But now this strain between the brothers, Bruce's obsession with his persona Batman...trying to right all the wrongs in Gotham. He just wasn't sure letting Bruce do this had been the best idea. He had thought...Alfred sighed with a slight shake of his head. He didn't know what he had thought...

He reached up pulling down a coffee cup when suddenly felt lightheaded. Alfred frowned, closing his eyes and grabbed hold of the counter. He grimaced and rolled his neck, reaching his fingers to his breastbone and rubbed the tightness that he felt there...

*

Bruce came down the stairs with a slight skip in his step. He had just received a message from Talia asking him to meet her for lunch. He tried not to be excited by the prospect, but he was...maybe after Selina things in his personal life might be looking up.

Bruce made his way into the kitchen. “Alfred? I think I might…”

He came around the corner to find Alfred on the floor, unconscious.
Jack heard the phone ring next to the bed. He muttered and rolled over, snuggling up against Harley's bare backside; the warm softness of his wife against him allowed him to relax. He smiled sleepily and wrapped his arm around her, pulled her tighter against him, enjoying the way her soft rear end fit up against his groin. The little noises she made, wiggling against him made him want to lift her leg and thrust into her always inviting body, burying himself inside her. Just thinking about sex with her made his erection hardened. He growled sleepily and started to reach down between her legs, his fingers seeking her, wanting to make her squirm, when the phone rang again, vibrating across the smooth wooden surface of the bedside table. Jack groaned in irritation and squeezed Harley's hip before he reluctantly rolled over to grab the phone. He didn't bother to see who was calling when he hit the button and snarled.

“This had better be good.”

“Fucking good morning to you too,” Alex's voice came over the line.

Jack flopped back on the pillows with a sigh. “Hey Alex. Everything all right, you take care of our associate?”

“Yeah, Danny's been taken care of— just another missing person in Gotham. Real shame about her though.”

“Yea...I know Batman doesn't kill, at least not according to that man's press, but I guess it's not the same for all of Gotham's vigilantes. Though leaving her there might have put a crimp in the tights of all those flying fucks,” Jack muttered in thought.

Harley rolled over and shifted closer to Jack. She laid her head against his chest and wrapped her arm around his waist. She pressed her lips to his chest, smiling softly as her cheek pressed against him and listened to the beat of his heart.

“So why are you calling at...”Jack pulled the phone away from his ear to look at the time. “Shit Alex it's nearly one in the afternoon! Why are you even up?” Jack chuckled before reaching over one handed for his cigarettes. He pulled one out with his teeth before setting the pack aside and picked up his lighter. He flicked the wheel twice before the flame sprang to life. Harley opened her eyes and glanced up at Jack as he set his lighter aside; she smiled again and closed her eyes, listening to her husband's heartbeat, his breathing, and felt his voice lightly vibrate against her cheek and ear.

“I got a call from one of my sources at the Gotham City Hospital. Jack...” Alex was silent for a moment as if he was searching for the best way to say something before he spoke again.

“Alfred's in the hospital. Looks like he had a heart attack,” Alex said softly. Alex knew how important Alfred was to Jack. Jack had not discussed much of his personal, home life over the years they had known each other, not even the tension in his relationship with his older brother. It had taken a long time before Jack had mentioned Alfred to his one-armed friend. Then, over time Jack had let things slip about growing up and Alfred being his only companion. Alex didn't know the extent of Jack and Alfred's relationship, but he knew it was close; that if Jack had a father, it was Alfred.

Jack sat up in bed knocking Harley askew. “WHAT?”

She sat up blinking back her doziness, frowning at her husband as she pushed her hair out of her “Puddin?”

Jack reached over and put his arm around her shoulders, kissing the top of her head in apology for knocking her off of him. He swallowed and focused back on the phone, his other hand shaking slightly as he brought the cigarette back to his lips. “Did I hear you correctly? Alfred is in the hospital?”

Harley gasped, her hands flying to her mouth.

“Yeah, I got a couple of fucking people on the inside. Anyway one of them told me Alfred Pennyworth, the Wayne family butler, was brought in. He was found unconscious on the fucking floor by Bruce Wayne. My source didn't have more details, just that Pennyworth had a heart attack, but I called you right away.” Alex sounded upset. “I'm sorry man. Right now he's in the coronary care unit and your brother is there with him.”

Jack threw the covers off and stood. Harley watched him walk across the floor naked and throw open the closet. “When do visiting hours end?”

“Usually around eight p.m.,” Alex replied.

Harley stood up quickly, hurried over to Jack, and kissed his shoulder, whispering, “I'm going to run downstairs and make us some coffee.”

Jack smiled faintly at her and nodded, kissed her on the forehead. She smiled, grabbed her robe, and headed out of their bedroom. Jack pulled out some slacks. “I don't want to wait that long,” Jack muttered and inhaled sharply. “Think your friend can get us in unseen by Bruce?”

Alex sighed. “Probably, yeah, but...Bruce isn't leaving his side. How you going to get in to see Alfred without running into your brother?”

Jack smiled. “I'll think of something.”

They arrived at the hospital around six p.m. Jack was dressed in a long black cashmere overcoat, black leather gloves, and had donned a black slim-fitted suit with a grey vest, plum colored shirt, and a black tie underneath the coat. On his feet, he wore black wingtips with plum and green polka-dotted socks, a black fedora tugged low over his brow and a pair of sunglasses (his eyes were lined in black eyeliner behind the glasses). He had even brought along a black and gold walking stick. Harley, her arm tight around Jack's arm, had her hair pulled back from her face, the rest falling down her back in a golden wave, with her own black fedora on her head. She wore a pair of over-sized sunglasses, along with a pair of slim-fitted black tuxedo pants with a matching double-breasted black tuxedo jacket and a blood red blouse underneath. She had chosen a pair of red pointed-toe leather pumps, and a long black overcoat of her own. All eyes turned toward the couple when they stepped into the hospital. Jack grinned while showing off his perfectly straight white teeth against the red of his lipstick adorned lips, which matched the color Harley wore on her own.

“God, I love making an entrance,” he observed softly to Harley. She giggled and leaned into him, gazing up at Jack through her glasses. “You always make an entrance puddin.”

Jack snickered. “Was there a double meaning behind that Harley?”

Harley giggled. She wrapped her arm around his waist as they made their way down the hall, heading toward the elevators. All the eyes of nurses, doctors and visitors watched as the two of them walked to the elevator. Alex had given them the name of his contact, a young nurse named Bobby.
Duncan. Bobby was to meet them on the cardiac floor.

When they arrived on the fifth floor, they both saw a young man with shoulder length brown hair, a very slim build in a pair of light blue nursing scrubs and thick soled white nursing shoes, pacing back and forth in front of the elevator while chewing on one of his nails. When they stepped off the elevator, he turned to look at them. No Harley thought, he whipped around to stare at them.

“Are you Mr. and Mrs. Wayne?” he asked in a rapid, clipped fashion.

Jack smiled. “That’s us my darling boy.”

Bobby nodded and motioned. “Come on this way—I have a place where we can talk.”

Their tiny group moved down the hall taking a left turn and stopped in front of a door marked “Supplies” labeled in black across the front. Bobby opened the door, stuck his head inside. He turned to glance over his shoulder at them with an embarrassed look.

“Sorry, sometimes some of the staff likes to use this closet for, um...meetings.” He blushed. Jack and Harley both chuckled in understanding, but said nothing. After Bobby turned the light on he motioned them both inside. “He's still in there,” Bobby said quickly. “I mean Mr. Wayne...I mean your brother.” The nurse shook his head, as if to clear it and continued. “Alex said Bruce Wayne is your brother, that you're Jack Wayne...aren’t you suppose to be missing or something? Oh God...and you came in here looking like that?!” Bobby went from calm to worried in a heartbeat, the nail of one finger instantly going back between his teeth.

Jack chuckled. “Don’t worry my dear. So a few people saw us. All they saw were two well-dressed people in a hospital. We could be anybody!” Jack reached up to remove his sunglasses. “This is Gotham; that isn’t that unusual. No one is going to know it was us. Besides, I couldn't sneak in to see Alfred and not look my best.” Jack’s voice trailed off a bit, the humor dying on his tongue, taking on a serious tone. For all the smiles and chuckles, it was clear he was upset. “And I won't let my feud with Bruce keep me away from seeing Alfred.”

Harley took off her sunglasses and ran her hand up and down his arm in what she hoped would be a comforting gesture. Jack smiled at her, wrapping his hand around hers where she had settled it against his arm and squeezed softly.

Bobby nodded. “Yeah...yeah you're right, no one would care. Sorry Mr. Wayne, just...I get nervous. I'm not sure how I'm supposed to sneak you two in to see Mr. Pennyworth. Mr. Wayne hasn't left his side all day. And there's another problem—Mr. Wayne has a woman with him.”

Jack smiled, reached over, and patted Bobby on the cheek. “What's there to be nervous about?”

Bobby nodded. “Thanks.”

“So, this woman is with my brother? Do you know who it is?” Jack asked with genuine curiosity.

“No, but he called her Talia,” Bobby answered, glancing at the door as if he expected the Spanish Inquisition to burst through at any moment.

“Who's Talia?” Harley asked trying to keep the irritation out of her voice as she pulled her hat off and held the brim a little tighter than necessary. She tried not to be jealous at the smile on Jack’s face and his tone, but failed miserably as jealousy spiked in her chest hard and fast.
Jack laughed, leaned over to kiss her on the cheek as if he sensed she was slightly jealous. “Talia was a girlfriend of Bruce's from college. They were crazy in love. Never saw Bruce act the way he did with Talia any time before or since. Even brought her home a couple of times. She spent the summer at the manor once or twice, and a couple of holidays.” Jack smiled fondly at the memory.

“I have to say, I was surprised they didn't get engaged.” Jack frowned in thought as he continued. “Her father, Ra's al Ghul, runs all kinds of various biotech companies around the world. I think he's nearly as rich as the Wayne family, if not richer. Anyway, Bruce and Talia were inseparable during college. They met their freshmen year and stayed a couple until their last year in college, when Talia had to go home to help run her family business with her father.” Jack paused tapping his chin with his forefinger in thought. “I don't know all the gory details,” Jack explained softly. “Alfred had mentioned that Bruce had bought her a ring. Anyway, by then Bruce and I rarely talked and Bruce isn't one to open up about his private life or his feelings, as you know by now, my love.”

Jack frowned in thought. “He's always been aloof, but it was clear that he was pretty devastated. I do remember that for several months after he graduated, instead of coming home, he traveled. Like he was running away from something.” Jack glanced at Harley. “Talia and I had a pretty good relationship though.” Jack smiled. “She was like the big sister I never had. She actually taught me how to use a sword and a lot of hand-to-hand fighting. She used to tell me that there was nothing wrong with me, that I just saw the world differently. That I was destined to be as special as Bruce.” Jack chuckled softly. “I actually believed her.”

(Harley sighed mentally in relief. She couldn't help the jealousy that flared at the tone of voice Jack had used in discussing the other woman.)

Harley turned Jack's face to hers and pressed her lips to his. Jack smiled, reaching around to cup the back of her head and returned her kiss. Harley pulled away and whispered. “I like her already. She was right—you are special, all of Gotham is going to see that.”

Jack chuckled at her assessment. “Mm...my pumpkin, always in my corner.”

“Always puddin,” Harley purred.

Bobby cleared his throat nervously. “So, ah...do you have an idea how I can get Mr. Wayne out of the room?”

Jack grinned. “Go and tell Talia that there is a message for her at the desk. Tell her it's from her младший брат.”

Bobby blinked. “What?”

Jack grinned. “Go and tell Talia that there is a message for her at the desk. Tell her it's from her младший брат.”

Bobby blinked. “What?”

Jack sighed. “Fine, let me write it down.”

Jack pulled a pen out from the inside of his suit coat and looked around the supply closet. He grabbed a roll of paper towels, ripped it open to pull off a sheet and write down the Russian word he had just spoken. “Just give her this, all right?” Jack handed Bobby the towel. Bobby looked down at it and nodded. “Yes sir, Mr. Wayne.”

The three of them stepped outside of the closet. Bobby turned. “Just wait right here and I'll get her Mr. Wayne okay?”

Jack sighed. “Fine, but don't call me Mr. Wayne—that's my brother, just call me Jack.”

“Yes, ah...Jack.” Bobby smiled and hurried off.
Harley frowned. “What was that you said?”

Jack smiled. “Talia use to call me her младший брат; it mean's “little brother” in Russian. I hope she knows it's from me.”

Harley, her arms wrapped around his and squeezed tightly. “I'm sure Alfred is all right, Jack. He's tough.”

Jack nodded his agreement. “You're right. I just...I never thought about anything every happening to Alfred. He...he has always been the one constant, steady presence in my life. Even when things were bad, Alfred has always been there Harls. He...he loved me even at my worst.” His voice lowered. Harley could see the pain and worry in his expression.

Harley turned Jack to face her, wrapped her arms around his neck. She stood on the tips of her toes, her eyes locked onto his with confidence. “He's going to be all right puddin. I just know it.” She smiled softly at him, then leaned in to brush her lips against his in a sweet kiss.

Jack smiled softly, returning her kiss. He held her tightly against him, and then pressed his lips to her hair. “Thank you Harls.”

She smiled leaning against him. “I love you puddin.”

Jack brushed his lips across her hair again. “I love you too.”

Bobby hurried down corridor to Mr. Pennyworth's room, the piece of paper towel shoved in the pocket of his scrubs and his heart pounding inside his chest. He took a deep, steadying breath when he arrived at the room before he gave a quick rap on the door with his knuckles, then pushed it open to step inside.

Mr. Pennyworth was in the bed, hooked up to heart monitors and with a nasal cannula on providing a steady flow of fresh oxygen. The older man looked frail and pale, but he was definitely looking better than when Bobby had first come on duty. Sitting in a chair beside him was Bruce Wayne in an expensive black suit, and standing behind Mr. Wayne was the woman Jack Wayne had sent him to get, Talia al Ghul. She was a beautiful woman; tall and slim, but with the build of an athlete, long, straight brown hair, and facial features were conducive to Bobby's assessment that she was 'exotic.' She wore a dark gold double-breasted blazer over a black mock-neck bow-detail jumpsuit with a pair of Jimmy Choo Shar suede sling-back pumps, and a black Prada impunture cahir small quilted handbag hanging from her arm, the very essence of elegance. Bobby was sure if he got close enough, she smelled good and expensive, just like Jack Wayne's wife did.

Bobby took another breath. Rich people made him nervous, famous rich people made him even more nervous, as everyone in the room turned to look right at him. He swallowed then cleared his throat. “Ah, there's a phone call for a Miss Talia al Ghul.” He smiled slightly.

Talia frowned reaching down to open her purse and pull out her cellphone. “That's odd.”

Bruce smiled. “Maybe they were having trouble with cell reception?”

“Maybe. I'll be right back.” She leaned over and kissed Bruce on the cheek and smiled at Mr. Pennyworth who returned her smiled before she followed Bobby out the door. When they were a few steps away from the door that had just swung shut, Bobby stopped and turned to her. “Miss al Ghul, I was told to give you this.” He handed the paper towel to her. Talia's nose wrinkled in disgust as she unfolded the paper and stared down at the Russian written there.
Talia frowned for a moment as she stared down at the paper, then she looked up at Bobby. “Jack? Is Jack Wayne here?” She spoke in a shocked whisper.

Bobby nodded putting his finger to his lips and motioned for her to follow him.

*

When Talia came around the corner with Bobby and saw Jack, her heart leapt in her chest. She dashed over and threw her arms around the youngest Wayne brother. “JACK!”

Jack laughed and returned the hug. “It's been forever Talia!”

Talia hugged him tight surprising everyone when she lifted Jack off his feet and swung him around even though she was a good head shorter than him. Harley pressed her lips together to stop herself from laughing out loud to see her husband being picked up by the shorter woman.

“Jack Wayne!! What...” Talia set him down, reaching up to grab Jack by the face and stare hard at him. “Are you all right?” She let go of his face, laying her hands on his chest. “I don't understand...Bruce said...well he told me a little about what had happened, the asylum and that...that you were missing. It was all so horrible, but...but you're here...and...” Her eyes finally took in Harley standing a little to the side. Talia smiled at the other woman. “And who is this?”

Jack laughed after Talia put him down, placed his hands over hers and squeezed before he let go. “It's really nice to see you again Talia.” He turned to put his arm out to Harley, who stepped forward taking Jack's hand as he pulled her up beside him and wrapped his arm around her waist. “Well Talia, this is my wife, Harley—Harley Quinn, this is Talia.

Talia's eyes lit up. “Wife? You...you're married? Bruce never said...”

Jack's smile lit up his face. “I am! And Bruce...well...never mind, that's a story for another day. But yes, Harley and I are married.”

Talia stepped over to Harley and looked her up and down before she reached forward quickly, grabbing Harley by her shoulders and pulling her in for a tight hug. “It's so nice to meet you.” She stepped back, her hands still on Harley's shoulders. “You are simply divine! So beautiful!” Harley blushed with a murmured, “Thank you.”

Talia slid her hands down Harley's arms and held her hands for a moment as she turned her head to Jack. “I have to say, I'm surprised Jack...” Talia released Harley's hands. “I didn't really think you were interested in...well,” she chuckled softly. “Anyone at all.”

Jack grinned pulling Harley back to him. “I wasn't, until Bruce hired her as my private shrink. It was love at first sight.”

Talia frowned, puzzled. “Shrink?”

“It's a long story Talia.” Jack smirked. “I don't suppose Bruce has told you everything that's happened over the last year, has he?”

Talia shook her head. “No. He told me about a party where you attacked a guest and committed you to Arkham. He seemed very upset to be discussing it.”

Jack muttered with a curl of his lip. “I'm surprised.”

Jack snorted. “Not surprising since Bruce hasn't approved of our relationship from the beginning.”

Talia frowned. “He claimed you were missing. I was struck by the fact that Bruce didn't seem more bothered by it.”

“Bruce knows I'm not missing, he just doesn't want Gotham to know that his crazy brother is loose. We had a falling out Talia—a bad one. One that I don't think will be fixed anytime soon,” Jack said sadly with a little flare of his nostrils. “I'm not ready to see him, not sure when or if I ever will be. Which is why I need your help. We're here to see Alfred, but I don't want to see Bruce. I don't want him knowing we're here. Could you...maybe get him out of the way for us?” Jack smiled at her.

Talia was brimming with questions, but instead she hugged Jack again quickly. “Of course.” She turned and motioned. “Come on, just give me a couple of minutes.”

They followed Talia to the corridor where Alfred's room was located. Bobby found them an empty room nearby where Jack and Harley could wait until they could go see Alfred.

Talia frowned. “I'm not sure how long I can keep him out, but I'll do my best. You think your friend here can play look out?” She glanced at Bobby.

Bobby nodded. “Yeah, yeah, it's fine.”

Talia smiled. “All right, be ready.”

* * *

They watched her disappear into Alfred's room. They leaned close to the door of the room they were hiding in, spying through the crack in the door to watch for when Talia and Bruce left the room.

“She seems nice,” Harley whispered.

Jack smiled. “She is. She's also smart and probably one of the most dangerous women around next to you. Don't understand what she sees in my brother though.” Jack chuckled. Harley elbowed him in the side, which only made Jack giggle more. She was about to make a reply when they both saw Talia and Bruce step out of Alfred's hospital room. Talia had her arm around Bruce's. Even from where they were hidden, Jack could see how pale and tired Bruce looked. For a moment his heart went out to his brother. It must have been hard to find Alfred like he did...But Jack also remembered what his brother had done, how Bruce had hurt Harley.

As soon as Talia and Bruce were out of sight, Jack and Harley raced across the corridor to Alfred's room and slipped inside.

The room was one of the nicest hospital rooms that Harley had ever seen. The walls were painted a soft baby blue and there was a large picture window that looked out onto the Gotham skyline. The room also had a couch and a table with a couple of chairs. In the middle was a hospital bed where Alfred lay, hooked up to monitors and oxygen. When Jack and Harley came into the room, Jack slowly took off his hat, leaning on his cane, staring at Alfred.

Alfred, who had been looking out the window rolled his head back with a smile. “Master Bruce, I must really insist that...” His voice trailed off when he saw Jack and Harley, his eyes going wide with shock.

“Jack? Harleen?” Alfred had left off the Master and Miss from their names in shock at seeing them.
both. His voice was weak, but his eyes lit up when he saw them. “Is that really you two?”

Jack smiled, then a little shyly waved with his hat. “Hey Alfred.”

Harley smiled too, tears immediately pricking at the corners of her eyes. “Oh Alfred.”

They both hurried over when Alfred put his hands out to them.

“It’s so wonderful to see you both!” the old man said softly. “I’ve been so worried about the two of you.”

Harley went to one side of the bed taking his hand, while Jack leaned his cane against the side of the bed and took Alfred’s other hand. Jack and Harley both sat on the edge of the hospital bed framing the older man. Alfred smiled brightly, blinking back tears as he squeezed their hands weakly. “Oh Master Jack, Miss Harleen, it is so nice to see you both! You both look so well.”

Jack leaned forward and wrapped his arms as best he could around Alfred while being careful of the oxygen tubes and other bits and pieces of equipment taped to Alfred. Jack pressed his cheek to Alfred's and whispered. “I’m so happy to see you Alfie.”

Alfred returned Jack’s embrace with one arm, while pulling Harley against him with the other. He started crying silently, tears rolling down his cheeks. “Please forgive an old man for being sentimental, but I didn’t think I would see you both again...I just...”

Jack sat up, but not before giving Alfred a kiss on the cheek, his red lips leaving a kiss mark on the older man's pale skin.

“What do you think you're doing trying to scare us, eh?” Jack laughed softly though he wiped at his eyes with one gloved hand, smearing his eyeliner just a little. “Like I wasn’t going to come see you!” He smiled affectionately at Alfred. “You know, I'm sure if you asked Bruce would have given you some time off. Didn't have to try and have a heart attack you know.” Jack smiled brightly at Alfred. “Being a little dramatic.”

The older man smiled at Jack lovingly. “Well, I do miss my time on the stage Master Jack, and you know how I am; I don't like to take time off without a good reason.”

They both laughed.

Harley was still holding Alfred's hand as she smile softly. “You had us both worried.”

Alfred smiled. “The doctor says it was mild, that I was 'lucky.'”

Harley frowned. “I don't care if it was 'mild,” it was a heart attack Alfred.” She swallowed, tears started to run down her cheeks again. She wiped at them and smiled through them at the same time. Alfred removed his hand from hers to reached up and wipe away her tears as well.

“Please don't cry Miss Harleen,” he said softly. “I don't wish to be the cause of tears.”

She laughed softly and smiled at him.

Jack took Alfred’s hand between his own. He looked down rubbing his thumb across the older man’s knuckles, and said softly. “I'm sorry Alfred, this is all my fault.”

“Your fault Master Jack? Now how on earth is this your fault?” Alfred looked perplexed. “I'm simply not a young man anymore Master Jack. These things can happen at my age.”
“Just...all the stress. I...I feel responsible,” Jack confessed softly. “I never wanted to hurt you Alfred.”

Alfred smiled softly. “Oh Master Jack, it is not your fault.”

Jack frowned then, staring down at Alfred's hand cradled between his own. “I...I am sorry about what happened between me and Bruce...”

“I know Master Jack. Your brother is sorry too. Maybe if you spoke with him?” Alfred asked gently.

Jack shook his head. “Did he tell you what happened when he found us? About breaking Harley's nose or almost choking me? Or did he tell you anything about what happened to Harley and me at the asylum? You saw what it was like...I just...” Jack shook his head. He didn't want to put more on Alfred right now, but he felt that the old butler needed to know. “I just don't think there is any repairing what's happened Alfred.”

Alfred nodded. “I just wish there had been more I could have done Master Jack—for you and Miss Harleen.”

Then he looked between the couple sadly. “Master Bruce cares for you, for you both. He just isn't good...”

Jack squeezed Alfred's hand. “I don't want to talk about Bruce or about what happened.” Jack smiled. “I just wanted to tell you that Harley and I are married, officially and all.” Jack grinned and Alfred's expression brightened. “Really Master Jack?”

“Yup, really.” Jack smiled. “She is officially a Wayne now.” Jack winked at Harley.

Alfred smiled. “Oh, that is wonderful news.” Alfred brought Harley's hand up and kissed her knuckles. “Congratulations Miss...I mean, Mrs. Wayne,” Alfred said with a smile.

Harley giggled. “Oh thank you, Alfred.”

Alfred looked between them with concern then. “Where are you staying? Are you being fed all right? Are you safe?”

Jack laughed. “You need to stop worrying about us and focusing on getting yourself better, old man.”

Alfred started to say something when Bobby stuck his head in the door. “They're coming back! And they're moving fast!”

Jack sighed. “I wish we could stay longer.”

Alfred frowned. “Are you sure you won't reconsider speaking with your brother?”

Jack stood up, reaching for his cane. He glanced toward Harley as she leaned over to plant a kiss on Alfred's cheek and reached up to push back his thinning hair with a loving smile. Her kiss left a perfect lipstick mark on the old man's cheek to match the one Jack had left on the other cheek, before she hurried around to take Jack's hand.

“I don't think that's a good idea Alfred...not for a long while. As They Might be Giants said, “No one in the world gets what they want, and that is beautiful.”” Jack grinned. “You get better all right, promise me?” Jack smiled lovingly at the butler. “I'm really sorry Alfred, maybe someday.” Jack shrugged helplessly then he grinned brightly. “Remember Alfred, whatever doesn't kill you simply makes you stranger.” Jack giggled and winked at Alfred.
Alfred smiled in return, his eyes sad. “Yes Master Jack. I hope I will see you both again soon. The manor has become rather quiet without the two of you. I do so miss our little get-togethers in the kitchen.”

Jack swallowed his pain and smiled while Harley wiped away a few more tears. Jack's voice was heavy with sadness. “Me too Alfie, me too.”

Jack and Harley smiled at him, Harley blew a kiss to Alfred before they hurried to the door. Bobby held the door open motioning for them to go. They hurried through heading down the corridor toward the elevators. When they were perhaps halfway between Alfred's room and the elevator, they heard the sound of footsteps and voices. Jack turned, placed his fedora on his head, and looked over his shoulder just as Bruce glanced in their direction. He stumbled in his stride when he saw Jack.

“Jack?!” Bruce called out.

Jack grabbed Harley's hand with a grin. “Come on sweets!”

They both took off at a run. They could hear Bruce giving chase. “JACK! WAIT!!”

Talia was right behind Bruce. “Bruce, stop! Let them go!”

Jack slid across the slick hospital floor just as they arrived at the elevator holding Harley's hand in his (She slid across the floor, as well though not nearly as gracefully as Jack had—she blamed her heels.) Jack reached up to hold his hat on with the hand that held the cane. He pushed the button on the elevator and was rewarded when the doors opened instantly. He hopped in yanking Harley with him and slapped a button on the inside. Bruce raced towards them, yelling, “JACK PLEASE!”

Jack grinned at his brother and flipped him the middle finger just as the elevator doors closed on him and Harley.

*

The following evening Alex, Alice, Dale, Frost and Sandra were over Catherine House for dinner, a few drinks and games. Jack had been overjoyed to find a pool table in the mansion's game room. Dinner had been Alex and Alice bringing over some pizza, Dale and Sandra picking up some cupcakes for dessert and Jack and Harley providing the alcohol. The soft sounds of Kim Waters “Love Like This” played in the background.

The core group of the Red Hood gang were together to discuss their next move. Frost threw a dart before picking up his beer. “Hey, ah...when do you think your aunt might come back to Gotham?”

Jack looked up from studying his shot. “No idea.” He grinned. “Ah, do you miss her?”

Frost blushed. “She's an interesting woman,” he said simply.

Harley giggled and Jack sighed. “Oh Frosty, she is going to break your heart.”

Frost grinned. “I know, but it's going to be a fun ride.”

Jack groaned. “AH!! Things I don't want to know!! My aunt's sex life with my henchman!”

Frost laughed taking a sip of his beer then he smiled. “But seriously, when's she coming back?”

Alex took a sip of his bottle of Blue Moon beer, watching Jack and Harley play pool while Dale, Sandra and Alice threw darts.
“Well LexCorp got back to me. They're really interested in those prototypes you stole—uh, acquired. They're already offering me big bucks for them, just like they hinted at before the job.” Alex grinned.

Alex said nothing, watching the little scene unfold between Jack and Harley as she leaned forward, threatening to come out of her dress while Jack glanced between his shot and her breasts. Alex had never met anyone so in love that they continued to lust after each other the way Jack lusted after Harley and vice versa. Harley smiled bat[...]

Harley was watching Jack with steamy eyes. She licked her lips gazing at Jack while she reached over and picked up her drink, a white Russian, then took a sip before she set it down and licked her lips again. She then reached up under her dress, pulling her short dress up just enough to grab her red lace panties and slip them down her legs.

Jack blinked, staring while Alex yelled. “Hey, there are fucking children here!”

Alice laughed. “Oh my god, you're right! This is a porno!”

Harley giggled tossing her panties at Jack just as he hit the ball completely messing up his shot. He grinned, picked them up, holding them to his nose and mouth, waggling his eyebrows at Harley before slipping them into the pocket of his slacks. “Totally worth missing the shot,” Jack purred.

Harley giggled picking up her cue stick and walking around the table in front of Jack. She leaned over, the dress riding up. (Alex thought it was lucky that Harley was actually facing everyone in the room except Jack...a jealous Jack was very dangerous thing.)

She shifted her hips, Jack's full attention on her backside. Then she took her shot. It was a decent shot, though Jack wasn't paying any attention. He had one hand on her backside, running his hand down the back of her thigh then up again.

Alex snickered to Alice. “Better bring them back to business or they'll start fucking doing it on the pool table in front of everyone.”
She snickered. “I can guess what's gonna happen when we leave.”

Alex chuckled in agreement, then spoke up loudly.

“So Jack—our next job. I was thinking we need to do something a bit more...instantly lucrative. Like a fucking bank job or something. Haskins is getting antsy, which mean Duela is getting antsy. We need something to pay them with and who doesn't like a good bank robbery?”

Jack brought his attention back to Alex, though he found that it was incredibly difficult with Harley's dress inching up; the thought of dropping to his knees and burying his face between her...he shook himself to focus his attention on the present and the fact that they had company.

“All right...a bank job. What did you have in mind? I thought all bank robbery was done through computers now. I mean Trope could probably do a job by herself.” Jack leaned on his cue stick, his eyes wandering toward the ceiling in thought, but then in the next instant his eyes lit up. “Oh...I know what we could rob!”

Dale had stopped throwing darts and stepped over to where he had set his beer on the counter top of the room's bar (it was a little bar area with a couple of stools, a raised counter and several bottles of expensive alcohol lining four shelves along the back wall.) He hopped up on a stool before he pulled Sandra onto his lap. “Like what?” he asked.

“We should definitely have Trope rob a bank for us...you...” He pointed at Alex. “You can have Trope set that up, she can just do it with her handy computer. No, we are going to do your classic smash and grap.” Jack grinned wide with delight rubbing his hands together.

Alex sat up straighter. “A fucking smash and grab?”

Jack nodded while Harley walked around and wrapped her arms around his waist from behind and set her chin on his shoulder. “Yup, we can hit one of Gotham's premiere jewelry stores, Brixman Family Jewelers located in the diamond district.”

Alex grinned. “Wow, be just like in the fucking movies.”

Frost frowned from where he leaned against the wall. “So what are you proposing, Boss?” It was part of Frost's task to look at any job they had planned with the eye of a cop and point out weaknesses and strengths in their plans.

Jack smiled. “It's simple really. We use one of the cars to smash straight through the front doors. Four or five of us enter, smash the cases and take as much as we can in under a minute, then we're out.”

Dale rubbed his chin. “You think it'll work?”

Jack nodded. “You ever hear of the biggest jewelry thief ever?” He looked around at everyone then looked offended with a little shake of his head. “I...I just can't call you guys criminals.”

Sandra chuckled. “We are all new to this.”

Jack smiled. “True, true,” he allowed. “Anyway, the biggest thief of jewels was done by one man in 2013. There was a jewelry exhibit at the Carlton International Hotel in Cannes, France. He stole white, pink and yellow diamonds along with some emeralds and rubies, after slipping past three guards. He stole 136 million dollars in under a minute, and he was never caught. There are twelve of us...granted we aren't going to take twelve, but the point is, if one man can do that, why can't we smash through the doors of Brixman and steal of few hundred thousand dollars worth of jewels in a minute? Talk about putting us on the tongues of Gotham.” Jack smiled brightly. “Besides boys and girls, I know all about the Brixman, been there several times. I can tell you exactly the right cases to hit. But just to be sure, Harley and I can do a reconnaissance! See what they have and report back.”

Alex smiled. “I think that sounds good, actually.” He glanced at Alice who grinned. “Jewel thieves! Who'd have thunk!”

Frost raise his bottle of beer. “To the Boss!”

Everyone followed. “To the Boss!”

Jack giggled. “Oh this is going to be grand.”

Harley came around unwilling to release her grip on him and forcing Jack to raise his arms as she circled around. “You are brilliant puddin.”

Jack smiled brightly. “Why thank you, Harley.”

He pulled her close and kissed her. He looked up, smiling at everyone else. “Harley and I will check out the jewelry store tomorrow and we can meet up tomorrow night for the heist.”

Alex nodded as he finished off his drink. “We can meet up by the old clocktower. I'll let the rest of our ragtag gang know.”

Jack nodded and asserted, “I want to keep this small. We can do more with a smaller group actually breaking in than all of us, but I think several getaway cars might be a good idea...split us up just in case, then all meet up again later. I don't want any of the new kids alone with the jewels either. Make sure our disgruntled employee Haskins is there and I'm assuming Duela resurfaced after the other night?”

Frost took a sip of his beer then nodded. “Yeah, she called, said she was sorry.”

Jack shrugged. “Whatever. I really think we might want to consider a better class of henchmen...but until...Mmm...We'll leave Trope out of this one, she has other things to do.” Jack looked at the information broker. “Alex, you might want to sit this one out too...no offense, but you can only grab half the stuff.”

Alex snorted on a laugh. “You're a fuck head Jack. How about Alice and I be in one of the getaway cars?”

Jack grinned. “That sounds good. All right, so it will be me, Harley, Frost, Haskins, Duela and Jason breaking into the store. Getaway cars are Alice and Alex, Dale and Sandra and let's have Rolf standing by with one as well. Sound good?”

Alex nodded, but a frown crossed his features. There was something about the way that Jack said Haskins' name that made him wonder if old Haskins was going to make it out of the heist alive. It probably wouldn't take much at this point for Jack to put a bullet—or a knife—in Haskins and be done with him.

Later that evening after their visitors had gone home, Harley was walking around the room picking up beer bottles while Jack picked up the glasses and cleaned up the food. He smiled watching her while she bent over, the dress sliding up just enough that he couldn't quite see under it, which was a damn shame he thought as he picked up a pizza box. Music continued to play while they picked up, Dua Lipa’s “Scared to be Lonely”.
His eyes traveled down the back of her legs to the red heels she wore, every inch the sex kitten he thought. Harley stopped at the bar picking up one of the beer bottles which was still half full and took a long swig of it. Jack watched her, his eyes roaming over her figure. Harley turned to smile at him. “Jewel thieves,” she said with a quick lift of her eyebrows and widened her eyes. “Sounds fun puddin.”

Jack chuckled. “And lucrative. We don't really need the money since I moved all my assets well before Bruce threw me in Arkham...but it will be lots of fun.” Harley finished off the beer, set the bottle down and turned to lean against the bar with her elbows, stretching out her legs, crossing them at the ankles as she smiled at him. Jack's eyes roamed over her, the way the dress tugged in just the right places, the way her cleavage was almost spilling out of the front of the dress.

“You know, we haven't finished our game,” Jack said as he walked over to where the trash bag they had brought into the room lay, picked it up and shoved their trash into it. Harley smiled walking over holding several beer bottles by their necks with her fingers. “No, I guess we didn't,” she said with a coy smile. Jack reached into his pocket and pulled out her panties holding them under his nose smiling at her. Harley giggled. “It was your turn, wasn't it?” Jack grinned. “It was.”

He walked over to the pool table and picked up the cue stick, he gracefully flipped the stick around before he hooked her panties over the stick while he watched Harley walk toward him, her hips moving in a smooth, enticing manner as the fabric of the dress clung to her, the heels of her shoes clicking on the hard wood floor of the game room. She stared at him with a hungry look, her hands caressing her hips and thighs as she moved toward him. He caught his bottom lip between his teeth watching her, groaning softly with a whispered. “Damn Harley.”

She grinned. “Puddin.”

Jack purred. “Come to Daddy.”

(In the background, the music had changed to 30 Seconds to Mars “Dangerous Night.”)

Harley giggled walking to him, her steps in time to the music. She reached out and took the cue stick from him. “Maybe I should go...hmm?” She lifted brow at him as she turned around on the toe of her shoe and bent over the table, her back to him and the cue stick held in her hands. The red panties slid down the stick. Jack grinned and stepped up behind her. He ran his fingertips up the back of her thighs then he pushed the dress up and over her backside.

Jack growled. “Mm..now that's beautiful.”

He rubbed his hands up and down her backside as Harley arched her back into his touch. “Mmm...puddin.”

Jack pressed against her, rubbed against her, swaying a little against her to the rhythm of the music which caused Harley to moan softly; the soft fabric of his slacks tickled deliciously against her backside. Jack grinned teasing them both with his rubbing until he dropped down to his knees. He spread her legs wide, running his hands up her shapely legs and leaned in to run his tongue up her, completely covering every inch of her with his tongue. Harley dropped the pool cue against the table and moaned.

“Oh Jack!” She arched her back and tilted her head upwards toward the ceiling while Jack's tongue licked every sensitive spot he could reach, his hands cupping her rear and squeezing as he buried his face and tongue against her.

Jack leaned away just long enough to slide two fingers into her, licking his lips while he slid his fingers in and out of his wife, smiling at every little sound she made. He bit down on the soft plum flesh of her rear end and started to suck, intent to mark her skin, to see his mark on her smooth flesh; his girl, his wife. Jack slid his fingers in and only stopped to roll the pad of his thumb against her rectum in a slow, gentle circle before resuming the teasingly slow thrusting of his fingers.

Harley dug her fingers into the pool table as she arched her back further, her heels lifting up so that she balanced on her toes as Jack moved from sucking on her backside to letting his tongue do a slow circling tease around her rectum. He licked her, taking his time to enjoy her little shivers of pleasure before removing his fingers to be replaced by his tongue. He placed both hands on her ass, spreading her while his tongue probed in an extensive exploration. Harley groaned loudly, arching into his oral attentions. “Uhh...puddin...”

She shuddered when Jack stood up, removing his fingers which was followed by the sound of his slacks being unzipped. She hissed with excitement when she felt the soft velvet skin of his erection, sliding up and down spreading her fluids against her.

Jack groaned. “Mm...god you're beautiful Harley.”

Harley giggled, glancing over her shoulder at Jack, the sleeve of her dress sliding off her shoulder as she wiggled her rear at him. “Want me puddin?”

Jack chuckled. “Always my sweets.”

With that he slid into her. He didn't thrust hard, but took his time, gradually pressing himself deep inside her.

Harley moaned long and deep, the side of the pool table pressing into her hip bones when Jack pressed her up against the table. He reached forward to caress her hair as he slid in and out slowly, then thrust hard just to watch her backside bounce. He grabbed her hips, digging is fingers into her, thrusting hard and fast, then slow and deep.

He pulled completely out, surprising Harley as he grabbed her and turned her around, lifted her up, and set her on the edge of the pool table. “I want to see your face,” Jack explained in a heavy whisper, rubbing his nose against hers. “I want to watch you cum Harley.”

(The song had moved on to something else, Madonna's “I Want You.”)

Jack caught her bottom lip with his teeth, tugging gently before he kissed her. He kept his hands wrapped around her waist, balancing her on the edge of the pool table before he pulled back. He grabbed her dress, pulling the fabric down off her breasts then tugged her bra down so that he could have access to her naked breasts. He held her with one hand, bending down to run the flat of his tongue over her nipples, sucking one into his mouth then the other, the cooling dampness on her hard nipples when he switched breasts sent pleasant shivers down her spine. Harley put her hands on the pool table behind her, holding herself up while Jack attacked her breasts, his mouth moving over each one hungrily, sucking and biting at her hard nipples, holding one with his lips to use the tip of his tongue, flicking over the surface of the sensitive skin before doing the same to the other.

Harley groaned his name, then gasped as he twirled his tongue around one nipple with more vigor. “Ah...puddin...oh my Jack.”

He stopped and Harley thought he was going to take her, but instead he dropped to a crouch pressing her legs up and wide, kissing the inside of each of her thighs before he began sucking and licking her clitoris with slow and deliciously deliberate strokes on his tongue. Harley moaned as she laid back against the table, reaching down between her legs to grab his hair, the heels of her shoes against his shoulders.

Jack moved his mouth over her in slow licks, sucks and kisses, burying his face against her and wanting to taste every inch of her when she came. He flicked his tongue over her clitoris, then slid two of his fingers into her again, keeping his movements deliberately slow and tantalizing. He grinned wide, his eyes dancing with her fluids covering his fingers and face.

Harley tossed her head back and forth, the shivering primal pleasure of his mouth bringing her closer to climax, until finally she screamed, her feet pointing which dug her heels into his shoulders as she gasped out. “JACK! Uhh!” Her hips rose up off the table for a moment as the orgasm rippled through her entire body, making every nerve ending scream in ecstasy.

Jack smiled wider still. Harley could feel it against her sex when he pressed a kiss to her sex. He kissed the soft skin along the inside of her thighs, pressing her legs against his cheeks, biting gently as he stood up, bringing her closer to the edge of the table and slid into her again, moving to drop her legs over his shoulders. He dragged her over the edge of the table wrapping his arms around her thighs and thrust hard and fast. Harley threw her arms over her head with a cry. “Oh puddin!”

Jack smiled, his eyes never leaving her, watching the way her mouth was open slightly, her breasts bouncing with each of his thrusts. Jack pulled one of her legs to his cheek and kissed her knee before lightly biting her. He reached down to rub her clitoris with his thumb at the same time thrusting into her, burying himself in his wife with all the passionate, mad love he felt for her. He growled with the effort. It was as if he just couldn't get deep enough. She was so wet, so slick, her muscles tightening around him in the most erotic way that Jack was almost breathless.

Harley tightened her muscles around him, trying to focus her will while at the same time enjoying the hard pounding he was giving her. She grinned up at him, her blue eyes taking on a glowing shimmer as she groaned. “I love you Jack...uh...I love you.” She reached up and dragged her fingers down his stomach.

Jack dropped her legs and reached down to pull her up into a sitting position. Harley wrapped her arms tight around his neck and her legs around his body at the moment that Jack covered her mouth with an intense kiss, stopping only long enough to whisper heatedly, “I love you Harls. I love you...uuh...” He dug his fingers into the flesh of her hips, holding her steady while pounding into her with a few hard thrusts accompanied by grunts of pleasure before he came. Jack came hard, thrusting uncontrollably until he thought his knees would give out.

Harley gasped, tightening her hold on him, his thrusting abandon, the smart smack of flesh on flesh, plus the new position set her rolling down the path of another orgasm. Harley cried out burying her face against his neck, sinking her teeth into him when she came; for a moment she was sure she was going to just pass out. He held her against him reaching up to stroke her hair while continuing to kiss her until they were both giggling. Jack brushed his nose against hers while scooting her a little more firmly onto the pool table.

“Who do you think won?” Jack asked playfully.

“Oh, I won. I always win.” Harley grinned with a touch of mischief in her eyes.

Jack caught her lips with a hissed. “I can live with that.”

Ben narrowed his eyes at the screen, jealousy raging through him. He balled his hands into fists as he watched them, holding each other, the way Jack kissed her just now. It just made him savagely angry that that...woman had Jack's attention. Of course, Jack Wayne hadn't met the real him yet, but Benjamin was sure he could seduce him away from that witch if only given the chance.

He had watched their entire party, though he had no idea what was going on having kept the volume off so that Cobb wouldn't catch him in the observation room. He could have taken the time to read their lips, but he wasn't really interested in what was going on; he had only wanted to watch Jack, the way he moved, held himself...he was simply divine.

Ben frowned, a slight snarl on his lips watching Jack and that blonde fuck like animals. He had never seen two people go at it like the two of them. This only made Ben realize that he needed to start his seduction sooner before he couldn't get that woman's claws out of him! Benjamin simply couldn't think straight until he had Jack all to himself.

Maybe tomorrow when they left the house—assuming they did—he would follow them. Maybe the fates would put something in his path that would help him get rid of that woman. Ben smiled to himself, he had to get rid of her and soon. He couldn't stand to keep watching her fucking him when Jack Wayne should be his...Ben closed his eyes, his jealousy burning him up inside. He had to have him NOW.

Ben took a deep breath. Yes. Tomorrow. If he did this just right, the Court would never know he broke orders until he brought Jack into them, after Jack was all his, that was...He grinned. Ben would get his cake and eat it too!

Ben flipped off the cameras, now smiling. He hadn't wanted anyone as much as he wanted Jack since Felix and that hadn't ended well, especially after Felix tried to leave him. Ben didn't take rejection well, but Jack would be different. Ben was positive he had finally found a soulmate...just had to murder that person that was keeping Ben from his happiness.

Harleen Quinzel.

That afternoon Jack and Harley set out for the jewelry store. Harley was dressed in a pair of blue denim “boyfriend” jeans, a cream colored cable-knit dolman-sleeve cashmere sweater, a pair of fanny-leather fur trim combat boots, a leather jacket with a fur collar, her large round sunglasses, her blonde hair braided and twisted onto the top of her head and mostly hidden underneath a black faux fur aviator hat. Jack, with can in hand, was dressed in a pair of slim fit grey jeans, a black cashmere ribbed turtleneck, a pair of black saffiano leather double-monk shoes with a pair of bright purple socks, a leather bomber jacket, a black cashmere knit beanie and sunglasses.

They both had their makeup on, lips done in a matching shade of iconic red. Harley's hand was in Jack's as she walked down the street in the diamond district of Gotham, smiling ear to ear. It felt wonderful to be out with her puddin and she could tell Jack felt the same way. He walked beside her with a spring in his step. The weather was chilly, a frost in the air, but there was no snow or rain yet. The skies were a steely metal grey, threatening to either snow, rain or both, pouring down more winter misery on Gotham, which was why Harley was carrying a bright red umbrella over her arm. They had decided to make a day of it, shopping, lunch and of course, robbery tonight. They both figured if they went to out of the way places and kept their sunglasses on, no one would pick up on the fact that he was Jack Wayne, the missing little brother of Bruce Wayne. Who would even be looking for the missing brother to be just walking about Gotham?

As Jack and Harley made their way down the sidewalk, the electrical hum of the streetcars that traveled the rails rolled past everyone on the street. The Gotham streetcars were a dark burgundy and brown color, trying to capture a little bit of the old feel of the streetcars that first ran through Gotham back in the late 1870's, and currently only ran through Old Gotham, through the Diamond district and into the Fashion district, right now, before turning around and doing the circuit over again. There were plans, headed by the Wayne Transportation and Urban Development, to extend the streetcars into the less exclusive areas of Gotham to provide easy and cheap public transportation.

Harley enjoyed riding on the streetcar. It was one of the first things she did when she moved to Gotham, ride the streetcar. It had been such a fun experience for her. Jack had promised her after they checked out the jewelry store they would take the streetcar to the Fashion district to buy her some new lingerie and to grab lunch together. She smiled, swinging his hand as she walked.

Only a few steps behind them, Ben was following. He was dressed in a long brown overcoat over his suit, light beige with a golden toned shirt. He wore a wood drivers cap over his head, his hands shoved deep into his pockets. He had a knife with him, but he didn't know what he was going to do, only that he had felt compelled to follow them, if for no other reason than for him to see Jack. He knew he was obsessed and he liked it.

He watched them, just a few steps ahead, holding hands. Ben pressed his lips together in an angry line. The streets were fairly crowded, probably the reprieve in the weather bringing out shoppers on a Saturday afternoon. He thought about coming up behind her and burying his blade in her back, just a few quick stabs would be all it would take for her to bleed out and poof, his problem was solved. But, there was no way he could get away with it. No, he needed to do something that looked more like an accident...that was when the hum of one of the streetcars rolled by. Ben followed the streetcar with his eyes, watching it zip by with an introspective frown on his face. He sighed turning back just as Jack pulled Harley against him and kissed her.

Ben felt a jealous rage swell up in his chest. God he hated her!

* *

Jack smiled reaching over to rub his thumb at the corner of her mouth. “I messed up your lipstick sweets.”

Harley giggled gazing up at him. “How come I never mess yours up?”

Jack rubbed the tip of his nose against hers. “Because my sweet thing, I just happened to be better at kissing.”

Harley laughed and smacked him on the shoulder. “Poo!”

Jack grinned and hooked her arm through his chuckling when they both saw a food cart up ahead. The smells that wafted from the cart were divine. Jack turned to Harley. “I've heard of them! They sell Bulgarian cuisine! Want to have lunch now?”

Harley started to answer when her stomach made a rather loud, embarrassingly vocal growl. Harley blushed. “I think that might be a yes.”

Jack laughed and kissed her cheek. “You wait right here, my pumpkin, and I'll grab us something from the vendor.”

Harley smiled. “I'll be right here!”

Jack hurried over getting into the line that was forming while Harley stood on the sidewalk. She gazed at the display of evening dresses in the closest department store window before walking over to the edge of the sidewalk to watch the streetcar that was moving up the street quickly.
Ben simply reacted. His jealousy blinded him to the consequences of his actions as he saw a chance that he couldn't afford not to take.

As the streetcar was zipping up the rails, Ben raced up behind Harley, no one paying any attention to him among the heavy crowds. He glanced toward Jack, who was talking to the man in the food cart, his attention at the moment, not on Harley. He knew he was acting rashly, that he was letting his jealousy dictate his moves, something the Court would find shameful, but he was just so angry. He wanted Jack all to himself, but this bitch was in his way.

Ben grinned a vicious, toothy grin turning to face Harley's back, the stupid blonde leaning out to watch the streetcar come racing up the tracks, then, at the last second, he shoved her. In the next instant Ben blended into the crowd, no one noticing him.

Harley let out a startled yelp as her whole body was propelled forward. She stumbled off the side of the sidewalk, her arms out for a moment at her side, almost pinwheeling to catch her balance, at the same time she turned to see the streetcar coming right at her.

Just as quickly, someone grabbed Harley by her coat and yanked her hard backwards, which had her stumbling and slamming into someone. Harley gasped out loud, her breath leaving her in a whoosh as she looked up and behind her to see Jack holding her. All of it happened so quickly that she had barely had time to process what might have happened at the moment that the streetcar zipped past them.

“Damn it Harls!” her husband hissed, straightening her up, spinning her around, and yanking her into his arms.

Harley looked up at Jack startled. “I...I don't know what happened. It...I felt like someone pushed me!”

Jack frowned as he stared down at her, then his eyes searched the crowd around them. A few people stared at them, but no one stopped to say anything to them or acted as if they had seen anyone push her into the way of the streetcar.

Jack's lips were pressed together in a frown as he searched around a moment longer, but he didn't see anyone or anything suspicious. He turned back to Harley and stroked her face with both hands, stopping to hold his hands against her cheeks, staring at her, his blue eyes filled with emotion.

“Be more careful sweets. I couldn't live if something happened to you,” he said softly, his voice barely above a whisper.

Harley smiled and reached up to cover her hands with his own. “I will puddin. I promise.”

*

Standing in an alcove of one of the buildings watching them, Ben quietly voiced a harsh epithet and vowed to himself that next time he would succeed. He thought about returning to the island, maybe setting up something in the house to take care of her, but he couldn't risk harming Jack. Ben sighed with longing as he gazed at Jack; every move he made sent Ben's nerve-endings tinkling.

*

Jack grabbed their lunch a few minutes later and found the two of them a bench not too far from the jewelry shop. They sat close together. Jack had ordered them both Pile Na Gril which Harley discovered was a meal of grilled chicken with sides of two Bulgarian salads in adorable cardboard boxes, was hot in the cool weather. Harley took a bite then rolled her eyes. “Oh puddin, this is so good!"

Jack smiled. “Glad you like it sweets. I worked hard on ordering it.”

She giggled elbowing him in the side. Jack chuckled leaning over to feed her a bite of chicken laughing when he shoved it so hard at her that he smeared her lipstick.

Harley playfully growled.

“I'm going to get you for that later.”

“Oh promises, promises!” Jack laughed until Harley elbowed him in the side again. She had all but forgotten the close call with the streetcar.

*

After they finished lunch, they headed into the jewelry store. The place was over the top with light beige walls, an enormous center crystal chandelier along with so much light that Harley supposed was to make certain everything glittered. It reminded her of how a child might think a rich person decorated. Harley made a face, looking over the top of her sunglasses at the place, which Jack caught from the corner of his eye. He snorted.

Harley giggled elbowing him again. Jack jerked to the side. “Ow! Woman you have sharp elbows!”

“Stop laughing at me,” she hissed back, though with a grin on her red lips.

Jack leaned close. “Sorry sweets, you're just too cute.”

Harley smiled, then whispered. “This place reminds me of the inside of a bowl of glitter.”

Jack matched her grin, then whispered back. “Just imagine how much better it'll look once we smash everything.”

Harley giggled as Jack grabbed her arm. “Come on, let's do some shopping for tonight.”

They walked around—keeping their sunglasses in place—to the glass cases looking inside at the diamond rings, emerald necklaces and ruby and pearl brooches, thousands and thousands of dollars worth of precious and semi-precious stones.

Jack's smile widened. “Oh, this is going to be fun Harls.”

Harley giggled. She wasn't sure what she was looking forward to most—the actual crime or the destruction. After a moment of thought, she knew the answer.

The destruction.

Early that same evening Agatha arrived back in Gotham, this time on a private jet. It had just begun to rain as she pulled her plaid raincoat around her before she started to head down the stairs from the plane reaching down to struggle with her umbrella when someone raced up the steps with an umbrella already open. Agatha looked up to see Lincoln March smiling and holding an umbrella up for her. “Hello Agatha.”

Agatha smiled. Lincoln was younger than her by a couple of decades, but they had had a wonderful affair, until the Court had stepped between them...and other things. Agatha continued down the stairs with Lincoln ahead of her holding the umbrella. “I didn't expect to see you here,” she said softly.

Lincoln smiled. “Well, it is my jet.”

“You know what I mean.” Agatha smiled. “If they find out that you're with me...”

Lincoln smiled. “The Court may seem like they know everything and see everything, but they don't Agatha, if you know how to move between their lines of sight. I'm glad you came back to Gotham. I hate that I missed you on your last visit.”

Agatha shrugged. “It was short, family business. Well within the time I'm allowed in Gotham.”

They came to the bottom of the stairs and headed toward the hangar where just outside of the hangar entrance sat a silver Aston Martin Vulcan. Lincoln walked over to the car next to Agatha, careful with the umbrella, to open the door for her. Agatha slipped inside waiting while Lincoln rushed around to the driver seat.

He smiled after he dropped into the seat. “So, how about you come to my place for drinks and we can discuss your nephews.”

He reached out laying his hand on her knee. “We'll work this out Agatha.”

She nodded. “I just hoped they would never have to know. And if they have their eyes on Jack...”

She shook her head. “I just—he's married Lincoln, he's happy. I don't want that ruined.”

Lincoln started the car. “I will help in any way I can Agatha, you know that right?”

Agatha smiled sadly. “Thank you Lincoln. It's nice to know I still have one friend among the owls.”
Bruce arrived at the hospital shortly after Alfred finished his breakfast. The older man was sitting up reading a copy of “Monty Python and Philosophy: Nudge, Nudge, Think! Think!” that had arrived for him earlier this morning. The elderly butler had far more color returned to his cheeks and he didn't look quite as fragile. Bruce smiled and then frowned when he saw that several vases of flowers had been delivered.

Alfred glanced up from his book when Bruce stepped in. He placed his finger in the book and smiled. “Ah, Master Bruce—good morning.”

Bruce smiled. “Good morning, Alfred. I brought you some of your favorite tea.” Bruce held up a tin of Earl Grey. “I asked the head nurse; she said it would be fine for you to have some tea brought in.”

Alfred chuckled. “Thank you so much Master Bruce. They do try here in the hospital, but it just isn't quite the same.”

Bruce walked over to the bedside, pulling out a chair from the wall on the way and set it closer to Alfred. He glanced again at the flowers, then at the book in Alfred's hand with a quizzical lift of his brow. There were bouquets of lilies, carnations, and freesia filling nearly every space of the room “Admirers?” Bruce chuckled gesturing at the flowers.

Alfred frowned slightly before he answered. “They are actually all from Master Jack and Miss Harleen, as is the book. They both signed it.”

Bruce paled.

Alfred sighed, marking his book and set it on his hospital table that still contained the remains of his breakfast. “Master Bruce, I just wish...”

Bruce nodded and interrupted gently. “I know...Alfred...let's not discuss this, not now. Maybe when you're stronger.”

Alfred frowned. He knew Bruce was using his health as an excuse, but he said nothing more. Bruce set the tea container down and smiled. “I've missed your voice in my ear at night,” he said softly.

Alfred nodded, a soft smile on his lips. “I had hoped that perhaps you would stay off the streets without me there to “back you up,” as they say Master Bruce.”

Bruce leaned forward, his elbows on his knees. “I couldn't, Alfred. Gotham needs me...but I have been thinking...”

Alfred frowned at the tone of Bruce's voice.

“What if I had a partner?” Bruce ventured, his deep voice soft with the question.

Alfred frowned in surprise. “A partner sir?”

Bruce nodded. “Someone to watch my back when you're not there.”

Alfred frowned in thought. “Jack perhaps?”

“No,” Bruce said flatly.
Alfred sighed. “Master Bruce, may I speak plainly?”

“Please do.” Bruce nodded.

“You should make up with your brother sir. He is your only brother. And this secret you hold...you should tell him—perhaps then Jack would understand you more? And I think telling Jack, including him on your secret, could be just what the two of you need.” Alfred looked at Bruce pleadingly. “Your brother loves you more than you realize. You've hurt him deeply, but I know he would rush back Master Bruce, if only you would extend him your hand.”

Bruce sighed. “Alfred, he would want to tell Dr. Quinzel.”

“And that would be so wrong sir? Say what you will, Miss Harleen loves him. I have never seen any two people love each other the way those two do. She would never betray a secret Master Jack asked her to keep. And you could use more allies Master Bruce. I think a partner is a wonderful idea, but I believe it should be your brother. And with the addition of Miss Harleen, just imagine how much good the three of you could do for Gotham.”

Bruce looked uncomfortable, sliding one shoe against the polished hospital floor. “I just...I don't know.”

“Were you considering Miss Talia?” Alfred asked softly.

Bruce shook his head. “I...I don't have anyone in mind at the moment Alfred. I've been thinking more and more about the idea after...” He looked up at Alfred who nodded his understanding. After his heart attack.

“Well, I think it would not be a bad idea Master Bruce, but, I beg you to consider telling Jack.” Alfred said softly.”He is your brother. The one person in all of Gotham who would understand.”

Bruce murmured noncommittally. “I'll think about it.”

A wintry mix of rain and snow lashed down to create a chill in the Gotham night air. Jack reached over and squeezed Harley's knee affectionately as he drove. She didn't need to see his smile to know her lover was smiling at her from behind the red helmet he wore. She had a red mask too, though hers was worn over the upper portion of her face, covering her eyes, top of her nose, and forehead while leaving the bottom portion of her face exposed. The red helmet marked Jack as the head of their gang while also completely concealing his identity to anyone who might catch a glimpse of the Red Hood.

They were driving one of the two black SUV's their gang was using for this little heist. The night before, Alex and Jack had equipped the front of each SUV with steel EURO grill guards just for tonight's job. Riding with Jack and Harley were Haskins, Duela, and Jason. (Jason was a young, angry man with a lot of pent up rage. He hadn't told any of them much about his past, but he did let slip once to Alex—while he was drunk—that his father had been killed by one of the mob families in Gotham and his mother was a drug addict, probably dead now, and that Jason was a runaway.) Frost and Alex were in the other SUV with Rolf and a new hire, a young brunette named Roxy who was a friend of Rolf's.

Each of their gang wore a red mask similar to the one that Harley was wearing. Everyone in the vehicle was also dressed in black, from the tips of their shoes to the ends of the black gloves they each wore, which caused the red masks to stand out more sharply. Alex had joked that they all looked like stunt doubles for George Harrison from the movie “Zorro the Gay Blade.”

While he drove, Jack hummed to the music on the vehicle's stereo, tapping his black gloved fingers against the steering wheel in time to the song, “Him & I “by G-Easy and Hasley, which played over the vehicle's speakers while he drove. He grinned, glancing sideways when Harley started to sing along. She swayed her head and shoulders, her eyes closed while she sang, her voice pure and pleasant to his ears.

“Cross my heart, hope to die
To my lover, I'd never lie
He said "be true", I swear I'll try
In the end, it's him and I
He's out his head, I'm out my mind
We got that love, the crazy kind
I am his and he is mine
In the end, it's him and I, him and I...”

Harley opened her eyes and glanced at Jack who was turning to watch her for a moment. Harley winked at him, swaying her body side to side in the passenger seat. Jack smiled behind his mask and reached over again, this time to squeeze her thigh. “I do love your singing voice,” he said with affection when Haskins muttered from the back. “I could really do without the music.”

Jack narrowed his eyes behind the mask, his fingers wrapping around the wheel of the SUV tightly, making the leather of his gloved creak. Harley could feel as well as see the tension in Jack's shoulders. Haskins was getting on Jack's nerves. She reached over and laid one of her gloved hands over her husband's on the steering wheel accompanied by a reassuring squeeze. Even though they were both wearing gloves, her touch seemed to calm him down. Jack smiled behind the helmet and asserted firmly, “Driver gets to decide if there is music, and the driver, who I might add is also the head of our little gang, gets to pick the music. So Haskins darling, shut up or you can get out now.”

Haskins snorted. “Whatever.”

Harley heard, rather than saw Duela smack Haskins in the shoulder and hiss in a whisper. “Don't fuck this up for us Hask!”

“Fine, whatever Duela,” Haskins hissed back.

Harley sighed. Yeah, it was time to get rid of Haskins, she thought. He had too big of a mouth and an even bigger attitude. He had been trouble from the start and she could tell, he was just going to get worse.

Jason piped up then from further in the back. “I like the song.”

Jack glanced in the rear view at Jason, who was sitting in the seat behind Haskins and Duela. Harley knew Jack liked the young man, though he had mentioned that the boy reminded him of Bruce when he was younger; thick black hair, blue eyes, a bad attitude at times, but Jason was smart, loyal, and knew to stay on Jack’s good side, a trick that Haskins clearly hadn’t picked up.

“Good boy Jason. You get a gold star tonight.” Jack's voice was filled with genuine praise and the young man nodded with a smile.

They drove for another twenty minutes with Jack reaching over and purposely turning the music up to a nearly painfully loud volume which had Harley giggling. She glanced over her shoulder to see the sour look on Haskins' face while Goldfrapp's song “Everything is Never Enough” drowned out all other sounds in the vehicle, making it impossible for anyone to be heard without yelling. Harley glanced at Jack. She couldn't see his face, but she could just tell by the way he was holding himself and tapping his fingers on the steering wheel that he was enjoying the look of annoyance on Haskins' face.

When they neared their destination, Jack slowed down just enough to check the road ahead of him. The streetlights and traffic lights reflected off the wet street, creating a glittering jewel-like effect. A few vehicles were passing by, but the traffic was light tonight. Their gang was supposed to approach the jewelry store from both sides. Frost should be coming down the road from the other direction, then together, they would smash both SUVs through the front of the store.

A minute passed and Jack didn't see the other SUV.

Though little traffic moved at this time in the morning in Gotham, with the wintry mix, fewer than usual were out. A few random vehicles zipped past going who knew where; speeding past the SUV without paying any attention to the coasting vehicle.

Before they left that night, Frost had checked the police scanner to determine Batman's location. If Batman was anywhere too close, they were going to call off the smash and grab and try the following day, but according to the police scanner (which Frost had liberated from work when he quit), the Bat was nowhere near the Diamond district tonight. Apparently there was another job by this new criminal calling himself The Riddler which had Batman's attention in The Bowery at the moment, perfect for their little gang. This left only the regular Gotham police force. By Frost's calculations, it would take the police perhaps five to six minutes to respond to the alarms. That gave them plenty of time if they stuck to the plan—two minutes to smash, grab, then leave.

It was just approaching three a.m. Jack turned the music down, muttering to Harley. “Where is Frost? He's going to throw off our timing....”

Haskins muttered. “Maybe he ditched us?”

Jack snarled. “Frost would never “ditch” us, as you so eloquently put it Haskins.”

“Well how do you...” Haskins started to say, but it was Harley, surprising even Jack when she turned around to face the back seat while yanking out her gun from the holster under her arm, a Chiappa Rhino 60DS that Alex had just acquired for her yesterday, and pointed it at Haskins' forehead.

“Look here, ya hipster criminal wannabe. My puddin says Frost wouldn't ditch us and what he says goes. You got it?” Harley smiled, her voice light and cheerful. Duela looked ready to wet herself while Haskins, his eyes wide, stared at the barrel of Harley's gun and simply nodded. “Yeah, okay.”

Harley smiled and holstered her weapon. “Good. Oh, look puddin—there he is!”

Harley pointed out the windshield. Jack saw the SUV approaching from the opposite direction. Jack grinned wide behind his mask. “All right kiddies, let's get ready to get in there and get out in record time. Smash the cases and grab what you can. Don't be choosie, we're going for quantity over quality."

The two SUV's where converging on the jewelry store when Frost flashed his headlights. Jack grinned and did the same.

“Get ready!” he laughed out.

Harley giggled reaching down for her baseball bat, the others grabbed whatever “smashing” weapons they had brought with them. Just as both vehicles came up on the store, flashing their lights in a particular pattern at each other, they both made sudden and extreme turns toward the store. Laughing loudly, Jack reached out and placed his arm over Harley protectively, (even though she was wearing her seat belt), just as the SUV smashed through the front of the store, with the other SUV crashing through at the same time right beside it in a spectacular burst of glass, and light metal window framing, shattering in an almost beautiful explosion of sprinkling shards.

The vehicles both traveled forward, running side by side, crashing through the front of the jewelry store and into the main room of the store within seconds, taking out several displays as the two SUV’s stopped in the middle of the jewelry store showroom. Alarms immediately began to sound.

Jack yelled motioning with his hand.“All right, we have less than two minutes! LET’S GO!”

Everyone spilled out of both vehicles and without another word, the nine people started to smash cases and dump jewelry into the sacks they were all carrying.

Harley grinned brightly as she swung her bat at a case of diamond necklaces along the wall, clamping her teeth together in a vicious smile when she took a full body swing at the case; the sound of shattering glass made her smile even bigger. She swung her bat under her arm, holding it there while she used her hand and arm to make a large sweep of the wall cases, taking glass and jewelry with her into the bag she was holding. Some of the jewels were swept onto the floor mixed with the glass, but it didn't matter to her as most of the jewelry ended up in her sack.

She glanced over, watching Jack as he moved swiftly, his long legs taking him toward the back room where he knew there was a safe full of loose diamonds, emeralds and others precious stones. She smiled, for just a moment her eyes lingered on her husband's ass before he disappeared into the back of the shop. Harley giggled and turned back to her work when she nearly stopped moving, her breath coming out in a rush when she saw something gorgeous she just had to have for Jack.

In a display case, elevated above the other items in the case, was a lighter. Not just any lighter, a Dupont ST Prestige Collection Rain lighter covered in a combination of diamonds and purple musgravite, worth well over seventy-five thousand dollars. Harley stared at it for a moment. It was simply beautiful and Jack had to have it she thought. She turned to see exactly what the others were doing; they were all busy smashing cases and sweeping the contents into their bags, no one paying any attention to her.

Harley grinned, and swung her bat, carefully, just hard enough to smash the glass, but not so hard that she hit the lighter. Then, with a wide grin, she reached in, grabbed the lighter and slipped it into the front pocket of her black jeans.

That was when they all hear the sound of sirens echoing in the distance. It was hard to judge exactly where they were coming from or how far away they were by the sound, but it was clear the alarms had alerted the police. Frost frowned from where he had been grabbing handfuls of rings and stuffing them into his bag. He tilted his head listening to the sirens then frowned.

“Quick tonight...” he muttered, then, “Sounds like they might be here in the next couple of minutes, “Boss!” Frost yelled into the back where Jack was supposed to be opening the safe.

Everyone heard a extremely loudly uttered curse. “Fuck!” before Jack came rushing in from the back with his sack over his shoulder.

“Oh kiddies, the ride is over! Everyone back into the cars—we're going home!” Jack raced over to the SUV and slipped into the driver's seat. He glanced over at the other vehicle where Alex had moved behind the wheel while Frost was filling up his sack. Jack waved at Alex who smiled and gave him the finger back with his one hand causing Jack to burst out laughing as he hit the reverse. When Jack had started the SUV, the stereo had come to life, a new song playing through the speakers that had Jack grinning. He glanced at his wife as Harley had jumped into the seat slamming her door shut. “There's my pretty little peach!” Jack said with a clear smile in the tone of his voice. Alex slammed his vehicle in reverse too, and the two vehicles backed up at high speed at the same time. They both burst out onto the road, and swung around so that the SUVs were driving side by side.

Jack laughed as he thumped the wheel with his fingers to the music blasting from the SUV’s stereo. He looked in the rear view mirror at his passengers. “Perfect! You'll love this one Haskins!”

Without needing to tell her, Harley leaned over and turned up the stereo to a level that would make their ears numb as Henry Rollins' rough voice came through the speakers singing “Laughing Man” while they raced away from the store. Haskins put his hands over his ears looking annoyed at first and pissed within seconds.

The two SUV's drove side by side for only a couple of minutes before they broke off from each another, going off in two separate directions; Alex taking a turn to the north while Jack continued going west. The plan was to meet up within the hour (if they were not being followed) at the agreed upon spot to see what they had managed to grab.

Jack was just a little disappointed when they arrived at the warehouse on the Dixon docks without once being chased by the Gotham PD. He had really been hoping for a high speed chase; it would have been fun he thought.

The warehouse where they were meeting was an old brick building, erected around 1848 when Gotham was an up-and-coming city. The place was probably considered a historic landmark if anyone had the money to put into restoring the old place, but the large brick warehouse was abandoned and time was slowly doing its best to wear away the ancient building.

This close to the water, the air outside—mixed with the rain and snow—was even colder. Jack pulled the SUV up to one of the folding metal doors that had been installed in the last century. He glanced toward Harley before he jumped out and walked over to the gate, grabbed it from the bottom and threw it up. The metal made the sound of old rust grinding against resistant metal, but it went up without giving him too much issue. Jack walked back to the car and hopped in, driving the SUV into the building. Once inside, everyone exited the SUV. Jason came around to the back of the vehicle and began to help Jack with pulling out a small generator, courtesy of WayneTech, that Jack had liberated from an old storage unit in Gotham. (It was an old storage unit that Bruce paid for to hold a few bits and pieces of equipment from the manor. It was filled with stuff they weren't using at the manor, but items that were too valuable to toss out.)

With Jack on one side and Jason on the other, they carried the generator to the middle of the room where an old fold-out table sat. Harley came over with a flashlight from the glove compartment, holding the light steady once the two men had sat the generator down, so that Jack could get the thing started. Harley wasn't sure exactly how it worked, only that Jack said it didn't require any gas to run and would give them enough power for around eight hours at maximum output, longer if they didn't run much from it.

After a few seconds of Jack fiddling with the it, the generator hummed to life with a deep rumble.
The low sound filled the empty space, and within minutes the small group of criminals had a few stands of lights glowing, lighting up the dark space. Duela and Harley stretched out a string of lights they had pulled from the back of the SUV, wrapping them around the table. There were also some additional campground lights that were battery powered, which Jason and Duela had grabbed from the back of the SUV as well. (Both Jack and Harley noticed that Haskins didn't help. Instead he leaned against the SUV looking disgruntled. They shared a look and then continued to set up.) The light illuminated a small section of the interior around the table, showing that enough dust and debris was scattered along the floor to create the illusion of a dirty floor instead of showing the old concrete that was actually the flooring. The brick walls that were visible were covered in a variety of colorful graffiti from the more traditional: 'Mark was here' to 'Alison is a slut,' to a variety of gang tags. The sounds of a few bats could be heard and the occasional scurrying sound of a rat. The entire place smelled of old water, dirt, and wet, musty stone.

No sooner had they set up the lights, than the small group heard the sounds of another metal gate, followed by the sounds of an engine. A few seconds later Alex appeared, driving in from the other direction.

Jack laughed and smacked his hands together, the leather gloves gave off a distinctive sound. “Now it's a party! Someone turn some music up. Haskins here loves his music!”

Harley, who had gone back over to the SUV to grab her bat, snickered. Duela chuckled lightly too, but Haskins muttered under his breath, “Prick.”

Jack smiled behind his mask and put his hand up to his unseen ear. “Did you say something Haskins?”

“Nuthin’,” Haskins muttered as Duela yanked on his arm.

Jack chuckled walking over to the other car as Alex and Frost hopped out followed by Rolf, Dale and the new girl, Roxy.

Alex grinned. “Sorry man, we stopped and grabbed from beer and pizza!”

Frost held up the four pizza boxes, two balanced in each hand, while Rolf came forward with two six packs of beer.

Jack laughed. “Damn, feeling confident there?”

Alex shrugged. “No one was following us, didn’t see any reason not to celebrate...Boss.” Alex emphasized the word “Boss” with a smirk that only he could get away with in front of Jack.

Jack snickered at Alex calling him Boss, tossing him the middle finger with an added, “That was for earlier,” which had Alex chuckling. Then Jack motioned everyone over to the table. “All right boys and girls, let's take a look at the haul for our first jewel theft shall we?”

The sacks were brought over to the table along with the pizza and beer. Jack, of course, didn't indulge because of his mask, but everyone else dug in while carefully dumping the contents of their sacks onto the table. Frost glanced over the haul of necklaces, rings, bracelets and watches as well as the pile of loose stones that Jack had taken from the safe, before he glanced at Jack and Harley—who was leaning on her bat, slowly swaying her hips back and forth while watching Alex and Frost mentally going over the loot.

Frost looked over at Jack. “I think we have at least $800,000 here with just these case pieces, though that will depend on a few factors when it comes to selling them. We’ll have to break down most of the pieces, but the loose stones should be easy and catch a high price.” Frost glanced at Alex who nodded.

Alex chewed on his bite of pizza, holding the slice up on a particularly long, gooey string of cheese. He motioned with his head toward a diamond lace necklace that had an emerald at the end, at least as big as a silver dollar. “Well, I know a few buyers who work through Gotham, we should be able to get fucking top dollar for a few of these pieces. I mean, they like to buy the diamonds and shit in their fucking settings and deal with breaking them loose themselves, but the rest we'll have to sell the stones separately. I know a couple of fuckers who we can work with, who are fucking reasonable in what they charge. One goes by Magpie—she really knows her stuff when it comes to moving jewels and then this other chick named Catwoman.”

Jack chuckled along with Harley as he murmured. “God I love these names! Magpie, Catwoman...just perfection!”

Alex chuckled and continued. “Catwoman is in and out of Gotham, but I think she's back in town. Anyway, they are both fucking jewel thieves themselves, but they both know their fucking business and they both have a network of buyers. Offloading this stuff and getting us top dollars should only take a few weeks at the most...some of the smaller shit like the watches I can get rid of in a few days myself.” Alex took another bite of pizza talking around it. “I'm thinking maybe 1.5 million...with your cut being around $200,000 for you Boss and the rest divided evenly among the rest of us. That's over a hundred grand apiece for the rest of the gang.” Alex grinned at Jack and Harley. Jack grinned behind his mask. “Perfect, don't you think sweets?” He turned toward Harley who giggled gazng up at his red helmet face. “I sure do puddin.”

Haskins, who had been steaming over against the SUV and doing his own calculations, pushed himself away from the vehicle and spoke up after taking a long swallow from his beer. “So we like gotta wait a few days to get paid? And you get that big of a cut? What the fuck for? And why does anyone not here tonight get a cut?”

Jack frowned behind his mask and turned toward Haskins. “Because this was my fucking idea Haskins. I picked the fucking job, this is my fucking gang and I'm the fucking Red Hood. You have a problem with that?”

Haskins ripped off his mask, glaring at Jack, his face reflected in the red of Jack's helmet face. “Yeah, I have a fucking problem.”

Jack frowned behind his mask and turned toward Haskins. “Because this was my fucking idea Haskins. I picked the fucking job, this is my fucking gang and I'm the fucking Red Hood. You have a problem with that?”

Haskins ripped off his mask, glaring at Jack, his face reflected in the red of Jack's helmet face. “Yeah, I have a fucking problem.”

“You know Haskins, we've only had this gang for a very short time and you have been a thorn in my side that entire time,” Jack muttered. “I mean really, how are we going to build ourselves a reputation when I have a weaselly little cocksucker like you stirring up trouble and questioning me?” Jack sighed dramatically. “Oh and before you say anything Haskins, my darling, I'm not insulting you by calling you a cocksucker, I'm just describing you.” Jack turned to each of the members of the gang. “Anyone else having an issue with how the loot is going to be divided or how long it'll take to get your cut? Be honest now—management is taking suggestions right now.” Jack folded his arms over his chest as his helmeted head took in everyone. (Alex shook his head thinking to himself that recruiting Haskins was one of his worse decisions.) No spoke up, though Jason and Rolf gave Haskins a dirty look. Duela looked upset and nervous and Roxy frowned. but she put her hand up like she was in school.
Jack nodded his head toward her. “You're the new girl right...ah...Roxy correct?” Jack asked.

“Yep, Roxy.” She smiled, her eyes dancing behind her mask. “Rolf recruited me.” Jack nodded. “Yes, I remember. What would you like to say, dearie?”

Roxy glanced at everyone before she spoke. “I'm just fine with how things are Mr. Red Hood. I mean I know I just joined thanks to Rolf here, but it all seems fair to me. You're the Boss, Boss always gets a bigger cut, just how it works...anyone knows that.” Roxy looked pointedly at Haskins.

Jack laughed putting his arm around Harley's waist and glancing down at her. “Oh, I like her.”

Harley giggled, placing a kiss against the side of Jack's helmet. “Agreed,” she said with a smile.

Roxy blushed under their praise, but Haskins wasn't finished. He snarled throwing his arms up and started to gesticulate wildly, his voice raising in volume.

“Who the fuck cares what you have to say Roxy? Yer new and you're just kissing ass.” He stalked closer to Jack and Harley, sneering as he ground out. “I don't see why we're following some pussy-whipped fucktard in a red helmet,” Haskins snarled.

After Haskins' comment, the only sound in the warehouse was the hum of the generator. Duela stared at Haskins as if he had grown another head and took a step back from him. Haskins glared at everyone in turn. “What? You're all thinking it, the way he goes on over her...” Haskins motioned with one hand at Harley. “What kind of leader asks the opinion of his fuck buddy, huh?”

Jack's voice was low and there seemed to be humor there, but it was flat, deadly sounding as he chuckled just a little, his voice ever so slightly sing-songy.

“Pussy-whipped? Well, that is definitely a new one. Haha...” Jack laughed without humor.

Alex was about to make a comment when suddenly Harley stepped past Jack without a word and swung her bat, the solid sound of thick heavy wood connecting with the side of Haskins head echoed off the walls of the abandoned warehouse. Harkins went down with the first hit, not making a sound, not even a whimper, but Harley wasn't done. She stood over her, her teeth bared as she raised the bat over her shoulder with both hands she snarled. “NO ONE TALKS TO MY PUDDIN THAT WAY!!”

She swung the bat down, striking Haskins over and over again. Duella started to cry and covered her face. Roxy grabbed her and turned her back on Harley, though Roxy was doing her best not to grin about the whole situation. Rolf and Jason watched dispassionately as did Frost. Alex lifted a brow quizzically at the viciousness and suddenness of the attack while Dale turned and vomited.

Jack let Harley beat on Haskins a few more times, watching with a smile the bright flashes of blood caught in the light flying into the air when she brought her bat down hard on Haskins' head. Flecks of red came up to splatter against her face, but his wife smiled in satisfaction the entire time. Jack licked his lips behind his helmet, watching her; the crazed look in her eyes, the way the blood showed bright against her pale skin, splattering up along her jaw, right under her red mask. She was sexy in her savagery, which made him want to fuck her badly. He waited, letting her have a solid minute to beat the man to death, before he stepped over and gently put his arms around her from behind, wrapping his gloved hands around her delicate looking—but clearly strong—wrists. “Okay pumpkin, I think you taught the stupid man a lesson...beat it into him actually.” Jack chuckled.

Jack pulled her back, though Harley was still panting and seething, blood dripping from her bat, flecked across her chin and lips.
“All right everyone. I think that is all for tonight. We do have a job opening, so if anyone has any less asinine friends, please feel free to call HR which is the one-armed masturbator here, though that was his right arm and he only has his left now...” Jack chuckled pointing at Alex and giving him a mock sad face. “But you can tell by how muscled his left arm has become that he’s learned to put it to good use.”

Alex laughed giving Jack the middle finger again as Jack grinned at everyone. “So, who needs dropped off at home? Daddy's driving!”

They left Haskins body at the warehouse, taking his red mask with them. Haskins was a low-life petty criminal and the chances of there being any connection between the thief and Jack and Harley were small, the only weak link being Duela. They had dropped her off with Roxy and Rolf who had promised to look after her.

Jack drove, having removed the helmet after Harley and he were alone. The rain had picked up again, lashing the windshield in heavy drops. The wipers flipped back and forth accompanied by the sounds of Lana del Ray singing “White Mustang” played low in the background. Jack frowned glancing at Harley who was staring out the window with a small frown on her face. She hadn't said much since she had killed Haskins.

“You all right pumpkin?” Jack asked softly.

Harley sighed. “Yeah...I'm...well I'm not really sorry, but I feel like I should say I'm sorry to you for killing Haskins.”

Jack chuckled. “Why? Haskins was an ass. He's been an ass since he joined us. Pretty much figured he was going to get himself killed after we hit that WayneTech lab, it was just a matter of when— though I thought I would be the one to do it.” Jack smiled glancing sideways at her. “You attacking him was a bit of a surprise, but...” Jack rubbed her thigh. “Damn sexy Harley.” Jack chuckled and squeezed her thigh again.

Harley folded her arms over her chest. “I didn't like him calling you pussy-whipped. It implied...well you know what it implied.” She grumped glaring out the window.

Jack smiled and slid his hand to squeeze her knee. He worked his fingers into the spot on her knee that he knew was ticklish. He squeezed until Harley squealed. “PUDDIN!”

He laughed. “There's my girl! You know sweets, some people cannot handle seeing someone happily in love. Burns their ass, makes them jealous because they don't have that in their life. Part of Bruce's problem if you ask me. My brother needs someone in his life, which is why he doesn't understand us at all.” He smiled at her which earned him a small smile from Harley. Jack looked back to the road. “Plus, as Arthur Miller once said, 'The two of the most common elements in the world are hydrogen and stupidity.' Haskins was pretty stupid. Saying all that shit in front of you?” Jack chuckled. “You just rid the world of one more stupid criminal. Which simply makes way for more intelligent criminals...like us.” He grinned brightly at her.

Harley smiled. “You're right puddin.”

Jack grinned. “'Course I am sweets.”

Harley leaned over and kissed his cheek.

Half an hour later they were making their way into the house. Ben had been waiting eagerly for their return. (Cobb was out tonight which had left Ben alone with the cameras. He had nearly gone ballistic when he realized Jack was out with that woman tonight, but he had stayed close, waiting for the moment they returned.) Ben frowned watching them. There was something odd on the woman's face, smeared in places. Not a lot of whatever it was, but it looked like something he had seen before... As Ben stared he began to wonder...was that blood on her face? He had noticed Jack taking the red hood with him when they left earlier that night...something that had been with the Owls for many generations...but not used in many many years either. Very odd he thought. But he wondered...was it something he could use to get closer to Jack.

Ben smiled licking his lips.

*

Jack kicked the door closed. “I think a bubble bath is in order what do you think my cupcake?”

He pulled his coat off and tossed it toward the coat rack in the corner and missed. He laughed, tossed the red hood on top of his coat before reaching to peel Harley's coat off of her.

She groaned, dropped her bat in the corner and let Jack take her coat off of her. “That sounds heavenly.” She shrugged out of her holster and dropped the guns on top of their coats. Jack smiled doing the same with his weapons then pulled his gloves off. Harley tossed her own gloves on the ever growing pile.

Jack yawned, but he quickly grabbed Harley and spun her around, catching her chin with his forefinger and thumb. Jack held her face, gazing down into her eyes, his blue eyes catching the light coming from the chandelier over head and sparkling like crystals. His voice was low, seductive when he spoke. “You know what I like Harley? I like that you killed a man for me. That you defended my honor.” Jack purred with a smile, gently rubbing his nose against hers, his lips a breath away from touching hers. She shivered when his warm breath brushed over her mouth. “Watching you beat him to death was beautiful Harley...just beautiful.” Jack cooed then slowly ran his tongue over her lips, licking her mouth before he released her chin and pulled her into his arms, wrapping one arm around her waist, taking her hand in his, swaying to music that only they could hear.

Harley smiled up at him, pressing her body against his sway in rhythm with him. “I would do anything for you Jack, anything at all.”

Jack brushed his nose against hers. “I know baby. I would do anything for you too.”

Jack dipped her, kissed her. Harley felt the warmth of his kiss rush through her body as she returned his kiss with a passion she never knew existed before meeting Jack Wayne. Jack continued the kiss even as he brought her back up to her feet, releasing her hand to wrap his other arm around her. Harley wrapped her arms around his neck, her mouth moving over his ravenously, opening her mouth wide against his, her lips begging for more, her teeth brushing against his mouth in her need. Jack growled as he wrapped his arms under her rear and lifted her up off her feet. He continued to kiss her, carrying her into the study where there was an ivory chaise lounge among the furniture in the room, all of it Victorian replicas.

He carried her to the chaise and laid her down. Just enough light filtered in from the hall to illuminate them. “The bath can wait,” he growled reaching down the pull off her boots. She giggled helping by unbuttoning her jeans. Jack yanked her socks off, tossing them over his shoulder before reaching down her pants, yanking them down her legs and tossing them. When he did, her jeans hit the floor with a loud “thunk.”
Jack turned around to glance down at her jeans. “What the hell?”

Harley sat up. “OH, I almost forgot!”

She rushed over and picked up her pants while Jack removed his boots, watching the way her rear stuck up in the air; the pink panties she was wearing had just a little lace around the edges which he found fascinating to gaze at while she searched for something, her rear wiggling just a little. Jack grinned a little lopsidedly, his eyes traveling down the back of her thighs while he pulled his shirt off. A moment later Harley hurried excitedly back over to the chaise, something hidden in her hands, pressed up against her chest and sat down next to Jack. “Put your hands out and close your eyes.”

Jack quirked a brow at her, but did as she instructed, closing his eyes while resting his hands together, palms facing upward on his lap. Harley grinned and placed the lighter she has stolen in his hands.

“Okay, you can open now.” Harley said, pressing her teeth into her bottom lip in her excitement to see his reaction.

Jack opened his eyes and looked down at the lighter glittering in his hands, the diamonds catching the light and sparkling gently.

Jack gasped softly. “Harley.”

“Do you like it?” she asked, worry coloring her voice. “I...I saw it and just had to grab it for you.”

Jack held it up turning it back and forth watching the way the light danced on the gems. “Oh Harls, it's beautiful. I love it.”

Jack looked at her. “Thank you my sweets.” He cupped her face with one hand and pulled her close, his kiss tender and heartfelt. Harley made a soft whimper of pleasure, and her hands slid up his bare chest caressing her fingers along the card tattoos, then along his neck, her fingers slipping into his hair. Jack pulled her closer, opening his mouth wider, his tongue pressing against hers, playing softly in a sweet, wet caress.

Jack pulled back, his lips still close enough that they brushed against hers when he spoke. “I love you my darling Harley Quinn...my harlequin...my precious girl.”

Harley moaned softly. “Jack...I love you. I love you.”

Jack reached down to set the lighter onto the floor and leaned back in the chaise tugging Harley with him. He kept his right leg off the lounge, pressing Harley against the length of his body, his hands sliding under her top, needing to feel the silky softness of her skin under his hands. He traced the arch of her spine to her hips, sliding his fingers under her panties and squeezing, pressing his fingers into her flesh. Harley groaned, nipped at his lips in playful bites, her tongue tracing his lower lip then his chin, her teeth biting gently and pressing into his chin before she traveled down to his neck.

Jack groaned when Harley ran her tongue up the side of his neck, tasting the salt of his skin, the unique smell that was Jack Wayne filled her nostrils driving her mad with desire. She ground against him feeling the bulge of him trapped by his pants, pressed against her. Harley slid one hand down his chest to his nipple and pinched as she pressed her teeth into his neck, at the tender spot just above his clavicle. Jack jumped slightly with a grunt while sliding his hands under her top to find the strap of her bra.

With nimble fingers Jack unhooked her bra, rubbing his fingers in a gentle caress knocking the now loose straps away from her skin.
Harley stopped and sat up. Jack stuck his bottom lip out. “Hey, why'd you stop?”

Harley laughed at his expression reaching out to trace his bottom lip with the tip of a finger. “I stopped because I want you to take your pants off silly.”

Jack grinned crookedly. “Oh.”

Harley laughed, standing up to pull her top off, followed by her bra seconds later. Jack watched distracted as she pulled her panties down, wiggling a little in the most distracting and enticing way, sliding the cloth down her legs then coming over to help him finish undressing.

Jack smiled at her, his gaze heated. “You are just so gorgeous Harley. Love is blindness...I don't wanna see...Won't you wrap the night around me...Oh my heart...Love is drowning in a deep well...”

“What's that?” she asked as Harley crouched down in front of him and tugged on his pants.

Jack chuckled reaching out to brush a finger along her cheek. “Just a song...but the lyrics are so true.” Jack purred softly. “I love you.”

“Even after all this time?” She looked up at him. Her blue eyes were big and bright, her fingertips brushed against the skin of his thighs when she had pulled his pants down to his knees.

Jack reached out to brush her cheek. “Oh yes Harley. You are the only girl for me. Ever.”

He gently caressed her cheek then along her jaw. She smiled kissing the tip of his fingers when he brushed her lips. She finished tugging his pants past his feet then grabbed the boxers he wore, a pair of light cotton briefs in a dark red, and pulled them down his legs and off until they were both naked.

Jack reached to her. “Come here sweets.”

Harley was still crouched in front of him, her hands resting on his knees, her eyes roaming down his torso to settle on his erection then up again, clearly admiring him.

“Oh, in a bit puddin,” she assured him.

Jack grinned, but there was a hint of a blush on his cheeks while he watched her. Harley squeezed his knees gently before she forced his legs wider, her hands gently sliding along the inside of his thighs. She leaned over, pressing her lips to the soft skin along his inner thigh, followed by a gentle press of her teeth against his skin. She followed the inside of one thigh to the middle before she switched legs, repeating the same tender gestures.

Jack hissed, a tickle running up from her touch, like an electrical shock from her fingers accompanied by the delicious heat from her mouth shooting straight to his groin. His shaft ached for a moment, blood rushing hot and fast through him as he watched the way Harley seemed to worship her way down closer to his shaft. Her tongue followed her teeth in slow licks with the flat of her tongue, rolling down the inside of each thigh as she inched closer.

Harley smiled seductively at him when she was nearly touching his erection, her thumbs stroking tenderly against his scrotum, just the very tips of her thumbs while keeping her gaze focused on his face.

Jack leaned back against the chaise, his legs wide watching Harley through half-lidded eyes, the clear blue of his eyes just a sliver that glowed behind his lashes. Harley pushed his legs far to the side, scooting herself closer, her thumbs continuing their slowly caress. She leaned close and started at his scrotum, sticking her tongue out as far as she could before she used the flat of her tongue to lick a trail up, licking her way slowly to the very tip of his shaft with the enthusiasm of licking a melting ice cream cone. Jack grabbed the cushions of the chaise lounge on either side of him with a loud groan, dropping his head back, his eyes screwing closed. Harley smiled at his reaction before she wrapped her right hand around his shaft and she lowered her lips to the tip of him, kissing the satin soft tip of his shaft with a coy grin just as Jack looked down at her again.

Harley released him, then gently dragged her lips down his erection, the very tip of her tongue skirting along the hard satin, then up again taking a firm grip and slowly thrusting her hand up and down slowly while her tongue circled the tip of him before pressing her lips down on him. She was rewarded by deep moans coming from Jack. With a smile Harley released him only to lower her mouth down, taking him deep into her mouth, her tongue snaking back and forth along the back of his erection before she sucked long and hard.

Jack gasped, his hands finally coming around to grip her hair. He didn't shove, or hold her hair painfully in his hands; he simply held on, occasionally stroking back her blonde locks to watch her sucking and licking until the sight of her ministrations was too much for him.

Jack groaned his head dropping back once more. “Ah fuck, Harley!”

Harley grinned, then wrapped one hand around him once more, her other hand cupping him while she began to use her teeth teasingly.

Jack was panting, almost gasping as he watched her again, the way his shaft disappeared into her mouth, the feel of her tongue playing against him, the tight feel of her lips...“Harley...Uh...” Jack shuddered arching back against the chaise lounge, his hips nearly coming off the lounge as he struggled not to cum, hissing through his teeth.

Harley stopped for a moment, grinning ear to ear at him. Jack chuckled. “You are so bad.”

Harley stood up. “Am?”

Jack shifted until he was lying on his back, one leg still on the floor. Harley crawled onto him, positioning one knee on the lounge beside him, her other on the floor, her torso hovering above his erection which she held ready, waiting to plunge down onto him. She rubbed the head of his shaft back and forth against her. He could feel how dripping, wet she was for him. Jack reached up to drag just the tip of his fingers along her hips and down the top of her thighs before he pressed his thumb against her clitoris to rub in a slow circle.

Harley closed her eyes for a moment releasing a soft moan. “Jack...uh...puddin,” followed by a deep groaning growl, her hips thrusting just a little into his thumb.

Jack grinned then whispered. “I want you Harls. I need you.”

Harley opened her eyes with a smile dancing on her lips. “I need you too puddin.”

She lowered herself down, both of them groaning together as their bodies became one. Harley dropped her hands to his chest, her muscles tightening around him. She ground her hips into him, her foot on the floor giving her more control, more power over her movements.

Jack smiled as he lay beneath her, almost helpless, just gazing up at her, watching the light from the hall filtering into the room and shining on her. His harlequin. Her eyes were closed, her back arched just a little as she ran her hands over his chest slowly, gently.

Jack continued to rub her clitoris watching the minute changes in her expression until she started to move. Harley rocked slowly at first, her hips just moving back and forth, riding him steadily. Jack reached up with his free hand to squeeze one of her breasts, grinning with pleasure at how soft her breasts felt in his hand, warm silken skin, her hard nipple against his palm. He rolled his thumb over her nipple which earned him a hiss of pleasure from Harley. He increased the pressure on her clitoris watching her as Harley's eyes opened slowly, her grinding picking up speed. She looked down on him, her gaze filled with lust and love. And then she smiled, that perfect white-toothed beautiful smile that Jack loved so much. Then she tossed her head back with a cry, her back arching like a bow as she came on top of him.

Jack's breath hitched. She was warm, wet, and yet tight, her body tugging on his in a way that he simply couldn't describe, then her smile mixed with the cry of her orgasm. He groaned thrusting up into her, needing to be deep inside her.

Harley gasped. She leaned down wrapping her arms around his head, pressing her mouth to his, her tongue colliding with his in a warm liquid dance as she thrust and ground against him with abandon.

Jack wrapped his arms around her. He slid one hand down her back, grabbing her rear, the tips of his fingers brushing against where his erection entered her body, feeling himself moving in and out of her, the slickness of their lovemaking slipping and sliding against his finger. Jack growled. “Harley...uuh...Harley...” Harley pulled back from his mouth, her nose against his, the movement of her lips brushing against his own like butterfly kisses. She stared into his blue eyes and whispered, “I love you.”

Jack smiled thrusting up with a grunt. “I love you too.”

Harley groaned, closing her eyes for a movement as she hissed. “Nothing and no one will ever come between us.”

Jack smiled in agreement. “Nothing my sweets, nothing.”

Harley used her foot on the floor to give her more power, more control as she pushed up again and started to fuck, not just sex, not love making, just full, heated fucking, grinding into her man until Jack was sure he was going to blackout if he didn't orgasm soon.

Harley growled. “Aahhggrr...” peaking hard, the ripple more like a crashing wave. She dug her nails into his chest arching back hard enough that he felt the tickle of her long hair against him.

Jack groaned loudly, holding on to her hips like an anchor in a storm. He thrust up hard, his body slamming into her and came, finally releasing with a long drawn out cry.

Harley collapsed back against Jack with a giggle moments later. “Ugh...now, I don't feel like moving.”

Jack chuckled running his fingers up and down her spine. “Me either.”

They were both quiet just enjoying the feel of each other when Harley pouted. “We're gonna get cold though.”

Jack kissed the top of her head. “Nah, I have a lighter, remember?”

Harley snorted.

Ben stood up, glaring with hatred at the cameras, his eyes focused on Jack and Harley lying naked together after sex...again...he swore she rutted like a fucking animal!! Using her body to ensnare him! To twist that beautiful man to her!!

Ben screamed in rage. “AHHH!!!” His voice echoed loudly, bouncing off the walls of the small room. His whole body vibrated with his rage as he screamed again at the cameras just as Jack was cupping her face, kissing that woman passionately again, their naked bodies still connected.

Ben's hands were held so tightly into fists that all the color had drained from his knuckles, his nails digging half moon shapes into his palm, his arms shaking. He knew he was doing this to himself with his constant watching, constant spying, wanting, yearning...his need... his inability to look away when they were fucking...his need to watch Jack's every move...to memorize his beauty. Ben wanted to reach through and touch him...Ben closed his eyes. He should have followed them tonight, maybe he could have found a chance to kill her...a chance to take Jack, but he couldn't risk Cobb returning to find him gone.

Ben screamed again letting all his rage out. “This isn't right! AHHGRR!!” Ben snarled. “He...he should be mine...why can't anyone but me see that? I'm worthy of him!!”

Ben slammed his fists down on the desk in front of him, causing the monitors to shake.

He had tried contacting the Court again, begging to be allowed to bring Jack Wayne in, but they refused to budge. Not yet, not the time, not ready....other considerations, more knowledge needed...

The only thing on Ben's side in this whole thing was the rift between the Wayne brothers, the fact that the public still thought Jack Wayne was missing...but the Court wasn't ready, wanted to wait. And until they changed their collective mind, Ben was to follow orders, which would be given to him through Cobb. He was not to contact the Court himself again or attempt to recruit Wayne or there would be consequences. Only Cobb could contact them and only when he saw fit to do so.

Ben closed his eyes, remembering the conversation with Sensei (which he supposed said much about how the Court viewed him that someone as powerful of Sensei spoke to him) with a snarl on his lips. Why wouldn't they trust him? Why would they not listen to him? Couldn't they see that this was much more than an obsession? There was something so very special about Jack...something terrifying, lurking just under the surface...Ben just knew he could bring the “real” Jack Wayne out...make him a valued member of the Court...that Jack Wayne could be the one to bring about the Gotham they sought...if they would just listen!

Ben fumed. If he was already a Talon, they would listen to him.

Ben glanced back at the screens watching with venom the way Jack Wayne caressed that woman's cheek, the way he looked at her. God, if he could only get Jack away from that viper! Ben feared he was losing his chance, that since those old fools refused to listen to him, refused to help, he was losing his chance to take Jack!! Ben started to pace the small room, his thoughts moving rapidly like rabbits, first here, then there as he tried to think of a plan, a way to get his way in this matter.

But the worst part was that the Court said he was clearly beginning to show obsessive behavior, that they had given him many chances because of his father, covered his mistakes, cleaned his messes, but Ben was starting to wear his privileges thin....that he was overstepping his limits and his assignment, by asking yet again about Wayne... And so, the Court had decided that they were sending Calvin Rose to remove him! They were sending him back for more training and replacing him with Rose, that weak... Ben snarled and kicked his chair across the room. The office chair spun and slammed up against the wall leaving a gouge in the drywall. Ben hissed to himself. How could they?! He was faster! Smarter. He was simply better all-around than Calvin Rose!! He didn't need any more training!
Ben didn't care that Rose was a full Talon where Ben was still in training. Ben knew he was better, smarter, faster...Ben repeated it to himself...and he didn't see any reason he should be denied what he wanted...

Ben took several breaths. He needed to do something quickly, something extreme to kill that woman and once she was dead, sweeping in to take Jack would be easy.

The Court would forgive him, they always did.

Now...what could he do right now...how would he kill in a way that would be more effective than trying to push her in front of a street car. That had just been foolish, a gut reaction...he could do better.

He was smarter, after all.

*

The following day Jack and Harley were downstairs in their kitchen filled with the smell of coffee and cooking eggs, the soft sizzle of melting butter filled the kitchen along with Jack's singing. Harley was dressed in a pair of black leggings and a tight fitting red and black striped sweater that stopped just above the band of her leggings, displaying a tantalizing slip of skin. She wore a pair of baggy red socks, her hair was down and loose, though she had a black beanie pulled low over her ears, and sipped her coffee leaning against the counter watching Jack, particularly watching the way his hips moved as he danced in place to the song his lovely voice caressed. Jack was dressed in slim cut grey slacks; Harley was currently admiring the way in which the slacks held and accentuated his rear end in a way that made her want to bite his ass. He had chosen dark purple and green striped socks, a dark purple dress shirt, no tie, the sleeves of which he had rolled up to his elbows...which was also making her want to throw him down to the floor and have her way with him...and an apron they had found hanging on the back of the pantry door that read “Lick the Cook” instead of “Kiss the Cook.”

Jack grinned, weaving his hips to music that only he heard and singing while he cooked, much to Harley's delight.

Jack reached over picking up his cigarette where it balanced on the edge of an ashtray, the lighter Harley had given him sat next to the ashtray and the pack of cigarettes. Jack moved his shoulders and tapped his foot, setting the cigarette down and singing, smoke drifting from between his lips.

“Babe, the night it swallowed my soul
Could it be, that I fell apart, it shows
The lines on the face ate away my smile
Could it be that I, fell apart
Fall, in me
I'll let you breathe
'Cause you were fallin', I'm sorry, I may be Fall, in me
I'll let you breathe
'Cause you were fallin'...”
He glanced over his shoulder while he sang and waggled his eyebrows at Harley, which sent her giggling. Jack reached over to grab a plate and slid the omelet onto the plate when they heard a knock at their door.

Harley and Jack shared a look of confusion. Harley set her mug down.

“I’ll go check it out puddin.”

Jack frowned. “Be careful.”

Harley grinned. “My bat’s by the door puddin, don’t worry.”

Jack’s laughter followed her out of the kitchen.

*

Ben walked slowly up to the door of the main house. He glanced around just to be sure that Cobb hadn’t decided to come back early. He figured he had maybe an hour to do what he came to do and get back to the other house before Cobb came back bringing with him Calvin Rose...an hour to take care of the woman and get away, to disappear into Gotham. Then it would only be a matter of time before he could come back and collect Jack. Ben smiled happily. For a plan he came up with only last night he was fairly pleased with himself.

He walked up to the door with a little more confidence and knocked.

*

Harley could see a shadow behind the stained glass in the door. She frowned reaching over and grabbing her bat, keeping that arm behind the door as she opened it.

“Hello? Oh! It's you.”

Ben smiled. “Morning. I hope it isn’t too early. I just came back from the city and well...I brought muffins.” He smiled holding up a large bag. “I thought I might bring you both some since my cousin told me that Miss Agatha Wayne had said that you two had just been marred.”

“Oh.” Harley looked startled, but she released her hold on the bat and set it aside. “Come on in. Jack and I were just about to have breakfast. Can I get you some coffee?”

Harley smiled and Ben stepped inside. He schooled his features into a pleasant grin.

“Coffee sounds divine, Mrs. Wayne,” Ben said softly.

Harley laughed. “Please, just call me Harley, everyone does.”

Ben smiled behind her back. “Of course, Harley.”

Harley led Ben through the front hall, then past the stairs to the back of the house. She came into the kitchen where Ben saw Jack at the oven humming to himself, weaving his hips back and forth. Ben’s hearthammered hard inside his chest. There he was...right there...his Jack.

Harley moved over and wrapped her arms around Jack's waist from behind and kissed his ear. Bean felt a spike of rage, seeing red for just a moment before he calmed himself. He just had a few steps to take and his goal would be achieved.

Harley smiled against Jack's ear. “Jack, you remember Mr. Cobb's cousin, Ben?”
Ben did his best not to rush over to Jack. He wanted to grab her off of him, but he managed to maintain his calm and walked slowly over, his hand extended. “Hello.”

Jack took the offered hand. “Nice to meet you again Ben.”

Ben felt a shiver run up his arm from touching Jack's hand. He wanted to hold on, but he let Jack take his hand back.

Jack frowned ever so slightly; something immediately felt off to him, though he couldn't put his finger on what it was that bothered him. He decided to play the friendly host, though he kept an arm around Harley's waist protectively.

Jack smiled, a smile that didn't reach his eyes. “Would you like an omelet, Ben?”

“No, no thank you. I already ate, but as I was telling your wife, I just arrived back from the city and I had bought some extra muffins from a little bakery by the docks and I thought you both might like some.” Ben smiled innocently motioning toward the paper bag he had placed on the counter.

Jack frowned slightly, but nodded. “Well thank you.”

Harley stepped away from Jack which made Jack stiffen. He could just tell that something was off, a feeling in the air, a “vibe” he was getting, but he had no way of telling what exactly it was that was making his skin crawl. There was just something about this man's presence that made Jack uncomfortable, something that made Jack want to strangle the man. Jack preferred going with his instincts, but held off.

Jack took a deep breath through his nose. “So, how are you liking Gotham Ben?” Jack reached over picking up his pack of cigarettes and the lighter Harley had given to him. He pulled a cigarette out and offered one to Ben, who eagerly took it. Jack lit his cigarette then leaned forward to light Ben's. Ben looked at Jack, with a small smile as he lit the cigarette. Jack stepped back, his eyes narrowed just slightly.

Ben smiled breathing deep on the cigarette. “Thank you Jack. I can call you Jack, can I?”

Jack leaned back against the counter and nodded. “Sure.”

It took a great effort of will for Jack not to reach out and throttle the man. He just couldn't see to shake the feeling that something was off about the man. Dangerously off.

Ben's features were too...sharp, eyes too far apart, lips too thin...his nose too sharp...every part of the man made Jack's skin crawl with the urge to murder him...something about him made Jack angry. And then there was the way his eyes followed Harley...not with want..no, Jack would understand and recognize that...hell it would be normal for any man to look at Harley with want. But there was something else...something that made Jack's blood run cold. Ben didn't like Harley, it was clear to him.

Harley poured the coffee and handed Ben his cup of coffee. “Can I get you cream or sugar?” she asked with a smile.

“Oh no, black is fine.” Turning his attention back to Jack, he answered, “I like Gotham quite a bit. I was even thinking of moving here. So how are you both liking the house?” Ben asked with a smile.

Harley started to say something, but Jack reached out tugging her close to him again, his arm once more going around her waist protectively. She frowned a little, but didn't move away from him as Jack said softly blowing out a stream of smoke.
“We're enjoying our house. Where are you from?” Jack asked flicking ash into the ashtray behind him.

Harley frowned watching the two men. There was clearly something going on between them that she didn't understand. She could feel the tension in Jack's body, the way he was holding on to her, the tone of his voice; the vein under Jack left eye stood out which told her clearly he was angry and tense.

Ben smiled, his eyes only on Jack. He took a sip of the coffee. “Oh, I'm from all over. The last place I stayed was Central City...too much sun for me. Before that Star City, but I much prefer Gotham.”

Jack nodded. “Gotham is unique. If you're not careful, though, Gotham will eat you alive.”

Ben smiled, his eyes tracing down Jack's body; he couldn't help himself. He looked so good leaning against the counter, the cigarette dangling between his fingers, one ankle crossed over his foot. If he just didn't have that—woman next to him.

“I can see that. But there are things in Gotham that you can't find anywhere else.” Ben's voice was almost a purr. Harley jerked slightly when she felt Jack's fingers dig possessively into her side.

Ben set his coffee mug down. “Might I ask to use your bathroom?”

Harley glanced at Jack before she spoke. “Ah yeah, it's just past the stairs and through the study. It will be the first door on the left. The door will be open, so you should see it easily.”

Ben smiled flatly at her. “Thank you.”

He hurried off. After he was out of ear shot, Jack hissed. “I don't like him.”

“He's a bit...weird, but...Jack what is wrong? You seem really upset?” Harley gently took Jack's face between her hands.

Jack frowned. “I just...something is wrong with him. I can't put my finger on it, but I don't trust him.”

“You aunt said we could trust Cobb and...” Harley began, but Jack cut her off. “No...it's not that...there is something...” Jack sighed. “Just promise me, never be alone with him all right?”

Harley searched Jack's eyes, then nodded. “Never puddin.”

Jack smiled relaxing a little and wrapping his arms tight around her, holding her against him as if afraid to let her go. He rubbed his nose against hers, brushing his lips tenderly along her own. “I couldn't live without you Harley. I would burn everything to the ground if I lost you.”

Harley frowned in concern, but she kissed him tenderly, her breath warm against his lips, her thumbs stroking softly along his cheeks. “I'm not going anywhere Jack, don't you worry.”

*

Ben waited to make sure neither one of them were following him before he raced up the stairs. His training allowed him to move without a sound, heading to the master bedroom.

The door was partly opened and he slipped inside. The room was dark, but there was a sliver of light peaking through a break in the curtains allowing him to see his way. He slipped inside and hurried across the room toward the master the bath. Here is where his plan would take effect.

Once inside the bathroom, Ben looked around for something to use and smiled when he saw the toothbrushes. He was taking a chance he knew. One of the brushes was purple, the other red...he had noticed that they each favored a certain color...that woman tended to like black and red, but Jack...purple was definitely his color Ben thought with a grin, though he was sure that Jack would look good in any color. For a moment Ben let his mind wander to the thought of having Jack at his side...to finally have that partner he had been hoping for, searching for...

He picked up the red toothbrush, then pulled out the small glass vial from his jacket pocket. Inside the vial was a clear liquid. Ben opened the cap, careful not to let the liquid touch his bare skin. He poured some over the brush's bristles, then blew on the brush until he was sure the liquid had dried on the bristles before he replaced the toothbrush in its holder. The poison he had chosen was one of his own invention. It used a combination of naturally occurring poisons with a few tweaks of his own. Granted, if caught early enough, the poison could be countered with a mustard emetic—just in case he had chosen the wrong brush. Ben wanted to be able to save the object of his affection, but if not caught swiftly, the poison was deadly.

Ben glanced up catching a look at himself in the mirror. He chuckled lightly and blew himself a kiss. This time, everything he wanted would come to pass...and the Court would see that he was right.

Ben hurriedly left the bathroom, racing down the stairs silently, then stopping at the foot of the staircase to take a few deep breaths and steady himself. When he was sure his breathing was fine and he had run a hand over his hair, he walked back into the kitchen. He stopped short when he saw the two of them kissing. He pressed his lips together in anger, but he plastered a smile on his face and stepped in.

“I wish I could stay longer, but I just realized I need to go. Please enjoy the muffins and thank you for the coffee.” Ben smiled flatly.

Jack returned Ben's smile with just as much enthusiasm as his guest. “Let me walk you to the door.”

He gave Harley a kiss on the cheek. “Be right back pumpkin.”

Harley nodded with a slight frown as Jack went to see Ben out.

*

Jack walked beside Ben, which had Ben as giddy as a girl with her crush. He smiled at Jack, a genuine smile that reached to his eyes. “It was really nice to see you.”

Jack stopped and glared at Ben. “You don't need to come calling here again.”

Ben looked stunned and blinked. “But...what did I do?”

Jack grinned. “Nothing, not a thing. But I don't like you. I don't like the way you look at Harley and I don't want you coming around here and bothering us again.”

Ben narrowed his eyes. “Fine. But you are going to want me to come back. You are going to need me.”

Jack grabbed Ben, shoved the shorter man up against the wall hard enough that he knocked the air out of his lungs. Jack's fingers dug painfully into Ben's shoulders. The smile that Jack gave the younger man was feral, flat and sinister. “Now Ben dear, please shut your mouth. As I said, I don't like you. I don't want you coming around here again. I will not want you. I will not need you. And if you know what is good for you, you will tell your uncle adios, and go crawl back under whatever rock you crawled out from under. And if you try to make things difficult for Harley and me, I will take great pleasure in the opportunity to teach you a lesson on manners. Now, I'm being polite here.”
Jack leaned in close, his blue eyes boring into Ben's. “You haven't done anything wrong, you haven't done anything to actually bother either of us. You just rub me wrong, which is why I am being so kind as to warn you to go away. Okay?”

Ben stared at Jack finding that Jack handling him roughly was a turn on. For a moment he couldn’t reply because the urge to kiss Jack was so strong he didn't trust himself. After a moment Ben took a breath. “Fine. But I promise, soon, you will be happy to see me again.”

Jack dug his fingers into Ben's shoulders, he pulled the man back just enough to slam him up against the wall one more time before he stepped back with a smile and with an elegant gesture of his hand, pointed to the front door. “As they say, don't let the door hit you on the way out.”

Ben smiled at Jack with a lick of his bottom lip before he pulled the door open and left.

A little later Harley leaned back in her chair and rubbed her stomach. “Oh. My. GOD! Jack that was so good!”

Jack chuckled. They were sitting at the kitchen table together (having tossed the muffins after Jack had said he didn't want anything from that little weasel of a man). He took the last bite of omelet and rubbed it around the plate with the fork, scooping up some of the melted cheese. “One more bite.” He grinned holding the fork out.

Harley groaned. “I can't!”

Jack looked at her seductively, fluttering his lashes. “What if I promise to work it off of you, hmmm?”

Harley giggled. “Are you trying to seduce me Mr. Wayne?”

“Maybe Mrs. Wayne.” Jack ran the tip of his tongue under his upper teeth until Harley was giggling. “You are such a joker.”

Jack's grin increased. “Oh...I like that...say it again.”

“What?” Harley asked smiling at him.

“Call me joker again.” Jack giggled while he leaned closer with the bite of omelet on the end of his fork.

Harley smiled. “Joker.”

Jack laughed and shoved the last bite between her lips. Harley squealed. “Ack! Jack!”

“Ah! Now you have to eat it!” Jack grabbed her plate and stood up kissing her cheek. Harley chewed picking up their now empty mugs of coffee to put in the sink and swallowed.

“You get to do all the cooking.” She smiled.

“Ha!” Jack laughed and smacked her on the rear. Harley giggled. “I'm going to go brush my teeth.”

Jack nodded. “I'll be up in a minute...you know...to work that egg and cheese off of you.” He waggled his eyebrows at her.

Harley giggled. “I don't know why I bother getting dressed.”
Jack yelled after her. “I don't either!”

Harley giggled making her way up the stairs two at a time, then walking down the hall to their bedroom. She didn't bother with the light as there was light coming through the part in the curtains. Since she and Jack had no plans together, she figured they would be in bed together all day...she sighed happily as she walked into the bathroom.

She looked at herself in the mirror for a moment, smiling. She was happy, happier than she had ever been. With a sigh, she picked up her toothbrush and the tube of toothpaste, put on a generous amount of paste and brushed her teeth.

She winced rinsing her mouth and leaned forward to look in the mirror pulling her upper lip back. She had a tiny cut on her gum from Jack and the fork. She ran her tongue over the tiny wound then walked back into the bedroom while pulling her shirt over her head and tossed it into a corner. She hopped up on the edge of the bed to pull her socks off when she felt a wave of nausea wash over her. Harley frowned and put her hand to her stomach.

“That's weird,” Harley murmured to herself. No sooner had the words left her mouth than she groaned in pain as her insides felt as if they had suddenly twisted in on themselves. She fell to the side, the pain increasing steadily.

Harley gasped in pain drawing her legs up. “Ahh!”

*

Jack came up the stairs grinning and yelled. “You better be in bed naked!”

He hurried down the hall and pushed open their bedroom door, then stopped in the doorway his brow furrowed in question. There was no sign of Harley. Jack stepped further into the room then grinned.

“Okay, where are you hiding? Didn't know we were going to play a game? So what do I get if I find you...Hmm? Or do I get to choose?” Jack chuckled coming around the side of the bed heading toward the bathroom and stopped dead.

Harley was lying on the floor, unconscious and with a small dribble of blood on the floor around her mouth.
You're My Kind

Time seemed to stop. The air in the room stilled and the only sound that Jack heard was the sound of his heartbeat in his ears and the strange raggedness of his own breathing. He couldn't move; Jack stood there and stared down at Harley. She just laid there, unmoving, his Harley...unmoving...blood...it was as if each thing had to slowly register in his mind...

It took three quick panicked breaths before he was moving again. His mind raced over the scene: the only blood was from her mouth, only a small amount; no wounds were visible. She could have possibly had a seizure, but he would have heard her fall violently he thought, and then the subsequent convulsions. His next guess was poison. He had seen the effects of poison before in his experiments. He registered that she had clearly started to undress, which meant whatever it was had hit her suddenly before she could do anything and that she hadn't noticed anything strange, like an odd taste or smell.

Jack stepped over to her side quickly, dropped down on his knees, and leaned over to press his fingers to her neck. Her heart was beating, but it was irregular. He rolled her over gently, saw blood on her lips, felt that her skin pale and clammy. He lifted her up tenderly and set her back on the bed. “Harley, Harley can you hear me? Come on sweets, I need you to wake up.” Jack kept his voice calm though he was in turmoil, a cross between rage and terror. He propped her up against some pillows, her head lolled to the side, but she groaned in pain. Good, he thought clinically, she was semi-conscious.

“Harley!” Jack grabbed her face forcefully with one hand, his fingers pressed hard into her skin as he struggled to control his raising panic. He forced her to face him. Her eyes fluttered and she groaned again, then gagged like she was about to vomit. Another trickle of blood spilled from the side of her mouth.

Jack hissed. Poison—that's what it had to be...there was no question of it now; he thought back on his own experiences...the victims with the smiles. That had been a form of poison mixed with a variety of chemicals. He smiled for just a moment, he loved working with poisons and chemicals...Harley had definitely been a distraction from that...maybe he should pick it up again? He shook himself as a small giggle escaped his lips, he was letting his mind wander in his panic, as if his mind wanted to race away from the situation, the raw terror. He giggled again and covered his mouth with a hand though his blue eyes were clear stricken with fear, his brows knitted together. No...no, no, he needed to focus. He knew poisons, he knew more about poisons than most people. He grabbed her face and pulled back each of her eyelids. Her pupils were dilated...he frowned thinking to himself, he couldn't be sure. Whatever this was, it was fast acting, probably through skin to skin contact...though if she ingested that would do it too. Jack's look of panic began to shift to determination. What could she had ingested up here? Jack's mind raced...she had said she was going to brush her teeth...

He stood up and raced into the bathroom. He saw her toothbrush in its place in the holder. He reached out and grabbed her toothbrush quickly, knocking over the toothbrush holder which sent it tumbling loudly into the sink. He sniffed the brush. He could smell the mint of the toothpaste, but there was a cloying scent underneath, maybe plant-based...Jack closed his eyes running through his mind the list of easily obtained plant-base poisons, then a list of plants that he knew were poisonous, how quickly they acted, symptoms, antidotes. He couldn't be absolutely sure, of course, but he would take a guess that the poison was plant based, anything else might have given off a chemical smell or taste that would have alerted Harley. There were a lot of plants, flowers that could be used for poison that were tasteless and odorless.

Jack didn’t have time to waste, he followed his gut and his own knowledge of poisons and chemicals. He leaned forward and pressed a kiss to Harley’s forehead.

“Hold on for me sweets,” he whispered, reaching out to caress her cheek and jaw before he stood up. He dashed out of their bedroom and down the stairs, taking them in long, dangerous hops, barely holding onto the bannister as he flew down the stairs, hitting the bottom where he turned and rushed to the kitchen.

He stopped in the middle of the kitchen, for a moment overwhelmed by the scent of eggs and coffee...how just moments before everything had been perfect. Jack shook himself again. He raced over to the cabinet where the spices were kept. He did a swift search, coming up with powdered mustard, vinegar and some lemon juice. He grabbed a glass and raced up the stairs.

Harley hadn’t moved, though she had slipped back into unconsciousness. Jack set everything down and started with the mustard. He opened the bottle of mustard and using just his eye to measure, he dumped approximately a teaspoon into the glass. He then hurried into the bathroom and turned the water on until it ran warm. He put the glass under the water, then hurried back, rolling the glass, mixing the mustard powder and grabbing the bathroom trashcan as he walked past it.

He sat back down on the bed and shook Harley. “Harley, come on baby—I need you to wake up.”

She groaned, moving only slightly, but her eyes didn't open. He yanked her up, but she began to slide back down again.

Jack hissed. “Harley. Wake up, NOW!”

Jack did something he hated to do, something that made him recoil, but he needed her awake enough to drink this or he was going to lose her. Jack set the glass down and slapped her across the face.

It wasn’t a gentle slap; it was brutal, a smack so hard that her head whipped to the side. The sound of his hand striking her seemed to fill the room. She didn't react, so Jack slapped her again, harder. Harley’s head whipped around hard enough that he would have thought he had given her whiplash, but this time she reacted.

Harley groaned, her eyes fluttering. Jack grabbed her by her shoulders and shook her. “Harley, God damn it, wake up!”

She turned her head to look at him, he could already see that he had hit her hard enough that he had bloodied her lip. For a moment he felt odd...which caused him to giggle before he was able to get himself under control again. Jack ignored the injury he had caused her and instead grabbed her by her upper arms and shook her hard enough that her head flopped back and forth. “HARLEY!”

Her eyes fluttered and she groaned weakly, her skin was pale enough that she looked almost milky, and a line of sweat had formed on her brow and upper lip.

Harley's head wobbled for a moment. Jack was ready to strike her again when she moaned. “Jack?”

He pulled her forward and shoved the glass to her lips. “Drink this sweets, do it now!”

He pressed the glass to her mouth, not waiting to see if she understood or if she could even swallow. He didn't care, this was taking too long and he would be damned if he was going to lose her.

Jack growled. “Drink it, Harley!”
She didn’t fight him exactly, but she was having difficulty. He grabbed her head, yanked her head back by her hair, and poured the foul concoction down her throat. Harley gasped and sputtered, swallowed, but in the next instant she gagged.

Jack grabbed her and shoved the bathroom trash can under her mouth just as she vomited.

She did it again, four times in quick succession, throwing up her breakfast mixed with flecks of blood. Jack stood up, hurrying around to the other side of the bed, crawling across to position himself to hold her hair back. She vomited violently again, but this time there was less blood in the mix. When it didn't seem that she was going to vomit again,

Jack eased her head back, resting her head against the pillows. Jack took the trash can, setting it aside before he sat down next to her and pulled her into his arms laying her head against his shoulder.

“What happened?” she asked in a whispered.

Jack closed his eyes, squeezing them tightly shut for a moment; now that the worst had passed, a couple of tears escaped his eyes and ran down his cheeks. He angrily wiped them away before he stroked his fingers through her hair holding her close against him. “I...I think you were poisoned Harls.”

Harley frowned in confusion. “What?”

“I need to call Alex. I want you to rest, stay right here.” Jack said softly, kissing the top of her head.

Harley nodded still looking confused, but feeling too weak to really do much about it. She sank back against the pillows with Jack’s help, easing her down to the bed. He took the trash can with him as he stood up and pulled his phone out, quickly dialing Alex while he made his way down the stairs. On the second ring Alex answered. “Hey bro, what the fuck is up?”

“I need you to bring the doctor,” Jack said simply.

*

After seeing Jack and Harley, Ben took a boat back to Gotham. He knew, no matter the outcome with that woman, he needed to put some distance between himself, Jack, William Cobb and the Court. At least until he could bring Jack into the fold. Ben smiled to himself. He would get his treat and the praise of the Court once he had a Wayne involved again. After Agatha was released...he shook his head. Agatha Wayne was before his time, but he had heard the stories, about what she had sacrificed to pull the Waynes out of the Court. Ancient history. The Court would be so pleased with him when he brought Jack in, that all his sins would be forgiven.

Ben wasn’t really worried about being caught by the Court or Jack. He had a few friends in the city who were not affiliated with the Court. A few friends who were minor mobsters, still struggling to pull themselves through the levels of the Five Families, none of whom were associated with the Court; they were lowly gangsters, trash as far as the Court was concerned. As along at their petty squabbles didn’t interfere with the real running of Gotham, the Court pretty much left the families and the other gangs alone. The Panessa family was the lowest of the Five, but Tomaso was an old friend —and occasional lover—who still owed Ben a great many favors; hiding out with him in Gotham would be easy. He could disappear for a little while, vanishing enough that neither the Court nor Jack would find him until he was ready. A grin crossed his lips in satisfaction. He could send Jack gifts, letting him know that he was out there and waiting for him...Ben sighed. It would be so romantic. This time, he was sure he wouldn't become bored with his plaything. Jack was the one...he was positive. Jack wouldn't end up like a few of his other obsessions.

A couple of hours later, Harley was resting in bed, sleeping soundly. She had an IV inserted, slowly dripping fluids and Jack had tenderly removed her clothing, putting one of her large sleeping shirts on her and tucked her into the bed. Henderschott had checked her over, telling Jack how he had probably saved her life. The doctor gave him a list of things to watch out for, but that he was confident she would recover just fine.

Jack sat on the edge of the bed. Harley was curled on her side, almost around him, her hands tucked under her cheek as she slept. She still looked pale, but the color was slowly returning to her cheeks. Jack smiled at his wife and gently stroked her hair back from her face, tucking the gold strands behind her ear as he gazed at her. He leaned over and kissed her cheek softly, rubbing the tip of his nose along her cheekbone. She murmured in her sleep, a whispered: “Puddin...”

He smiled while continuing to caress her face. “I'll be back in a little bit sweets.”

Jack stood and turned. He stopped in the doorway to look at her, his chest hurting before he stepped out, leaving the door open a crack before he made his way down the stairs to where Alice and Alex were in the kitchen. He could hear their voices and the smell of fresh coffee. Alice looked up as Jack entered, her expression anxious. “How is she?” Jack sat down at the kitchen island. Alice set a cup of coffee down in front of him along with his pack of cigarettes and the lighter Harley had stolen for him. There was a bottle of bourbon on the counter which Alex picked up and poured directly into Jack's coffee cup without a word. Jack smiled at him, picked up the drink and took a long sip before he spoke. “Henderschott says she'll be fine. Gave me a list of things to watch out for, but he confirmed my thoughts...poison. That little fucking prick Ben did it. I just know it was him.” Jack squeezed the coffee mug tightly enough that the ceramic made a slight squeak of protest.

Alex frowned, taking a sip of his own spiked coffee. “Ben? Who the fuck is Ben?”

Jack took another long drink before he set his mug down and withdrew a cigarette from the pack, lit it, and took a long drag, slowly blowing out a line of smoke. “Little weasel of a cousin to this place's groundskeeper.”

Alex frowned. “So what makes you think it's this fucking Ben?”

“He was here earlier this morning. I can't put my finger on what it is exactly, but that fuck rubs me wrong.” Jack narrowed his eyes. The expression on his face made Alex's blood run cold. Whoever this Ben was, he was going to die and die horribly.

Jack ran his fingertip along the edge of his coffee mug as he continued. “From the moment I saw him, I didn't like him and today...I threatened him, told him not to come back here.” Jack frowned remembering, then shook his head. “He was the only person in this house who didn't belong...he is the only one who had an opportunity...I know it's him. I'm going to go over there and rip his balls off and make him eat them.”

Alex shuddered. “Geez, thanks for the fucking visual Jack.”

Jack laughed as he took a sip of his coffee. Alex sighed. “I'll put the word out about this Ben...just say I'm looking for him. Gotta be careful though, can't let anyone know my neutrality has slipped.”

Jack smiled. “I'd appreciate that Alex. I hope you know that I appreciate all of it, you choosing Harley and me...”
Alex shrugged. “Ah man, I could only play the Switzerland game for so long. I fucking knew that, but if I'm careful, I can still play the fucking game for a while longer.” Alex grinned and winked.

Alice snorted. “Knowing you Alex, you're going to be playing this game for a long while yet.”

Alex grinned broadly. “Nice when your girl's got your back.”

Alice chuckled.

Alex took a sip of his spiked coffee. “So, have you thought about our next job yet? I mean, we seem to be on a fucking roll with those last two...Haskins aside.”

Jack frowned. “No, not really. Any ideas?”

Alex shrugged. “No, not yet.”

Alice spoke up, her voice soft. “Ah, I might actually have an idea...”

Both men turned to look at her. Alice blushed a little. “Well, I don't know if either one of you heard, but fashion week in Gotham starts on Friday. There are a lot of rich people and celebrities who like to go to those things. Anyway, fashion week is being held at the Wayne and Elliot Skyline Square, but they are all going to be staying at the fancy hotels. I bet if we hit one of the hotel safes...”

Her voice trailed off when Jack grinned, sitting up straighter. “No...no...something...bigger! That's a good start, Alice, but...” He spread his fingers out, his hands fanned as if he was showing off something spectacular. “I want the Red Hood Gang to be the next big thing in Gotham, right? Well, how about we make our debut?”

Alex narrowed his eyes suspiciously at Jack. “What the fuck do you mean by debut?”

Jack smiled. “Instead of doing something safe like robbing a safe or two, why don't we rob fashion week itself?!”

Alex and Alice shared a look of confusion. Jack smiled at them, using his hands to demonstrate in wide flamboyant gestures. “We make this big! Instead, we walk out on the runway and rob everyone at gun point right there. And you know...Ben actually gave me an idea. I've been neglecting my experiments with poisons and chemicals...” Alex gave him a quizzical look, which Jack answered. “I'll tell you later—it was before Harley. Anyway, why don't I revive that...how hard would it be to set up a few chemical gas explosive in a room full of fashion aficionados. I have a great idea for a laughing gas...not deadly mind you, but can't you see a room full of tight asses laughing themselves literally sick while we rob them? The press coverage alone will make it worth the risk!” Jack grinned brightly.

Alex chuckled. “Okay, Mr. Showman, what if one of those fuckhead vigilantes decides to show up? All we need is Hawkgirl...”

Alice interrupted. “I heard her name is Huntress.”

Alex lifted a brow. “Huntress, eh? Anyway, what if her and her fucking bloated Black spot sidekick...”

Alice offered quietly. “Black Spider, he's called Black Spider.”

Alex turned to fully face his girlfriend. “Are you serious?”
She shrugged. “Read it online.”

Alex frowned. “That's really their fucking names? Huntress and Black Spider?”

She shrugged. “Not any worse than that Batman guy.”

Jack chuckled. “Oh I don't know, Batman seems to have a bit more class.”

Alex nodded. “Nicer fucking suit. I mean I've only seen a few “bigfoot” like photos online, but...”

Jack nodded. “When he appeared at that Gala, yeah, nice expensive suit. He isn't playing at being a vigilante—he takes his career choice very seriously.”

Alice grinned wide. “Nice suit, lots of muscles.”

Alex shot her a dirty look, which only made her laugh. “Oh honey you know I love you. You have something Batman will never have.”

Alex frowned. “I'm fucking scared to ask, what?”

“One very clever and skilled hand.” She leaned on the table putting her chin in her hand and grinned like a cat at him. Alex blinked at her and actually blushed, which had Jack laughing hard enough he had to lay his head on his hands to catch his breath.

“Haha, very fucking funny,” Alex muttered still embarrassed as he reached over and smacked Jack on the shoulder. Jack chortled. “Give me a minute, one-handed master!”

Alex snarled, but there was a laugh in his voice. “Shut the fuck up Jack.”

Jack giggled. “I seriously cannot wait to tell Harley.”

“Don't you fucking dare!” Alex laughed. Alice giggled. “All right boys, so...holding up fashion week. I really like this plan. Maybe Harley, Sandra and I can snag some dresses.” Jack grinned brightly. “I don't see why not! I figure we could put some gas bombs throughout the venue, then I could set some duds for any would-be vigilantes that decide to make an appearance...give them something else to worry about besides stopping us...OOo must save the citizens!” Jack chuckled. “But yes, we will be an unknown element. They'll have no idea if we would really blow the place up or not. We can make them choose between pursuing us or disarming bombs.”

Alex frowned. “Duds?”

Jack shrugged. “I don't see any reason to blow up a bunch of fashion models and besides, I appreciate fashion just as much as any of them. I mean to say, I LOVE fashion! There is nothing more divine that a well cut suit. So why destroy all those lovely outfits?” Jack giggled. “Harley is going to love this...now, I just need to pick up a few things for making gas bombs.”

Alex sipped his cooling coffee. “What about us? I mean if we breathe this gas in that you're trying to make, won't we be fucking affected too?”

Jack smiled flicking his ashes into his now empty coffee cup. “Do you think you could get a hold of some gas masks and some red spray paint?”

Alex grinned slowly. “Oh...I see, sure can.”

“Fashion week doesn't begin until Friday you said, right?” Jack glanced over at Alice who nodded. “Yep, Friday.”
“That gives us a handful of days for me to develop the gas, prepare the bombs, the gas masks and check out the place. Not a problem.” Jack smiled with confidence.

Alex shrugged. “I'm in.”

Alice grinned. “Me too.”

Jack laughed. That was when they all heard the sound of a boat outside. Jack turned toward the front door, his expression going stony. He stood up slowly, putting out his cigarette with the tips of his fingers and dropping the butt into the coffee cup.

“If you guys will excuse me, I'll be right back.”

Alex frowned watching Jack walk out of the kitchen. He shook his head. “Someone is going to get a fucking beat down.”

Cobb returned home later that afternoon. It had started to rain again, but his hands were full so he just walked through the rain without the comfort of an umbrella. It was a cold rain that seeped into his bones, seeming to find every corner that wasn't completely covered and chilling his skin. He would start a fire in the fireplace when he returned home, maybe have a glass of brandy or something else equally as warming. He had been in Gotham doing a little shopping, food and supplies. Working on the property of Catherine House required constant maintenance. Despite that fact that his real job was working for the Court, his second job sometimes seemed to be his actual vocation...being a caretaker at Catherine House was a twenty-four hour, seven days a week job. He had gone into Gotham to purchase some paint, to put in an order for a new riding lawn mower and to hire a crew to remove a couple of dead trees on the property. The trees he could have done himself, but it was a big project, two large oaks that had succumbed to bacterial wetwood and needed to be removed. Concern for his own safety prompted the hiring of a crew.

He had left Ben at the house, alone. Not something he liked to do, but he hadn't had a choice. He had needed to go into Gotham and Ben refused to go with him. Cobb didn't like Ben. Spoiled rich kid, father was a member of the inner circle of the Court which was why they had put up with Ben's behavior for as long as they had; Cobb had heard all the stories about Ben and his obsessive/compulsive behavior that seemed to be escalating steadily. Cobb was pretty sure that Ben was finally at the end of the line of what the Court would tolerate. One more screw up and Ben would find himself on the end of a Talon's blade. He had noticed that Ben's behavior had radically changed after meeting the Waynes up at the main house. The Court had told Cobb to keep his distance from them, just to watch, to observe; Ben was to do the same, but Cobb had seen it almost immediately, a flicker of (madness maybe?) in Ben's eyes, a particular twitch in his facial muscles and hands. Then, over the last few days, all Ben had seemed interested in was Jack Wayne. He had caught Ben doing internet searches, writing down notes, asking too many questions about Jack Wayne to the point that Cobb had reported the behavior, but the Court had left Ben with him despite Cobb's concerns.

Cobb arrived back at the house, giving Catherine House a glance, but without any real concern as he walked down the path leading around the house, carrying two gallons of paint and a couple of plastic bags of groceries. When he arrived at his own significantly smaller home and entered, he was immediately struck by the feeling that something was off, felt a shift in the air. He could feel the silence of the place. He knew without looking that Ben was gone.

Cobb cursed. He set the bags and paint down and was about to perform a thorough search when there was a knock at his door. Cobb actually jumped, the knock was so startling. He had been caretaker here for years and the only knocks he ever received were the ones he had known were coming.

Cobb made his way over to the door. The front door had one small square window in it. Cobb glanced out the window and saw Jack Wayne waiting on the stoop. The man wasn't wearing a jacket, his clothing and his hair damp from the rain, but it was the look in Jack Wayne's eyes that had Cobb on edge.

He frowned and opened the door. “Hello Mr. Wayne, how can I...”

Cobb didn't finish his sentence before Jack punched him. The strike hit Cobb square in the nose and upper lip, knocking the big man backwards into the house. The punch was surprisingly strong, Cobb thought only for a moment before Jack's other fist hit him in the stomach, a direct hit to the diaphragm to knock his wind from his lungs. Jack's next strike was a backhand to Cobb's face again that slammed the man to the left. Jack grabbed Cobb by the back of his jacket and threw him against the wall, hard enough that the impact left a small crater in the plaster. Jack spun Cobb around to face him and hit the man again, not a punch this time, but a hard slap to the face.

Cobb was caught completely by surprise, not just by the viciousness of Jack's attack, but with the power behind it. The man was deceptively strong and there was a deadliness to him that if Cobb wasn't getting his ass handed to him, he might respect.

Jack grabbed Cobb from the wall and tossed him head first into the other side of the front room, Cobb's head and shoulder hitting the plaster surface. Cobb slipped and fell to the floor. Jack snarled and kicked the bigger man in the side.

"Where is he?!! Where the fuck is Ben Orchard!!"

Cobb threw his arms up to protect his head while at the same time bringing his legs up to try and protect his side.

“I don't know!! I don't know, I just got home!”

Jack hissed, his anger—his rage—almost consuming him. Jack dropped to a crouch, grabbing Cobb by the front of his jacket and lifting him off the floor.

“Tell me where that little piece of shit is Cobb! TELL ME!” Jack hit Cobb hard enough in the face with his fist that blood flew from the other man's mouth, staining the floor red.

Cobb groaned in pain. “I'm serious!! I don't know!! I just got home and he was gone!”

Jack held the man by his jacket staring down at him. Cobb looked up at Jack, one eye already starting to swell closed. “What...why are you looking for him? What'd he do?” Cobb's voice was laced with genuine curiosity and confusion.

Jack was breathing hard through his teeth. “He hurt my girl...he tried to poison my wife.”

Cobb frowned in confusion and Jack let go of him. Cobb slowly pushed himself up to a sitting position, Jack stepped back, allowed the man sit up. He leaned against the wall looking up at Jack.

“You...are you sure?” Cobb asked, his words slurring slightly against his swelling bottom lip.

Jack was trembling with rage, his hands fisted at his side now. Cobb glanced at the man's bloody knuckles and smiled. He didn't like getting beaten anymore than anyone else, but he could respect a man who knew out to dish out a beating. Jack glared at him, his voice flat. (Cobb smiled inwardly, the voice of a man not affected by violence, he realized.) “Oh, I'm sure.”

Cobb frowned leaning his head back against the wall. His entire face and side hurt. He ran a tongue along his bottom lip, tasting the coppery blood from a split lip. “Well, if he did what you said, I'm betting he's somewhere in Gotham by now, hidden away in a little rats hole.”

Jack took a handful of breaths through his nose working to calm himself. “You know why he would try to hurt her?”

Cobb looked up at Jack. “My guess, because of you.”

“Me?” Jack frowned in surprise.

“Ben's been fixated on you since he met you. My guess, he wants you and sees her—your wife—as a barrier in his way.” Cobb pulled his legs up and rested his arms on his knees. “Boy's got an issue with obsessing.”

Jack frowned. “Why didn't you say anything?”

Cobb shrugged. “Didn't know he was going down the murder route.”

Jack chewed his bottom lip in thought then snarled, his blue eyes cold. He pointed one long finger at Cobb. “You hear anything, you tell me. I find out you know where he is and didn't tell me...I will kill you and I won't make it fast,” he promised in a cold tone.

Jack turned and stormed out of the house. Cobb watched him go, strolling purposefully down the path, unaffected by the rain. Cobb smiled, ignoring the sharp sting of his split lip. He believed Jack Wayne would kill him if given the chance. He had to agree with Ben on one account, Jack would be a great addition to the Owls...some day. He stood up slowly, wincing and reaching up to hold his jaw and move it around, the taste of blood still strong in his mouth. Guess he needed to contact the Court and let them know Ben had finally crossed the line in a way that he wasn't coming back. Cobb grinned. He really couldn't say he would be sorry to see that kid go. Maybe Wayne would find him...it was the least Ben deserved.

The fool.

Across Gotham in a fancy apartment on the west side of the Diamond District, Agatha poured a liberal amount of whiskey into her own coffee. The drink was more whiskey with coffee than coffee with whiskey. She was waiting for Lincoln to call and give her the all clear, to let her know that the Court had no idea she was back in Gotham or to get out if it looked like they might know of her presence....or warn Jack and Bruce if she thought the Court was about the make a move on them. There were just so many possibilities. Too many, she thought in irritation. She took another long swallow of her drink. Ugh, why had she been so foolish as to give them that house?

She sighed, holding her drink and walking to the large picture window that occupied one whole wall of the apartment. The rain had started again and she could feel the chill reaching through the glass to settle into her bones, reminding her of exactly hold old she really was...She stared out the window sipping her drink. She could look out at Gotham from here, see all its beauty and none of its ugliness that liked to stay well hidden in the shadows, but she suspected it wouldn't be long before that rot would seep into the open and the Court wouldn't be able to stop it. She suspected they might be the cause of Gotham's decline more than its help as they tried to twist Gotham and its people into a vision they saw fit as they had been doing for so many years. Agatha wrinkled her nose and muttered. “Stupid Owls.”

That was when her phone rang. Agatha scurried over, set her mug down and picked up her phone. The number was unlisted. “Hello?” she answered with a quick press of the button.

“Agatha, it's me.” Lincoln's cool yet melodic voice answered her. “Well, you are in luck—the Court doesn't know you're here, but we do have a problem.”

Agatha frowned turning to look back out the window again. Of course. “Problem?”

“It seems Ben Orchard attempted to kill your nephew's wife,” Lincoln explained softly. “Cobb just contacted me. Jack Wayne showed up and beat the shit out of Cobb, told him that Ben had poisoned his wife. I'm assuming she's alive, but Ben has gone missing.”

Agatha groaned. “Damn. But she's okay?”

She could almost hear the shrug in Lincoln's voice. “Not sure.”

“Well, maybe it's time I go back to Catherine House. Will Cobb keep quiet?” she asked wishing she had a cigarette. She walked over to her purse, flipping the clutch open and dumping the contents onto the bed.

She could hear the frown in Lincoln's voice. “I think so. He has no love for Orchard and he seemed impressed with Wayne. Not sure, but I'm willing to bet that Cobb will alert the Court to Orchard, but not about you.”

Agatha smiled as she found her pack of cigarettes, an expensive import brand from Dubai. “Thank you Lincoln.”

“Always de tout beauté.”

Harley woke slowly to the sound of Jack singing softly, the smell of cigarette smoke and the light bouncing of the bed as he tapped one foot, his ankles crossed. His voice was low and rich as he sang softly to himself.

“Let's grab our gold switchblade
And make us a blood pact, babe
To love and to fuck and to only see ourselves
And remember this...
Would you kill, kill, kill for me?
I love you enough to ask you again
Would you kill, kill, kill for me?
You won't be kissing me unless you kill for me Kill, kill, kill for me...”

Harley rolled over and smiled to see Jack sitting up on the bed smoking a cigarette, his eyes closed, dressed in his slacks and dress shirt, now untucked, the sleeves rolled up, his feet bare as he sang and continued to bounce one foot to the rhythm of the song. She watched him quietly as the smoke created a haze around his features.

She whispered softly. “You know I would kill for you.”

Jack opened his eyes and smiled. “There you are—how you feeling sweets?”

Harley took a deep breath. “Better.” She frowned, holding her arm up with the IV. “Though I could do without this.”

Jack took a long pull on his cigarette, blew the smoke toward the ceiling before he grinned like a cat at her. “Nope, you have to keep it in until morning.”

Jack smiled and leaned over to put the cigarette out in the ashtray on his side of the bed. He picked up a glass of water that was sitting there and helped Harley sit up just enough to take several sips of water. He set the glass back before he slid down to lay on his side to face her.

She pouted, which caused Jack to laugh gently. She sighed happily then and reached out to stroke his face. “So what happened exactly?”

Jack reached out and laid his hand against her cheek, his thumb caressed the side of her mouth. “You were poisoned.”

“Poisoned?” Harley asked, clearly confused.

Jack nodded, his expression serious. “Yes. Ben.”

Harley frowned. “But...how? Why?”

Jack leaned closer to press his mouth to hers in a gentle kiss before he spoke. “I went to confront Cobb. He seems to think Ben wants me.”

Harley's expression became murderous. “What?”

She started to push herself up, but Jack laughed and yanked her gently back down to him. “He's gone sweets, don't know where yet, but we'll find him. I promise. He isn't going to get away with this.”

Harley snarled. “I'll kill him myself. No one gets you but me.”

Jack chuckled. “Mm...I like that. Can I watch?”

Harley sighed softly and brushed the back of her fingers along his cheek with a smile. “Yes you can, but I get to kill him okay?”

Jack grinned. “All right, your kill sweets. I'll just watch.”

They both shared a smile then Harley added sullenly. “Sorry he ruined our morning. What time is it?”

Jack brought his right arm up to look at his watch. “Hmm...looks to be almost six p.m.”

“Oh my god, I've been asleep all day?” Harley gasped, but Jack only laughed softly. “Poisoned remember? Don't worry. Alex and Alice kept me entertained. Came up with our next job, this Friday actually.”
Harley's blue eyes sparkled with excitement. “OH tell!”

Jack grinned before he went over the plan. He watched how Harley's expression changed. She become increasingly excited. When he was done explaining Harley squealed.

“That's perfect puddin!! Soon, The Red Hood gang will be causing terror throughout Gotham.” She giggled. “Bruce would be livid if he knew it was us.”

“You know pumpkin, at some point I just might have to make sure he does.” Jack grinned at the thought. “I'll just burn his righteous ass.”

They both laughed. Jack stroked some of her hair back from her face. “Can I get you anything? The doctor said you could eat, but to keep it light.”

Harley wiggled. “Later. I want to pick up where we left off before I was so rudely poisoned.”

Jack frowned. “I don't know Harley. You need rest...”

Harley stuck her lip out and batted her eyes at him. Jack chuckled. He pulled her close and kissed her softly, his lips brushed across her mouth. “I love you Harley,” he whispered against her lips, and traced her lips with his tongue before he kissed her again.

Harley moaned softly and wrapped her arms around him, though the IV made it difficult. Jack chuckled again. “Roll onto your back, that way you won't keep pulling on that. I don't want you to pull it out.”

Harley smiled and rolled onto her back with a bright smile. “Okay I was good—do I get a treat now?”

Jack chuckled. “Oh, you get a treat!” He pulled her sleep shirt up and surprised her by blowing raspberries on her stomach.

Harley squealed in surprise. “PUDDIN!”

Jack grinned. “Yes?” Then he did it again. Harley squealed loudly kicking her feet. “JACK!! Stop it!!”

Jack giggled nibbling on her stomach. “Never!! You can't make me!”

Harley groaned. “You are such a cheat!! I'm hooked up to an IV!!”

Jack grinned and laid his cheek against her stomach. “Have I told you that I love you Mrs. Wayne?”

Harley smiled. “You can say it again.”

He giggled with a quick kiss to the soft skin of her stomach. “I love you.”

Jack sat up and started to remove his shirt. Harley watched him while she ran her tongue over her lips. She reached down to shove her panties down her legs, arching her back before she brought her legs up and tossed them aside. Jack gave her a devastatingly handsome grin just before he crawled over her to slide off the bed and started to unzip his slacks removing them and his boxers in one convenient motion.

Harley started to pull her shirt over her head, but instantly became tangled with her IV drip. Jack laughed and reached over to gently push her hands down. “Leave it sweets.”

Harley dropped the shirt. “Okay puddin.”
Jack eased her shirt up over her breasts (having removed her bra earlier when he dressed her) and crawled back onto the bed, and hovered over her. Harley spread her legs, then she hooked them around the back of his thighs. Jack wiggled down a bit so that he could place a kiss between her breasts, then slowly worked his way up to her throat, pressing his mouth to the hollow of her throat, then her chin before he finally pressed his mouth to hers. Harley stroked her fingers through his hair, watching him kiss her. She smiled tenderly stroking the thick strands of hair back from his face. He raised his head and pressed his lips to hers, then whispered. “My girl.”

Harley answered him with a whispered. “My puddin.”

He chuckled then kissed her passionately. Not with a desperate passion, but with a slow steady burn that seemed to build from deep within; it rose up to flow down through her. She moaned against his mouth, wrapped her arms tightly around him. She could feel his erection pressed against her, but he refrained from entering her yet. Jack just pushed himself up on his elbows, his hands cradled her head while he brushed back her hair tenderly, his mouth gently exploring hers. He paid close attention to his kisses, each press of his lips to hers, each stroke of his tongue was soft, tantalizing, inviting, erotic in the slowest most delicious way that sent shivers up Harley's spine.

Jack dragged his lips slowly down her jaw, then to her throat, following the pulse of her heart, then made his way down again to her chest. He slid down her body, wrapped his hands around her shoulders and stopped at her breasts where he pressed his lips lovingly to her nipples. He stopped at each one to kiss with the fullness of his mouth and tongue. Harley moaned and arched into his kisses, the warmth of his lips and tongue, which caused tickles of erotic, delightful warmth to rush through her.

She moaned again, caressing his hair. “Oh Jack...”

She felt his smile against her skin. He rose back to her mouth where he licked her lips before he reached down between them. He shifted his weight to the side so he could slide his fingers between her legs and stroke over her clitoris, the movements of his fingers slow and sweet.

Harley groaned, arching her hips into his touch while Jack kissed her chin and along her jaw, stroking up and down delicately against her clitoris with his finger. Harley's breathing slowly became pants of pleasure, the warmth and his caresses matching the rhythm of her breath. When Jack knew he was bringing her closer, he increased the rate of his stroking fingers, slick with her fluids and building her up to let her orgasm, yet continuing to keep his touch gentle. He groaned. “Cum for me Harley...yes...my wife...”

Harley came with a loud, low moan as her body arched like a bow under his administrations. “Aahh...Jack!!” the fingers of one hand dug into Jack's skin, her other hand grabbed a fistful of sheet when she rose partly off the bed.

Jack pressed a kiss to the middle of her chest before rolling back on top of her, pressed between her legs, he shifted his hips. He reached down between them, sliding himself against her wet entrance, before he slowly plunged into her, settling deep into her warmth, slipping deeper into her depths with a low groan of pleasure, and pressed his forehead against hers.

Harley held onto him with a groan, bringing her legs up to wrap around his waist, pressing her hips up to meet him. Jack started to move slowly. He would pull back then slid deep into her in a slow thrust, a rolling in and out, wanting to feel each inch of himself as he moved in and out of her, pressing himself fully inside her, with her muscles contracting around him, and then holding him inside her.

Jack shuddered, pressing his forehead to hers. “Harley...uuhh...Harley...I love you...”
Harley held on tightly. She hooked her ankles around him, then slid her legs down again, her feet caressing the back of his legs while she thrust up. “Oh Jack, I love you...love you...”

He kissed her, cradled her head between his hands. He rolled his hips, thrusting deep and slow again, grinding against her gently, yet firmly. Harley groaned while Jack continued to bring her closer and closer again. They moved together, bodies perfectly in sync with one another, until she tensed, her body tightening around him, building until she gasped first, then cried out. Her body arched again, fingers dug into his shoulder as she cried out his name.

Jack tensed when she came, feeling the warm tightness of her orgasm which caused his own to follow quickly behind her. He came with a gasping groan, then covered her mouth with his, his tongue caressing hers while they both rode their orgasms together.

Later that evening, Harley was sitting up in bed with a bowl of soup dressed once more in the large t-shirt, her blonde hair spilling around her shoulders. Jack would occasionally look over to make sure she was eating it and giving her a stern look when she wasn't eating. Then he grinned as he murmured. “Eat your soup or Daddy spank.”

Harley giggled. “That is not incentive to eat puddin. In fact, it's the exact opposite.”

Jack sat on the bed next to her, wearing a pair of pajama pants and a purple t-shirt that read “I love Gotham” across the chest, with a notebook laying on his bent knees and a No. 2 pencil that he had been chewing on, the length of the thing covered in bite marks. He was scribbling quickly. Harley was watching TV, occasionally glancing over at her husband while he worked. He was designing a formula for the gas bombs, occasionally giggling to himself as he worked swiftly, the pencil flying across the page. Harley had glanced over at the notebook, but she could make neither heads nor tails of what Jack was writing, though he seemed pleased with himself.

Jack scribbled frantically then chuckled, sounding for a moment like a villain from a 1950's B-movie. “I think I have it Harls! The perfect blend of laughing gas and my own little chemical twists! This will definitely leave them laughing until they puke! Ha!”

Harley grinned and clapped her hands. “I'm so proud of you puddin!”

Jack laughed with lifted brows. “Oh, save the praise pumpkin until after testing! I'm going to call Alex and have him get me what I need and tomorrow we shall set up a lab...Hehehe!”

Jack tapped his chin with his pencil as he grinned at her. “You can be my lab assistant...but I must insist that you wear a little white lab coat that's unbuttoned all the way down to your breastbone, no bra of course, some fishnets, garters belt, black stilettos and nothing else.” Jack waggled his eyebrows at her. “Oh! Maybe do a lot of bending over.”

He grinned wickedly at her.

Harley laughed. “Are you going to wear a lab coat and nothing else?”

“If that's what you want...” Jack gave her a cat-like grin.

Harley squealed, clapping her hands then stopped with a thoughtful expression. “We won't get nuthin’ done puddin.’”
Jack sighed. “True—okay, after the job...when we get home...Dress up!!”

Harley giggled with glee and anticipation.

*

Later the following day, Alex arrived with all the equipment and chemicals Jack had requested. It was cloudy and chilly out, but no precipitation fell. Jack came down to the docks to help drag up the boxes of lab supplies while Harley put on a fresh cup of coffee for everyone. Alice wouldn't be able to make it because of work and there was no reason to drag Dale and Sandra out here to the island for this part of the plan.

“Man, Jack, this is a lot of fucking stuff and it's all fucking heavy!” Alex muttered, carrying a box under his one arm.

Jack chuckled. “What are you complaining about, you only have to carry half as much an Frost and me.”

Alex made a face at Jack. “Oh haha.”

Jack grinned. “But it is true.”

Frost chuckled walking past both of them his arms loaded with two heavy boxes.. “Even with two arms Boss, he couldn't carry as much as us.”

Jack winced and giggled. “Ouch.”

Alex narrowed his eyes with a smile. “You're both fucking lucky my one arm is carrying a box right now or I would give you both the finger.”

Jack chuckled walking past Alex and up to the house. “Follow me boys, we're setting everything up in the scullery. Harley and I found the old brick room this morning and spent all this time yanking things out of it except for a long wood table, but it came with a couple sinks built right into the wall. It's perfect, the color scheme done in greys and whites—secret lab aesthetic!”

The room was a small room, about the size of an apartment living room where a few wooden racks sat up against the wall and there was a marble and brick deep, double sink set that was attached to the wall.

It took the three men over an hour to get the lab equipment (which did include lab coats, goggles and the gas masks for the gang) set up. Harley mostly leaned against the door watching from the safety of the doorway where she could retreat at any moment. But after much cursing, the lab equipment was ready to go.

Jack slipped on a lab coat, snapped his goggles into place, and turned up the music. (He had a speaker set up for his phone in the corner.) The sounds of “Another One Bites the Dust” beat out of the speakers.

Jack smacked his hands together, which were clad in rubber gloves “All right, time to get this puppy together! Haha!!” Jack laughed and his eyes sparkled with anticipation.

*

The actual work took Jack a few hours. Harley, Alex and Frost stayed out of his way, playing games with Harley; pool, cards and a game of Scrabble which ended up with the three of them spelling out as many dirty words as they could, when they finally heard Jack's voice echo down the halls to them.

“All right—I think I have it!”

Soon the three of them were in the lab where Jack was standing at the table that held all the lab equipment. Harley giggled at her husband who looked like Dr. Frankenstein, dressed in his white lab coat over his dress shirt and slacks, goggles over his eyes, his hair hanging loose around the goggles and a wicked little grin on his lips. On a small plastic stand sitting on the table in front of him, Jack had a small device on display, about the size and shape of an egg. Jack grinned like a little boy, clearly pleased with himself as he picked up the device and held it up for them to see. He glanced up at the three of them and giggled.

“This is going to be great! These little devices are perfect Alex, thank you!”

Alex grinned with a shrug. “It's nice to have an arms dealer who owes you several favors.”

Jack grinned brightly. “All right. I have a timer system set up for these little devices, all it will take is for me or Harley...” He glanced over at her, and his blue eyes sparkled behind the lenses of his goggles.

“To hit an app on our phones and that will discharge these little beauties. The gas spreads swiftly from the time of denotation to only a matter of seconds before the gas will fill all the available space in the room. So we are all just going to have to show up in the gas masks, there just won't be enough time to throw them on once the canisters are triggered. But I think the effect will be absolutely stunning, all of us in gas masks...except me of course.” Jack giggled.

Harley frowned with concern. “But puddin...”

He smiled holding up a hand. “No worries sweets. I'm going to rig myself a gas filter for the helmet. Trust me.” He winked at her. “The only thing...it would be nice to test the effects of the gas...didn't think to have you bring me any test subjects. I know for a fact it won't kill, but I'm not exactly sure of how long the laughing will last...” Jack glanced at Alex with a frown.

Harley started to say something, but it was Frost who spoke up first. “Test it on me Boss.”

Jack turned to Frost in surprise pulling the goggles up to rest them on his forehead. “Are you sure about that, big guy?”

Frost nodded. “I trust you Boss, and we need to make sure this gas is going to do what you want...if it don't, we're screwed.”

Jack's grin was radiant. “All right then. I could just kiss you...you know...I think I will. “ Jack strolled over quickly and kissed Frost on both cheeks. “Okay everyone, get your gas masks and let's go to the guest bathroom!” Jack threw his arm up in the air before he picked up the gas bomb and headed out of the room with everyone else following. They stopped and grabbed the gas masks which were the Israeli civilian gas mask design with a more arrowed front reminding Harley of a snout. Everyone but Frost slipped on and adjusted their gas masks. Jack grinned behind his, Harley could see it in the wrinkles around his eyes behind the lenses just before they headed downstairs to the guest bathroom.

The bathroom was large enough for all of them to fit inside, with a claw foot tub, white tiled walls and blue tiled floors. There was one window in the room, not large, but it would be big enough to clear the gas.

“Are you ready Frost?” Jack asked.
Frost was sitting in the bathtub (Jack's suggestion. He didn't want Frost to fall and hit his head on the tiled floor. He thought laying back in the empty tub would be better all around.)

Frost gave Jack a thumbs up. Jack smiled and pushed a button on the egg shaped device before tossing it into the sink.

The gas that started to spew thickly from the canister was a bright, almost cheerful green. It filled the small room swiftly in a heavy green fog. Frost lay in the tub and glanced at everyone with a smile. The smile seemed to stretch wider after a few seconds and then he started to giggle. Frost's giggles started out small. Harley pressed her lips together, trying not to respond, but Frost's giggles started her giggling. Then Jack giggled followed by a snort from Alex. That was when Frost's giggles escalated and he started to laugh...this in turn started everyone else laughing...Frost laughed harder, then harder yet. Frost clutched his sides as a strange laugh and groan combination issued from his mouth.

Jack hurried over dropping to a crouch by the tub. He grabbed the sides of the tub with his hands which were still encased in rubber gloves. His voice was muffled as he asked with genuine concern. “How are you feeling Frost?”

Frost's laughter had turned into painful sounding giggles and tears started to stream down his eyes. “My...my...my sides hurt like...like hell! HeheheHAHA!”

Frost burst out into a hard bark of laughter. “Oh my GOD EVERYTHING hurts!!! Hehehehee!!” Frost kicked his feet, the sound of his shoes smacking against the back of the tub made Harley stop giggling. Frost laughed without let up his eyes were streaming so much that they were bloodshot, then Frost rolled onto his side and vomited, but he just kept laughing.

Alex stood still by the door looking slightly horrified. “Jack, I think we should open the windows.”

By now Frost's laughter was horrible; it was clear he was in a lot of pain, but he simply couldn't stop laughing.

Jack giggled. “It's perfect!”

He didn't seem to hear Alex as he watched Frost suffering. Harley walked over to Jack, and gently putting her hand on his shoulder. “Puddin, we should open a window.”

Jack turned to look at her then he nodded. “Of course, of course. Harley open the window.”

Harley rushed over to throw the window open while Jack dropped down to help Frost to stand. “Come on ya' big lug, on your feet.”

Frost laughed. “I...I don't think I can Boss. Hahahahaahahaha!!”

Jack stepped into the tub, wrapping his arm around Frost and held the other man up as he reached over and turned on the water. The blast hit them both just as the gas started to dissipate with cold air drifting into the room. Jack held Frost under the water, reaching up to help Frost clean out his eyes until finally the room was clear. Harley shut the window. Frost was shaking like a leaf from the cold, but Harley hurried to grab a few towels handing one to Jack while she helped with the other towel to dry off Frost. Frost was gulping air, his entire body going slack.

Jack helped him out of the tub, pulling his gas mask off at the same time. “That was BRILLIANT! It'll be perfect for the heist!”

Alex nodded. “Damn Jack, that was...wow.”
Jack grinned in pleasure.

It was a cold and rainy Friday night in Gotham, but the downtown area of the Gotham Fashion District around the Wayne and Elliot Skyline Square was filled with cars, lights and cameras. The opening ceremony to kick off fashion week was tonight and the who's who of Gotham had come out despite the foul weather to enjoy the glamor and theater of the opening ceremonies.

Bruce Wayne smiled as he stepped out of the limo with Talia, who was dressed in a long, shimmering blue and silver sleeveless dress. She held onto his arm smiling beautifully for the press.

Bruce stopped and smiled for the cameras, giving the press his playboy smile and nodding at questions that flew at him without answering them or even acknowledging that anything had been asked of him. Talia heard some shouted questions about his missing brother and fiancee, but Bruce acted as if he heard nothing. Talia had to admire the stoic way Bruce handled the press. If she didn't know him better, she would see him as Gotham did, a little bit of an empty headed playboy with a sexy smile and not much else. It made her wonder what Gotham had said about the disappearance of Jack after his stay in Arkham. She shook the thoughts away, focusing once more on smiling and posing beside Bruce.

After giving the press a few moments to photograph the two of them, Bruce headed down the red carpet toward the entrance with Talia holding onto his arm.

Talia smiled leaning close to Bruce. “Thank you for bringing me, Bruce”

Bruce smiled. “You are very welcome. It's nice to attend something like this with someone I enjoy spending time with. Besides, Alfred insisted I go. Even in the hospital, that man is very stubborn.”

Bruce hid the frown that wanted to creep into his features as the thought of Selina washed over him. He realized, with a sharp spike, how much he still missed her. For a moment he wondered where she was...back in Gotham?

Talia smiled again, but said softly, “Alfred is such a dear. It's too bad Jack couldn't be here. I do remember how much he loves fashion. Your little brother always was one about looking well-dressed and he did so love costumes. He would very much enjoy this wouldn't he?”

Almost immediately Talia realized her mistake. She hadn't meant to bring up Jack, but it was true; this would have been something that Jack would have loved. Bruce did frown then, his lips forming a thin line for a moment. Talia noticed the change in his expression and demeanor and mentally kicked herself. Regardless, she decided to push, just a little. “Bruce, you really need to deal with your brother issues.”

Bruce grunted, then sighed. “Can we not talk about this tonight? I would just like to enjoy this evening with you.”

“Of course beloved. Let us enjoy the evening.” She kissed his cheek, letting Bruce lead her into the main room to where a long runway had been set up in the center of the room. The room itself was wide to provide a great deal of space for patrons and the lighting was low. There were hundreds of velvet black chairs set in rows along a broad stretch of black carpet. The back wall at the end of the room from where the models would emerge was lit in a soft, liquid blue that shone out gently into the room. Above the room were large globe shaped lights that glowed dimly, with neon lights twisted along the ceiling glowing dully in the shadows. The theme for the opening ceremony was “The Future in Gotham” and as such, the lighting in the main room had a dark cyberpunk feel to it with the long twists of dim, dulled neon lights and the heavy atmospheric quality to the room. Light piano music played in the background.
The show wouldn't start for a few minutes, so waiters and waitresses wandered about with trays of champagne for the guests. Bruce snagged a couple of glasses, handing one to Talia as he looked around. He saw many political figures in attendance: the mayor, Cobblepot (which surprised him), Cassandra Kane, Tommy Elliot and Bruno Crowne and even Jean-Paul Valley. There were also the mix of reporters such as Vicki Vale (who shot Bruce a look like a hungry hawk. He knew she was dying to swoop in and interrogate him about Jack.) He saw Lana Lang from Metropolis and there were a few of his old flames wandering about, such as Silver St. Cloud and Jezebel Jet, just to name a few. Bruce inwardly cringed, hoping none of them decided to make a scene here. The woman on his arm might not be the jealous type, precisely, but she could be dangerous.

After a few minutes, a voice came over the loudspeaker. “Ladies and gentlemen, please take your seats as the Opening Ceremony for Fashion Week Gotham: The Future of Gotham, is about to begin.”

Bruce smiled at Talia and led her over to their seats. Since he was Bruce Wayne, Bruce and Talia occupied seats in the front. Next to Bruce sat Silver St. Cloud. She smiled at him lifting a well defined and artistically arched eyebrow. “Well, hello Bruce.”

Bruce smiled. “Silver.”

She laughed. “Don't worry. I won't ruin your date. Just...” She smiled and patted his knee. “I heard about Jack and I'm really very sorry. If you need to talk to someone, I like to think we might still be friends.”

Bruce's smile was genuine. “Thank you Silver.”

She smiled turning her attention back to her friend, a dark haired young woman with rather exotic eyes. Next to Talia sat Oswald Cobblepot. He smirked as he looked her up and down. Talia lifted a brow at him and he chuckled. “Just admiring the latest Wayne catch.”

Talia opened her mouth about to say something when the sound of “Feel It” by The Tamperer started loud enough to drown out any conversation. Everyone's focus was on the runway as the lights strobed for a moment, then settled down as the first model hit the runway.

The tall thin woman came stomping down the runway in a long black dress, her hair styled stiffly to her head, looking more like a shiny helmet than hair. She made her way down the runway, did her turn and started back. The next model was a tall, gorgeous woman with brown skin wearing a large black coat that hung below her knees and thigh high black boots with a black sheet dress followed the first model down the runway, and she was followed by another model.

Cameras and camera phones started to flash, taking pictures of the young women and their stoney unsmiling faces. Bruce tuned out most of it, letting his mind drift and relax, crossed his legs and mostly just watched the audience rather than the models. Unless a designer had a particularly novel idea, most of these shows ran together...and Bruce had seen many of these fashion shows.

There was a sudden clip in the music, like a track being skipped, but then the music changed. Bruce chuckled to himself. Clearly someone backstage had messed up there switching the music or something. David Bowie's voice started to play through the room singing the song, “Fashion.”

For almost two minutes nothing happened. No models came out, but then, just as the audience was beginning to become restless, a young woman stepped out onto the catwalk, walking with the beat of the music. She was wearing a black leather body suit with cap sleeves and a zipper front. She was also wearing a pair of black thigh high boots, and a long black leather trenchcoat that came to her knees. The woman had a killer figure Bruce thought as he watched her, really stomping her way down the runway, though she was a bit shorter than most runway models he had seen. She was also wearing a gas mask that had been painted bright red, obscuring her features. Her long hair was a shiny blonde and hung down her back.

She stomped her way down the runway, stopping at the spot at the front and did the little model half turns. Bruce frowned. For a split second there, he could have swore he saw that she was wearing twin pistol holsters under her coat and red leather gloves. He narrowed his eyes thinking that it had to be a trick of the light, but just as the thought had drifted through his mind, the young woman pulled out two Chiappa Rhino 60DS revolvers. The audience didn't react. Bruce frowned with a quick look around, no one was reacting as if anything strange was happening. Maybe it was just part of the show.

The model stayed where she was just as four other women dressed similarly to her came out (Trope was manning one of the getaway vehicles), each holding a gun. The women were followed by three men, similarly dressed and armed. (Alex remained out of sight and doing the most important job according to Jack...handling the music. Dale also stayed behind in one of the SUVs waiting for the others.)

Now everyone was reacting, a murmur rumbled over the crowd and the music changed again. The sounds of ZZ Top's "Sharp Dressed Man" began to play over the speakers and the crowd started to look around, talking louder, but the music became louder still, drowning them out. Then the lights switched, a spotlight twisted around the walls and then focused on the back of the room where the models had emerged onto the catwalk. A tall man stepped out.

He wore a deep, blood red slick styled helmet. He was dressed in a black leather duster, black leather pants, motorcycles boots and an armored black chest piece. He was holding a gun in each of his hands; Bruce could see that each weapon was a Chiappa Rhino 60DS revolver, matching the blonde's weapon choices at the front of the runway. The man walked to the front of the floor where the blonde was standing, using his weapons to sweep the crowd. He did a model style walk, cocky and confident. He walked over to the blonde and bumped her with his hips. She giggled and bumped him back, the two of them taking the time to do a quick dance around each other. There was no doubt to anyone watching, those two were a couple. The man laughed. Bruce immediately realized the man was using some sort of voice modulator and his frown deepened.

The man in the red helmet motioned with one gun and the music died down, then his voice echoed out to the audience. "Ladies and Gentleman!! Welcome to Gotham's Fashion Week!! We are The Red Hood!!" Here, all of them on stage performed a theatrical bow before the man in the helmet spoke again.

"I hope you're all having a good time! Let me hear if you're having a good time?" The man in the helmet put his gun to his "ear," but no one made a sound.

"Ah, now come on boys and girls!! You have to be having a little fun!!" The man started to walk the stage. Bruce frowned. There was something about the way he moved, the way he walked, the way he was strutting, a twist to his hips...It was...familiar. The man reminded Bruce of someone...

The helmeted man continued, slipping one of his guns back into a holster under his arm, then pulled out his phone. He held the phone up. "Well, I guess I'm just going to have to help you all find a little happiness."

The man hit a button on the phone. A moment later, everyone looked around as a thick green gas started to flow upward from under the seats. Someone in the crowd screamed.

The man in the red helmet started to laugh. "Hahaha!! You're welcome Gotham!!"
Bruce cursed. He grabbed Talia. “Come on!” He took a breath and held it. But it was already too late. Talia giggled, then she laughed. Then harder before she collapsed to the floor laughing hysterically. Bruce looked around, everyone was laughing, falling to the floor, some of them in tears, others holding their sides. Some had started to vomit while others were gasping for air while laughing too hard.

Bruce turned, struggling to hold his breath while the Red Hood gang started to spread out from the walkway. Now Bruce understood why they were wearing the gas masks. Bruce ducked down behind one of the chairs; the heavy green smoke obscured him from the view of the gang. They were pulling jewelry off of people, taking money out of their wallets and purses...a robbery.

Bruce turned, remained low, and hurried looking to find a way out.

*

Harley ran up to Jack, giggling (Jack was emptying the wallet of the mayor who was laughing so hard that he had wet himself) as she held up her hand to show him the ring she had slid over her gloved finger.

“Puddin! Look what I got!”

Her voice sounded funny behind the mask. The ring she held up in front of his face was a 2.02 carat oval cut pave engagement ring made with 14K rose gold. She wiggled her fingers giggling happily.

Jack chuckled. “That is very pretty, sweets.”

“Yeah I thought so.” She giggled prettily. Jack smiled and grabbed Harley by her waist, dropping his gloved hands to her hips and squeezed as he yanked her up against him and hissed from behind his mask. “I want to kiss you so badly right now. I want to fuck you and lick you....” Jack growled softly. He slid his hands around to her rear, grabbing her ass in his hands and pressed against her, swaying slowly back and forth while the other members of their gang filled their bags, surrounded by the sounds of choking, coughing and high-pitched pain-filled laughter while the green clouds of gas surrounded them. Harley couldn't see his face, but she knew how he was looking at her. She smiled up at him.

He giggled and sang softly.

“So slide over here
And give me a moment
Your moves are so raw
I've got to let you know
I've got to let you know
You're one of my kind...”

Harley giggled staring lovingly at him through the lenses of her gas mask.

A loud crash drew the eyes of the gang members; they turned to see Batman land in a crouch in the middle of the runway. He looked up at the masked robbers.

“Turn yourselves in Red Hood!” Batman snarled.
Jack turned with his arm around Harley's waist and laughed “Perfect!! We ranked a Batman!”

The eerie sound of hysterical laughter mixed with the sounds of people vomiting or groaning in a strange combination that filled the air of what had started out as the opening for Fashion Week in Gotham. Now it sounded like a room in Arkham Asylum.

“This can go one of two ways,” Batman said in a low growl, his eyes darting back and forth trying to keep each member of the gang in sight. “You can turn yourselves in, or I can do it for you.”

Jack, his arms still around Harley's waist, burst out laughing. Laughing hard enough that he slapped his knee. “Oh my GOD, is that how you actually talk? You are a riot! Let me guess, you never curse along with not using a gun?” Jack giggled. “Let me ask you big guy, are you a virgin because this really seems like the sort of thing a virgin would do...you know...because your time isn't being used in other areas...you might want to talk to a therapist.” Jack giggled again giving Harley a squeeze before he turned to his wife.

“I'm not sure if I should take him seriously? What do you think sweets?”

Harley giggled. “Nah. But I think he should take us seriously.”

Batman's eyes moved swiftly between the two of them trying to decide the best course of action. The other members of the gang hadn't stopped what they were doing, which was simply and quickly relieving the guests of their money and jewels; just hired thugs, gang members simply doing their jobs. These two were clearly the ones in charge...the talkative ones.

They were both unknown elements. He didn't know if either of them could fight, but he wasn't too worried about the others. Experience had taught him thus far that henchmen were usually not anyone he should worry too much about. They usually lacked any significant fighting skills, a few hits, a good scare and they were down for the fight. But Batman suspected that these two were the truly dangerous ones, the ones that wouldn't back down or scare easily. Batman decided he needed another advantage and grabbed one of his smoke pellets from his utility belt, tossing the pill shaped capsule to down to the floor. The pellet burst on impact, adding additional smoke to the already green haze that filled the room. This smoke, a white color that reminded Harley of one of Jack's cigarettes, mixed with the thick green-tinted air, hiding the vigilante in seconds and spreading outward to cover a broad area. Batman reached up and hit a device embedded on the side of his cowl which switched his vision to thermal. He could see the fashion week victims and the henchmen moving around, but he could also see the Red Hood and the woman he had been hanging on, but their view of him was now obscured.

Batman smiled and murmured to himself. “Time to get to work.”

Batman felt the grin on his lips as he thought over his actions quickly—take the woman out first, use her to get the man to cooperate since they seemed to be a couple. He couldn't help the smile on his face and it wasn't from the gas. Bruce liked what he did. He liked beating up criminals, liked feeling as if he was doing his little part of help Gotham

He leaped through the smoke, easily moving towards the woman with his vision guiding his way.

Jack frowned in confusion as he looked around, taking a step backwards and tugging Harley with him, his arm still protectively around her middle. “What?”
Harley hissed, her voice low as she twisted around to look for the Bat. “Puddin?”

That was the moment a shadow formed out of the smoke heading straight toward them. Harley saw the shadow first. She let out a little high-pitched sound of surprise and aimed her guns at the shadow, knocking her husband back behind her with her sudden movement. Batman loomed out at her through the smoke, the cape of his costume forming wings...a giant man-size bat!

Harley pulled away from Jack and fired off two quick shots, thinking she had him in her sights; there was no way she could miss that bat! She hadn't really considered whether she wanted to kill him or not but she would be damned if she was going to let a man in a batsuit touch her puddin!

Batman came in under her arms, her shots missing him, and used the elbow of his right arm to knock her chin up forcing her head backwards, almost loosening her gas mask; the blow sent Harley stumbling. The gas mask she wore did little to protect her from the force of his blow and caused a scrape along the tender skin of her chin. She bit down on her tongue, her teeth clattering together with the impact. Harley gasped in pain and surprise.

Next, the Bat twisted around and slammed his booted foot into her diaphragm hard enough that the blow forced an explosion of air to exit her lungs painfully. He followed that move, dashing toward her as she stumbled backward, with another strike of his hand. This time the Batman lunged forward using the heel of his palm in an attempt to her strike in the face, thinking he might do damage despite the gas mask. Harley saw exactly what he was about to do, registering his move only a second before his hand struck out at her. Harley retreated a step and leaned back as Batman struck out. Her flexibility allowed her to contort her torso back far enough to avoid most of the impact, though his palm still clipped the mouth of the gas mask hard enough that her teeth cut against the back of her lips.

Harley gasped in pain and tasted blood in her mouth at the same time that her fingers jerked on the triggers of her pistols. She fired two more rounds out randomly into the crowd that she now couldn't see at all with the additional smoke. Her wild bullets caught one laughing suited man in the shoulder, but missed Batman completely.

*

Jack snarled. The extra smoke made it thick enough that he could barely see anything. He had seen the shadow of the Bat burst through the smoke at Harley, followed by gunshots, before the two of them disappeared into the smoke. He would have shot his weapons, but the thought of accidentally hitting Harley stopped him from shooting at all. Jack hissed as he slid his guns back into their holsters and pulled a knife he had brought with him before he dashed into the smoke following their moving shadows. He would kill the Bat if that vigilante hurt his wife!

Batman did a twist and duck, her bullets flying harmlessly over him, which told him she wasn't that good of a shot or at least not any good under pressure. He rushed at her, planting his left foot before he did a hard, powerful half spin, his booted right foot connecting with one of her hands; the impact nocked the revolver from her hand. The weapon hit the floor with a loud clatter before it skittered across the slick surface to disappear into the smoke filled room.

Batman snarled when the woman shot at him again. This time, her aim was better as the bullet hit him and zinged off the body armor on his chest. The impact still hurt and would leave a bruise, but Bruce sent up a silent prayer of thanks to Lucius Fox and his body armor modification to the Batsuit.

Harley squeaked in surprise when her bullet didn't stop the Batman. Then she squeaked again when he grabbed her wrist, his gauntleted grip like iron and squeezed painfully, forcing her fingers to open while at the same time lifting her off her feet. She dropped her gun with a gasp of pain.

Jack rushed out of the smoke and halted in shock when he saw that the Batman had his girl! Batman yanked Harley toward him and punched her across the face, hard enough that his armored knuckles left a dent in the gas mask and snapped her head back and to the side (blooding her nose and her lip on the inside of the mask.) It was a hard, tight jab of his knuckles that caught her in the mouth, nearly shattering the front of the mask which caused her lips to cut against her teeth again as well as bits of hard plastic to slice against her lips. Inside the mask, the taste of blood mixed with blood from her nose as the vigilante's strike smashed the mask against her nose, making it bleed.

Harley let out a small grunt of pain before she went limp.

Batman dropped her, turning to look for her boyfriend when the man in the red helmet came out of the smoke like a demon straight for him with an incoherent roar of rage. Batman barely had enough time to react, throwing his forearm up to protect his face as the man in the red helmet slashed with a blade at hit his forearm and struck, cutting deeply. The blade somehow sliced between the tightly woven metal fibers in the Batsuit's gauntlets. Luckily the damage was minor, but another cut like that and Bruce would have a knife in his forearm. Batman yanked his arm to the side, the fist of that hand catching the helmeted man in the "face" and knocked his head to the side accompanied by the sound of an armor clad fist striking the heavy material of the helmet. The blow caused the leader of the Red Hood to stumble back, but he left the blade in Batman's forearm.

Jack winced with the hit, but it wasn't enough to put him down. Batman didn't let up, didn't give Jack a moment to catch his breath or think of his strategy before Batman's fists snapped out. He hit Jack in the face of his helmet, knocking his head first left, then right at the same time trying to drive Jack backwards away from Harley. Jack took several of the blows to his face, unable to block the first few hits. It took him a couple of seconds to pick up the Batman's rhythm of fighting; he ducked one swing and punched out, his fist connecting with Batman's side feeling the give of the armor. Batman hissed and took a step back, which was all Jack needed. So, the armor was better against bullets than heavy blunt damage...worth noting for future encounters, which Jack was certain would occur.

Jack laughed using his forearms to block Batman's next several blows. There was something about the way Batman threw his swings that reminded Jack of the way Bruce would fight. Bruce tended to fight like a bull, all power and forcefulness with little to no finesse. Bruce liked to use his strength and power to wear his opponent down...or at least that was how he used to fight when they were younger and in their most recent brawls. Bruce knew he had a larger, more muscular frame which he would use to dominate his little brother; he would always try to use his superior strength to overpower Jack, thinking that Jack's much thinner frame equaled weakness, but what Jack lacked in "power" he made up for in intelligence and quickness.

Jack grinned. It looked like Batman fought much the same way, relying on his power. Well, as the saying went, the bigger they are... Just to prove his point, Batman rushed forward and slammed his fists at Jack, the body armor that Jack was wearing wasn't as good as Batman's, but it was good enough to absorb most of the impact combined with Jack's own threshold for pain. The double-fisted strike only pushed Jack two steps backwards. Batman then twisted slightly to the side, his fist slamming against Jack's helmet, the impact created a hard sounding thunk inside the helmet, snapping Jack's head to the left with the strike. Jack smiled behind his mask, brought his forearms up to block Batman's next two strikes; the Bat's fists slammed into Jack's forearms, the impact of which vibrated up his arms, but Jack took the pain with a grin.

Red Hood chuckled. “Let me guess, you're a top? No?”
Batman didn't reply, he simply kept trying to beat Jack down.

Jack kicked at Batman, his boot connecting with Batman's knee. The kick didn't cause the man to fall, but it did force Batman to take a step backward. Jack took a couple of swings at Batman, but the Bat blocked, then took his own swing at Jack. Jack weaved away from the attack and swung his fist for a backhanded attack that struck Batman across the face which rewarded Jack by seeing Batman bleed. Jack giggled. Who wore body armor, mask, gauntlets, and left his mouth and chin unprotected?

“Oh Batsy!! You got a little blood there on your upper lip!”

Batman frowned. There was something just so...familiar about this Red Hood. It was eating at him that he couldn't place what it was about him that seemed to familiar. Something about the way he moved, the way he fought...Even his laugh, though changed through the voice modulator, still “felt” familiar. Bruce couldn't place what it was, but it was bothering him and that it threw him off enough that the criminal hit him across the face again.

“Oh Batsy! Pay attention!” Red Hood laughed, giving Batman another backhand fist strike to the face followed by a graceful roundhouse kick that caught the vigilante in the side. Batman stumbled back a step or two.

Batman snarled. “Your woman is down Red Hood. Just give yourself up before this becomes more serious.”

Red Hood laughed. “Oh, you are funnier than the TV news makes you out to be!”

Jack moved swiftly, coming in close and lashed out with an upward swipe, his fist connecting to Batman's chin and snapping the man's head backward.

Batman's hand snapped out to grasp Red Hood around the back of his neck, his fist connecting with his opponent's chest in a few rapid, hard strikes that knocked the air from Jack's lungs. Gasping, Jack reached forward and grabbed Batman's shoulders before he gasped in air and choked out a laugh.

“Oh, hit me again! Come on, do it!” Jack laughed. “HIT ME!”

Batman faltered for a moment. This...this seemed so...familiar. For a moment, the brief image of his little brother Jack, crying, bloody nose and a bloody lip looking up at his big brother with a look of betrayal hissing at Bruce in his little boy's voice. “Hit me again Bruce! Go on! That's the only way you ever pay attention to me!” The vigilante's hesitation allowed the Red Hood to lash out, bringing both arms up to slam them down into the crook of the Batman's elbow with enough force that Bat's grip faltered. Batman lost his hold on the back of Red Hood's neck, but before Jack could use this to his advantage, the Bat's hand shot out once more. He grabbed Jack around the neck again and rushed him backwards until Jack's back slammed up against a wall with bone jarring force.

“ENOUGH!” Batman snarled. He slammed his opponent against the wall again, trying to get him to stop fighting him. The man behind the mask only laughed at the vigilante's efforts.

Jack chuckled and before Batman realized his movement was no attack, Jack pulled out his cellphone, which confused the vigilante for a moment. The Red Hood giggled behind the mask holding up the phone, a thumb poised over a button. “Better let me go Batman.”

Batman snarled. “Why would I do that?”

The Red Hood's thumb touched the phone. The room was rocked by the sound and tremor of an explosion. It wasn't huge...but it wasn't small either. Batman kept a hold of the Red Hood's neck, his head pivoting to the side while his gauntleted fingers tightened around the other man's throat. The explosion came from the back where the models were set to change clothing and makeup. Batman exhaled heavily in anger...how many people were back there?

Batman reached for the phone, but the Red Hood held it up out of his reach with a laugh. “Oh now come on Batman! You think I'm the only one with the killer app? Didn't you count my gang? And do you know where each of them are at this very moment? No? Well guess what tall dark and gruesome? They each have phones and they each have apps connected...oh I don't remember...to a bomb or was it..bombs?” He laughed. “I have no idea. But if you don't let me go, those bombs will all go off. Now...if you release me and let me and my gang go, I will be nice enough to give you a five minute head start to find them all before we set them off. If not...well...I'm eager and willing to see what happens—are you?”

The Red Hood giggled again.

Batman stared at him. He had no idea how dangerous this man was...was he willing to blow himself up and his gang...all these people? No...the real question was whether he, Batman, was willing to take that risk. And his opponent had proven that he had explosives at his disposal.

Batman let him go, letting the man in the Red Hood back on his feet.

The gang leader chuckled, reaching up to touch his throat. “You have quite a grip there Bats. Little kinky aren't you?”

Batman snarled. “Where are the bombs?”

Jack laughed. “Oh please, like I'm going to tell you? I mean where is the fun in that big boy! No, no I think I'll let you find them for yourself.”

Jack started to move slowly, heading toward where he knew Harley was lying. His first steps were hesitant, waiting for Batman to grab him again, but when it was clear that he wasn't going to, Jack's moved with a little cocky dance step as he moved towards his lover. “I have to say this has been fun! I really hope we can do it again soon Batsy. Or do you prefer Batman? Hahaha!! I don't know Batsy, I think we might have something special here.”

That was when both men heard a woman's voice snarl in a strange muffled sound from behind a gas mask. “That fucking HURT BATS!”

Harley came rushing out of the smoke and gas, but Jack hurriedly put himself between her and Batman grabbing the snarling woman around the waist.

Harley hissed at Jack. “What're you doing?”

“Batsy here is letting us go...or else boom.” He held his phone up and wiggled it.

Harley giggled. “Oh yeah. Hehe.”

Jack took Harley's hand. “Well Bats. It's been a blast...literally, but the Red Hood gang needs to go and you need to find those little bombs of mine before my thumb slips. Have fun!”

He turned yanking Harley with him. She waved. “Bye bye Bats!!! Have fun finding the bombs!”

Batman cursed under his breath.

When Jack had hit the explosion, that had been the sign for everyone to go. It had been part of the plan from the beginning, a distraction to get them all out of the hall so when Jack and Harley ran out the back, the SUVs were waiting for them. Alex was at the wheel of the one that Jack and Harley hopped into, his eyes dancing behind his gas mask as he hit the gas and pulled the SUV out, with Trope following in the other. They could hear the sounds of sirens from both police and fire trucks.

The SUVs disappeared into Gotham without anyone noting anything out of the ordinary.

The group drove to an abandoned church on the upper west side where Alex knew a rave was taking place tonight. The outside was a typical brick buildings with Gothic accents, but the inside was something else entirely. The inside of the church was in good shape, with marble floors and large arched ceilings. All the stain glass windows were still intact, which made the place perfect for the party that was going on tonight; the place was filled with purple and blue lights that were in constant motion, while the beat of the music threatened to crack the very walls of the church if the crowd didn’t do it first. The sounds of DVBBS & MOTI “This is Dirty” was playing loud enough that it could easily be heard outside the walls of the church and for some distance beyond.

Their group had parked the two SUV’s in two different areas away from one another, meeting up inside the church at a back corner where some private booths had been set up for drugs, sex and anything else. Alex was friends with one of the DJs that was playing tonight and had been able to have a booth waiting for them when they arrived.

When their group entered the party, no one gave them much attention, their black outfits with the red gas masks fit right in to a party where everyone was wearing a wild and wide variety of costumes from fairy wings, to animals masks, to nothing but painted on clothing. There was a bubble machine somewhere up above that was releasing bubbles onto the crowd below which moved like one large living creature, jumping and grinding to the music.

Alex led the way to their booth, which consisted of a wrap around couch, a table and a shower curtain rod with a heavy curtain to provide some privacy put up between the arches of the aisle.

Everyone took a seat. A handful of their gang, Trope, Rolf, Roxy, Duela and Jason all removed their gas masks, but the rest of the group opted the keep their masks on while a few of the gang noticed with a little cringe the state of Harley’s mask. Jack and Harley sat in the middle. Trope and Rolf ran off to get some drinks and soon their group settled down to business.

Jack grinned behind his mask. “You all did fantastic work tonight! Followed the plan perfectly! I’m just so proud!” He put his arm around Harley’s shoulders. “Aren’t you sweetie?”

Harley clapped her hands. “Oh yes puddin!! I’m so proud of you all!”

Jack continued giving Harley's shoulders a squeeze. “And I'm just so proud that all of you kept your cool, stuck to the plan even with Batman showing up!!”

Jason snickered. “Wow, I've never seen Batman in person before and you handled him great boss.”

Jack laughed behind his mask. “Thank you darling! All right, down to the business of money. Jewelry and watches are to be given to “A” here who will get us a good price, cash...we did really well my little birds, everyone will get a nice 10K tonight to start off.”

Everyone cheered. Jack grinned brightly behind his mask. “Now, you all go out there, have some fun, don't spend it all in one place and please, don't do anything I wouldn't do. Or do.” Jack giggled.
“‘A’ will contact everyone with our next job...and with your next paycheck.”

Jack leaned back on the couch, his arm around Harley's shoulders watching while Frost counted out money and handed it to each of their gang; everyone was in good spirits. Jack watched contented as the gang slowly disappeared, some melding into the crowd, others leaving to find their own way home or for other destinations. After a bit Alex stood with Alice, both of them still masked.

“I'll give you a call tomorrow, Red Hood.” Alex snickered as he tossed a set of keys to Jack. Jack easily caught them out of the air. “I had one of my people bring a car around for you. An '86 white Porsche, should be parked over in the front of the church.”

Jack laughed. “Thanks ‘A’. Talk to you tomorrow. Have a good night you two.”

Alex grinned, his one arm around Alice's shoulders. “Going home my good man, going home.” Alex waved his fingers and disappeared into the crowd with Alice.

Frost stood as well. “See ya later Boss.”

Frost chuckled and took off. Dale and Sandra left as well with Dale waving. “Night boss!”

Jack nodded. “Night my friend.”

Before long it was just Jack and Harley sitting on the couch together, the sounds of Black Tiger Sex Machine played around them causing the walls to vibrate with the beat like a living thing.

Jack smiled at Harley. Even though she couldn't see his smile, she knew he was smiling at her as his fingers brushed against her neck. “Shall we my dear?”

Harley turned to look at him through the lenses of her gas mask. “Wanna dance?”

Jack chuckled. “Meet me on the floor in ten minutes.”

Harley giggled, a muffled sound from behind her gas mask and hopped up. “Last one there is a rotten egg.”

Jack laughed watching her as she hurried off, pushing her way through the crowd and vanishing. For a moment he felt a pang of...fear...desperation to go after her, to make sure she was safe, at his side...but he took a deep breath through his nose to calm himself. She would be fine, he had to tell himself that...she would be fine. He stood, glancing around once, but the crowd was too involved in the music and their own little worlds to be worried about a man in a red helmet. Jack made his way out toward the front of the church, gently pushing people out of his way. People were coming and going in and out of the church without really paying attention to the man in the red helmet; drinking, dancing, drugs were all that mattered to this crowd. He could see some of them doing drugs in the dark corners, a few having sex, others just partying and drinking. All of them were oblivious. Jack smiled. Such fun...for a moment the thought of blowing this place up...of the chaos it would cause, the needless destruction to a handful of pointless lives...flashed through his mind. He frowned only slightly at the thought, thinking about how much Batman...oh hell, how much something like that would piss off Bruce! Jack chuckled to himself thinking about something even more fun than an explosion—his gas...this crowd would probably get off on his type of laughing gas. He grinned at the thought. There might actually be a market out there for it. Something to consider he thought.

He stepped outside, looking around. The night air was cool, crisp, but the sky was clear. It took him a few minutes to find the Porsche, parked just a short distance down the street from the church. Jack made his way down the sidewalk to the car and unlocked the door on the driver's side, slipping inside. The interior was a soft brown leather, well maintained. The windows were tinted making the inside quite dark, but that darkness served to make the car feel like a tiny sanctuary from the outside. Jack pulled the helmet off with a groan of relief, and ran his hands through his hair, his fingers aggressively rubbing his scalp. With a little work, he removed the chest protection dropping it in the back along with the helmet. Soon he was just a handsome man dressed all in black, at a party.

He rolled his neck, touching it gingerly and wondering if Batman left any bruises. He grinned at the thought of the vigilante. The fighter for justice had a temper...nice to know. Jack pulled the rear view mirror around to see himself, turning on the little overhead light in the car. He frowned. The eyeliner he had put on before leaving was a little smudged from sweating in the helmet, but there wasn't much he could do about it since he didn't have any with him, nor did he have any lipstick...which was really a shame he thought but the smudged black around his eyes still made his eyes pop. A grin curled the corners of his lips upward. Harley would like it,. With a sigh Jack exited the car and headed back inside to find Harley.

The music that was playing had the entire place jumping up and down to the beat. La Roux's “In For The Kill (Le Castle Vania mix)” was playing at a deafening level. Jack walked in looking around for Harley, his eyes scanning the dance floor in the middle of the church, but with the lights blinking on and off, or the additional laser light sweeping over the crowd, mixed with the bubbles floating down from above, it was hard to see much of anything. Jack stood there looking for her, waving off the attentions of a few passing men and women who stopped to try and get him to dance with them (or something else) when he saw Harley in the middle of the dance floor.

Her blond hair was loose and she was wearing only a black lace bra, her jeans and the jacket she had been wearing earlier over the top. Even with the purple and blue lights dancing over her, he could see the slight swelling to the side of her mouth from where Batman had hit her in the face, her lips just slightly puffy, but it didn't seem to affect her smile. She was dancing with a couple of other young women, the three of them doing a sort of shuffle dance. Harley was smiling brightly the light dancing off her perfect white teeth.

Jack smirked while he pushed his way through the crowd that was circling the three women as they danced. Harley, along with the other two scantily clad young women, were doing a series of complicated foot and leg moves that involved jumping and hopping back and forth, balancing for seconds on their toes or heels and even doing a little bit of a moonwalk as they twisted and bounced on their feet together.

Jack was laughing, clapping his hands along with everyone else watching his wife tearing up the dance floor with the other women, whipping her head around, her blond hair catching the colored lights while she danced with all her heart.

At one point Harley saw Jack standing on the edge of the crowd watching her and clapping his hands. She grinned and winked at him. When the music stopped everyone in the church not otherwise engaged applauded and shouted at the women, but Harley hurried over and threw herself into Jack's arms. “Puddin!!”

Jack wrapped his arms around her, lifting her off her feet and covered her mouth with his own in a deep kiss. Harley giggled against his mouth, cradling the back of his head softly. Jack pulled away just a enough to lick her lips and tug on her bottom lip with his teeth (Harley enjoyed the brief spike of pain) before he asked. “And where did you learn to dance like that?”

Harley giggled. “Those two taught me.”

Jack smiled. “And you picked it up just like that, eh?”
She shrugged. “What can I say? I'm good at dancing.”

Jack chuckled lowering her to her feet. “Mm. Could I steal a dance?”

Harley purred. “You sure could puddin.”

Jack kept his arms around her waist, feeling the warmth of her bare skin against his palms. He slid his fingers under the band of her pants squeezing just slightly while Harley draped her arms around his shoulders, her fingers playing with the small hairs at the back of his neck. The two of them moved together, swaying against the music as if whatever song was playing had nothing to do with them. Harley smiled up at Jack, her fingers caressing the back of his neck. “Tonight was good wasn't it?”

Jack laughed softly rubbing his nose against hers. “Oh yes, tonight was very good. You should have seen the look on Batman's face! At least what was visible of his face. I think I could get used to doing that...over and over again putting that great big boob on the spot where he has to choose, get the bad guy, or save some citizens.” Jack laughed. “He was so angry it was funny! I bet he was even angrier when he found the bombs and realized they were all duds.”

Harley giggled laying her head against his shoulder both of them continuing to dance as if a slow song was playing instead of the thumping beat of a dance mix.

Jack kissed the top of her head. “Though I think I need to think of a proper punishment for him hitting you in the face.”

Harley laughed. “Oh Jack.”

“No one hits my girl.” Jack hissed.

He kissed her hair again before he reached up a hand to stroke her hair behind her ear. Harley shifted to look at him. She smiled watching the way the lights danced across his face, casting his skin in shades of blues and purples while the sounds of Eiffel 65 filled the air around them, though they didn't seem to notice the sound of the music at all. Jack's complete focus was on his girl. Jack smiled down into her soft blue eyes and carefully pressed his lips to hers, not wanting to hurt her swollen lips. His hands moved up from her waist to cradle her face, deepening the kiss very slowly. He could taste blood on her lips which sent a thrill through his core; he kissed her harder.

Harley made a slightly muffled sound of pleasure lifting up on her toes to press her mouth more hungrily against Jack's, her desperation for him steadily building. She wrapped her arms tighter around his neck, her tongue sliding across his, which only made Jack growl deep in his throat, his fingers tightening where he held her face, resisting the urge to rip her clothes off and take her up against one of these walls right at this moment.

She drove him so crazy!

Jack glided his mouth and tongue over her neck, tasting that sweet combination of flavors that made him want more of her. His mouth wandered from her throat back to her mouth in a slow and passionate kiss while his fingers slid along her scalp buried in her thick hair and holding her to him. He grinned against her lips grinding his hips against her as he leaned into the kiss.

Jack traced her lips, tenderly caressing the cuts in and around her mouth with the tip of his tongue. Harley growled softly, her hands rolling down his shoulders as the music played across them. She slid her hands along his chest, then along his waist, reaching around him; her hands snaked down to grab his ass and yanked him closer.
Jack chuckled tracing the cut on her lip with his tongue. “Committing a crime and getting hit by Batman turn you on Harley?”

Harley giggled. “Mm...Maybe..” She gave him coy grin.

Jack's smile was all teeth when Harley pressed against him rubbing herself against his pelvis to punctuate her statement. Jack laughed swaying against her. “I'll take that as a yes, you little minx.”

Harley's answer was a purr followed by licking his chin as she hissed seductively. “You know...I was giving this some thought while I was cleaning up earlier—maybe we should go home and practice something like...mmm...I don't know...what if Batman were to catch us and tie us up? What would you do?” Harley gave Jack an over the top series of innocent blinks of her lashes.

Jack laughed. “I have no idea what I would do. I think Batman is a freak, my dear. Certainly liked to play the choking game.” Jack frowned, her actual words sinking in. “Tie me up?”

Harley snickered. “Batman a freak. You're funny and yes puddin...tie you up.”

Jack chuckled. “What have you been doing online while you were recovering this week?”

Harley giggled in response.

They swayed a bit to the music, then Harley grinned devilishly. “I think you should get me home so I can tie you up and practice getting loose...you know...just in case.” she giggled mischievously.

Jack smirked. “Oh, of course...just in case.”

Across town Batman had finally returned to the batcave in a foul mood. Alfred was waiting for him with a pot of tea and a bottle of gin.

Alfred smiled just a little when Bruce jumped out of the car. “It's nice to see that new remote you installed in the Batmobile worked well.”

Bruce grunted, stomping to the computer. “Do you know anything about the Red Hood gang?”

Alfred frowned, setting the tray down near the computer and began to pour tea into one of the two cups on the tray. He then added a liberal amout of gin to one of the cups before he handed the unenhanced cup of tea to Bruce. “Well I do recall stories of the gang from the late '30's and '40's; I believed they formed around the time of Prohibition. Though I do believe in later years the gang was all about spreading chaos.” Alfred quirked a brow. “Don't quote me on that sir, since that was well before my time. May I ask sir, why the sudden interest in Gotham's ancient gang history?”

“I ran into the “new” Red Hood gang tonight at the opening of fashion week. They set off some sort of gas bomb...laughing gas that incapacitated everyone.”

“Except you sir,” Alfred pointed out and added, “And what of Miss Talia?”

Bruce pulled his cowl off, tossed it to the side of the long desk that made up part of his computer system with a grim smile. “Yes, except for me. I made sure afterwards to get Talia outside. She had been affected...I did what I could for her. I expect to hear from her soon, wondering what happened to Bruce. But I had to let the gang...I had to let them go.”

Alfred frowned slightly at the way Bruce referred to himself as if Batman and Bruce Wayne were two separate people...and that Bruce was not the dominant of the two.
“May I ask why Master Bruce?” Alfred sipped his spiked tea, watching Bruce's expression. Losing did not set well with Bruce.

“Their leader said they had planted more deadly bombs throughout the building, blew one up to prove his point. I had to make a decision...let them go and get to the bombs or risk him or another member of his gang setting them off, killing...” Bruce trailed off and shook his head. “Except for the one bomb, the rest were all duds, all fakes.” Bruce growled out the last bit and slammed his fists against the computer console.

Alfred frowned. “Sir, you could not have known that. You saved lives—that is the Batman's first priority.”

Bruce pinched the bridge of his nose. “I know...I mean, yes...but...I hate being made a fool of and to top it all off, I'm almost sure I've met the leader of that gang before...somewhere...”

“Sir?” Alfred asked quizzically.

“There was something about the way he moved...it was familiar. Even his fighting style...” Bruce's voice was low. “It was...so familiar...the way he spoke...his voice was altered, like mine in the cowl, but there was something about the way...” Bruce shook his head. “I know him Alfred, I'm sure of it.” Bruce sighed. “I need to find out all I can about the old Red Hood gang. Maybe this new version of the gang has some connection to the old...family members...something. I know this can't be the last we'll have heard of them. They were successful and success will make them cocky. They will try for another big and public score, I know it. Next time, I need to be ready.” Bruce frowned and glared at his computer screen before he murmured. “This incident also showed me that a partner is a good idea...if there had been two of us we might have been able to stop them.”

“Sir, but how will you find a partner you can trust with your secret since you won't trust your own brother?” Alfred asked mildly though there was a slight inflection on the word “brother.”

Bruce sighed with a hint of a sad smile on his lips. “No idea Alfred, no idea.”

Later that evening, back at Catherine house, Jack found himself naked and tied to a chair in their bedroom. Harley had dug through his clothing and took four of his leather belts out almost as soon as they had returned home, both of them still riding the high from their “outing.” After demanding that he carry a chair from the dining room upstairs, and then demanding that he strip, all of which he had done, she had then strapped him down to the chair. She had used the belts to tie his arms behind the back of the chair with a belt across his biceps, another binding his wrists. She had then hooked his ankles around a leg of the chair, and bound them to the chair legs with the additional belts. She had done a pretty damn good job of it too, Jack realized. He struggled just a little, enjoying the game until she had left him in their bedroom and not come back.

She had been gone at least a couple of minutes.

“Harley!! This isn't funny anymore!” Jack yelled. He had been sitting here for a while now. Where on earth had she gone off to! Jack frowned and wiggled the chair. She had done a good job of tying him down. He might be able to get his wrists loose, but she had his arms tied up, it would take a while and he would probably scrape the skin off his wrists in the process.

He was just starting to get a little more annoyed when he heard music start to play. Rihanna's singing drifted into the bedroom accompanied by Harley's voice singing along sweetly.
“No heels, no shirt, no skirt, all I'm in is just skin

No jeans, take em off wanna feel your skin

You a beast, oh, you know that I like that your skin

Come here baby, all I wanna see you in is just skin...”

Jack looked toward the door to see Harley standing in the doorway, her long blond hair loose around her shoulders, naked except for a pair of black thigh socks and a pair of red heels...and nothing else.

Jack smiled slowly, his eyes roaming over her body. He could see a few bruises on her pale skin, the redness around her mouth from Batman's fist, but she looked gorgeous.

She walked over to him. No Jack thought, no she strutted across the room in a way that put all those models to shame, her heels hitting the floor in a way that made his groin tighten.

Harley smiled, catching the tip of her tongue between her teeth, smiling coyly at him. Jack watched Harley move her body in a slow sway to the music, her hands running over her bare breasts slowly. She squeezed her breasts once then snaked her hands down her stomach to her groin. She slipped her hands lower spreading her legs slightly before dragging her hands back up to cup her breasts again, weaving her hips as she did a little spin only to stop with her back to him. Harley weaved her body to the music, stretching her arms over her head, swaying her hips back and forth before bending over and rolling herself back up, arching her back seductively, spreading her legs and swaying her hips again, only to glance over her shoulder and give Jack a saucy wink.

Jack knew his mouth was probably hanging open, but damn...he couldn't help it. His eyes continued to wander over her body while Harley moved, taking in every sway, every bump, every touch. She twisted around to face him again licking her lips. Harley walked closer before she slid to the floor onto her hands and knees and started wiggle her hips to the music, rolling her back in a seductive arch, the whole time with her eyes on his face.

Jack shaft was hard enough that it almost hurt. Wanting her to touch him, or to touch himself watching her, but he was tied up and could only watch her move.

Harley smiled like she knew exactly what he was thinking as she rolled onto her back spreading her legs and arching her back, her hands sliding down between her legs and brushing her groin. Jack groaned loudly watching her, wanting to be between those soft, yet powerful legs.

Harley grinned and Jack heard her giggle over the music as she rolled back to her hands and knees, moving in a wave to her knees, rolling her body sensually as the dim lights of the bedroom caught in her gold hair and glowed across her soft silky skin. Jack's mouth was practically watering. If this was the reaction he was going to get from her every time they did a job...he was definitely on his way to being a career criminal, he thought with a wide gleeful smile.

Harley turned to face him again and slowly began to crawl the rest of the way toward him where he sat bound to the chair unable to do anything except watch her.

Harley smiled, stalking him until she was at his legs. Her eyes roamed over his body. The heat in her gaze felt as if it brushed over him setting his nerves on fire with the need for her touch. Jack opened his mouth to say something, but Harley simply put her finger to his lips.

“Shhh...” she hissed softly.

Jack snapped his mouth shut. For a moment he thought about the really old joke about the mother finding the S & M magazine in her son's room and later showing it to the boy's father who simply told his wife..."You probably should stop spanking him." But he stopped himself from saying the joke out loud...just barely keeping his mouth shut on the terrible joke when Harley ran her tongue up the length of his erection, licking him like he was a melting ice cream cone...which in a way he was because Jack thought he was definitely melting under the heat and strain of watching her and not being able to touch her. It physically hurt, but in the best possible way.

Harley grinned like a cat wrapping her hands around him and slowly moved her hands up and down on his shaft. He was hard, hot in her hands. Harley smiled running her tongue in a circle along the smooth satin head of his erection, her blue eyes watching him, making sure he was paying attention to every move of her tongue, every press of her lips.

Jack jerked against his restraints when Harley wrapped her lips around the head of his penis and sucked, pressing her lips down and pulling up with just the right amount of pressure that he shuddered and groaned. “Harley...”

Jack's entire body tightened while the pull in his groin was agonizing and thrilling. Harley smiled holding him steady with one hand while she used the flat of her tongue to lick the underside of his shaft.

Jack moaned. “Uh...damn Harley...uh...”

She giggled. “Like that?”

Jack chuckled. “Oh...oh yeah.”

She wrapped one hand tight around him then, bobbing her head, aggressively sucking him into her mouth, deeply, her tongue twirling to coat him in her saliva while her free hand roasted up his stomach and over his chest in soft tickling caresses, stopping at his nipples which she pinched causing Jack to grunt and jump, not in pain but in surprise. Jack's breathing became ragged. He couldn't stop watching her head bob up and down on him, the feel of her lips pressed against his sensitive flesh or the warm wetness of her tongue. Her blonde hair brushed his groin and thighs with a tickling caress while the grip of her hand on him would tighten and relax on and off driving him crazy...his hips jerked a little, but his restraints limited his movements. Harley let go of him after a few minute of sucking him deeply into her mouth. She firmly held him in place while she rubbed her clitoris against him in slow, wet slides of her body against his hard erection.

“Tell me you love me Jack.” Harley hissed sweetly, her voice breathy. “Tell me you want me.”
Jack grinned. “I love you Harls and I want you...I want you badly.” He watched her expression, the way she licked her bottom lip, her eyes hooded with passion while she thrust and slid against him. Harley did this for a few more moments before she leaned forward to capture his mouth.

She smiled against his lips continuing to rub him slowly, gently against her. The head of his shaft pressed tight against her clitoris, her hips moving in a sensual snake-like roll while her tongue played across his lips. Her hot breath caressed his mouth.

“I love you puddin...oh...Jack.” Harley groaned and rubbed a little harder.

“Oh...puddin,” Harley growled stroking herself more vigorously against him until Jack whimpered with the effort of holding back, his arms jerking against his restraints.

“Harls...uh pumpkin!” He grinned. She felt so good, so wet and hot...he wanted to pull free and press his fingers into her flesh, to squeeze her against him or bury his mouth against her hot wet clitoris, but she was in charge and he had to let her do what she wanted, which apparently was to drive him to the edge of madness with desire.

Harley kissed him more deeply, her lips pressing against his gently yet firmly, her tongue flicking against the surface of his lips before pushing past to lick his tongue. He answered her kiss with a stroke of his tongue. Harley's breath was hot as she panted against him, her movements becoming more frantic as she came closer to climax.

She groaned deeply. “Puddin...”

Jack growled in response. “Yes Harley...yes...cum for me...”

He jerked against his restraints, his legs bouncing her for a moment, but she didn't seem to notice as she kept sliding against him. Jack was breathing heavily, he glanced down watching the way she pressed herself against his penis, rubbing herself, wetter...hotter...sicker...Jack's eyes rolled back with the effort of holding back his own climax. Harley made a soft squeak of pleasure as if her orgasm surprised her. He could feel the increase of wetness from her, his erection becoming slick with her fluids as her rubbing built and she threw her head back with a loud cry.

“UH! Puddin!”

Jack groaned. “Harley...you're killing me.”

Harley giggled as she pushed herself up, holding him steady before she lowered herself down on him, feeling that wonderful pleasure of his erection pushing inside her body.

Jack groaned loudly, his head dropping back again as his body became one with hers.

She moved slowly at first, easing up and down on him, her muscles contracting and tugging on him until she found her balance and rhythm, then Jack was forced to let her fuck him without holding onto her, without being able to do anything but enjoy what Harley was doing.

She kept one hand on his knee behind her, her fingers squeezing into his flesh while her other hand dug into his shoulder. She rolled and bounced her hips up and down, grinding into him before pulling almost off of Jack, then dropped down again. Jack gasped, tugging on his restraints. She was killing him!! He would swear in a court of law this was a form of murder...a delicious, fantastic murder, but still murder! Being restrained was driving him mad!

He thrust up a little, the urge to pound into her was too strong not to give into it, though his movements were limited by the way she had tied him to the chair. The limited movement of his thrusts still had Harley gasping and groaning and her fucking became more vigorous.

Jack groaned, his whole body jerked upward, pulled toward her body. Harley's movements brought him closer and closer. “Uh...fuck...Harley...” Jack hissed.

She reached forward grasping his face between her hands and covered his mouth with hers, their grunts and moans mixed together. Harley rolled and thrust harder, until Jack felt he might implode as well as explode...murder was all he could think...the most wonderful kind of murder... just as the thought drifted through his lust-addled brain, Jack climaxed with a loud exhale. “Harls...”

Jack groaned biting her bottom lip as his hips thrust up as much as he could against the restraints. Harley ground down, riding Jack hard until she gasped, cumming the instant his teeth grabbed onto her wounded bottom lip. The pain mixed with the pleasure had her reaching forward to grab his hair in both hands, yanking his head forward while her body continued to ride him.

Harley wrapped one hand around his jaw, keeping the other in his hair as she came with a cry. “PUDDIN!”

Jack groaned, jerking as she rode him to oblivion. All he could do was feel her; nothing else was possible. His orgasm had not only short circuited any thoughts, but her continued thrusting and bouncing was enough to reduce him to a gasping mess.

When she finally stopped moving, Harley wrapped her arms around him burying her head against his neck.

She giggled.

Jack frowned. “What are you laughing about?”

“You're still tied up.” Harley giggled. “You were supposed to escape.”

Jack chuckled. “Shut up.”

*

The next day, late morning, Jack and Harley were downstairs eating breakfast planning on a lazy day at home, (though Jack was planning on spending a little bit of time in his new lab working on refining his laughing gas and maybe getting Harley in the lab coat and heels...) Harley had her hair pulled up on top of her head in a messy bun held in place with a couple of pencils wearing some bright red leggings and large, oversize pull over black sweater with a pair of Jack's purple and black striped socks on. Jack was sitting next to her wearing a pair of dark grey slacks, red and green socks with a dark, emerald green dress shirt, the sleeves of which he had rolled up to his elbows, the collar unbuttoned. They were both watching TV, sitting at the kitchen island, and eating some scrambled eggs and toast sandwiches that Jack had put together with some bacon and cheese. Harley took a huge bite then spoke around it.

“HAHA!! Look someone got a few “bigfoot” like pics of us!” Harley pointed at the TV.

Jack frowned. The picture was obscured by the laughing gas, but Jack could see himself on the stage, his arm around Harley's waist.

Jack grinned as the morning news anchorwoman went on. “This new gang is calling themselves The Red Hood gang and if you have lived in Gotham for any length of time, you know that the Red Hood was a gang that operated in Gotham during the '30's and '40's. So what does this new gang mean to the underworld power structure? Batman was also on the scene last night...” Here the picture switched to an equally, if not more obscured photo of Batman. “Our sources say that after the explosion, Batman let the gang go, though it is unclear why. Sources have given two accounts, one stating that Batman let the Red Hood gang go because of the possibility of more bombs, though all bombs found turned out to be harmless; while another source claims that Batman was in fact working with the Red Hood Gang. Gotham PD had issued a statement in support of the Batman.”

Jack snorted, pulling out a cigarette and lighting it with the lighter Harley had given him. “Someone clearly has a bone to pick with Batman if they are trying to line him up with us.”

Harley sipped her orange juice. “Well, not everyone likes him. I mean, of course the gangs don't like him, but some of the uppity ups in Gotham, who I bet have underworld connections, don't like him swooping in to save the day all the time.”

Jack took a long drag on his cigarette holding the smoke for a while before he let it out in a long steady steam of white smoke, his eyes narrowed slightly. “I'm betting the mayor is the one who claimed Batman was with us. I'm fairly confident the man has some ties to one of the five crime families in Gotham.”

Harley frowned. “You think so?”

Jack nodded. “Bruce always suspected that the mayor did...” Jack was about to say something else when there was a knock at the front door, and then the doorbell echoed through the house. Jack frowned and shared a look with Harley. He stood up. The look on his face a cross between annoyed and angry. Harley started to come with him, but he motioned her back.

“Stay here, just in case. Is your bat still by the door?” Jack asked.

Harley nodded. “Yeah, in the corner.”

He nodded and made his way toward the front door.

At the front door Jack could see the shadow of someone on the other side of the glass. He frowned for a moment wondering if it could be Ben...was the man that stupid? He walked over to the door, reaching for the bat with one hand, opening the door with his other hand, only to see a young man in a flower delivery uniform. The young man was brunette with an easy smile. “Hi, I'm looking for a Jack?”

Jack frowned. “That's me.”

The young man grinned again. “I got a delivery for you! I had to come here on a water taxi boat which was totally cool! It was waiting for me, like in the movies! I didn't even know there was a house out here!” The young man turned around and picked up a large bouquet of a dozen long stem red roses.

The kid grinned. “Someone really likes you. Anyway, have a great day!” He waved and made his way back to the docks.

Jack frowned in confusion, staring at the roses as he shut the front door and headed back to the kitchen. Harley looked up and frowned. “Flowers?”

Jack nodded. “For me.”

Harley's eyes narrowed. “What?”

Jack laid the flowers down on a small table by the door and looked for a card. He saw a small envelope stuck in among the roses. Jack picked it up, opened it and pulled out the card which he read out loud.

“...There is never a time or place for true love. It happens accidentally, in a heartbeat, in a single flashing, throbbing moment. All my love, we will be together soon...Ben.”

Jack stared at the note, but it was Harley who reacted first. She stood up fast enough that she caused her dishes on the counter to clatter. She stomped over and grabbed the roses with one hand then with the other she grabbed Jack's lighter. Jack glanced up following Harley with his eyes as she marched out of the kitchen, her face set in a scowl, her blue eyes deadly glittering.

He hurried to catch up with her. “Harley?”

She marched through the house heading toward the back patio, her silent anger almost palpable. She yanked the door open to the back of the house and headed outside into the cold, still just in her socks. Jack followed her outside, not stopping to put on shoes himself, deciding that silence was probably the best thing for him to be at the moment as he watched his wife.

The back patio had a stone porch with a built in curved bench, a stone built-in fire pit along with a large built-in grill and stone bar. It was lovely and would be even nicer during the summer when the flower boxes were filled with blooming flowers.

Harley stomped across the porch to the fire pit and threw the roses violently into the pit. Then, without a word, she marched back into the house slamming the door hard enough that Jack was surprised that the house itself didn't shake.

Jack stood there waiting...and waiting...the chill in the air started to settle in. For a moment he wondered if she was going to come back out again...he had just decided to go in after her or at least to get a coat, when Harley came stomping out again, this time carrying a plastic bottle of lighter fluid. She stomped over to the pit, dosed the roses in the fluid until the smell was quite strong, then she walked over to Jack and snatched the note out of his hand. She glared at him as she held Jack's lighter up, and with a couple of tries she had a flame. She held the note to the fire until it was burning before she savagely threw the burning paper onto the pit on top of the fluid soaked roses which burst into a bright brilliant flame.

Harley crossed her arms over her chest and glared into the flames, her face set in a vicious scowl. Jack smirked stepping over to put his arm around her shoulders. Harley was stiff next to him as she glared hatefully at the burning flowers. He rubbed his hand along her upper arm, leaned in and kissed her ear. She didn't respond at first, simply glared at the flames. After a couple of seconds Harley relaxed and leaned into him.

“I am going to find him puddin and I am going to kill him slowly,” she said softly.

Jack smiled. The fact that his wife would hunt down a rival and tear them apart made his heart swell with love. “I know you will cupcake, I know,” he said with a smile.

In an decent apartment building in The Bowery, Ben sat in the living room of the apartment which reminded him of how an old Italian Grandmother—or any grandmother for that matter—might decorate her apartment, with wallpaper that came out of the last century, the walls bearing the color of many smoked cigars and burned dinners. A bottle of Bellone sat on the table in front of him with two glasses, both only half empty.
Sitting in one chair was Tomaso Panessa, a handsome young man with dark wavy hair, dark brown, nearly black eyes and sensually curved lips. He was young to be in charge of a crime family, and no matter how small the family was compared to the others in Gotham, the Panessa Family still had a seat at the table. And Tomaso was the one occupying that seat. He was closer to thirty than forty in age with a wife and two young sons to carry on his family name. But right now he was sitting alone in his living room with Ben, a past lover and a friend in need.

Tomasco was smoking on a thin Toscano Antico cigar, wearing a tailored brown suit, his legs crossed, bouncing his one foot. He seemed perfectly at ease as he watched the smoke drift to the ceiling.

Ben sat in the chair next to him, a small wooden table with a plastic ashtray the only thing between them. Ben didn't smoke, but he did enjoy watching Tomaso.

After a few moments of silence, almost extending into uncomfortableness, Tomaso spoke.

“So, you broke with the Court of Owls did you?”

Ben nodded. “I did.”

“Over a man who isn't even involved with you.” Tomaso continued. “A man you wish to pursue for your own pleasure even though the Court told you only to observe and to leave the man be...”

Ben shrugged which caused Tomaso to shakes his head. “I always knew your appetites were going to get you into trouble Benjamin. You never were any good at separating business and pleasure. So who is your latest obsession that was worth having the Owls pissed at you?”

Ben smiled and said, “Jack Wayne.”

Tomaso frowned. “Jack Wayne...I thought he was missing?”

“Nope, he is in hiding with his...his wife.” Ben said wife with clear disgust. Tomaso laughed. “Oh he's married too! Hmpf, never could pick an easy target could you? Okay, so Jack Wayne. Handsome...strange, heard little about him until he ended up in Arkham. But the Owls have an interest?”

Ben shrugged. “Honestly I don't know. I was to watch...that was all. Part of my training. I guess they stuck me with Cobb to train me, but...” Ben sighed. “He is just so divine! You should see him Tomaso...he has this crazed look in his eyes...”

“What about the wife, Ben?” Tomaso picked up his glass of wine taking a sip.

“Well, there is the problem,” the younger man admitted slowly. “I...I tried to poison her. I tried to push her into traffic first, but that didn't work so I...poisoned her.” Ben smiled sheepishly, clearly not the least bit upset or ashamed of his actions.

Tomaso groaned. “Ben. Damn. Did you at least succeed in killing her?”

“No idea.” Ben smiled. “I left Cobb and the island as soon as I did it. I knew Jack would know it was me...so...so I came to you.”

Tomaso sighed. “Damn it Ben. You are in deep shit this time. Not only going after a target that the Owls told you specifically to leave alone, but to try and kill his wife! Fuck.”

Tomaso put out the cigar and leaned back to stare at his friend. “So now you are here looking for sanctuary? Why not leave Gotham? Go someplace the Owls can't find you?"

Ben frowned. “Because I want him Tomaso...I need to have him.”

Tomaso frowned. He remembered being on the receiving end of Ben's obsession...it was both glorious and terrifying. He was one of the few to survive Ben.

“Fine, but only if you are willing to give up a few secrets of the Court to me.” Tomaso smiled.

Ben paled...he already had a target on his back with the Court...but then he smiled. If they were going to kill him anyway...

“You have a deal Tomaso.” Ben smiled with a nod.

It was early evening just before dinner.

Harley was giggling.

Jack blinked at her, his expression a cross between surprise, amusement and just a little annoyance. He was standing on the other side of the room. (Harley wasn't sure what the room was for, but they had cleaned it out for a work-out room) wearing only a pair of sweatpants, barefoot and bare-chested, in a fighting stance, watching as the bottle of water rolled across the floor only to stop when it hit his foot.

“I can't believe you threw a bottle of water at me,” Jack muttered.

Harley giggled again. She was dressed in red sweatpants and a black sports bra, also barefoot, her hair pulled up in a high ponytail.

She smiled brightly. “You said anything can be used as a weapon.”

Jack rolled his eyes. “Just throwing it doesn't count Harley. Especially if you don't bother to aim it.”

Harley grinned and blew at an imaginary strand of hair. “Fine.”

Jack shook his head, then grinned at her. “Okay. Let's go again and just...just forget about throwing things okay?”

Harley gave him a smirk, then surprised him again when she came at him hard. She took a step, throwing her arms up, and flung herself into the air doing a serious of three tight back flips along with a mid-air cart wheel, coming to land right in front of him. Harley held nothing back; her fists few out, just as he had taught in her, tight compact jabs, anyone of which would have hurt if she had connected.

Jack blinked in surprise at her swiftness and the sexiness of the flips taking a couple of quick steps backwards in complete surprise when she came to land in front of him, followed with the attacks.

Jack dodged, weaving back and forth while Harley did her best to land a hit, her smart jabs missing him as he seemed to easily dodge her. Harley grit her teeth together in a snarl. She was doing exactly like he had told her, putting a great deal of power behind each of her jabs, committing to them completely without over reaching. He may have thought she wasn't listening, but clearly Harley had been paying close attention.

She threw a punch then that over extended so that when Jack moved out of the way, (Harley invested her whole body with the punch), she accidentally sent herself a half-step past Jack. Jack grinned and smacked her hard on the rear with his hand as she stumbled and tried to recover.

Harley let out a startled and indignant shout, while grabbing her backside. “OWF!! JACK!!”

Jack laughed. “Sorry sweets, but you have a very smackable backside.” He waggled his eyebrows at her. Harley turned on him, her pretty face screwed up in annoyance as she came right back at him, her fists flying, but with a little less accuracy as she was letting her emotions take over.

Jack threw his arms up to block her strikes, letting her blows land on his forearms. Again he was surprised with her strikes—she wasn’t holding back at all, her punches and jabs that struck his forearms were strong enough that if she had hit his face, throat or stomach, they would have definitely hurt. As it was, he was going to have bruised forearms. Jack smirked watching the way his wife’s face was set in a look of frustration and anger...she could make anger look so damn adorable the thought. He might have said something about how cute she was, but he didn’t think she would appreciate the compliment at the moment. They exchanged a series of punches, Jack blocking each of Harley’s easily while Harley was only able to block one or two of his strikes, his fists connecting with her shoulders, upper arms or her sides leaving painful welts.

Harley snarled, but Jack’s hand shot out, his fist connected with her shoulder which knocked her back a step. Harley did a back flip, throwing herself backwards quick enough that her feet almost came up to catch him under the chin, but Jack stumbled backwards just in time before her legs came up over her head to nearly hit him under the chin. Harley landed on her feet and with a hiss she came at him again, her fists flying as she tried to drive Jack into a corner where she could hit him easier.

Jack laughed. He weaved and dodged or blocked, then ducked, his fist coming up under her guard to connect with her diaphragm Harley gasped in pain as the air left her in a rush. He then grabbed her, and flipped her over his shoulder. Harley yelped in surprise with the rest of her breath. She rolled with Jack’s toss, just barely keeping her feet under her.

“Ow, Jack!” Harley coughed.

He smiled backing away from her, his fists up. “You already know the Bat isn’t going to be easy on you Harls, so why should I?”

Harley narrowed her eyes at him surging up and growling as she moved, getting in Jack’s face quickly. He leaned back feeling the breeze from her fist, her knuckles grazing his lips. Jack grinned wide. He came up doing another series of quick jabs. Harley was dodging them better, paying more attention to reading his movies as he had told her to do when she slipped up, over extended her thrust again, but this time Jack swung out of the way and grabbed her ponytail giving the long blond hair a painful tug.

“OWCH!” Harley yelped grabbing her head and turning around to glare at him. “JACK!”

He grinned innocently. “What?”

“You. Are. A. JERK!” Harley snarled, breathing heavily through her teeth as she came back at him moving slightly faster and with a little more fury behind her punches. She loved him, but right now she would be immensely happy if she was able to strike her lover in the face just once! Harley did hit him a few times, her fists landing strikes on his shoulder and one beat past his guard to make a glancing blow across his chin. Jack laughed, enjoying himself. He was breathing hard with the exercise, but mostly from watching her which was a delight. That angry little wrinkle to her nose...the sweat covering her body...was becoming distracting, and that murderous glint in her eyes...
They traded a series of quick strikes and jabs, neither of them able to land a good solid hit, when Harley ducked under Jack's guard. Harley came in low, leading with her shoulder to slam into Jack's diaphragm. The blow knocked the air out of him and bent Jack forward just a little, but it was enough for Harley to flip him over her shoulder and onto his back.

Jack slammed against the hard wooden surface, the air bursting from his lungs at the sudden impact in a painful whoosh.

“Ack!” Jack coughed, but before he could move to get back on his feet, Harley leapt on top of him, straddling him. She grabbed his arms by the wrists and yanked his arms up over his head where she pinned them with a wicked grin.

“Gotcha.” She smiled wide, panting from their exertion, stray hairs sticking to her sweaty face as her blue eyes took in her downed opponent.

Jack chuckled, breathing heavily as well. “You did...or did you?”

He was just about to break her hold, thinking to flip her over and see if he could get her out of her clothing...his desire for her skyrocketing. Just seeing the lights in the room gleaming off her sweat covered body...her heavy breathing...he wanted to fuck her silly right now on the floor like animals, but that was when his phone started to ring. He had recently changed his ring tone for Alex, the sound of the chorus from Skrillex's “Call Him the Devil” echoed through the room telling him that Alex was calling. Jack lifted his head to glance in the direction of his phone, then dropped back with a thunk against the polished wood floor and a groan. “It's Alex sweets, I better take it.”

Harley pouted grinding her hips against him. “Fine. Saved by the bell.”

Jack chuckled. “Oh was I...”

He grinned at her in a way that made Harley shiver. Jack easily knocked her off of him causing Harley to yelp and roll to the side as he jumped to his feet with a flip and padded across the floor to where his phone lay on a table beside an old leather chair. Harley sat cross-legged on the floor for a moment just watching his ass, the sweat rolling down his back from their workout. Her eyes followed the roll of one bead of liquid as it traveled down his spine to his lower back simply begging for her to lick.

She smiled...shower sex was immediately where her mind went...shower sex against the wall...Jack holding her up, her legs over his shoulders. Yep, she decided, then she smiled brightly getting to her feet.

Shower sex...

Jack picked up his phone where he had left it on an armchair table and flopped into the chair that was next to it. He was sweaty, wiping a hand across his face as he hit the button on the phone. “Hey Alex, what's up?”

Jack watched Harley as she walked across the room to where they had a couple of hand towels and a couple of bottles of water. She picked up one of the towels, rubbed it over her face before running the towel over her glistening body.

Jack watched every move that she made...the way she shifted her hips or lifted her arms...the towel dragging across her skin...

Alex sighed. “Hey, ah, Jack...can Alice and I come by? I need to ask a favor.”

Jack's attention was pulled away from Harley back to the phone; something in Alex's voice gave Jack pause. His friend didn't sound like himself. “Sure Alex, everything all right?”
“I’d rather just tell you when I get there.” Alex sounded upset, an uncommon tone for him.

Jack nodded standing up. “Sure, sure you two come on over.”

He could hear the relief in Alex’s voice. “Thanks man. We’ll bring some pizza and some beer.”

Jack glanced at Harley with a frown. “Sure thing Alex, see you in a bit.”

Harley tossed the other towel to Jack frowning as her husband ended the call. “What’s up puddin?”

“I don’t know, but Alex didn’t say fuck once...” Jack seemed stunned.

Harley blinked. “Oh shit.”

*

It was over an hour later before they heard the knock at the door. Jack had showered and changed into a pair of black slacks, a green dress shirt (minus tie) and tossed on a dark purple blazer and a pair of oxfords. He looked casual and comfortable, but stylish as always with his hair slicked back. Harley was wearing black leggings and a pair of knee-high boots with a white knitted turtle-neck, cold-shoulder long-sleeved top. Her hair, which was still slightly damp, was slicked back and braided, falling down her back. Jack answered the door when the knock came to see Alex and Alice standing at the door, both of them wet from the rain that had begun to fall again. Alex held up the two six-packs of beer he had brought while Alice held two boxes of pizza.

“I brought the most important part,” Alex offered with a smile that didn’t reach his eyes.

Jack chuckled and took the beer. “Come on in you two, we're in the main room. We have the fireplace going, so it's nice and toasty in there.”

Alice smiled. “Sounds perfect.”

Soon the four of them were sitting across from each other in the main room, the boxes of pizza open, everyone haven eaten, and each of them nursing a beer. Jack had a cigarette lit and Alex was smoking a large, fat cigar. Jack took a deep drag on his cigarette, his arm around Harley’s shoulders. She was nestled in the crook of his arm, her head against his chest. Alice had her legs across Alex’s lap, her head against the shoulder of the arm he was missing.

After a few minutes of companionable quiet, Jack blew out a ring of smoke as he looked over at Alex. “All right, Alex. What's up? And I know it has to be serious because you have never gone this long without saying the word fuck.” Jack inhaled on his cigarette watching his friend.

Alex’s expression was a little sour, but he sighed. “It's my Pop Jack.”

“Your Pop? As in your father?” Jack asked with genuine surprise.

Alex made another sour face. “Yeah my Dad. Fuck Jack, you think I just sprang into existence?”

Jack chuckled. “Yeah, I sorta did.”

Alex chuckled leaning forward to put out his cigar and lean it against the ash tray on the table. “My Dad, he is in the same business as me, except he works out of Philadelphia. Anyway, my Dad...he's good at what he does, damn good, better than me, but...he's got a problem...he likes to gamble.”
Jack nodded leaning over to put out his cigarette and took a sip of his beer letting his friend continue.

“His gambling brought him to Gotham. Now...I didn't even know he was here until today.” Alex shook his head. “You remember Penguin's fight club?” Alex asked picking up his beer.

Jack glanced down at Harley and they both nodded, sharing a small smile. “It rings a bell.”

“Well, seems my fucking father was backing this fighter, a man name Val Armorr. The guy had been winning at underground fights for weeks now back in Philly and my Pop was raking in the dough. I guess Val was moving here to Gotham where the big money in underground fighting is to be made. My Pop started backing him, paying for everything and was making really good money in return. This Val guy was...the one I guess...like his Rocky or something until they got to Gotham. Then suddenly old Val can't seem to win one fight...my Pop suspects that Armorr started to throw the fights because he was being paid by one of the big mob families, someone who might be trying to get my Pop under their thumb.” Alex took a breath before he continued. “Having someone like my Pop owing you...it's big Jack, real big and dangerous not just for him, but for me too. I didn't know who else to go to, you and Harley, well, you two are like the only friends I have...I just...”

Jack sat up and leaned forward. Harley sat up with him smiling. “We are friends. So what do we do about dear old Alex senior?”

Alex laughed. “I knew I could fucking count on you man. Well, Penguin's little fight club has turned into a full-fledged underground fighting ring. It now costs to get in and those “Fight Club” rules, out the door. Patrons are paying a thousand bucks just to get in. The only rules now are no biting. I heard that just last week one of the fighters walked away with forty K and the pot keeps growing depending on the fighters.”

Jack smiled. “Mm...forty grand, you say? Interesting. So when is the next fight?”

“Tomorrow night,” Alex said.

Jack grinned down at Harley who had nestled back against him when he leaned back again. “Guess we have plans for tomorrow sweets.”

“If part of those plans are you topless and sweaty beating up someone, I am definitely in.” Harley giggled.

Jack gave her a wide grin. “You are just a little perv. I love it.” He wrinkled his nose at her, leaning down to kiss the top of her head.

* *

The fight was taking place in an abandoned theater in the heart of the section of Gotham called Crime Alley. Jack and Harley rode with Alex part way, then the four of them took the train to the Newtown station. From there the small group walked the rest of the way to the fight.

It had begun to rain again by the time they arrived at the building. The surrounding area was packed with cars with a line of people going around the building waiting to pay to get in. Jack was surprised the Gotham PD didn't come and shut the place down...until he saw a couple of officers working at the front door and a few more in line...

Jack frowned, worried for a moment that one of them might recognize him, but then he smiled thinking that no one here would say a word considering they were all participating in an illegal activity. Besides, some hundred dollar bills spread to the right palms would keep anyone questionable from blathering, he surmised, if that became necessary.
Jack was looking stylish in black slacks, a purple collar-less shirt and black blazer with Harley on his arm dressed in a rather short pleated mini skirt in black and a red mock turtleneck, walking on red heels. Her hair was swept to the side and loosely braided.

Alex was dressed as he always was, jeans, t-shirt, though he had opted for a very loud red and blue Hawaiian shirt while Alice looked the picture of sweetness in a pair of jeans, tennis shoes and a pink v-neck polo shirt with long sleeves.

Alex didn’t bother with the line. He led Jack, Harley and Alice straight up to a large man with dark, almost midnight black skin who grinned brightly at seeing Alex, his teeth standing out in sharp contrast to his dark skin. “Hey Alex! My man!”

Alex laughed. “Hey Bert!”

The two men engaged in a complicated handshake which ended with Bert bumping his fist into the shoulder of Alex’s missing arm. “So what you doing here Alex? Come to bet or fight?”

“No, I brought some friends with me, just thought we might have some fun.”

Bert looked over the three of them smiling at Alice. “Hey Alice, you still with this asshole?”

Alice grinned. “Yep.”

Bert’s eyes landed on Jack and Harley. It was clear he recognized them, but didn’t know how. Then a few seconds later the light dawned in his eyes as they widened. “You're Jack Wayne.”

Jack gave Bert his most charming smile. “That I am, though don't spread it around.”

Bert laughed. “Man Alex, you know everyone. Okay, well you guys have fun!”

Bert stepped aside and let them enter.

The inside of the theater had been gutted. In the middle was a makeshift ring where two men were beating the living hell out of each other, though unlike the fight club that Jack had participated in, these two were wearing boxing gloves. Jack watched with interest while the men fought. Alex moved closer to his friend and said, “They have a couple of different fights here, usually something different for everyone; some fights are good old-fashioned boxing, some are bare-knuckled and some do the mixed martial arts.” Alex was yelling to be heard over the crowd of people. “I haven't seen anyone try to fight bare-knuckled against an MMA, but I'm sure someone is going to do it eventually.”

Jack nodded, then shouted back. “I'm surprised at the crowd, thought this was supposed to be a secret? How hasn't the PD arrested everyone?”

The place was filled to the brim with spectators, music was pumping nearly as loud as it had during the rave, the air heavy with smoke and there was a lot of shouting, hissing, booing and cheers as the two men laid into one another with their gloved fists.

Alex shrugged in response. “Some of the cops not only participate by betting and stuff, but we got a few who also participate in the fighting. There ain't one clean cop within miles of here.”

Jack nodded his understanding. Alex led them around the ring and closer to the stage where Jack could see, in all his glory, sat Penguin.

Tonight Penguin was dressed in black and grey striped pants and a black tuxedo jacket, a grey vest and white shirt. He had his favorites surrounding him as he sipped from a glass of champagne, but even from his position on the floor Jack could see the tension around Penguin's eyes. The man wasn't completely happy; something was bothering him.

Though he was moving slowly, Jack stumbled into someone surprising himself. Harley let out a startled yelp then a hiss of, “He grabbed my ass!”

Jack reacted swiftly grabbing the man—who ended up being quite short, a couple of inches under five feet—by the scruff of his neck and lifting him off his feet. “Did you...”

The man was short, pudgy and bald with a wild ring of hair around the sides of his head. He wore large oversized glasses with thick black frames and was dressed in jeans and a dark blue polo that looked as if he had spilled something on it.

Jack snarled. “You touch my girl?”

The little man grinned, there was a slight manic quality to his smile. “She's got a great ass! I couldn't help myself!!” he said in a gravelly voice.

Jack snarled, drawing his fist back while still holding the man by the back of his neck when Alex sighed.

“I see you met my father.”
One Step

Jack blinked in astonishment. “Are you serious?”

Jack looked between Alex and the diminutive—if pudgy—man he was holding off his feet. The little man grinned and pushed his glasses up trying to turn around to look at Alex who stood just slightly behind him. Jack frowned dropping the little man, who landed on his feet with a casual grin and turned to his son, threw his arms out wide. “ALEX!!”

The tiny man threw his arms around Alex who seemed to change from a foul-mouth information broker to a little boy with his dad in the blink of an eye. For a moment Jack felt a sharp stab of jealousy. While Jack had always been closer to his mother, he still missed his father a great deal. That feeling of loss twisted around to his feelings about his brother. He missed Bruce even though his brother was the world's largest asshole he thought, but an asshole that was still his brother. Jack glanced down and Harley, sensing something was bothering her husband, put her arm around his waist and kissed his cheek. Jack glanced toward her with a look of deep and unrelenting love in his eyes.

Alex hugged his father before he turned to Jack and Harley. “Dad this is Jack and Harley, two of my best friends. Jack, Harley this is my dad, Fr...”

The little man threw his hand up stopping his son. “Nope...nope, no names call me...” Here the older man threw his hands up like his name was about to be displayed in lights. “The Broker.”

“Dad, makes you sound like a pro-wrestler,” Alex muttered.

The man sighed with a small shrug of his shoulders. “Fine, my name is Frank—nice to meet you both.” He put his hand out

Jack grinned taking the shorter man's hand. “Frank, nice to meet you.”

Harley smiled taking his hand after Jack. “Hi.”

Frank grinned at her before he made a big show of kissing the back of her hand. “Now you, you ever decide that you're tired of pretty boy here, I'm always available to a beautiful lady like yourself. I told Alice there the same, but she seems to be in love with my one-armed son.”

Harley laughed. “Well I'm in love with my husband too, so...”

Frank threw his hands in the air. “Why are all the hot chicks taken? No love for the old man!”

Jack chuckled. “So, Alex tells me you have a problem.”

The little man nodded. “I do. Come on—I need a drink.”

Frank motioned to the group of younger people to follow him. He led them through the crowd, shoving people three times his size out of his way as he led their group over to a makeshift bar that had been set up against the wall near the back of the theater. Someone had brought in some old wooden and plastic shipping crates, setting them up to serve as a bar counter. Behind the counter there was a long fold out table that was covered in a wide variety of liquor bottles, drinking glasses and some plastic cups. Under the table were a few coolers, filled with ice and beer in bottles of all shapes and colors, and standing guard over all of it was the bartender.
The bartender was a large woman with muscled arms that would have put Evander Holyfield to shame. Despite the cold outside, it was warm inside the theater with the press of people all around, the lights, the excitement, all of it combining to make the place downright hot, which was probably why the bartender was wearing a black sleeveless top that read “Penguin's Girls” and a pair of short-shorts that showed off heavily muscled legs. Jack mused that she could probably break Frank with her thighs, which judging by the look on Frank's face when he walked up to the bar, was a death the man would be happy to have written on his tombstone...death by thighs. The bartender, her platinum blonde hair piled on top of her head while she made drinks and passed out beers glanced in their direction and winked at Frank.

Frank grinned at her as he stepped over to the bar and turned to face his entourage. “So what's your poison? Drinks are on me.”

“Beer for Alice and me.” Alex glanced at Alice who nodded.

Jack whispered something to Harley and she nodded with a smile.

“Two Cuba Libres for us.” Jack held up two fingers.

Frank grinned up at the tall woman. “Hey Marsha babe, need three beers and two Cuba Libres.”

Marsha smiled and Jack was surprised to see her actually blushing at Frank. “I'll have those right up for you, Frank honey.”

They waited the couple of seconds it took Marsha to mix the two drinks and pull out the beers before walking to a little corner where few people were as the next fight had started drawing a crowd to the center of the ring.

Frank took a long drink from his beer before he spoke. “So I'm guessing my boy filled you in on what is happening?”

Jack nodded. “A little bit.”

Frank took a long swig from his bottle then pointed with it. “See that little prick right there?”

All eyes followed Frank's stubby pointing finger to a figure getting ready to get into the fighter's ring. The man couldn't have been more than twenty-five, maybe twenty-eight, short brown hair, brown eyes but there was a cast to his features that spoke of a mixed background. He was well built with that compact lightness of muscle look that guaranteed that he was agile and swift on his feet. The guy did not look like the type of to go down easily.

“Just...you know, you guys watch him fight, tell me what you think. I mean I know ain't none of your experts, but Alex has been in more than one scrap, even with one hand my boy has won more fights than lost and Alex mentioned you have done your fair share of fighting...” Frank looked up at Jack who nodded. “So I'm hoping you can tell me if I just backed a bad horse or if I'm really being screwed.”

Jack sipped his drink. “Why don't we get closer, get a better look at this fighter of yours.”

Frank nodded and led their group closer, snaking along the wall until they were able to cut through the crowd to the ring. Since Frank was one of Val's sponsors, they were able to get almost right up on the ring where Val and another man were getting ready to start their match.

Jack kept one arm around Harley while he studied the fighter. Jack narrowed his gaze in concentration. The man had the moves, that was easy to see...but as Jack watched, it was clear he was avoiding openings he should have known to take and walking into punches he could have easily avoided. He might be a good fighter, but he was not such a good actor that he could keep others from seeing his intentional ineptitude. Jack glanced over to the stage where Penguin sat and, as if sensing he was being watched, the other man's gaze immediately turned and locked with Jack. Penguin smiled before he leaned over to his dark-skinned female companion, whispering something to her before the woman walked...no, wrong word he silently corrected himself, before she prowled off the stage toward Jack.

Jack whispered to Harley, his lips brushing her ear which created a delightful tickle she thought causing her to lean closer to him. “I have a sneaking suspicion that the favor I owe Penguin in about to be called in.”

Harley followed his gaze to see the woman moving toward him moving through the crowd like a stalking panther. “I think you might be correct puddin.”

Jack squeezed his arm around her. “Stay close.”

The woman pushed her way easily to Jack and Harley, the crowd parting for her like water until she stopped right in front of them. She was easily a head taller than Jack. “Mr. Cobblepot wishes to speak with you both.”

Jack grinned sharing a glance with Harley before he replied and motioned with his drink. “Lead the way.” He then downed his drink in one swallow, pressing the empty glass into someone's chest as he walked past, the patron taking the glass with a look of confusion.

Jack turned to face Alex, Alice and Frank, indicating the woman with his head. “I guess we'll be back in a jiff.”

Frank watched them go before glancing up at his son. “You keep some strange company buddy.”

Alex smirked. “You have no idea Pops.”

Jack and Harley were led onto the stage where Penguin sat on his “throne” surveying the fight, the crowds, the money. He didn't look at Jack or Harley for a good few seconds, the little despot showing off how much more important he was by ignoring them. Jack took a breath through his nostrils to calm himself down. He owed Oswald for helping Harley...which was the only reason Jack didn't walk over and put his fist through the little geek's nose. Oswald was simply playing a game of dominance, control, but clearly something was slipping or he wouldn't have Jack brought to him.

The fight in the ring was going strong, the crowds were cheering or booing depending on their fighter when Oswald finally motioned Jack and Harley over.

Oswald looked up at Jack. “You look well.”

Jack smiled. He didn't answer at first. Instead he pulled out his cigarettes, taking his time to knock one out of the package, placed it between his lips before he pulled out his lighter, then slowly lit it with his expensive Zippo, making sure the light in the theater caught it for no other reason than to show off the expensive gift. Oswald glanced at the lighter and in spite himself was impressed.

Jack grinned. “Wife got it for me.”

Oswald smiled at Harley. “Nice to see you looking so well dear...except for...” He touched his own lip to indicate where Harley had a light bruise. She shrugged. “I'm good thank you Ossie.”

Oswald didn't say a word to Harley calling him Ossie which impressed Jack. It clearly meant the little bird must be developing a soft spot for his wife. Interesting.

“I've decided that it's time for me to call in that favor you owe me Jack.” Oswald turned back to the fight, watching the two men with a critical eye.

“As you can see, my little side venture has turned into something much, much larger...a real money making industry now. But it seems that someone is trying to...destroy what I've built or they are simply trying to work it in order for them to come out on top. I really cannot have that.” Oswald motioned with one hand. A pretty young man quickly came over with a cigarette. Jack could tell from where he stood that it was a Fantasia cigarette, expensive with a gold filter tip. The young man held the cigarette between his lips to light it before putting it in the end of a long, black cigarette holder. Oswald took the cigarette without a glance at the young man.

“I want you to find out who it is,” Oswald explained simply taking a drag off his cigarette. “And I want you to kill them. Send a message—no one messes with Cobblepot.”

Jack frowned, his eyes on the fighters. “All right, let's say I agree, how do you propose I do that?”

Cobblepot grinned. “You forget, I've seen you fight. I also know how charming you can be when you want to be. I have no doubt that you can find out who is paying these fighters to throw certain fights and if you can't, your wife has her own ways I'm sure.”

Jack snarled. “Penguin, you leave my wife out of this...I owe you for helping her, but don't think I won't hurt you...” Jack knew he probably shouldn't have reacted the way he had...his reaction gave Cobblepot information against him...that Jack would do anything to protect Harley—which wasn't a stretch to imagine—but the damage was done, he would just have to make sure Cobblepot never got to use that information against him.

Oswald chuckled. “Sorry Jack, just kidding. I would never...anyway...sorry, bad taste on my part. Look, you both are smart, clever. Find out who is messing with my fights and I'll consider us even.”

Jack blew out a stream of smoke, then growled. “Fine.”

Oswald chuckled. “Perfect. The next fight will be two nights from now. I'll make sure you're on the board. You'll need a backer.”

Jack nodded. “A backer won't be an issue.” He was just about to turn away and leave Cobblepot when Jack glanced out on the crowd, the fighters in the ring, but he saw someone that caused his blood to turn to ice.

Standing in the crowd watching the fight next to a man with wavy black hair in a finely tailored suit, stood Ben Orchard.

Ben was sipping from a beer, his eyes intent on the fighters. He would occasionally say something to the man next to him. It was clear to Jack by the way the men held themselves, the way they leaned toward each other, that they were more than friends. Jack had no idea who the other man was, but he was going to fucking find out because he would bet his life, that man was providing Ben with a safe haven in Gotham.

Penguin could almost feel the cold coming off of Jack. There was something...a slight shift in Jack's posture, the tilt of his head, a dilation of the eyes, like a predator having spotted its prey. Oswald studied the crowd, his sharp eyed gaze searching for a clue as to what had sent the other man off. As he looked out onto the crowd he didn't notice anything strange, just the usual groups of the wealthy, the violent and the bored. He did see Tomaso Panessa; now that annoyed him. He knew there were representatives from each of the main mob families here; nothing that made as much money as Oswald was making wouldn't attract their attention and they all probably wanted to stick their hands in the cookie jar, but only Panessa would try to make a power move. The man was hungry for a better seat at the table. He was also dangerous because, as far as Oswald was concerned, the man was overly greedy and had poor taste in friends. Penguin noticed the young man with Panessa, attractive, but there was something simply “off” about the man, something that Oswald instantly didn't like. He took a drag on his cigarette in contemplation, his eyes narrowed slightly. He needed to find out what had upset Jack...

Jack grabbed Harley by the hand and hurried her off the stage, his hand tight around hers. “Puddin? What is it?” Harley asked as Jack made his way to the wall and moved along it. He hissed over his shoulder. “Ben is here.”

“WHAT?!” Harley stopped dead, pulling her hand out of Jack's grasp.

Jack spun around and wrapped his hand around hers again before she had a chance to dive into the crowd. “Harley!!! Not now!” Jack grabbed her hand and yanked her back.

She pulled on her arm trying to break loose of Jack’s hold, but he wouldn't let go.

“Let me go!” Harley snarled, but Jack simply yanked her into his arms causing her to stumble forward and slam against his chest. To calm her down, he covered her mouth with his. Harley struggled for only a second before her shoulders sagged in defeat and she returned Jack’s kiss.

He let her go slowly. “Not now, not here—all right?” he asked with concern.

Harley made a face, her bottom lip sticking out slightly, which drew a grin from her husband. He flopped her bottom lip with his forefinger. “Not now Harley, promise me.” Jack kissed her pouty lip.

“Fine, I promise you, but if he comes anywhere near you I can't promise I won't punch him...or worse,” Harley said gloomily.

Jack laughed. “Fair enough sweets. Come on. Let's fine Alex and his father.”

They found the three of them back over at the bar where Frank seemed to be talking up the bartender who was flirting and giggling with the short man like the two of them were in high school. Alex was leaning against the wall, Alice leaning against him watching the fight.

When he saw Jack and Harley he grinned holding his beer up. “He wants you to fucking find out who is paying boxers to throw?” Alex said once Jack was close enough that he didn't have to yell and share all his information.

Jack nodded. “Yeah, he's calling in his favor. Wants me to figure out who's scamming him by having fighters throw fights, making money behind the bird's back. So, yeah, I'm going to do it, figure it helps your father and takes care of my favor to Penguin all in one stroke. Think your father will back me? I guess I need a backer for the fight.”

Alex nodded. “Fuck yeah he will, don't worry about that. Thanks man.”
Jack smiled. “And I'm never opposed to a little violence. Speaking of favors and violence, I have one for you.”

Alex looked intrigued. “Oh? A favor, violence or both.”

Alex frowned and pushed off the wall. “Show me.”

Jack kissed Harley. “Stay right here, I'll be right back.”

Harley nodded, moving to stand with Alice.

Alex grinned. “Okay buddy, show me this fucking chucklefuck.”

Jack and Alex made their way through the crowd to where Jack had seen Ben and the other man. The fight was becoming more violent and people were becoming more enthusiastically vocal along with the fight. The two friends pushed their way to the other side of the ring when Jack stopped, catching sight of Ben.

“There, that's him.” He pointed for Alex.

Alex saw the young man named Ben, but it was the man with him, the man who had his arm around Ben's waist that made Alex hiss in a breath. “You didn't tell me he was friends with fucking Tomaso Panessa!”

“What?” Jack frowned, but he shook his head in irritation when he realized Ben had seen him. Jack narrowed his eyes when he saw Ben smiling at him, giving him a flirty smile, even touching his tongue to his top lip in a suggestive lick of his upper teeth. The young man then kissed his fingers and blew a kiss at Jack. Jack clenched his hands in fists, his knuckles turning white, started to push his way toward the man, but Alex grabbed him by the shoulder with his one hand and pulled Jack back. “Don't—he's with fucking Panessa!”

Jack turned on Alex causing his friend to take a step back when he saw the murderous look in Jack's blue eyes. “Who the hell is Panessa?!” Jack ground out between clenched teeth.

Alex glanced in Ben's direction. The man was staring at Jack like a starving man, his eyes roaming over Jack with clear desire, but Tomaso was standing behind Ben with a slight frown on his face. He watched Jack and Alex for a moment before returning his attention to the fight. Alex steered Jack back toward their ladies while hissing in Jack's ear.

“Panessa is that man in the fancy suit with Ben. He is the head of one of the five fucking mob families in Gotham. They're small potatoes right now, compared to the rest, but fuck Jack, if he's friends with the head of the Panessa family, getting to him is going to be not just hard, but pretty close to impossible. Right now I can fucking guaranteeee you that while that fuckhead Panessa looks like he is just on a fucking date there with that chucklefuck Ben, there are at least twelve or more bodyguards around the room watching out for Tomaso's fucking ass.”

His lips thin with anger, Jack glanced around the crowded theater. He couldn't be sure, but he trusted that Alex was probably right.

“Fine...but I want us to do something to him...to Panessa. He's decided to stick his head into our business, then I say we are going to do the same to him.” Jack hissed low.
Alex paled slightly, but nodded.

They made their way back over to Alice and Harley. The two women were deep in conversation leaning against the wall their heads practically together. Jack could see that Frank was still heavily involved in his flirtation with Marsha Muscles, who laughed and leaned over to kiss Frank on the cheek.

Alex snickered elbowing Jack. “I think my Dad might have a fucking date. Look at that shrimp go! See that Jack? I inherited the moves.”

Jack laughed. “Well, you inherited something.”

Alex snorted before he spoke. “By the way, thanks for helping man. I knew I could fucking count on you.”

Jack smiled. “What are friends for?”

Jack then put his arm around Alex's shoulders, glancing at his wife as he smiled. “I want you to find out anything and everything you can about this Tomaso Panessa. I've decided that the Red Hood gang needs to move up even more in the world...in Gotham. Tomaso is head of one of the five families; I say it's time we show them that we are gunning for them.” Jack grinned with delight. “I want to put a kink in Panessa's business...a little kick to the crotch.” Jack chuckled.

Alex frowned. “I can do that, but Jack, man, that's getting into some fucking big stuff—organized crime? The Gotham mob...I mean, I can get the fucking information just...”

Alex blew out a breath. “You sure you want to start messing with Panessa?”

Jack chuckled again, but there was a slightly sinister ring to his laugh. “Panesa put a target on his back by being friends with Ben. Besides, Gotham has already had a taste of us...let's inform the mob that we are looking to expand and see how they react...I have a tickling feeling in my gut that tells me Panessa isn't well liked...”

Alex shrugged. “Well, you're fucking right. I know he isn't liked. The families see him as greedy and power hungry, and disrespectful to his elders...actually they might be fucking fine with seeing him dropped a notch or two.” Alex grinned.

*

Bruce was down in the cave suiting up for his evening excursions—as Alfred had called it earlier—when his phone rang. He glanced over at it sitting on the computer desk in the cave. He thought about ignoring it, but he had already ignored several calls today because of work, or his meeting with Lucius. He knew who it probably was...Talia. She would have a lot of questions, not all of which he wanted or could answer, but he couldn't just keep ignoring her.

Bruce walked over and picked up the phone after glancing at the number. It was indeed her. “Hello Talia.”

“Finally Bruce. I was beginning to worry.” Her voice came over the phone sounding soft, creamy, like spun honey.

“I'm sorry, Talia. I've just been busy,” Bruce explained as he dropped down into the computers seat.
“Too busy to check on me after the robbery? Really Bruce? I'm not stupid, You're avoiding me...what happened? I remember the gas, the Red Hood gang and Batman, but I have no idea what happened to you—where did you go?” Talia's tone was sharp now, but he could tell she was trying not to be accusing, albeit with difficulty.

“I...I ran outside...” Bruce grimaced as he stumbled. “It was confusing after that with the gas...and Batman showing up...”

Talia was quiet for a moment before she spoke, but her voice held clear doubt. “Bruce, don't lie to me. Have enough respect for me to give me the truth.” Her voice cut him deeply. He had to lie...he felt as if he had no choice, to protect his family, to protect...then he wondered. Who did he really want to protect?

Talia continued, her voice strained. “ You know what? I'm going to let it go...for now. Regardless, I need to talk to you before I leave Gotham.”

“You're leaving?” Bruce couldn't keep the disappointment out of his voice. Part of him felt a sharp stab of pain...first Selina, now Talia. He had to admit, that was the one thing that Jack had over him...the one thing that Jack had been able to obtain that kept slipping through Bruce's fingers...love. His brother, despite everything, had managed to find love and hold onto it, desperately, passionately...like nothing he had ever seen. Bruce blamed the Batman; that was why he couldn't have anyone important in his life. He continued to tell himself that he had a mission, a duty and that because of that there was no time for love, no time for a family, for someone to come home to...anything outside of the mission was simply a distraction; but he knew that was partly a lie. Maybe he didn't want to be vulnerable like that? Having someone important in his life, someone to love, left him exposed; without love, he was safe...he would never have to experience that pain again, the pain of losing someone he loved.

For a moment the image of his parents' murder came to mind...his little brother crying...Bruce frowned...

He let the image go, pushing aside the dark thoughts, but then he thought of Jack again and smirked. He had to wonder if Jack wasn't the braver of the two of them. While Batman was putting his life on the line every night, when he came home he didn't have to worry about losing someone he loved. There was no one but Alfred and while Bruce loved the old man like a father, it wasn't the same as having someone to share his heart with. Conversely, Jack had laid himself bare for love, had devoted himself fully...maybe to an extreme, but Bruce knew there was no doubt that Jack loved Harley and while he hated to admit it, and would probably only admit it to himself in a moment such as this...Harley...Harleen loved Jack.

Bruce sighed. Maybe he needed to change that...he frowned slightly thinking about the idea of a partner again...someone to help him with his mission. Perhaps, instead of a significant other, maybe he needed to be a father...to nurture someone...it was worth thinking about. That may have been where he went wrong with Jack...he had tried too hard to be Jack's father figure instead of his brother.

Talia's voice broke through his thoughts bringing Bruce back to the here and now.

Talia asked more softly. “Bruce, what is going on with you?”

“Nothing Talia, nothing.” Bruce answered.

Talia sighed, clearly not believing him. “Look Bruce, we need to talk all right. When would be a good time? I'll be in Gotham for at least another week.”
“How about lunch tomorrow then?” Bruce suggested.

“That sounds perfect. How does one p.m. sound?” Talia asked softly.

The next day Jack was in his lab. He had been there most of the morning...had woken up with an idea about something or other. He had told Harley where he would be, but she had been only half awake when he excitedly exited their bedroom and rushed down the stairs. Harley had ended up eating breakfast alone.

She had brought him some coffee, poking her head in on him to see he had at some point decided to get dressed, wearing a pair of light grey slacks and a white shirt, unbuttoned at the collar, the sleeves rolled up and a pair of oxfords. He was intently engaged in something at one of the tables; she knew the basics about chemistry from college and med-school, but she had no idea what he was doing right now. The liquid he was messing around with glowed a soft green as it worked its way through the many twist and curves of the tubing to drip into a large glass beaker.

He was working so intently that she decided to leave him alone for a little while.

Now it was lunch time and he still hadn't ventured out of his lab.

Harley decided the man needed a break and as his wife, it was her job to make sure he had said break.

*

Jack was sitting down on a stool, music playing lightly in the background, Ruelle's warm voice sang in the background, “Feel the fury closing in

All resistance wearing thin
Nowhere to run from all of this havoc Nowhere to hide from all of this madness, madness, madness...”

He was humming along softly, sitting under the dull light. He kept the lights dim, but not so muted that he couldn't see the notebook opened in one hand, his pencil moving speedily across the page taking notes on some of the things he wanted to add to the laughing gas to change its composition some when the door to the lab opened up and he glanced over to see his wife standing in the doorway. He couldn't quite see all of her from where he was sitting, but he leaned over slightly. “Harley?”

She had her hair up in a bun, an old pair of glasses on her nose (he had no idea where she had gotten those from, he hadn't seen her in glasses since they first met) and she was wearing a white lab coat which he noticed hit just at the top of her thighs. The coat was only buttoned once at her belly, the rest hung open giving him a great view of her cleavage and a hint of her groin. Jack grinned slowly watching her as she moved, her hips swaying as she walked toward him, carrying a notebook and a pen in one hand. She walked in and he heard the click of high heels against the floor as she walked over to him...no that was wrong. She sauntered over to him.
She stopped, cocking her hip to the side and reached up to lower her glasses and pierce him with her blue eyed gaze over the top of the frames.

“Mr. Wayne? I'm your therapist...your sex therapist, and it has come to my attention that you have a problem.” Harley purred walking closer. Jack's eyes wandered down over her. She was wearing a pair of black, pointed toe stilettos, black fishnet stockings, a garter belt that ran up her thighs...he licked his lips his eyes traveling up her body.

Harley looked at the notebook, flipping a page. “It has come to my attention Mr. Wayne, that you have an erection that just won't go away! Oh my, tsk tsk! I see that I'm going to have to examine you, test out your techniques, see if we can assess the problem...”

Harley looked up from her notebook with what Jack thought was a cute, yet seductive smile, her blue eyes twinkling with mischief. “I'm afraid Mr. Wayne, I'm going to have to ask you to drop your pants.”

Jack smiled, but then tried to school his features into something a little more serious. “Oh, well, of course Dr. Quinzel, whatever you say.”

Harley grinned then dropped her smile into a firm line. “Mm...good, but first we need to make sure your techniques are up to par.”

Jack looked at her innocently. “My techniques?”

Harley walked over to one of the tables in the room that was relatively clear of equipment, the edge of which hit her about mid hip. She set her notebook and pen down off to the side before she turned around, her glasses sliding to the end of her nose. Jack was watching her every move, his experiments and gases all forgotten as he watched his wife turn, doing a little hop up onto the table. She crossed her legs and smiled at him. His eyes traveled down the length of her legs, then back up again. He swallowed.

Harley crooked her finger at him. “Come over here Mr. Wayne, and bring the stool with you.”

Jack tossed his notebook down and swiftly stepped over to his 'therapist's' table with the stool, setting it down in front of her. Harley grinned. “Now sit down Mr. Wayne and show me exactly how you would perform cunnilingus. This is very important.”

“Really? You think this will help, Dr. Quinzel?” Jack was struggling not to smirk.

“Oh, well that will all depend on how well you perform this action Mr. Wayne. As your therapist I have to tell you, practice in these things does make perfect and if you perform well enough I might be able to help you with that erection problem.” Harley smiled and push up her glasses with a single finger.

Jack scooted the stool closer in front of her and Harley uncrossed her legs. She slid one heeled shoe against his leg before she slowly raised her leg, resting her ankle on his shoulder. His eyes raked over her, spread out before him. Harley leaned back on her hands rubbing the point of her shoe gently along his shoulder.

Jack growled softly, scooting his stool yet closer to her, caught her leg with one hand and pressed a kiss to her calf, his hand traveling down her calf feeling the soft fabric of her fishnets under his fingers. He bit at her leg, pressing his teeth against the inside of her thigh, just hard enough to make her jump. He wanted to bite her, suck on her; his need for her was so strong that it was difficult to be delicate with her, but he was going to play the game...playing with Harley was always fun.
He settled her leg over his shoulder, feeling the press of her heel against his back, the stiletto poking into his back, though the slight discomfort just sent a thrill down his spine. Harley spread her other leg out, settling the leg up on the table.

He reached up to unfasten the one button that held the lab coat closed, letting it fall away to reveal her naked body except for the garter belt that rode around her leg, the black lace pressing into her skin, the garters holding her stockings up, standing out starkly against the pale, peach color of her skin.

Jack growled again wrapping his right arm around her leg that was settled on his shoulder reaching out and pressing her other leg back just before he pressed his mouth to her clitoris. He slowly kissed her, twirling his tongue against her in a curl, then a slow lick. Harley responded with a deep moan.

“Oh Mr. Wayne...uh...”

Jack grinned whispering against her. “Tell me if I'm doing anything wrong doctor.”

She giggled. “Oh, I will.”

Jack chuckled, rolling his tongue in a circle against her clitoris before pressing his lips against her more firmly and sucking, alternating between gentle sucks to long licks, then quick flicks with the tip of his tongue. Harley groaned, shuddering. “Oh...oh that's a very good start Mr. Wayne.”

Jack grinned against her and whispered. “Mm...I really should practice more Dr. Quinzel.”

He opened his mouth wide against her sex, encompassing as much of her as he could with his mouth moving his jaw up and down, pressing his lips to her catching her with his lips and tugging gently before repeating the process again. He reached up to slide his free hand up her stomach, feeling the silk of her skin under his hand, warm, soft. She made him want to wrap himself around her, safe in her arms, her body pressed against his. He reached up to cup to one of her exposed breasts marveling at the soft fullness of her breast in his hand, warm, biteable, the nipple hard and tight against his palm. He cupped her breast, squeezing just a little before he grasped her tight, hard nipple between his forefinger and thumb. He slowly rolled her nipple and was rewarded with goosebumps racing over her flesh while he licked her with the flat of his tongue. He switched breasts, repeating the same stroke and twist that had Harley writhing while the pad of his thumb stroked over her nipple until her groin was tight, heat pooling at her clitoris.

Harley groaned loudly, her foot against his back jerked digging the heel of the stiletto into his lean, muscled back, but he didn't care—he just kissed her with more vigor, flicking the pad of his thumb over her nipple which caused Harley to gasp. “Jack...” Then she quickly remembered the game and giggle- moaned. “I mean Mr. Wayne...just...just keep doing that, you're doing...oh...fine!”

He smiled whispering against her wet clitoris. “Whatever you say Dr. Quinzel.”

He snaked his hand down her body, pressing his fingers into her soft, inviting flesh, caressing along the garter belt as he did so until he was at her groin. Jack stroked the tender skin at the joint of her thigh causing Harley to jerk then shiver, goosebumps racing across her skin again. He pressed his mouth more firmly to her just before he slid two fingers into her. Jack inhaled softly, feeling how wet she was as his fingers slid into her. He kissed her again, twirling his tongue in a passionate press of tongue and lips, curving his fingers just slightly to catch her g-spot with the pads of his fingers while he continued to roll his tongue over her, using the very tip of his tongue to find just the right spot to flick that had her shuddering with pleasure.

“Uh Jack! Yes...like that Mr. Wayne...” Harley moaned loudly, leaning back heavily on her hands, her back arching off the cool surface of the table as she came with a cry, reaching around with one hand to grab Jack's hair, her fingers coiling in his hair and pulling. “YES!”

She rolled her hips, that warm delicious tickle of his tongue against her clitoris had Harley whimpering as her orgasm rocked through her, followed quickly by another orgasm.

He felt her body respond to him, cumming, her muscles tightened around his fingers, which prompted him to thrust with more vigor into her. Harley arched her back crying out. “UH! Mr. Wayne!”

Harley moaned, the feeling of his tongue moving against her, the firm teases with the tip, to the full on flat of his tongue lick had her writhing. Jack was hitting every sensitive spot to the point that she wanted to dig her fingers into his hair and ride his mouth with abandon.

Jack didn't stop; he continued to focus his attention on her clitoris, his tongue playing over the sensitive surface, making her whimper in delight, her body jerking in response as her orgasm rolled over her then ebbed before crashing around her again when Jack sucked on her clitoris. His lips tugged lightly before he rolled and twisted his tongue against her, his fingers thrusting slowly in and out of her.

Jack pulled away from her and slowly stood up, keeping her one leg stretched up on his shoulder, and kicked the stool away. He quickly unbuttoned his slacks, letting them drop below his hips. He shifted Harley nearly off the edge of the table, holding his shaft ready to enter her, but he waited, sliding the head of his erection against her, coating himself in her fluid with a deep groan, his teeth clenched together on almost a snarl. “Dr. Quinzel...” He drew her title out on his growl, caressing her name, dragging the “Z” and the “L” of her name which sent a thrill up her spine. He pressed a kiss to her leg over his shoulder, feeling the soft yet still rough texture of her fishnets against his lips.

“You...you, ah did a very good job Mr. Wayne...very good. Now...let's see if we can't take care of that erection you have.” Harley giggled gazing heatedly at him over the rim of her glasses. Jack chuckled. “Thank you Dr. Quinzel.” He made a show of licking his damp lips, his blue eyes gave her a heated gaze, raking over her with a look that made Harley feel as if her husband wanted to dig his teeth into her. She smiled pressing her teeth into her bottom lip in delight.

Harley giggled her cheeks flushed. “Now Mr. Wayne...why don't you show me your other...techniques?”

Jack purred. “Mm...I live for these moments with your Dr. Quinzel.” He rolled his tongue over the “L”

Harley giggled feeling that delightful shiver run up her spine from the way Jack said her name, but then her giggle quickly turned into a soft, deep groan when Jack yanked her hips nearly off the edge of the table and slid into her pressing himself deep inside her. She groaned laying back against the table. Her inner muscles tightened around every inch of him buried all the way inside her. She moaned again loudly as she arched her hips.

Jack slowly caressed one hand along her calf. Harley brought her other leg up, resting her heel against his other shoulder. He grinned grasping her knees and tickled her.

Harley giggled. “NO! Not the knees!!”

Jack snickered, though he stopped. “But Dr. Quinzel,” he interjected. “This is part of my technique.”

Harley squealed wiggling and Jack found the way her muscles clenched him to feel heavenly. “No Jack sighed theatrically and stopped. “Fine Dr. Quinzel, how about this then?”

He dropped his hand to her thighs, spreading his fingers to dig into her flesh and started to slide in and out of her using his hips. Harley gasped with pleasure, pushing herself up on her hands. He penetrated with a deep and steady flow of his hips while Harley rocked against him using her hands for support.

“Oh...yes...that works...Mr....Mr. Wayne” Harley smiled at him, making his groin tighten. He loved her smile.

Jack chuckled. “Mm...good. I like to succeed in all things.” His hands moved to grasp her torso, his hands at the sides of her breasts. He rolled his hips, careful not to pull her more over the edge. He dropped his hands to reach under her, grabbing her ass and lifting her up forcing Harley onto her elbows.

“How about this Dr. Quinzel?” Jack purred as he moved slow and steady watching her expression.

Harley hissed. “Oh...Mr. Wayne.”

Jack laughed then groaned. “Mm...I love you Dr. Quinzel.”

Harley moaned in response. “I love you puddin.”

He started to move his hips harder, faster, digging his fingers into her soft skin, watching her expression as he penetrated inside of her as deeply as he could. The sensation of being buried in her rolled up his spine and through his groin eliciting a deep groan of pleasure from him.

Harley cried out his name, her body once more tightening around him, her back bowing with her orgasm. The sensation of Jack buried in her, piercing her with his erection, made her want to scream in delight. She felt on fire, every nerve ending sending ripples of pleasure through her.

Jack couldn't hold back any longer, watching the way she writhed under him. He released himself with a cry thrusting forward hard and spilling into Harley.

He continued to move more slowly, a few more shuddering thrusts before he scooted her more firmly onto the table and eased her rear down making sure she wasn't going to fall. Harley was panting for breath. Her hair had started to come down from her bun, the lab coat spread around her. He smiled laying his cheek against one of her legs brushing his cheek against the fishnets gazing down at her, his eyes filled with intense love.

“So how did I do Dr. Quinzel?” Jack asked as he pressed a kiss to her calf.

Harley giggled. “Oh you passed with flying colors Mr. Wayne. You now have a clean bill of health.”

Jack laughed. “Thank you doctor.”

Jack sighed relaxing back against the pillows and blew out a stream of smoke, watching the white smoke drift up to the ceiling of their bedroom, the tobacco relaxing him further. Harley had convinced him after his “exam” in the lab that he needed to take a break from his work and relax. He had found it hard to argue with her looking so deliciously unkempt from their fucking in the lab. So here he was in bed. He was completely naked, lying on top of the bed, his ankles crossed and watching Harley as she walked across the room carrying a tray with some peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, some ice tea and chips on it. She was still wearing only the lab coat, garter belt, fishnets and heels...

She grinned. “Lunch!” She held up the tray. He grinned, his eyes traveling up her legs already becoming hard again at the sight of his wife when his phone rang. Jack reached over for it without taking his eyes off of Harley while she kicked off the heels and crawled onto the bed next to him.

“Hello?” Jack answered the phone grinning when he saw that Harley had cut the sandwiches into triangles, just how he liked them.

He was answered by Alex. “Hey man, I found out about a fucking deal going down tonight with the Panessa family. It will be on going down near Sheldon Park. There is a large factory building over that way; my sources say that is where it will be going down, inside the factory.”

Jack sat up. “Really...a good old fashion drug deal. Think they’ll have cocaine?”

He could almost see Alex nod. “Yeah man, some fucking cocaine and maybe some meth. My sources say its a pretty fucking big deal. Lots of money being exchanged and a lot of money to be made off the stuff. Supposedly, this is a deal that is going to help Panessa buy a bit more clout with the families. That fucking dude is always trying to make himself more important than he is...the chucklefuck. Anyway, it's going down around one in the morning.”

Jack chuckled. “Sounds perfect. Think we can get everyone for tonight?”

Alex snorted. “Fuck yeah. Everyone has just been sitting on their hands waiting. I mean I would rather have a day or two to fucking plan, but...yeah I think we can fucking do it.”

Jack grinned. “Then let everyone know...tell everyone I want them in some sort of red mask, I don't care what, just red; if they still have their gas masks that would be perfect.”

Alex interrupted him. “You going to use some of your laughing gas?”

Jack chuckled. “I have been working on it, made some changes that hopefully will be interesting. I have no idea what it’s going to do really, but I am so looking forward to finding out!”

Alex said quickly. “Hey, I can get some more gas masks. I'll even have them spray painted red for tonight.”

Jack purred. “Perfect. Oh, and I want everyone to meet outside Robinson Park around midnight. I'll call Frost myself.”

Alex nodded on the other end of the line even though Jack couldn't have seen him. “All right man. Will do. You mind if I keep Alice the fuck away from this one?”

Jack snorted. “Course not. See you tonight.”

“Tonight.” Alex hung up.

Jack turned to Harley. “Guess what we're doing tonight sweets!”

Harley giggled. “Killing some people?”

Jack laughed. “Oh let's hope so!”
Jack sat in the back seat with Harley in Frost's car. Frost drove a Mercedes C300 black sedan with tinted windows, not the most perfect getaway car, but it was comfortable and Jack appreciated comfort. Frost was dressed in a black suit and tie with a solid red bandana tied around the bottom half of his face looking like a gentleman thief. Harley was wearing a red mask that covered her eyes, forehead and cheeks (they had stopped off at a party store where she ran in and bought the mask) along with tight black leggings—that Jack found charmingly distracting—black boots and a black pullover that did little to take away from how sexy she was...at least as far as Jack was concerned. Jack wore the red helmet, his chest plate, leather jacket, black jeans and combat boots. Harley smiled at her husband; he looked sexy and dangerous, an intoxicating combination. They were both armed with their pistols and Jack had a special treat tonight; strapped into a bandolier across his torso, Jack had several of his new laughing gas grenades. Unlike the “bombs” from last time, these each had a pin that could be pulled out to activate the gas. He had no idea how they were going to work after his “tweeking,” and adjustments, but he was planning on using them just to see what would happen. Regardless, he was sure it was going to be fun!

Jack glanced down at his watch, the streetlight providing the only light through the tinted windows. He frowned narrowing his eyes slightly behind the mask, with the dim light and the red cast to everything from the helmet, it was hard for him to read his watch.

Harley squeezed his knee when she saw him looking at his wrist. “No worries puddin, they’ll be here—we have a loyal group.”

Jack grunted and started to respond when two SUV's pulled up and parked. Dale jumped out of one, wearing a red surgical mask over the lower half of his face, followed by the others who had ridden with him, all of them wearing red surgical masks over the lower half of their faces. Alex dropped out of the other vehicle wearing a red hockey mask making him look like the one-armed Valentine version of Jason from the Friday the 13th movies. The only reason Jack knew it was Alex was his missing arm. He was followed by the rest of the gang, all of them in a variety of red-themed masks Jack grinned opening the door and stepping out. “Ah, so glad to see the gang is all here!”

Alex nodded. “Dale has Sandra, Duela and Trope, I have Jason, Rolf and Roxy. Everyone is armed and ready and I have some more gas masks in the back.” Alex motioned at the back of the SUV.

Jack nodded. “Good, good. Frost, why don't you go and help “A” distribute those.”

Frost nodded and walked over to Alex, the two men heading to the back of the SUV. Everyone turned toward Jack.

Jack grinned behind his mask and rubbed his hands together. “Ooh, time for the pep talk!”

He turned to his gang, looking over the eager faces. He assumed they were eager since everyone was wearing a mask. Frost leaned on the roof of the car listening while Harley walked over to put her arm around Jack's waist. She couldn't see the smile, but she could just feel it as Jack put his arm around her shoulders. While Jack spoke, Frost and Alex began to distribute the new gas masks. These were a little different from the last time (which Jack loved! Never wear the same thing twice if you can help it was something he truly believed in). These masks were much more “bug” like with larger lenses over the eyes, and a flatter filter over the mouth, much more industrial looking than before...which completely changed the look of the gang from last time. The red on them was darker as well. Jack grinned quite pleased with the effect of the gas masks.

“All right gang, Daddy has a new gas he has been working on and I want to try it out tonight, so make sure your new gas masks are in place, nice and snug!"

Jack looked at everyone to make sure they understood before he continued. “Now, here is the deal for tonight. Tomaso Panessa has a huge drug deal going down tonight. He is the head of one of the Five Families of the Gotham mob, the least of the five I might add, but still a member. We are going to go in there, take the drugs and the money. Oh, and kill everyone.” Jack waited to see if anyone said anything. No one said a word. Jack smiled—he loved loyalty.

“Tonight we are going to let the Panessa family know we are gunning for their territory. This boys and girls is our next step in becoming a gang that Gotham is going to be talking about ages to come!” He chuckled. “Tonight you do whatever you have to...there are no civilians in tonight's little romp, so don't worry about using your weapons. I don't want anyone of these mob types walking away tonight.” He looked around. He could see by Dale's eyes that he was a little upset with the impending killing, but he said nothing. Sandra on the other hand didn't flinch at all. The rest seemed perfectly fine with the boss telling them to kill...Jack smiled musing at the eager young faces before him that he was molding into the perfect little gang...it made him proud.

The factory was a typical bland brick and metal building with no particularly distinguishing features, nothing to set the building apart from all the other industrial buildings that lined this area of Gotham near Sheldon park and the Gotham river.

Unlike the other buildings, however, which only had their outside lights on, this building had lights glowing from inside. The lights inside the old brick building were dim and yellow giving the place a washed out, jaundiced look and leaving vast parts of the interior in shadow. The plain grey floors were covered in debris from years of disuse; piles of dust had settled in the corners and along the edges. Anyone stepping into the building would be greeted with abandoned palletes, ancient rusting machinery, and other odds and ends littered throughout the abandoned building.

Inside under the glow of one of the large cone-shaped lights stood five people. They were all standing in front of a deep red Cadillac XTS that reflected the dull yellow light off its smooth, waxed surface. The group was comprised of a variety nationalities and genders, yet they were all dressed in matching suits looking like a chorus line from “Guys and Dolls.” The one who was clearly in charge as he stood just a little in front of the rest of the group was a tall, elderly white man of around sixty with a bald head ringed with a fringe of white hair. He wore an expensive black suit with a grey tie; he was the only one that didn't seem to be armed; on either side of him were two people both in similar suits, holding their arms in front of them, one hand around the wrist of the other hand that held a pistol. One was a brown-skinned woman of undetermined age with an eye-patch, the other was a Latino man with long hair and a full-beard. Behind them were two more people, one a white female with hard masculine features and long blonde hair; next to her was a man with dusky skin, bald and built like a football player, who each held large, military style messenger bag briefcases. They were all waiting patiently for the car that had just pulled into the factory through one of the wide delivery doorways at the end.

The car, a BMW grande coupe, drove slowly down the wide lane toward the waiting group at the other end, where it stopped just a dozen feet away. The doors opened and five people exited the car. One was a man in a brown tailor's suit, wearing a black trench coat over the top with neatly combed thick, brown hair. Next came a woman in a pencil skirt, red head (clearly dyed a color of red that didn't appear in nature on any primate) wearing a revealing blouse; she moved to stand next to the man in brown, threading her arm through his and leaning against him. Next came three men, all tall, wide, muscled, each one looked as if he could have played professional football. Two of the men were holding phones, filming the entire exchange.

The elder man smiled. “Frankie. Nice to see you, though I was under the impression that Tomaso was going to be meeting me.”

Frankie smiled. “Sorry, but Tomaso lets me handle these sorts of deals Rex.”

Rex frowned slightly. “No offense Frankie, but we're talking a lot of money here—I would think Tomaso would come in person instead of sending his cousin.”

Frankie shrugged. “Look, we can call this off right now...no drugs, no money. No skin off my nose.” Frankie motioned and started to turn and leave, but Rex called him back. “No, no it's fine. You got the money?”

Frankie turned with a grin. “You got the drugs?”

Rex motioned and the two people with the briefcases came forward. They both crouched near Rex and unzipped the cases to reveal that each was filled to the brim with packages, several small clear plastic baggies with white crystals inside, and several large, brown paper packages shaped almost like bricks. The man named Frankie, just by a quick glance could see that there was almost a quarter million dollars worth in each of the two bags.

Frankie smiled, pulling out his cigarettes from the pocket of his coat. The red head quickly pulled out a light from somewhere on her person and flicked it open, a small orange flame appeared. She leaned close, Frankie's arm going around her waist as she lit his cigarette. Frankie took a few quick puffs to get the Dunhill cigarette, an expensive smoke (Frankie was purposely showing off a bit, letting Rex know that the family and he, personally, were well off) started before he inhaled deeply taking the cigarette out to blow out a long stream of white smoke. He grinned. “Perfect. Now, lets get this done.”

That was when they all heard a laugh echoing off the factory walls followed by a cheerful, yet clearly modified voice. “Hey fellas!! What's the secret to good comedy??”

All of the gangsters pulled their weapons aiming their guns up into the rafters and shadows of the factory, turning around trying to find the source of the voice, but clearly seeing nothing.

A man wearing a red helmet, armored chest plate, and black stepped out into the light, standing on the landing of a staircase up above them as he laughed. “Timing!”

He dropped several of his “grenades” down on the mobsters below. Frankie, Rex and the rest the group below immediately opened fire. Jack laughed ducking out of the way just as members of the Red Hood gang seemed to spill out of the darkness like red-masked ghosts, firing their weapons.

They had split themselves into two groups: Dale, Sandra, Roxy, Duela and Rolf were to go after the money, while Jack, Harley Frost, Jason and Trope went after the drugs. Divide and conquer Jack had said.

*

Harley giggled behind her gas mask having raced down the stairs with Jack as soon as the mobsters had started to fire their weapons. She came off the last step turning with a dancer's grace and let go with two quick shots, hitting one of the two drug briefcase holding mobsters in the chest. The man fell to the dusty floor, but he rolled pulling out a weapon and firing back, but he had already started to giggle; the strange laughter that he couldn't control threw off his aim.

The blonde woman who had the other briefcase had dropped into a crouch and returned fire, having pulled a Glock 22 from under her jacket while she tried to move backwards looking for cover. Harley yelped as the woman opened fire at her, throwing herself to the side to avoid being hit as three rounds blasted into a support, sending out bits of concrete, one small piece of which struck her in the shoulder, but failed to penetrate her clothing. Harley did a one handed cartwheel out of the line of fire, more bits of broken concrete hitting her as the woman fired three more rapid shots, but doing no damage as she surprised both herself and the gunner with her dexterous dodge.

The green gas was quickly filling the room, making visibility difficult while the eerie sound of giggles started to drift among the mobsters.

Jack fired his weapon at the man called Rex. Rex pulled his own weapon, a Smith and Wesson M&P 9, firing at Jack as he ran toward the car. One bullet hit Jack in the chest, sending a vibration of pain through him, but the chest piece he wore absorbed the bullet, if not the impact. Jack stumbled from the hit, but he didn't go down, firing his weapon off. A fair trade, he thought as he hit Rex with a bullet to the chest, the next one taking the older man in the head.

Jack muttered. “Well shit. That hurt and it's going to leave one bitch of a bruise.”

He gingerly touched the place were the bullet had impacted with the chest piece, leaving a nasty little dent, the bullet still in the hole it had created. Jack muttered. “Harley is going to be pissed.” He sighed walking over to look down at the now dead mobster Rex and gave him a little kick. “I wanted to let the gas get you, see what it does with my fine tuning, but...Oh well. Now where is that Tomaso's cousin?” Jack chuckled softly, heading over to the other side of the room. Harley came running up to him. “Puddin!! Did you see the cartwheel I did?!”

Jack laughed. “I did sweets! Very impressive and very nice shooting by the way.”

She giggled happily. “Thanks puddin.”

*

While Jack was tangling with Rex and Harley was doing cartwheels, Frost came rushing around the corner from where he had been hiding waiting for the Boss to drop the gas grenades, and fired at the Latino man who had dived behind the car, while Jason—who had been waiting in the shadows nearby—fired his weapon at the other bodyguard. A bullet from Jason's gun caught her in the leg, but she was already having trouble, the gas causing her to laugh so hard that she couldn't hold her weapon steady. She went down from the gunshot, but fired her own weapon wildly. The young man yelped and went down, his opponent's wild shot having cut right through the meat of his calf, but Frost put himself between Jason and the two shooters firing his weapon. One round hit the woman in the stomach, and the man just under his left eye.

*

On the other side of the room, things were not going as smoothly. Dale didn't feel good at all about killing anyone, even mobsters. He was trying to go for wounding shots. One of the two bald men who had been filming the exchange with his phone pulled out a weapon despite his giggling and fired, his bullet hitting Rolf and ripping through the young man's chest before the kid had even gotten a shot off.

Roxy, who had been beside him, screamed. “NO!”
She started to fire her weapon without much aim, but she did hit the red head in the back who was trying to run to the vehicle. The woman went down, a pool of blood forming under her. Another of Roxy's bullet's nicked Frankie, who had also been running for the car, in the thigh. The wound caused him to drop to his knees holding his sides as he started to laugh. He was frantically trying to pull his weapon out at the same time he was laughing hard enough that he was in excruciating pain holding his sides.

Duela was firing her weapon wildly, not really aiming at anyone, her goal to get to the car and find the money; but one bullet somehow found a mark, hitting one of the three big men that had come with Frankie, in the shoulder, another bullet catching him in the throat...but his face was already distorted into a wide and horrible grin. He didn't react to the bullets except to giggle crazily and sink to the floor, laughing as he bled out from the wound to his throat.

Dale, with Sandra beside him, ran up to the man who had shot Rolf. Dale held the gun on him trying not to shake.

“Where's the money?!” Dale hissed at the man.

The large man was laughing, but he took a swipe at Dale, catching the big man by surprise. The man's pistol hit Dale in the face hard enough that he knocked Dale's gas mask loose, surprising the former orderly. Sandra cried out. “DALE!”

She fired her weapon as she grabbed Dale, but instead of striking the man who had pistol whipped Dale her bullet hit his companion. The man who had hit Dale staggered, laughing and leaning against the car. He held up his phone taking film of Dale and Sandra before he yanked the car door open.

Dale had started to laugh, the gas seeping in now that his mask had been knocked askew. Sandra was quickly trying to get his mask back in place, hopefully reducing the effects of the gas on him.

The bald man had hit the car into reverse, bashing his companions on his way out as he struggled to contain his laughter and control the vehicle while taking the drug money with him.

*

Frankie glanced at his dead girlfriend and started laughing even harder; he just couldn't stop. He started to laugh and gag at the same time even as he heard his car being driven away. He saw a figure walk up to him through the green smoke, the man in the weird red helmet, a woman was beside him. Though it was hard to tell with the gas mask, the figure was definitely female. For a moment, in Frankie's mind, despite everything going on, he thought she was probably a looker underneath that mask.

The man in the red helmet dropped down to a crouch watching Frankie, dangling his weapon between his legs as he tilted his head to examine Frankie.

Frankie tried to aim his weapon, but he was laughing too hard. His face, his mouth felt like they were splitting in half, that the smile was tearing at his face. The man in the red helmet reached forward and took Frankie's gun, tossing it causally over his shoulder.

Jack turned when he heard the car pulling out and frowned glancing at Harley. She hissed through her mask. “Sounds like someone got away puddin.”

He shrugged. “Well maybe that's a good things sweets. A survivor to spread the word to Panessa...you know how it is, if no one gets out to tell the story, how is he going to know it was us?
This way Tomaso will know we are after him.” He chuckled. “Should have thought of that before...”

Frankie giggled uncontrollably. His face hurt so much that tears were running down his cheek and he thought he tasted blood in his mouth. “Tomaso is going to kill you. Hehehe. I...I'm...hehe...his...haha...cousin!”

The man in the red helmet laughed. “Oh good, then maybe me killing you will let him know I'm very serious.”

Jack held the gun to Frankie's head. He turned toward Harley. “I like the touch with this gas. It's a lot like my old one—see what it's doing to his face sweets?”

Harley nodded, her eyes wide behind her gas mask. “It's stretching his smile...painfully, by the looks of it.” She giggled. “That is just brilliant puddin!”

He laughed. “I know. But, I suppose we need to take the drugs and go before the cops or Bats shows up.”

Frankie giggled. “Tomaso is...ehehhahahahHAHAH...going HAHA! To kill you!!”

Jack stood. “To quote George Bernard Shaw: Life does not cease to be funny when people die any more than it ceases to be serious when people laugh.” Then he shot Frankie in the face.

*

The bald man who escaped, Ronnie Conti, drove erratically through Gotham. He couldn't stop laughing. He vomited and wet himself, but he hadn't been able to stop laughing. He was laughing so hard that he simply couldn't catch his breath, which was causing him to wheeze, a rattle in his chest; and then there was the smiling. He had caught a glimpse of himself in the rear view, his eyes were wide, hysterical looking, bloodshot, but it was the smile...he was starting to clench his teeth, his mouth spread so wide across his face that the flesh at the corner of his lips had torn and he was bleeding...and the pain. Ronnie had never felt anything like it and he had been shot more times than he could count in service to the Panessa family.

Ronnie struggled to drive, heading to Tomaso's apartment. He knew Tomaso was holding business there, which he usually didn't, but he had recently sent his wife and kids out of town for an unknown period...and was shacked up with some pretty boy. Not that Ronnie cared, but if a man had a wife and kids, those should come first. Still, Ronnie never said a word to no one, weren't none of his business and as long as it didn't affect business, Ronnie kept quiet.

He turned when he came to the correct street, nearly driving up onto the sidewalk as he tried to make the turn, his vision so distorted by tears he almost couldn't see where he was going. He drove down into the parking gargare heading to the private elevator, nearly slamming the front of the car into the metal door.

He fell out of the car, weaving and stumbled to the door, but soon, he had fallen inside and hit the button to Panessa's floor.

*

Tomaso laughed walking into the bedroom with two glasses of champagne. He was wearing a thick white robe, barefoot as he made his way across the room to where Ben was lying on his side, naked watching him.

Tomaso handed him the glass. “There, some of the best money can buy.”
Ben laughed. “Nothing but the best for you Tommy, eh?”

Tomaso grinned, sitting on the edge of the bed. “Of course!”

That was when he heard the buzz signaling someone had arrived on his floor. Tomaso frowned standing up. “I’m not expecting anyone.”

Ben sat up. “Should I?”

“No...it's fine.” Tomaso set his glass down as he walked by a dresser and headed to the door. He looked through the peephole of his front door when he arrived...he recognized the top of Ronnie's head. Tomaso scowled. Ronnie, Frankie and the others were suppose to be buying those drugs from Rex Costa, not bothering him with pointless details.

Ready to rip Ronnie a new one, Tomaso opened the door only to have Ronnie fall inside, hitting the floor with a hard, meaty thud.

“Ronnie?” Tomaso looked shocked. He rolled the big man over just as Ben, wearing his own white fluffy robe, came dashing in from the bedroom. “Tommy?”

Tomaso looked up. “It's Ronnie, one of my men—he's suppose to be guarding my cousin.”

As Tomaso rolled Ronnie over they both jumped back from the wide-eyes and bloody smile on Ronnie's face. The man was alive, but judging by his strained breathing, his clenched and broken teeth and the constant shaking of his body...he wouldn't be much longer.

Tomaso grabbing Ronnie by the shoulders. “Ronnie, who did this?! Tell me!”

The big man struggled, he reached into his jacket pocket and with uncontrollable shaking he pulled out a phone that slipped from his fingers.

Tomaso reached for it; the phone was paused on a recording. He hit rewind, then play and watched the events of the night unfold as Ben came around to stand behind him. They both watched the video which didn't show much at first. It recorded Frankie and Rex talking, then the laughter, the dropped grenades, only briefly catching a glimpse of the man in the red helmet disappearing. The rest of the video was gun shots, shouting, green gas until the point that Ronnie pistol whipped one of the attackers, knocking off his gas mask and revealing the man's face briefly.

As Tomaso watched, his grip on the phone tightened until the plastic was creaking softly in protest.

Ben hissed. “That's Jack...Jack Wayne. I know it, I've seen him with that helmet.”

Tomaso turned to glare at his lover. “What?”

Ben smiled. “That is so romantic!! He's jealous! Attacking you because of me.”

Tomaso snarled, glaring at Ben. “Do you know how much that deal was going to make me? And what the fuck did he do to my men?!!”

Ben grabbed Tomaso by the shoulders. “Shh...shh. Calm down. You just need to let him know that you don't appreciate his...extreme measures to get at you. Show him that you'll fight for me. That will make him even more jealous.” Ben grinned happily.

Tomaso snarled. “Ben, you are costing me business. Whatever is going on between you and Wayne...it just crossed a line. No one costs me money...and that deal was more than simply drugs and money—that was earning good will with one of the Latin gangs and your current obsession just fucked that up for me.”

Ben smiled. “Oh come on, you are Tomaso Panessa, you can fix this...and you can let Jack know you mean business too. That man on the video...that is clearly one of his gang. Find that man, and use him to send a message.”

Tomaso narrowed his eyes, breathing heavily in his anger.

Ben smiled. “I still have friends in the Court. I can get you that information—for free Tommy. It'll cost you nothing, then you can teach Jack a lesson in how business is done in Gotham. Even better...let me do it for you. I can use this as an opportunity to leave a love note behind, to let Jack know I understand what he is doing for me.”

Tomaso’s left eye twitched before he took a deep breath through his nose and slowly let it out through his mouth. “Find out who that is in the video Ben and you can take care of the message.”

Ben grinned. “I won't disappoint you Tommy, I promise.”
One day later.

Alex was doing some research for Jack, trying to find some information about another “deal” that Panessa was going to be involved in, something else that the Red Hood gang could destroy and take from Panessa. Jack was determined to not only lash out at Tomaso, but each “raid” they made would be another step into taking over Panessa territory, leading to the utter destruction of Tomaso. Jack was looking forward to it. This time he hoped that Alex would get them the information with a little more time to prepare themselves, a bigger heist than before. But also Jack didn't want to lose another gang member to poor planning. (Roxy seemed to be doing well enough, considering her loss, but she was clearly devastated by Rolf’s death. They had taken Rolf's body with them and Jack had slipped a little money here and there to get the young man buried quietly. No one but the gang would know what happened to Rolf.).

In the mean time, Jack had decided that he was going to focus on the fight club, finding out who was paying off the fighters, who was screwing over both Alex's father and Penguin. Which was why Alex, Alice, Frank, and Frost were coming over tonight, to help him spar, prepare himself to step into the ring. Even though Jack had prevailed in the ring during his previous fight club foray, Jack felt that he was a better fighter now, but he wanted to be better still.

Right now though, he and Harley were killing a little bit of time while they waited for the others to show up.

Jack leaned his elbows on the card table they had set up in what was the study, a cigarette hanging from his mouth as he played with the cards. They had moved the furniture out of the way for Jack's practice fight later when the others arrived. He was dressed causally in a pair of lounge pants, his feet bare, wearing only a simple t-shirt of dark green while he held a deck of cards up for Harley, who was dressed much the same, wearing black lounge pants and a black sports bra, her hair done up in pigtails to keep her blonde locks out of her face. Jack carefully showed her how he was holding the cards in his hands. He fanned the cards in his hand with the brush of his other hand, then using the fingers of both hands, he separated the cards into two stacks. He smiled at Harley who was sitting across from him, watching him intently, a little furrow between her brows, her bottom lip sticking out slightly as she concentrated on watching him and the cards. He shuffled the cards, performing a series of different shuffles, naming each type as he performed them.

“Now this one is called the Riffle in the hand instead of a riffle performed on the table.” Jack smiled at her. With an elegant move of his fingers, her showed her out to riffle a deck that was on the table, fanning them out so their corners touched before he rather theatrically shuffled them together.

He put his cigarette out in the ashtray next to him as he picked the cards up, divided them again, but this time with one hand, then shuffled them before he held the the cards between his hands arching the cards; this time the shuffle had the cards falling in an arch together. The sound of the cards quickly falling together reminded Harley of the sound of a waterfall, strangely satisfying, which was the only word that Harley could come up with and it was just as visually appealing too. The other bonus was watching the way Jack's hands moved. His fingers were long and dexterous. The way he manipulated the cards was beautiful she thought, graceful. She put her chin in her hand leaning forward on the table, giving her husband a happy, dopey look of love...which also made her look like a teenager with a schoolgirl crush.
Jack glanced over at Harley as he idly twisted the cards in his hands and smiled. Cards were something he had been playing with forever, since he was young and he liked showing off for Harley. “Okay, now this one is called a Hindu shuffle.” Jack held the cards in one hand loosely, with just enough pressure so that he wouldn't drop them, while with his right hand he whipped sections of cards out, then replaced them onto the desk with a quickly movement of his free hand. This move wasn't particularly fancy, but there was something about the way that Jack gave the move a slight flourish with his wrist that made the shuffling fascinating to watch.

Harley grinned, her eyes on his hands. Jack's movements were almost too quick for her to follow. She was suspicious that the only reason she was able to follow his movements was that Jack was purposely slowing his gestures down for her to see.

Jack settled the cards back into a desk with a grin. “Now this one is call the Faro; it's a shuffle based on an old game that isn't generally played anymore...”

Here Jack divided half the cards. He held the cards, in his right hand he held his forefinger against the back of the stack, his other fingers circling the edges of the cards, the cards in his left he held with all his fingers on the edges. He then held the packet of cards in his right hand over the cards in his left and, so that Harley could see how it was done, he slowly weaved the cards together before he quickly bent the cards slightly and they rained down together in the center of his hand. It seemed so easy, but when Jack handed Harley the cards and she did her best to duplicate what he had just shown her, the cards all ended up on the floor.

“Darn it!” Harley snarled reaching down to pick up the cards.

Jack laughed. “Don't worry pumpkin, it takes a lot of practice. And that is a little difficult shuffle. There are at least another four I could show you. We'll find the one that is easiest for you.”

Harley wrinkled her nose at the cards before handing them back to Jack. “How did you get so good with cards anyway?”

Jack started to idly shuffle the cards, his hands moving seamlessly from one type of shuffling to the next. “Mm...I remember seeing this clown at the circus once, The Haly Circus. My parents took Bruce and me. Haly's Circus, they come through Gotham every so often.” Jack was staring at the cards in memory while he shuffled effortlessly, the cards moving through his fingers like magic as he continued. “It was amazing.” Jack's smile was gentle with nostalgia. He shrugged. “It was...I just loved it. Bruce did too, actually. I remember the two of us holding hands watching the acrobats, the elephants. They have this family of trapeze artists, the Flying Graysons...just amazing.” Jack chuckled. “Anyway, we both loved the circus so much that my parents arranged for Bruce and me to go back stage, so to speak, after taking us to nearly every show, to meet the ringmaster, to see the clowns, and the animals.” Jack watched the cards, letting himself be transported to that moment in time. “Anyway, this clown, he had some really crazy make-up, white face, red lips, dark blue hair in this sort of a blue suit, like a clown undertaker.” Jack chuckled. “He was standing in a corner doing all sorts of card tricks, really amazing stuff.” Jack shrugged. “I couldn't stop watching him. He showed us all sorts of card tricks. When I asked him to teach me, he told me the best teacher I could have would be my determination and my own imagination. So I went home and taught myself.”

Harley smiled. “How long did it take you? I mean to learn all the card tricks?”

Jack shrugged with a wink at her. “Still learning. Every time you think you know a trick, you learn something new about it.” He smiled, and then they both heard a knock at the door. Jack grinned. “Our guests have arrived!”

Harley jumped up leaning across the table to plant a kiss on Jack's nose. “I'll get it!”
Jack dropped his cards. “Oh no you won’t!”

Harley squealed and took off at a run, her bare feet smacking hard on the polished floors. Jack sprang up grabbing her around her waist with both arms. He lifted her off her feet which had Harley squealing and kicking. He unceremoniously turned and dumped her on her feet behind him taking off for the door.

“CHEATER!!” Harley yelled spinning around to come after him.

Jack was laughing but he didn’t see Harley running after him, finding a perfect spot on the floor to slide, which she did, her arms flailing for just a moment before she smacked into him, both of them sliding and stumbling to the front door where they both landed hard against the frame. Jack laughed wrapping his arms around Harley, his back against the door where he kissed her soundly on the mouth, his tongue playing with hers as he reached behind him with one hand to open the door stumbling out of the way while keeping his mouth on his wife's lips.

Frank was standing at the front of the little group, (Frost and Alice were holding several take-out Chinese bags) as Frank chirped up cheerfully. “Hey. What's the action?!?” Alex frowned seeing Jack and Harley kissing; Harley had even wrapped a leg around Jack's waist and groaned. “God you two are worse than a couple of fucking dogs in heat!” Frank snorted. “Hey, they're young—let 'em go! I remember this one time with your late mother, we were having make-up sex in a dumpster outside of Wendy's...that woman incorporated a bun into the love-making, turned it into a ball...” Here Frank demonstrated with his hands as he walked into the house, Alex and the others trailing behind him.

“Anyway...well she loved that kind of shit...so do I, but anyway....”

Alex nearly screamed. “DAD!! I don't want to hear this!! No one wants to hear this!!”

Jack, still holding Harley stopped kissing her to giggle. “Oh I don't know Alex, I think I want to hear this...”

Alex glared at Jack, pointing at him with one finger. “Don't you even fucking start.”

Everyone started to laugh. Jack snorted. “Fine, fine,” he relented. “Come on in, we have a room cleared out for practicing. Anyone want a drink?”

Frank grinned. “I'll take a drink!”

Alex groaned. “I think I'm going to need several to get through this evening.”

*

Soon their little group was sitting at the card table together, plates of Chinese food and food boxes littered the table along with a few beer bottles. Jack cracked open a fortune cookie glancing at the paper strip inside with a grin. “A smile is a passport into the hearts of others.” Then he added with a wicked grin. “…in bed.”

Harley giggled.

Jack tossed the fortune down onto the table with a smile. “All right, so how are we going to go about finding out who is screwing you?” He glanced at Frank. “And Penguin?”

Alex picked up his own fortune cookie, breaking it open and read. “He who laughs at himself never runs out of things to laugh at. Well that's fucking accurate.”
Jack grinned. “You forgot to add...“in bed.””

Alice grinned. “In bed!”

Alex tossed his fortune down onto the table as well, giving his girl a sour look that ended with him laughing before he turned his attention to Jack's question. “Well, I'm betting if you beat the fucking hell out of Val Armorrr, whoever is fixing matches will approach you. At some point, for their plan to work, they will have Val Armorrr explode with what he can really do—if they bet big on him while everyone else is betting against him...you see how it works?” Alex nodded at the affirming nods of the others around the table. “Anyway, you can agree to work with whoever approaches you, then find out exactly how big this fucking operation is: are they just after my dad and Penguin or is it something else altogether? My bet: this is some fuck head who is thinking he can make a dime off Penguin and my Dad, get the two of them in a spot where they have to fucking work for them or lose everything. I mean, that's what I would fucking do, get two big leagues like Frank the Broker here and Cobblepot, an up and coming crime boss beholden to you...gives you a certain level of power.”

Jack nodded before he glanced over at Frost, who grunted. “Alex is correct. Someone is doing some moving and shaking in Gotham. Some of my buddies on the police force think it might be some out of town mobster trying to move into Gotham, starting small like with this illegal boxing, fixing matches to set himself for a bigger payoff later, then working their way up. I'm not sure if you can actually stop it, but getting Frank here and Cobblepot out from under their thumb will put a serious dent in their plans, whoever they are.”

Frank muttered. “Might not even be a new crime boss trying to make waves. I have a lot of enemies. You tend to make them in this business. No matter that yer neutral, a lot of people don't like it.” He glanced over at his son. “Might actually be a good idea to start to pick sides son—you are going to need friends in the long run. Anyway...when life gives you lemons, you gotta take those lemons and stuff them down somebody's throat until they see yella!” Frank clapped his hands. “Now, you need to punch your fist so far up his ass, hard...not in a sexual way, but in an I'm pissed at you way...”

Alex yelped. “Whoa, whoa!! What the fuck DAD!!”

Frank took a breath. “Sorry. I mean, we need to worry about you punching the living shit out of Val first.” He grinned at Alex and Jack, turning back to his son. “Better?”

Alex groaned. “Barely.”

“If Jack kills him, we could feed Val to some pigs...” Frank mused.

“DAD, shut the fuck up already!” Alex groaned loudly.

Jack snorted in laughter as he pushed away from the table and glanced at Harley and Frost. “You two ready?”

Harley nodded and Frost stood up. “Anything you say, Boss.”

*

Soon Alex, Alice and Frank, nursing a beer, were sitting on the sidelines while Jack faced off between Harley and Frost. Frost was still wearing his slacks, but he stripped down to his bare chest and socks, stood in one corner. Harley was smiling which was distracting as she bounced on the balls of her feet in another corner, Jack facing them both.
Alex frowned. “So, why are you fighting them both at once?”

Jack smiled. “If I can take on Harley and Frost, Val is going to be a piece of cake. I don't want to just beat him—I want to eliminate him. I want to make him suffer...for fun of course, but also to make sure whoever was paying him to throw fights, drops him for me.”

Alex shrugged. “Okay then.”

Jack smiled. “All right, Harley, I'm not going to hurt you sweets. Frost—I can't promise anything.”

Harley giggled. “Okay puddin, you ready?”

Jack brought his hands up in loose, ready fists. “Ready sweets.”

Harley surprised Jack as she did a front aerial flip, a complete forward rotation of her body without touching the floor with her hands. The flip put her right in front of Jack.

She attacked him as her feet hit the floor, her arms snapping out in a series of swift punches. She was aiming for his face, but she was keeping her punches from completely connecting, stopping just short of his face or chest, not that her pulling her punches really mattered. Jack easily blocked her using his forearms to catch her punches, or he would simply knock her hands away with a slap of his hand.

Harley snarled in frustration just as Frost came rushing up from Jack's other side. Where Jack was slimmer and quick, Frost fought like a bull, counting on his strength in addition to skill. He swung his fist at Jack who didn’t duck in time. Frost's knuckles hit Jack across the jaw snapping his head to the side, bloodying Jack's bottom lip and sent him stumbling into Harley. Harley attempted to grapple Jack, both of them stumbling from a moment, but Jack grabbed her forearms and tossed her. Harley let out a yelp, but she went with the throw, rolling into a somersault and hopping back to her feet easily. She frowned slightly. While the throw was good, Jack's not wanting to hit her wasn't really helping him. He needed to know when he could throw a punch and then actually do it...She twisted her lips in annoyance. His focusing on not hurting her was hampering him. While Harley was somersaulting across the floor, Frost came at Jack, not holding back, but Jack grabbed Frost, shoving the bigger man backwards with a surprising amount of strength, followed by a punch that landed with a hard smack of fist against flesh, catching Frost across the chin.

*

Frank yelled. “Holy SHIT! Did you see that hit?” He glanced at his son.

Alice hissed. “Damn, that looked like it hurt.”

Frank squinted one eye behind his glasses. “You're sure your pal here can really take on a professional fighter and win, Alex?”

Alex frowned watching the fight with real concern. He could see the slow smile starting to spread across Jack's face. It was a dangerous smile that Alex was starting to recognize more and more. He said nothing as he watched the three of them fight.

*

Jack pushed Frost against the wall, knocking some of the air from Frost's lungs. He then brought his leg up, his knee slamming Frost in the diaphragm forcing the rest of the air out of Frost in a painful whoosh. Frost shoved Jack back, but before Jack could stumble out of his way, Frost grabbed Jack's left wrist, keeping Jack close as he punched at him. Jack threw up his right arm while he struggled to break Frost's hold on his left wrist. Harley in the mean time came rushing back over, taking just a couple of steps before she did an aerial cartwheel. She stopped next to Jack and Frost, then with her momentum from her cartwheel, she leapt onto Jack's back wrapping her arms and legs around him.

“I got him!!” she yelled.

Frost pulled back, finally gasping in a breath of air and letting Jack go as he stumbled under the sudden weight of Harley.

“Harley!! Damn it! Get off!” Jack was caught between being annoyed and laughing. She giggled and kissed his ear. “You lose puddin,” she giggled.

The group watching started to laugh with Frank yelling. “Woohoo!! Get 'im girl!”

Alex laughed. “Okay, I think you should just fucking fight Frost because Harley is just being a distraction.”

Jack reached around and with Harley's helps spun her around until she was facing him, her arms and legs still around him. Jack grabbed her rear hefting her up a little as Frost laughed walking over to take a drink while wiping the sweat that had started to form on his brow.

Jack smiled at his wife giving her a quick kiss. “What are you doing? Come on you little minx, take this seriously.'”

Harley sighed. “Fine, but Jack you are going to have to really hit me. It's pointless if you are willing to hit Frost, but not me. Besides, pulling your punches is distracting you because you're too worried about hurting me. I can take it—you know I can.” Harley gave him a serious look. Jack frowned, but Harley rubbed her nose against his, planting little butterfly kisses against his lips. “Come on puddin...you can do it.”

Jack smiled. “Fine. I'm not going to hold back, but that means you don't hold back either.”

Harley nodded. “No holding back.”

He set her down on her feet, reaching out to grab her around her neck. He grinned. “Gimme some sugar baby.” He pulled her close for a passionate kiss that had Frank wolf whistling. Jack released her, pressing his forehead against hers. “I love ya sweets.”

Harley giggled, her eyes bright for her husband. “I love you too puddin.”

She stepped back and gave him a hard shove. Jack stumbled back taking up a fighting pose just as Frost walked back out onto the floor, Frost on one side, Harley on the other. Frost came out and rushed Jack throwing out his leg and kicked Jack in the chest which sent him stumbling across the slick floor. Jack spun around, putting his back to Frost for a second as he struggled to keep from falling. He kept his feet under him and spun around completely as Jack spun around, he threw out his left leg and caught Frost in the side with his shin, knocking the other man out of the way as Jack came around to face him.

Harley did another cartwheel, twisting in the air for a moment to land on her feet next to Jack. Jack barely avoided Harley's jabs, she used the heels of her palms to strike out swiftly at her husband, intent upon leaving some damage. Jack twisted his body to the left, taking Harley's strikes, one under the arm, the other against his side. He hissed, then kicked backward, his foot catching her on her knee. Harley yelped and stumbled back from him.
Frost hadn't relented. Jack was beginning to perspire, fighting to block the punches. He twisted to the right, taking another kick from Frost on his left side. Jack hunched his shoulders while Frost swung, his strike landing on Jack's shoulder as Jack brought his arms up to protect his face. Frost let out a little sound of frustration; even a hard punch to the shoulder was not enough to take down an opponent, especially not one like Jack Wayne. Jack replied with a series of rapid strikes, his fists hitting Frost in the stomach and chest. Frost took two small steps back, created a little space and tried to kick Jack in the left side where he had already struck him, but when Frost's leg came up, Jack took a half-step forward, caught Frost's leg and punched him in the face with his right fist; a direct hit to Frost's nose.

Frost let out a curse. Jack released Frost's leg before he snapped out his foot and kicked Frost in the chest which sent the man stumble. Frost lost his footing and fell on his rear. Just as Jack was coming in to “finish” him, Harley let out a little yell. She came in low, hard, and fast, her teeth bared, grabbed her husband by the back of his pants and swung him around with a surprising show of strength. She straightened up, then relentlessly struck Jack in the head. He yelped and hunkered down to reduce the damage and protect his face from his wife's hard hits. Jack snapped a forearm out and swept it to the side, throwing one of Harley's striking arms out wide. In the moment she was open, he came up under her next strike and hit Harley with all his might in the middle of her chest.

*

Frank whistled. “Now this is a fight!! Maybe I could start my own club when this is over...like one man against two hot women?”

Alex groaned loudly while Alice laughed, but Frank continued. “I can just see it...ooh...maybe add some baby oil! Oiled women fighting against one man...”

“Dad!!” Alex hissed.

Frank frowned pushing his glasses up. “What? I don't know how long I have left in this life, I wanna get real weird with it.”

Alice put her arm around Alex who leaned into her. “There, there Alex.”

Frank shook his head laughing. “You're so easy Alex.”

Frost was back up and came at Jack's now exposed back. Jack turned just in time to catch one of Frost's hits in the shoulder. He smacked Frost's next punch away, landing hit own punch to his friend's chest. The two men exchanged a quick, almost blinding series of punches. Frost grabbed Jack by the shoulders and Jack grabbed him, the two men grappling for a few tense moments, both of them sweating and snarling until Jack swung himself under Frost's right arm coming up behind his friend. He grabbed Frost around the waist and lifted the big man off his feet twisting slightly as he plunged Frost back down to the floor.

Frost gasped painfully when he hit the slick hard wood floor. Jack wasted no time as he struggled to keep Frost down with a few quick jabs, but Frost broke free, surging to his feet and breaking Jack's hold on him. He turned to face Jack only to receive another punch to the face, followed by two quick punches, one on either side to his head. Jack then wrapped his hands around Frost's head, his teeth bared as he brought his knee up, thrusting his knee into Frost's diaphragm again. Frost struggled to break Jack's hold, but Jack's assault on him was relentless. Finally, just when Frost thought his abdomen couldn't take any more, Jack released his hold on Frost's head, ending the fight with a quick side punch to Frost's cheek that whipped the large man's head around and dropped Frost to the floor.

Jack didn't have time to enjoy his win before he heard the sound of Harley doing several flips behind him, her hands and feet striking the floor clearly and hard. He turned just as she landed in front of him as snarl on her pretty face, her fists snapped out swiftly, forcing Jack to lean out of the way just barely avoiding her fists. Jack couldn't stop himself from smiling. Harley wasn't holding back. She was sweaty, a little drop of blood at the corner of her mouth, her teeth bared. And she was gorgeous.

Jack leaned to the side avoiding Harley's broad swipe, but when he came back up, he realized she had baited him; she caught him in the cheek with her other fist, snapping his head to the side.

While the two of them were fighting, Frank rushed over with Alice to help Frost stand up, walking the big man over to the side. Alice examined his face then smiled. “You're still pretty there Frost.”

Frost grinned at her and Alex muttered. “Hey!”

Alice laughed reaching out to squeeze Alex's knee. She stood. “I'll be right back—going to get a damp rag and maybe some band-aids.”

Alex nodded watching Jack and Harley fighting.

* Jack rolled in a somersault with the throw, starting to get to his feet just as Harley came at him. She dropped to her knees, the cloth of her pants allowed her to slide on the polished wood floor to slam into him. The both went down in a roll, with Harley coming over on top. She grinned down at Jack with just a little bit of blood on her teeth and a little bit of a smirk on her lips as she lashed out with her fists now that she had him in a prone position.

Jack laughed, enjoying himself as he blocked her fists, grabbed one of her arms and surged upward, flipped her to the side, rolling to get on top of her and pin her to the floor. He grinned. He had a nasty cut on his cheek that was bleeding, some blood on his lips, his hair falling in thick strands around his face, some sticking to his sweaty brow.

“God, you're beautiful,” he hissed.

Harley, a little cut on her cheek that matched Jack's, was bleeding. Loose blonde hairs stuck to her sweaty face, her own lips bloody as she giggled. “Flirt.”

She bucked at the same time that she slammed the flat of her hands into his stomach. Jack gasped in pain almost failing to roll when she flipped him. He somersaulted, coming up on his feet and turning just as Harley rushed him. Jack grinned putting his fists up, licking his bloody bottom lip. “Come on baby—come to Daddy.” He motioned with his hands at her in a come hither gesture.

Harley grinned mischievously and rushed him. They exchanged a series of quick punches both of them grinning at each other, their eyes sparkling. She lashed out hitting Jack in the face with four quick, solid strikes to his face. Jack took a moment to get his arms up to block. He swung once, a blow that struck Harley right in the mouth. She shook that hit off, blocked his next punch with a giggle.

*
Alex grimaced. “Mm...I think we should move to the fucking kitchen.”

Frank frowned. “Why? They ain't done fighting?”

Alex shared a glance with Alice who giggled and nodded. “Yeah...yeah they are, they're flirting.”

Alex muttered. “They're not fucking fighting anymore.”

Frank frowned at his son and turned back to watch Jack and Harley. Jack had grabbed Harley and threw her. She slammed her back into the wall. He rushed up and flipped her to face the wall, using his body to pin her there against the flat surface. They were both struggling. Jack to keep her pinned, Harley trying to break free of him.

Alex abruptly stood up. Frost and Alice did as well. Alex muttered. “Come on. I'll...we should...I don't know...let's go...find some...some more fucking beer!”

Alice smiled. “I'll bake a cake!”

Frank frowned. “I don't see why you guys are acting so weird.”

When he looked back over Jack had grabbed Harley's arms and had pinned them behind her back as he pressed her against the wall. They were both panting, sweating with flecks of blood on their faces...then Jack pressed his teeth into Harley's shoulder. Harley arched her head back with a moan.

Frank blinked. “Oh.”

Alex shook his head. “Man, I knew having them fight each other was a bad idea. Come on.”

Frank grinned. “God to be young again. But hey...your friend can fight!”

Alex smirked. “Yeah...Jack is a natural born killer.”

The little group hurried to the kitchen leaving Jack and Harley alone.

Jack growled softly. “Harls...my sweets.”

He pressed her arms against her lower back holding her immobile. If anyone else was in the room he had completely forgotten about them in his need to have her. He pressed his hardening erection against her backside, rubbing against the round slope of her ass. He moaned. “Harley,” he said through clenched teeth, rubbing harder against her while pressing her against the wall.

She groaned as he ran his tongue along her sweaty shoulders and up her neck catching her ear in his teeth. She closed her eyes giving herself over to just feeling, to her animal lust for her husband. She hissed, “Jack.”

He growled deep his throat. “I want you Harley.”

Harley groaned with need; her body ached for him. “Oh puddin...Jack...I need you, now.”

He released one of her arms though he held the other in a vice-like grip painfully against her back. She slammed her other palm against the wall, her fingers digging at the plaster as she arched her back and pressed her backside against him which elicited a hiss of need from her lover. Jack reached around her with his free hand; his fingers worked at the ties of her pants, desperate to have them gone. His long nimble fingers worked quickly. When he finally loosened her pants, he shoved them and her panties down, the cloth falling to her ankles. Jack quickly yanked at his own pants, pulling on the ties, shoving both his boxers and his pants down, freeing himself with a groan of temporary release. He pressed his shaft against her, grinning at the feel of her silken skin backside against him. He slid between her cheeks rubbing against her softness which only made his erection ache more for her.

Harley groaned feeling the heat and the hardness of his erection between her cheeks, rubbing pressing. She shoved back, arching her hips with a hiss. “Jack...”

Still holding her one arm pressed against the small of her back, (Harley hissed with a mix of pain and pleasure when Jack pulled on her captured arm) Jack slid his hand between her legs and rubbed her clitoris while he continued to bite and suck against her shoulder; she was already wet which made Jack's fingers glide easily against her, rubbing, caressing...he pinched her clitoris once, gently, but it caused Harley to cry out thrusting her hips against his touch for more.

He smiled against her shoulder continuing to rub, enjoying the way she thrust her hips against his touch, until Harley was panting loudly and the fingers of her free hand convulsed against the wall. Jack's grip on her other wrist was tight, pressing that arm painfully, forcing her back to arch. Harley was sure he was going to leave bruises, but she didn't care. She just wanted him to fuck her hard, and fuck her fast, to feel him pounding against her backside, filling her with himself.

He kept rubbing his fingers against her, creating a delicious friction across her clitoris while she thrust her hips against his touch. His fingers rolled, moving in a circle, making Harley gasp and pant, grinding against his touch until she felt that warm tickle run up through her from his touch, causing her body to tense for a moment. She came with a cry, her back arcing, pressing her backside against Jack's pulsing need...

Jack hissed, pressing his lips against Harley's ear. “Yes Harls, yes...”

He stopped touching her when she was reduced to little jerks of pleasure. He grabbed the front of her sports bra, yanking it down to expose her breast, cupping one in his hand, squeezing, pinching her nipple between his thumb and fingers before squeezing again. He let go, reaching back to hold himself, rubbing the head of his penis against her, coating himself with her before he shoved into her welcoming opening.

Harley gasped when he entered her, her muscles squeezing tight around him.

Jack pressed her up against the wall, his free hand reaching up to cover her hand on the wall, their fingers threading together. He thrust into her hard and fast, forcing Harley's body up against the wall, her hard nipples brushed against the plaster, eliciting another hiss of pleasure from her.

Jack and Harley squeezed their fingers together painfully against the wall as he thrust hard enough into her that the room was filled with the sounds of their flesh smacking flesh. Jack groaned, panting, struggling for breath, his pelvis moving hard and fast, plunging himself deeply into her over and over again.

Harley tightened her grip on his fingers as her nails dug tiny grooves into the wall, stripping a little bit of the paint. She squeezed his fingers that were weaved with hers tight enough that it might leaves bruises, but Jack just squeezed back. He panted heavily. “Harls...Harley...you...you are...are so...good...God you...feel so good.”

Harley whimpered. “Oh puddin...yes...harder...”

Jack grinned, his eyes heavy with lust and love. He tightened his grip on her and thrust hard enough that he was sending vibrations along her skin. She squeezed his hand, her other hand, pinned against her back was clenched in a fist as she came with a cry. “JACK!”

Jack’s eyes rolled. “Fuck...fu...Harley!”

They cried out together...

*

Frank chuckled. “Man, this house certainly can carry sound.”

*

The following night at Wayne Manor, Bruce walked around the bed in the small, simply decorated bedroom and tucked the blanket around Alfred who lay on the bed in a pair of striped flannel pajamas while sporting a plainly annoyed expression. Bruce's tucking him in caused the older man to groan and roll his eyes slightly. “Master Bruce, you really need to stop fussing so much. You're making me feel feeble.”

Bruce chuckled as he finished tucking in the blankets. “You are feeble. You're recovering from a heart attack.”

Alfred crossed his arms over his chest in protest. “I am not feeble Master Bruce.”

Bruce chuckled, sitting on the side of the bed and patted the older man's knee through the covers. “Just let me take care of you for once, all right? You just got home. The doctor said for you to relax, recover.”

Alfred sighed. “Fine. It does help me relax to know that you will not be going out this evening Master Bruce.”

Bruce looked a little upset about it, but he nodded. “Well, I missed going to lunch with Talia and she says she needs to talk to me. I thought a homemade meal crafted by me would be nice and I know she wanted to see you.”

Alfred smiled. “Try not to burn anything Master Bruce.”

Bruce laughed. “My cooking is not that bad!”

Alfred raised a brow. “You have many talents Master Bruce; cooking is not on that list.”

Bruce laughed. “Fine. How about I call and have something delivered?”

Alfred chuckled. “That might be for the best Master Bruce.”

Bruce chuckled. “Let's see if The Ocelot can send something over.”

“Very good Master Bruce.” Alfred nodded with a smile.

That same night, Ben's phone rang.

Ben was looking at himself in the mirror, combing his hair and spritzing himself with fragrance as he prepared to go out tonight. He reached over and picked up his phone on the second ring, glancing from the mirror to the phone, smiling as he recognized the number just before he hit the button. “Louis, glad you called me back.”
Louis, a tall, elegant blond man with a slight Russian accent snarled on the other end of the line. “After this, we're even. The Owls get a whiff of the fact that I helped you and I'm dead. I don't want to hear from you again after this.”

Ben chuckled while buttoning up his shirt as he continued to look at his reflection in the mirror. “Don't worry, we're even. So, you have the name and address of the man in the video?”

Louis hissed. “I do. You're lucky Ben, the man used to work at Arkham. They keep photos of all the employees in their computer files. Didn't take as long as I thought it was going to, a quick online search to match the picture found him.”

Ben frowned tilting his head slightly as he gazed at his reflection. “Used to work at Arkham? Really? How queer.”

“Look Louis, I don't really care about his name, just tell me where he is.” Ben finished buttoning his shirt, tucked it into his slacks as he turned and reached for his jacket.

Louis sounded annoyed. “You know Ben, these are real people you're messing with, with lives, families...”

Ben sighed. “Look. This Dale person isn't going to live through the night Louis...so I don't care. You have the address or not?”

“I do. He lives with his girlfriend. She had an apartment in Otisburg. I texted you the address.” Louis hissed. “Don't call me again.” With that the line went dead.

Ben smiled looking at the address on his phone before he called out. “Oh Tomaso! I think I just made your evening!”

That same night in Otisburg, dressed in jeans and a t-shirt with a apron over the top of her outfit, Sandra was in her apartment's tiny kitchen putting together a homemade spaghetti. She was humming to herself while she cooked, happier than she had ever been in her entire life. Even with the two of them now part of an up and coming gang—criminals, she thought with a shake of her head and a smile—she was happy. She would never in a million years have guessed that she would go from being an orderly at an insane asylum to a criminal, but it was a surprisingly good fit.

Across town, Jack climbed out of the car with Harley right behind him. Frost got out and locked up, coming to stand behind Jack and Harley, his eyes narrowed. The fight was just as crowded tonight as it had been the first night they were here. It still surprised Jack that the Gotham PD hadn't shut them down, which he supposed only showed how corrupt the police department was...participating in illegal boxing, gambling...made him wonder what else they dabbled in. He smiled thinking that Batman should perhaps stop fighting crime in the streets and just head on over to the police department instead. Harley leaned in close to Jack putting her arm around his waist. She had been tense all evening. She frowned as she asked, “Are you sure about this Jack?”

Jack wrapped his arm around her waist. “It'll be fine sweets, my little poo.” He chuckled kissing her cheek. “Help Alex's father out, take care of Penguin's favor and I get to bash a few heads. It'll be fun.”

Harley nodded, though something was bothering her still. She had confidence in Jack's abilities, but something felt off. She wasn't sure what it was but she kept having this feeling...something wasn't right. She sighed and let Jack lead her inside.

The man at the door, Bert, saw the two of them and waved. “Hey, you two are Alex's friends right? He's inside. You go on in—he already paid for the two of you. Alex also said you're fighting tonight...that right?” The man grinned with his brows raised in question.

Jack shrugged. “I am.”

Bert nodded. “Alex said I should put some money on you. Also heard his dad was backing you...though his other fighter ain't been doing so well...but Alex vouched for you. I always trust Alex, the man knows what he's doing. Just, you better win buddy, I put a lot down.” Bert's expression was friendly, but it was clear by his eyes he wouldn't be too happy if he lost.

Jack smiled his stunning grin and patted Bert on the back. “Don't worry, your money is safe.”

Bert nodded. “Okay man, I'm trusting you. Go on in.”

Jack gave Bert a little salute and headed inside. The entire place was crowded, as they had suspected. This time music playing in the background. A fight was taking place in the center ring already; from the looks of it, just a couple of lightweights, maybe amateurs or simply new fighters. As Jack and Harley walked past the ring, one of the men, a short man with red hair, slugged the larger man he was fighting in the face, knocking the man flat out, to the wild cheering of the crowd. Jack smiled, stepped nearer to his friend and put his arms around Alex. “Hey Alex. You okay buddy!!”

Harley hugged Alice. “How are you guys?”

Alice giggled. “We have some news.”

Harley frowned at Alice, but her friend was all smiles. “What's going on?”

Alex giggled, a little snort in his laughter. “I'm gonna be a fucking Dad!!” Jack and Harley both gasped at the same time. “What?” they said together in surprise.

Alex grinned. “Alice just found out today. We are pregnant!” Alex threw his arm around Jack while leaning against Alice and Harley. “You are Harley are going to be honorary Aunt and Uncle!”

Frost, laughed. “That's fantastic. Do I get to be an honorary uncle too?”

Alex snorted. “Fuck yeah!”

A second later Frank came over grinning. “Hey, I guess you two heard the news? Grandpa Frank. Hehe!”

Harley gushed, hugging her friend tightly. “Oh Alice! Alex! That's wonderful news!”

Harley blinked back tears rapidly. She didn't want anyone to see her cry, not now, not here. She really was happy for them, but it hurt, more than she wanted to think about. She was immediately reminded of the baby she lost...her and Jack's baby. The pain, something she had put aside, twisted in her gut, in her chest, as if it had just happened. The revenge they had taken had helped...but it didn't replace the pain of their loss. That pain was mixed up with the horrors that Crane had forced on her...the sounds of crying children...a baby...wailing for her from the darkness...the eerie sound of shattered dreams, of dead possibilities.

Harley bit down hard on her bottom lip, letting the physical pain replace the mental pain that her memories were forcing on her. Suddenly the crowd of people around her was suffocating. She could feel a well of panic developing...fear, pain, loss, depression...it all began to mixed together in an incoherent torrent of emotion....

Jack responded to his wife's distress immediately, put his arm around Harley pulling her close against his body. He wrapped his arms around her, directing her into his embrace, not making it obvious that he was comforting her as he held her tight against him. Harley's arm went around his waist. Their friends didn't notice anything unusual about the way the two of them were holding each other; but Jack's embrace was protective, holding her tight. He knew exactly what was happening with her, what she was thinking without either of them saying a word. He felt it himself. Jack knew exactly what Harley was thinking, because similar thoughts had sprung to his mind as well. He held her tightly, letting her know he understood, that they shared the same grief.

Jack thought grimly that the loss of their child; it was just another blow in a list of deaths. First his parents, then the death of his relationship with Bruce...the baby...and he had almost lost Harley. Arkham Asylum had tried to take his mind and Harley from him. But he had won. Jack pressed a kiss to Harley's forehead. He didn't need to be psychic to know what she was feeling, that loss of what could have been...what they might have had together, and how different everything could have been for them.

Neither of them said a word. They simply smiled and offered their congratulations, their arms tight around each other.

Jack took a moment to turn Harley's face toward him, his fingers on her cheek were tender. He rubbed his nose against hers and pressed his lips to her mouth. Harley wrapped her arms around his neck. The sounds of their friends and the crowd faded to the background as she returned her husband's kiss. It was them against the world. Harley and Jack against everything.

Frank clapped his hands, startling everyone. “Okay, Jack—you ready? Ready to get into the ring and show them assholes who's boss...get that little pissant who is trying to fuck up my life and fuck him back? Not in the sexual way, in the 'your pissed and I'm pissed at you' way.” Frank grinned.

They had to wait for the current fight to end, which it did with the red haired man winning, though he left the ring with a broken nose and several broken teeth. Frank went up to a young woman in a tight black leather body suit and a blond bobbed hair-style who was acting as referee, at least marginally so...if the fight got too violent it was her job to step in and stop it. They exchanged words for a bit then she smiled and nodded as Frank passed her some money.

Frank was grinning when he waved Jack and the others over. With Harley at his side, Jack pushed his way toward the ring, Alex, Alice and Frost following, Jack saw Penguin on his little “throne” looking out over the proceedings. Oswald smiled at Jack when he saw him in the crowd. The two men nodded at each other then Jack turned his attention toward Frank.

Frank smiled. “Okay guys, talked to Velma there. You're up next Jack! Beat the shit out of Val...I mean I know that's the plan so whoever was paying him to throw contacts you...but beat him real good for me okay? Just like...really, really bad beating...like really bad. Like pound his ass, but not in the fun way, like in the “I really hate your ass” way.”

Frank chuckled imitating with his fists.

Alex made a face. “Is there a good way?”
Jack laughed. “Got it: beat him real bad.”

Harley grabbed Jack, her hands on either side of his face turning him to face her. She pressed her mouth to his in a kiss, then slowly opened her lips, her tongue caressing his as Jack responded grabbing her hips. They kissed passionately, sweetly for half a minute before Harley pulled back from him and pressed her forehead to his. “Be careful.”

Jack reached up to caress the sides of her throat. “I promise poo, I'll be careful.”

She smiled giving him one more kiss before she whispered. “Kick his ass, Jack.”

The crowd grew a little restless waiting for the next fight until a young man, dressed in tight skinny jeans and an equally tight t-shirt, hurried into the ring with a bull horn.

“Okay everyone, up next we have Val Armorr.” (This was accompanied by boos. Val had been fighting, only winning the fights he was told to win by whoever was paying him and losing the fights he was told to lose by whoever was paying him. The crowd didn't know this, of course, but what they could see was that Val was not a consistent fighter, yet somehow he stayed in the ring despite this.) The young man walked the makeshift ring with his bullhorn. “And fighting Val tonight is a newcomer Jack!” The young man threw his arm out flamboyantly toward Jack.

Jack had stripped away his shirt, kicked off his shoes and walked into the ring bare chested. When the crowd saw him enter the ring, a murmur reverberated through the crowd; several people recognized him as the missing brother of Bruce Wayne. Jack really didn't care...word might get back to Bruce that he had been seen, someone might even tell the gossip rags...maybe. But no one was going to want to be linked to illegal fighting and gambling so the chances were in his favor that everyone here would simply sit on the information that Bruce Wayne's baby brother was safe, sound (relatively speaking), and participating in illegal fights. No one was even using a phone...no one wanted their faces to be seen at such an illegal activity.

As Jack walked into the ring followed by cheers, wolf-whistles and yelled propositions, next came Val, dressed a bit more like a boxer in a pair of shorts, shirtless and bare foot as well. Val looked confident, though it was clear from his expression he hadn't expected this fight. Jack grinned. Good, an unknown element would throw Val off his game. Jack was confident that beating Val would be easy—and satisfying.

Across from the ring near the main entrance, Ben walked in with Tomaso, the two men dressed elegantly for a night at the fights. Ben was telling Tomaso something as the don leaned in close listening intently to Ben while his eyes scanned the place, his bodyguards not too far behind him. He glanced sideways at his companion when Ben's words faltered.

Ben's eyes widened when he saw Jack in the fighting ring, naked from the waist up...Ben's mouth fell open, his heart sped up, his body responding lustfully to the sight of Jack's bared torso. Ben tugged hard on Tomaso's arm and pointed toward the ring. “Look, look, it's him!”

Tomaso looked, following Ben's outstretched hand, his eye narrowed dangerously when he saw Jack, but Ben was paying little attention to Tomaso's reaction, his gaze only on Jack, his mouth nearly watering with lust for him.

“Why's he fighting?” Ben said out loud, more musing to himself than seriously asking a question.

Tomaso shrugged. “Who cares?”
Ben giggled. “Oh, I must put a bet down on him Tomaso! I simply must!! This is going to be fantastic!”

Tomaso shrugged. “Fine my dear. Let's go place your bet if you must.”

Ben, all smiles, hurried off to place a bet. Tomaso scowled as he watched Jack, and he saw the woman with him, the blonde that Ben hated so much. Tomaso smiled thinking about what he had sent his men to do...and now thinking about the woman. Now that would get under Jack Wayne's skin...if something happened to that blonde...Tomaso licked his lips letting his mind wander to the horrible, yet satisfying things he could do to her. He may have to convince Ben to leave her be...for him.

Sandra opened the door without checking the apartment door peephole. As long as she had lived here in her little, quaint apartment she had never really had need to check to see who was coming to visit. She didn't usually engage the slide lock either. Sandra opened the door, a smile on her face without a second thought. She only had a moment, a beat of her heart to acknowledge that the group of men in front of her were wearing the most unsettling, creepiest masks she had ever seen, all white, nearly featureless...but with a strangely familiar oval face. For someone like her, who had lived in the city all her life, Sandra recognized the face. It was something similar to the face of a barn owl she thought...that being the only thought she had before one of the men hit her across the face with a baseball bat, instantly breaking Sandra's nose and causing her to stumble backwards into the apartment. The next strike of the bat caught her in the stomach, hitting her squarely in the diaphragm which sent Sandra stumbling. She was disoriented, her feet going out from under her. She fell to the floor, the breath knocked from her lungs in a groan of pain. The owl masked men surged into the small apartment, four of them, closing the door behind them. One of the men turned and engaged all the locks.

Dale, who was still at the sink washing the last of the dishes, had looked over just as Sandra had opened the door. He saw her being struck and his blood turned to ice. His lover, the woman he would do anything for was being hurt. He didn't have time to think, Dale simply reacted. He didn't yell, he didn't call Sandra's name; he went into action. These last few weeks with Jack and Harley had taught Dale one thing...actions do speak louder than words. He reached for the first weapon he could find, a sharp bread knife he had just cleaned. When the men hurried into the apartment, Dale rushed the first one he could, slicing at the man with the bread knife. Dale held the blade facing down to the floor the blade facing out from his body. He swung it in a diagonal slash, catching one of the masked men.

They hadn't seen him right away when they entered the apartment, which allowed Dale to get the first cut in, slicing the assailant across the shoulder and into the man's neck. The blade was sharp, but it wasn't sharp enough to cut a deep enough wound to kill. The man Dale cut let out a yelp of surprise, instinct causing him to stumble away from whatever it was that hurt him, but his comrade turned to face Dale.

Two men had grabbed Sandra forcing the big woman onto her stomach. The one with the bat hit her again, this time across her shoulders causing her to cry out in pain. She screamed, but her shout for help was cut short when one of the men holding her down punched her in the side of the face while his friend yanked her arms around to her back pulling out a pair of plastic zip ties and secured her hands. The other owl-masked man stuffed a gag into Sandra's mouth then duct taped it around her head to secure it. They were efficient in their violence, clearly practiced.

One of the other masked men rushed Dale. He tried to slice at him to keep the man away, but he wasn't trained with a blade and the bread knife just wasn't the best weapon. Dale sliced at the man, but the owl-masked man weaved out of the way and hit Dale in the chest hard, pushing him backwards. Dale's socked feet slipped on the linoleum, going out from under him. He fell, knocking his head against the floor hard enough to daze him.

Dale groaned as two of the men rushed him and rolled him over onto his stomach. He started to fight when the man with the bat walked over and swung, striking and bloodying the side of Dale's head.

Dale blinked in shock as his hands were cuffed behind his back. He was lifted and carried into the living room where he was dropped onto the couch beside Sandra.

The masked man with the bat walked over, the other three taking a step back.

Dale blinked and groaned. “Who are you, what do you want?”

One of the masked men pulled out his phone and started to record.

The man with the bat dropped into a crouch in front of Dale. “I'm afraid we are here to send a message to Jack Wayne and his little Red Hood gang. Tomaso Panessa doesn't appreciate your little group interfering in his business.”

Dale frowned. “What are you doing to do?”

The Owl laughed softly.

Jack worked his fingers back and forth, stretching them out, then cracked his knuckles before he formed his hands into fists. He then stretched his arms over his head to a chorus of whistles and leers, the fight about to begin in the next few seconds. Harley was standing on the edge of the ring watching him, Frank next to her on one side with Frost on the other, a small bandaid across his cheek. Alex and Alice were nearby, but staying back from the main action. She watched her husband warm up, doing a few quick punches at the air. She frowned in concern. When Jack turned toward her, a smile on his face, she reached out for him, leaning over the line that marked the ring motioning with her hands toward him. Jack grinned, walked over to her and took her hands in his.

“You okay Harls? ” he asked, but he had barely gotten the words about before Harley pulled him closer, kissed him hard on the mouth to additional cheers and some boos. Harley grabbed Jack, dropping his hands to wrap her hands along the the sides of his throat, her fingers spreading across his cheeks as she kissed him passionately. She just couldn't seem to shake the feeling that something was wrong tonight; there was this ball of dread in her stomach, a knot that just wouldn't go away.

Jack grabbed her, wrapped his arms around her body and pulled her up against him, lifting her off her feet while they kissed. The crowd apparently enjoyed the passionate display as their kissing was accompanied by a great deal of cheering and shouts of encouragement that drowned out those who had booed the couple.

Harley pulled away from his mouth to lay her forehead against his as she whispered. “You beat the shit out of him all right?”

Jack laughed. “I promise, just for you.”

The crowd cheered a bit as Val Armorr took up his position on the other side of the ring. He also threw a few practice punches at the air too, clearly showing that he was powerful, a strong fighter, muscles rippling. He grinned, throwing his arms up and walked his side the ring. The crowd was a mix of cheers and boos. Jack and Harley watched the man with narrowed eyes.

That was when they both heard a voice they knew and hated call out loudly and cheerfully. “Oh come on baby, no kisses for me?”

They both turned to see Ben standing nearby with Tomaso in a position right behind the younger man, his hands on Ben's shoulders, smiling at the two of them. Jack's eyes narrowed. He glanced around the crowd, at once picking out Tomaso's bodyguards. Jack narrowed his eyes as Ben smiled.

“I put a lot of money on you baby. Make me proud.” Ben blew Jack a kiss, but it was Harley who started to go toward the smaller man with a snarl, her hands balled into fists and murder in her eyes. Jack grabbed her, wrapping his arms around her and pinning her arms to her sides before he lifted her off her feet.

Harley yelled. “LET ME GO!!!”

Frank looked confused. Harley kicked helplessly at the air, the crowd yelling and laughing having no idea what was going on. Jack hissed against her ear. “Baby...pumpkin...come on poo...stop...you can't do anything to him here, you know that. Let it go...for now. Come on, settle down.” He kissed her ear, pressing his cheek against hers. “Come on sweets, calm down baby.”

Harley spat as Ben and Tomaso turned and walked away, heading toward the bar. Harley watched them go with a rage-filled glare before she finally relaxed in Jack's embrace.

“I fucking HATE him Jack. I hate him with every fiber of my being!” she hissed.

Jack set her back on her feet turning her around to face him. “I hate him too sweets. He's tried to take you from me.” He laid a hand on her cheek. “We will kill him. I promise.” Harley nodded then kissed the palm of his hand taking a deep breath. Frank hurried over. “You two okay?”

Frost looked concerned. “Boss...you want me to...” He motioned with his head in the direction that Ben and Tomaso had gone off. Jack shook his head. “No...no it's fine. Not the right time, my friend, but Frost, keep an eye on Harley.” He turned to see Val looking slightly annoyed. Jack sneered and then said loudly, “Let's get this fight started.”

*

Jack and Val walked to the center of the ring. A bell somewhere rang and the man with the bull horn yelled through it. “FIGHT!”

Jack and Val faced each other. Jack smiled, bouncing on his bare feet a little. Val narrowed his eyes. He motioned with his head toward Frank. “He sponsoring you too?”

Jack smiled. “Yep.”

Val frowned. “You know...he ain't doing too well. Man's going to crash and burn, you should find another sponsor.”

Jack grinned wide. “Don't you worry you pretty little head about a thing—except me.” (Penguin was leaning forward as he watched the fight, wondering briefly if he could convince Jack to fight for him beyond just finding out who was trying to screw him...to really fight. Jack looked good out there. He was handsome, which was a draw, and Cobblepot knew he could fight...he would just have to see what he could entice him with...)
Val made a few faux moves of his own. It was clear that Val had some real boxing training based on the way he weaved and dodged, the way he was following Jack's moves, but he still didn't strike out at Jack. They danced around each other, then Val took two quick jabs at Jack. Jack leaned out of the way.

Jack finally took a swing at Val, but instead of a punch he simply slapped the man across the face. Jack laughed at the shocked expression on Val's face. “Come on Val. Fight, stop dancing around, boy. You're not sure what you're suppose to do are you? Whoever is paying you didn't give you any directions did they?”

Val hissed, his mood immediately changed. “What the fuck are you talking about?”

Jack just smiled and lashed out slapping the other man across the face again. Val snarled and rushed Jack, the two men becoming entangled for a moment. Val punched Jack in the side twice as Jack held his opponent's head down, but Jack tensed his muscles, taking the hits as he struggled to hold Val, to make it hard from him to get any punches to Jack's face. Val snarled and pushed Jack away, giving himself a couple of steps space.

The crowd was cheering. Harley was watching intently, that feeling in her gut growing.

Wearing one of his nice black suits, Bruce smiled at Talia as he placed a plate in front of her. She looked lovely, elegant tonight wearing a long, figure hugging grey dress, her long hair styled just perfectly. He had dated many beautiful women, but Talia still took his breath away. She smiled with amusement glancing over toward Alfred who sat on her right then down at her plate. There was a recording of light violin music playing in the background. The three of them were eating in the dining room of Wayne Manor. Bruce had brought out the good silver, some of the fine china and wine glasses. He had candles lit, as well as the crystal chandelier overhead providing light.

“What is it exactly?” she asked in her slightly accented voice, picking up her fork and poking the meat on her plate as if she were afraid it would jump up at any moment.

Bruce grinned as he set his own plate down before taking his seat, reaching for the bottle of wine that sat on the table. “Well, I'm hoping it's Chicken Scaloppini.”

Alfred chuckled. “As are we all Master Bruce.”

Bruce laughed pouring wine for Talia. “Sorry you can't have any wine Alfred.”

“Tea is perfectly acceptable Master Bruce,” Alfred said as he picked up his fork and knife. “Though I would be perfectly happy eating in my room sir.”

Bruce made a noise. “Alfred...”

Talia interrupted with a smile. “Alfred, it is a pleasure to have you here with us. Please. I would love for you to stay.”

Alfred blushed with a charitable smile. “Thank you Miss Talia.”

Bruce nodded with a smile before he spoke. “So, you are returning home soon?” Bruce asked Talia.

She smiled and nodded. “Yes, my business here in Gotham is concluded, mostly. I..I wanted to discuss something with you...about our...future.” She cut into the chicken, clearly distracted. “But...” she frowned letting her sentence drift off. Bruce took a bite glancing across the table at Alfred. Bruce fumbled a little as he spoke. “I...maybe...”

Talia smiled. “It’s all right Bruce. After being here for a few weeks, I’ve decided that maybe this is not the time for this discussion.”

Bruce frowned staring down at his food. “Is it the food?”

Talia laughed. “No Bruce, I just feel that...you have several things here in Gotham you need to resolve, particularly your brother. You need to come to a resolution with him Bruce...it will tear you both apart far more than you think...” Bruce started to reply, but she held up her hand to stop him as she continued. “And there are your...other activities which I feel are taking precedent in your life right now.”

Bruce exchanged a glance with Alfred who shrugged almost imperceptibly cutting into his chicken. Talia continued. “What I have to discuss with you has waited this long...it can wait longer.”

Bruce reached over to her, laying his hand against her arm. “Talia, whatever you need to...”

She laid her hand over his and squeezed softly. “Bruce, I promise this can wait. When you are ready...when I am ready, I promise you will hear from me.” She leveled a small smile at him. “Now. I would like to enjoy this delicious dinner in the company of two very handsome and very fine gentlemen.”

Bruce laughed. “Well, one of us is.” He glanced over at Alfred with an amused smile.

“Well it is definitely not you Master Bruce. Despite my best efforts you still have the manners of a young rascal.”

Talia laughed. “I believe that is a quality you will be passing down.”

Bruce frowned. “What?”

She smiled. “Nothing Bruce. You know, this chicken is quite palatable.”

Alfred chuckled and agreed. “Yes, it's quite surprising.”

Bruce frowned. “You both are mean—you know that right?”

The three of them shared laughter.

*

The owl-masked man with the bat smiled while he tapped the bloody bat in his open palm. He looked over their work. The two people they had been sent to kill had been taken care of. There was blood all over the apartment, on the walls, the floor, splattered across the table, staining the couch...nearly every surface was marked in red. The couple had been beaten and mutilated such that dental records would be needed to truly identify them.

He glanced over at the man who had been filming the whole thing. “You got that? Every detail?”

The other masked man nodded. The bat-wielding man laughed. “Good, set it up here on the coffee table. I'll write the note.”

He turned to one of the other masked men. “You know the location?”

That man nodded.
The leader nodded in return. “Good. I have Mr. Panessa's note right here for you to leave at Catherine House.” He pulled out an envelope, clearly expensive paper, with a name written on the front in a flourish.

“To Jack Wayne”

Jack licked the blood from his lips, grinning at Val. The other man narrowed his eyes at Jack taking a swipe at him, but Jack weaved out of the way. Val hissed in annoyance, ready to follow up with another quick strike, but Jack swung, landing a hard punch to Val's left cheek, then another hit on his right, snapping the man's head one way then the other. Jack let out a roar and slammed his shoulder into Val's chest, lifting the man off his feet and threw him to the floor.

The crowd yelled, a roar of cheering went up. Harley was biting her knuckle, watching the fight, Ben temporarily forgotten. Ben was watching too, keeping himself a safe distance from Harley, secure in the arms of Tomaso while he devoured Jack with his eyes.

The two men hit the floor hard. Jack pinned Val under him, getting on top of the man, straddling him as he brought his fists down in a quick series of hard hits that struck Val in the mouth. Val's teeth cut into Jack's knuckles, but Jack didn't feel any pain. Val threw his arms up struggling to block Jack's vicious strikes. Val struck out blindly, his fist catching Jack in the chin, snapping his head back. Harley gasped biting into her knuckle as Jack fell off Val when the other man took that opportunity to buck him free. Val rose to his feet, thinking he would get Jack down on the floor, but Jack had regained his feet quickly and had his fists up.

Val tried to kick Jack, one kick landing on Jack's right side. Jack tensed his muscles taking the hit, but the second kick that Val tried to land, missed its target as Jack pivoted; Val's foot caught Jack in the thigh. Val threw another hit as his foot landed, catching Jack in the chin again and across his bottom lip snapping his head to the side painfully. Jack hopped backwards from Val with a grin that was bloody; the crimson blood dribbled down Jack's lips and off his chin. He responded with a quick series of punches to Val's face, his fists moving quickly enough that it was hard to see how many times he actually hit Val before the man stumbled away, his nose bloody, a pressure wound having opened across his left cheek and his lips bleeding badly.

The crowd was cheering wildly...calling Jack's name. Penguin grinned, taking a drag on his cigarette. He really was going to have to see if he could talk Jack into doing a little more fighting. The crowd loved him.

Harley was screaming at the top of her lungs, hopping up and down and waving her arms, garnering her own attention as she hopped, wiggled and yelled cheering her husband on. “KILL 'IM JACK!! POUND HIM PUDDIN!!”

Ben was watching with baited breath. He had wanted Jack badly before, but now...watching him sweating, bloody and beating the shit out of another man just had Ben about ready to explode! The temptation to kill Harley right now and take Jack for himself this very moment was almost too strong to ignore. If it weren't for the fact that Tomaso was with him and that he would most likely not make it out of this place alive if he killed the woman were the only things holding him back.

Jack grinned, his own teeth blood stained. Val rushed in again taking a wild, wide swing at Jack. Jack ducked under the swing and landed a brutal punch to Val's abdomen, hard enough that Val took two involuntary steps backwards. Torso shots usually didn't hurt so much, but Jack Wayne had a strength that was surprising, Val had discovered. Jack rushed him, ramming his shoulder into Val's stomach, lifting him up off his feet before slamming the man back down to the floor again. Val gasped in pain as Jack dropped on top of him again straddling the man as he had before, but Jack was finished playing. He rained strikes down with fury.

Val brought his forearms up to block, but Jack was hitting him too quickly, and too hard until all Val could do was lie there and take Jack's attack. Velma came rushing out while the young man in the skinny jeans was yelling into the bullhorn. “We have a winner!!”

Frank started to jump around in a circle. Harley ran out onto the ring (with Frost close behind her), getting to Jack before the other woman, and hooked her arms under her husband's arms. She started to pull Jack off of Val, struggling for a moment as Jack fought her.

“Puddin!! Puddin you won!! You can stop!” Harley yelled trying to be heard over the sounds of the yelling, the cheering crowd, along with the man using the bull horn. She pulled hard on him losing her footing which caused her to land on her ass, taking Jack with her. They fell to the floor, while other people went to help the senseless Val up. Jack struggled, breaking free of Harley. He turned around, for a moment his teeth were bared in a sinister grin, she could see drops of blood on his face from his pounding on Val. His eyes were unfocused and he laughed, raising his fist...for a moment Harley stared at him a little coil of fear in her gut, but in the next second Jack blinked, seeing his wife.

“Jack?” she asked, her voice timid.

Jack laughed. “Harley!!” He wrapped his arms around her falling top of her and driving her back to the floor covering her mouth in a kiss. Harley giggled against his lips wrapping her arms around his sweating, bloody torso, kissing him in return.

Ben grinned happily. “I knew he would win. I'm happy I put all that money down on him.”

Tomaso grunted in response.

Ben only laughed as he playfully patted Tomaso's arm.

Later that evening, they were heading home. Frank had kissed Jack on both cheeks thanking him for his help. He said that this fight was the start of getting his ass out of the hole he was in. Even if the shadowy forces who were trying to get him under their thumb never tried to get Jack on their side, if Jack kept winning, Frank would be out of the hole in no time. Jack said nothing, but shared a look with Alex. Frank's gambling problem, one way or another, was going to have to be addressed because Jack was not simply going to become Frank's new fighter.

Jack was lying down in the back of the car, his head on Harley's lap as Frost drove them to the docks. Harley smiled down at him, stroking his hair back from his face while Jack smoked a cigarette, careful not to blow smoke in her face as he relaxed, his eyes closed enjoying the caress of her fingers along his scalp and face. He winced as the cigarette butt stuck to a cut on his lip.

Frost glanced in the rear view mirror. “That was a pretty great fight Boss.”

Jack laughed. “Thanks Frost. Did you put any money down?”

Frost chuckled. “Sure did Boss, sure did.”
Jack and Harley both laughed.

Later, Jack and Harley made their way up the steps of their mansion, their arms around each other. Jack grinned. “How about a bubble bath? I could really use a bubble bath.”

He chuckled. “Maybe a little...play time too...”

Harley giggled then stopped in her tracks, her eyes staring forward.

Jack frowned. “Harls?”

He followed her gaze. Taped to the door was a bloodstained envelope with Jack's name written across the front. Jack frowned, his eyes narrowing. He let go of Harley and stepped over to the envelope. He looked around with narrowed eyes, saw nothing and no one else, then pulled it off the door and opened it.

Dear Jack,

I see you have decided to take your little group of misfits and interfere in my business.

You should head to Otisburg. You have a friend there name Dale? I left you and your woman a little message, a message that should convey to you loud and clear what I do to people who interfere with my business.

You are a little fish in Gotham and you have chosen to swim in the ocean with the sharks..Well my friend, the sharks bite back.

There is blood in the water my friend.

You've been warned. You try to mess with the Panessa family again, the next message will be written in your pretty blonde companion.

Tomaso Panessa

Harley, who had been reading over Jack's shoulder gasped, her hand going to her mouth. “Jack...Dale and Sandra?”

Jack, his face a mask of rage, pulled out his cell phone and called Frost who answered on the first ring.

“Boss?”

Jack growled.

“I'm going to need the car.”
Face Jobs

Jack didn’t bother calling Alex. He and Alice had too much to celebrate tonight; he wasn’t going to ruin it...until he had to, which he knew would be all too soon.

Jack, Harley and Frost drove straight to Dale and Sandra’s apartment in Otisburg. Harley was quiet during the drive over, simply holding Jack’s hand in her lap. Jack’s expression was one of stone silence laced with rage that seemed to burn in his back of his eyes. He held Harley’s hand tightly in his own. Frost’s expression in the rearview mirror, after Jack had explained about the note over the phone, was grim. The set of his lips was a thin, colorless line and his brow was knitted into a scowl. When he had picked up Jack and Harley, Frost was clearly upset.

“Boss, I...I’ve heard of Panessa and all, but when I was working on the police force I had heard some rumors about Tomaso Panessa--nothing that would have pointed to this sort of behavior though.”

Jack had only muttered. “Frost, don’t worry, whatever has happened has nothing to do with you. This is all on Panessa and Ben.” He folded his arms over his chest. Harley put her arm around Jack’s shoulders. He could feel her trembling just slightly. He opened his arms to her and Harley leaned in wrapping her arms around his waist, her head against his chest as Frost drove.

The three of them arrived the apartment in Otisburg only to find the apartment building quiet. The place was mostly dark, only a few beacons of light shining out a small handful of windows. There was no doorman, the only security being a lock on the door that seperated the outside and the inside and it wasn't usually locked, not because of some misplaced trust in Gotham, but more likely due to pure laziness.

Jack, Harley and Frost went inside. The apartment building wasn't anything special, but neither was it horrible or run-down. It was just a normal apartment building like any other average apartment building in Gotham, sharing a similar look and build. The three of them headed inside and took the elevators to the floor where Sandra and Dale's apartment building was located without encountering anyone. They arrived on the correct floor and walked down to Dale and Sandra's apartment.

Frost drew his sidearm as Jack and Harley stood in front of the apartment door. Jack exchanged a look with Harley before he knocked on the door. There was no answer. He knocked a couple of more times, but still received no answer. Jack, who had brought a pair of gloves with him (he had also insisted that Harley grab a pair before they left the house), slipped on his gloves and opened the door.

Without a word, Frost walked between the two of them and entered the apartment first, his gun held ready. Jack and Harley waited outside until Frost, his voice sounding strained, hissed.

“All clear Boss.”

Jack and Harley slipped inside closing the door behind them. The room was dark when they entered, only a little light coming through the open windows at the other end of the apartment’s main room. But the smell hit them as soon as they entered the room, a thick pungent smell laced with an undertone of the metallic. The scent was thick and heavy enough that Harley could almost taste it on her tongue.

Jack reached over, found a light switch and flipped on the light. Harley let out a loud gasp, her gloved hands coming up to cover her face, her voice cracking on a sob. “Oh my God...”
The room was covered in blood splatters. Blood stained nearly every surface of the room and the furniture. The red was bright in places were the blood was still damp and tacky, but most of the blood was dry, having turned a dark brown. The apartment looked like a slaughter house--there was nowhere that Harley could look that wasn't stained in blood. Harley let out a sob and Jack pulled her into his embrace, yanking her away from the image and held her head against his chest, one hand cradling the back of her head, the other around her waist as he took in the scene before him.

Frost was pale, swallowed, and said, “Boss...”

Jack lifted Harley's head so that he could look her in the eyes. “Baby, I want you to wait outside.”

Harley nodded. Jack pressed his mouth against hers before he let her go. He motioned to Frost with his head and Frost headed out to stand guard over Harley. Jack walked further into the room, taking in and memorizing every detail of the murder of his friends. As he stepped closer to the bodies, he saw the phone sitting on the coffee table, a piece of paper taped to it that read only: “Play.”

Jack carefully picked up the blood covered phone and tapped the play button. On the phone, he saw the owl-masked men...watched the beating death of his friends without reaction. When the video had run its course, his hands shook in rage. Jack set the phone down. He knew exactly what the mask meant--Ben. Ben had a hand in what had happened to Dale and Sandra...Jack didn't know how, but the owl masks were clearly a silent way of telling Jack that Ben was involved.

Jack closed his eyes to center himself, his rage threatening to boil over and make him act rashly. Not only had Panessa tried to use Dale and Sandra to send a message of fear, the fucker had threatened Harley and now he knew Ben had helped.

Jack pressed his lips together in a thin white line as he pulled his gloves off and took his phone out from his coat pocket. He pushed speed dial and waited only a couple of rings before Alex answered the phone.

“Hey Jack what's up? I thought you and Harley would be celebrating or something?” Alex sounded slightly tipsy.

Jack hissed. “We have a problem.”

It only took Alex, minus Alice, to show up at the apartment. Accompanying him was an an older woman, roughly around sixty or so years old. She had her blonde hair cut in a short no-nonsense style, with piercing light blue eyes, firm mouth, a pleasant face really; she looked like someone’s mother. She was dressed in a pair of black button up overalls with a black henley underneath and a blue bandana around her head.

Jack had stayed in the apartment waiting and smoking a cigarette unwilling to leave Dale and Sandra alone. (He didn’t know why, but it felt wrong for him to leave them. Maybe it was guilt he thought...he needed to work on that he thought to himself.) He heard Alex stop to speak to Harley and Frost before he entered the apartment. Jack could tell by the tone of Harley's voice that she had been crying. Jack felt a twist in his chest, but he didn't budge from his position by Dale and Sandra. He couldn’t. He had to stay where he was. He didn't know why, but it was important to him to stay by their side until the last moment.
As Alex entered, he paled visibly looking around the apartment with his mouth hanging open. When his eyes landed on the remains of Dale and Sandra, Alex put his hand to his mouth, clearly trying to stop himself from vomiting. He looked away. The woman didn't react at all to the carnage. She simply walked into the apartment carrying a couple of heavy duty white buckets filled with supplies: rubber gloves, towels and an assortment of other things. Behind the two of them followed three young men. All three of them were dressed similarly to the other woman, all blonde and judging by the looks of them, they were all related to the woman. Each of them were also carrying more supplies, and one had two body bags thrown over his shoulder.

As the group entered, the three men spread out and started to unload their supplies, setting to work without a word.

Alex glanced over at Jack. Jack nodded and the two men stepped out. The older woman put her buckets down and motioned at the young men. “Just wait to start, but get everything set up.”

She turned and followed Jack and Alex out of the apartment.

Alex leaned on his one hand against the wall breathing harshly through his mouth before he spoke. “What the fuck?”

Jack hissed. “There was a note on the door of our home, from Tomaso Panessa. He did this as a warning.”

Alex closed his eyes. “Hell of a warning.”

The woman cleared her throat, her sharp blue eyes looking between the three men and Harley with an air of irritation of someone impatient to get to work. Alex looked over at her and nodded taking another couple of deep breaths before he pushed himself upright. “Jack, this is Belinda Hook and those guys inside are her sons, Emmit, Otto, and Ross. Belinda here is a professional cleaner--she makes problems go away. Belinda, this is Jack, Harley and Frost, friends of mine.”

Belinda put her hand out to Jack. Her hand shake was firm and strong.

“Pleased to meet you,” Belinda said. “Alex has already paid me. I'll have this cleaned up in a few hours. When we're done, no one will even know what happened. It will look as if the occupants had simply stepped out. No one will ever find the bodies. We will treat your friends with respect, though.”

Harley made a sound like a little whimper. Jack frowned and pulled her close against him. She wrapped her arms around his waist and buried her face against his chest. Jack nodded to the woman. “Thank you.”

She looked between them. “If you don't need me, I'll get to work.” She eyed each of them a moment longer and added, “I suggest you all go get a stiff drink.” With that the older woman went inside and shut the door.

Jack dropped the butt of his cigarette on the floor of the hall and put it out with the heel of his shoe. “Come on. I saw a bar not too far from here.”

The bar the four of them ended up at was a seedy little place called The Cooler. The inside of the bar was dark with dim yellow lights and red neon, the walls a mix of brick and fake wood panelling. There were a handful of people in the bar, a mix of old and young, men and women. There was a pool table with a few patrons having a game and a dartboard where a couple of young men were playing darts. There were a few people sitting along the bar, a couple at a table or two and a few sitting in a couple of booths. When the four of them walked in, a few of the patrons turned to look at them, a couple of them scowled, but no one said or did anything, dismissing the small group immediately. Jack, his arm around Harley's waist, led the group over to a booth, Harley and Jack on one side, Alex and Frost on the other. Frost didn't sit. “Just tell me what everyone wants. I'll go order drinks.”

Jack muttered. “Just a bottle of whiskey and two glasses.”

Alex frowned. He had been slightly drunk when Jack called, though he was now stone-cold sober. “I'll take three--three wisemen shots.”

Frost lifted his brows in surprise at Alex, but nodded. “Be right back.”

Jack pulled out his cigarettes, lit one. Alex indicated with his head the pack. “Can I bum one?”

“Course.” Jack pulled one out for Alex and handed it to him even leaning over to light it for him.

They were all quiet while they waited for their drinks. As soon as Frost came back with the drinks, Jack took the bottle, pouring shots for him and Harley. Frost had a bottle of beer and Alex had three shots lined up in front of him, each shot was a mix of Tennessee Whiskey, Scotch Whiskey, and Tequila. Alex picked one up right away and downed it in one swallow without flinching.

Jack downed a shot, then poured another. Harley sipped at hers, letting the burn flow down her throat. Everyone was quiet for a long time, just smoking, drinking, listening to the music that was playing in the bar, The Scorpions “Winds of Change.”

Jack took a long drag on his cigarette before he finally spoke. “There was a cellphone left for me to find. It was a video of Dale and Sandra's murder.”

Harley made a small sound of exclamation, her hands going to her mouth again. Jack reached over with one hand and rubbed her back as he continued. “The men in it, the men who killed them, were wearing owl masks. Not too dissimilar to a mask we found in the basement of our house.”

Alex sat up straighter. “What the fuck? The Court of Owls?” Jack shook his head. “I'm not sure, but Ben--Ben was part of the Owls.” Jack's expression darkened with the promise of what Alex thought would be terrible retribution.

Alex started to ask how he knew, but Jack just held up a hand for him to hold his question. “Look, I know. Cobb, the caretaker at Catherine House, is part of it too. I'm going to go talk to him, then I'm going to kill him. I don't fucking care if the Owls are directly involved or not at this point; Ben is their fucking creation, their responsibility and they fucking dropped the ball. Now he is out there, hooked up with Tomaso Panessa. Both of them have gotten in my way for the last time and both of them have threatened Harley for different reasons. I won't...no, I can't let that stand. Killing Cobb will be my message to the Owls. Killing Tomaso will be my message to the rest of the mob families here in Gotham--no one messes with the Red Hood. No one.”

Alex downed his third shot and muttered. “I need another.”

Frost stood up. “I'll get it. I need another beer.”

Alex nodded to Frost, then looked at Jack from across the table. The one-armed man still looked pale. “You know killing this Cobb guy might just put the Owls on your fucking ass Jack. If they aren't now, they will be.”
Jack smiled. “I somehow don't think so and if I'm wrong, I'll just wipe them out too.” Jack chuckled. Alex didn't look as sure, but then didn't say anything else about the Owls. Instead he focused on Tomaso Panessa. “You know, to kill Panessa you are going to have to go through his fucking family. I don't think the other mob families will get involved. Panessa is low on the pole. If he is too weak to keep his territory they might just let you fucking have it and deal with you instead. OR they could swoop in and try and take it. You might be looking at a gang war Jack, you know that right? And our gang was small even before…” He blew out a breath.

Frost returned with the drinks, setting three more shots in front of Alex and two more beers down for himself. Frost, having only caught the end of the conversation, said matter-of-factly as he sipped his beer. “You talking about destroying Panessa? I'm in. That little shit isn't well-liked among the other families. I remember hearing a few things while I was a cop. The other families won't be happy, but I don't think you will get too much trouble from them unless you try to move in on their territory. Of course, you ain't going to get a seat at the table either. Alex is right though. They may let you take Panessa's territory, then come in later to try and take you down. They let you do the work, come after you--us--then they can justify to the ‘mob community’ that they look out for their own. It's all about the money and pride with them.”

Jack poured himself another shot. He picked up the glass, studying the amber liquid for a moment. “Let them. I think they'll find we won't be an easy target.” He downed the shot without expression. “I want to hire us some mercenaries. We need an armed force if we are going to wipe out Panessa. And I want to blow something up.”

Harley giggled, the first sign of anything other than sorrow since they found the note on their front door. “I like that. I want to destroy everything Tomaso loves puddin--everything.”

Jack put his arm around Harley as he put his cigarette out in the small plastic ashtray on the table. “Exactly sweets.”

Alex downed another shot. It was clear by the way he blinked slowly he was quickly on his way to becoming drunk again. “Okay Jack. I'll...I'll see what I can find out.”

Jack grinned leaning back. “Tomaso isn't going to live to regret this.”

* *

Jack called a cab for Alex, who was so drunk he could barely stand. Alex grinned up at Jack. “You know man, you’re like my fucking best friend in the world. You know that? I’ll like...ride by your fucking side to the end bro.”

Alex grinned goofily and kissed Jack on the cheek. A big wet kiss. Harley burst out laughing. “Hey!! Jack is mine!”

Alex leaned around Jack to grin at Harley. “Hey man, just sharing the love. You wanna kiss too?”

Harley giggled nearly taking Jack and Alex down as she stumbled. “Sure!!”

Alex tried to lean around to kiss her, but Jack pulled him back. “All right that’s enough you two.”

Jack leaned Harley against the wall just as the cab drove up. He struggled with Alex who kept weaving and wobbling, nearly taking Jack down with him. Jack got the door of the cab open and poured Alex in. Alex laughed. “Aw man, Alice is gonna be fucking pissed with me!”

Jack smiled. “No she won’t buddy. You just get home and get some sleep all right?”
Alex grinned with an unsteady nod. “Sure thing man, sure thing.”

Jack closed the door of the cab after giving the man money and the directions. He called Alice next.

“Hey Alice, Jack. Just wanted to let you know I just put Alex in a cab. He’s drunk. We...we found Dale and Sandra murdered.”

Alice gasped. “Oh my God. I knew something was seriously wrong when Alex left...damn.” She sighed softly. “You know who did it?”

“Yeah, yeah I do. I want you to stay safe, all right? Alex will tell you everything when he is sober. Right now you just might want to be out there to help him out of the cab.”

Alice answered softly. “No problem. Thanks Jack. You and Harley be careful.”

“Will do.” Jack hung up and walked over to pick up his wife just as Frost pulled up in the car. Jack balanced Harley as Frost jumped out of the car hurrying around to open the door for him.

Jack couldn't keep the smile off his face as he guided his very drunk wife into the back of the car. She was giggling and singing at the top of her lungs, dancing as Jack tried to put her into the car. Her antics helped him laugh as he finally got her inside and slid her into the backseat. Harley was singing the most annoying song, and somehow, despite her drunkenness, staying in tune while she sang.

“Hey, I just met you and this is crazy
But here's my number, so call me maybe
It's hard to look right at you baby
But here's my number, so call me maybe
Hey I just met you and this is crazy
But here's my number, so call me maybe
And all the other boys try to chase me

*

She sat up and reached forward, grabbing her husband by the front of his shirt and hauled him into the car with her, almost knocking his head against the frame of the car in her enthusiasm. Jack laughed pulling himself the rest of the way into the vehicle and brought the door closed.

Frost slipped back into the driver’s seat, chuckling as he settled in behind the wheel.

Jack sat up, lifting Harley’s legs in order to do so as he sat beside Harley. She rolled around, almost falling to the floor of the car, then reached out for the door handle. Jack grabbed her, pulling her back. “Nope, come on Harls--we're going home.”

She giggled grabbing Jack by his face and sang to him while rubbing her nose against his. Jack laughed softly, his hands going around her waist as she straddled his lap.

“Your stare was holding Ripped jeans, skin was showin'
Hot night, wind was blowin'
Where you think you're going baby?"

Jack laughed as Frost turned leaning an arm over the seat to look at the two of them. “She going to be okay Boss?”

Jack pulled Harley against him holding her close. She snuggled and started to nibble on his ear, her teeth tugging on his ear lobe before she ran the tip of her tongue along his ear lobe.

Jack chuckled. “Yeah I think she'll be fine. You okay to drive?”

“Takes more than a few beers to get me drunk Boss. Don't worry, I'll have you two at the dock safe and sound.” Frost put the car in gear.

Jack sighed, relaxing in the back of the car as Harley's singing quieted a little and she turned her attentions to nibbling on his neck, yanking his shirt open to expose more of his skin for her teeth, tongue and lips to play with; he closed his eyes enjoying the feel of her attentions which were punctuated by little sounds of desire she made while her tongue slid across his skin. She brushed her mouth across his, her tongue tracing his lip, asking for entry. Jack lifted one hand up to cradle the back of her head. She smelled like whiskey, cigarette smoke and a twist of vanilla that was all her. The scent of her, the feel of her, made his groin tighten with need. Her body was warm and the way she kept rubbing herself against his quickly hardening erection made him hiss before plunging his tongue into her waiting mouth. After seeing the remains of Dale and Sandra, it was nice to be reminded of the good things, like his adorable drunk wife. Harley pulled away from his lips, her fingers working at the buttons of his shirt while Jack leaned his arms along the back of the seat while Harley continued to explore his neck, her fingers working at the buttons of his shirt.

*

Jack balanced Harley while he worked to open the front door of the house. There was a chill in the air that he was keenly aware of since Harley had unbuttoned his shirt in the car all the way past his navel where only one button remained in place holding the shirt together. A fog was rolling in from the water, creating an eerie effect as they stood under the porchlight of the house. Harley had one arm wrapped around his middle, her other hand caressing his chest and down his stomach.

Jack chuckled. “All right, let’s get you inside sweets, and in bed. Daddy still has some work to do.”

Harley pouted. “You're not going over to take care of Cobb now are you?”

Jack glanced down at Harley to see her bottom lip sticking out. He sighed, getting the door open and picked her up into a bridal style carry. He stepped through the door, kicking it closed with his foot and hitting the lightswitch by the door with his elbow.

“Harley, I want…” Jack started, but she interrupted him.

“Puddin, don’t leave me alone tonight...please…” She licked his ear. “Please Jack...not tonight.”

Jack frowned as he started up the stairs. “I...I suppose it could wait 'til morning pumpkin.”

Harley smiled. “Thank you puddin...I need you tonight...I need to make love to you. I need to feel alive puddin…” Her voice broke a little. Clearly the alcohol was beginning to wear off. Harley leaned against his shoulder. “Thank you puddin.”
Jack carried her up the stairs to their bedroom, walking inside the dark room and taking her over to the bed where he gently laid her down. Harley giggled softly reaching up to grab him by the front of his shirt yanking him down with her before he could get away. Jack let himself be dragged down to the bed without fighting her, knowing she needed him to comfort her. He would enjoy the company of his wife, too. Harley rolled him over her, flipping him easily onto his back and jumping up to straddle him. She ran her hands along his chest, sliding her fingers wide as she ran her hands down to his stomach, stopping only long enough to undo the last button holding his shirt in place. She gazed down at him, her blonde hair framing her face as her blue eyes flashed in the dim light shining in from the hall.

“Promise me Jack...promise me we are going to kill every one of them,” Harley demanded softly. Her voice cracked only a little on a sob as she pressed down on him rolling her hips against his hardness she felt between her legs, her fingers pressing painfully into his chest. “Promise me we’ll make them pay for what they did.”

Jack ran his hands up her thighs, staring intently back at her. His blue eyes almost glowed with a vicious gleam. “I promise you sweets, when we’re done there won’t be a Panessa or an Owl left in Gotham. We are going to take over everything we can. They are going to be scared of us. They will tell stories about the Red Hood gang again.” Jack smiled, his fingers working on the buttons of her pants, pulling the zipper down as he spoke. “They are all going to die,” he whispered.

“They are going to suffer for what they did Harley. I swear it.” He grinned viciously, running his hands along the soft skin of her hips. The room was mostly dark, but light spilled in from the hall, a triangle of yellow light from the doorway that only reached so far into the room. The glow flowed over her skin, highlighting the soft pale hue of her flesh. Jack watched with rapt attention as she pulled off her shirt, then expertly slipped out of her bra. He reached up, sliding his hands along her hips, up to her waist, then to her breasts. He cupped her breasts in his hands, squeezing their softness, loving the weight of them in the palms of his hands.

Harley closed her eyes throwing her head back, rubbing against him, her hands spread wide across his flesh.

Harley groaned softly. “Yes puddin...kill them all...every one of them. Ahh...I’m going to make Ben suffer puddin…” Harley ground against him while Jack squeezed her breasts, pinching her nipples between his finger and thumb.

“Mm...that’s my girl...that’s my Harley-girl.” Jack purred softly. “I wanna watch you kill him.”

Harley grinned and giggled looking down on him before she slid her body down, pressing against his erection which was hurting, trapped in his pants and needing her touch. She laid down along his legs, working at the button and zipper of his slacks. She pulled the fabric back, pressing her mouth against the cotton of his boxers. Jack groaned closing his eyes, the heat of her breath transferring through the fabric and sending erotic ripples through his entire body.

She slid off the back of the bed and started to finish pulling her clothes off and kicking her shoes somewhere into the room.

“Get undressed puddin,” Harley commanded with a soft smile at him.

Jack sat up, doing what she told him, pulling off his shirt and yanking his shoes off while he watched her pull the bedding back and crawl under the sheets and blankets, the yellow light dancing across her skin. He hurriedly joined her under the covers, scooping her into his arms as soon as he was close enough to grab her. Harley wrapped her arms around his neck, covering his mouth fully with her own and sinking down into the pillows, tugging his warm body with her. She wrapped her legs around his, rubbing against him, feeling the firmness of his muscles, the satin feel of his skin. She needed him close, needed to feel every inch of his body pressed against hers. She dragged her hands down his shoulders, grasping, squeezing, pressing the length of her body against him. Harley ran her fingers through his hair, grabbing handfuls gently in her fingers, her mouth moving over his in her need to feel his mouth, his tongue, his lips. Her kisses were desperate, pressing her mouth hard against his with no regard to his split lip or any bruises he might have; she was simply needy for his touch. Her desire to feel his hands on her, to rub her body against his and feel that soft friction was overpowering. Harley needed him to banish away the image of Dale and Sandra.

Jack kissed her with tender attention, one hand moved into her hair, holding the back of her neck, sliding into her thick gold hair. Her body flowed against his like silk on satin; he could feel every soft inch of her on his skin. Her kisses became more demanding, more needy. He obliged his wife, rolling onto his back and tugging her with him. His hands ran down her sides, over her back, traveling the curve of her spine to her ass which he grabbed, spreading his hands wide to hold as much of her soft, warm skin as possible. Jack pressed her down against his groin, taking pleasure in the feel of her skin under his hands, her breasts pressed against his chest, the taste of her tongue in his mouth. He held her tight, finding that he needed to feel her just as much as she needed him.

Harley pulled her lips away from his mouth and sat up. Jack smiled looking up at her watching her toss her hair back, the light dancing over her skin. She reached between them, holding him steady, sliding her hand up and down the length of him, her grip firm. She rubbed the head of his shaft against her, closing her eyes for a moment before she opened them again with a smile. Jack dragged his upper teeth across his bottom lip. She was so gorgeous he thought.

Harley, with her eyes glued to his, slowly, deliberately, lowered herself down on him, piercing herself with his erection. They both gasped together. Harley hissed with pleasure, the feeling of him inside her, the fullness of him. She fought the urge to start moving, to ride him hard. She took her time, lowering herself down, luxuriating in the way it felt to have him inside her. She grabbed Jack’s hands, threading her fingers with his, arching her back with a low moan.

Jack grabbed her hands in turn; reaching for her. He held on as Harley slowly took her time sliding down on him, enveloping him in her warmth. He whimpered as the slow, gradual feel of becoming surrounded by her washed over him. He squeezed her hands tightly, the expression on his face a mix of deep love and pain. She was his one flaw, his one weakness; nothing and no one could destroy him except her...his harlequin...his Achilles heel.

And he would never change that.

Harley gazed down at Jack, squeezing his hands in return, pressing down on his arms, her pelvis moving in tiny thrusts. She loved him so much. There was nothing in the world she would not do for him. Nothing. She would give her life up for his without question, she thought...anything for her puddin...

She started to roll her hips in broader motions. Jack licked his lips watching her, his face contorting in pleasure whenever she would grind a little harder. She yanked his hands up, released them to place his hands over her breasts. Jack squeezed, his eyes half-closed watching her while Harley pressed her hands down onto his flat stomach thrusting her hips forward at the same time, riding him in a slow grind, back and forth.

Harley’s hands glided up his torso. She leaned forward to run the flat of her tongue over his chin, lifting her hips up and down. Jack reached down to press his hands against the small of her back, then slowly rolled his palms down her ass, grabbing the cheeks of her rear, wanting to keep her closer, needing to feel her pleasure while at the same time he wanted to drive himself hard and fast into her.

Jack ran his hands back up her torso, one hand grabbing the back of her neck the other around her waist again as he surprised Harley by rolling her over so that he was on top of her, yet staying inside her when he did. Harley giggled at the sudden position change.

She grasped his face between her hands, kissed him deeply. Jack cupped her face, leaning in to kiss along her neck while he rolled his hips, thrusting softly into her, making love with a deep burning passion. Harley moaned softly, dragging one foot up and down his calf, her hands caressing the skin of his shoulders. Their thrusts met each other in a slow, steady rhythm until Harley was panting, throwing her head back, her eyes closed. Jack smiled against her throat, alternating his kisses from her lips to her neck as he continued to thrust just a little harder, sliding deeply into her until Harley cried out. He hissed with pleasure as her body tightened around him, hot and wet. Her fingers dug into his shoulders, looking for a way to ground herself as her pleasure peaked; her body tensed, then broke as her orgasm washed over her, the epicenter at her groin spread out, radiating to every part of her body.

“Uhh...puddin…” Harley’s cry was a mix of pleasure and something deeper than brought tears to her eyes. Jack groaned, kissing her neck and biting her ear, then back to her mouth, demanding her attention again. His thrusting became slightly more frantic, his need to release with her, within her, building. Harley held on gasping when she came a second time, this one hard and fast, bulleting through her.

Jack moaned loudly. “Harley...uh...Harls…” He came with a heated deep gasp, his orgasm almost ripped from him. He shuddered, continuing to thrust until he was spent. Harley wrapped herself around him, kissing him sweetly, softly. Her lips covered his face then took sweet passionate kisses from his lips as her hands caressed his back. “My puddin…”

Jack smiled laying his head against her collar, stroking the side of her face with the back of his fingers. “My Harley,” he whispered in return. The next morning Jack was sitting at the table, dressed in a pair of black jeans and a white dress shirt, his hair slicked back with a pleasant smile on his face as he sipped from his cup of black coffee with Harley sitting next to him. She looked adorable in a pair of pink leggings and a white sweater, her hair piled on the top of her head in a messy bun, held in place by some hair sticks. She smiled leaning over to feed him another bite of pancake. Jack chuckled around his bite. “Harley honey, you don’t have to feed me.”

Harley giggled. “I know puddin, I want to! I need to make sure you eat a good breakfast before you go to work.” “Not this time baby. Daddy needs to do this one alone, sort of a man-to-man talk, but I would like to borrow your bat.” Jack sipped his coffee.

Harley stuck her lip out. “Come on puddin, let me watch.”

Jack smiled. She stuck her lip out further batting her eyelashes until Jack laughed. “Okay fine! You can come; just stay out of the way. I don’t want you getting blood on your cute sweater.” Jack grinned as Harley clapped her hands. “Yeah!! Okay, I’ll stand way out of the way. I promise, and yes you can use my bat!”

* Cobb relaxed at the table, sipping his coffee and watching the morning Gotham news when he heard a knock at his door. Cobb frowned wrinkling his nose. He wasn’t expecting anyone. He stood up thinking that maybe it was one of the rangers from the island’s wildlife refuge. Sometimes they came over here to let him know if there were any issues, like a weak place in the stone fencing, or once there had been a case of a rabid bat that had been found and they wanted to warn him since he was pretty much the island’s only constant resident...until the Waynes had arrived.

Cobb was thinking that had to be it, one of the rangers, when he opened the door only to be greeted by a bat across the face. The crack of wood across his jaw sent Cobb stumbling back. As he slammed against a wall, the thought that he was getting tired of opening the door to his home to be hit in the face drifted through his mind briefly only to be replaced by searing, mind-numbing pain as he realized his jaw was broken. The side of his face swelled up almost instantly.

He slid down the wall to a crouch, forcing himself back to a standing position just as Jack walked over the threshold, holding a baseball bat that he smacked against his opposite hand. Jack smiled; a smile that was vicious, all teeth, and didn’t reach his eyes. Cobb slipped down the wall until he was sitting on the floor. The pain was excruciating.

He resisted the urge to reach up and feel his face.

Jack stood over Cobb, placing the bat nonchalantly over his shoulder. “Morning Cobb. I’m here to deliver a message to your friends in the Court of Owls. Because of their inability to keep control of their little mistake, two of my dear friends are dead. Your death is going to let them know...I’m coming for them...I’m coming for all of them.” Jack giggled. “Soon, what’s left, if I leave any of them alive, will have to deal with me...I am going to rule Gotham.” Jack laughed.

Cobb pushed himself up the wall. He could feel his jaw hanging loose, the hinge disconnected and throbbing in agony. He held a hand out trying to speak. “Stop...what…” Jack smiled. “Save your breath Cobb. There is nothing you could say that is going to stop me. Besides, I really need to get this anger out and my therapist...” Here Jack looked over his shoulder and Cobb saw Mrs. Wayne standing a little behind her husband.

She waved cheerfully at the groundskeeper. “Hi!”

Jack continued. “She says I need to find constructive ways to work out my anger. This is very constructive until I can take out my anger on the real source of my rage. I would say I’m sorry but you know, I’m not really.”

Without further comment, Jack swung the bat, the head of which caught Cobb in the shoulder. Cobb let out a gargled cry of pain. Jack started to laugh as Cobb slid down the wall. He started to crawl, trying to get away from Jack, but Jack brought the bat over his head and swung it down, breaking one of Cobb’s legs. Harley clapped her hands. “You go puddin!! Batter up!!”

Cobb rolled over kicking out with his good leg, but there wasn’t enough power behind it. As he looked up at Jack he saw madness in the younger man’s eyes—madness and a hunger for violence.

Jack laughed swinging the bat again at Cobb, hitting the man in the leg he had just tried to kick Jack with, catching him in the calf, just above the ankle and snapping the leg in two. Cobb let out a strangled cry dropping back to the floor, his calf down bent at an unnatural angle.

Jack giggled. “Now tell me if this hurts!”

*

Jack beat on Cobb for nearly ten minutes, letting his rage run its course until the man’s body was barely recognizable. The hall of the house looked like a slaughter house with blood, brains and bits of skull decorating the walls. Harley stayed in the doorway watching the whole thing with a grim expression, her eyes slightly narrowed, and no more giggles or jokes. Her own anger was a low burn, a simmer under the surface of the smile on her face, her hatred just as black as her husband’s.
Jack was covered in blood by the time he was finished, as were the walls and floor of the hallway of the little cottage.

Jack sighed stretching his arms over his head with the bat in one hand. “Well, if that doesn’t send a message I really don’t know what will sweets.”

Harley giggled. “Oh, I think it sends a perfect message puddin. I really think it does.”

Jack turned grinning. “Well, I need to go clean up and then I need to talk to Alex about hiring some mercenaries. We have a mob family to destroy.”

Harley giggled, stepped over to Jack and put her arm through his. They walked back to their house all smiles.

Later that afternoon, Jack had washed and dressed in fresh clothing; black slacks, a deep, almost black, purple shirt with a black vest that had a bright green satin inner lining thrown casually over his shirt. He was smoking a cigarette while he spoke on the phone with Alex and sipping a cup of fresh coffee. “So how much would we need to hire a gang of mercs to help us take out both groups?” Jack asked while watching Harley. She was doing a series of stretches putting her rear end in the air and slowly sliding down into the splits, a cocky seductive grin on her lips as she gazed over her shoulder at Jack.

Jack grinned at her in return and mimed a kiss. Harley giggled blowing him a kiss as she bent over backwards. Jack was distracted momentarily...contortionist fantasies, he thought with a smirk.

Alex murmured with a dark tone. “Depending on how fucking many...like a group of twenty...you’re talking about five million easy, for the work they’ll need to do. So we are going to want to get a hold of five fucking million dollars, at least. I think we would want to do another fucking job, maybe two before we would have enough to hire some fucking decent mercenaries to help take down Panessa. Plus, you need to talk to the rest of the fucking gang about this...I’m not sure everyone is going to want to get involved in this...especially after what happened with Dale and Sandra.”

Jack blew out some smoke, his eyes on Harley as she rolled her body onto her hands and gracefully brought her legs up into the air. She slowly turned herself around, grinning upside down at him before she brought her legs down and stood upright.

“Fine, we’ll have a meeting. Anyone who wants out though...Alex...I can’t let them run around loose.” Jack put his cigarette out in the ashtray while watching Harley do a series of backflips. “I don’t need one of them thinking they can go to the papers or to one of the families and sell information about who I am. If they want out, we’re just going to have to deal with a retirement program that is a little more...permanent than just letting them go with a gold watch for a job well done.”

Alex was quiet for a moment then sighed. “Fuck. Yeah, you’re right. Anyway. You know...I might have an idea for how to make a lot of money fast.”

Jack chuckled as Harley did some backwards flips. “Do tell.”

“Well, Roxy called wanting to talk to you. There is a Rodin exhibit at the Gotham art museum, it’s only going to be there for the next week. Roxy said there are a few pieces there like this one...hold on, I wrote the fucking title down...” Jack could hear papers rustling then Alex’s voice again. “Okay here it is, it’s got this fucking stupid long name, “Eve, the Large Version.” Roxy said it was like this fucking five-foot-tall Rodin bronze of a woman with folded arms hiding her face in shame. Anyway the fucker had sold at auction for $18.9 million. The buyer is lending the fucking thing for this exhibit...Roxy says she knows a guy who is willing to pay $15 million if someone gets him that fucking thing...so...fuck, if that one piece is worth that much. I know some of my clients are art collectors. If we can get our hands on some fucking pieces of art, then we could buy ourselves several fucking groups of mercs if we wanted.”

Jack laughed. “That is a perfect idea Alex!!! Make ourselves a little nest egg! I love it! And it will be fun! How do you think Frank would feel about helping me out with this since I’m helping him?”

Alex groaned. “Are you fucking serious? He’d fucking love it.”

Harley did a few cartwheels, then landed into the splits throwing her arms in the air. Jack grinned, picking up his coffee with a wink at his wife. “Get the gang together tonight for a meeting Alex. We’re gonna discuss the future of the Red Hood gang...and talk about learning to appreciate art.”

Jack hung up smiling at Harley. “Harley dear, how do you feel about getting some culture?”
Harley woke slowly, her mind unwilling to let go of the dream she had been having. In the dream she could feel the soft, smooth, wet sensation of Jack’s tongue tracing a line along the inside of her thigh followed by the soft press of his lips, his teeth brushing against her flesh. They had gone to bed naked, snuggling close and holding each other that afternoon, to take a nap before tonight's events. Jack would be fighting in Penguin’s fight club again and hopefully he might be approached this time by whoever was trying to fix the fights. If he won that is...but Harley had no doubt that Jack was going to win his fight. The following night would be their meeting with the gang. Jack had decided it was time to let the gang know who their leader was, who was asking them to take the next step, willing to put his own life on the line as well as theirs to take down Panessa. It was an acceptable reveal, especially since if they anyone was unwilling to participate in his planned gang war, they weren’t going to be walking out anyhow...so why not?

Her dream continued to pull at her consciousness. His hands caressed her skin using just the tips of his fingers to send delicious ripples over her skin. Delicious heat burned through her body, tightening in her groin while making her breasts feel overly sensitive, the sheet against her overly sensitive nipples was almost too much for her to bear. She moaned softly, arching her back for a stretch, pointing her toes as she stretched her legs when she felt a bite, an actual bite, then the sensual caress of Jack’s hands along her thighs.

Harley let out a startled yelp, leaning over to turn on the bedside light and throw the covers back to see Jack grinning like a cat between her legs. “Morning...or rather...evening sweets!” His smile spread across his face while his blue eyes sparkled in the dull yellow light of the lamp.

She grinned at her husband. “What are you doing? You’re supposed to be resting before we hit Penguin’s fight tonight!”

Jack continued to smile at her. “I am. I’m relaxing before the fight--just not sleeping.” Jack punctuated his response by mouthing her thigh. The press of his lips and teeth tickled, made Harley giggle and squirm. “Jack!!”

Jack laughed as he edged closer to her groin. He exhaled against her, the warmth of his breath brushed over her sensitive skin, eliciting a soft moan from Harley. “Puddin. You’re supposed to be resting…”

Jack growled, scooting up closer to drag his tongue over her, pressing the flat of his tongue against her. The tip of his tongue pressed pass her inner lips to flick against her clitoris. Harley groaned, arching her hips into his attention. Jack chuckled. The vibration of his laugh rippled over her skin. “I am relaxing sweets. Are you going to deny a man his own relaxation techniques? You are just so mean…” He giggled softly, his tongue snaking over her again.

Harley pressed her teeth into her bottom lip, arching back as he licked her again before she reached down to run her fingers through his hair. Jack looked up, his eyes raking across her naked body. He lifted his head enough to smile at her again with damp, glistening lips.

Harley giggled. “I thought athletes weren’t supposed to have sex before a big game?”

Jack laughed, pressing his lips against her and making a raspberry which had Harley squealing. “PUDDIN!!”

The vibration tickled as well as feeling...incredible. Harley gasped, wiggling her hips.
Jack laughed, then dropped his voice to a purr while wrapping his arms around her thighs. “Mm...If I don’t have sex with my woman before beating the crap out of some stranger, then I will definitely perform badly tonight. You wouldn’t deny me my training, now would you?” Jack punctuated his sentence by slowly easing his tongue against her, his blue eyes glued to her own lighter blue eyes while his tongue stroked against her, warm and wet, with just the right amount of pressure that Harley tightened her grip in his hair with a loud groan.

“Oh...oh no puddin...never...you...you do whatever you need to so...oh golly...whatever you need to do puddin so you can beat the crap out of whoever...uhh...” Her breath came out in a shudder, her lips trembling as Jack dove down deeper, sucking ever so lightly against her. Harley moaned and tossed her head back as her breathing slowly became heavier and heavier. She leaned up to look down at Jack, whose entire focus was on licking her. He moved his head in a slow, sensual rhythm, lapping at her in long licks before switching to sucks and nibbles that had her gasping for breath. She leaned up, looking down on him before she threw her head back against the pillows with a cry as she came. Her fingers tightened in his hair trying not to and failing to force his head down on her. Jack only laughed, sucking and licking while her orgasm spiked then ebbed. He buried his mouth against his wife, sucking her, coating his lips and tongue in her taste before he finally came up for air.

Jack made his way back up her body. “How was that?”

Harley grinned at him and reached out to stroke his cheek. “You are so bad.”

Jack laughed. “That’s why you love me sweets.”

“Mm...among other reasons.” Harley chuckled. “Now come here.”

She pulled him down pressing her mouth to his, tasting herself on his lips as she kissed him. Jack growled deep in his throat, lying down on his wife with his hips nestled between her legs, feeling her warm and wet, welcoming him. He pressed his erection against her, but didn’t try to enter her yet; instead he focused his attentions on kissing her, first her mouth, then her neck, exploring the tender skin with his lips and teeth.

Harley moaned softly, her hands stroking his back feeling the slight rise of skin at his neck and shoulder where his card tattoos decorated his skin...the letter along his side, before her fingers traced the slender muscles of his body.

Jack growled against her throat. “Tell me you’re mine Harley.”

Harley reached up, her fingers tracing the small hairs at the back of his neck, caressing his hair and throat. “Yes puddin, I’m always yours. No one is ever going to tear us apart. I’ll kill them.”

Jack chuckled leaning in to kiss her. “That’s my girl. That’s my Harley.”

Jack thrust into her causing Harley to gasp. No matter how many times they made love, each time felt like something new, something special. She kissed him back hard, passionately, her hands sliding down to grip his shoulders. Jack groaned in response, rolling his hips; he thrust hard, then soft with a slight rise and press that had Harley jerking with pleasure.

Harley’s gasps were soft, yet deep. She stroked her fingers down his spine to his hips where she grabbed his rear and then arched her pelvis into his thrust.

“Oh...More puddin...more...” she groaned, her voice breathy.

Jack chuckled. “Bossy.”
But he started to move with more determination, with more power and passion. He moaned in delight; she felt so incredible, beyond any words he could utter. He thrust in a hard, passion filled rhythm holding himself up on his hands while kissing her, their tongues flicking across one another until he dropped to his elbows to cradle her head in his hands. He pressed his mouth to her neck feeling the rapid beat of her pulse against his lips.

Harley gasped, jerking when her next orgasm washed over her. It came suddenly when Jack pressed on her just right, thrusting deep and rolling his hips. “Ah, oh...JACK!” Jack rose up onto his knees, grabbing Harley in the same motion and lifted her up. She laughed in happiness and surprise wrapping her arms around her husband as he wrapped one arm around her waist, his hand spread wide across her lower back, his other hand gripped her thigh firmly, Harley knew she was going to have bruises as he thrust up and shoved her down at the same time. Harley whimpered as intense pleasure raced up from her groin like the flames of a welcome fire. Jack looked in her eyes as he thrust into her, his lips brushing against her. Harley gripped his shoulder, squeezing and rolling in time to his thrusts. Jack, his eyes never faltering from hers, moaned. “Harley...my Harls…”

Harley stared back at her lover with a moaned. “Puddin…”

They thrust together, their bodies moving together in delightful friction until Harley started to shudder she began to pant harder and heavier, her fingers digging into Jack’s flesh.

“Uh...uh...Jack...puddin…” She came hard, her orgasm rippled through her then crashed like a wave spreading out through her entire body. She cried out, arching into her pleasure holding onto Jack shoulders as if she was afraid of being torn apart and she needed Jack to ground her.

Jack held on, pressing into her as she climaxed. He didn’t just need to be buried as deeply as he could into her, he needed to feel her surrounding him. His girl, his Harley, his everything. Jack’s fingers pressed possessively into her skin, his mouth against hers until he needed to breathe, to call out her name.

“Harley...uh Harley! HARLEY!” He crushed his mouth against hers again as if he needed her breath to keep him alive, holding her down against him when he came with a burst of pleasure that raced through his entire body.

They rode their orgasms together, their thrusts slowing down until they were moving in gentle, tender waves. Jack cradled her head against his shoulder, holding her tightly.

He whispered against her hair. “Now I’m ready to take on all of Gotham.”

Harley giggled. “Someday you will puddin. Someday you are going to take all of Gotham.”

Jack chuckled and shifted a little so that he could lay her back down on the bed, easing her carefully so that their bodies wouldn’t separate from one another.

Once he had her laying on her back, again he leaned on his elbows over her smiling down at her. He played gently with her hair. “As long as you’re by my side Harley, I feel like I could take on anything, even Batman again.” He chuckled rubbing his nose against hers.

Harley giggled caressing his shoulders. “Batsy doesn’t stand a chance against you puddin.”

Together they laughed before dropping back to slow sweet kisses.

Harley did a turn in the mirror to examine her new suit. Alex had sent someone over with it for her after she and Alice had done some shopping through using skype and looking at clothing at one of the shops in Gotham. The suit she had chosen was a red and black vertical striped outfit. The jacket had wide black lapels and straight-cut shoulders, a black tank underneath and black heels. Harley, with Jack’s help, had braided her hair into a French braid down her back. She had even pinned a white silk flower to her lapel after Jack had recommended it thinking it would look pretty on her.

Jack, wearing only a pair of boxers and a white tank, came out of the bathroom running his hands through his hair and stopped to wolf whistle at his wife. “Damn Harley. I’m gonna have to beat men off of you tonight.”

Harley giggled. “You like it?”

Jack walked over turning her toward him after grabbing her hips. “Mm...Daddy very much likes…” He licked his lips. “Mm...now what are you wearing underneath?”

Harley laughed. “Stop! We’re going to be late.”

Jack laughed and kissed her before walking over to where his own clothing was laid out, a pair of tailored grey slacks, a dark blue dress shirt and a pair of brown, double monk-strapped shoes. He grabbed the slacks and started to pull them on.

“Don’t worry sweets. They’ll wait for us.”

*

The music of Filter’s “Hey man, Nice Shot” was playing loudly, but the crowd at the fight was louder.

Jack was covered in sweat and blood, felt the tearing of skin along his knuckles as he struck his opponent across the cheek. However, the tear of the flesh across his knuckles was accompanied by the rip of skin along the man’s cheeks where Jack slugged him.

Licking his bloody lips, Jack threw another punch, but his opponent, a man named Edgar, taller than Jack and heavily muscled with long black hair, swung at Jack also. His meaty fist missed Jack’s face, but he landed his punch on Jack’s shoulder. Jack spun slightly to the side and just out of Edgar’s reached as the man reached out with his other hand trying to grab Jack. Jack moved back in close, the smoothness of his movement like a dancer, but a dancer who followed the move with three hard struck to Edgar’s chest with his right hand and a swift left hook with his other.

Edgar fell back, but he didn’t lose his footing; he just shook his head, narrowed his eyes, and took a steadying breath.

Jack chuckled and said, “You are a glutton for punishment.”

Jack moved in for a swift series of hits; one, two, three, four, with both fists in quick succession followed by Jack bouncing a step back and snapping out a kick to the taller man’s chest. Edgar took a few steps back, snarling at Jack. The thickness of his Russian accent was thicker with the blood in his mouth after he spat a broken tooth out onto the floor.

“You are a good fighter--for a little man.” He smirked.

Jack lifted a brow. “Little man?”

Standing between Alex and his father, with Frost behind her guarding her back, Harley put her hands to the sides of her mouth and yelled over the sounds of the crowd. “CAVE HIS FACE IN PUDDIN!!”

Frank blinked glancing around Harley’s front to share a look with his son. It was clear from Frank’s expression he was asking if Harley was always this vicious. Alex chuckled and shrugged putting his one hand up helplessly. Frank then shared a look with Frost who only grinned from ear to ear. Frank shook his head chuckling.

(Before the fight, Jack had again had to hold Harley back when they saw them, though Jack had wanted to let her go, let Harley rip their eyes out...it would have been a beautiful sight he had mused at the time, when they had seen Ben and Panessa on the other side of the ring. Panessa was speaking to the man who was Edgar’s coach, a large-bellied man with an equally large nose, and red from alcohol. Jack and Harley watched the three men with murder in their eyes. Harley was practically writhing in Jack’s grip. But Jack had been expecting them to be there. As much as he wanted to slowly brutalize and kill both men, he knew now was neither the time nor the place. Too many witnesses. It was one thing for these patrons to keep quiet about Jack Wayne participating in an illegal underground fight club, but it was something completely different to watch him commit a murder. Though the whole idea of letting those two just...exist had made his blood boil almost uncontrollably. Especially when Tomaso had smirked at him and Harley...that man hadn’t just murdered their friends--he had tortured them, all to send a message that he was superior, that he was the one in control. Jack grinned back at the man, even blowing Tomaso a kiss which had clearly irritated both men for different reasons, just before he leaned close to his wife and had whispered to Harley. “Just picture what we are going to do to Panessa and imagine what you are going to do to Ben...all in good time sweets.” He had kissed her ear, then another kiss just at the pulse in her neck. Harley had seethed, but she leaned into his kiss had nodded. “You’re right puddin…all in good time.”)

On the other side of the ring Ben stood watching the fight, dressed in brown slacks, a white shirt with a light, baby blue jacket. He was watching with rapt attention, unable to take his eyes off of Jack. Ben felt his body respond to watching Jack, the roll of sweat down his back, the viciousness of his punches, the way Jack licked the blood off his lips...Ben groaned with want. Tomaso narrowed his eyes at Ben, irritated by his occasional lover’s obsession, but his attention was divided. He was watching Jack with a smug expression and a critical eye. He had to admit, he would not want to go into a one-on-one fight with Jack Wayne; the man was skilled and savage. He held nothing back in his fight with Edgar. Tomaso was glad he had followed Ben’s advice and bet on Jack instead of Edgar.

Ben grabbed Tomaso’s hand, cooed with unbridled lust. “Oh Tomaso, I really need to have him soon. I’m not sure how much longer I can wait.” Ben grinned looking over at Tomaso. “Maybe we could share?”

Tomaso sighed. “Maybe Ben.”

Tomaso’s eyes wandered across the ring to where the blond woman, Harley--Ben had said her name was Harley--was watching Jack. Her eyes were glued to her man. Tomaso frowned watching her. She was beautiful, sexy. He could definitely see the appeal. Tomaso smirked. He would bet that Jack Wayne would not be happy if anything happened to his pretty little wife. Tomaso grinned wider, licking his lips. Maybe, if Wayne decided to get out of hand again, a visit to the wife--a private visit--might be in order. And there was always Jack Wayne’s brother Bruce. Tomaso smirked again. Jack Wayne had many weaknesses he could exploit if the murder of his friends hadn’t persuaded him to step back.
Edgar blocked Jack’s spinning kick with his forearm, then blocked again when Jack brought the same leg back around, leaning out of the way when Jack tried to snap kick the Russian in the face. Edgar swung at Jack, but he surprised the big man by grabbing his wrist and twisted the arm back before he came in close to strike Edar in the mouth with the back of one fist.

Edgar struck back, his fist connecting with Jack’s chin with enough force that Jack took several steps backwards. Edgar tried to press his advantage, rapidly moving in closer and taking several swings, alternating with his left, then right fist. Jack blocked easily with his forearms then tried to take a shot at Edgar. He over extended and Edgar moved out of the way just enough that Jack’s fist shot over the other man’s shoulder.

Edgar grabbed Jack’s wrist when his arm shot past forcing his arm down. While he held Jack, Edgar tried to throw several punches at Jack’s face. Jack, unable to break the hold on his wrist right away, leaned backward and rapidly weaved to the side to avoid the punches. Jack snapped his free hand down against Edgar’s wrist while he yanked his trapped hand backwards with enough strength to break Edgar’s hold on him.

“You’re actually putting up a fight.” Jack panted as he spoke.

Edgar smirked. “You fight well for a puny man.”

Jack narrowed his eyes. “I’m getting a little tired of your insults, you know.”

Jack rushed forward with a high kick, but Edgar ducked under the kick so that when Jack’s foot came down it landed on Edgar’s shoulder--instead of his head which Jack had been aiming for. Edgar grinned.

“You’re too slow.”

He punched Jack under the jaw, at the same time grabbing him by his pants and twisted, throwing Jack to the floor in a painful slam of body against concrete.

*

Harley yelled. “HEY YOU BIG GORILLA GET OFF MY PUDDIN!!”

Harley started to move, but Frost grabbed her by her shoulder and pulled her back. Harley hissed like a viper. “Let me go Frost!”

Frost chuckled. “Sorry Mrs. Wayne, Boss said to keep you in one place so I’m keeping you in one place.”

Harley narrowed her eyes and stuck her bottom lip out, but she stopped trying to go and help Jack. She knew she couldn’t...wasn’t suppose to but it really upset her to see him getting thrown by the big Russian.

*

Edgar, thinking he had the advantage, leaned over Jack about to punch the slimmer man in the face when Jack laughed and wrapped his legs around Edgar, flipping the man like he weighed nothing. Edgar went sailing over his head and Jack released him to roll to his feet with the grace of a skilled martial artist.
Jack laughed as he bounced back and forth on his bare feet. “Hey Edgar, why don’t you let me hit you with my left for awhile. Your face is crooked.”

Edgar hissed as he regained his feet. “You are not funny little man.”

Jack chuckled. “Oh I don’t know, I think I’m pretty damn funny and pretty damn pretty.”

Edgar snarled and spit and another tooth flew out. “I’ll make you not pretty. Your girl, she will want real man after this...want some of my Russian pisk when this is done.”

Jack grew still. He stared hard at Edgar, all humor gone. “Don’t you dare bring Harley into this.”

Edgar grinned, clearly not recognizing the signs that he had just crossed a dangerous line. “Why not, ‘fraid you don’t measure up, little man? That she will like riding my pisk?” Edgar, licking his bloody lips, did a pelvic thrust in Harley’s direction.

Jack narrowed his eyes, his expression deadly, all humor gone from his startling blue eyes. He moved so quickly that Edgar wasn’t prepared for him. Jack rushed forward, his arms moving swiftly, punching out from his body with all the power Jack could put into them. Edgar avoided the first couple of strikes, barely, the air misplaced by Jack punches brushed against the big man’s skin, but Jack twisted his body to the left, bringing up his right elbow to smack it into Edgar’s face, followed by the sound of bone slamming into Edgar’s teeth, knocking loose yet another.

Jack then twisted fully around, his body moving with grace and speed. (Harley was holding her breath watching her husband, her heart slamming inside her chest.) Jack grabbed Edgar's right arm, one hand on the Russian’s shoulder, the other holding Edgar’s wrist down, then yanked the trapped limb up at an awkward angle. Edgar cried out at the sudden intense pain just before Jack flipped Edgar over like the man weighed virtually nothing. Edgar hit the floor hard enough that the crowd said, “Oooh!” with sympathy. Edgar rolled to his feet, staggering out of Jack’s way while Jack, grinning viciously hissed at the big man. “You’re mistake my Russian friend, was bringing my wife up. No one touches or talks about my wife that way. No one.”

Jack rushed forward. The two men exchanged a series of punches. Jack’s fist struck Edgar, his scraped knuckles brushed along Edgar’s teeth; the impact ripped through the skin on Jack’s knuckles further while his strike loosened the already loose tooth more. Edgar threw a couple of punches, but Jack seemed to easily block his opponent’s attacks. One strike hit Jack in the shoulder, but there wasn’t enough weight behind the attack to do much damage. While Edgar struggled to block, Jack kept forcing the man backwards with a barrage of rapid, strong attacks.

The big Russian wasn’t sure, but he was beginning to think that his American opponent was now playing with him, maybe had been holding back during the entire fight. Jack kept moving and swaying like a snake, avoiding the worst of Edgar’s attacks. Edgar tried for another strike to Jack’s face, but the man just leaned over out of the way (with more speed than any man ought to have, Edgar realized in irritation), grabbed Edgar’s arm and swung the big man over his shoulder like a sack of potatoes. Edgar flew trying to twist in the air, but instead he only twisted to his side. Jack spun around, the lights dancing off his sweat covered body and took two steps, closing the distance with his opponent. He brought his knee up to slam Edgar in the side of the head with his kneecap. All Edgar saw was blood and then darkness; the impact of Jack’s knee against the socket was with the right amount of pressure to shattered it, bone being driven into Edgar’s left eye as he fell and rolled across the floor.

Edgar lay on the ground unmoving. The big Russian had been the favorite to win this match. The crowd went quiet until Harley screamed at the top of her lungs. “YES!!! THAT’S MY PUDDIN!!”
Jack looked over at her with a grin. He brought his bloody fingers up to his mouth and blew her a kiss. Harley laughed pretending to catch the kiss. The crowd started to shout. “JACK! JACK!!”

As Jack started to leave the ring. Just as he was about to join the others, someone bumped into him. Jack glanced over to see a tall, lean man dressed in a black suit, balding but with long white hair that hung just past his ears. The man gave Jack a slight smile, he grabbed Jack’s hand and shoved a piece of paper into his hand before quickly turning, absorbed by the crowd within moments. Jack frowned holding onto the paper, balling it in his palm while he made his way over to Harley. The random members of the crowd were patting his back as he pushed his way to Harley, who was pushing herself toward him. As soon as she was close enough Harley threw herself into his arms, heedless of the sweat and blood.

“Oh puddin!! You did fantastic!!” Harley pressed her mouth to his, her arms wrapped tight around his shoulders, one foot coming off the ground in a classic kissing pose. Jack chuckled holding her close and returned the kiss with equal passion, his arms wrapped tight around her waist.

Frank, Frost and Alex pushed their way over with Frank yelling. “Damn Jack. You need to do this professionally man. You could make me so much money! Let me take you guys out for dinner!! There is that place called Reggie’s that had this burrito called the meat tornado...killed a man last year...awesome.”

Alex was laughing. “Damn Jack...damn.”

Keeping an arm around Harley, Jack leaned down close to the others which prompted Frost and the rest to lean in like a football huddle.

Jack held up the slip of paper. “Someone just slipped me this.”

Frank grinned. “Oh, looks like you finally got the attention of, well, whoever they are.”

Jack opened the folded paper and read it before he spoke with a grin. “Someone wants to meet me, three days from now at Paddy’s Pub on NW 21st.”

Frank rubbed his hands together. “Perfect.”

Jack grinned and squeezed Harley’s shoulders. “Well, looks like we are finally going to find out who is behind trying to get to you Frank.”

The next evening was the meeting of what was left of the Red Hood gang. Alex had arranged to rent out all of a restaurant downtown, a little hole in the wall called Baby’s Lounge. The inside of the lounge reminded one of the 1950’s. The color scheme was aqua and grey with round tables with retro-style diner chairs in dark blue, beige and pale pink. The lights that hung from the ceiling resembled large bubbles on long silver tubes. There was a curved bar, a slightly raised platform where a grand piano sat and large palm trees everywhere. Only a handful of employees were working, all people that Alex had personally hired himself, just for tonight, each one a trusted employee of Gotham’s premiere information broker.

As the remainder of the Red Hood gang, Jason, Duela, Trope and Roxy entered the lounge, each one dressed in street clothes. They were greeted by Frost, wearing his usual black suit and red tie along with the sounds of “Stardust” being played on the piano by Jack. He was dressed in black and dark purple pinstripe slacks with a matching vest, all cut to fit his trim figure, a deep purple dress shirt, lacking a tie with the first three buttons undone, the sleeves of which were rolled up part way up his forearms along with side holsters under his arms that held his weapons. Harley had done his makeup, carefully outlining his eyes in black, applying the dark red lipstick he wore around his mouth making his lips look seductive, kissable and delicious as Harley had cooed when she had finished applying the lipstick. He had a cigarette in his mouth that created a halo of smoke around him. Sitting on the edge of the piano was Harley, blond hair styled like Veronica Lake's, her legs crossed, and the long slit in her dress having fallen away to show off her legs and her high, blood red heels. She was wearing a blood red chiffon, sleeveless evening dress with a deep plunging neckline, her makeup done in dark smokey colors with her red lips matching her husband's. Harley watched Jack while he played, his long fingers moving gracefully over the piano keys.

Sitting at the bar nursing a bloody mary was Frank, dressed in jeans and a bright red polo shirt with white tennis shoes. Sitting next to him was Alex, who had his own drink, a sazerac. He was dressed in jeans and a black t-shirt under a bright green and orange Hawaiian shirt.

The group looked around trying to see where their leader was, but it was Trope who hissed in surprise at the piano player and the beautiful blond who was laying on top of the piano gazing seductively at the piano player.

“That’s Jack Wayne!” She smacked Roxy in the shoulder.

Roxy frowned looking at the piano player, her eyes widening in surprise when she realized that Trope was correct. “What's he doing here?”

Jason leaned close to the girls. “What are you two talking about?”

“The piano player! That’s Jack Wayne, younger brother to Bruce Wayne, billionaire playboy, the golden boy of Gotham,” Trope said stunned.

“What the hell is he doing here?” Jason asked with Duela nodding along. “And who is the hot chick with him?”

Roxy frowned. “I heard he had a girlfriend before his brother locked him up in Arkham.”

Jason laughed. “So he’s one of those loonies, eh?”

Jack’s fingers danced across the keys finishing the piece with a flourish before he stood up and put his hand out to Harley. Harley took it and lightly jumped down from the piano, the two of them then walking over to the small group while holding hands.

“Welcome, welcome my sweetlings!” Jack grinned at each of them throwing his free hand into the air. “I bet you are all just in shock to see me without my red helmet, but I felt that since I’m about to ask you to do something big--bigger than what we have done before--that it was time to show our faces.”

Trope asked in shock. “You really are Jack Wayne?”

“The one and only.” Jack performed a theatrical bow, still holding Harley’s hand. Harley curtsied. “And this is my lovely wife, Harley Quinn.” Jack threw his other hand out toward Harley like a game show host introducing his costar. She smiled brightly and waved. “Hi!”

Jason stepped forward frowning. “So, you’re saying that you’re the one that has been planning and leading us this whole time?”

Jack smiled. “I am.”
Jason took a swing at Jack. Jack’s hand snapped up, grabbing the younger man’s wrist in his hand easily diverting the swing, his long fingers wrapping tightly and painfully around Jason’s wrist. Jason pushed, but Jack was unmovable.

Jack grinned at the younger man, his voice a purr. “You only get one free shot at me Jason. The next one won’t end well for you.”

Jason stared at Jack, slowly pulling his hand back. Jack opened his hand letting Jason’s arm go with a smile. His blue eyes ran over everyone else. “Anyone else want to try?”

Jason mumbled. “You really are him...the Red Hood.”

“I am. Now, why don’t all of you get a drink and we can discuss what I have in mind for our merry little gang.” Jack smiled, wrapping Harley’s arm around his and led her over to the bar. The others exchanged a look before following Jack and Harley to the bar.

*

Everyone sat around one of the larger round tables, each person had a drink in front of them. Louis Armstrong singing “La Vie en Rose” played softly in the background while Jack, his drink untouched in front of him, played with a deck of cards. Everyone was quiet watching Jack shuffle the deck in a variety of ways until he finally finished with a flourish and set the cards down. Jack glanced around at everyone, meeting their gazes individually before he spoke.

“All right kiddies, the bad news first.” Jack took a deep breath. Sandra and Dale’s deaths stung like a freshly opened wound. “Dale and Sandra were murdered.”

The group started to gasp, to protest, deny, but Trope burst into tears. Jack frowned glancing at Harley. She reached out and stroked her fingers along his jaw, her touch giving him the support and strength he needed.

Jack took a breath and continued. “We know exactly who it was...Tomaso Panessa.”

Jason took a large gulp of his drink, a large tequila sunrise, before he spoke. “So, Panessa had them killed because of that drug thing we did.” It was a statement rather than a question.

Jack pulled out a cigarette offering one to Jason who took it. Jack admired how quick the kid was, knew exactly the reason for the murders. Jason was smart, which made Jack grin. He offered a cigarette to anyone else who wanted one before putting the pack away and lighting his cigarette with the lighter Harley had given him. He leaned over and lit Jason’s as well as Duela’s and Roxy’s before he sat back down and took a long drag on his cigarette, blowing out smoke slowly. “He did.”

Jack decided not to say anything about the Owls or Ben for the moment...one big thing at a time.

Duela asked quietly. “What happened to Alice? Did they get her too? Is that why she isn’t here? And who is this new guy?” She pointed at Frank. Alex smiled. “Alice is fucking great. We’re pregnant!”

Everyone around the table gasped and clapped offering congratulations, a moment of happiness in the grim atmosphere of the news of murder.

Roxy grinned. “Oh hell, we are going to have a new little member!!”

Alex chuckled, clearly happy and proud as he pointed with his one thumb over at Frank.
“This trash man here is my Dad. Frank.”

Jason grinned. “So does this mean we are becoming a family organization? We’ll be just like one of the Gotham mob families!”

Everyone laughed.

Jack watched the smoke drift to the ceiling before he spoke again, waiting for everyone to calm back down. Harley reached under the table to grab his knee. Jack grinned at his wife before he continued. “So, that is why I asked you all here and why I’m showing you who Harley and I are now. I want to hit Panessa...I want everything that the Panessa family has to be ours...I want to eliminate them and take over their territory, to make Panessa suffer and put the Red Hood gang in their place. And I want you all with me. The Red Hood gang will be coming up in the Gotham underworld if we take out Panessa. I gathered you all here because I want to give you a chance to back out.” He took a hard drag on his cigarette, holding the smoke in his lungs before he spoke, smoke flowing from between his lips and nostrils as if Jack were a dragon. “This isn’t going to be easy either.”

Jack’s eyes traveled slowly around the table…”So—are you with me or not?”

Jack’s blue gaze traveled slowly around the room. Jason glanced at Roxy, Trope and Duela. The three young women nodded. Jason took a drag on his own cigarette then spoke. “Maybe a few weeks ago, I probably would have backed out. Dealing with the mob in Gotham is some heavy shit. But, they killed our friends and even if we said we were out, don’t mean Panessa wouldn’t still come after us. I don’t know about Roxy, Trope or Duela, but I want some payback and if anyone can take down Panessa, it’s you...Boss.” Jason grinned with a simple nod.

Jack laughed. “That’s just what I wanted to hear.” (Alex let out a small breath he had been holding.) “Now...part of my plan is to flesh out our little family some more with some mercenaries to help with our little operation: Destroy Panessa. But to do that, we need money. And to solve that little problem, we are going to rob the Gotham Art Museum.”

Haley giggled with a pat of her palm on the table. “This is going to be fun!”

* Two nights later, it was a chilly night in Gotham. Rain had started falling a few minutes earlier, a slow drizzle that made the air just wet enough to be cold and uncomfortable. Bonnie, a muscular red headed woman with startling green eyes, sat at the desk that sat near the front of the museum with her lunch while watching the monitors. She took a bite of her bologna sandwich, took a sip from her bottle of Snapple and chuckled watching Dean as he stopped in front of the Jules Joseph Lefebvre called “The Cicada” painted in 1872. The painting was of a young woman standing against a wall completely nude. Dean stopped to stare at the painting around the same time every night on his rounds. The man was like clockwork. Bonnie shook her head. The man needed to get himself a girlfriend and stop staring at paintings of naked woman, the asshole. Bonnie took another bite then grinned when she saw Walter. Walter was balding, but he had a full thick beard and mustache and a friendly smile.

“Hey Bonnie baby, you got a sandwich for me?” Walter chuckled as he came closer swinging his baton.

“You know I do sweetcakes.” Bonnie chuckled. If HR ever heard the way Walter and she bantered back and forth they would both be fired for sexual harassment, but they were good friends and it was just their way of being friends. Bonnie leaned over and came up with another sack lunch that she always brought for Walter. Walter was in the middle of a divorce, living on his own in a hotel room.
Bonnie figured if she didn’t feed him, the poor man would starve. Walter grinned with a nod as he took the offered sack lunch. “Bonnie, will you marry me?”

Bonnie laughed. Walter asked Bonnie to marry him at least twice a week; it was their little running joke. Bonnie was happily married to her husband, but if she ever were going to cheat on him, Walter would be that guy. “Sorry Walt, Harry is still too good in bed to divorce.”

Walter laughed. “Damn, oh well I’ll be happy with the sandwich.”

Walter opened the bag and pulled out the sandwich with a happy grin. Bonnie smiled at Walter and in that split second she didn’t notice the bleep in the camera feed. When she turned back, Dean was still staring at his favorite painting, while Paul, the other night guard was still stuck in the toilet. (She had told him not to get tacos from that one place down on 5th, but he didn’t listen. Served him right she thought). All was as it should be. Granted, they were down two night guards because of budget cuts, but it was quiet. Walter had just taken a bite out of his sandwich when he frowned. Outside the main doors, which were a large triple set of glass doors. A young woman...a very hot blonde in a tight black mini skirt and an equally tight red sweater and heels, was looking at a map with a short older man. She was pointing at the map then looking around while the older man said something. Bonnie glanced over at Walter frowning when she saw his attention was at the front of the museum.

The two were talking frantically at one another accompanied by hand gestures when the pretty blonde turned and saw them watching. She waved and motioned for them to come here. She put her hands together praying and pleading.

Walter frowned. “Think they’re lost?”

Bonnie took a sip of her drink. “Tourist.”

“Maybe I should go help?” Walter frowned.

Bonnie shook her head. “Let them figure it out.”

Walter gave her a troubled look. “Bonnie... come on. Lost in Gotham at night. They’ll end up in the papers.”

Bonnie sighed. “Fine, go help them.” She reached over and buzzed the doors open as Walter walked over.

*

Trope sat in an SUV, her fingers flying over her laptop as she grinned and spoke into the mic attached to her ear piece. “Okay, one guard is going to the door. The other is still at the desk, but I took over her video feed. One guard is still in the bathroom; you can gas him easy. The other is still standing in front of that painting...dude’s been there for like five minutes! Perv.”

Alex snorted from where he sat behind the wheel of the SUV.

Jack, who was outside the employee entrance along with Roxy, Jason, Frost and Duela chuckled. “How’re Harley and Frank doing?”

Trope brought up the camera located outside the museum. “Well, her buttons just popped off her sweater and I think Frank is either choking, having a heart attack or...fuck, I have no idea what he is doing, but it was enough to get the guard at the desk to move to the front. Now's your chance! Go!”

*
Wearing his red helmet, Jack glanced at the other members of the gang who all wore their red gas masks. “Remember, just yank the paintings off the wall, break the frames and cut—carefully cut—the paintings out...without destroying them please! That’s why you have the nice knives. No statues...sorry Roxy, just too heavy. Grab as much as you can, don’t worry about getting particular artists; everything is worth money. This is like the jewelry store, smash and grab. Okay, let's go!”

Jack motioned at his crew just as he pushed in the door with his shoulder, the door easily opening since Trope had disengaged the electronic locks. Jack grinned behind his helmet. He could trust Trope to have switched off the alarms without even asking her if she had--the girl was good. While Jack’s team went to gather paintings, each one carrying a tube on their back for storing the stolen works, Jack went to take care of the two guards wandering around.

The guard stuck in the bathroom was easy.

Jack opened the bathroom door which was answered with a groan. “Bonnie is that you man? I am so sorry I didn’t listen! Could you help a dude out and roll me another roll of toilet paper?”

Jack chuckled. “Hey man. You never really appreciate what you've got until it's gone. Toilet paper is a good example.” Jack laughed while the guard on the toilet frowned in confusion. “Bonnie?”

Jack rolled his gas grenade under the stall where it hit the man’s feet. The guard inside yelled. “Bonnie? What the fuck! Bonnie there’s green smoke...it’s…”

Jack grinned behind his mask as he heard the man start to laugh. “I think diarrhea is the least of your problems friend.” Jack snickered as he left the bathroom.

Jack turned once he exited the bathroom and walked swiftly to the gallery where Trope said the other guard was still staring at the same painting being a complete “creeper” as she called him.

Trope was studying the camera feeds when she saw something odd. There was movement up on the roof of the museum. She might not have noticed it if she hadn’t just switched cameras and saw a shadow move swiftly out of the way from the ledge of the building. She flipped through traffic cams trying to get a better view, but because it was the roof, she couldn’t get a clear shot, only the hint of shadows moving up above. She frowned and hit the mic. “Boss...something is going on...on the roof.”

Jack stopped just outside of the room where the “creeper” was. He pressed himself against the wall, watching the other guard. The man was staring at the painting and licking his lips. Jack frowned. Trope was correct...a real creeper. In another section of the museum, Jason, Duela, Roxy and Frost were working swiftly, breaking paintings out of their frames, rolling them and depositing the works of art into their tubes at record speed. Oddly, the guard staring at the painting hadn’t reacted to any of the noise. Granted they weren’t making much sound, but it was clear something was going on...Jack shook his head. The guard might indeed be a real perv and an idiot.

“What is it?” he asked quietly.

Trope switched her view to the cameras inside, frowning when she saw a tall, rather thin man with dark hair that hung just below his shoulders wearing a black mask across his eyes...but the rest of his outfit...Trope blinked. The man was wearing what could only be described as a green catsuit covered in black question marks...the suit left nothing to the imagination as she stared. She could see...everything. She shook her head watching as he came in through the museum’s skylight that was positioned over the bronze room, a room that displayed several expensive bronze statues by a variety of artists. The men with him were all dressed in green. They stopped for a moment, then swiftly left the bronze room, clearly deciding that, like the Red Hood gang, the statuary was just too big to lift.

Trope sounded confused when she spoke to Jack. “Ah...some guy in a mask wearing a green body suit just broke in on the floor above. I...I think they are here to rob the place.”

Jack frowned and blinked behind the face of his helmet. “What?”

“Yeah, he is wearing a mask and a green body suit. He has like, three guys with him, all dressed in green and black.” Trope explained.

Jack snarled. “Tell Harley and Frank to get in here. I don’t appreciate someone trying to muscle in on our job!”

*

Outside, Harley, her voice pitched high, her slight Brooklyn accent becoming much more distinct and just slightly annoying (to even herself), but she made herself sound like a bit of an airhead too as she clung to the guard named Walter. “Oh please help, my father he ain’t used to doing so much walking mister and we just go so lost!”

Walter, who was looking down Harley’s shirt frowned at the chubbly little man who was holding his chest. “I think I’m gonna die!” the older man wailed. “I’m too young to die!! I ain’t banged enough whores!”

Bonnie frowned. Something about all of this felt off to her, but the woman’s father certainly looked ill; he was all sweaty and pale...and disgusting. Bonnie sighed. “Look, I’m going to go in and call you an ambulance.”

Harley grimaced. “No, no...just ah...can you get him a drink of water? I’m sure that would help.”

Walter smiled at her as she clung to his arm. “I can go get you some water.”

“Oh ain’t you just the sweetest thing! Thank you.” Harley giggled and wiggled making her breasts bounce when she heard Trope’s voice in her ear. “Hey Harley, something is going on inside. We got another criminal trying to hog in on our job. The Boss wants you and Frank inside to help. This bozo in the green leotard has at least three guys with him.”

Harley rolled her eyes. Who on earth... she answered Trope back. “On my way.”

Walter frowned. “What was that?”

“You said you could get some water?” She batted her eyelashes at him.

Walter blushed. “Yeah sure just hold on a minute.”

“Oh, can’t we come inside? It’s cold and wet out here and I’m sure it ain’t good for my Dad and...ah...I could really use a restroom.” Harley gave Walter her best smile.

“Sure I...” Walter started, but Bonnie cut him off. “Walter we are not supposed to have anyone inside the museum after hours.”

Walter turned to his partner. “But Bonnie, the man is sick. You can still call an ambulance, but we can’t leave them outside like that--what if it makes him worse?” Walter pleaded with her. Bonnie frowned, grinding her teeth. Walter was right...and what could these two do--an old man and the slip of a girl--as long as they were with them plus Dean and Paul were here…

“Fine, just..neither of you can wander the museum and one of us has to be with you when you go to the bathrooms, okay?” Bonnie sighed, holding the doors open.

The blonde woman smiled, helping her father up. “Oh thank you! I didn’t realize how kind people in Gotham were!”

Once they were inside, Bonnie locked the doors. Harley hissed low at Frank. “Jack needs us. Let me take care of these two, then we’ll join the others.”

Frank frowned. “How you gonna do that?”

Harley smiled. “Just watch.”

She let go of Frank and spun around kicking off her heels at the same time. The slick marble floor allowed Harley to spin gracefully and swiftly, her now bare feet sliding on the marble. Walter, who had been walking beside her didn’t have time to react before Harley spun around and headbutted him in the face, breaking his nose. Walter let out a startled yelp, staggering back from Harley. She moved quickly, bring one long leg up as she twisted her body and kicked Walter in the chest. Her sudden, broad movements caused her to rip the tight mini skirt she had been wearing right up both sides exposing the pair of black lace panties she was wearing underneath and turning the mini skirt into what looked like a loincloth.

Bonnie yelped in surprise as Walter fell, hitting the floor hard enough that the air was knocked from his lungs and his head bounced. He slid backwards across the floor with the impact of Harley’s kick until he hit one of the pillars that decorated the main entrance of the museum. He didn’t move after that.

Bonnie yanked her baton off her belt, moving at Harley. “You bitch!” Bonnie snarled.

Harley turned to face the other guard, her hands balled into fists. Harley lunged at the bigger woman, inside her circle of attack, and backhanded Bonnie with her fist. Then, as Bonnie gasped in pain, her body turned away from Harley, Harley grabbed Bonnie by the shoulder and gave the larger woman two hard punches to the kidneys.

Bonnie gasped in pain and stumbled again, turned to swing her baton at Harley. Harley grinned, easily leaning back and ducking out of the way before coming back up and punching Bonnie across the face.

Frank scurried out of the way going behind the desk to watch the fight, his eyes wide, a big smile on his face. “Damn girl!!” he yelled, clapping his hands.

Bonnie took another swipe at Harley, again missing her as Harley threw herself backward into a flip with a cheerful giggle.

Harley hopped to her feet turning around and shook her head. “They really should train you guys better.”

Bonnie snarled and did the stupidest thing Harley thought the female guard could have done...she tried to rush her. Harley smiled and did a spinning kick just as Bonnie reached her. As Harley’s foot connected, the guard’s head snapped to the side hard enough that the crack of her neck was audible. Bonnie fell, crumpling to the floor. Frank laughed. “Wow...you should consider getting in the ring at the fight club too Harley. The money that would fly to watch a couple of broads fight…oh in little bikinis!...in mud...or oil...yeah...”

Harley turned, her face screwed up in a frown, her hands on her hips as she narrowed her eyes at Frank. “I’m going to forget you said that.”

“Said what?” Frank came around from the desk glancing down at Bonnie, then taking the unconscious woman’s baton.

Harley hissed quietly, but in a stern tone. “Broad. I am not a broad.”

Frank smiled swinging the baton around. “Sorry Harley. Don’t tell Jack?”

She sighed and giggled. “Okay, deal, won’t tell Jack. Come on--let’s get going.”

She giggled and took off deeper into the museum, guided by Trope’s directions.

*

Jack walked carefully and quietly into the main gallery of the museum. Here were displayed the largest paintings in the entire museum. These paintings ranged in size from about the same height as Jack, to large paintings that covered nearly the entire wall.

Jack stopped in the arched doorway watching as three men worked to pull one of the large panel alter paintings by Jan Van Eyck down. Standing in the middle of the room watching them was the man that Trope had described wearing a green onesie covered in question marks, a black mask and holding what looked like a cane with a question mark as the crook on its top. The man in the green body suit was grinning, watching his henchmen as he said out loud.

“It smells like blue paint, pours like green paint, and it looks like a red truck. What am I?”

Jack smirked, leaning against the doorway with his arms crossed over his chest, his ankles crossed like he didn’t have a care in the world as he said out loud. “The answer is red paint. It smells like blue paint, pours like green paint, and it looks like a red truck.” Jack chuckled pointedly, moving his head up and down to indicate he was looking over the man’s clothing. “You really have a theme going there, don’t you?” The even odder thing about the green body suited man was that Jack thought his voice sounded familiar and there was something about his face. The structure that looked...it was a little bit of deja vu...like he had seen this man before, but for the life of him Jack couldn’t place where. The masked man turned swiftly to glare at Jack. He whipped his neck around so fast that Jack was surprised he didn’t give himself whiplash. “Who are you?”

Jack chuckled as he stepped into the room. No sooner had he stepped in than Harley and Frank arrived behind him. Jack glanced over his shoulder, lifting his eyebrows (though Harley couldn’t see his face) taking in her torn skirt and the most inappropriate amount of buttons unbuttoned before he turned back to the green man. “I could ask you the same thing, but, I’ll be polite and introduce myself first. We,” Jack said with a hint of a bow, “are the Red Hood gang.”

The green man was frowning at the blonde woman. She looked very, very familiar to him, but he simply couldn’t place where he had seen her before...not that it mattered right now.

“I am called The Riddler.” The man bowed dramatically with his cane.

Jack chuckled “Mm...like the name. So, it seems that you and your little gang had the same brilliant idea as my little gang. Now...what oh what shall we do about this?” Jack walked further into the room. Frank hung back, but Harley wrapped her arm around Jack’s smiling brightly and walking beside him.

Jack tilted his head toward Harley. “What say you pumpkin pie?”
Harley smiled. “Well, this museum is pretty big and there are a lot of pieces of art...I guess it would only be fair if we shared puddin.”

Riddler grinned directing his riddle toward Harley. “Had by few but treasured by all, I'm on the inside and outside and I make men fall. What am I?”

Harley frowned, then answered within seconds. “Beauty?”

The Riddler laughed. “Beauty and Brains. You, Red Hood are a lucky man. I think that we can come to an understanding, a gentleman’s agreement as it were. I and my gang are mostly interested in these very large pieces.”

Jack inclined his head. “While my gang is more interested in the small works. Good, then we are agreed. The guards are dispatched...I say we each take what we want and then skedaddle!”

Harley giggled leaning against Jack’s arms. Riddler held his hand out. “Agreed.”

Jack stepped forward and shook the man’s hand. Riddler frowned looking at Harley. “Do I know you?”

Harley tilted her head as if she were giving the question some thought. “I don’t think so.”

Riddler chuckled. “What is easy to get into, but hard to get out of?”

Harley giggled. “Trouble.”

“Exactly.” Riddler smiled. “It was a pleasure to meet you both. I do hope we meet again.”

Jack waved and motioned for Frank, the three of them leaving the Riddler and his gang to their work. Jack chuckled. “Let’s go my sweet. Time to gather the children!”

*

It was late when Jack and Harley arrived home. Jack was carrying two pizza boxes and a plastic bag containing a pair of two liters of soda. He yawned as he carefully balanced their dinner. Harley was carrying his helmet and her shoes which she had retrieved before they left. Frost had taken the paintings, having assured Jack and Alex that he had a safe, good place to store them while Alex put out the feelers for buyers.

They walked up the steps together heading to the front door from the docks.

Harley yawned, following Jack’s yawn. “That as fun tonight,” she said with a grin.

Jack laughed. “I wish I could have seen you beat the crap out of that guard. Frank must have been impressed because Alex said he wouldn’t shut up about how gorgeous you were.” Jack bumped her hips with his as they walked. “Judging by the enticing rips in your skirt, it looks like it was a good fight.”

Harley grinned at her husband when Jack stopped. He frowned. They had arrived at the front door, but there was something sitting on the stoop. Jack looked down, his eyes narrowed. On the front step sat an envelope and a small package.

Harley made a tiny noise.

“Here.” Jack set the bag down and handed the pizzas to Harley. He walked over and nudged the box with the toe of his shoe. It was a white box wrapped with a red ribbon.
The envelope next to it looked the same as the last one he had received from Tomaso. Jack picked both items up. He examined the box, then opened it. Inside was a watch, but no note. Jack recognized the make, a JeanRichard 1681 Central Second men’s watch, with rose gold case and a red Crocodile leather watch band. Jack pulled the watch out, his lips in a thin, angry line and turned the watch over. On the back of the watch, engraved in two line shelly font:

To my dearest Jack,

You and I are meant to be.

Always,

Ben

Harley was leaning against Jack’s shoulder when she read the engraving on the back of the watch. Jack felt her stiffen.

Jack shoved the expensive watch back into the box then opened the envelope. Inside was a neatly handwritten letter.

Dear Jack Wayne,

Watching you fight the other night made me think that perhaps you are not the sort of man to take a threat without thinking of a response.

You have a very pretty woman in your corner Jack, very pretty. Long blonde hair, a gorgeous figure, she is quite stunning. It would be a shame if anything were to happen to her. Women like her, running around in the wrong crowds, usually find themselves on the receiving end of unwanted attentions. Especially if their lovers are fools.

She was quite fun to watch at your fight the other night.

Then you also have a brother…

So many weak spots.

The letter was signed, Tomaso Panessa.
Falling Down

Bruce yawned as he reached down to pick up his cup of coffee, keeping one hand on the wheel and his eyes on the road. The sound of the windshield wipers, accompanied by the sound of the rain, wasn’t helping him stay awake, though his alertness was never really a problem. Bruce had trained himself to go with very little sleep and to be alert at all times, but some days it was difficult, even for him. He was a skilled enough driver to maneuver his vehicle over a hundred miles an hour one-handed, but there was no reason to be foolish this morning, especially since he was currently not dressed as the Batman. Bruce yawned again and took a sip of the coffee, wishing the caffeine would hit his system quicker. He was not a supporter of drugs and excessive drinking, but a little caffeine never hurt anyone.

Today he had taken his newest car into work, a Ferrari 488 GTB painted a shade of blue so dark that it almost looked black unless the light reflected off of its surface just right. Alfred had teased Bruce mercilessly about having a car in a shade other than black. Bruce smiled. It was nice to see Alfred recovering so well. He hated to admit it, even to himself, but he hadn’t been sure Alfred would make it for a while. Bruce’s smile turned into a frown. He couldn’t imagine his life without Alfred...though at one time he couldn’t have imagined his life without Jack in it either. That thought hurt, a sharp stab in the chest. Bruce wished he could undo what had happened between him and Jack, wished he could embrace his brother and tell him all was forgiven, and ask for forgiveness, but he knew it was too late. That realization didn’t stop him from worrying about his brother, wondering where he was and how he was doing.

With a sigh Bruce pushed those morbid thoughts aside. He reached over and turned the volume up on the car’s stereo; the sounds of Justin Timberlake came through the speakers singing “Say Something” via a local Gotham radio station. The sound wasn’t something that Bruce usually listened to. As Bruce frowned again in thought, he mused that he didn’t really listen to a lot of music. He smiled letting himself actually enjoy the song when he saw a black car with tinted windows racing up behind him, clearly speeding through the rain. The car, a black matte Audi R8 was moving too fast, zipping in and out of traffic as it raced through Gotham. Bruce narrowed his eyes, his intuition abuzz...something was definitely wrong with that car’s driver. Bruce’s eyes wandered to the license plate and he realized there wasn’t one, which was odd, he thought. Just as the thought crossed his mind, the car switched lanes to Bruce’s left and started to speed by him. Bruce began to think to himself that he was being paranoid just a few seconds before the car twisted to the right, slamming into the side of his car accompanied by the loud clash of metal against metal. Bruce was flung to the side, the seatbelt keeping him from being thrown out of his seat, though his head struck the side window painfully. He cursed grabbing the wheel tightly as the combination of wet streets and the hard slam from the other car sent the Ferrari sliding along the road. Bruce glanced at the car, but the windows were tinted so dark he couldn’t see the driver.

Bruce struggled with the wheel, trying not to hit any other cars, fishtailed for a moment before he wrestled his vehicle back under control. The black Audi swung around, turning itself completely around in a well-executed one-eighty; whoever was driving hit the gas and the car leapt forward. Bruce had just started to turn his car, trying to avoid the head-on, but at the last moment the Audi spun around, the corner of the car crashing into Bruce, forced the Ferrari to skid backwards along the wet road. Bruce snarled as the Ferrari slid. He twisted the wheel hard, but the water was heavy enough on the street that his vehicle began to hydroplane and Bruce lost control again the car crashing into the front of a small sandwich shop, which was still closed. Bruce was flung forward, his forehead slamming against the steering wheel as the Audi sped away, disappearing into Gotham.
It was early morning. The rain outside was beginning to fall heavier, bringing a chill to the air. Jack and Harley hadn’t slept for longer than a few hours. Jack was still furious over the note and the gift...it was yet another invasion of their privacy, another indication that they were no longer safe in their home. (Though watching Harley take a hammer to the watch had been fun. She was adorable when she was murderously angry Jack thought to himself.)

Jack had called Alex as soon as they had entered the house, told him about the note from Panessa and the watch from Ben. He had told Alex he wanted him to find something, some way to strike at Panessa because no one threatened his family. But now, it was just a waiting game.

Jack smiled, content at the moment at least; he was sitting on one of the brown leather wingback chairs that occupied the main living room of the house. He was sitting sideways by the fireplace which had a fire roaring cheerily behind him, one long leg hung over one of the arms of the chair which he bounced slowly in time to the music. He was wearing a pair of pointed brown leather double monk strap shoes.

Jack smoked a cigarette, slowly blowing out a stream of smoke, or letting it drift from his lips as his blue eyes were riveted to his wife. She smiled at him as she spun around slowly.

Her husband looked particularly handsome today even if he was in a bad mood, Harley thought as she did a slow turn on the ball of her foot. The note and gift they had found last night had put him in a murderous rage, but Harley had held him, held his head against her chest until he had calmed down enough to call Alex. She had found his burst of rage both frightening and exotic. She swayed her hips to the music playing through the room.

“Love
I said real love, it's like feeling no fear
When you're standing in the face of danger
’Cause you just want it so much
A touch
From your real love
It's like heaven taking the place of something evil
And letting’ it burn off from the rush
Yeah, yeah…”

Harley smiled at Jack, running her hands down her torso watching her husband. His hair was slicked back and he was wearing a pair of slim cut taupe, double windowpane slacks with a matching vest, a dark chicory green shirt underneath and a taupe colored tie. He looked deceptively casual, slick and handsome, but she could still see the rage behind his eyes, the occasional tight twitch around those vivid blue orbs.

Harley smiled at him, swaying to the mellow sounds of Lana del Rey’s voice. The song “Cherry” played through the stereo speakers, moving over them like warm honey and sex. Harley was barefoot, wearing a simple red dress, a mini with an asymmetrical hemline and a deep V neckline...completely inappropriate for the weather, and what Jack didn’t know—yet—was that she wasn’t wearing a thing under the dress. She ran her fingers through her hair which she wore down, in loose, rich curls. She pulled her fingers upward through her hair, letting the gold locks fall slowly while she continued to dance to the music.

“Cause I love you so much, I fall to pieces

My cherries and wine, rosemary and thyme

And all of my peaches (are ruined, bitch)

Jack was watching her intently, the smoke circling his head as his eyes raked over her. His blue eyes were predatory, seemed to glow with an intensity that sent shivers up her spine. The song finished, Jack leaned over slightly behind him to put the cigarette out in the ashtray before he sat up straight. There was a cup of coffee sitting on the table next to the ashtray which Jack picked up and took a swallow from before he motioned with his hands at Harley.

“Come here Harls,” he murmured.

Harley smiled and stepped over to her husband. He sat up with his legs wide apart and pulled her between them, his hands on her hips. He smiled then and laid his chin against her stomach and looked up at her. “You always find a way to make me smile sweets,” he said softly running his hands up the back of her bare thighs. Harley returned his smile, stroking her fingers through his hair.

“I’m glad I can help puddin.”

Jack chuckled, his hands going under the skirt of the dress and stopping in surprise when his fingers stroked her bare ass. He smirked up at her. “Well, well, well.”

Harley giggled. “I thought you might like that little surprise.”

Jack purred. “Oh indeed I do Harls, indeed I do.”

Jack reached up and cupped her rear, squeezing softly, while at the same time sitting back in the chair and tugging her with him. Harley grabbed the back of the chair and eased herself up, then straddled his lap. Jack guided her down to him, his hands traveling up to her waist. “Take it off Harls.” He purred.

Harley gave him a coy smile, reached down to tug the dress over her head, and dropped it silently to the floor next to the chair. Jack sucked in a breath with pleasure; his wife was completely naked.

“Mmm...now this is nice.” Jack ran his hands up her smooth back with just the tips of his fingers gently pressing her toward him; he started to press slow, tantalizing kisses against her bare skin, flicking his tongue out to lick, to taste her, his vanilla and honey wife. Harley moaned softly, enjoying the feel of the fabric of his slacks and vest against her bare skin as well as the warmth of his tongue.

He had just begun to suck and twirl his tongue along her hard nipples when his phone rang. Jack frowned with a glance over to the table where the phone sat next to the ashtray and his coffee. He went back to biting Harley, but the phone kept ringing.

Jack sighed. “Don’t you move,” he ordered Harley with a lopsided grin before he leaned over and picked up the phone. He frowned when he saw it was Frost calling. Harley was nibbling on his ear when Jack hissed.

“Hold up Harley...don’t move, but wait a minute.”

Harley blew out a frustrated breath, but sat back as Jack answered the call. “Jack here.”
“Boss, sorry to call so early.”

Jack frowned looking at Harley as he spoke. “It’s fine Frost--what’s up?”

“I got a call from a couple of my buddies still with the Gotham PD. It’s your brother Bruce; someone ran him off the road,” Frost said calmly. “He wasn’t hurt, but witnesses said that it was deliberate. The only thing we got was the make and color of the car, a matte black Audi, but no license plate and the car seemed to simply disappear.”

Jack’s nostrils flared. “Someone drove my brother off the road…” Jack’s voice went cold. “Panessa.”

Harley gasped bringing her hands up to her mouth in shock. “They really did go after Bruce!”

Jack nodded to her. “Was there anything else?”

Frost shook his head though Jack could not see the gesture. “Nope. Bruce is now at the police station apparently filling out a report. You really think it’s Panessa?” Frost asked clearly shocked.

“Yes. There was a note waiting here when we got back last night. He threatened Bruce and Harley if I didn’t back off,” Jack said in response, with a snarl of the last few words.

Frost asked quietly. “You ain’t going to back off are you Boss?”

Jack smiled then. “No, no I’m not.”

Jack could hear the responding smile in Frost’s voice. “Good. I’ll let you go Boss, just wanted to let you know.”

“Thanks Frost. I’ll talk to you later.” Jack hung up the phone and tossed it back onto the table. Harley frowned with concern stroking his face. “You all right puddin?”

Jack nodded, but when wrapped his arms around her tugging her naked body close to him. “You are not to ever be out of my sight Harley. Got it?”

She wrapped her arms around his shoulders and hugged him tightly pressing his head to her breasts. “I won’t puddin, I promise.”

Jack closed his eyes, resting his cheek against her shoulder and held her snugly. He didn’t say anything for a few long moments before he finally spoke. “I need to call Alex.”

Harley started to slide off his lap, but Jack grabbed her. “Stay here...please.” He smiled at her and Harley nodded. “‘Course puddin.”

Keeping one arm around her waist, Jack picked up the phone again and dialed Alex’s number. A few moments later the phone was answered. “Howie fucking do!”

Jack chuckled. “Fuck to you too Alex.”

Alex snorted. “Hey man, I was just thinking about fucking calling you. I have some Panessa news you might be interested in.”

Jack reached over to grab his pack of cigarettes, but Harley stopped him by laying a hand on his arm. She then leaned over to pick up the pack of cigarettes and the lighter herself. Jack smiled watching her, sitting naked on his lap while putting the cigarette in her mouth. She held it with the edges of her lips and flicked open the lighter. For a moment he forgot everything, his attention on her, watching her light his cigarette for him, completely naked, beautiful, sitting on his lap, the morning light coming through the window danced across her smooth pale skin while the firelight from the fireplace caressed her skin from the other side. She was his burning desire, his obsession, he would kill for her. He smirked at himself. He had killed for her.

She lit the cigarette and took a puff before placing the cigarette between his lips as smoke slowly flowed from her lips. Jack grinned at her before answering Alex. “Frost just called me. Someone ran my brother off the road.”

Alex’s voice dropped as he replied simply. “Fuck.”

“Exactly. Bruce is fine, but Tomaso said he would go after my brother…” Jack sighed, smoke flowing from between his lips. “I guess Panessa wanted to be sure I knew he was serious.”

Alex sighed. “Well then you are going to love my news. One of my informants found out that Panessa is planning on a family meeting, all the heads of the Panessa family are getting together at one of Tomaso’s buildings. He owns a handful throughout Gotham…this is a building that Panessa bought from some asshole who was building it for Queen Enterprises, in the Upper East Side. I don’t know all the fucking details at the moment, but Queen stopped paying for the fucking building, so there’s this mostly complete fucktard of a building—thing’s like ten floors or something like that—anyway, Panessa swoops in and gets it for a fucking song. I think he’s planning on turning the building into some kind of luxury apartment building, gonna make a mint off of it, but anyway this meeting is taking place tomorrow night in this building.”

Jack grinned stroking Harley’s naked side with his free hand. “A meeting, eh?”

“Yeah, no idea what the fuck it’s about; all I know is that a fuckwad of Panessa’s men are going to be there…not sure what we can do with the information…” Alex trailed off.

“Oh…I know exactly what we can do with the information.” Jack chuckled as he laid his cigarette in the ashtray, placing both hands on Harley’s waist while he held his cellphone between his shoulder and ear. “How much dynamite can you get me in twenty-fours?” Jack asked with a grin at Harley.

Alex let out a groan, but he said. “I can get a hold of a lot more than I should be able to.”

Jack laughed. “Perfect. Let’s get the gang together and the dynamite for tomorrow night. We are going to have a good time I think.”

Alex sighed. “Jack, you are one fucking dangerous motherfucker.”

Jack laughed. “You have no idea. I’ll call you later and let you know where we will meet tomorrow night. Think you can get me blueprints for the building?”

Alex laughed. “Who the fuck you think you’re talking to Jack? I’m the king of information in Gotham. I can get you some fucking blueprints.”

Jack laughed. “I love you man.”

Alex snorted. “Love ya too buddy. Talk to you soon.”

Jack hung up and tossed the phone back onto the table. “Harls my sweet. We have twenty-fours to play with until we do something VERY fun. How on earth should we spend it?” Jack grinned at her.

Harley giggled. “I have no idea puddin.”
Jack pulled her close. “Well, I do have a few ideas.” He slid his hands down her sides and around to squeeze her rear. “How would you like to go to the Gotham Science museum? They have an indoor playground for all ages, an indoor mini golf and a 3D theater...as well as an Asian Fusion restaurant within walking distance.”

Harley giggled wrapping her arms around Jack’s neck. “Oh puddin, that sounds fantastic!”

Jack nuzzled her neck. “Mm...but first...”

He wrapped his arms around her, his hands spread wide to cover her back as he leaned her down to him catching her mouth in a long, hot passionate kiss. Harley moaned softly rubbing herself against the bulge in his slacks, smiling with gratification when Jack groaned. He lifted her up when he slid his hands down to grab her ass, lifting her so that her breasts were level with his mouth. Harley giggled and used her arms to press her breasts together. Jack glanced up at her lifting his brow with an amused expression before he blew a very loud raspberry between her breasts.

Harley squealed. “JACK!”

He chuckled. “Sorry sweets, couldn’t help it!! Your breasts are soft and squishy!”
