Close Every Door

by Elizabeth (anghraine)
Chapter 1

Aegnor knew he was to die. All the windows were barred, the light shut out, the day darkened; he could see nothing else. The least of the descendants of Finwë, he knew his unimportance as none of the other Noldor ever would.

I shall escape this place, the endless battles, I shall enjoy the peace of Valinor --

Whywhywhy?

No longer will I be bound by my fate, bound to those who slew my kin, I was a fool to come --

If I had not, I would never have seen, never known my Andreth --

Andreth --

Where was she now? Had she wed one of her own race, perhaps? Borne him children?

Do they release those in Mandos who hate figments of their own imaginations? Aegnor laughed, and sang, and did not care when finally he was pierced by orc-arrows --

I shall remain alone to the end, remembering the morning in the hills of Dorthonion
Chapter 2

Jane Bingley sat very still, staring out her window. They would not let her out, they were keeping her imprisoned in this room where she had last held her son.

_We were going to call him Bennet, for Papa_, she thought dully. She had never dreamed that _she_ might lose one, not after carrying him -- _him_, she would scream the next time someone called her _child it_ -- for so long. Not after her mother and uncle each had five children who lived to plague them, that was what Uncle Gardiner said.

Jane longed to hold a child to her, whether her own or not, she felt so alone, the world hidden from her, the windows barred, the light shut out --

She heard a wail.

_I'm imagining things now._

“Jane?” The door unbolted; she drew a long shuddering breath, staring at the sister she had not seen for months.

“The baby, I heard a baby.”

“Lydia brought her daughter.” Neither mentioned their niece’s healthy size for a child born only eight months after her parents’ marriage.

“Let me hold her. Please. Ask Lydia . . . she won’t mind.”

Five minutes later, she was rocking little Bess Wickham in her arms, humming a lullaby and weeping silently.

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!